ALTHOUGH I muſt not preſume of the king of Denmark, yet I doe not deſpayre; for he is a wiſe and prudent prince, and (God willing) I will giue vnto him good grownds and reaſons of ſtate; ſo I hope, if not openly, yet vnderhand, contribution at leaſt. So committing your lordſhip to the protection of the Almighty, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Hamburgh, the 10. of December, ſtilo vet.
Anno 1624.

Your Lordſhipps, to my uttermoſt power to be commanded,

ROBERT AMSTRUTHER.

Advices from Vienna of the 16. December, 1624.

WHILE the baſſa of Caniſia, late ambaſſador at this court, ioyned with others, were appointed commiſſioners to treate a renouation of peace with the emperor, there came aduice of an order from Conſtantinople, that the reſolution of that affaire, on behalfe of the Turks, ſhould bee referred to the prince of Tranſiluania; a thing that gaue great jealouſy, and very much diſpleaſed here; where it is thought, that this chaunge did proceed from the practice of the league, and hath renewed vehement ſuſpicions againſt Gabor; who therefore is fallen from that good conceit which his miniſters lately had gayned for him.

THERE arriued here, on Thurſday night, the baron d'Aſſy, diſpeeded in poſt from the infanta, to ſollicite the ſwift expedition and ſodaine departure of the ſouldiours appointed in the empire, to haſten the taking of Breda, before it ſhould bee ſuccored by count Mansfield; whoſe highnes doth aduiſe, That hee was preſently to paſſe with a great army of Engliſh, and to fall into Germany; but firſt to attempt the reliefe of that citty. Whereupon the marquis Spinelli was inſtantly called, and his departure ordered this day, hauing the laſt night taken leaue of the emperour. The regiment of Colalto is allready moued, and the horſe haue command to march, hauing firſt procured ſome litle mony from Morauia to ſatisfy them.

BECAUSE of the retorne of Mansfield into the empire, (which is aduiſed from all parts) it is held aſſuredly, that the electorall aſſembly ſhalbee deferrd, and that there wilbee no more mention thereof; only they will attend the preparation of defenſiue armes. Allready, in Germany, in Colne, and the other eccleſiaſticall ſtates, their thoughts are full, howe to preſerue their owne; beeing very jealous of the newe reported leuyes of the king of Swethland.

THE archduke Leopold hath held a diett in Inſpurgh, to raiſe mony from that cuntry and people, who ſhowe themſelues more and more diſcontent and yll ſatiſfied with his gouernment, for the many greeuances and extortions practiced by him. The end of that princes leuying of mony, is to ſupply men for the Valtoline. The imperiall townes haue yielded ſome contribution to Spinelli, that hee may contayne his ſouldiours, that paſſe their territoryes, in diſciplyne.

1624.

From Vienna, 21. December, 1624.

THE marquis Spinelli is departed, with order to conduct his forces to Maeſtrecht, a place thought fitt, both to giue ſuccours to Spinola in all occurrences, and to oppoſe the entry of Mansfield into the empire; butt their arriuall wilbee late, becauſe the regiment of Colalto is not farre aduanced, and the horſe march ſlowly toward Bohemia. The regiment of Shamburgh, now in Alſatia, is ordeyned to goe into the ſeruice of the Spaniard; but hee firſt requires his pay of aduance, which hee would receiue in hand from the duke of Feria, knowing the want of monyes here; and to this purpoſe hee hath ſent an antient to that duke.

THE treaty of peace with the Turks is not yett begunne, becauſe they require a village neare Strigonium for the place of meeting, which the Imperialls refuſe, as a delay, attributed to the ſtratagems of Gabor, of whom they cannot liue without ſuſpition; though hee hath written both to the emperour, and the kinge of Spaine, profeſſing, that hee will bee ready, at their pleaſure, to make warre vpon the Turke, prouided hee may bee protected, and ſeconded from that ſide; to which there is now no credit giuen, holding it out of queſtion, that all is artifice and deceipt.

THE meeting of the electors of Saxe and Brandeburgh giues here great ſuſpition of diuers effects, eſpecially becauſe the Saxe doth not communicate the conſequence thereof ſo clearly as is deſired; and therefore, to extract ſome more particulars, there are deſſigned two ambaſſadors, to bee ſent ſeuerally to them at one inſtant, while others ſhalbee diſpeeded to the eccleſiaſticall electors, and Bauare, to appoint a tyme for an imperiall diett, with ſome alteration of the bulla aurea for the preſent; deſyring it ſhould bee aſſoone as poſſible, and that in the place agreed vpon for the aſſembly, the electors ſhould meete a moneth before, for the treaty of the Palatine; his imperiall majeſtie enclyning to the citty of Vlm, for the commodity of the water.

TO eaſe the prouince of Morauia, there is ſpeech of ſending good numbers of ſoldiours into Hungary, to bee in readineſs to oppoſe any deſſigne in the head of Gabor.

THE ſignior Popnam is diſpatched into Italy, to procure the payment of Shamburghs regiment from the duke of Feria, who hath order to paſſe by Genoua, to borrow what monyes hee can.

To Sir GEORGE CALVERT.

Right Honorable,

I AM ſorry you haue had any trouble of mynd for the ſtay of your letters of the 18th May, vpon the way: your honor is long ſince ſatisfied, that I receiued them and their copy together, the next poſt after the aduertiſement of Mr. Branthwaite; by which I gaue his majeſtie (by your mediation) an account of my readineſs in that ſeruice; wherein I preſumed to deliuer my opinion, that although much might bee done here, yett it was neceſſary to giue ſome encouragement from thoſe parts, which would aſſure the buſineſs. Now that I have receiued by your honors of the firſt October, a confirmation of that order, which letter came to mee broken open, the couer quite torne, deliuered to the agent in Venice (of which I doubt not hee hath aduiſed) in a ſuſpected maner; you wilbee pleaſed to enforme his majeſtie, his highnes, and the duke of Buckingham, that there is expected daily an ambaſſador from Tranſiluania, with whom I will deale ſo effectually, and ouerlooke him ſo narrowly, that though I will not aduenture a promiſe for his maſter, yett I doubt not to change the preſent condition, or to putt him to ſuch a purgation, that hee will bee loath to vndergoe. I haue allready procured a diſauowing of the laſt treaty, ſecrettly, and vndiſcouered to what end, vnder couler of reuealing ſome of his laſt articles, as a frend to this ſtate; inſomuch that either they muſt retorne to the firſt deſſigne of Buda, where the difficultyes wilbee greate, or breake againe. I haue giuen intimation to Gabor, butt not by letter, (for I yett truſt him not) of his ſhame to bee ſo mutable; of his failing his frends; of his playing double with theſe; and laſtly, that hee now looſeth the opportunity of that diuerſion, of the want whereof hee complayned ſo much; that I expect a direct ouerture from him. I will omitt nothing that may bee done without ſcandall; butt the vnſettled affaires of this ſtate makes him yrreſolute: yett hee is not ſo abſolutly loſt; hee hath not his hoped wyfe, his practiſe in Poland will more ſeperate him; there only wants a 1624. playne authority to vſe his majeſties name, with other the princes colleagued; which would both make him proud, and confirme him to that vnion, if only hee were ſecured to bee comprehended, as one of them. If his majeſtie will not deſcend to any declaration, the king of Bohemia iuſtly may, and I am good for nothing. Giue mee leaue to make tryall, and I preſume I could procure him to ſend an ambaſſador, to make his owne offers, into England.

THE Jewe mentioned, ſent to Naples, is arriued; and hath had ſome acceptance there; his name is Iſaac Cormoran, a Portugall, bredd the page of Don Antonio; a ſubtile knaue, aged, all white, and a litle deafe. There were ſufficient marks and notice giuen here to the Venice ambaſſador, which I am gladd is approued, and requeſt made to him to catch him at Spallato, where hee lay 14 dayes ſicke; his companyon, a Moorfrank of Spayne. Hee tells mee, that hee wrott to intercept his inſtruction, and aduiſed the ſenate; butt now wee are agreed to watch his retorne with more care. It is yett vncerteyne what effect this motion will take; butt letters are retorned from him, (of which, this night, I acquainted the bailo, that wee might both ſearch into the ſecrett) promiſing the comming of a nuntio from the viceroy, to procure a more autentieque paſſport, and to treat of the conditions of the acceptance of an ambaſſador. If it bee true, though hee bee miſſd on the way, yett hee ſhall find ſuch an oppoſition here, that his labour ſhalbee all his reward and fruict: butt I rather thinke the Spaniard makes vſe of the treaty, then meaning to accept it; and if hee would, it ſhall not bee eaſy to perfect it.

YOUR honor will doe mee the fauour to preſent thus much to his majeſtie. It is Chriſtmas eve, and I chalenge leaue to play the trewant, to omitt diſcourſes of this place, which affoord lately no great variety. My order I will attend, and giue a good account thereof by euery occaſion. I humbly thank you for the continuance of your loue; and ſo I wiſh your honor, according to the complement of the ſeaſon, many and hapy newe yeares.

Conſtantinople, 24.
December, 1624.

From the QUEEN of BOHEMIA.

My Lord,

I HAUE receiued, ſince my lying-in, three letters from you of the 4. of September, 15. October, and $\frac{18}{28}$. of the ſame. I had anſweared you ſooner, but that I ſtayed, hoping euerie day to ſend ſome certaine good newes out of England, where there is therteene thouſand men a leuying for Mansfelt: what they are to doe, I know not; for the king and I are utterlie ignorant of all, though they ſay it is for our ſeruice. The king doth giue you manie thankes for your forwardneſs in his ſeruice, as you ſhall ſee by his owne letter to you. He is of your opinion concerning Bethlem Gabor, and his peace, and will ſee what meanes can be done to incourage him; and by my next I hope to ſay more to you in that point. For the mariage you write of for him, our princes in Germanie are ſo tickliſh in that, as they will hardly propound one, before they be deſired from Bethlem Gabor himſelf, or ſome vnderhand from him. Sir Robert Anſtruther is now with the princes of Germanie, from the king my father; by Sir Dudley Carletons letter you ſhall ſee what he doth there. I ſee they are all forward enough, if they had a head; but they ſtraine curtiſie who ſhoulde beginne. The king of Sweden offers as much as can be deſired: I woulde my vncle woulde doe ſo too; but he is more backwarde, then ſo neere a kinſman ſhoulde be. I haue no hope of the electour of Saxony; he will euer be a beaſt. By my next I hope to lett you know more. I will alſo ſend you a cifer, and for this time you ſhall haue all more fullie by Sir Dudley Carleton. I ame ſure you haue alreadie heard the infinite loſſe we haue all had of the braue, worthie earle of Southampton, and his ſonne the lord Wriothſlie: you know how true a frend I haue loſt in them both, and may imagine eaſilie how much my greef is for them, which hath bene redoubled by the death of my yongeſt boy ſaue one, called Louys, who died onelie of breeding of his teeth, two dayes agone; it was the pretieſt childe I had, and the firſt I euer loſt: I haue chriſtened this yongeſt of all Edward. You ſee I can ſend you nothing but deaths; onlie your wife Apſley is gone into England, to marry Sir 1624. Albert Morton, who goeth ordinarie ambaſſadour into France. I haue not yett ſeene the Dutch ambaſſadours letter you referr me to, but I ame promiſed. Honeſt Thom, I pray ſtill continue, as you haue done, to doe your beſt in thoſe buſineſſes; for I ame moſt confident of your loue to me, who ame euer, conſtantlie,

The Hagh, this 27. of December, ſt. v.

Your moſt affectionat frend,

ELIZABETH.

I HAUE almoſt forgott to tell you, that my brothers mariage in France is all concluded. I pray commend my beſt loue to your good wife.

Superſcribed,
To Sir THOMAS ROE, his Majeſties Ambaſſadour at Conſtantinople.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

VPPON the 16th of December I arriued at Venice, where I found Franceſco Contareni, the laſt duke, newely dead, and theſe ſeignori very buſye about the election of a newe doge, whoſe creation I muſt attend with patience; becauſe no audiences can be giuen during the interregnum.

IT is to be feared, that the election may come into length, becauſe the 41 who entred the laſt night into the conclaue, are diuided betwixt Nani and Erizzo; whereof the former hath 23 voyces, which are to fewe by two for the incluſion; and the latter hath 18, which are ſufficient for the excluſion: ſo that, vnleſſe the one do yeelde vnto the other, either it will proue a long conclaue, or both of them muſt miſſe; becauſe when the electors ſhall growe weary of being ſhut vp, it is likely they will reſolue vppon a third perſon, if the two competitours do ſtand obſtinate. Erizzo is abſent at this preſent, being gone to Rome with three other extraordinary ambaſſadors, to congratulate the election of the pope; in which reſpect the accommodation will proue more difficult, becauſe his frends will not yeeld, vntill they know his pleaſure.

THE conqueſt of Rhætia hath drawen on the recouery of the Valtelina, the marquis di Coeuures hauing paſſed freely through the lower and vpper Engadina, taken Bormio without reſiſtance, and forced Tirano to yeeld vppon ſuch conditions as the incloſed papers do expreſſe. He is now maſter of the beſt part of that prouince; and if he do purſue his conqueſt, he will find the preſent conjuncture very fauorable; for the ſeaſon is yet propitious, and the weather milde without colde. The Valtelineſini are moſt of them diſpoſed to caſt themſelfes vnder his protection. The forces of the pope are not able to make any reſiſtance, and the Spanyards dare not as yet appeare, for feare of drawing the ſtorme vppon themſelfes.

THE circumſtances of principall conſideration in this action are theſe:

FIRST, That the banner of the league is now diſplayed in Italye, on this ſyde of the Alpes; which is ſuch a terror vnto the pope and Spanyards, as the like hath not beene ſeene in this age.

SECONDLY, That no reſpect hath beene borne vnto the pope, in whoſe hands that prouince was depoſitated; with which proceeding he is very much ſcandaliſed, becauſe really his honnor and reputation doth ſuffer much thereby.

THIRDLY, That the Venetians, who are not wont to paſſe the tearmes of defence, haue now appeared offenſiuely, by ſending vnto the marquis di Coeuures ſuch ſuccors as he requires, accompanied with ſix peices of batterye, whereof two were halfe canon, and foure of 12 pound bullet; with which artillerye the caſtle of Tirano (wherein the marquis di Bagni, the popes general, did command) was forced to compound.

THE pope hath written two breuets of late, the one vnto the ſtate of Venice, the other vnto the duke of Sauoye; they are both of one tenor, and do runne in the ſame ſtile, mutatis mutandis, expreſſing his fatherly care of the preſeruation of the catholique religion, which, he ſayth, is like to ſuffer much, if any innouation ſhoulde arriue in Italye, by the drawing in of heretical oltramontani, who doe neuer paſſe the hills without bringing with them a dangerous infection of hereſye, from which Italy is neauer well purged long after; for the preventing of which inconueniences, he doth deſire theſe princes to giue eare vnto ſuch remonſtrances as ſhall be made vnto them in his name by his ſeuerall nuntij; whoſe offices, becauſe they were in both places vniforme, and of the ſame nature, I will joyne togeather, and reduce the ſubſtance of them vnto theſe propoſitions, and relate them in the name of the pope.

FIRST, He doth poſitiuely diſſwade the ſtate of Venice, and the duke of Sauoye, from attempting, or giuing way vnto any innouation in Italye, either directly or indirectly, for feare leaſt hereſye ſhould creepe in with auxiliary forces of ſtrangers, who will not ſerue without leaue to exerciſe their religion, which he doth proteſt that he will not indure.

SECONDLY, He doth except againſt the duke of Sauoye, for his leauying of Berneſi, Valeſini and Baſilienſes, as being all hereticall; and againſt the Venetians, for their hauing entertayned the count de la Tour, againſt whom he doth exclayme with much paſſion.

THIRDLY, He doth peremptorily require and command, that they ſhould forbeare from attempting any thing againſt the Valtelina, becauſe that prouince doth reſt depoſitated in his hands; and when he ſhall haue ſecured the catholique religion in that place, he doth promiſe, that he will take ſuch a courſe as ſhall ſatisfie and content all ſuch as haue any pretentions therevnto.

LASTLY, He doth profeſſe and declare, That if his admonitions cannot preuayle, he ſhall be forced to joyne his armes with the forces of the king of Spayne, and the howſe of Auſtria, to preſerue the catholique religion from corruption.

THE anſwers that haue beene returned backe, both by the ſtate of Venice, and the duke of Sauoye, are likewiſe vniforme, and of the ſame tenor; and therfore, to auoyde repetition, I will likewiſe vnite them, as I did the offices of the popes miniſters.

FIRST, That they are as vnwilling as he can be, to ſee any innouation in Italye; and that they take no pleaſure in ſpending their monny, and burthening their ſubiects, if they could poſſibly auoyd it; but being bound to haue a care of the preſeruation of the publique and their priuate liberty, which is daily vſurped vppon, they do hope, that the pope, as a prince of Italye, will concurre rather with them, who endeuor to ſerue him and themſelfes, then with thoſe who doe incroach vppon the temporall vnder ſpirituall pretences.

SECONDLY, That their leauy of proteſtants are not ſo numerous, nor of ſo dangerous conſequence, as his holines doth ſeeme to conceaue; and they muſt neceſſarily employ ſuch perſons as haue the moſt power, and beſt will to ſerue them.

THIRDLY, That the Valtelina being the marke that is principally aymed at, they cannot promiſe to ſpare it, if they ſhall haue power to recouer it, preſuming, that as they haue hitherto expected with patience ſome good fruits of the long depoſitation, ſo they hope, that his holines, who hath not beene able to diſpoſe the Spanyards to yeelde to reaſon in ſo long a time, will retire his forces out of that prouince, when the banner of the league ſhall appeare, for feare that he receaue ſome affront, which they would be very vnwilling to giue him.

LASTLY, That if he ſhould chance to reſolue to joyne his forces with thoſe of Spayne, it would proue the worſt and moſt dangerous reſolution that he could take; and therefore they doe, in all humility, deſire him to bethinke himſelfe well, before he make his ſtep, which is a precipice wherin he may be loſt before he is aware.

SINCE the ſurrender of Tirano (which doth import little leſſe than all the Valtelina) the marquis di Coeuures hath paſſed to Sondrio, where he found ſome reſiſtance; but the Venetian canon making his way, he hath conquered that towne, which is of great importance; and becauſe a French captayne of good quality had the ill fortune to be killed in the action, no quarter was giuen to theſe of the towne, who were forced to render themſelfs at diſcretion, and to ſtand to the mercy of the conqueror.

IF France do not repent without cauſe, the Spanyards are like to receaue a dangerous blowe; for the duke of Sauoye, and the conneſtable d'Eſdiguieres, do intend really to proſecute what was concluded at Suſa, as may appeare by the liſt here incloſed of the trouppes which they haue leauyed. This ſtate of Venice doth in truth concurre with more generoſity then I could haue immagined, knowing how 1624. auerſe they are from innouations in Italye; but hauing ſeene that a miſcheife cannot be cured without an inconuenience, they are contented to giue way vnto ſuch particular and priuate reſpects, as do moue the duke of Sauoy and the conneſtable to ingage themſelfs in enterpriſes, the conſequence whereof will proue of great importance, if they be well gouerned.

BY the next ordinary, your lordſhip ſhall heare from mee againe, God willing. In the meane time, I reſt

Venice, 28. Xber,
1624. ſtilo nou.

Your Lordſhips affectionat ſeruant to diſpoſe of,

J. WAKE.

From my Lord CAREW.

My Lord,

YOUR laſt, dated the 3d of September, I receaved the 11th of this preſent December; wherein you write, that you haue not receaved any from me of a freſher date then of the laſt December, now a full yeare expired. Whereby I conceave, that my letters haue miſcarried; for the 17th of June laſt, and the 14th of October following, I addreſſed two diſpatches vnto you, and delivered them to Mr. Branthwaite; of whoſe care, as I make no doubt of theire deliveryes, ſo I aſſure my ſelfe, that ſome miſfortune hath befallen them. In his behalfe you deſired my aſſiſtance to preferre him to ſome place vnder the counſell of warre. Wee had nor haue places of ymployment fitt for his quallitie, but onely two clarkes; which were deſſigned long before your letters came to my hands, who doe ſtill enioy and exerciſe the ſame. As occaſion may ſerve, wherein I may doe him a curteſie, I ſhall be readye to doe my beſt endeauour: but becauſe he never moved me in any ſuch matter, I conceave, that he doth not much affecte it; or elſe, ſeing the places are allready ſettled, in that regarde he is ſilent. Since my laſt vnto your lordſhip, which, as aboueſayd, bare date the 14th of October, I haue receaved from you one, bearing date the 20th of Auguſt, and with it two relations, the one of the 7th, the other of the 21th of the ſame monethe; and theſe, with the laſt of the thirde of September, is all that I haue receaved.

BREDA remaynes yet beſeidged by the marques Spinola, and to this hower he never planted any battery againſt it: his campe is lardge; for the circuite of his vttermoſt trenches are little leſſe then 20 myles. The prince of Orange, at the firſt, lodged very neere him, and begann earth-workes, with intent to worke into the Italian quarter: but the enemy, to prevent his purpoſes, did cutt the bankes of the river of Merke; which fruſtrated his deſſigne, being enforced to diſlodge, and to remove to Roſſendale, a greate bourge, ſome 8 miles diſtant from Breda, which place is very convenient to impeach convoyes of victualls from Antwerpe; from whence he ſent the one halfe of his army, vnder the conducte of count Henry, his brother, vnto Walpeck, a villadge in the Long-ſtraiten, to intercept ſuch convoyes of releife as ſhould paſſe from Bolduke to the Spaniſhe army before Breda. Ether of theſe places hath hindred the enemye very much: but his ſtrength of horſe ſo much overtopping the prince of Oranges, as hetherto they haue not wanted reliefe of victualls, yet it hath ſo harried out the enemyes horſes with contynuall travell, as they are now growne very weake; and ſo much rayne hath fallen, as the wayes are allmoſt impaſſable for carriadges: and beſides, the Italian quarter, by invndations, is overflowen, inſomuch as the Spaniards and the towne haue miſerable lodgings; but eſpecially in the enemies quarters, where noe dry place is to be founde. The contention is, whoe ſhall be firſt famiſhed; which, in probabillity, muſt be the marques Spinola; for the towne hath yet 5 monethes victualls remayninge. Farthermore, beſides mortallity, (incident to winter ſiedges) both horſe and foote in Spinola's army (weary of the ſiedge) dayly runne away; and a generall mutinie is expected, for want of paye.

THIS laſt weeke 25 Holland men of warre (and in every of them 100 land-ſoldiers) are paſſed by Dover, and bounde for Todos Santos in Braſill; who vndoubtedly will arrive there before the Spaniſh fleete, (which hath beene long in preparinge) to diſplant the Hollanders there ſettled.

OUR late regiments, whereof in my former letters I gave you notice, are by ſicknes infinitely weakned; and amonge other men of note, (whoe you much affected) affected) the erle of Southampton and his ſonne are deade; they dyed both in one weeke, the father overliving the ſonne ſome 4 or 5 dayes. 1624.

THE match with France proceeds with a ſwift foote, and is abſolutely concluded: but what the articles of the treaty are, what the dower, or other conditions agreed on, I am ignorant. The duke of Buckingham is deſſigned to bring her over, but the tyme of her comminge is vncertayne: but, thankes be to God, the amity betweene England and France was never likelyer to hold and continewe, then at this preſent.

THE French, vnder the conduct of the marques Coevre, haue almoſt reduced all the Griſons out of the Spaniſh hands. They haue alſo entred the Valteline; and doe ſo well proſper in the enterpriſe, as I hope within a ſhorte tyme it will be regayned, and the ancient inhabitants (formerly baniſhed) reeſtabliſhed in theire owne poſſeſſions. Monſ. de Digueres, the old conſtable of France, is in Lumbardy with a competent army, with whome the duke of Savoy ioynes. No memorable act hath beene yet performed. Genoa is iealous that ſome attempt will be made vppon them, and they feare that Savona will be the firſt place attempted. Thus you may ſee, that France and Spayne are like to fall into a warre.

HIS majeſties army, conſiſting of 12900 foote, vnder the conduct of count Manſfelt, are now at Dover, ready to be embarqued. The liſt of colonells, captaines, and officers, I ſend you heereincloſed: theire place of landing is neere vnto Callis, where 10000 French foote, and 3000 horſe, (whereof parte of them are allready come to Dover, raiſed by him in Germany) are daily expected; ſo as his army will be aboue 30000 horſe and foote, attended with 12 or 18 feild-peeces for batterye. Which way he meanes to marche to the Palatinatt, is ſeacrettly carried: but the feare of his comminge hath cauſed Flanders, Artois, Hennolt, Namures, Leidg, Luxenburge, &c. to put themſelues in armes; all the country repayre with theire moveables to the walled townes. God graunt him good ſucceſſe; for, vndoubtedly, his comming into Germany will make a greate alteration in the empire: for thoſe princes, which haue hetherto carried themſelues newtrall, and ſlowe to take armes, will rouſe themſelues, and raiſe vpp theire ſpiritts, to be freed from the yoke of Auſtria, vnder the which they haue a longe tyme groaned. For the guarde of the tranſportinge of theſe troopes to lande in France, 4 of his majeſties ſhipps, and 3 greate marchants, are to wafte them over; for the Dunkerkers are bold and ſtrong att ſea: ſo as, without a guarde, ſmall veſſells, loaden with men, will be eaſely diſtreſſed; and of late they haue taken many Engliſh bottomes, tradinge with the Vnited Provinces.

THE younge duke of Brunſwicke is now at the courte, and lodgeth at St. James's, the prince his houſe, and putts himſelfe into this army, vnder count Manſfelt; and the king hath honored him with the garter, and alſo the erle of Saliſbury. No ſooner ſhall count Manſfelt be tranſported, our next worke is, to haſten away the ſupplies deſſigned for Ireland, towards the which all things are in a readines, and I hope they will be there by the laſt of January at the fartheſt. Then followes the ſetting forth of 12 of his majeſties ſhipps, attended on with 90 others: but for more particulars thereof, becauſe ſome of my former letters haue miſcarried, I forbeare to ſpeake.

THE lord of Kenſington is created erle of Holland in Lincolneſheire. The queene of Bohemia is ſafely delivered of a ſonne, who, as I thinke, is named Edward. Sir Edward Villers (as it is ſayde) hath compounded with Sir Richard Morriſon for the precedencie of Mounſter, whoe had the graunt of it, vppon the death of the erle of Thomond. Sir John Hollis, who was baron of Houghton, is created erle of Clare. The lady Willoughby, mother to the lord Willoughby, is dead. The lord of Kerry in Ireland, and Florence McCartie, are committed (vppon ſome ſuſpition of miſdemeanour) to the Tower, but yet are not queſtioned withall. Sir Noell Carroone, the ancient ambaſſador for the States Generall, is dead, and none, as yett, is appointed to ſupply his roome. The lord Cromwell is created viſcount of Lecale in Ireland. The good old erle of Nottingham is alſo deade; and the new erle, his ſonne, hath no other inheritance by his death, then the barony of Effingham, little better worth then 100 l. per ann. Sir Francis Fane is created erle of Weſtmoreland: and the lord St. John of Bletſoe is in like manner created erle of Bullingbrook in Lincolneſheire. Sir James Ley is made lord treaſurer of England; and his ſucceſſor in the Kings-benche ſhalbe (as is ſayde) Sir Randolph Crew, his majeſties

1624. majeſties ſericant. The lord Say and Seale is created a vicount; but of what place, I haue forgotten. Sir Edward Herbert, the late ambaſſador in France, is created baron of Caſtle-iſland in the county of Kerry, in Ireland: and the lord treaſurer is likewiſe created baron of Ley in Devonſheire.

I AM ſure you haue heard, that the kings ſhipp, the Speedewell, was caſt away vppon the Weelings, within 2 leagues of Vluſhing. When ſhe firſt brake vppon the ſands, the count Mansfelt was aboard her, and brought off by a pinke; but not being able to weare of, within 24 howers after, ſhe brake. John Chidley the captaine, and divers others, with greate difficulty, were ſaved; yet the maſter, and aboue 150 periſhed, and amongſt them ſundry German counts and barons of count Mansfelts followers. Wee dayly expect the comminge hether of the prince Janvile, now duke of Shevreux; whoſe preparations, for himſelfe and his attendants, is ſo greate and magnificent, as is almoſt not to be credited. Thus you ſee, that tryumphes of nuptialls, and the immenſe charge of preparation for a warr, draynes the kings coffers: but our hope is, that the next ſeſſion of parlament (which beginns the 16th of February) will grant lardge ſubſidies, to beare out the future chardge, which is like to contynew for a long tyme.

SIR John Wentworth, in paſſing betweene Vluſhing and England, with divers others, was taken by the Dunkerkers; where they remayne, vntill theire ranſomes be payd. They make good booty of all of our nation they can take: but my hope is, that they will ſhortly repent theire bold enterpriſes vppon his majeſties ſubiects; for the effecting whereof, order is allready taken, and certaine of the kings ſhipps are ordayned for that ſervice. The erle of Mountgomery is ſworne a counſellour. Hetherto the erle of Briſtoll hath not beene queſtioned withall, but lives retyred at Sherborne. Sir Walter Aſton, his majeſties ambaſſador in Spayne, hath obtayned lycence to retourne, but to leave an agent there.

I BESEECH you to preſent my ſervice to your lady; vnto whome, and your ſelfe, my beſt affections ſhall not be wantinge.

Savoy, this laſt of Decemb. 1624.

Your Lordſhips ancient trew frend to ſerue you,

G. CAREW.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

BREDA holds out as well as the two ſkourges of plague and famine will ſuffer. The thyrd, of warre, the towne is not much troubled with, having as yet no ſhott made againſt it, otherwiſe then at random, nor no attempt ſo much as vpon any one of the outworkes. The ennemye hath the ſame ſufferings of ſicknes and want, but is not otherwiſe much moleſted by eyther of his excellencyes armyes; onely that of Roſendale ſent out all the horſe this laſt weeke by night, to give a camiſado to nyne troopes of horſe that lay neare the marquis Spinolas quarter: but finding double trenches at an auenue which they looked not for, before they could make a paſſage through both, the alarum was taken, and they returned.

THERE is now a new worke in hand for the damming vp of the Marck, the river which comes from Breda, about Seuenberghen, to make the water ſwell above that place, and drowne the ennemyes workes, wherby to give paſſage to botes to the towne: which for that purpoſe are drawne vp, laden with victualls and munition, above the dam. This ſtratagem is very vnlikely to take effect; but may ſerue to keepe thoſe in the towne in heart, when they ſhall ſee they are not neglected; and therby hold out the longer, to reape the benefitt of ſuch accidents as tyme may vnexpectedly produce.

HERE are come letters from Paris, diſpatched from thence by poſt over land, from the States ambaſſador Langrac, advertiſing, that newes is come to that court, that his majeſty hath enjoyned count Mansfelt not to touch any of the Spaniſh dominions; which doth much abate the hope the States conceaved of that diverſion: but it ſeemes by intercepted letters, the ennemy is not free from iealouſye; which ſpeake of 34000 foote and 4000 horſe now rayſing on that ſyde, to make count Mansfelt reſiſtance; who by the ſayd intercepted letters hath the title of el mas moderno traidor a ſu mag$^{d.}$ Catt$^{ca.}$ y el mas valiente inquietador de ſus reynos.

Withall

1624.

Withall I obſerved, having had a view of thoſe letters, a ſuperſcription from the cardinal de la Queua, from Bruxells, to the marquis Spinola at the camp before Breda, in theſe formall words: [Al ill$^{mo.}$ y ex$^{mo.}$ ſ$^{r.}$ marques Spinola, mi ſ$^{r.}$ del conſ$^{o.}$ de eſtado de ſu mag$^{d.}$ y ſu cap$^{n.}$ g'n'al en el Palatinato, y m$^{ro.}$ de campo g'n'al en Flandes]. Which open avowing the Spaniſh invaſion and poſſeſſion of the Palatinat, doth meritt other revenge, then the reſpect his majeſty ſheweth in forbearing the Spaniſh dominions.

THE High Duch troopes leavyed by count Mansfelt, part of them (about 1800) ſett ſayle three dayes ſince from Skiedam towards Douer, in ſuch buſſes as were here prepared for the tranſport of the Engliſh into France, yf count Mansfelt will make vſe of them. The like number is come to Amſterdam, which a commiſſary is gone to fetch through land, to tranſport after the ſame manner as the other. The horſe which are leavying here, are not yet neare readynes.

THERE was no meanes to hold the duke of Brunſwick longer then the 16th of this laſt, when he went from hence towards England. The count de la Tour, wee vnderſtand, ſince his departure, hath taken conditions of the commonwealth of Venice, to be generall of the ſtrangers which ſerve that ſtate.

VPON newes of the Spaniards arming ſo largely for Braſile, and tranſporting all ſeamen and ſoldiers they can make in Portugall, or, in effect, in all Spayne, into thoſe remote parts, for recovery of la Baya, the States have reſolved of an extraordinary fleete to lye vpon the coaſt of Spayne, of 18 great ſhipps, and two pinnaces: which ſhewes the good will they have to take the opportunity of an invaſion; but deſunt vires.

THEY likewiſe ſett out the 8 great ſhipps they heretofore promiſed in ayde of the Weſt-Indian company, which make ready 17 more, beſides thoſe now putt to ſea with this wind; the whole fleete being to bee commaunded by one Veron, a Zelander.

THERE is a priſe brought into Zealand of 300 cheſts of ſugar, taken on the coaſt of Spayne, with an Engliſh ſhip comming out of Dunkerke, bound (as they ſay here) for Spayne, and richly laden with tapiſtrye and linnen. The ſhip the Zelanders have diſcharged, paying the fraught; but confiſcate the goods.

THE admirall, Wilkins of Amſterdam, who tooke la Baya, is returned with 12 ſhipps laden onely with ſalt; which anſweares not the expectation was rayſed by that mans ſucceſsfull beginnings. Thus I reſt

Hagh, this 6th of January, 1625.
ſtylo novo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

From the Same. Account of Tranſactions in Germany and Holland continued.

My very good Lord,

THE ennemy, for this fortnight paſt, hath drawne nearer to Breda with three batteryes, from which they batter the towne en ruyne; but as yet have done no more hurt, then the beating downe the windmills vpon the ramparts; which breeds ſmall diſcommodity or annoyance to the defendants, having both watermills, and other helpes, wherwith to grind theyr corne, in the towne: ſo as the garriſon there give good hope of theyr holding out, till all fayſable wayes can be both thought of, and putt in tryall, for theyr deliverance; which to compaſſe, the States are very ſollicitous, holding ſtill two armyes in the field, (the one at Watwick, commaunded by count Henry; the other at Roſendal, vnder count Erneſt) wherwith to moleſt the ennemy (whoſe army is reduced to a very ſmall proportion, not exceeding 12000 foote, and 4000 horſe); and omitting no indeavour, eyther by dykes or ſluces, to incommodate the ennemyes camp with inundations, wherby to putt victualls into the towne. Moreover, a new leavy is here making of 5000 foote, and 2000 horſe, to be ready againſt March next: the foote in three regiments; the firſt of 2000 French, rayſed and commaunded by the count of Candal; the other two, each of 1500 High Duch, vnder two old coronels of that nation, Hawwelt and Vick: of the horſe, divided in 20 companyes, the count of Styren hath 5 of High Duch, of which nation there are 7 free ones. The duke of Bouillon hath 4 of 1624. French; the marſhall Chaſtillon, the marquis of Rouillac, and monſ. de la Force, each one; and the count Pompey, a Veroneſe, hath alſo one of ſuch he likes beſt, who is the firſt Italian that ever bare charge in the ſervice of this ſtate. Another company is added, as ſupernumerary, for my lord Montjoy; and choyſe being made of active officers, it is to be believed, that the warre will begin ſooner then vſuall, and more worke wilbe found the ennemy then heretofore. In the meane tyme, Lambert Charles, governour of Nimmeghen, hath taken, by eſcalado, the towne of Goch in Cleveland; a place of much importance for the ſituation, and the more for that count Henry Vandenburgh, having his goverment of Guelders ſo neare it, made it the place (being the moſt active of all the cheifes of the Spaniſh army) where he was wont to frame his projects. The exploict was done on Friday night, the $\frac{17}{7}$th of this preſent, an hower before day, with 1500 men; who going out of Nimmeghen on the Thurſday in the evening, the governour of Goch, called Tourlan, (liuetenant coronell of the prince of Simays regiment) had notice of it; and cauſing his men to be in armes, who were about 600, in three companyes, remayned vp till almoſt to the inſtant the exploict was executed; when, in opinion, the deſſigne was vpon ſome other neighbouring places, (the governours whereof he had advertiſed by expreſſe meſſengers of our mens being abroade) he retyred himſelf, and gave leyſure to our men to enter by eſcalado, neare one of the towne ports, which they brake inſtantly by hammers they found in a ſmythes ſhop neare the gate. The other three ports, being barrikaded, held out, till they were taken by ſo many ſeverall ſieges, the Saturday and Sunday following; and the caſtle, in which the greateſt part of the garriſon retyred, annoyed our men very much by canon and muſquett ſhott, till Munday; when a ſuccour of 1000 men, comming from Weſel, Guelders, and other places, was defeated at the entrye, and about 300 taken priſoners; and the governour, being wounded in the bellye, (of which he is ſince ſayd to be dead) capitulated to render vpon honorable conditions; but methinckes, that he who ſuffers himſelf to be driven to ſuch extremitye in ſuch occaſions, as to goe out in his ſhyrt, deſerves more honour then the moſt ample capitulation can be made. Wee heare that Don Gonzales de Cordoua, with 10 men out of every company of the marquis Spinolas army, is gone in great haſt, vpon the firſt newes of the loſſe of the place, in opinion to recover it by meanes of the caſtle: but when he vnderſtands that all is loſt, in all apparence, he will returne as he went: for by reaſon of the nearenes of Rhees and Emmerick, the place is ſo provided of all things neceſſary for defence, that it cannot be caryed otherwiſe then by ſiege. For the reſt, count Mansfelts army hath no other want but of a favorable wind to ioyne his troopes, and putt them in the field, being all ready in ſeverall rendezvous: 13000 Engliſh and 300 light horſe at Douer, 5000 High Duch and 400 Ruyters in theſe provinces, and 2000 French cuiraciers, with ſome foote, at Bullen. It is yet vncertayne where this army ſhall ioyne, or what way it ſhall take. Theſe countrey fleetes putt to ſea one after another, with hope not onely to maintayne what is already wonne in Braſile, but to make greater conqueſts; to which purpoſe, wee have newes from Spayne, by letters of the 3d of this month, that Ermitas men have landed in the South ſea, vpon the riuer of Lima, and believe firmely, that Willekens, vice-admirall, who tooke la Baya, is become maſter of Angola on Africa ſide, oppoſite to Braſile; from whence the Spaniards and Portugalls being wont to tranſport an infinite number of Moores for the Eaſt Indyes, the taking of that place is held of as much conſideration and importance as that of la Baya, which the priſoners brought hether by Willekens doe alſo avow. Wee are advertiſed, that the Portugalls, who parted from Liſbone in Nouember laſt, with 20 great gallions, and 4000 men, have vndertaken, without the helpe of the Caſtilians, to recover la Baya; but Willekens, a man of iudgement, with whome I have ſpoken of that matter, vſeth good arguments, grounded vpon reaſon of warre, to conclude the contrary. And yf the Portugalls fayle of their firſt attempt, the Hollanders are like to continue for ever maſters of the place.

THE laſt I haue from your lordſhip are of the 31. of October, with one for the queen, which ſhe takes time to anſweare; but at all times, and all fitt occaſions, remembers your lordſhip with much fauour; and yf your purpoſe holde of returning this way, you will finde a goode and gratious wellcome. But a letter I haue lately ſeene from my lords of the counſell to your lordſhip, counſeling in ciuil terms, though not commaunding, your continuance in that charge, makes me belieue, we ſhall not ſee you here in haſt.

I THINCK I did not forgett to aduertiſe your lordſhip, how the old count de la Torre hath taken conditions of the ſtate of Venice, whether he went ſecretly, when before he had conditioned with count Mansfelt to be liuetenant-general of his armie; which is ill taken in England, where the duke Chriſtian of Brunſwick is made knight of the garter, after many more honors done him, for his encouragement.

I KNOW not whether I aduertiſed your lordſhip, in my laſt, of the death of prince Louys, two dayes after the chriſtening of Edouard; which the queene takes ſtill heauely, being the firſt loſſe ſhe euer had in that kinde. We haue loſt here an honeſt gentleman, Sir Thomas Conwey, (brother to Mr. ſecretary) of the camp diſeaſe; whoſe othet brother, Sir Fulke Conwey, is lately dead of a miſchance by fier in Ireland. Thus I wiſh your lordſhip, with your noble lady, health, with all happines, euer reſting

Hagh, this $\frac{17}{27}$. of
January, 162$\frac{4}{5}$.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

I DEPARTED from Turin vppon the 4th of December by this account, and did ſpend fifteene days in a dull trauaile downe the riuer Po; where arriuing late euery night, and parting early in the morning, tanquam canis ad Nilum, could neither ſee nor learne any thing worthy the relation. When I came to Venice, which was vppon the 17th of the ſame month, I found my ſelfe imbayed, as it were, in a dead lake; for with the death of the doge, Franceſco Contarini, who was buried the day before my arriuall, all publique buſineſſe and negotiations were likewiſe dead and buried; ſo that I was forced to liue as a priſoner, confined to my howſe three weekes, vntill theſe ſeigniori, who doe as obſtinately contend for this dignity, as if it were ſomething more then titular, could agree vppon the choice of a newe prince.

THESE are the reaſons why your lordſhip hath not heard from mee of late; and now that I beginne to bee ſetled here, I will not faile to ſalute you by euery ordinary, if I may know where you are.

IT was the 8th of this month, ſtilo novo, before I could make my ſolemne enterance into this towne; the newe doge, Giouanni Cornaro, hauing beene choſen onely vppon the 4th, crowned vppon the 5th, and three dayes employed by him in ſetling himſelfe. I was met at the iſland of Saint George with 36 ſenators in ſcarlet, and the cheiſe of the trouppe was the caua P. Angelo Contareni, lately returned from an embaſſage out of France, who did giue mee the welcome, in the name of the prince of the ſtate, and accompany mee to my howſe, with as much ceremony, as if I had neuer ſeene it before; although I had languiſhed there three weekes in expectation of this formality, which was the gate by which I muſt of neceſſity enter.

THE next day, being the 9th, the ſame caua P. accompanied with the ſame number of ſenators, did fetch me from my howſe in the morning, and conduct me into the college, vnto the prince; vnto whom I preſented my letters, and made a complimentall oration, expreſſing his majeſties good affection to this ſtate, without deſcending vnto any particularities, becauſe the audience was publique: and hauing, in anſwer, receaued a uery harty expreſſion of the zealous deuotion of this ſtate to the ſeruice of his majeſtie, and a great many of good words, which did reflect vppon my perſon, I was fairely diſmiſſed, and reconducted by the ſame caua P. and ſenators to my howſe, and there ended all our ceremonies.

THE day after, being the 10th, the French ambaſſador did comply with the newe doge; and vppon the 11th, the ambaſſador of the States did performe the like office. After which ceremonyes, I thought it fit to let the good olde prince breath one daye; and therfore, forbearing to trouble him vppon Sunday, I did not aske for a ſecond audience vntill Munday the 13th of this month; which being immediately accorded me, I did beginne my negotiation.

1624. THE Spanyards are ſtrongly fortifyed at Chiauenna and Chiua; and the rigidneſſe of the weather doth hinder the marquis di Coeuures from paſſing further. He did intend once to haue built a fort neere the quarter of the Spanyards; but the hardneſſe of the earth, in this ſeaſon, did diuert him. Bormio is now attempted, but not with great hope of ſucceſſe; for the fort is royal, the earth impenetrable, at this tyme the weather ſo colde, and the ſnowe there ſo deepe, that ſoldiers cannot incampe and lye open: yet is Salici ſent to diſcouer; and he, hauing taken the firſt auenues, ſeaſed himſelfe on the Bourg, and cut of the water that doth goe to the fort, doth incourage the marquis to come on, aſſuring him, that the defendants, fewe in number, vnprouided of victuals, deſtitute of ammunition of warre, ill-payed, and deſperate of ſecource, will yeelde as ſoone as they ſhall be inueſted. Whereuppon the marquis is gone towards the place with the groſſe of his army, but without canon; becauſe he will not ingage his honor in an enterpriſe, whereof he hath no reaſon to preſume of good ſucceſſe.

I DID write to your lordſhip uppon the 28th of December; and ſince that time, this is the firſt opportunity that hath preſented it ſelfe of writing againe; which I haue imbraced as willingly, as I will do all others hereafter. Our match with France is concluded; and before the end of this month, I thinck, the prince will enioye his miſtreſs.

COUNT Mansfelt is diſpatched out of England with an army of 13000 men; and on the frontiers of France there are as many more attending of him. The duke of Sauoye, and the conneſtable of France, will be in the feilde about the beginning of February with a potent armye, to make a diuerſion. This ſtate doth proceede generouſly; and indeed, I did neuer yet ſee any criſis of this nature haue better ſigna concoctionis. A little helpe from your parts would do us much good. I will here kiſſe your faire ladyes hands, with your leaue, and euer reſt

From Venice, the 18. Jan.
1625, ſtilo novo.

Your Lordſhips faithfull and affectionat ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To the Earle of ARUNDELL.

My Lord,

I HAVE receiued 3 of your lordſhips commands, in recommendation of Mr. Petty; whoſe owne woorth, and profeſſion of learning, and loue of noble ſciences, are ſufficient inducements, not only to receiue him with all curteſye according to his meritt, but to aſſiſt him with whatſoeuer is in my meanes or power; beeing glad that I haue any occaſion to ſhow the reuerence I beare, eauen to thoſe arts that are aboue my vnderſtanding: but beeing ſo much valewed by your lordſhip, and comming vnder your fauor, (of whom I ſincerely deſire to deſerue ſomwhat, and whom I honor as a protector of vertuous men, and vertuous vndertakings) I hope hereby alſo to giue your lordſhip ſome teſtemony of my deſire to do you ſeruice. I haue long expected him, beeing come into the Archepelago in companye of one that hath beene two months in my houſe, who left him at the iſland of Millo, vpon a Venetian ſhip, reſolued firſt to viſitt Smyrna, and perhaps ſome more of the ancient churches. I haue heard of his ſafe arriuall there, but nothing from himſelfe, nor of his purpoſe. I doubt he ſhall fynd little woorthy his paynes in thoſe rude parts, where barbariſme hath ſpitefully trodden out all woorthy relicques of antiquitye. Some few medalls or coynes he may fynd rarely; but bookes haue beene ſo often viſited, that I thincke Duck-lane is better furniſhed then the Greeke church. I haue beene very curious, and haue ſeene many old, only to bee eſteemed for age, of vnknowne authors, or of meane ſubiects; or, if better, meanly handled: ſome I haue taken, as markes that I haue beene diligent, but cannot boaſt of them. Statues, columns, or anticque woorkes in ſtone, Mr. Marſham, while he liued, hath ranſacked the countrye, to whom I did all the help I was able; and (as I doubt not, but he hath acknowledged to your lordſhip; for I found him to mee very ingenuous) I did him as many curteſyes as I could, both for his profitt, and other contentment. In that kynd I only haue gotten one, which I ſent for a great way, in expectation of curioſytye, and haue kept yt two yeare, not hauing ſckill enough to thincke it woorth the portage, much leſs the preſentment in England: it was taken at Lampſacum in Aſya, beeing a halfe lyon of white marble, the face halfe renverſed, holding a bulls head in his pawes; but the noſe, forehead, and eyes broken off, otherwiſe it ſeemes a peece of art. 1624. All I can ſay, is, that if God ſend Mr. Petty hither, I will no other wittnes then his owne, how I receiue, and how ready I wilbe to joyne with him, for your lordſhips ſatisfaction: but I am in ſome doubt, (not that I would haue any of his frends feare, before more cauſe) that he is fallen vpon ſome miſchance; hauing receiued a rumor, that he ſhould bee ſhipt from Smirna 40 dayes ſince, and no newes of him; ther hauing beene a moſt terrible ſtorme vpon Twelfe-night, in which foure ſhips, and one gally, were caſt away betweene this and the Caſtles, that came from Scio, and other the parts of the Arches: many men drowned, and many ſaued; among which, one, a phiſitian I ſent for, now at laſt come to mee, recouered out of the jawes of death. If he were ſhipped on any of them, except he bee eſcaped on the Aſyan ſhoare, wher is no leſs perill of roagues, then at ſea of waues, his ſafety may bee ſuſpected: but my hope is better, becauſe the aduice I receiued of his departure, comes not directly from the Engliſh there reſident. I keepe many letters, directed to him, by mee; and ſhall, within fewe dayes, receiue more certayntye, becauſe I haue written to Smyrna about him, and wiſhing his repayre hither. Your lordſhip will not beleeue the woorſt; becauſe rumor is a falſe meſſenger, and I haue not much better author.

I HAUE lately fallen into a way that may leade mee to ſome things ancient, and of eſtimation; and doe hope to procure, by meanes of the patriarch, ſome rare ſtatues from Alexandria, which was deliciæ Romanorum: one I haue heard of, a negro of black marble, a peice not to bee matched. Beſides, he hath told mee of a little iſland, the ſacred place of the buriall of all the ancient Greekes, utterly vninhabited, and as yet vnſearcht. By his meanes, I may procure ſome bookes; but they are indeed Greeke to mee: one only he hath giuen mee, for his majeſtie, with expreſs promiſe to deliuer yt; beeing an autographall bible intire, written by the hand of Tecla the protomartyr of the Greekes, that liued in the tyme of St. Paul; and he doth auerr yt to bee true and authenticall, of his owne writing, and the greateſt antiquitye of the Greeke church.

I RECEIUED lately letters from one Petro Medici, ſolliciting a command to make ſearch in Morea, to take vp carts to open the ground, and to buy hawkes, for his majeſtie. The laſt he may doe without any prohibition; but I woonder that he, beeing borne there, and praticque in Turkiſh manners, ſhould require things that no vizier dares giue. For mony he may doe more with a caddee, that is, 10 dollers, than I can motion here: yet I would not, the fayling ſhould reſt on mee. I made a requeſt in writing, in the name of his majeſtie, and had a curteous anſwere, That his majeſtie ſhould command any thing in theſe dominions; but I had a check for my ſelfe, to mooue a matter which they ſuppoſe is dangerous. They are ſo jealous of that coaſt, vpon a rumor of the duke of Neuers ſhips in the clowds, and of his new order, that ſhould plant themſelues ſomwhere in that countrye, that the vizier proteſted, he durſt not giue a command to putt a ſpade into the ground, nor to mooue a ſtone, eſpecially by a chriſtian, leaſt the Spahees and Timarrs ſhould riſe, as if it were done to build forts for them that will neuer trouble them; ther hauing beene two alarums lately, that Patras and caſtle Torneys was taken by thoſe moſt fearefull cauallieros. If any good oportunitye, I will not omitt yt, attending only the comming of Mr. Petty, to giue light to my ignorance. Ther appears a little calme after the many tempeſts in this ſtate; but the Perſian holds what he had gotten, and prepares for a new warr. The peace made with Abaſſa baſſa is doubly feyned; the breach with the Tartars vnſoundly healed; Bethlem Gabor is in new motion. And this is the ſubſtance of all I am able to enforme your lordſhip, humbly deſiring to bee eſteemed

Conſtantinople,
$\frac{20}{30}$. Jan. 1624.

Your Lordſhips ſeruant,

THO. ROE.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

YOUR lordſhip knew mee once to bee a very merry man, and though age and trauells haue cooled, they haue not quenchd my nature. This I ſay for my excuſe, that reſoluing to rejoyce this paſt Chriſtmas, I haue beene a truant in paying the debt of correſpondence, fynding three of your lordſhips letters of October and Nouember calling vpon mee: but if I had beene more diligent, I had yett wanted matter, theſe people ſleeping in ſecuritye; and a reſolution what to promiſe for Bethlem Gabor, on whom are all my thoughts bent, then vnripe. Your firſt doth accuſe mee of a former long ſilence; but of that I am not guilty; the diſpatches Sept. 5. that ſhould haue arriued lately, are in the margin, to the laſt of myne. In ſome of
20. Octob. 5. them, your lordſhip may remember, that I gaue you intimation, that I tooke occaſion,
12. vpon the peace made by Bethlem Gabor with the emperor, to open ſome poynts
31. therof to the vizier, who was utterly ignorant; yet with ſuch reſeruation, that I
Nou. 14. might preſerue his creditt; which wrought ſo well, that I procured a meſſenger to
27. bee ſent to him, and orders to the baſſa of Buda, that might recall the one, and giue impediment to the other, in proceeding in the treaty; wherin the emperor only ſought to procure a prolongation vpon the old articles for longer tyme, the terme of that beeing expireable the next yeare; that beeing ſecure on this ſyde, he might convert all his forces toward the Lower Germany, and leaue himſelfe a quarrell open for Vatch, whenſoeuer he ſhould bee ready for yt. This hath taken ſo perfect effect, as if I had beene there with plena potentia to gouern yt; and the prince hath returned anſwere, made many new propoſitions, offered to renew armes, and referrd himſelfe to the chriſtian ambaſſadors reſident. The vizier hath demanded our aduiſes, and hath had mine. Ther is not tyme afforded mee to bee lardge, eſpecially beeing to uſe a cyphar; but the ſubſtance, I know, wilbe pleaſing: The grand ſignor beeing not deſirous to make an actuall breach, nor yet to looſe Gabor, thus farr it is agreed; That a command abſolute ſhalbe ſent to him, to annihilate and diſavow his laſt treatye, as made without authoritye, not beeing ſui juris; and for actuall declaration therof, that Gabor ſhall arme, and ſummer in Hungarye, vpon the border of the riuer Tiſſa, his confines, to attend occaſion, and to preuent any ayds to bee rayſed by the emperor, and to giue him tyme to ſeeke alliance or protection of any chriſtian prince, that hath a will to make uſe of him: another to the baſſa of Buda, to diſſolue all treatye, and to bee in a readines on the frontyre: ſo that the peace of Zitwa ſhall runne out. More I cannot ſafely nor conveniently enlardge; it is enough, that new occaſions are miniſtred, if they may bee taken. And of theſe beginnings, how little ſoeuer they ſeeme, your lordſhip may promiſe your ſelfe very great effects: I cannot ſay, they are done, becauſe not gone; but they are written, and faythfull promiſe of their diſpatch within 3 dayes.

To keepe the prince in heart, ther is added a letter imperiall, promiſing to hold him in conſtant protection; and that ther ſhalbe nothing granted, or not avayleable, at the port in theſe affayres, vpon any change of miniſters, without his knowledge, nor in his prejudice. And now, if the princes of any league thincke him of ſeruice, they may take him; for I am perſwaded, he wilbe agayne on foote. Your lordſhip doe mee the fauor, in my humble name, to kyſs the hands of her majeſtie and the kyng of Bohemia. The buſines is now in action, and takes vp my inſtant tyme: lett this excuſe preſerue mee; I will not write, vntill I can ſay, It is done: what is doeing, your lordſhip will communicate. I make no doubt, the Duch ambaſſador will giue lardger relations; to him I referrd formerly what wee had deſſigned, and he hath gouerned himſelfe in a more regular way then uſuall, and in this buſines wants no diligence, to his creditt: I am content he uſe his oratorye in amplifycation, ſo he will leaue mee my poetrye: Hos ego verſiculos feci: which the deſpite of the French ambaſſador doth verefye for mee, who hauing order to vnite, and hauing giuen his promiſe, becauſe he was not the leader, as he would bee in all things, as yet retyres; but he muſt ſtand in, or palinodium canere. The Venetian, after their reſerued manner, hath done as much as can bee expected, and with mee keepes very good concurrance. Your lordſhip once wrote mee, that you had procured an order from his excellencie the prince of Orange, to reprehend ſharply the States conſull reſident at Algier; who, notwithſtanding, hath continued not only to make a faction agaynſt my labors of peace; but hath ſpent mony in yt, and uſed the uttmoſt of his creditt in an envious oppoſition, for what ends I cannot conceiue; yet at laſt I haue made yt a perfect woorke. The peace is proclaymed in the councell-houſe and cytty; the articles made here by mee with their commiſſioners, ſigned by the baſſa, diuan, mufty, caddees, and captayns; and a meſſenger ſent to his majeſtie with their letters, and the inſtrument ſealed; all our nation ſett at libertye, beeing a great number, wherof diuers are gone home; but all free, only ſome deteyned for hoſtage of a few of their people, by us couenanted to bee deliuered; for which alſo I haue taken order. It is a buſines I haue much affected, and doe much rejoyce and thancke God for the good ſucceſs, earneſtly deſiring your lordſhip, that a preſent ſpeedy caſtigation may bee diſpatched to that ill ſpiritt, leaſt he blaſt, by his malice, a good fruict, while the bloſome is tender.

Counſel-lors.
Arch-prieſt.
Judges.

IN your lordſhips laſt letter of Nouember, you conceiue I haue had ſome aduice from Mr. Trumbull. I know him, and I loue him; but ther hath paſſd no exchange betweene us: if it bee my fault, I will mend yt. In that part therof written by your lordſhips hand, you intimate from her majeſtie, that I ſhall expect ſome directions from her by the next, for which you attend a diſpatch from England: totus ſum promptus; but I hope to prevent yt, and to haue done, a little tymely, that ſhalbe as acceptable as much more, too late, of which my next ſhall bring certayntye.

I AM extreamly ſorry for the ſickneſs of that moſt noble lord, in whoſe fauor I was once a proud man, and of his ſonnes danger, the true image of his father, that beginns ſo tymely to tread the paths of honor. Your lordſhip will continew mee the grace to offer them, my lord generalls Vere and Cecill, my ſeruice. And thus, hauing enlardged beyond my tyme, I euer reſt

Conſt. 21. Jan.
old ſtile, 1624

Your Lordſhips.

To Sir GEORGE CALVERT: With the Diſcourſe to the Chimacham, on January 17. and the Paper given him January 20.

Right Honorable,

AS ſoone as I receiued his majeſties order from your honor, to endeauor, by all fitt meanes, to withdraw the prince of Tranſiluania from the neceſſitye of falling eyther to the party of the emperor, or into his mercye, and to procure him ſome encouragement and ſupport for his ſubſiſtance, vntill he might bee taken into conſideration by other his frends, though I knew not how farr I was at libertye, nor to what I was reſtreyned; yet hauing euer beene of that counſell, that ther could come from no part a diuerſion ſo uſefull and terrible as from Hungarye, and that the manner and diſpoſition was left to the diſcretion of the agent; I thought yt fitt to doe ſomwhat, and to referr my ſelfe to the benignitye of his majeſtie, beeing of ſo little woorth, that if I were vndone, it were mihi lucro, in a good cauſe. I confeſs, in this buſines, I haue walked in the ſame feare, that a blind man would vpon a narrow bridge: yet, knowing in generall his majeſties rule, that he is a chriſtian prince as well as a father, I haue directed all my wayes to auoyd ſcandall, or any danger to one foote of chriſtian grownd. Therfore I deſire your honor to ſend my lettre to his majeſtie: I will conceale nothing; I had rather bee pardoned for ignorance, then falſhood with my maſter. When I conſidered well the articles agreed betweene the emperor and Gabor, I ſaw a breach in themſelues, by too much grantings: and knowing this ſtate had no reſolution, nor was prepared to prouoke any enemye on that ſyde, beeing all otherwayes ſurrownded; and that therfore the emperor did preſs a prolongation of the peace at Zitwa, which doth expire in the yeare 1626; hoping therby to bee at libertye to draw all his forces into the Lower Germanye, as beeing ſecure on this ſyde, and woorking vpon the troubles of this empire, to ſteale a confirmation of his treatye with Gabor, and ſo to ſeperate him abſolutlye; I thought I could beginn no where ſo well, as to open and diſcouer this practice, and the inconvenience of thoſe conditions. And ayming only at two things, to recall the prince of Tranſiluania, and to ſuſpend the treatye, I went to the vizier, and acquainted him with ſome of thoſe articles which Gabor had accorded 1624. to the emperor in prejudice of this port, and his dependancye, of which he was ignorant; yet with ſuch reſeruation of the reſt, and the woorſt, as might ſaue his creditt: and when I found him mooued, and apprehenſiue therof, I turned the fault vpon the leuitye and change of the miniſters here, who had forced the prince to ſhift for himſelſe, they hauing granted lettres of ratification of the old peace without any intelligence with him, and to proceed in the treaty of Buda without comprehending him. To giue remedye to theſe, I procured a chiaus to bee ſent expreſſly to Gabor, to reprehend him gently, and to diſavow his peace: to him I gaue diuers inſtructions to aduiſe the prince at his arriuall; but durſt not truſt one ſillable in writing, becauſe at that tyme he did, and yet doth, treate with the emperor; and his ambaſſadors * are returned newly from Vienna, full of ſatiſfaction. By this meſſenger, I councelled, that a command alſo ſhould bee ſent to the baſſa of Buda, ſuperintendent of the treatye; that he ſhould not proceed without the aſſiſtance of the commiſſioners of Gabor, and comprehenſion of the Hungars; foreſeeing that this would woorke ſome diſtraction. Thus farr I proceeded formerly, of which I gaue your honor intimation in my former aduiſes; but durſt not promiſe any thing, leaſt I ſhould bee deceiued with hopes yet in the ayre: but it hath taken ſo right effect, as if it had beene in my power to direct and gouerne yt. The prince hath returned anſwere to the grand ſignor, and excuſed his treatye, as not of force without approbation from hence; that therfore he was ready to reſume armes, if he might bee ſecure of ſupport from ſome part. He alſo informed of many leagues in Chriſtendome agaynſt the houſe of Auſtria, requiring, that all the ambaſſadors reſident might bee ſent for, and conſulted with; and referred himſelfe to their relation and councell: that the treaty at Buda was ſuſpended for new orders, the Imperialls refuſing to admitt the miniſters of Tranſyluania, pretending it was ſuperfluous, beeing a peace lately made with the prince: neyther would they agree to mention the Hungars, as beeing ſubiects to the emperor; and ſo that convention was yet fruictleſs, and the commiſſioners retyred. Vpon this letter, the vizier ſent for mee; and I declared to him the true eſtate of thoſe leagues, and deliuered my opinion, That as it was not fitt to perſwade to make any breach with the emperor, ſo it was very requiſite to aſſure Gabor, and to diſſolue the treaty wholy, and to lett the tearme of the peace runne out: in the meane tyme, to bee in readines, and to obſerue occaſion. Then he deſired mee to ſett downe in writing, for information of the grand ſignor, what anſwere was fitt to bee giuen, both to the prince and the baſſa of Buda, concerning the treatye; which I vndertooke to doe, and he promiſed ſhould bee obſerued. After, he ſent for the other ambaſſadors, to know if they did agree in this aduice (which was not giuen, but by generall conſent): the Venice and the Duch went, and approoued therof, enlardging in ſome things according to the libertye of their owne inſtructions; only the French, for deſpite that I was firſt called, and had the direction, as yet retyres, excuſing his delay vpon indiſpoſition, though he haue order from his maſter to doe as much or more; as he hath profeſſed to us in a conſultation, and promiſed to declare himſelfe, and to uſe all his creditt, which he muſt at laſt doe, or recant; and if he doe not, wee neede him not.

THE coppy of what I gaue the vizier, I haue ſent your honor, that his majeſtie may ſee to what poynts I haue driuen the buſines, to preſerue the generall peace, and yet to retyre Gabor from the emperor, and to ſett him once agayne in a way of uſe, if his majeſtie pleaſe to apprehend yt; and laſtly, to breake the treatye; that the emperor may ſtill haue feares on this ſyde.

I KNOW Gabor yet makes fayre weather with the emperor; but the chiaus ſent to him aduiſed mee, he had newly written a lettre to Vienna, ſubſcribed, Elect of Hungary, ſealed with the armes of that kyngdome, with ſome diſtaſtfull conditions. I will not bee engaged for him, nor promiſe what effects theſe commands ſhall produce; but relate only rem geſtam, that he hath now made greater profeſſions then euer: and I rather beleeue he diſſembles not, becauſe I know his ambition, and that he ſeekes to bee better grownded, hauing a purpoſe to ſend a ſolemne ambaſſadge to all the kyngs and princes colleagued, to offer himſelfe to war or peace by their direction, ſo he may find ſupport, and bee cared for in the concluſion; and, that he may the better procure himſelfe ſome fayth by a publicque act, I am perſwaded he will renownce his treatye with the emperor, and riſe with his army to his owne frontire, to proclayme, HERE I AM: which will make the enemy looke backe. And this ambaſſage will giue great reputation to the generall cauſe; for I am aſſured, the emperor hath not any ſo important feare, as from this backgate of Tranſyluania; nor that he courts any prince in Chriſtendome ſo much as Gabor. If then his maieſtie, or any other ſtate, haue any inclination to ſerue themſelues by him; it is enough for mee, that I haue opened another occaſion, vntill I may haue inſtructions to doe more; for it is likely he may bee farther engaged. I know the only ſcruple is the ſcandall of the Turkiſh ayd, and that tender poynt of vſurping the crowne of Hungarye. But ther is no ſuch feare: his majeſtie may giue ſome truſt to his miniſters; they that ſtand neare the marke, giue ayme to the beſt archers. He will not yeild vp one foote of chriſtian grownd, for his reputation, and hopes in Poland; and to poſſeſs Hungarye, is impoſſible for him in ten yeares warr: he muſt reduce his armes to another forme and diſcipline, and march with ſpade and canon agaynſt many ſtrong townes, the leaſt of which will ſpend him the ſeaſon of one yeare; ſo that, before any dangerous matter can bee effected, many councells may bee changed. What he can doe, is to bee judged by the preſent nature of his warrfare; he can march apace, and doe much ſpoyle; fright Vienna and Prague, but take neyther; and he muſt retyre once a yeare, and leaue all open. Then it muſt bee concluded, he can doe more good for others by diuerſion, then for himſelfe by poſſeſſion. I cannot enlardge, beeing now in action of this buſines; and hope, by the next diſpatch, to aſſure, Actum eſt. I haue, for my owne retrayct and defence, committed to writing euery woord, and lined out euery ſtepp of my proceedings; which I will ſend his majeſtie, as ſoone as I can hyde yt in cyphar. If I haue tranſgreſſed, yet I know, Qui non auſus eſt Auguſto cauſam ſuam dicere, clementiam ejus ignorat.

---

* He is confirmed prince of the empire; hath receiued promiſe of the emperor to bee aſſiſted agaynſt the Turkes, if they miſlike his treatye; and hath giuen himſelfe to bee married where the emperor ſhall aſſigne him. This aduice from the Venetian ambaſſador reſident in Vienna.

YOUR honor wilbe pleaſed to communicate theſe aduices to his highnes, and his grace my lord duke of Buckingham, to whom I owe a particular account; but I dare not giue yt in this character.

IN this empire, in the winter, ther is no action. The Perſian prepares to proſecute the warr, and keepes what he had gotten: he hath ſett his ſilke trade open agayne, to paſs by this countrye; and great carauans are arriued, both ſydes conſenting to lett the merchant bee free, for their benefitt, of cuſtomes. That kyng uſeth this merchandice, as the duke of Burgundy did his daughter, to treate with many, and coſen all. The peace with the rebell of Aſya is a double diſſimulation: the feare of the Tartars reconcilement with the Poles make theſe doubt both their frendſhips.

YOUR honor will fynd by the laſt clauſe of the encloſed, that I haue mentioned the pretended peace with Spayne; which ſeemed ſo ſtrange, that it was not beleeued: but I preſſd to haue the records of letters ſearchd, and the authors of that councell diſcouered; and haue procured a recall, and daſhd that buſines. So, humbly deſiring your honor to giue mee ſome anſwere.

Conſtantinople,
Jan. 22. 1624.

Diſcourſe with the CHIMACHAM, and DIACHMETT Baſſa, about the Affayres of GABOR, and the Treaty of Buda. January 17. 1624.

THE great vizier and Diachmatt baſſa ſent the agent of Tranſiluania, to deſire mee to come and ſpeake with them. They ſhowed mee a letter from Bethlem Gabor; wherein, hauing firſt excuſed his laſt peace made with the emperour, as beeing not abſolutly concluded, but with reference to the approbation of the port, hee aduiſed the grand ſignior, That diuers Chriſtian princes had made a league to recouer their owne from the houſe of Auſtria, and for the generall liberty of Germany and Italy; and that therefore a faire opportunity was now offered, to ſettle the affaires of the frontire of Hungary: that the emperour had drawne all his forces toward Alſatia; where beeing likely to bee engaged in a rough warre, hee had ſent to 1624. Gabor, and to the other parts of Hungary, to leuy horſe for his mony. Which, for the preſent, both hauing refuſed, hee deſired an order from hence, howe to gouerne himſelfe; and that therefore, if the grand ſignior were reſolued to conclude a newe peace, hee deſired to bee comprehended, and his owne treaty allowed; if not, that hee might haue a declaration ſent him in writing, what was the pleaſure of the grand ſignior. Hee perſwaded, that this ſtate ſhould not bee deceiued with delayes, and faire words; and declared, that hee had in readineſs 15000 men, beſides the ayds of the gentry bound to ſerue him, which would make 10000 more; and that hee doubted not, with this force, if the grand ſignior would giue him order, and command the baſſas only to keepe ſafe the frontire, to compell the emperour to ſome termes of reaſon; prouided hee might receiue aſſurance of ſupport in all accidents; and that, upon euery chaunge of miniſters at the port, hee might not bee recalled and countermanded, and thereby forced to ſhift for himſelfe. Which reſolution beeing taken, hee was ready to reſume armes; not doubting alſo, butt if hee might haue leaue, hee ſhould find ſome protection from the princes of Chriſtendome; deſiring that their ambaſſadors reſident at the port might bee called, and conſulted with.

CONCERNING the treaty at Buda, hee further aduiſed, That the baron of Altheim, and other commiſſioners on the part of the emperour, were arriued at Comora; but that, in the entry of the buſineſs, many cauills were made on that ſide.

FIRST, They demanded, that Mehemett, baſſa of Buda, (who had ample authority to meete him, and (aſſiſted with the miniſters of Gabor) to diſcuſſe and end all differences) ſhould come to treate in Comora. Which beeing refuſed, the baſſa, as moſt indifferent, had made offer, that there beeing 3 villages in the middway, contributary to both, the Imperialls ſhould take one, and the Ottomans an other, to lodge in; and that the third, betweene them, ſhould bee voided, as an equall place to congregate. To which the deputies of the emperour would not agree.

SECONDLY, In the matter of the treaty, they refuſed to ſpeake of any newe articles; but reſting vpon the old peace made at Zitwa, they declared, they had no commiſſion to alter any point thereof, butt only to accommodate and ſettle ſome diſorders in the execution; and required reſtitution of priſoners, and reparation of dammages, in the laſt warre of Gabor.

THIRDLY, They tooke exceptions at the preſence of the commiſſioners of the prince of Tranſiluania; with whom they would not treate, hauing lately made a peace apart with him, of which they deſired only confirmation.

FOURTHLY, They required, that no mention att all might bee made of the Hungarians, as beeing the abſolute ſubiects of the emperour. That therefore, ſeeing all theſe demands were either contrary or beſides the commiſſion of the grand ſignior, and the treaty thereupon ſuſpended, hee demanded newe orders, and a full reſolution, either to proceed, or to make a breach: in which caſe, hee deſired to bee aſſured, what aſſiſtance hee ſhould haue, and howe farre hee might engage his honor to his frends in Chriſtendome.

VPON theſe points, the baſſa deſired mee to deliuer my opinion, and to make a true declaration of what I knewe concerning thoſe leagues and vnions mentioned, and howe farre Gabor might depend vpon any ſuccours or protection from thoſe parts of Chriſtendome; that accordingly, they might reſolue to giue ſpeedy anſwere to Bethlem Gabor, both in the treaty, and howe hee ſhould diſpoſe himſelfe.

THAT this propoſition would bee made, was not vnknowne vnto mee; inſomuch that I was prouided to reply, by the conſent of the other ambaſſadors reſident here, with whom I had conſulted; and therefore, to gouerne and direct the buſineſs to myne owne ends, I made this anſwere:

FIRST, That it was abſolutely requiſite, a declaration and order ſhould bee ſent to Gabor, to diſauowe and annihilate his laſt treaty, as beeing made without the conſent of the grand ſignior, whereby hee was ſeperated from all dependency vpon this ſtate. If that were not done, all future diſcourſe was in vayne; for, that ſtanding in force, hee could neither ſerue the grand ſignior, nor could any other prince or ſtate expect any thing from him, butt as an enemy.

IF that peace were once diſannulled, many of the exceptions of the emperour in the treaty were anſwered; and then they might proceed on more equall conditions, as the reaſon of their owne affaires ſhould direct them, that the peace which ſhould bee concluded, might haue good foundation; butt to yield to all thoſe demands, ſeemed to mee both diſhonorable and vnſafe. 1624.

FIRST; Concerning the place of meeting, it was only a circumſtance, which would eaſily bee reconcyled.

To the ſecond; That the Imperialls reſolued to reſt vpon the peace of Zitwa: they knewe, by the rules thereof, Vatch ought to bee reſtored, and dammages repaired.

To the third; By ſeeking to exclude the miniſters of Gabor from the treaty, they did endeauour to nouriſh the iealouſy ſowne, and to make a full ſeperation of him from this ſtate, and ſecretly to drawe a confirmation of his laſt peace.

To the fourth; That they tooke exceptions to the comprehenſion of the Hungars: it aymed at a renuntiation of the league made by that people, and other prouinces, 5 yeares paſt, with the grand ſignior, for their protection: butt howe theſe did comport with the will of the grand ſignior, or good of this ſtate, it was not in mee to iudge. Therefore my opinion was, that the treaty ſhould reſt ſuſpended, and all things remayne as they were before the beginning thereof.

FOR the leagues of Chriſtian princes, and their reſolution to recouer their owne rights mentioned; I could only ſay, That his majeſtie, my maſter, hauing by all iuſt meanes of treaty ſought the reſtitution of the Palatinate, vniuſtly taken from his children by violence, and finding nothing but either delayes or deluſions, was forced and reſolued, with other princes his allyes, to take armes for the diſpoſſeſſing of thoſe who vniuſtly held it: That it was alſo true, that the king of France, the ſtate of Venice, and duke of Sauoy, had entered into league, to free the Valtaline and the Griſons from the yoake of the houſe of Auſtria; reaſon of ſtate, and the care of their owne ſafetyes, warranting them in this action, thoſe cuntryes being the paſſages betweene Italy and Germany, and vnder their protection; and therefore I thought, that vpon ſo iuſt cauſe, there would ſucceed a warre.

To which the vizier replyed, That I ſhould deliuer my opinion, whether the grand ſignior ſhould nowe breake with the emperour, and maynteyne Bethlem Gabor in his pretenſions; and, in caſe of breach, what countenance and aſſiſtance hee ſhould haue; and whether hee ſhould bee admitted into theſe leagues, or not, on this condition, to make warre together; and when a ſafe and generall peace might bee had, that hee alſo ſhould bee comprehended.

To which I anſwered; That I had no commiſſion to perſwade a breache betweene the grand ſignior and the emperour, nor any way to bee engaged; yett I would not refuſe to deliuer what I thought was requiſite at the preſent. As his majeſtie had no need to ſeeke for ſuccour ſo farre from home, nor to moue the prince of Tranſiluania to any thing beyond his owne purpoſes; ſo, I conceiued, hee deſired, that hee ſhould ſubſiſt and bee maynteyned in his owne eſtates, ſo that hee might not bee enforced, vpon ill conditions, to fall into the mercy and diſpoſition of the emperour; and that therefore it was very neceſſary for the grand ſignior to ſupport him: butt that Bethlem ſhould renewe the warre, was a matter out of my inſtructions; nor could I bee engaged for any ſupply, or other promiſe of confederacy: neither did I think it ſeaſonable for the grand ſignior, for his cauſe, to make a breach with the emperour, in which all Chriſtian princes would bee intereſſed; butt that rather, the reſolution and anſwere fitt now to bee giuen, in my judgment, was this; That the peace by him made, ſhould bee diſauowed; and the treaty now ſuſpended, vtterly broken; taking the Imperialls at their words, That both parts ſhould reſt vpon the laſt peace made at Zitwa *; and all other things to remayne in the termes wherein they were formerly: only, for preuention of any euill, that expreſſe order ſhould be giuen to the baſſas on the frontire, to bee vigilant and in readineſs vpon euery occaſion; and that a letter, ſigned by the grand ſignior,

---

* The emperour doth deſire the peace of Zitwa, and no other, becauſe he is not in caſe to diſpute the breaches therof, and to require reſtitution; but he would haue that peace, as it is, confirmed, beeing to expire anno 1626, and to bee prolongued for 5 or 6 yeares, that he might convert his forces ſecurely into Germany, as ſecure on this ſyde. And that is the poynt to be avoyded; for then he hath a breach open with the Turkes, when he is fitt for yt.

1624. ſhould bee procured to Bethlem, to giue him aſſurance of his conſtant protection, and to command him, in full and actuall declaration of his retyring from the laſt treaty, to riſe with his army, and to march to the riuer Tiſſa, within his owne limitts, and there to remayne on the frontire this ſummer, without doing any act of hoſtility. By this courſe, the peace ſhould remaine inuiolate, and thoſe cuntryes deliuered from feare of any ſodaine ſurpriſall. And laſtly, if there ſhould ſucceed any iuſt cauſe of warre, Bethlem Gabor might haue ſecurely 6 moneths tyme to ſend his ambaſſadors to thoſe Chriſtian princes, whoſe protection hee affected, and might bee aſſured, by their anſwere, of his owne conditions; whereby hee might hereafter gouerne himſelfe, without depending vpon the word of any man here, who had no authority to promiſe him.

THE vizier and Diachmatt baſſa did both ioyntly agree to this my aduiſe, with the conſent of the agent of Tranſiluania, promiſing exactly to performe and execute it; deſiring mee, leaſt any thing ſhould bee miſtaken, briefly to digeſt it in writing, that it might bee ſent in to the grand ſignior, and his warrant procured to drawe the letters and commandements accordingly: further demanding, if this were the opinion of other ambaſſadors reſident. To which I anſwered, that I conceiued it was: but for more aſſurance, I deſired them to ſend for them; for which they gaue preſent order.

IN this diſcourſe I gaue them this one caution; That they ſhould take eſpeciall care to aduertiſe the king of Poland, ſtrictly to obſerue that article in his laſt treaty; not to ſend nor ſuffer any of his ſubiects to enter or ſpoile any the cuntryes of the prince of Tranſiluania in his abſence.

AT my retorne home, I aduiſed the 3 reſidents of what had paſſed; whereof the Venetian and Dutch went to the vizier, affirming in generall theſe relations and reſolutions, enlarging and reſtreyning according to their owne liberty.

AFTER many practices of the French, who was deſpighted, that the buſineſs had paſt my hands, hee went to the vizier, and Diachmat baſſa, confirming the reſolution taken together; yett, it ſeemes, ſuſpecting that I had exceeded ſome way, hee treacheroſly procures from the baſſa (who are ignorant of all good termes) a copy of the notes giuen by mee, hoping therein to find ſome aduantage againſt mee. Butt when hee vnderſtood them, hee was aſhamed to haue diſcouered his malice; and to make ſome part of amends, hee ſent his ſecretary to the vizier and baſſa, to verify euery particular thereof, and to acknowledge it to bee his reſolution and councell.

Given to the CHIMACHAM, concerning the Treaty of Buda, by Sir THO. ROE, January 20th, 1624.

IT is true, that his maieſtie of England, my lord and maſter, hauing by all righteous wayes, endeauored the reſtitution of the Palatinate, wrongfully taken from his children; and, after diuers promiſſes, hauing found nothing but delayes or deluſions; is forced and reſolued, with other princes his allyes, to take iuſt armes for the recouery thereof, from whoſoeuer ſhall oppoſe him.

IT is alſo true, that the king of France, the ſtate of Venice, and duke of Sauoy, haue entered into league, and raiſed forces, to free the Valtoline and the Griſons; whoſe cuntry is the paſſadge betweene Italy and Germany, and vnder their protection, from the yoake of the houſe of Auſtria.

IT is out of all doubt, that thoſe princes will proſecute the warre, vntill euery one of them haue recouered his right.

CONCERNING the treaty of Buda: Inaſmuch as the deputyes of the emperour doe inſiſt peremptorily vpon the peace of Zitwa, thereby they intend ſecretly to demaund the reſtitution of Vatz; and that priſoners bee reſtored, and dammages repaired in the laſt warr of Gabor.

BY ſeeking to exclude the miniſters of Gabor from that treaty, they practice to ſeperate him from this ſtate, and to drawe a confirmation of his laſt peace, made without conſent of the port.

THAT they make exceptions at the comprehenſion of the Hungars; they ayme at a renuntiation of the league made 5 yeares paſt, by the ambaſſadors of that kingdome, with the grand ſignor, who then gaue them protection.

1624.

THEREFORE, ſeeing it is inconuenient at the preſent, to make a breach with the emperour, the beſt counſell is: Firſt, That the peace made by Bethlem Gabor, bee vtterly annihilated and diſauowed; for, vnleſs that bee done, Gabor muſt depend vpon, and aſſiſt the emperour, and all other his alliances with his frends are diſſolued. Secondly, The treaty at Buda ſhould bee ſuſpended; for by that meanes the queſtion of reſtitution of Vatz wilbee auoyded, and all matters remayne as they were formerly. Thirdly, There ſhould bee order giuen to the baſſas vpon the frontire, to bee in readineſs, vpon all occaſion. Fourthly, There ſhould bee procured a letter ſigned by the grand ſignor, to giue aſſurance to Gabor of his conſtant protection, and that nothing ſhould bee concluded at the port, in thoſe affaires, without his knowledge. Fifthly, There ſhould a command bee ſent to Bethlem Gabor, to riſe with a competent army, and to ſpend this ſommer on the borders of the riuer Tiſſa, in his owne dominion, without doing any act of hoſtility; thereby to manyfeſt to the world, that hee doth renounce his laſt treaty with the emperour. And in the mean tyme, both the frontire wilbee ſecured, and hee ſhall haue leiſure to ſee how other Chriſtian princes proceed, and to ſend his miniſters to offer himſelfe into their alliance. And thus both the peace ſhall remayne inuiolate, and hee ſhalbee able to ground himſelfe vpon their anſwere, what reſolution to take, either in warre, or a finall generall peace. Laſtly, The king of Poland ſhould bee admoniſhed, according to the laſt treaty, not to ſuffer any of his ſubiects to enter in, or ſpoile the dominions of the prince of Tranſiluania, in his abſence, And this is the ſubſtance of our opinion.

THERE reſts only one impediment in theſe affaires: It beeing reported, that about 8 moneths ſince, a certeyne Jewe was diſpeeded from Ali baſſa the late vizier, with letters to the viceroy of Naples, offering, in the name of the grand ſignor, a peace vnto the king of Spaine, and requiring the comming of an ambaſſador to treate thereof; which, as it wilbee enterpreted on that ſide, to proceed from weakneſs and feare, ſo it will giue great diſtruſt vnto the princes oppoſite vnto the houſe of Auſtria. And therefore it is very requiſite, that this buſineſs bee ſearcht into, and the authors of that counſell diſcouered, and ſome preſent order taken to reuoke any ſuch commiſſion, for the better ſecurity and ſatisfaction of all the frends and allyes of the grand ſignor.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

My Lorde,

YOUR grace hath vouchſafed mee ſo great a fauour, to remember a man almoſt among the dead, that is, ſecluded from the conuerſation both of Chriſtian and ciuill men, that you haue not only reuiued and reſtored mee to ſome hope of doing your grace a litle ſeruice, butt to my ſelfe. It is to mee both an aſſurance and a joy, that you haue accepted any thing I could offer, and that you haue pleaſed to command mee any thing I can doe. The antiquities which I conceiue your grace doth deſire, (for curioſity in newe arts there is none here) are either columns or ſtatues in ſtone, or bookes, or ancient coynes, or medalls. I confeſſe my ignorance in chooſing or knowing any of theſe; yett, for the reuerence I beare to them, either as lights or reliques of antient learning, or noble ſciences, I haue a litle endeauored to ſearch, and enforme my ſelfe. Butt I haue found, the ſpight or ſordidneſs of barbariſme hath trode-out all the ſtepps of ciuility, or, like ruſt, deſtroyed them. For columnes, the building of ſo many Mahometan moſchyes hath many enquiry euen into the rubbiſh of all old monuments, and into the bowells of the earth; ſo that there is litle to bee hoped for by induſtry, if chance aſſiſt not. Statues, or figures of beaſts, becauſe they are forbiden in their lawe, are either defaced on purpoſe by them, or ſought for by others, and conueyed away, ſo that they are become very rare. One of that kinde I heard of, beeing a halfe lyon of white marble, holding the head of a bull in the pawes, the neck reuerſed. I ſent for it a great way, to Lamſacum in Aſia, vpon report; and when it arriued, it had no grace in my eyes; for the face was broken off: the reſt makes a ſhowe of art, but beyond my capacity; for when the principall part was defaced, I thought it not worthy any eſtimation. I did deſſigne it for your grace, butt haue kept it two yeares, as not worth the portage, except there bee any miſtery in theſe things, that I vnderſtand 1624. ſtand not. Old Greeke and Arab books here are many; butt they haue bene ſo often viſited by learned and curious men, that I doubt the gleanings are not only ſmall, but poore. After theſe I haue made ſome more enquiry, and haue choſen a fewe, rather to ſhowe my owne diligence, then for any thing I can promiſe of them; the authors vnknowne, the ſubiects either meane, or meanly handled; age and obſcurity is their praiſe, things better in eſtimation, then of vſe. Yett of this kind perhaps I will returne as well furniſhed, as my meanes will giue mee leaue. Medalls and coynes in gold and ſiluer, of the antient Greeke kings and emperours, Armenians and Romans, by chaunce I light vpon: of thoſe I will gather all that haue either bewty or antiquity; and theſe, and all, and all I can performe or finde, are freely preſented to your grace. Whatſoeuer I can collect, hauing now your graces command, added to myne owne deſire, ſhall not goe out of the way to Venice: I knowe as well howe to ſend them, and haue as much affection to ſerue your grace, as any man liuing. I expect daily here the comming of one Mr. Petty, recommended by my lord of Arundell, I think, to the ſame vſes. It ſeemes, that gentleman is better praticque, and may informe my judgment. With his ayd, I doubt not to giue your grace ſatisfaction, either in effects, or in my induſtry: and I hope I am now fallen into a good way by the help of the patriarch of this citty, who hath enformed mee of a ſmall, deſpiſed, vninhabited iſland, in the Arches, a place antiently eſteemed ſacred, the buriall of all the Greekes, as yett vnbroken vpp; where, hee tells mee, are like to bee found many rare things. Your grace may pleaſe to giue order to ſome ſhipping, that comes for this place, (if in the meane tyme I can procure none) to take directions of mee, and a guide from hence, and to anchor there 5 or 6 dayes, to ſearch it; where they may take, without trouble or prohibition, whatſoeuer they pleaſe, if any man of judgment to make the choyce. Hee hath alſo aſſured mee, that Alexandria, which was once the retraict and deliciæ Romanorum, hath yett about it more rare peeces, then any part within the Leuant ſeas; whereof, when hee was patriarch there, hee diſcouered many; and among others, a ſtatue of a Negro, of black marble, taken vpp whole, butt by accident a thigh broken, the forehead inlayd with a work of gold; which hee hath promiſed to procure mee, and ſayes it is one of the moſt bewtifull figures and ſtone in the world, and that hee will write thither to recouer whatſoeuer can bee gotten. One book hee hath giuen mee to preſent his majeſtie, butt not yett deliuered, beeing the bible entire, written by the hand of Tecla, the protomartyr of the Greekes, that liued with St. Paul; which hee doth auerre to bee authenticall, and the greateſt relique of the Greeke church.

I RECEIUED not long ſince, from Mr. ſecretary Caluert, an order to doe his majeſtie ſome ſeruice in a buſineſs that I haue often meditated to bee of great conſequence, ſince the chaunge of councells, and the eſtate of his majeſties affaires. What I haue done, I haue by this poſt aduiſed, and dare not ſend it your grace without a ciphar; butt humbly deſire you to receiue it from his hands, and to procure it ſuch an enterpretation and acceptance from his majeſtie and his highnes, as may yield comfort to my intentions, though the work haue no meritt; and that you will command an anſwere ſpeedily, how much further I may proceed; for perhapps (though I can aſſure nothing from ſuch men) ſomwhat more may bee done, and his majeſtie may receiue more aſſurance from themſelues, then from mee, who loue not ſuertyſhipp.

I BESEECH your grace, accept of the vowes and prayers, inſtead of other abilityes, from him that is

Conſtantinople,
24. January, 1624.

Your Graces moſt deuoted ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

AFTER the taking of Sondrio, the marquis di Coeuures did reſt, and, as it were, take breath, twenty dayes and more, without attempting any further enterpriſe. This ſtop of his did giue occaſion vnto the world to ſuſpect, that he had receaued ſeacret order out of France, not to proceede further. But by his proceedings ſince, it hath appeared, that he did but looke about him, to ſee where he might take his beſt aduantage. For after hauing bended his courſe towards Chiauenna, as if he intended to ſet vppon that place next, and by amuſing the enemye with that conceit, cauſed all their ſtrength and forces to turne that way, he did command the colonel Rodolfo Salici, to march with 1500 men towards Bormio, to diſcouer the ſtrength of that place, and to ſee whither the enterpriſe would proue feaſable. Salici, departing very ſeacretly from Sondrio, arriued at Bormio before he was expected; and hauing by ſurpriſe ſeaſed himſelfe of Sera, Preſa, and all the auenues, taken the bourgh it ſelfe, and cut of the water that did furniſh the fort, he did ſend vnto the marquis to let him know, that thoſe of the fort were ſo affrighted, as that they would certainely yeelde, if they were roundly inueſted; that they wanted victualls, ammunition, and water; that they were diſcontented for want of paye, and deſperate of receauing any ſecours. Vppon this aduiſe, the marquis di Coeuures did reſolue to feele their pulſe, and to march thither with the groſſe of his armye; but he was vnwilling to tranſport any canon along with him, for feare of ingaging his honor by aſſalting a place, which he did know could not be forced in this ſeaſon, if the defendants would reſolue to hold out; for the weather was too cold to incamp, and the ground too hard to intrench. When he was vppon the way, Salici did, by freſh diſpatches, ſollicit him to come on with diligence, and incourage him to hazard the canon, that the defendants might haue a reaſonable pretent to yeelde honorably; which counſell was followed, and vppon the 13. of this month, ſtilo nouo, the marquis did appeare with his armye, and inueſt the fort. Vppon the 14th, the ſergant major did come out to parlament, and hauing demanded a monthes tyme to expect ſecours, it was peremptorily intimated vnto him, that if he did not yeeld within fouer dayes, no quarter ſhould be giuen vnto any in the place. Then did he deſyre, that they might ſee the canon, before they did render vp a port of ſo great importance; and this was granted him: ſo that vppon the 17th, the canon did play a little, by way of formality; and vppon the 18th, the fort was deliuered vp vnto the marquis di Coeuures, vppon honeſt conditions.

HERE is arriued a currier, diſpatched in great diligence from Paris vnto this French ambaſſador, who hath brought letters of exchang for the ſumme of 100000 crownes, to be payed vnto the marquis di Coeuures, vnto whom this ſtate hath likewiſe ſent their quota, and the duke of Sauoye his; ſo that his armye is very well payed, and by conſequence likely to ſubſiſt, and to do well.

WITH this currier, the French ambaſſador hath receaued order to let this ſtate know, that thoſe of the religion in France, ſeruing themſelfs of the preſent conjuncture, wherein that king hath employed his men and monny this way, for the recouery of the Valtelina, and the defence of the publique liberty, haue attempted ſome innouations within his dominions, eſpecially Monſ. de Soubize. The circumſtances of theſe innouations are ſo ſtrangely aggrauated, and the conjuncture hath falen out ſo fatally to make vs odious, that if I did not loue my owne ſoule more then all the world, I would rather auowe my ſelfe to be a Turke, then a proteſtant; but I hope that tyme will waſh of this ſcandall from our religion, and that theſe who haue beene the authors thereof, will receaue juſt puniſhment.

THE army in the Valtelina is put into garriſons, there to be refreſhed a little; and I know not whither Chiauenna (which is the onely place left vnconquered) ſhall or can be attempted, vntill the weather doth open. I ſuppoſe the marquis di Coeuures will breath a little, to ſee what the duke of Sauoye and conneſtable of France will doe by waye of diuerſion, to eaſe him a little, and to facilitate his way to Chiauenna. There hath not beene in many yeares ſo faire an army in Italy, as is now in Piedmont, both of horſe and foote; and I doe dayly expect to heare of ſome action of importance.

THE count de la Tour is entertayned by this ſtate as generall of their armyes, with a penſion of 6000 crowns per annum, 12 lanze ſpezzate allowed for the guard of his perſon, 12 capitani trattenuti for him, at twenty crownes a month for euery one; and 80 taſſe euery month for his ſtable, euery taſſa amounting to fouer liuers of this monny: he is to command all vnder the proueditore, and to take place of all, except Don Luiggi di Eſte, ſonne to the duke of Modena.

I HAUE written unto your lordſhip letters from this place, dated the 28th of December, 1624, and 18. of Jan. 1625; and do expect with impatience to heare, that they are come to your hands. Here incloſed you ſhall receaue letters from the king and queene of Bohemia; one from Sir Dudley Carleton, without ſeale or couer; one from the count de la Tour, for your lordſhip; and another, from him, to the Holland ambaſſador. So, wiſhing your lordſhip all happines, and deſiring that I may haue leaue here to kiſſe the faire hands of your worthy lady, I reſt euer

Venice, 4th Feb.
1625, ſtilo novo.

Your Lordſhips, moſt affectionately, to do you ſeruice,

I. Wake.

To the King.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

Though I preſume your Majeſtie hath receiued aſſurance, by the letters of the baſſa and councell of Algier, of the peace proclaymed in that citty with your Majeſties ſubiects, whereof the agreement and articles were ſent, in Nouember laſt, by a meſſenger of purpoſe from them; yett I would not omitt to preſent my ſeruice before your Majeſtie, as the humble inſtrument thereof. And hauing found ſo many difficulties and oppoſitions, and ſo litle faith in their promiſes, I durſt not anticipate, and rely ſo much vpon hopes, as to deceiue your Majeſtie, vntill it was done with that ſolemnity, which may giue it ſome creditt. If there bee no other fruict, then the freedome of a great number of your Majeſties ſubiects, oportunely, I hope, ſett at liberty to ſerue you, and daily ſhipped home, that alone hath bene woorthy of the care, and their prayers wilbee multiplyed for your Majeſtie. But I am perſwaded, it wilbee maynteyned; the rather, becauſe the French, who, in imitation, vndertooke the like, at the ſame tyme, was reiected; the baſſa beeing ſent by mee, and in ſome way depending of mee, and this vizier taking pleaſure and pride to haue done your Majeſtie this ſeruice. There will nothing bee defectiue to preſerue it, butt a letter from your Majeſtie to acknowledge it, both to him, and the capten baſſa; the deliuery of ſome Turks, conditioned by mee, as a ſeale on our parts, which God hath prouided, by ſending more into Ireland, the liberty of whom will releaſe thoſe fewe yet kept as hoſtage; and, laſtly, ſome ſmall prouiſion, by your Majeſties grace, to preſent the baſſa yearly, and thereby to maynteyne him in his place, in recompence of the tenths he looſeth by that peace: it beeing a rule in Turky; No feeling, no faith. Hitherto I haue renewed his commiſſion at my owne charge. I moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſtie to accept it, and to repoſe the care of conſeruation in England vpon ſome more able. I doubt not, the trade of that coaſt will, in ſome meaſure, repay it to your Highnes coffers; our cloth beeing there in greater eſtimation, and of better price. I knowe not what is informed your Majeſtie from Tunes; but they hauing referred the reſolution to Algier, if the like anſwere bee not come, yett your Majeſtie may conclude from the ſame grounds, it wilbee vniforme.

Of the direction I receiued in your Majeſties ſeruice from Sir George Caluert, I haue giuen him an accompt of my ſtepps and degrees; butt was afrayd to preſent any thing to your Majeſtie vpon coniecture, before the laſt diſpatch; hauing then ſome foundation to intimate to your Highnes, that you may expect therein ſome good fruict. And becauſe I knowe the men on whoſe woords I muſt depend for my relation, I was yet wary to deliuer any thing for certeyne, vntill this weeke, that I receiued aduiſe from Vienna, of iealouſyes and alterations there, that confirmed mee; which I haue ſent, as lights and inducements to the creditt of my diſcourſe. I doubt not, the rumour of it will outrunne my aduiſe, and perhapps bee ſent from the founteyne: I will aduance it as farre as my diſcretion will enable mee, and attend the enlardgement of your Majeſties commands, to which I owe more then naturall obedience; and conclude in prayers for your Majeſties temporall and eternall happineſs.

Conſtantinople,
1^{2}_{3}. Febr. 1624.

Your Maieſties moſt humble ſubiect and ſeruant.

To Sir GEORGE CALVERT.

Right Honorable,

BY the death of the great vizier at Tocat in Aſia, abroad with the armye, the reſolution of the anſwere to the prince of Tranſiluania, and the baſſa of Buda, hath beene deferrd; ſo that, vntill the laſt night, the commands and letters could not bee procured. This day they haue beene brought to mee, in the matter, not fully correſponding to our expectation, and their promiſe. The ſubſtance of the one is, That foraſmuch as the Imperialls haue refuſed to admitt into the treatye the miniſters of Gabor, and to comprehend the Hungars, the baſſa ſhall not proceed without them: but if the conditions, with their incluſion, may bee honorable, that then he ſhall conclude a prolongation of the peace. To Gabor, a letter ſignifying this limitation, and referring him, for his reſolution, to the aduice of the ambaſſadors here reſident, with promiſe of protection. So, in the iſſue, all depends vpon his will, to make peace, or to deferr yt. From hence his majeſtie may collect the warines of this ſtate to giue any occaſion of a breach on their parts, (which if it ſhould bee conuenient for them, yet they would lay the chardge vpon another) and conſequently conclude, ther is no feare to ſtirr them vp. Theſe letters wee are loth to ſend, if wee can gett them altered to our owne ends: but if they cannot for the preſent bee changed, yet ſome ground is gotten; for the agent of Gabor doth deepely proteſt, this liberty is as much as his maſter doth require, and that he will neuer conſent to any agreement. Howeuer, three monthes at leaſt wilbe ſpent, before any thing can bee putt in order to enter into the treatye; in which tyme, expecting dayly the arriuall of an extraordinarye ambaſſador from Gabor with larger offers and inſtructions, ther is no doubt ſo much wilbe effected, as a finall diſſolution of the meeting, and a declaration of Gabor againſt the emperor; who, in the incerteyntye, cannot leaue his frontire diſarmed. Somewhat wilbe done from hence, by enformation of Gabor, to perſwade him to maynteyne his creditt with his ancient allyes. But ſeeing it is now euident the power doth reſt wholye in him, the beſt councell is, to aſſure him, by admiſſion into the proteſtant league of Germanye, which, wee heare, is renewing by the induſtry of the marqueſs of Baden; and it is very probable, that he will offer himſelfe both to his majeſtie, to the French kyng, and to them; wher, if he bee accepted, he will proue of great ſeruice: and I ſee no cauſe to bee ſcrupulous therin, when he is ſought vnto, by all meanes, from the emperor, and the kyng of Spayne.

AFTER the ſullen humor of the French ambaſſador was vapored away, he did declare himſelfe in this buſines fully and amplye, vereſying all that had beene done by mee; and now, it is like, he will enforce his utmoſt, (for ſuch order he hath from his maſter) to weaken the emperor by iealouſies, feares, and diuerſions on this ſyde; and Gabor beeing abſolutely remitted to our opinions, he muſt eyther declare, or vnmaske all his diſſimulations.

THAT the firſt practice, to caſt a jarr betweene them in this treatye, (which could not bee done apertly, without ſome art) hath taken full effect, the encloſed aduice from Vienna will witnes; which I ſend not as great newes, but for euidence, that the emperor is vnſettled in his thoughts, and dares not truſt Gabor, beeing fallen into new ſuſpitions, vpon this change of the conditions of the treatye; and that he draweth part of his forces to the frontire, to oppoſe his deſſignes; which he feares the more, becauſe they lye hid under a double face. Another light may bee diſcouered from thence, that the whole houſe of Auſtria vnite, not only for the defence of the Valtoline, and the ruine of the States of Holland, but to oppoſe the entrye of his majeſties armies for the recouerye of the Palatinate; as appeares by the inſtructions of the baron D'Aſſy from the infanta, in whoſe hands part of that countrye was in truſt depoſited. But now the way to demand the reſtitution muſt be hewen out by the ſword; and, ſecondly, by the tranſmiſſion of the regiment of Shiambergh to the ſeruice of the kyng of Spayne in the Valtoline.

THE ſtate of Venice, fearing the emperor or Spaniard may fall into ſome part of their territorye, vpon the frontire of Carinthia, or in Friuli, hath obteyned from the grand ſignior a command, in all occaſions, to haue ayd of the Turkiſh neighboring garriſons, and to leuye more, if their neede ſhall require yt. If his majeſtie, in his 1624. wiſedome, pleaſe to make vſe of theſe beginnings, my hope is, in few weekes, to aduiſe, that 15000 of the emperors men are faces about, to ſecure the ſuburbs of his imperiall cyttye: and ſo I conclude, recommending your honor to the Almighty protection.

Conſtantinople,
$\frac{7}{17}$.Feb. 1624.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

INSTEED of additions and certeyntye, which I hoped to ſend your lordſhip, I muſt uſe ſubſtraction and allay. By the death of the great vizier in Aſia, the anſweres to Gabor and Buda haue beene deferrd vntill the laſt night. This day I procured coppies of the originalls, and haue communicated them to our frends; the contents wherof, more Turheſco, doe not fully correſpond with our hopes, and their promiſes; but a warye kynd of ſtile, as if they feared to giue occaſion of breach, for which, alla verità, they are vnfitted. The ſubſtance is; Seeing the Imperialls did refuſe to admitt of the miniſters of Gabor, and the comprehenſion of the Hungars, in the treatye, (which was the difficultye interiected formerly) that the baſſa ſhould not proceed without them: but if, with their incluſion, other tearmes honorable could bee agreed vpon, then to conclude the peace. An ill iſſue of ſo fayre promiſes, and ſo much conſultation! The letter to Gabor doth ſignifye that limitation; but whether he ſhall agree to the peace, or noe, is not defined: but all referrd to his diſcretion, and to the councells of the ambaſſadors here reſident, which are approoued as good: ſo that all now depends abſolutely vpon Gabor. Your lordſhip neede not doubt, he ſhall haue encouragement, perſwaſions, and enforcements enough; the French ambaſſador hauing at laſt declared himſelfe, and the other two conſtant and feruent. But ſomewhat muſt come from Chriſtendome: now the coniuncture is fayre, beeing ther is ſpeech of the renewing the proteſtant vnion in Germanye. The kyng of Bohemia muſt uſe his frends and forces, to aduance his admiſſion: for I am perſwaded, hauing gotten the buſines in arbitrio ſuo, he will make aduantage of yt, and protract the treatye, which cannot bee putt in order in three monthes, to trye where he can gett beſt anchoradge. And to that end, I ſuppoſe, he will ſend to make offer of himſelfe to his majeſtie, the French kyng, and the princes of the league; where, if he bee accepted, he will proue, if not a plague, a famine to the enemye. This is all wee haue gotten, a little tyme, and an interruption of the treatye, that was, in the opinion of the emperor, ſo ſure on his ſyde. Wee will endeauor to correct theſe letters before they goe: but if wee cannot effect yt, wee will attend the comming of an extraordinary ambaſſador, dayly expected from Tranſyluania with lardger commiſſion, and new ouertures; when wee doubt not to perfect our deſſignes, which, wee feare, are corrupted by the golden Hungars of one part, or betrayd by the preſent agent, who beeing chardged with the ſlightnes of theſe orders, as made with his conſent, doth deepely proteſt, that his maſter deſires no more then this libertye, and that he will neuer agree to proceed in the treatye, nor to make the peace. And wee ſhall ſoone diſcouer the full reſolution of Gabor: for now the concluſion beeing wholy remitted to him, he muſt eyther maynteyne his profeſſions with his antient frends, or vnmaske all his diſſimulations; which he may beare out with a ſtate-face, but ſhall neuer doe it ſafelye. In the meane tyme, the firſt practice, to caſt a rubb in the ſmooth way of the treaty, hath taken ſo good effect, that the emperor is vnſettled in his thoughts, and is fallen vpon new ſuſpitions and jealouſyes, ſo that he hath ordered ſome forces to march into Hungarie, to oppoſe the forces of Gabor; as your lordſhip may perceiue by the encloſed aduice from Vienna, which I ſend only as an euidence therof, and to ſhow how firmly the whole houſe of Auſtria doth vnite to maynteyne the thraldome of the Valtoline, and to haſten the ruine of the States of Holland, and to oppoſe, totis viribus, the entrye of his majeſties armies into the Palatinate; as by the inſtructions of the baron D'Aſſy, diſpatched from the infanta, doth appeare; who demands the ayds deſſigned fot thoſe purpoſes, and the tranſmiſſion of Siambergh regiment to the ſeruice of the kynge of Spayne; when I ſhould rather haue expected the fayre and honorable reddition of Frankendall into his majeſties hands. But wee muſt hewe out our way: and I am yet confident, if Gabor bee not compoſed of falſhood, that before a few monthes, 15000 at leaſt of the emperors rutters muſt wheele, to ſecure the ſuburbs of Vienna. To aduance which ther ſhall want no induſtrye: and ſo I committ your lordſhip to the gratious keeping of the Almightye.

Conſtantinople, 17. Feb. 1624.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

COUNT Mansfelt, ſetting ſayle from the Downes on Munday laſt, the 10th of this preſent, with his Engliſh and Duch troopes, went that evening to Calais rode to take the French horſe along with him; but, they not being in readynes, left the duke of Brunſwick to bring them after; and wayghing anker about midnight, arriued the next day, towards night, ſafe in Zealand before Fluſhing; onely one ſhip of the whole fleete, which was above 200 ſayle, laden with armes, fell fowle vpon another; and having her ſayles torne, was left behinde in the ſea; where, it is feared, ſhe is fallen into the hands of the Dunkerkers; who having had fower good ſhipps come to them out of Biſcay, are at ſea with more ſtrength than vſuall. In this reſpect ſix of the States men of warre, which came in his fleete, went immediatly after his arrivall back towards Calais, to convoy the duke of Brunſwick with the horſe; which are not yet arrived in theſe parts, but expected daily.

ORDER is taken here for 4000 lode of hay, and 1000 laſte of oates, with proviſion of victualls to be brought from all parts of theſe provinces to Dort, from thence to be ſent to this new army, where it ſhalbe ſettled; and two deputyes are gone expreſly from the States, to provide for preſent neceſſityes; which, I heare, are already growne vpon them, a great part of them having bene a month on ſhipboard, and ill furniſhed of victualls or clothes; ſo as there are many ſick and naked men amongſt them; but they were bleſt with a proſperous paſſage.

THERE is a quarter deſſigned for this new army at Longſtraet, in Sprang, and other villages betwixt count Henryes intrenchments at Walwick and Getruydenbergh; which is done out of this counſell, that yf any froſts ſhould yet come, they would not be ſhutt from victualls, as they might be at Berghen; and in that place they are ſo much forwarder on theyr way towards Germany; and yf they will doe any ſervice for the reliefe of Breda, they are neare at hand: but there being nothing left, by reaſon of the States army paſſing ſo often that way this ſummer, nor any thing to be had, but what ſhalbe brought and bought by the penny, I know not how count Mansfelt will lyke of it. Wee have newes from all corners of Germany, how the whole ſtrength of the emperor, and catholique league, is on foote, and marching towards the Rhyne; which the forerunners, Spinelli with 6000 foote, and the duke of Saxe Lawenburgh with 2500 horſe, have already croſſed, and by this, are neare theyr rendezvous at Maeſtricht; and it is expected, they will all fall downe hetherwards, to ſecond the ſiege of Breda, and ſhutt vp Mansfelt within the confines of this ſtate; but eyther the emperor hath better aſſurance of the quietnes of Bethlem Gabor, and ſubjection of the princes of Germany, then is promiſed by your lordſhips letters, and Sir Robert Anſtruthers; or elſe he may ſoone repent his diſfurniſhing thoſe vpper parts of ſoldiers, with ſo much confidence, to aſſayle theſe lower, where nothing is to be gotten but blowes.

THE prince of Orange prepares for the field, againſt the beginning of March; intending to draw all his garriſons, as the ſeaſon of the yeare may very well ſuffer, by reaſon of the high waters, and remplace them where is moſt neede, with companyes of burghers out of Holland: ſo as, howſoever this winters lying in the field, and generall ſicknes through the countrey, hath conſumed many of his men, he will have a ſtronger army, then he ever yet ſaw himſelf in the head of. And he hath as ſtrong a reſolution to putt the buſines of the leavying the ſiege of Breda to a tryall by fight; but he wants his wonted ſtrength of body, his languiſhing diſeaſe of heate and dolor in his back, (of which he was never fully quitt) whereby his ſleepe is taken away, being newly increaſed, and he therby much debilitated; yet he reſolves to goe into the field, though it be in litter, which for that purpoſe he is providing. And, wee doubt, count Erneſt muſt doe the like, who is in little better ſtate of 1624. health: but it ſeemes, they will ſett vp all vpon the leavying the ſiege of Breda, as theyr laſt reſt.

LAMBERT CHARLES, who made the bote by which Breda was taken, (wherin he was a chiefe man) as it were, his cradle, hath now ended his dayes in Goch, as in a bed of honor; he having a generall gowte vpon him, when he went vpon the ſurpriſe, which onely gave him leave to ſigne the capitulation for the ennemy to render the caſtle; ſo turned into an apoplexie, of which he is ſince dead. Many are come hether ſuters for his gouerment of Njmmeghen, one of the chiefe goverments of this ſtate; the diſpoſing whereof his excellency doth ſuſpend, intending it (as is thought) to coronel Fauma; who, being ſent to the Swallow with ſome troopes, to defend thoſe dykes, and cover the workmen, who are ſtill buſyed in making the dam at Seuenberghen, went with 800 men, moſt our countrymen, the ſecond of this preſent, at 4 a clock in the morning, a myle from his quarter, vpon a dyke within halfe a myle of Terheyden; where he immediatly fortifyed, and keepes the ground; which is of much advantage for ſuch deſſignes as wilbe ſhortly ſett on worke for the leavying of the ſiege; from whence he cannot now be removed, becauſe the countrey is drown'd on both ſydes.

I HAUE well receaued your lordſhips letters of the 16th of Nouember, and the queen hers, whoſe thancks your lordſhip hath for both: and I acknowledge particular obligation for the judgment you giue of owr Eſt-Indian trafique; which, grownded vppon your experience, confirmes what I collected owt of my ſtudie of thoſe parts; to which I haue bin tied of late, more then euer I imagined.

YOUR lordſhips letters to the count de la Torre, I haue ſent to Venice, adreſſed to Sir Iſaac Wake; from whom you will heare how that goode old man (neuer the better for this leuitie) is turned papiſt.

THE French king hath demaunded ayde of the States by ſea, againſt Monſ. Sobiſe, and his followers of the religion, entred into arms alieniſſimo tempore; and they furniſh 20 ſhips. I reſt

Hagh, this 17th of
February, 1625.
ſtylo novo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

D. CARLETON.

To BETHLEM GABOR, Prince of TRANSYLVANIA.

Sereniſſime Princeps,

ABOUT 5 dayes paſt I wrote your highnes a fewe lynes, to accompany the anſwere of the chimacham, retorned by your agent here reſident. Therein I only acknowledged, in generalities, that I had ſeene your commiſſion and inſtructions, and that the other Chriſtian ambaſſadors had mett, and conſulted vpon them, referring your highnes to the relation of your owne miniſters, and intimating a purpoſe of larger diſcourſe, which this occaſion nowe preſenteth. There were many good reſpects why wee did then deferre this office, hauing found ſome indirect dealing, which made vs chooſe the ſafety of our owne wayes. When your agent firſt brought mee the copy of your letters, and orders to him, I conceiued that your highnes, wiſely apprehending the opportunity of tyme, did giue counſell to the chimacham not to proceed in the treaty of Buda, whereby the emperor hoped to preuaile, and ſecure himſelfe on this ſide, that hee might conuert all his forces to the oppreſſion of your highnes frends and allyes in Germany; wherein if hee ſhould proſper, your highnes could not expect any great joy or ſafety in his victoryes, when ambition and proſperity hath no limitts: and, ſecondly, that you did require an order how you ſhould diſpoſe your ſelfe with correſpondence to the deſſignes of this ſtate; and in caſe of the diſſolution of that treaty, what ſecurity you ſhould haue, from the grand ſignor, of his protection; ſo that you might not bee ſubiect to the inconuenience of the changes of miniſters here, which had often interrupted, and forced an alteration in your highnes counſells. This beeing the ſubſtance of what was collected by all the other ambaſſadors here reſident, to whom the ſame was communicated; wee mett often among our ſelues, and at laſt reſolued to goe vnto the chimacham, and to declare vnto him both the truth of the preſent affaires of Chriſtendome, and our opinions in theſe demands of your highnes, and the inconueniency of the pretended treaty. Heerein alſo our judgments and actions were vniforme, and our proceedings with generall conſent; the ſubſtance whereof, to auoyd prolixity, I will deliuer briefly, (as I ſuppoſe the others doe, who ioyne with mee in this negotiation) and in the termes, as neare as I can, that were agreed among vs.

FIRST wee did declare, That his maieſtie, my lord and maſter, hauing in vayne attempted all righteous and Chriſtian wayes, to procure the reſtitution of the Palatinate, the antient patrimony of his children, was at laſt reſolued to take vp the iuſtice of his armes with other princes his allyes, to recouer it by the ſword from whoſoeuer ſhould oppoſe him.

THAT it was alſo true, That the French king, the ſtate of Venice, and the duke of Sauoy, were colleagued, and had raiſed forces for the liberty of the Valtoline, and the Griſons, whoſe cuntryes were of long tyme vnder the protection of thoſe princes, beeing the paſſages betweene Italy and Germany.

CONCERNING the treaty of Buda, our opinions were, That ſeeing the Imperialls did inſiſt vpon the laſt agreement of Zitwa, and only required a prolongation thereof, it was very probable, that they aymed only to aduantage themſelues by tyme, and not to make a firme peace, where the diſpute of Vach lay open to them, and vndecided.

BY ſeeking to exclude your highnes miniſters from that treaty, they did only practice to ſeperate your highnes from the dependence of the grand ſignor, and ſecretly to drawe a confirmation of your laſt peace made without conſent of the port; therby to ſowe iealouſyes and ſuſpitions, and in their ſeaſon to obiect them to you here, and finally to depriue your highnes of all frends and alliance.

IN refuſing to comprehend the Hungars, they intended to ſteale a renuntiation of all the leagues made 5 yeares paſt; and as ſubiects depending vpon the emperor, to diſcharge them of all obligation to your highnes.

THESE things conſidered, and many more pregnant circumſtances deliuered in conference, our opinions alſo, in the preuention and remedy, were vniforme:

FIRST, That your highnes councell ſhould bee approued, both to diſauow your laſt peace, which depended vpon approbation from the grand ſignor, and to ſuſpend the treaty at Buda, vntill that terme were nearer expiration; that your highnes might haue leiſure to conſider your owne affaires, and to make vſe of ſuch frends as were antiently colleagued with you.

FOR this purpoſe wee deſired a letter to bee written to your highnes, ſigned by the grand ſignor, and a command to the baſſa of Buda, both to diſſolue the treaty, and to bee in a readineſs on the frontire in all occaſions, without any act of hoſtility or breach with the emperor, according to the ſtile of the ambaſſadors of Chriſtian princes.

LASTLY, That ſome aſſurance might bee giuen your highnes, by writing, of the conſtant protection of this empire, and a plena potentia ſent you, to vſe in all occaſions of defence, to preſerue your eſtates by the ayd of all the garriſons vpon the frontire, by vertue whereof the baſſas of thoſe parts ſhould be commanded to riſe, and aſſiſt you; and that nothing ſhould bee concluded in this port by the leuity or ignorance of any miniſter in thoſe affaires, neither in your preiudice, nor without your knowledge.

OUR end and ſcope in theſe aduiſes were to free your highnes from the neceſſity of falling into the emperors power or diſcretion, with whom wee conceiued your highnes could neuer make any ſecure peace: and that, ſeeing the occaſions were faire, by the changes of councells in other parts, your highnes might haue opportunity to renew your antient leagues, or to make newe with other princes, vpon whom you might ſafely rely, and whoſe affaires and ends might haue one generall concurrence with thoſe of your highnes; the vniuerſall liberty and peace of Chriſtendome.

THE chimacham made ſome references of this buſineſs to Diachmett baſſa, whom wee found, in words, very well enclyned to doe your highnes this ſeruice; but reality is rare in theſe regions.

AT length the chimacham, vpon full deliberation and aduice taken with all the antients of the bench, did reſolue, and promiſe vs directly, to make petition to the grand ſignor, and to procure orders for all theſe commands and letters to be written, according to your highnes and our deſires, which wee daily expected, and purpoſed to accompany the diſpatch of them with our owne opinions.

1624. WHAT hath bene the iſſue, your highnes (wee are aſſured) hath ſeene by the letter ſent to you, and by the copy of the command to Buda, which wee conceiue to bee cleane wyde both of your highnes purpoſes, and of our hopes. Where the fault hath layne, is not in mee to judge. I am ſure, the buſineſs was not propoſed to the grand ſignor, as it was once reſolued: I found ſome others cold, that ſhould haue bene the moſt zealous. Perhaps they thought it was enough to procure your highnes to bee admitted into the treaty, to which wee knowe the Imperialls would of themſelues agree, rather then aduenture the ſuſpenſion: butt wee are able to diſcerne all theſe practizes; and ſeeing, as wee are informed, euen in that letter, that much is referred to our opinions, wee haue rather choſen to treat with your highnes, then with inferiors, or ſuch as either are ignorant, or haue yll affections. Dollars are more weighty here, then reaſons.

IN the generall, I ſuppoſe, our aduiſes to your highnes are of one tenor; to giue your highnes information of the reſolution of our princes to recouer their rights, and to help the oppreſſed. In the firſt beginnings, God hath proſpered their armes: the moſt important places of the Valtoline are reconquered by the generall of the league, the marquis de Cœures. The duke of Sauoy, and the conſtable of France, in the beginning of this moneth, with a great army, (the liſt whereof I gaue your agent) were ready to march for the execution of an important deſſigne, to facilitate the generall ends. His majeſtie of England, hauing concluded the marriage of his princely ſonne with the daughter of France, is entred into ſtrict alliance and confederacy both with that king and the other princes, and hath raiſed a braue army of Engliſh, vnder the conduct of the count Mansfield, for the recouery of the Palatinate, who are allready paſſt the ſeas; and of whoſe actions, I ſuppoſe, fame will preuent theſe letters.

THE kings of Denmarke and Sweden are well diſpoſed to iuſtify this generall quarrell.

THE princes of the vnion beginne to hold vpp their heads, to reconcile, and to hope for liberty.

THE circle of the Nether Saxe, and the free cittyes, are ready to take armes, and to reuiue with the heat of this glorious ſunne.

THE elector of Saxe doth find the feare of the oppreſſion of his religion, and his colloquy with the marquis of Brandenburgh hath altered him, at leaſt to a neutrality.

THESE heroicque actions ſo nobly vndertaken, ſo well aduanced, by ſo powerfull meanes, in ſo iuſt a cauſe, wee cannot thinke your highnes will now retyre from that glory, which you profeſſed theſe laſt yeares alone, and with ſo happy ſucceſſe; at leaſtwiſe not ſo farre to alter, as to goe ouer and adhere to the other party, to ſtrengthen and aſſiſt them, whom ſinglye you haue ſo often daunted; of whoſe frendſhip and religion your highnes can neuer bee ſecure.

IF your highnes complayne, that you ſtood in the breach 3 yeares without ſuccour, the more is your glory; and your wiſedome will conſider the engagements of ſome princes then, and the deſires and hopes of all, to procure peace by wayes of juſtice; which hauing failed, the cauſe is the ſame, and cannot bee made worſe by their Chriſtian patience.

IF alſo your highnes find more coldneſs in the anſwers from this port, then you expected, you wilbee pleaſed, to beleeue, they are artificiall and ſuch as were rather bought then giuen.

IT is not our deſire to moue or engage your highnes to warre, but to open you a way of ſuch ſecurity, that you may not neede to feare it hereafter; and for the preſent, you may bee aſſured, you ſhall haue what ſuccour or countenance you can deſire, by our endeauours, when wee ſhalbee grounded from your ſelfe of your reſolution.

YOUR highnes eſtates lye betweene two rocks; there may bee ſhippwrack on either ſide: butt the coniuncture is faire; the proteſtant vnion of Germany is renewing; it is out of all queſtion, your highnes may there bee wellcome; and from thoſe of your owne faith you muſt expect moſt fidelity; with them you may make either warre or peace, in more ſecurity then with the aduerſaries.

YOUR highnes may, in your wiſedome, conſider the opportunity; and either by your letters, or miniſters, giue your ſelfe more aſſurance from the fountayne, then from vs; who only beginne good offices, butt cannot perfect them.

ON the other part, your highnes may pleaſe to weigh, What aduantage or ſafety can you haue in an vnſure peace with the emperour? but ſuch, as will miniſter iuſt cauſe of iealouſy, and perhapps drawe on worſe conſequences from this ſtate; who, in that caſe, can no longer truſt you; nor the other, thus buſied, protect you: butt with thoſe of our profeſſion there wilbee no exception taken, no couler of diffidence. Your honor hath bene deeply engaged, and much renowned; you cannot butt take care of the preſeruation thereof with your antient frends.

THE Imperialls are not only ſtill jealous of your highnes, as appeares by the forces deſſigned for Hungary, which will corrupt all ſyncerity; butt in this port, by arts and all other practices, they ſeeke to diſcreditt, and call your faith in queſtion. Euen by that laſt peace made by your highnes, they haue ſought to ſeperate you from the truſt of this empire; and though they had the benefitt, they haue endeauored to conuert it to your ruyne, by boaſting, you haue tyed yourſelfe to adhære to the emperour, and to make warre vpon the grand ſignior, and to haue articled for diuers prouinces of Hungary, now in your iuriſdiction, in preiudice of this ſtate: That your highnes doth continually make newe offers to the emperour, euen to the change of your religion; and to that purpoſe, that the chancellor of Hungary ſhould bee ſent vnto you, to reconcile you, and to procure, as a ſeale of your conuerſion, the deliuery of church lands, with vayne offers to ſtirr you vpp to vnite to Tranſiluania, Bugdania and Wallachia; and, by the authority of the pope, to erect them into a kingdome, and to giue your highnes a newe crowne.

THESE and many other things are rumored and ſpread abroad by them; with what good intention, I leaue to your highnes iudgment.

WHATSOEUER is done at Vienna, is no ſecrett here. Wee deſire that your highnes ſhould well conſider what you haue to doe; with whom you treate; and, laſtly, to reſolue with a chriſtian heart to chooſe the wayes of vniuerſall peace, which is the only end of all theſe troubles; which God, of his mercy, graunt vnto his church.

HAUING thus largely diſcourſed with your highnes, and opened our thoughts, wee expect to receiue from your highnes owne hand ſome ſpeedy and certeyne reſolution, that accordingly wee may correſpond in our actions, and giue ſome aſſurance to the princes intereſſed, and carefull of the publique, of your conſtancy, and good affection. Whereunto if your highnes (whereof wee make no doubt) doe conforme, you ſhall find the glory thereof on earth, and the fruict in heauen, and myſelfe, as one of thoſe that deſire to doe you ſeruice, moſt ready to giue your highnes the beſt teſtimony, according to my ability; and ſo I committ your highnes to the holy keeping of the Allmighty.

Conſtantinople,
Feb. $\frac{18}{28}$. 1624.

To the QUEENE of BOHEMIA.

WHER ther is no ground of truth, all buildings and enterpriſes are vnſtable. I infinitely deſire to doe your Majeſtie ſeruice, but not to deceiue you. What were our hopes, my two laſt to Sir Dudley Carleton haue fully enformed: that the iſſue of them doth not correſpond, I am vnwilling to report. It is hard to iudge wher the fault hath beene, among ſo many ſuſpected guiltye; and the greateſt ſhame is to bee coſened by a montayneere, that neuer wore a band, nor cuffs, nor, I thincke, linnen. But hauing diſcouered ſo much, (of which I gaue often warning to my fellowes) wee haue alſo changed our councell, and reſolued vpon another courſe, wherin wee haue much more hope; at leaſt, ſhalbe aſſured of what we doe and write. Your Majeſtie ſhall haue a reſolution within 40 dayes; and I ſuppoſe nothing in the world, from hence, more can bee done: and if the whole compoſition bee not falſhood, your Majeſtie may expect an extraordinarye good concluſion: of which I will ſay no more, but referr your Majeſtie to my letters that wayt vpon this, wherin I am lardger only for your Highneſſes ſeruice.

The French ambaſſador.

IT is the laſt office that a poore man can doe to a greater, to mourne for him. I know not what priuat loſs I haue had in the death of the moſt woorthy earle of Southampton: but I am ſure it is an honor to him, to haue yt truely ſayd, England

1624. land and the publicque haue the greateſt loſs. Good men are ſometyme taken away in mercye, to preuent their euill; but God woorketh all things to the beſt; therſore wee muſt not grudge too much, though my heart bleedeth in ſorrow for him; and I feare, he dyed of the ſame death, of a bleeding hart. This remembrance I did owe him; and I could not utter yt in any place ſo honorable as before your Majeſtie; who becauſe I know you loued him, you will pleaſe to pardon mee this vnſeaſonable ryme:

IF death had had more hands, he had ſtrooke all;
  His malice only agaynſt virtue rages:
By iuſtice or by vice ten thouſands fall;
  But ſuch a triumphe, not in many ages.
    Thy right the father ſlew, thy left the ſonne;
    Wherby they happy are, and wee vndone.

MY wife hath taken the boldnes to ſend your Majeſtie a few bezars. If ther bee any fault in them, ſhe ſhall beare yt, that would not forbeare to fynd the way of ſending greater; though in their nature and uſe ther are no better, beeing of the ſtagge of Coraſon in Perſia. I humbly beſeech your Majeſtie to accept them, as an earneſt of another prouiſion.

IN the winter all things here are as dead and dull as the ſeaſon, ſo that I cannot tell your Majeſtie one ridiculous tale of this wiſe ſtate; which beeing gouerned by an eunuch, all things are as tame as hee. Therfore I haue deferrd my collections, vntill they grow to ſome bulke, and humbly conclude with my prayers for your Majeſties eternall proſperitye.

Conſtantinople, 20. Feb.
162$\frac{4}{5}$. ſtil. vet.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My Lord,

THE former left your lordſhip in ſome doubt, what would bee the iſſue of the offers and practices of Bethlem Gabor in this court. The buſines hath beene ſo coldly carried by his agent, and the letters and commands written ſo ambiguouſlye, that it hath in mee nouriſhed greater ſuſpition: wher to lay the fault, is yet beyond my diſcouerye; whether the prince ſent theſe ouuertures to enterteyne tyme with the grand ſignior, and to beguile us, while he ſettles himſelfe vnder the emperors protection, or that his miniſter here bee the only traytor, I leaue in queſtion; but I am ſure the later is ſoe, and that he hath intelligence with the emperors agent, who perhaps hath bought him; or beeing a papiſt, is ouerawed by the Jeſuitts. The matter is cleare, that ther is falſe play, eyther with his maſter, or with vs, or with both; and becauſe he thought he muſt doe ſomwhat for ſhow, beeing referrd to the ambaſſadors, he ſuppoſed to blind us with one article, of not making the peace without the comprehenſion of Gabor; which he may bee content to accept of, and the emperor, I am ſure, will grant, rather then hazard a ſuſpention; and ſo all our labor is fynely loſt. This I haue long tyme ſuſpected, but could neuer gett ſome others to admitt of my jealouſye, vntill, by many circumſtances, I made yt ſo euident, that the other three reſidents (who all concurre in the generall) haue with mee reſolued, that ther was no ſafety to relye or truſt vpon any more promiſes, neyther of this ſtate, who is guided wholy by the agent of Tranſyluania, nor vpon him, nor any other inferiour inſtrument, eyther ignorant or corrupted. And therfore, with one conſent, wee haue ſent a poſt to the prince, to putt him to a declaration vnder his owne hand, by whom wee haue giuen him ſuch and ſo full reaſons and perſwaſions, that he cannot diſſemble with us, or, at leaſt, not deceiue us. Anſwere wee expect in 40 dayes, and vntill then muſt deferr any iudgement, or other negotiation, vnleſs his long-looked-for ambaſſador doe arriue with ſome better foundation. And becauſe, in the meane tyme, ther ſhould come no error from our aduices, and that it might appeare vpon what ground wee haue done this, beeing ther is a reference to our councell in the letter of the chimacham vizier, I haue giuen the copy to the Duch ambaſſador; which he promiſeth to ſend, tranſlated, by this poſt, that the kyng of Bohemia may proceed by his own iudgement in any further correſpondencye with that prince. I would willingly ſend the queene a coppy of my letter, but dare not for many reſpects, nor can conueniently for the length; though wee haue proceeded with ſuch caution, to avoyd both guiltines or ſcandall, that wee haue reſolued not to care if they were printed; and are not aſſured, that, at leaſt, they ſhall not bee ſent to Vienna. If I haue offended in this forward and neceſſarye zeale, the queene muſt begg my pardon. I am in great hope, that the effects ſhall rather meritt thancks; for the prince cannot now bee imperiall, but he muſt fall vpon a rocke this way; as your lordſhip will perceaue by the breefe of a freſh aduice from Vienna, encloſed; which I haue reſent to him, and aſſured him, that I know all the practices, and that he cannot ſafely longer depend betweene two contraryes. I haue enformed him, how he is ſcandalized here by the Imperialls, only to ſeperate him from this ſtate by icalouſyes, and after to depriue him of all his frends.

BY the laſt, I ſent your lordſhip an extract of two other letters from the emperors court; by all theſe you wilbe able to make a better iudgement, and to giue more ſound councell, then I, that haue no help, no inſtruction, that liue out of the world, fed with ſcrapps and ſtale ends; and what I doe venture vpon, proceeds out of myne owne meditations. Thus lardge I am, and reueale my ſelfe to your lordſhip, for the queene of Bohemias ſeruice, if any uſe be to bee made of mee, or of theſe things, that it may come to them by a ſafe way; for I thincke your lordſhip thinckes mee too buſye, wher I fynd no fayth for foundation. Here begin to ſpread rumors of more trouble, and of the grand ſigniors remooue to Adrianople, for preuention of any attempt ſuſpected in the vnion of the Poles and Tartars: but I referr yt to more certeynty, aſſured that they will not long agree. If the Coſſackes lett us ſleepe quiettly, it is as much as I care for.

THE emir of Sidon hath ſacked, ruined, and diſpeopled Tripolye, and no notice taken; euery great man in Aſya is bold; the Perſian warr will renew: and theſe things makes this ſtate ſo warye of any diſcontent on the other ſyde, which alſo ouerbalances the inclinations of Gabor toward the emperor. If ſomething come not from Chriſtendome, it will carry the reſolution that way.

VEHEMENCYE of ſorrow for the death of that worthy earle ſhutts vp my pen from other mention, leaſt it fall into paſſion. If his funeralls bee like thoſe of Germanicus, ſine imaginibus, ſine pompâ; the reſt alſo belongs rightly to him, per laudes & memoriam virtutum celeberrimus fuit. He is her majeſties protomartyr; for an aſpect vpon her cauſe drew him out of his way, into the way of death. It is no tyme to mourne when all men arme, nor for mee to trouble your lordſhip with impertinencyes; and therfore I conclude, recommending your lordſhip to the holy keeping of our moſt gratious God, and reſt

Conſtantinople, 20. Feb.
old ſtile, 1624.

Your Lordſhips.

YOUR lordſhips laſt, of the 2d Dec. receiued. ——

To Sir EDWARD CONWEY.

Right Honorable,

WITH a greate deale of ioy and contentment, I haue receiued your honors letter of the 12th Nou. wherin you haue pleaſd to accuſe and reprehend mee gently, by making an excuſe for your ſelfe ſo free, and ſo farr aboue mee. I haue often truſted vpon your fauour and good interpretation of mee, that when I had ſuch matter to aduiſe, as was conuenient to bee ſafely deliuered, (hauing neyther command nor diſguiſe from your honor) I was enforced, for his majeſties ſeruice, to continew in my old way; though I knew both your dayly attendance, and that my relations (beeing brought into their owne character) ſhould bee preſented by you to his majeſtie. If I haue your honors pardon for this neceſſarie omiſſion, I will beginn vpon a new account, and not fayle (ſeeing it hath pleaſed you to order mee to ſend a cyphar, which I haue now done, and conueyed it by another hand, that will arriue aſſone) to meritt of your honor (if I can) the particular loue you haue expreſſed to mee, and the good offices you haue done mee to his majeſtie.

1624. I SHALL not committ any great error, to take the buſines where I left yt, in my laſt letter to Sir George Caluert, (wherof I ſend him a duplicate) becauſe your honor doth take knowledge, they are addreſſed to you. In the two laſt you will fynd what councell was giuen, and new ouertures here made by Bethlem Gabor. Whence it aroſe, my formers haue aduertiſed: but ſince, hauing well conſidered the cold and ambiguous anſwere giuen from the vizier, ſo contrarye to his promiſes, the princes propoſitions, and our hopes, I haue with jealous eyes made more enquirye into the cauſes and inſtruments, that had the negotiation in truſt; and haue clearely diſcouered falſhood in the Tranſiluanian agent, who keepes intelligence with the emperors reſident. Whether he bee a traytor to his maſter, or that he hath, vnderhand, order from him to enterteyne this ſtate, and us, with fayre woords, vntill he can engraffe himſelfe into his new alliance; and that he hath receiued a ſecond inſtructions, to doe nothing, or nothing zealouſly and effectually, that Gabor may haue a retrayct to lay the fault vpon another, is yet in queſtion. But wee rather ſuſpect the ſeruant, beeing a papiſt, then the maſter; and therfore haue alſo changed councell, and reſolued no more to traficque with inferiors, and men ignorant or corrupt, but to putt the prince to a declaration; wherin nothing hath beene omitted, that may eyther woorke vpon his iudgement, his affections, or the intereſt of his honor, and that without ſcandall, and in the ſtile of good Chriſtians; in which offices all the ambaſſadors here reſident are vnited, by order from their princes, both in deliberation and action. In 30 dayes wee expect an anſwere, and are in very good hope, vpon very good grounds, to doe ſomwhat that ſhall aduance the generall ends of releeuing the oppreſſed, and the peace of Chriſtendome. Though this buſines, wherin I haue beene often vrgent, (perhaps beyond manners, ſeeing I could neuer, vntill a few months paſt, gett any direction how to gouerne myſelfe) hath beene ſo long delayed, that Gabor, fynding himſelfe betweene two rocks, hath beene forced to ſhift for himſelfe, agaynſt his firſt inclinations; inſomuch that he hath written many complaynts, that I haue ſeene, agaynſt the kyng of Bohemia, the duke of Brunſwicke, and the States of Holland, that he hauing only, and in their cauſe, taken armes, hath beene fed with woords, but neuer ſeene a penny, nor a man, nor any countenance, enforced to ſtand alone, concluding, in his owne woords, Si perficere propoſita noſtra ſperetis, aliter mecum tractandum eſt: nam ex nihilo nihil fit; it is not wholy deſperate. What wee ſhalbe able to doe in the actiue part, to mooue him to armes, were raſhnes to promiſe; yet, at leaſt, to ſtay him from falling to the emperors party by any ayd, I doubt not, if already he bee not gone, and the treatye of Buda concluded, wherof ther is ſome feare, becauſe I know the Imperialls preſs yt, and will rather yeild to any conditions, then hazard the ſuſpention, and that he is courted almoſt beyond reſiſtance: but if he haue made ſuch inconſiderate haſt, he may bee forced to recant; for he can contract no frendſhip with the emperor without danger from hence, wher this ſtate will no longer truſt him, and in a tyme when his new allyes, ſo buſied as I hope they ſhall bee, will not bee able to protect him. Thus much I haue made him vnderſtand, and that I know all his practices, and forbeare him with much patience (as by the encloſed from Vienna he may perceiue; which I haue alſo ſent, and vrdged to him); and that he is only abuſed by thoſe, that, while they offer him an vnſafe frendſhip, they digge at his roote, and ſeeke to depriue him of all other frends.

BOTH thoſe my letters to Gabor, and the coppy of the viziers, vpon which I was grounded, I will ſend your honor, to ſhow his maieſtie, by the next poſt, when I haue tyme to gett them into cyphar. For my owne part, I care not if they were printed, hauing, I hope, therin no way offended my maſter, nor the name of a Chriſtian. Though your honors encouragement to mee is too cold and generall, that you doubt not of good acceptation; and that my actions would then meritt moſt, when they produced the greateſt effects; this is a cautelous and ſtate language; and, vnder your honors fauor, it is very requiſite, where an honeſt man doth induſtriate himſelfe for the publicque ſeruice, that his rules and orders ſhould bee playne and direct, and not captious, and convertible into various ſences; and ſuch I only deſire to receiue, and build vpon: then I know the duty of obedience as well as any man. I deſire not my diſcretion ſhould bee truſted, knowing my owne nature, prone out of a good zeale to tranſport mee. Lukewarme affections may bee ſafe, but are euer vnſound.

THE Jew ſent to Naples, to make an offer of peace to the kyng of Spayne, (though neyther here nor there, he ſhall effect any thing) yet he hath lately aduiſed by letters, that he is ſhipped on a gally, with great ceremonye, by the vicere, for Spayne. His majeſties ambaſſador there reſident may make knowne, that his meſſage is diſavowed, and oppoſe all the deſſigne of the Spaniards, which is only to make a noyſe in terrorem, that the grand ſignor ſeekes his peace. For the concluſion of any thing, the Venetian and I will take the care to preuent yt.

THE report of the ſacking and utter deſolation of Tripoly, by the emir of Sidon, is true, and no notice taken here of ſo great an affront; which is a ſymtome of a diſtempered head. Euery great man in Aſya is bold. The Perſian will renew his attempts about Babilon; and theſe troubles makes this ſtate ſo wary to prouoke any enemye in Europe, which alſo ouerbalanceth the inclinations of Gabor; and if ſomething come not from Chriſtendome, which is ſolum et certum remedium, et nervus negotij, it will endanger his reſolution to the contrarye part; which is a matter of great conſideration, if it were knowne of what weight he is in eyther balance.

THER is a rumor of troubles expected from the Tartars, who haue made a league with the Poles; and of the grand ſignors remooue to Adrianople, to preuent them; but it is yet uncerteyne: and I am perſwaded that frendſhip will not laſt, and the care wilbe ſoone eaſed. The Coſſacks, I doubt, are more likely to keepe us waking; agaynſt whom the captayne baſſa is preparing the armado, for the Black-ſea: ſo that the Medeteran wilbe two yeares without a Turkiſh fleete: yet the Spaniards take no notice therof.

YOUR honor wilbe pleaſed to communicate all to his majeſtie, the prince, and the duke of Buckingham. If I haue tranſgreſſed my limitts, I will not runne behind a pillar: peccatum inhæret in voluntate et intentione; and therin I haue not ſynned. You haue vndertaken to interprett and protect

Conſtantinople,
21. Feb. 1624.

Your ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE conneſtable d'Eſdiguieres arriued at Turin the firſt of this month by this account, encountred and receaued by the duke of Sauoye, à l'accouſtumé, with much pompe and magnificence; onely ſome voley of canon more then ordinary, did alarme the Genoeſi and Milaneſi; as if it had ſerued for a proclamation, to tell them, that Venit mittere gladium, & non pacem. In both places the feares and apprehenſions are as great, as if there were Annibal ad portas. The Genoeſi do vowe themſelfes vnto more ſaints then are in Paradis; and are afrayde, that their monny, which is the onely God they haue worſhipped a long time, will be the cauſe of their ruine. The Spanyards in the ſtate of Milan would gladly giue ouer all thought of the Valtelina, of the appendixes thereof, and of the paſſage, if they might be ſure to haue their peace vppon thoſe conditions; but fearing that they may be called to a further account, they do fortify Nouara, Sandoual, and Alleſſandria, confining with Piedmont; and are not wanting to prouide for their owne defence with as much care and diligence as can be vſed. Hitherto they haue, in ſome ſorte, ſaued their reputation, by alleaging that they had no intereſt in the Valtelina, after they had once conſigned it into the hands of the pope; and that the ſhame and ſcorne of the loſſe of that prouince did reflect wholly vppon him, and not concerne them in any manner: but now they are likely to be putt to their ſhiftes, beyond their expectation; for hauing taken vppon themſelfes the guarde of Chiauenna and Riua, they cannot auoyde either an open rupture, if they will perſiſt to defend thoſe places, or a marke of ignominye, if they do quit what they had vndertaken to keepe.

THE victorious army of the league, like Fame, doth get vires eundo; and hauing found ſmall reſiſtance hitherto, and encountring a ſeaſon more propitious then hath beene knowen in many ages, they haue (after a little refreſhing) 1624. diſlodged anewe, marched ouer fearefull mountayns, and beene ſo bolde as to beſeige Chiauenna, which they haue done with as much confidence, as if there had not beene any Spanyards therein, vnto whom reſpect ſhould be borne. What will be the iſſue of this bolde attempt, time will ſhortly tell vs; for as yet wee knowe onely this, that vppon the 4th of this month Monſ. de Loun did inueſt Chiauenna with 1400 men; that the marquis di Coeuures, hauing left in Tiran 2000 foote and 200 horſe of the Venetian trouppes, (which is a circumſtance of importance) arriued at Sondrio, vppon the 6th of February, with the groſſe of his armye; and that, if this entreprize do ſucceede as happily as the former, they haue a purpoſe to aduenture vppon the fort di Fuentes.

THESE ſeigniori, hauing receaued letters from the campe of the league in the Valtelina, vppon Tueſday night the 18th of this month by this account, did the next morning ſend for the French ambaſſador and mee into the college ſeuerally, to giue vs part of the newſe, which was then newely come to their hands. The writing, which by order of the ſenate was read vnto mee, had much formality in it, which I do willingly paſſe ouer, becauſe it did reflect perſonally vppon my ſelfe; but the ſubſtance was this:

THAT vppon the 8th of this month, the marquis di Coeuures diſlodged from Sondrio, and marched to a place called Arden, where he did reſt one day. Vppon the 10th he went to Morbegno, where he made no ſtay, but paſſed further the ſame day to Traona. There he was forced to ſtay, becauſe the enemy had broken the paſſages of the mountaine, and was ſtrongly fortifyed in Riua, which did flanque the paſſage. Vppon the 11th, the towne of Chiauenna was taken by aſſault, by thoſe who did firſt inueſt it, who were in all 1500 French and Griſones. The faction was more bloudy then any of the former; for there were ſlayne of the defendants 30, and of the aſſaylants 10, beſides 50 hurt. The Spaniſh captaine, who did command in Chiauenna, did acquit himſelfe brauely and worthily; for after hauing defended the towne as long as it was teneable, he did retyre quietly, and without diſorder, into the caſtle. Vaudecourt, who did command for the league in that action, did immediately poſſeſſe himſelfe of the towne, where he is ſo well couered, that the caſtle cannot make him diſlodge. The French, whoſe primi impetus are plus quam virorum, did immediately aduenture to aſſalte the caſtle, and without any pieces of battery they did clime vp inacceſſible precipices; from whence, with their muſquets, they did command the caſtle, and force the defendants to keepe cloſe vnder good couers. That aduantage they do ſtill retayne, and exceedingly incommodate thoſe within; but the place is not to be forced without canon; and the gouernour, being ſummoned to render, hath anſwered brauely, That he will defend the place as long as it can be kept. The pieces of battery are ſent thither, moſt of them drawen out of this ſtate; and it is thought, that as ſoone as they ſhall be planted, the Spaniſh gouernour will capitulate. In the meane tyme, the army of the league, being aduanced as farre as Vico, doth daily skirmiſh with the army of Spayne, quartered in a place called Campo, not without ſome mortality, and much hurt, of both ſydes.

THE Venetian trouppes haue the honor to haue the auantguard; and colonel Milander, who doth command their auxiliaries, is employed to alarme the ennemy in his beſt quarter, and by that meanes to diſcouer his trenches and ſtrength. The caualier Tencini, a ſtipendiated ingegnier of this ſtate, hath the charge of making the way paſſable; and he hath vndertaken to make the canon paſſe, vppon the 14th of this month. The Spanyards, vppon this innouation in the Valtelina, and the comming of the conneſtable of France into Italy, haue giuen order to draw into the ſtate of Milan, the moſt potent ſecours that they can haue from Naples, Germany, and other parts; and therevppon this ſtate hath reſolued, beſides the canon, munition, auxiliaries, and pioners, which they haue already ſent into the Valtelina, to arme potently likewiſe, both by ſea and land. This was the tenor of the paper, which was read vnto mee in the college by the ſecretary; and I haue onely made my ſelfe the tranſlatour, as may appeare by the disjointednes of the narration.

I HAUE written unto your lordſhip, ſince my arriuall here, letters dated the 28th of December, 18th of January, and 4th of February, and ſhall be glad to heare, that they are come ſafe to your lordſhips hands. In the meane time my wiſe and my ſelfe do recommend our moſt affectionate loue and ſeruice to your lordſhip and your worthy lady; and will euer reſt 1624.

Venice, 25th February, 1625. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionately, to do you ſeruice,

I. WAKE.

From the ſame Hand.

My very good Lord,

AFTER that the defendants in the caſtle of Chiauenna had beene afrighted a little with ſome pieces of wooden ordinance, at the laſt the true canon did appeare, and then they did beginne to treate in good earneſt. Vppon the 8th of March, by this ſtyle, the capitulation was agreed vppon; but becauſe they did deſyre, for their honor, that the noyſe of the canon might be heard, vppon the 9th two pieces were ſhot of, pro forma; and that night the ſonne of Monſieur d'Arocourt entred into the caſtle, and did take poſſeſſion thereof. The day following, being the 10. the garriſon iſſued out, and then was the capitulation like to haue beene broken, becauſe the French would not vnderſtand the Spaniſh captaine to be included in the treaty; but after much diſpute they were content to let him goe with his fellowes, and they departed honorably, with all their baggage, and were allowed carriages to tranſport ſuch as were ſicke or hurte, (which were 50 in number) leauing hoſtages for the renuoy of the cartes and horſes. They were much diſtreſſed for want of water and wood, and all their other prouiſions did beginne to faile; for there was found in the caſtle onely 15 pound of powder, 30 bullets, and a little match. The taking of this place is of great importance, and will ſhortly put an end to the Rhætian warre; for now there doth reſt nothing vnto which the Griſones can lay any claime, but onely Riua, which will be the next worke of the army of the league in that quarter.

ON the other ſyde, wee vnderſtand out of Piedmont, that the conneſtable d'Eſdigueres did depart out of Aſti vppon the 5. of March, ſtilo novo, and preſently enter vppon Montferrat, not in hoſtile manner, but as a frend. He did deſyre to haue Nizza della Paglia conſigned vnto him, to ſecure his army of a ſafe retraite; but the duke of Mantoua hath excuſed himſelfe, and offered to ſupply the army with all neceſſary prouiſions, en payant; which excuſe is accepted of for the preſent, and the conneſtable did take his way towards Acqui, a citty ſo called from the bathes, ſeated vppon the riuer of Bormido, not ſo ſtrong by nature as Nizza della Paglia; but with a little fortification it may ſerue well enough to ſecure a retraite in caſe of neceſſity. The conneſtable was there with his forces vppon the 13. of March, ſtilo novo. The duke of Sauoy iſſued out of Aſti, onely vppon the 10. of this month, and marching through Montferrat likewiſe, he went to Canelli, and ſtayed there vntill the 13th, expecting the arriuall of his canon; vppon the comming whereof he did intend to joyne with the conneſtable, and to fall openly and directly vppon the ſtate of Genoa, without any further ceremony.

THESE ſeigniori here do ſeeme not to be ſo well pleaſed with this proceeding, which is no wonder, conſidering that republiques do naturally incline to fauor one another; but perhaps inwardly they do not ſo much diſlike it, in regard of the aduantage which is likely to reſult vnto their ſeruice in particular, and to the common cauſe, by this weakening of theſe who haue alwayes moſt aſſiſted their enemy. The French ambaſſador reſyding here hath directly moued them not onely to approue, but likewiſe to applaud this action; and hath declared himſelfe openly and categorically therein, without any circumlocutions; but they ſeeme to deſyre rather the inuaſion of the ſtate of Milan, in hope that a rupture would inſue betwixt the two crownes of France and Spayne ſooner that way, then by the way of Genoa; and that is the point this ſtate doth principally ayme at, namely, to haue the French king declare himſelfe directly againſt Spayne; and although the ambaſſador hath repreſented vnto them, that this collatterall diuertion is more ſafe and aduantagious, and that it muſt neceſſarily draw on a rupture, yet will they not vnderſtand that language; but do daily complayne, that the capitulations of the league are not punctually obſerued, and that the diuerſions promiſed are not made in the right places.

1624. THE pope hath lately made a leauey of men in his dominions, whereof much noyſe hath beene made, as if he would reſſent himſelfe of the loſſe of the Valtelina; but the numbers of his ſoldiers, nor the quality of commanders, are found to be equiualent to an entrepriſe of that nature. Towards Ferrara he hath ſent more men then the country can mayntaine without diſorder; but they are not men able to do any great matter; for they do onely make a noiſe, and that is as much as he doth deſyre. Some things he muſt do to pleaſe the Spanyards, whoſe ſeruant he is; and he doth thinke, that he hath donne enough in ſending his nephewe legate to the two crownes of France and Spayne, and his ſoldiers into the Ferrareſe. His hart is like the hart of all princes, vnſearchable; and nothing but tyme, the onely mother of truth, can diſcouer his intentions. The ſoldiers which are in the Ferrareſe, haue committed ſome exceſſes in ſeaſing vppon a wood or forreſt controuerſed betwixt this ſtate and the dutchy of Ferrara, burning ſome caſine or farme howſes belonging to gentlemen of Venice, and forcing all barkes which do fiſh for ſturgeons vppon the mouth of the Po, to bring them to Ferrara, and not to Venice. Theſe ſeigniori, although they haue many irons in the fire, and do deſyre not to kindle more fyre, yet will not let their patience prejudicate their right; and haue ſent this weeke a quantity of barche armate, to cleare the Po; and drawen into the Poleſine ſome ſufficient nomber of horſe and foote, to ſecure that confine; and I vnderſtand, (but I will not auowe it) that they haue giuen order for repriſaile to be made vppon the Ferrareſe, equiualent vnto the loſſe which their ſubiects haue receaued. They are wiſe enough here to know, that the pope will not beginne an offenciue warre, and that all that he hath donne, hath beene donne onely to pleaſe the Spanyards, who did hope, that for feare of the popes forces, this ſtate would recall their trouppes out of the Valtelina, and their army lodged vppon the confine of Milan; but theſe are fineſſes couſües de fil blanc; and here they are reſolued to purſue their point, and if the pope ſhall dare to beginne with them offenſiuely, they will not ſpare him.

CARDINAL Barbarini is at the length departed from Rome, and imbarqued at Ciuita Vecchia, vppon the popes gallyes, to goe to Marſeilles, and from thence to Auignon, where he is to expect an anſwer from the French and Spaniſh court, before he do reſolue to paſſe further. Padre Giacintho Natta, the Capuchin of Caſal, hath beene left behind at Rome, as a perſon to much knowen, and odious to our ſide; and in his place there is gone padre Zacaria Bouerio of Saluzzes, as a man thought to be acceptable, becauſe he doth ſay he was well ſeene by thoſe of our nation in Spayne. The grounds of this legation are onely theſe, as farre as can yet be vnderſtood by thoſe who haue meanes, and wanted not care to ſearche into the bottom thereof: Firſt, A vanity in the pope, who beleeuing aſtrologye, hath beene perſwaded by his mathematicians to interpoſe himſelfe, with aſſurance that he ſhould receaue honor and contentment. Secondly, An importunity of the miniſters of Spayne, who haue begged this legation ſo baſely, that he hath beene inforced to giue them that contentment. Laſtly, A curioſſity in his neaphew the cardinal Barbarini, who being very young, had an ardent ambition to trauaile; and thoſe who haue a purpoſe to aduantage themſelfes, during the abſence of il cardinale nipote, were not wanting to ſecond his deſyre; but it is certainely beleeued, that he doth not goe con negotio fatto; and not goeing ſo, the pope doth hazard much, and may looſe ſomething.

THE Venetians do now beginne to find this pill, of the diuertion towards Genoa, not altogither ſo bitter as it did ſeeme to be at the firſt: for although they haue commanded their ambaſſador reſiding with the duke of Sauoy, not to enter, with him, vppon the ſtate of the Genoeſi (which order I haue likewiſe giuen vnto my ſecretary, whom I left at Turin); yet they ſpeake of that diuertion now, as of a thing profitable to the publique, though not warrantable in itſelfe; and ſay, that Quod jure non fit, factum valet. They do find it ſuteable enough vnto the intentions of the league, which doth ayme at the weakening of the contrary party, vnto which ſyde this blowe may proue mortall; and they do ſee, that it is not ſo vnfeaſeable an action as was conceaued at the firſt; for the beginnings haue hitherto ſucceeded very proſperouſly, and the alarme is ſo great, that many of the moſt principall families of Genoa are ſayd to haue diſlodged already, and that they are tranſporting their families into this ſtate.

OUR laſt letters from the campe were dated the 23. of March, at which tyme, Noui, Guado, Paſſerano, Capriata, and many other places of paſſage, were taken in, moſt of them without any reſiſtance at all, and the reſt with very ſmall contention. Wee heare ſince, by the way of Milan, that Roſiglione, a towne and caſtle of ſome conſideration, hath beene taken likewiſe, and that therein there hath beene found great ſtore of good prouiſions, and a conſiderable ſumme of monny; which hath ſo farre incouraged the French ſoldiers, that they do goe on à teſte baiſſee, as if nothing could reſiſt them. And if the aduiſe of Milan be true, vppon notice of ſecourſe ſent from the duke of Feria to the Genoeſi, the French did preſume to ſet vppon the rereward, and cut in pieces a good many of them; which action is the more remarquable, in that it is ſayd to haue beene donne neare Serauelle, vppon the ſtate of Milan. 1624.

THE pope hath expoſtulated this proceeding very warmely with the cardinal of Sauoy, and the Venetian ambaſſador, from whom he receaued different anſwers; for the prince cardinal did deſyre him to haue patience, vntill the reaſons of the duke his father might be heard, which, he did aſſure him, would be ſuch, as would giue him ſatisfaction; but the Venetian ambaſſador did diſauowe all, as donne without the conſent, and contrary to the intentions of his maſter. Howſoeuer it is certaine, that the pope doth in appearance ſhew himſelfe much offended, fearing that the voyage of his nephew, the cardinal Barberini, may proue vnfruitefull; for although the miniſters of Spayne, and the Genoeſi, haue giuen vnto the ſaid cardinall 200000 crowns, to corrupt the miniſters of ſtate in France, and that the pope doth allowe him 30000 crowns a month (which is 20000 crowns more in the month, then any of his quality euer had vppon like occaſions of employment); yet Monſieur de Bethune, hauing diſcouered their deſigne, hath diſpatched a gentleman from Rome in diligence to aduertiſe the French king his maſter of theſe practiſes; whereat the pope doth infinitely ſtorme, fearing leaſt by this preuention his neaphewe may be commanded to ſtay in Auignon, and not ſuffered to come to the French court. Notwithſtanding all this, the cardinal Cleſell doth continue ſtill to be his priuado, and two groomes of his chamber were caſheired this weeke, for diſcouering vnto the prince Sauelli, who is ambaſſador for the emperor, and to the cardinal Ludouiſio, who is a partiall diuoto of Spayne, that the pope did vſe very often in the night to negotiate priuately with cardinal Cleſel, whom the Spanyards and Auſtriaci do feare more then all the court of Rome, and would faine remoue him from thence, if it were poſſible.

THE marquis di Coeuures doth daily get ground vppon the Spanyards in the county of Chiauenna, and it is thought, eare long, he will make an end of that buſineſſe; for he is now furniſhed with ſome barche armate, which do maſter that part of the lake, ſo that ſupplyes of men, and other neceſſary prouiſions, cannot come ſo eaſily from Como, as they did before; and Ruinelli, ſergeant major vnto colonel Salici, hath lately diſcouered a new paſſage ouer the mountayne, by which he hath gotten the vpper ground, and doth command Riua with muſquet ſhott; ſo that it will be hard for them to hold out long, although the marquis doth goe ſlowely to worke, expecting the iſſue of the diuerſion towarde Genoa; for hee hath not yet any commiſſion to enter vppon the ſtate of Milan; but he doth hope, that the duke of Sauoy, and the conneſtable, will inforce the Spanyards to come to a rupture; and then the marquis will not ſet out, but haue his part in the game.

THE king of Polonia hath lately, in an aſſembly generall of the ſtates of that kingdome, required two things of thoſe lords and palatines: Firſt, That they would aſſiſt him in the recouery of the kingdome of Sweden, or at leaſt of the prouince of Liuonia. Secondly, That they would contract a perpetuall and hereditary league, defenſiue and offenſiue, with the emperor, and the howſe of Auſtria. Both theſe propoſitions haue beene directly refuſed and reiected by thoſe ſtates, as the prince of Polonia did confidently ſignifie vnto this ſtate, when he was here; adding withall, that he did now goe to the emperor expreſly, to diſpoſe him to alter his firſt propoſition, and to moue for a defenſiue league onely, which the ſaide prince did hope he ſhould be able, at his comming into Poland, to get effected.

MY wife preſents her affectionate ſeruice to your lordſhip and noble lady, whoſe hands I will here likewiſe craue leaue to kiſſe: and euer reſt

Venice, 8th of
March, 1625
ſtylo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend, to do you ſeruice,

I. WAKE.

1624.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I PRESUME ſo much vpon your noble diſpoſition, that my excuſe is made in my laſt, and my way opened to find your honor in the ſtile of buſineſs, without further prefaces, beeing once vnderſtood and accepted for your ſeruant.

FOWER dayes paſt arriued a poſt from Bethlem Gabor, a fore-runner of his ambaſſador nowe expected within 8 dayes; who brought letters both to the vizier and his owne agent, full of ſuch newes from Chriſtendome, of blowes giuen the emperour and his party, as if hee had ſome meaning, by the vehemency of relation, to moue this ſtate to take the opportunity of advancing him in Hungary, though nothing in termes direct and playne. To theſe hee added, That hee hadd receiued letters by an expreſſe meſſenger from the French king, the States of Holland, the counts of Mansfield and Torne, which hee had anſwered with all expedition; with the contents whereof hee had ordered his ambaſſador to acquaint mee at his arriuall: That the chancellor of Hungary had bene lately with him in ambaſſadge from the emperor, and brought him a great preſent; who, hauing had ſodaine audience, was diſpatched; the ſubſtance of which negotiation ſhould alſo bee communicated with mee, and his other frends in this port: Laſtly, That though the commiſſioners of the emperor and the grand ſignor were mett vpon the place agreed, and the treaty entered into with the admiſſion of his aſſiſtants; yet there was no probability of concluſion, where hee had inſerted ſo many difficultyes.

THUS much I ſawe in his letter, and would beleeue nothing but myne eyes in the relation of his agent. All that I can conclude is, that hee would willingly bee doing ſomwhat, if hee knewe where to find a retraict: and I am fully confident, that vpon the receipt of the generall aduiſe ſent him by our owne meſſenger, mentioned in my laſt, whoſe retorne wee in fewe dayes expect, hee will fully declare himſelfe: in the meane tyme, I am reſolued to beleeue nothing.

YESTERDAY a horſeman arriued from Buda, who, as I am enformed, brought letters to the vizier, that the commiſſioners of the peace beeing mett, and falling into particulars of the frontire, ſo many differences did ariſe, and ſo much choler, that they ſeperated and brake, the Imperialls retorning to Komoran, and the Turks to Strigonium, without any concluſion. The French ambaſſador pretends, that hee hath the like aduiſe from thence, and that the diſſolution did ſpring from a jealouſy of the Imperialls, begotten by a rumour of two ſlaues that eſcaped, and told them that they ſhould bee betrayed; and that thereupon they ſodaynly and vnaduiſedly departed, to the great ſcandall of the Turks, who took thereat ſo much diſdeyne, that they alſo retyred to their owne ſtrengths. This tale hath litle ſalt; I knowe the feare was pannicque, and doe not beleeue that the miniſters of the emperour were ſo light; but ſomwhat there is of the interruption of the treaty (the cauſe, I think, I could beſt coniecture); but I will auerre nothing, vntill a ſecond aduiſe doth both cleare the truth, and confirme it. In the meane tyme no occaſion ſhalbee omitted to giue it a full ouerthrowe, ſeeing it is allready ſhaken.

THERE is arriued an ambaſſador from the Tartar han, who hath brought great joy to this citty, by an offer of his maſters ſeruice, and excuſing the entry of the Tartars into the frontire of this empire, as beeing done in ſeruice of the grand ſignor, only to fetch Cantemir Mirze and his followers out of Siliſtra, and to compell them to retyre, to auoyd and take away all occaſion from the Poles to lament of the iniuries done by them, that thereby they alſo might take the like order for their Coſſacks, and ſo the peace might bee duly on both ſides obſerued. Whereupon a poſt is diſpeeded into Poland, aduiſing what is done, and requiring that on both parts the like correſpondency may bee obſerued; or elſe, that the grand ſignor will vnderſtand, (if the Coſſacques make any newe attempt) that the peace is broken on that ſide, beeing they ſhall haue no excuſe to lay the fault vpon the Tartars. This vſe is made of the ambaſſadge; yet I perceiue by the vizier, that he doth not much truſt in this meſſenger; but thinketh hee is ſent for exploration, to diſcouer the force, preparation, and reſolution of this ſtate; and therefore they make all ſhowe of good prouiſion, armes beeing giuen out to all the baſtangees, and a great fleete dreſſing for the Black-ſea, wherein the Coſſacques haue bene allready ſeene, and rumour makes them to exceed 300 boates: inſomuch that all the inhabitants of the Boſphorus doe daily retire to the citty. The feare is generall, which is a ſufficient argument of weakeneſs; and the laſt yeare hath ſhewed what might bee done with a ſmall and reſolute force.

THE king of Perſia beginns to march; and there is come a report, that Abaſſa baſſa, in Arzrum, is fallen out with his garriſon of Janizaries about their pay; a quarrell pickt (though grounded vpon iuſtice) to pay no more then doe dutyes; who growing, as is their manner, to termes of inſolence, hee ſodaynly fell vpon them, and cutt them off; and ſince hath ſent to the Perſians, to offer the towne vnto them. This is much feared; but no aduiſe of certeynty, and what is, is kept ſecrett.

THE extraordinary ambaſſador of Venice, ſeignior Simon Contarino, is ariued, and hath made his entry: his buſineſs is congratulation; to which, it ſeemes, hee is ſo ſtrictly tyed, that I cannot preuaile with him in publique complaynts againſt a cuſtomer that vexeth all nations alike, and his moſt; and our hopes of the opportunity attended in him, to acquaint the grand ſignior, are fallen to the ground.

THESE are the gleanings of a fewe dayes gathering; which hauing ſent to your ſtore the right way, I haue no more to ſay; but retyring vnder your fauour, I committ your honor to the holy protection.

Conſtantinople,
$\frac{12}{22}$ March, 1624.

Your Honors moſt affectionat.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

OUR affaires here reſting onely in preparation for the field, to leavye the ſiege of Breda, I have little to advertiſe; onely I find, by ſuch letters as are come by this laſt ordinary from Bruxells, that it is needfull to encounter ſuch miſreports as are there rayſed of Mansfelts army; which, to ſay the truth, hath ſuffered much, the foote by froſt in the rivers, and the horſe by tempeſt at ſea; and many of the foote are loſt by cold and hunger, and ſicknes taken by lying long on ſhipboard: yet a good body remaynes of 7000 Engliſh, and 4000 Duch; but as yet ſeparate in Zealand, and other corners, as they were ketcht by the yce; but drawing all, now the waters are open, to theyr quarter at Longſtraet, where the count Mansfelt is at this preſent, having made a ſhort jorney hether about his money matters (of which he came over skantly provided, but gott creditt here for 200000 florins); and now he is buſye in arming and clothing his men.

THE duke of Brunſwick is here with vs, having brought with him the laſt of the cavallerie from Calais, except ſome 40 or 50, for which he wanted ſhipping. And though thoſe which came before him, as likewiſe thoſe he came with, were kept ſome dayes longer at ſea, then they were provided for of victualls, and were driven by tempeſt here and there into all the ſeverall ports of Holland and Zealand, yet not any one bote of them periſhed; which may ſeeme miraculous, conſidering the wracks of ſo many men of warre and marchants, with the ſame tempeſt, at Calais, and all along this coaſt. Such as wee have here ſeene of the men, are of very good apparence; and the reſt are ſo well reported of, that they are likely to doe theyr countrey honour: but, for our countreymen, wee can yet make no great braggs; for they ſeeme to be rather skimm'd then preſt men, there having bene never brought over into theſe parts ſuch a company of raggamuffins; yet, when they are a little ſeaſon'd and ſettled, I doubt not but they will doe the duty of honeſt men.

THE prince of Orange doth fall away and decay daily more and more with his languiſhing ſicknes; which now makes him looſe patience, ſeeing ſo ſmall hope of recovery againſt the tyme of ſervice: yet he is not apprehenſive of death, to which, notwithſtanding, in every bodyes view, he approcheth; and every afternoone hath a fever, and paſſeth the whole night, till towards morning, commonly without ſleepe; yet his phyſitians deſpayre not of him, but hope the good tyme of the yeare, now coming on, may relieve him: which fayling, count Henry will have the commaund of the States army; to which purpoſe he is already called hether from Walwick, and count Erneſt daily expected from Roſendal, with ſome other of the chiefes from both places, to order all things before theyr going into the field.

HERE are arrived out of France two French ſea-captaynes, (St. Julian, and Manti) and this French ambaſſadors ſecretary, all with letters to this French ambaſſador, 1624. ſador, to procure that 12 ſhipps of the 20, which have bene here providing, ever ſince Belleaujuns being here, for the Mediterranean, ſhould be ſpeedily ſent away towards Rochel againſt Soubize, with charge, that every ſhip ſhould receave a French captayne, and that other 12 ſhould be made ready with all poſſible ſpeed, to fill vp the former number of 20 for the Mediterranean.

YF all reſolutions hold in our court, according to the advertiſements of my laſt letters from thence, I ſhalbe there within few dayes, to doe your lordſhip ſervice; and yf any alteration happen, which my next will tell mee, I will not fayle to continue this dutye of writing to your lordſhip from hence, vpon all occaſions worthy the advertiſement.

I MUST now, before I part, tell your lordſhip ſome domeſtique newes: Prince Henry is to marrie, this next Eſter weeke, the young countes of Solmes, out of the queens court; and two of the queens gentlewoemen, the two Woodwards, are ſhortly to goe the ſame way; the elder being to bee maried to Sir Th. Lydol, a yong Yorkeſhire knight; and the yonger, to Mr. Aſhbornham, the queens ſteward. In theyr places, the queen hath ſent into England for a recrüt of ladies; and they will come the more willingly, ſince they finde husbands, as they haue done of late dayes, in her court, ſo plentifully. Thus, I kiſſe your ladies hands, and euer reſt

Hagh, this $\frac{14}{24}$. of
March, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt faythfull, affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

BEYOND the Valtelina, vppon the border of the lake, which doth take name in part from Como, and in part from Chiauenna, the two armyes of the league and of Spayne did wholly vnmaſque themſelfes; and now that they haue paſſed Rubicone, it is thought, that it will be a hard matter for them to cloſe and rejoine, before this breach be followed with a greater rupture. The relation of that action, as wee haue it from the marquis di Coeuures, doth run in this forme:

THE counſell of warre, of the army of the league, hauing thought it neceſſary, before they could open the ordinary wayes, which are three in number, leading to Campo, Noua, and Riua, ſeated vppon the lake, to force the enemy to diſlodge out of Campo, where he was quartered, did reſolue to aſſalt thoſe who were in Campo, vppon Sunday the 16th of Februarie, newe ſtyle, at ten of the clock in the morning; and there were commanded, for the execution of this entrepriſe, fiue companyes of the regiment of Vaudecourt; 800 of the Venetian auxiliaries, commanded by colonel Milander, whereof one halfe were Albaneſi; 600 of the regiment of Salici; 60 gen'd'armes well armed, who did quit their horſes, and march on foote; and 100 carabins, part French, and part Albaneſi.

TWO dayes before the action was to be vndertaken, word was ſent vnto Vaudecourt, who was at Chiauenna, to come out, and giue on vppon thoſe of Riua, at the day and hower before mentioned, namely, on the 16th of February, at ten of the clock in the morning, that ſo they might be ſet vppon in two places at one inſtant; which order was punctually executed.

VPPON Saturday the 15th, a hundred muſquetiers were ſent out to driue backe 50 of the ennemy, which had aduanced vp to the mountaine, and would haue incommodated the leaguers in their paſſage: but theſe hundred being inforced to make a march of eight howers, to get the aduantage of the vpper ground, did not arriue vntill halfe an hower after the faction was begunne.

THE order giuen out to goe to the combat was on this ſort; namely, That at one tyme the enemy ſhould be ſet vppon on two ſides; and the eſquadrons were diuided into 200 men for each eſquadron, of which Monſ. de Bauſé, captaine Ruinelli, and la Forge, were to command thoſe who did take the way of the right hand; and the captaine Gran Prè, who did command in the Venetian trouppes, was to take the way of the left hand, with two hundred more. The ennemy, ſeeing that they were to be ſet vppon in good earneſt, did ſend out of Noua, by a couered way full of gardens and walls, ſome trouppes to ſtrengthen their fellowes who were in Campo.

THE firſt 400, ſent out in two eſquadrons, did depart from the campe of the league at one inſtant: but the way of the left hand prouing more paſſable, then the other of the right hand, Gran Prè, with his Venetians, had the commodity to out-goe Bausè, and thoſe who did take the other way. The enemy receaued them with a good countenance, and did aduance two hundred paces out of Campo to meete them; but being ſtoutly aſſayled, they retyred backe into the village with ſome diſorder. Captaine Gran Prè, who did followe them cloſe, receaued a ſhot vnder a wall of the village, and the lieutenant of Milander was killed vpon the place: which two accidents did coole the courage of the ſoldiers; and the enemy, perceauing that he was no longer purſued, did take hart, and beat backe the leaguers vnto the foote of the mountaine. Then was colonel Milander diſpatched with 200 men more, to ſuccor his fellowes, which did retyre too faſt; and a ſecond charge being giuen, the ennemy did keepe his ground longer then he had donne before; but in the end the Spanyards were routed, and put to flight. The ſoldiers of the league, tranſported with the heat of the combat, did followe the Spanyards halfe a myle beyond the village; and this was donne with no leſſe vigor, then temerity and raſhneſſe; for the more ground that they did get, the leſſe they were able to defend; and their number did weaken their body, by the irregular diuiding themſelfes, ſome in the feilds purſuing the ennemy, others in the village burning the howſes, and ſome in ſpoyling the bodyes of the dead ennemyes. The marquis di Coeuures, ſeeing this diſorder, did ſend colonel Salici with 200 men more, with expreſſe order, to ſee executed what had beene reſolued in the counſell of warre; namely, that they ſhould goe farther then the village of Campo, but lodge there, and fortify it with barricadoes. Salici did take the way of the left hand, where there were 200 Albaneſi, whom he had order to take along with him: but theſe being auxiliaries of the Venetian trouppes, who were but newely entred into the Valtelina, and did not know the face of any commander but the general, did refuſe to obay or followe him. The marquis di Coeuures, general of the army, ſtanding vppon the point of a rocky mountayne, did ſee that the Spanyards did ingroſſe neare Noua, and therevppon he did ſend Monſ. de Vaulx after the diſpatch of Salici, with order to command all the leaguers to retyre out of the feilde, and to withdraw themſelfes into the village of Campo, and there to endeauor the making-good of that quarter with barricadoes. But this meſſenger could not arriue ſo ſoone, but that the enemy, hauing ſent 30 horſe out of Riua, and ſome infanterie out of Noua, finding the leaguers ſcattred, did ſet vppon them with ſuch a fury, that their retraict was no better then a flight, and the Albaneſi were the firſt that did turne their backes. The commanders of the league did their beſt to ſtay the ſoldiers; but neither good words, nor ill entreaty, could retayne thoſe who were poſſeſſed with feare. Theſe entrefaits were ſo ſuddaine, that the general di Coeuure was not able to remedy this diſorder, further then by ſhewing himſelfe vppon the top of the mountayne, with ſuch forces as remayned with him: and the ſight of thoſe trouppes did worke ſo much, that the enemy, fearing to be ouerborne, did retyre, eſpecially the horſe, which did brauely; and if they had beene well ſeconded by the foote, it would haue gone worſe with the leaguers then it did. 1624.

THE leaguers haue loſt in this faction captaine Gran Prè, and three officers of eminent quality; of ſoldiers killed and hurt they do count 100; and the general di Coeuures doth complayne of want of obedience, becauſe, if the ſoldiers had not attempted to do more then was commanded them, the day had beene his entirely; whereas now they parted almoſt vppon equal termes, excepting onely, that the league did get ground, and hath beaten the enemy from hindering their army to paſſe downe to the lake, where now they haue accommodated the way, and brought the canon.

IT ſeemeth very ſtrange, that the Spanyards did appeare in this buiſineſſe ſo late, and ſo weakely; for they did not ſtirre, vntill Chiauenna was ready to be inueſted; and when they did vndertake the defence of that place, they did ſend thither onely one company of foote, which was a ſtrength of no conſideration; by which meanes they did looſe both the place, and their men, and make a breach in their reputation. Beſydes, they might, if they had liſted, haue ſent into Campo, Riua, and Noua, as many men as they would; for their groſſe is at Como, from whence they haue the commodety of the lake, and boates fit for tranſportation. Now their faintneſſe hath giuen courage vnto the league to goe on; and ſeeing the Spanyards haue at the laſt appeared in the buiſineſſe, the leaguers ſpeake no more of the Valtelina, but 1624. reſolue to ſet vppon Noua, and the fort di Fuentes, which are members of the ſtate of Milan, and from thence to open their way vnto the riuer Tiſine, and there to joyne with the army of Piedmont.

TO ſtop the courſe of theſe proceedings, the pope, at the earneſt entreaty of the Spanyards, hath vndertaken to treat an accommodation: to that purpoſe he hath deſigned his nephewe, the cardinal Barberini, to goe legatus à latere into France, and, if neede be, likewiſe into Spayne; and he hath this weeke diſpatched in diligence a gentleman of his chamber, Signor Picolomini, to let the French king knowe of the comming of his nephewe, and to deſyre that all armes may be ſuſpended vntill his arriuall. Padre Giacinto Natta is the principall director of this legation, and he doth receaue all his inſtructions from the duke of Bauaria; whereby it may eaſily be immagined, to whom the pacquet is principally addreſſed; it being well knowen, that the worke of that Capuchin is and hath beene ſome yeares, to procure the two crownes of France and Spayne to joyne with the emperor, the pope, and Bauaria, in an vniuerſall extirpation of heretiques.

THE legation from Rome, deſigned in the perſon of the cardinal Barberini, nephewe vnto the pope, is the onely theame of all diſcourſe in Italye. Some are ſo wiſe as to thinke, that vnderhand there is a ſecreate promiſe of accommodation; and that the pope would not aduenture the credit of his nephewe in an vncertaine or doubtfull negotiation: and others are ſo fooliſh as to conceaue, that he doth ſeacretly feare, and, by conſequence, hate the greatneſſe of Spayne; and therſore would bee glad to ſee them a little mortyfied: which conceite they do ground vppon this argument, namely, that he hath made choice of the cardinal Cleſel for his moſt intimate and priuy counſellor, who is knowen for to be animo alieniſſimo from the Auſtriaci. But the truth is, that the Spaniſh miniſters haue extorted from him this legation, in hope to get a ſuſpenſion of armes; for they do find themſelfes in a great ſtreight, and are not really prouided for forces to reſiſt ſuch ſtormes as do threaten tempeſts to fall vppon them in ſeuerall places. Euery day their weakeneſſe doth appeare more and more; and if they be followed cloſe, at this preſent, they muſt yeelde to reaſon; for the emperor hath ſent downe, towards the Lowe Countryes, all the ſtrength that he and all his frends can make: and yet he hath no great aſſurance of Bethlem Gabor, who (as wee are here credibly informed) did very lately ſet vppon the Coſacchi, who were comming through Valachia to ſerue the emperor, and cut them all in pieces.

THE Spaniſh fleete muſt eyther goe towards Braſile, or come into the Mediterranean ſea: if it come towards Italye, the Hollanders will haue a good bargaine of Braſile; if it goe ſouthward, their frends in Italye may perhaps want helpe; and whitherſoeuer it goeth, Spayne will be left diſarmed, and expoſed to the ſpoyle of any fleete, that will vndertake to rauage that coaſt.

THE duke of Feria hath not ſtrength ſufficient to reſiſt the league, when he ſhall be ſet vppon in good earneſt: and if the Imperiall forces ſhall be called into Italye to defend the State of Milan, Spinola will want them, and Mansfelt will find ſmall reſiſtance. If they do ſtay belowe to ſecond Spinola, and ſtop Mansfelt, then doth the ſtate of Milan ſtand at the diſcretion of the league: ſo that they do lupum auribus tenere in all places; and their beſt expedient is, to introduce a negotiation, which may beget a ſuſpenſion of armes; which they wiſely foreſeeing, haue preſſed the pope to interpoſe himſelfe: and their importunity hath drawen from him this declaring of his nephewe legatus à latere to the two crownes of France and Spayne.

HOW this inuention will ſucceede, it is a quære not eaſily to be reſolued; for now notus Vliſſes; and theſe artifices haue beene vſed ſo often, that they are now diſcouered at firſt ſight. Perhaps this remedy, intended to cure or retard the diſeaſe, may produce a contrary effect, and cauſe the apoſtheme to breake ſooner, then otherwiſe it was likely to haue donne; for the duke of Sauoy, and the conneſtable d'Eſdiguieres, fearing preuention by this legation, haue reſolued to anticipate, and to beginne their diuerſion ſooner then they had intended. In a letter of the 24th of February, the conneſtable doth write vnto mee, from Turin, theſe words: Monſieur, Nous partons au premier jour pour aller à la grande diverſion, avec trente mil hommes de pied, vinge qatre canons, et quinze colouvrines: S. A. meſme viendra de mon coſte; nos deſſeins reüſſiront, Dieu aydant, et vous apprendrez bien-toſt de fort heureux ſuccez de nos entrepriſes.

THE duke of Sauoy hath commanded my ſecretary to write vnto me to the ſame purpoſe; and he doth aſſure me, that the canon did beginne to march that day, and that all ſorts of ammunition were already ſent to Aſti, which doth equally confine with the Milaneſe and Genoeſe.

IN the county of Chiauenna the armes of the league haue ſtood at a pauſe theſe ten dayes, and wee doe not heare of any blowes that haue beene giuen lately. The Spanyards are growen ſtrong in Riua, well fortifyed, ſo that the marquis di Coeuure cannot paſſe further without more helpe. He hath ſent hither to be ſupplyed with two thowſand men more, and with barques to paſſe the lake; and vppon his motion, artificers are ſent, and materialls to build ſome barques, and order for the rayſing another regiment of Griſons out of the ſtocke of the league. Theſe ſeigniori being vnwilling to weaken their ſtate, by ſending out any more men, they haue here giuen commiſſions vnto the count de la Tour, for the rayſing of three thowſand Almans; to count Leueſtein, for 1500 Netherlanders; and Schiaualiſchi, and others, for as many Bohemians, or what nation they can get: and they do worke inceſſantly in the arſenal, to arme many gallyes and galleaſſes, for feare leaſt the Spaniſh armada, comming into the Mediterranean ſea, may make a viſite in the Adriatique gulfe.

DON Luigi d'Eſte, pretending the ſickneſſe of his father, the duke of Modena, hath taken his leaue of theſe ſeigniori, and is retyred to Modena, being inwardly diſtaſted with their hauing preferred the count de la Tour before him in eminency of charge, though not in precedence.

THE fire kindled firſt in Rhætia and the Valtelina, by the marquis di Coeuures, doth beginne to inlarge it ſelfe a little; and as wee do expect euery day to ſee the flame breake out from the confine of Piedmont, ſo we do heare, that ſome ſparkes are fallen in Heluetia, which do threaten a combuſtion there. Vppon the 12th of this laſt month, by this account, there was to be held a dyette at Zurich of the four euangellical cittyes, Zurich, Berne, Baſill, Schaphuſen, and of the proteſtants of Glaris, Apenzel, and St. Gallo. The ſubiect of that aſſembly is this: Hauing obſerued, that of late they are greatly braued and threatned by their neighbours of the catholique cantons, who do dayly plot and conſpire their ruine, and correſpond more ſtrictly with the howſe of Auſtria, then the charter of the allyance generall, which all the body of the Heluetian cantons haue togither, doth permitt; the proteſtants haue thought fit to forme a body of an army among themſelfes, for the defence of their religion, liberty, and country, contra quoſcunque. It is not intended, that this army ſhall paſſe the number of 10000 at the beginning; but they will allwayes keepe trayned bands in a readineſſe to joyne with theſe vppon all occaſions. That which doth inforce them to take this reſolution of ſtanding vppon their guards, is, becauſe the proteſtant cantons haue all of them jointly and ſeuerally accorded vnto the French king, and vnto the other princes of the league, paſſage, leauyes, victualls, and armes; whereat the catholique cantons are very much offended, and do openly threaten, that as ſoone as the Auſtrian party ſhall haue the vpper hand of their enemyes, the proteſtant cantons ſhall pay dearely for this declaration they haue made in fauor of the league.

IN the Valtelina, and county of Chiauenna, little hath beene done of late; neither indeede doth there remayne any place more to take in, but Riua, and the caſtle of Chiauenna, properly belonging vnto the Griſons. In Riua the Spanyards are ſtrong, and well fortifyed: but as ſoone as the league ſhall be prouided of barche armate to maſter the lake, actum eſt; for the duke of Feria hath his hands ſo full another way, that he cannot poſſibly relieue them. As for the caſtle of Chiauenna, it is aux derniers abois; for the canon hath paſſed the mountayne, and already they do beginne to capitulate, ſo that wee do expect dayly to heare of the ſurrender of that place.

IN Piedmont they haue, by this tyme, paſſed the Rubicone, and perhaps my next will tell you, that jacta eſt alea; for the conneſtable departed from Turin vppon the 4th of this month, and he was followed the next day by the duke of Sauoy, who cauſed la cornetta bianca to march before him, as a ſignal of warre, and a ſummons for all his vaſſalls and feudataries to attend vppon his perſon, and to range themſelfes vnder that cornet. 27 pieces of canon, and a thowſand carts laden with ammunition,

departed

1624. departed before him vppon the 7th. The general muſter of the whole army was to be made in Aſti, which will be found to be neare vppon the point of 30000 foote, and 3000 horſe. Before his departure he did diſmiſſe Don Carlo Dauez, a Spaniſh ambaſſador, ſent to condole for the death of prince Philibert, and to congratulate the marriage of prince Tomaſo. Theſe were the outward pretents, vppon which that embaſſage was grounded; but it is thought, that the ambaſſador had commiſſion to haue made ouuertures of a higher nature vnto the duke of Sauoy; and that he did ſuppreſſe his principall inſtructions, as not finding the conjuncture to be ſeaſonable. Beſydes compliment, we do not heare, that there did paſſe betwixt the duke and Don Carlo any thing ſerious, but onely one queſtion, which was, that the ambaſſador did deſyre to know the reaſon of this arming ſo ſtrongly: whereunto the duke made anſwer in few words, That no man did know the reaſon thereof better then the catholique king. When the ambaſſador could get no other anſwer, after a long pauſe, he replyed, That he did ſee clearely, that a good peace could not be hoped, vntill a good warre had preceded; and the duke told him, V. S. l'ha indovinato, You haue ſouthſayde: and vppon theſe termes they parted. Prince Tomaſo hath beene dangerouſly ſicke of a malignant feauer; but we vnderſtand, that now there is hope of recouery. The prince of Piedmont doth intend to caſt himſelfe into Vercelli, becauſe that place is moſt threatned by the duke of Feria, who hath drawen towards Nouara, and the fort of Sandeual, the greateſt part of his ſtrength. The duke of Mantoua is likely to ſuffer from both ſydes; for vppon his hauing giuen paſſage to Spaniſh trouppes through Montferrat, the duke of Sauoy, and the conneſtable, do demand the like, and do deſyre to be accommodated with victualls, and all prouiſion neceſſary for an army, promiſing to pay for whatſoeuer they ſhall take. Monſieur de Botru (who is now in this towne) hath beene with the duke of Mantoua from the French king, to diſpoſe him to fauor the league, or at the leaſt not to paſſe the bounds of neutrality; but both he, and all the miniſters of France, do find that duke wholy deuoted to Spayn; and therfore they do reſolue to let the duke of Sauoy take by force any reaſonable thing that Mantoua ſhall deny, when he is frendly requeſted and prayed.

VPPON the 4th of this month the prince of Polonia arriued here priuately at two howers of the night, hauing paſſed from Mantoua, through Verona, Vincenza, and Padoua, without making himſelfe knowen vnto the rettori of thoſe cittyes, who had prouided to receaue him with magnificency ſutable to his quality: he diſmounted here at the pallace of Grimani, prouided for him by publique order, and there he is lodged, and defrayed by this ſtate; but as yet he doth keepe on his priuate maſque, and will not haue publique notice taken of him, that he may with more liberty and freedome walke through the ſtreetes. Vppon the 10. of this month he did viſite the doge in his priuate lodgings, not in open college; and that ceremony did paſſe like a caſuall incounter, as if he had met the doge by chance, whilſt he paſſed through the roomes of the pallace, to ſee the buildings and pictures. The day following he went to the arſenall; and vppon the 12. there was a ball made for him, vnto which moſt of the principall ladyes were inuited, to honor the feaſt; the three ambaſſadreſſes did leade the dance. He doth not expreſſe any contentment in any entertaynement prouided for him by this ſtate, and that doth much diſcontent them; becauſe, in truth, they are not wanting to teſtify their affections by any magnificent expreſſions.

THE caſtle of Chiauenna is now taken by compoſition; and the duke of Sauoy and the conneſtable of France are in the field, with 30000 foote, and 3000 horſe; and wee do dayly expect to heare ſome great matter vndertaken by that army. Hauing nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip withall at this preſent, I, kiſſing the faire hands of your lady, do euer reſt

Venice, 18th March,
1625, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull ſeruant, to command,

I. WAKE.

1625.

From my Lord CAREW.

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip bare date vlt. Decemb. ſince which tyme I haue receaved from you one letter, with a double of the ſame, bearing date the $\frac{11}{21}$. of December, and with them a lardge relation of the movings in that empire, dated the 26th of November, for the which I retourne you many thankes. As things ſtood then in England, I made you an accompt; and now beginn vppon a new ſcore, not methodically, but as things doe happen: wherein, before this letter be ended, I ſhall add and detracte, as occaſions do change and alter. In my laſt I ſayd, that the parliament ſhould beginne the 16th of February; but the king, intendinge to prorogue it to a longer day, publiſhed his proclamation to ſtay the aſſembly of parlament men; vppon which 16th of February, the king by his commiſſion did prorogue it to the 15th of March; and vppon a ſeconde commiſſion hath now prorogued it to the 20th of Aprill, which falls out to be the Wedneſday in Eaſter weeke; but whether it ſhall then hould or not, for my particular, I am doubtfull.

THE riche Roberts, of Cornewall, the ſonne of an attourney, is created baron of Truro; and it is rumored, that his ſonne ſhall marry with a kinſwoman of the duke of Buckinghams. The laſt of January, count Mansfelt, with 12900 Engliſh foote, embarqued at Dover, and came to an anchor at the Ramekins neere Middleborough; but theire long lying on ſhippboarde in the Downes, theire ſhipps being over-peſtered with paſſengers, with want of victualls, whereof little care was had; and after that, held aboarde in Zeland, before it was reſolued where they ſhould be landed; ſuch an infection hath happened in the companies, as neere the one halfe of them are deade. At laſt they were diſpoſed of, the one halfe quartered in the Longſtreete neere vnto Hueſden; and the other neere about Gertrudenbergh, where (as in the ſhipps) the mortallity ceaſſeth not. The French (whoe were more then 20 dayes behinde vs in theire preparation) came at laſt vnto him, whereof there is 2000 brave horſe.

THE towne of Breda is yet victualled for divers monethes, and eſteeme not of any forcible attempts that Spinola can make: on the other ſide, though the Spaniſh army be very weake, as well by mortallity as runnawaies, yet theire intrenchments and earthworks are ſo ſtronge, as they deſpiſe any force to be able to raiſe them.

THE prince of Orange, by the two garriſons which haue layen longe at Roſſendale and Wallwicke, in the Longſtreete, hath intercepted many convoyes of victualls, whereby the marqueſſe Spinola hath beene in ſome danger of famiſhinge: nevertheleſſe (being ſtrong in horſe) ſufficient reliefe of victualls hath beene brought to his campe. For this moneth paſt and more, the prince of Orange hath beene ſeriouſly labouringe at a place called the Swallow, which lyes betweene Gertrudenbergh and the Spaniſh campe, to cutt trenches to draw in (at a ſpring tyde) the ſea water, in hope thereby to drowne the enemyes trenches. Some effect it hath wrought, but not ſo ſucceſsfully as was expected; yet ſtill he goeth on to bring his deſſigne to perfection; wherein the towne of Breda ſuffers; for all the ſellers and lowe roomes ſtand full of water, and ſo doth the enemies quarters; whereby a concluſion may be made, that the miſeries both in the towne, and alſo in the campe, are in extremities. More obſtinate beſeedgers, or beſeedged, cannot be parralleld, Oſtend excepted.

TO give a periodd to this long ſeedge, the prince of Orange hath made ſuch greate preparations, as he hopes, by the middeſt of Aprill, to drawe into the feild (iuſt accompting of Mansfelts troopes) aboue 50000 horſe and foote; hymſelfe lame, not able to ride, but in a horſe litter, yet meanes to be in the heade of the army, being maſter of the feild, to force the enemies trenches; to which end, he carries with him 150 peeces of ordenance. On the other ſide, from Germany, Bohemia, and all the power that the Auſtrian familie can make, together with new leavies out of the arch-dutcheſſe provinces, ſupplies are drawinge towards Spinola. If it pleaſe God, that the prince drawe firſt into the feild, before theſe ſupplies come to the enemie, there is greate hope, that the towne will be releived; otherwiſe it muſt abide the hazarde of a battayle, and remayne ſubiect to the conquerour; but in all probabillity it appeares, that the States army will haue the ſtarte of tyme. The prince his body is ſo crazed and ſickly, as there is no opinion of his long ſubſiſtinge; and if his ſucceſſes in this greate action doe proſper, his dayes will be crowned with glory.

1625. ITALIE is all on a fier; the French vnder the leadinge of the conſtable, the duke of Savoy vnder the commaunde of his two ſonnes the prince of Piedmont and Don Tomaſo, and the Venetians, haue greate armyes on foote. The governour of Millan, with aydes of the dukes of Parma and Modena, the pope, and Neapolitan troopes, haue greate forces diſperced into ſundry places, for the guarde of townes in the dutchie of Millan. The conſtable of France is ſayd to be now in the marquiſatt of Montferratt; the Venetians lye vppon the borders of Millan; and the Savoyan forces drawe towards Genoa, with a purpoſe to beſeedge that citty; and from Marſelles, ſhipps are to be ſent to beſeedge it by ſea. On the other ſide, the Genovezes haue raiſed as many ſouldiers, as they poſſibly can diſpoſe of; but in all probabillity, if Genoa be the deſſigne, and beſeedged both by land and ſea, it cannot longe be defended. The Valteline is now wholly poſſeſſed by the French, the antient inhabitants reſtored, the pope and the Spaniſh kings garriſons abſolutely driven out of the country; and the ſeate of the warre of Italie is likely to be in the dutchie of Millan; the opinion whereof moves the governor to fortifie every place, that may be eſteemed importante.

IN the South ſea, Monſ. L'Hermite, the Holland admirall, lately deade, hath wrought wonders, taken aboue 14 ſhipps rich prizes, ſuncke and burnt aboue 16. His fleete dommineers vppon thoſe ſeas, extreame riche, and hath fortified in certaine places vppon the coaſt. To ſupply them, there is greate preparations to be ſent thether from Holland with all expedition. From the bay of Todos los Santos in Brazill, wee haue heard nothing of late: a fleete from Lisbone, to diſplant them, are by this tyme (as may be coniectured) vppon that coaſt; and ſo is there a fleete of Holland for theire ayde ſent vnto them: they departed neere about one tyme; and if it ſhould happen, that the Spaniards ſhould firſt arrive, yet the Hollanders are not like to be diſtreſſed; for they are ſtrongly fortified, and haue meanes ſufficient to ſubſiſt, vntill theire ayds come vnto them. In France wee heare of men and munition drawne and drawinge into Picardie, whether it be to guarde that frontier, or to attempt any thinge vppon Flanders or Artois, noe iudgment can be yet made; but if there be a warre in the dutchie of Millan, there is no doubt but that the French will enter into the archdutcheſſe territories. Monſ. Soubize, vppon diſcontent, (with ſome 8 ſhipps) ſought his adventure vppon the ſeas; piratts flockt vnto him from all partes; his fleete was aboue 40 ſayle; vppon the French he made the warr; the river of Bourdeaux was his rendevous, where he made French, Engliſhe, and all nations, pay him duties: but now he is reconciled to the kinge, and it is thought, that he ſhalbe entertayned in the States pay; and his brother, the duke of Rohan, is to be ſent into Italie, to ſerve vnder the conſtable, with a chardge fitt for his quallitie; and France at this hower is in good peace and tranquillity within itſelfe. As for the movings of the emperour, whoſe face is wholly turned towards Hungary, you knowe more then wee; but from Germany greate events are this yeare expected; for the princes of all ſides raiſe forces, and the drumme is beaten in all Emperiall cittyes: beſides, the kings of Denmarke and Sweden promiſe to doe much; ſo as a tempeſt is like to fall vppon the Auſtrian family. God grant good ſucceſſe; for in the meane tyme the proteſtants endure much perſecution: but the coniecture that may be made of the good or ill ſucceſſe of the German affaires, depends moſt vppon the actions of the Low Countries; in which if the prince of Orange prevaile, there is greate hope of good alterations in thoſe partes. The duke of Buckingham is, within a few dayes, to goe into France. All things for the marriage betweene the kings are concluded, and he is the prince his proxe, to marry the lady with expedition, and, with as much celerity as may be, to bringe her into England. The king and prince haue reſolued to meete her at Dover; to which ende the caſtle is repayred, and richly furniſhed. Since the greate ambaſſadge performed by cardinall Wollſey, there hath not beene any to be parralleld with this of the duke of Buckinghams: the differrence (as I conceave) is only this; the cardinall had more in nomber, but the dukes exceedes that in magnificence and chardge. In my laſt I ſlightly gave you an intimation of an intended ſea voyadge; now I can ſay ſomewhat more, which is, that 12 of the kings ſhipps, 20 of the greateſt marchants, and 50 of Newcaſtle, of the greateſt burthen, well manned and munitioned, are deſſigned for a ſea voyadge. The Newcaſtle bottomes are all fitted as ſhipps of warre ought to be. The victualls for this fleete is allready prepared, the munitions are likewiſe in a readines; and for land ſervice, 10000 foote are preſently to be preſſed; but who ſhall be the admirall of this greate fleete, or the generall for the lande, or whoe are to be the greate commaunders in either, or whoe to be the captaines ether of ſhipps or companies, or what the deſſigne is, are yett vnknowne; and if I did knowe the laſt, I deſire your lordſhip to be excuſed in that particular, allthough I thinke, I am as well acquainted with theſe proceedings as any man. Vnto this fleete the ayde of the Hollanders will not be wantinge; for of themſelues they freely offer 30 or 40 of theire owne men of warre. I was both a counſellor and an actor in the voyadges to Cales and the Iſlands, and in my judgment this preparation exceeds them. Sir George Calvert is removed from his place of ſecretary, but yett without diſgrace; for the king hath created him baron of Baltimore in Ireland, and remaynes a counſellor; and Sir Albert Mourton is ſworne ſecretary in his roome. The lord Chicheſter died at his houſe in Weſtminſter, and his brother Sir Edward Chicheſter is his executor and heire. The lord de la Ware is married to Sir Thomas Edmonds his eldeſt daughter; and the young lord Dormer is likewiſe married to the erle of Montgomery his daughter. The forces deſſigned for Irelande are aſſembled at their ſeverall ports of rendevous, and will ſett ſayle with the firſt puffe of wynde; and with them Sir Thomas Stafford is employed, of whoſe abſence I haue a greate want. The marques Hamilton, lord ſteward of the kings houſehould, died of a burninge feaver; his body is carried into Scotlande to be buried, and no man yet ſpoken of, to be his ſucceſſor. The lady of Purbecke, and Sir Robert Howard, (younger ſonne to the earle of Suffolke) being by common fame accuſed of incontinency, are cited by the high commiſſion, for a ſonne borne, and Sir Robert ſuppoſed to be the father, whereby the earledome of Buckingham cannot want an heyre; which trenches farr into his honors and inheritance, not yet haueinge any ſonne of his owne. Sir Robert (for contempte in refuſinge to be ſworne to the articles wherevppon he is queſtioned) is excommunicated, and the lady a priſoner in alderman Barkhams houſe. What may be the yſſue of the buſines, may be well gueſſed to be ill for them both; ſo, on the other ſide, no man can diſlike the duke for ſiftinge out of the truthe to the vttermoſt; otherwiſe a ſtranger to his blood may inherite his honour and lands. At this preſent his majeſty is att Theobalds, poſſeſſed with a tertian ague; nyne fitts (whereof many of them were very violent) he hath allready endured, and is growen very weake; but I hope in God, that he is not come to the period of his dayes, which God graunt may be lengthened, wherevnto all honeſt men will ſay Amen. And ſo, my noble lord ambaſſador, with the remembrance of my loue and ſervice to your ſelfe and your worthy lady, I committ you both to the protection of the Allmighty, and reſt 1625.

Savoy, this 25th of
March, 1624.

Your Lordſhips affectionatt lovinge frend, to ſerve you,

G. CAREW.

From my Lord Archbiſhop of CANTERBURY.

My very good Lord,

I Thinke I did not write vnto you ſince June laſt; but when the water hath bene longe ſtopped, it breaketh forth in the ende with the more violence. Wee are at this preſent entring vpon great actions: I pray God to ſende the iſſue of them to bee comfortable and proſperous. The parliament, vpon the ſlow coming on of the Frenche mariage, hath bene hitherto deferd; but want of mony will enforce the holding of it, as I thinke, vpon the twentieth of April.

IT is now conceived, that this mariage is concluded; and muche ſuſpicion is, that by the popes meanes the Frenche grate farre vpon point of religion, whiche will not bee pleaſing to the parliament. The articles are not commonly knowne in England; but it is ſaide, that they are printed and vulgarly ſpred in Fraunce. I will hope, that his majeſty and the prince are more cautious then fame doth report.

THE duke of Buckingham goeth ſpeedily into Fraunce, accompanied with the earles of Salisbury, Dorſet, Warwike, and many other noblemen and gentlemen. They go ſo gallantly, that it cannot bee but an exceeding charge vnto the kingdome. The iourney is to conclude all the ceremonies of the mariage, and to bringe home the princeſſe, as it is generally conceived.

THE ſeege of Breda continueth; the marquiſſe Spinola having ſate downe before it ever ſince the beginning of September: but hee hath neither battered it, nor aſſaulted

1625. aſſaulted it, but hopeth to gaine it by famine. The prince of Orange hath bene muche ſicke this winter at the Hage, but hopeth now to go ſhortly to the feeld; and it is caſt out, that with a great armye hee truſteth to raiſe the ſeege.

COUNT Mansfeld hath an army of Engliſhe, Frenche, and Dutche, now about eighteene thouſand of horſe and foote; but hitherto hee hath ſent nothing with them. Our kinge alloweth him twenty thouſand by the moneth; and my truſt is, that wee ſhall have ſome account for our mony.

THERE is now to bee ſent out (if God bleſſe it) the greateſt fleete that for many yeeres hath gone out of England. Twelve ſhips of the kinges, twenty good ones of the marchants, fifty cole ſhips of Newcaſtle, whereof every one carieth 15 or 16 peeces of ordinance, and eche of them will tranſport an hundred land ſoldiers. Wee have ſigned letters, that the number of land-men is to bee to ten thouſand. With theſe, the Hollanders ſent out 30 or 40 of theirs, whiche, in the whole, will proove a goodly fleete. The time of their going hence is to bee before the ende of May; and the lord admiral is to have the conduct of them. The place where they are to light is kept ſecret, and althoughe I can gueſſe at it, yet I dare not truſt it with this letter.

THE marquiſſe Cuevre, general for the league on Italy ſide, hath freed the Valtaline, having lately recovered Chiavenna; ſo that nothing remaineth but Riva, and another little fort, whiche notwithſtanding they hope to gaine ſhortly. This ſomer is like to produce muche in this Weſterne worlde, howſoever you bee quiet in the Eaſt.

A Scottiſhe gentleman, agent for the kinge our maiſter in Poland, came purpoſely hither before Chriſtmas laſt, and ſeriouſly made two propoſitions: the one, for drawing in Bethlem Gabor into confederation with vs, ſo to buſy the emperour in thoſe parts, that hee may give the leſſe aſſiſtance towards the affaires of the Palatinate; the other, by the meanes of duke Ragevile and his frendes, to hinder the kinge of Pole for ſending any aide by his Coſſackes to the emperour. But theſe things have not bene taſted, I cannot tell out of what reaſon.

SIR Robert Amſtrewther, being with the kinge of Denmarke, and in the Lower Saxony, hath muche advaunced our affaires; and another embaſſadour hath done the ſame with the kinge of Swethen: but what vſe will bee made of them this ſomer, I cannot yet tell.

WHILE they were in Spaine, the duke of Buckingham and my lord of Briſtol fell fowle the one vpon the other, while the duke deſired to breake of the treaty of mariage, as ſuppoſing our kinge to bee abuſed by the Spanyard, never meaning any ſuche matter; and the earle avowed, that the coniuncture had gone on, but that the other did interrupt it. This grewe to that heate, that Briſtol was commaunded to keepe his lodging at St. Giles in the feelds, and to this day was never admitted to come to the court: but while the kinge the laſt ſomer was in progreſſe, leave was given to the earle to go to Sherborne, where hee hath inioyed the liberty of the countrey. Some have bene deſirous to accommodate matters betweene them, but hitherto it hath not ſorted. It hath bene frequently given out, that the earle ſhall bee queſtioned in the next Parliament: but what will bee the reſolution, I cannot tell; onely ſure I am, that there is great exaſperation betweene them, and that my lord of Briſtol carieth himſelfe very confident in outward ſhewe.

MR. ſecretary Calvert hath never looked merily ſince the prince his coming out of Spaine: it was thought, that hee was muche intereſted in the Spaniſhe affaires: a courſe was taken to ridde him of all imployments and negotiations. This made him diſcontented; and, as the ſaying is, Deſperatio facit monachum, ſo hee apparently did turne papiſt, whiche hee now profeſſeth, this being the third time that hee hath bene to blame that way. His majeſty, to diſmiſſe him, ſuffered him to reſigne his ſecretaries place to Sir Albertus Moreton, who payed him three thouſand pounds for the ſame; and the kinge hath made him baron of Baltimore in Ireland; ſo hee is withdrawne from vs, and having bought a ſhip of 400 tuns, hee is going to New England, or Newfoundlande, where hee hath a colony.

SIR James Lee that was, now lord Lee, is made lord treaſurer; and Sir Randal Crewe is cheefe juſtice of the kinges benche.

THE kinge of Fraunce remitteth nothing of his vigour againſt Rochel. Hee purſueth the building of the fort againſt it, and bringeth in munition more and more.

In the meane time Monſieur Soubize, brother to the duke of Rohan, is flowen out, and having taken diuerſe of the kinges ſhips, whiche, as it is conceived, were to bee vſed againſt Rochel, lyeth hovering about the ile of Re. This is ſome ſervice to that towne, but the Frenche proteſtants do diſclaime him and his action. Many thought at firſt, that this had bene colourable, and that, by ſome ſecret direction from that kinge, hee did meane to bringe about his fleete to helpe beſeege Genua; but that opinion beginneth to vaniſhe. But it is really beleeved, that many ſhips and galleys from Marſiles are like to bee imployed againſt Genua, as being the treaſure houſe of the Spaniſhe kinge: and the conſtable, as wee heare by very late letters, is gone into thoſe parts of Italy with twenty thouſand men, whiche is ſuppoſed to bee, to beſeege that city with a lande armye. 1625.

Wee are ſending into Ireland 2250 foote, and two or three hundred horſe, if either that people ſhould offer to ſtirre, or the Spanyard put in any forces to cauſe diſturbance there.

I knowe not what to ſaye to the patriarke touching Metrophanes: his rogiſh countreymen did vndoe him; hee had bene fairely caried to Conſtantinople by ſea, and I gave him viaticum to that purpoſe; but hee is gone with pretence to traveile throughe Germany by lande, in whiche courſe I cannot ſee how hee ſhould carye the bookes alonge with him. I do muche feare, that hee hath fared ſo well in theſe parts, that hee will hardly reduce himſelfe to the ſtrict life of the Coloires in the Greeke churche. I truſt to gaine ſo muche time, as to ſende with this a fewe lines to the patriarke.

In February laſt was twelve-moneth, the duke of Richmond dyed; and in Auguſt after, his brother the duke of Lenox departed this life; and now, in the ende of February laſt, God alſo tooke away the marquiſe Hamilton; ſo that the kinge hath loſt three of his neereſt kinſemen. Many other great men have chaunged this life; as the olde earle of Notingham, the younge earle of Dorſet, the earle of Thomond in Ireland, and the lord Chicheſter, all men of highe place, and very ſounde for religion. So it pleaſeth God to take vnto himſelfe men whome hee had fitted for himſelfe, and to leave worſe behinde.

When I had, at ſeveral leyſure times, written thus farre, I had notice, that the kinge our maiſter grewe very ſicke at Tibbols, ſo that I left all other buſineſs, and was enforced to go thither. I ſtayed there till hee dyed, whiche was on the 27. of Marche, ſtilo vet. Hee received the communion, and made a moſt chriſtian ende; and the ſame day, being Sunday, wee proclaimed kinge Charles, firſt at Tibbols, and afterward in London, with great acclamations of the people. This will alter many proiects; but the fleete, for ought I can diſcover, goeth on. By this you may iudge wee have all our handes full of worke for ſettling things; ſo that I muſt forbeare to write farther, or to ſende to the patriarke, ſaving my good wiſhes, whiche I double to you both, and remaine

Lambith, March 30.
1625.

Your Lordſhips very loving frende,

G. CANT.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

IT is confirmed by diuers wayes from Hungarye, that the treaty of prolongation of the peace betweene the emperor and this ſtate is broken off, and the commiſſioners on eyther part retyred. Wee attend dayly the entrye of the Tranſyluanian ambaſſador, and the returne of the meſſenger ſent from hence, to bee better informed of all circumſtances, and to make judgement of the future reſolutions of Bethlem Gabor. The firſt and great impediment is remooued, and he hath now no excuſe of conforming his will to the proceedings of the grand ſignor; for the concluſion was referred to him, and ſomwhat hath happened to aſſiſt him in the diſſolution. He is now free, and may take armes, and uſe them at his pleaſure; the oportunitye is propitious, if there were ſome beginning, and offer made of eyther part, to draw him into confederacye with the princes of Germanye. How he will vnderſtand the ouertures of the ambaſſadors, beeing not directly made in the names of our maſters, I cannot judge; but I am perſwaded, they may occaſion ſome declaration or motion 1625. on his part, of which, without doubt, my next letters will bring your honor the certeyntye. In the meane tyme, vpon the arriuall of his ambaſſador, there ſhalbe nothing omitted to diſpoſe him the right way; and this I may aſſume to bee one fruict of my ſeruice; for I gaue the treatye the firſt ſtay, and the firſt change.

The old count of Torne, beeing arriued, and taken into the ſeruice of the republique of Venice, it ſeemes, hath ſome intention and hope, by that way, to know agayne his countrye; purpoſing, if he can haue leaſure, to ſpeake, if not to treate, by meſſengers, with Gabor, and to enforme him by all manner of perſwaſions, to reguard his honor, and to make proofe of the ſinceritye of his ancient profeſſions; pretending that that only conſideration, and oportunitye of his reſidence, drew him rather to accept of conditions vnder that ſtate, then in the warrs of the Lower Germanye. And it is not vnlikely, he may prooue a fitt inſtrument to putt the prince of Tranſiluania into new hopes, and Hungarye, Morauia, and Sleſia, into their old troubles. The confidence of the Imperialls, both here and vpon the frontire, doth ſomwhat allay the opinion I would conceiue of this diſſolution of the treatye; for there they make no ſhow of feare of the factions of Gabor, though they dare not leaue it utterly vnguarded, and here the agent makes ſlight of the buſines, as hauing yet a yeare of the old peace to breath in; perhaps uſing the art of ſetting a good face vpon their inward jealouſyes, when they can fynd no ſtronger pillar to leane vpon: Ubi deſunt vires, diſſimulare inimicitiam. And that is alſo the caſe of this empire, who will not beginn the quarrell that they moſt affect, while their affayres in Aſya are vnſettled; ſo that ther is neyther danger, nor ſcandall, to vſe the prince of Tranſiluania alone, who, as I haue often urdged, can doe more good for the caſe of others, then for his owne aduancement.

Signior Simon Contarini, the extraordinarye ambaſſador of Venice, hath had his audience with much grace, and hath bought yt deare, by a very great preſent: they haue obteyned leaue in their neceſſitye to leuy men in Albania, Boſna, and thoſe parts of Dalmatia neare their confines, and vnder the grand ſigniors dominion.

I haue uiſited him, and receiued his agayne before the French; which hath troubled ſo much his high ſpiritt, that is euer contending, and ſeldome preuayling, that he hath not as yet complyed in that kynd. Both the ambaſſador and the baylo haue made many demonſtrations of their great reſpect to his majeſtie, and proceed with much good correſpondence with mee, his vnwoorthy miniſter; which I would not omitt to ſignifye to your honor for mutualitye, and that I thincke it wilbe gratefull to his majeſtie.

Vntill the ſpring open the wayes, wee ſhall know little, nor theſe doe little, in Aſya; but the ſummer wilbe full of action, all parts remayning in diſtemper, by the preparations of the Perſian, and the ſuſpition of Abaſſa baſſa. Hauing enforced my matter to fill my paper, rather then to omitt my dutye of writing, I muſt conclud your honors trouble, and remayne, &c.

Conſtantinople, 30. March,
1625. old ſtile.

To Sir Isaac Wake.

My very good Lord,

I Acknowledge to haue receiued the 3 diſpatches mentioned in your lordſhips laſt fauor of the 25. Feb. and by them to bee reſtored againe to the fellowſhipp of men, and to acknowledge, cum beſtijs agri ſit habitatio mea, and my exerciſe, cum bobus herbas guſtare, to pick ſallads.

It is confirmed by diuers wayes from Hungary, that the treaty of peace betweene the emperour and the commiſſioners of this ſtate, is diſſolued. The demands were high on both ſides, and the difficulties great, eſpecially concerning Vatz, ſtolne away in the tyme of truce. Some other jarrs were interiected, that bredd choler: for other circumſtances, and the reſolution of Gabor, wee attend howrely the entry of his ambaſſador, that comes (as is reported) with newe matter, and fully enſtructed. But thus the firſt and great impediment is remoued, and hee is ſett at full liberty; and his uſuall excuſe of conforming himſelfe to the wayes and mind of this court, is preuented, when neither they haue made peace, nor ratified that by him ſecretly contracted. The way is againe open, to make vſe of his ambition; but they that wilbee ſerued by him, muſt alſo contribute ſomwhat to him. I haue ſeene an apologicall letter of his for the laſt treaty, wherein hee complaynes, not only of failing of promiſes made to him, but of neglect: and this concluſion; Aliter mecum tractandum eſt; nam ex nihilo nihil ſit. It is a ſmall deſcent, to lend countenance, and to feed an humour with outward formalityes. If hee were but ſo farr flattered, as to bee thought a man ſui juris, and to bee of conſéquence; euen with thoſe cheape bayts hee might bee drawne into action, ſo that hee might alſo bee aſſured and cared for as a confederate, in the end; for hee wants not mony nor meanes for his owne deſſignes, and the nature of the warre that hee can make: where booty is the pay of his horſe, the ſtrength of his army. A diuiſion of the emperors forces is ſubſidy enough; but to think, that a prince will hazard his owne, who hath no other councellor then his intereſt, for good nature, or community of religion, is a paradox in this politicque age. There is another way, of no great priſe, to engage him: By an alliance in marriage with ſome houſe in Germany; for hee affects nothing more then poſterity, and enobling his bloud; and I wonder thoſe princes ſo diſeſteeme him, as not to make him ſome offer. Hee hath thought ſo well of himſelfe, as to dare, vnder the wings of loue, to gaze vpon one of the eagles of Auſtria; and was not ſcratcht, but dallied with, vntill hee became almoſt their prey; and I am perſwaded, the emperour will find a kinſwoman, if none nearer, to bee aſſured thereby to vndoe him, to caſt away. Why ſhould not others find one to make him, and keepe him, a thorne in the ſide of the common enemy? I think it ſticks, who ſhall ſpeake firſt. I confeſſe I vnderſtand not what this ceremony of greatnes is, but as there is neither Eaſt nor Weſt, but in reſpect of ſome ſtation. Hee hath made himſelfe a prince, by what arts, I think fewe originalls will abide the examination; his hopes and practices are greater; and I knowe, in electiue kingdomes, hee hath both fortune, and a ſtrong faction. Your lordſhip will wonder whether I wander. The count of Tour is a very fitt inſtrument to make ſome ouerture; the prince hath declared a good inclynation to the alliance of Brandeburgh; and their territories doe inuite ſome ſtricter obligation. I dare not meddle in this buſineſs; but hauing opportunity of diſcourſe, which is a thing more looſe, and at large, then letters, which remayne, your lordſhip may lett fall ſome paſſages, that may bee apprehended; and I take it vndiſputeable, that the wynning of no prince is of more vſe in the preſent conſtitution of the affaires of Germany, then Gabor. The Imperialls here vſe the art of confidence, when they haue no other pillar to leane vnto, making ſlight of the diſſolution of the treaty, as hauing yet one yeare of the old to breath in; but their hearts tell them, they wiſh it tenne; and that intimats to vs where their fortification is weakeſt.

I SHALL ſoone looſe my ſelfe in this wilderneſs; and therefore I will retyre to mourne for the raſhnes and intempeſtiue braynſick zeale of France, that, while they would ſeeme to fight for religion, ſcandalize and wound it. Theſe, I am ſure, are not the works of our faith, but the corruption of Spaniſh gold; and then it is no more ſhame for our laicks to bee ſubiect to that idoll, then the head of the Roman hereſy; and that is my conſolation.

VNTILL the ſunne open the wayes, wee ſhall know litle, and theſe doe litle of conſequence in Aſia. The ſummer is like to bee full of action, the diſtempers there encreaſing by the preparation of the Perſian, the ſuſpitions of Abaſſa baſſa, and the factions of the emir of Sydon. I wiſh they were doing ſomwhat to miniſter mee matter of relation, that my thoughts might worke vpon ſomwhat not much concerning mee: now I muſt bee either vnciuilly ſilent, or write them, which fewe dare, and wiſe men doe not vtter. I conclude with my beſt wiſhes to your lordſhip, and my ſeruice to your honorable lady, both for my wife and mee, as Conſtantinople, $\frac{1}{11}$.

April, 1625.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

SIGNIOR Simon Contarini hath had his gracefull audience. Wee haue interuiſited before the French, and haue paſſed mutuall courteſies; at this there are ſome ſtomacks ſwollen: hee that gripes at too much, looſeth his ſtrength.

MY letters, that ſhould haue arriued, are of 5. and 20. Febr. and 12. March.

To the LORDS of his Majeſties Councell.

Right Honorable, my very good Lords,

I PRESUME both his majeſtie, and your lordſhips, haue long ſince receiued full information and ſatisfaction in the concluſion of the peace with the cyttyes of Algier and Tunes, by the relation of the conſulls reſident, the letters of the baſſa, and the articles ſigned by the publicque councell, ſent by Jafer aga, an expreſs meſſenger, to his majeſtie, a man deſeruing of us for his readines alway in the ſeruice of our nation. The beſt fruicts wherof, that wee haue yet reaped, are, the liberty of about 800 of his majeſties poore ſubiects, there kept in miſerable captiuitye (oportunely, I hope, to doe their ſoueraigne and countrye ſeruice, beeing all ſeamen, and the ſtrength of the piratts); of which number, in Januarye laſt, the better halfe were already ſett free, and departed, and the reſt attend the oportunitye of good paſſadge, except only ſome few ordayned to bee kept in hoſtage, for the redemption of Turkes, pretended from us; and no way doubting but his majeſtie, in his great and abundant grace towards his ſubiects, hath beene pleaſed to giue like liberty to thoſe Moores lately taken on the coaſt of Ireland and Plimmouth; who will fully, and with ouerplus, counteruayle and fullfill the couenant made on behalfe of the Engliſh; and beeing returned together with Jafer aga, wilbe a great and efficacious meanes, to ſtrengthen and confirme this beginning.

I WILL not trouble your lordſhips with lardger diſcourſes therin; but as my great obligation and duty requireth, render your lordſhips humble thancks, both for the fauorable acceptance of my endeauors, expreſſed in that letter, ſo far aboue my meritt, wherby I am encouraged et ultra vires velitari; and that by your lordſhips authoritye and recommendation, I haue obteyned that ſumme of mony required for the mayntenance of the baſſa in his gouerment, which the Leuant company hath intimated to mee, ſhalbe allowed, when the peace hath beene a full yeare obſerued; and without ſuch performance I purpoſe not to caſt away their mony. At this tyme I muſt uſe only my little creditt, to keepe him from a ſodayne fall; for the French ambaſſador hauing, at the ſame tyme, endeauored the like concluſion, but without ſucceſs, and the Duch receiuing ſome new diſcontent, they haue joyned to procure his diſgrace, and to ſend ſome other creature of their owne. Enuy hath ſome part herein; but unuſquiſq; ſibi proximus. This baſſa hath ſhowed ſo much honeſtye to mee, and loue (if a Turke haue any) to our nation, allowing our conſull both place and voyce in the councell houſe, that I am enferced to oppoſe them in this particular; and doubt not, if he keepe his woord with mee, to keepe him faſt in his ſeate, vntill the trade and other mutuall offices haue reduced the mynds and habitts on both ſydes, to maynteyne a neceſſarye peace. In the managing wherof I cannot forgett to recommend to your lordſhips the induſtrye and diſcretion of Mr. Frizell, there reſident, who hath deſerued at leaſt this teſtemonye.

THE motion your lordſhips hath pleaſed to make for my longer ſtay in this employment, both in the manner, where you may command, and in the matter, where I receiue ſuch comfort from your lordſhips, I acknowledge, with all humble reſpect and gratitude, as ſufficient to confine mee to a volontarye baniſhment in his majeſties and your lordſhips ſeruice. But ſeeing you giue mee leaue to conſider my ſelfe, I haue liued already eleuen yeares among infidells here, and in both Indyes, and cannot boaſt of the harueſt; ſomething els, I preſume, I am good for: if not, the white hayres, which haue ſoddenly ouerrunne mee, warne me, that it is tyme to retyre. I haue ſettled, for the company, their affayres in full order, augmented their priuiledges, and defended them in all; and finally taken ſuch a particular care of their eſtates, that ther is not a man can complayne of loſſe by debts or bargaynes in my tyme; and the way is ſo direct for any other to follow, that I hope they will not deſire to reward mee with a diſcontented life; ſuch, I profeſs to your lordſhips, I leade here, hauing no comfort in an employment where I muſt lye at continuall guard, to preuent diſgraces; and when they fall, the remedyes to them are baſe, and ſuch as are contrarye to an ingenuous nature; and I am perſwaded, euery day will grow worſe. Juſtice is not to bee found where ther is no law, or no obedience to that little like yt. And this empire is now maynteyned by oppreſion and ſhifts, inſomuch as I deſire not to bee preſent at the fall, which hath twice beene threatned in my reſidence. My tyme and couenant is expired in December next, hauing compleated 4 yeares; yet I am not ſo ſtrict to them whom I haue found juſt and free to mee, as to tye them exactly to a few months: but my generall deſire and ſuit to his majeſtie and your lordſhips is, that I may returne with the beſt conuenience may bee fitted for the Leuant companye; leauing it to your lordſhips fauour, and their good diſcretion, (without beeing tyed) to accommodate their affayres to my libertye, that I may come home with the ſame good will that I vndertooke the ſeruice. Herein, and in all things els, refering my ſelfe to your lordſhips pleaſure and protection, I humbly take my leaue.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{15}{25}$.
April. 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

THO. ROE.

To Sir EDWARD CONWEY, with Captain QUALT's Letter incloſed.

Right Honorable,

THE meſſenger ſent to the prince of Tranſyluania, by generall councell of all the ambaſſadors here reſident, is returned, and hath only brought ſeuerall and formall anſwers; the ſubſtance wherof is, That he apprehends with great contentment the reſolution of the kyngs and princes colleagued, for the recouerye of their eſtates poſſeſſed, and reſtitution of the libertye of Germany, from the houſe of Auſtria. Concerning his owne purpoſes, he hath referred us to the relation of his ambaſſador then on the way; to whom he had giuen order to communicate his whole inſtructions, and plenam potentiam to conclude whatſoeuer ſhould bee requiſite. To mee in particular he addeth this clauſe; Hoc unum de nobis teſtati, nos promptiſſima ſinceri affectus noſtri ſtudia erga ſereniſſimum Magnæ Britanniæ regem, quem propter inſignes et verè regias ejus virtutes, ſapientiſſimiq; animi conſilia ſemper ſuſpeximus, eo animo declaraturos, ut nihil nobis unquam antiquius, quam voluntatis noſtræ erga ſerenitatem ejus declarandæ ſingularem affectum fuiſſe, omnes agnoſcant. I examined the meſſenger, of all circumſtances, What was the face of the princes court, and what the rumor of the people? who told mee, That he had about him a ſtrong guard of foote; and that there arriued 800 Coſſacks, which he ſaw, and were enterteyned by him; and though all the princes purpoſes were ſecretts to all, and no ſpeech of any warr, yet ther were troopes ordered to bee in readines in many places. This is enterpreted here as a pregnant euidence, that he is enclined to doe ſomewhat; which cannot bee in ayd of the emperor, without the utter loſs of the good opinion and protection of this ſtate.

I ADUISED your honor, in a former, that the prince had written to the vizier, that he had receiued a gentleman, and letters, from the French kyng, which is ſince vereſyed, and he hath returned a reſolute anſwere, and I ſuppoſe ſatisfactorye, which I doubt not wilbe communicated to his majeſtie. The French and Duch ambaſſadors, hauing particular familiaritye with ſome in the princes court, with whom they contracted and continued an intelligence euer ſince the firſt treaty of the Bohemians, Hungarians, and the prouinces dependant, did write ſeuerall priuat letters to thoſe their frends; which beeing ſo encloſed purpoſely, that the prince muſt take notice of them, he did open, and reade them, and gaue order for anſwers; wherin he hath declared himſelfe more freely, then vnder his owne hand; ſo warye he is in all his wayes: and yet he gaue a ſufficient credence to what was written. The coppy of that ſent to the Duch, I haue encloſed; wherby his majeſtie may collect, that he is ready to take armes in his ſeruice, vpon conditions not wholy vnreaſonable. To bee comprehended in treatyes, if he mooue for a generall cauſe, is ſo juſt, that it cannot bee refuſed, though in the manner it may bee reſtrayned and limited. To allow him ſome mony from the league wilbe no difficultye, and great good husbandrye; for he will not aske a great ſumme; and I know, with the chardge of rayſing, arming, and paying 3000 men in our parts, he is able to rayſe and pay 15000. That he requires the ſuccors of an armye to joyne with him, ther is no doubt it wilbe modefyed; in euerye demand, it is to bee concluded, ther wilbe great abatement; and I am perſwaded, ſmall blowing will kyndle fuell ſo apt to burne. What then his profeſſions are, I referr to the letter, which is, though not directed to mee, ſent as an anſwere of myne. The other, to the French 1625. ambaſſador, I haue read, and is to the ſame generall purpoſe; complayning firſt, that he hath beene long deſerted; but concluding, that he will ſerue their majeſties vpon the conditions propoſed, vnto the hazard of all his fortune.

How farr theſe propoſitions wilbe enterteyned or liked, is to mee aliquid ſupra: the whole doth concurr with all my continued aduices, that it was very poſſible to withdraw that prince from the emperor; but very vnreaſonable to thincke, he would riſe with wind, and without ſome contribution. I did alone lay the foundation of this change, and haue brought it to an offer on his part; if it bee acceptable to his majeſtie, it may proceed. The doore that was almoſt ſhutt, is agayne opened; and though the Imperialls haue ſo laboured, that the commiſſioners of the treatye are vpon new meeting, which haſt occaſioneth ſome doubt, yet the prince doth vndertake ther ſhalbe no concluſion vntill the returne of his ambaſſador. And I will neuer omitt this repetition; That ther is no diuerſion ſo eaſye for his majeſtie, nor terrible to the enemye, as this of Gabor, eſpecially in this coniuncture, when the emperor hath drawne downe all his forces, to oppoſe his majeſtie, (for that is the principall deſſigne) into the frontyre of the Lower Germanye.

This ambaſſador is now arriued, with a trayne of 200 followers: the next day he ſent his ſecretarye to mee, to excuſe the not deliuerye of the princes letters to myne, which he had order to conſigne proprijs manibus; and not daring to looke ouer the water, vntill he had his audience, according to the rule of this court, and knowing that I was deſirous to write ſomwhat to his majeſtie by this ordinarye, he had commanded him in generall to ſay, That he had commiſſion to mooue this ſtate to make no peace with the emperor; wherin he had order to procure our aſſiſtance, and full power from his maſter to conclude with the ambaſſadors; and that, if he ſhould fynd any acceptance of the kyngs, and princes, and republicques colleagued, that the prince would reſolutly engage all his meanes in their ſeruice. But I am ſorrye that here is no authoritye, nor inſtructions, for my part, (not knowing the extent of the truſt repoſed in others) to come to any concluſion with him; but I muſt ſtill enterteyne him with arts and delayes, which I feare he will not depend vpon; yet I will omitt no tryalls, at leaſt to deferr any reſolution of the conſummation of the treatye, vntill he may haue anſwere from the French kyng, which he doth earneſtly expect and couett. Many other ouuertures he ſayth he hath to make vnto vs, with which wee ſhalbe this next weeke, at our meeting, made acquaynted; and I will then both procure a coppy of the letter to the French ambaſſador, and make a full relation of all his negotiation; this beeing the ſubſtance of what is yet done, or I am able to collect. One thing I haue obſerued, that the prince, in theſe laſt letters, hath changed both his aſſumed title and ſeale of elect kyng of Hungarye, and conformed them exactly to the tearmes of the 10th article of his laſt treatye with the emperor, which I ſent your honor. Whence it may bee concluded, that he will, in all other poyncts, conforme his actions thervnto, if this oportunitye bee not taken, to ſeperate him from the Auſtrians, and to embrace and aſſure him, by ſome acceptance to his content.

I saw lately a letter to a Moore-Franche of good qualetye from Spayne, aduiſing him of a freſh ſpeech in that court, of ſending an ambaſſador hither to treate, and offer peace to the grand ſignor, which wee haue all reſolued, totis viribus, to oppoſe.

Your honor wilbe pleaſed to acquaynt his majeſtie, the prince, and his grace, with theſe fragments, and to intercede for mee, if I haue erred; and in confidence of that indulgence from a gratious maſter, and fauour from your honor, I humbly take my leaue.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{16}{26}$.
April, 1625.

A LETTER from Capten QUALT, by Order of the Prince of Tranſylvania, written to the Duch Ambaſſador ; beeing a direct Anſwere to one of myne written to the Prince, dated 20. Feb. 1624. with Order to ſhow it, beeing, it ſeemes, unwilling to make a perſonall Anſwere. 30 Mar. 1625.

1625.

LITERÆ nobiliſſimæ dominationis veſtræ ad dominum Geſſenium exaratæ, ipſo paſchalis die probè hic allatæ fuere. Cùm autem dominus Geſſenius in aulâ ſereniſſimæ celſitudinis ſuæ præſens non eſſet, ſerenitas ſua tenorem illarum haud dubiè publicum ſtatum concernіturum arbitrata, eas perlegit, probauit, gratoſque ſinceritatis et amoris erga ſe rempublicamque locupletes teſtes habuit. In abſentia vero dicti domini Geſſenii mihi reſponſionis negotium iniunxit. Lætor equidem de exoptatâ mihi porrectâ occaſione, ſeruitia mea generoſæ dominationis veſtræ in memoriam reuocandi ; at quòd impoſito negotio vires meæ impares ſunt, et, uti res ipſa poſtulat quidem, et mihi per gratiam ſereniſſimæ celſitudinis ſuæ nota eſt, mandato ſatiſfacere, tum propter dictam inſufficientiam, tum curſoris feſtinationem, nequeam, ægrè fero. Sanè ita eſt, ita ſe res habet, vti dominatio veſtra nobiliſſima ſcribit ; et ea eſt huius temporis hominumque iniquitas, ut non minus occultis inſidijs ſupplantationibuſque quam apertis odijs armiſque inter principes certetur. Et cui in hiſce dominijs regnatrices et malæ artes ignotæ? Itaque haud minimè nobis dubitandum, quòd ubi leonina pellis non ſufficit et tegit, vulpinam aſſumunt, ſereniſſimam celſitudinem ſuam ut ad portam Ottomanicam traducant, fidem eius in dubium vocent, diffidentias et æmulationes ſeminent, ingenioſam maleuolorum malitiam multa excogitare mendacia; uti ſerenitatem ſuam partibus Cæſarijs ſeſe obligaſſe, de prouincijs quaſdam Hungariæ in præiudicium Ottomani imperij cum Cæſare contraxiſſe ; Moldauiæ et Valachiæ prouincias Tranſiluaniæ coniungere velle; nouas quotidiè conditiones vſque ad mutationem religionis imperatori offerre ; et quæ eius generis de imperatoriæ legationis nuperæ cauſâ plura, ſed nugæ. Conſtanter religionem noſtram ſerenitatem ſuam colere, clarè, apertè, et candidè, in actionibus hiſce commune negotium concernentibus procedere, ego teſtimonium nobiliſſimæ dominationi veſtræ perhibere poſſum luculentiſſimum ; orbi et illud declarauit hactenus vniverſo, et declaraturus eſt in poſterum, ut nulla ſiniſtræ ſuſpitionis, aut traductionis notâ, in dicta factaque eius regia cadere vnquam poterit. Ipſiſſima tractatio Budenſis, quo amore erga res imperatorias feratur, documento eſſe poteſt ; quæ certè, abſque ſerenitatis ſuæ conſilio et directione prudentiſſimâ, non fuiſſet in hunc diem dilata, diu nunc Cæſariani voto compotes fuiſſent. In hoc quàm ſedulò etiam nunc laborat, ut vel omnino illa diſſoluatur, vel ſuſpendatur, dominatio veſtra nobiliſſima, ex legatis ſerenitatis ſuæ ad portam miſſis, intelligere poterit : utque et omnes domini legati in hoc incumbant, auidè deſiderat. Porro ſereniſſimam celſitudinem ſuam nunc reges, principes, reſpublicas de conſtanti ſuo erga communem cauſam affectu, deque reſolutione ſuâ certiores feciſſe, ex ijſdem ſerenitatis ſuæ legatis dominatio veſtra intelliget. Et cum inter Scyllam & Charibdem nauiget, varijſque periculis ſtatum ſuum expoſiturus ſit, aliquot conditionibus, ſeſe fortunæ eorum regum et principum comitem promiſit, ut in ſereniſſimâ vnione recipiatur ; ut nulla pax, ſerenitate ſuâ inſciâ, et in quâ ipſe, et ſtatus ipſius, non comprehendatur, ineatur ; vt exercitus iuſtus in Bohemiâ vel Sileſiâ, duce comite à Thurn, cum quo ſerenitas ſua ſe coniungere poſſit, ducatur ; vt à ſereniſſimâ ligâ nominatâ quadam pecuniâ ſerenitati ſuæ, nunc per tot annos belli neruo exuta, ſubleuiatur. De quibus æquiſſimis conditionibus certior facta, et rebus in portâ diſpoſitis, extremum cum illis periculum ſubire parata eſt. Plura in hac materiâ ſcribere feſtinatione curſoris præpedior. Vale.

Fogaras, 31. Mar. 1625.

MATTHIAS QUALT DE WICWELD, Signior de Zoppenbrugh, Sereniſſimæ Celſitudinis Capitaneus, et cetera.

Credence giuen by Gabor in a poſtſcript to the ambaſſador.

NOBILIS Geſſenius nunc præſens non eſt in aulâ noſtrâ : literas tamen ipſi datas aperuimus, et legimus, contenta intelleximus ; ad quas per generoſum capitaneum Qualt dominatio reſponſum habebit.

Fogaras, 30 Mar. 1625.

BENEUOLUS GABRIELL.

To

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

[The former Part of this Letter, being included in ſome of the foregoing, is thereſore omitted.]

——YOUR lordſhip intimateth to mee, that you haue collected from my letters, that the emperor cannot haue ſo great truſt in Gabor, as to diſfurniſh that frontyre wholy; but they haue euer beene conditionall, that he might haue ſome contribution, or bee comprehended in ſome league; or els I was neuer of opinion, that he would agayne hazard his owne reſt. It is true, I haue alway perſwaded, that he might eaſely be drawne to take armes; and that it were moſt neceſſarye to uſe him for a diuerſion, but not for woords. I haue kept all my promiſes, and he hath juſtefyed mee by his offers now made; but he will ſee ſome effects, and till then, he will obſerve all fayre tearmes with the emperor. One inſtance I gather out of theſe laſt letters, in which he hath changed both his aſſumed title and ſeale of elect kyng of Hungarye, and conformed them exactly to the limitations of the tenth article of his laſt treatye. Whence it may bee argued, that he will to the reſt conforme his actions, if this oportunitye bee not uſed to diuide him from the Auſtrians, and to engraft him into ſome other confederacye, upon whom he may depend ſecurely. In concluſion, he is now wonne, or loſt for euer.

BY the next ordinarye I ſhall diſcouer more certeynly, hauing ſearcht into the ſecrett inſtructions of his ambaſſador, and ſtudied his wayes: if all this prooue prevarication, I am reſolued to vnmaske him here, and to putt him to his ſharp purgation: and according to ſucceſs will aduiſe her majeſtie and your lordſhip.

I ACKNOWLEDGE your lordſhips letters of the 17th Jan. and 17th Feb. both together, and your fauor in them; for which I reſt ſterilis, ſed libentiſſimus debitor. And thus I committ your lordſhip to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God.

Conſtantinople $\frac{16}{26}$.
April, 1625.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

AS ſoone as I haue bene able to recollect my ſelf after our changes at home in the perſons of the princes wee ſerue, and ſome ſtopp hapned thereby, (though I hope no alteration) in my priuate condition, which tended to a revocation, I returne to my wonted duty in advertiſeing your lordſhip what paſſeth in theſe parts, which I am heartily ſorry to beginne, with the ſad newes of the deceaſe of the prince of Orange, who dyed the $\frac{13}{23}$. of this preſent, betwixt five and ſix of the clock in the afternoone. How he hath long languiſhed, your lordſhip will haue vnderſtood by my former, and what ſmall hope was left of his recouery: yet, according to the judgment of his ordinary phyſitians, he might, by the continuance of the regimen they haue uſed to him now a good while, haue continued till the midſt of next month; and had that benefit of time both for himſelf and affaires, had not his end bene haſtened by an emperick doctor, (a Portugeſe Jew of Amſterdam) brought to him by his ſiſter the princeſſe of Portugal; who, with two draughts of aurum potabile, mixt with antimony, contrary to the adviſe of the reſt of the doctors, ſhortened his dayes. He had his ſence and vnderſtanding very perfect euen to the laſt, and ſettled all well, both to God and the world; haueing had heretofore Walleus (a divinity-proffeſſor of Leyden) with him; and now towards his end, and euen at his laſt, Bogermanus, preſident of the late ſinode at Dorte; to whom he made confeſſion of his faith, like an intelligent orthodox Chriſtian, with repentance of his ſinns; but deſired not to be troubled with ſubtillity of theologicall points, unfitt for his weakneſs; and (which is remarkable) his laſt words, concerning faith in Chriſt, and ſalvation by his paſſions, were the very ſame, is advertiſed to haue bene his Majeſties of happy memorie: That is my uttermoſt hope. Thus, ſoone after the ſetting of our ſunne, is this ſtarre fallen, both which will ſhine to eternitie in the eye of memorie; the one for a pious, prudent, juſt, and peaceable prince; the other for the like virtues, but ſuted, for the laſt of them, more to the diſpoſition of this ſtate; the ſupport wherof I haue heard him often ſay to reſt vpon two things, as vpon two pillars; the one the maintenance of the proffeſſion of the reformed religion, without admittance of popery; the other, the makeing warre with Spaine; and his authority in theſe prouinces, acquired by his long, provident, and prudent gouerment, hath bene ſuch, that he hath withſtood all propoſitions and ouuertures for introducing a change in eyther; though many (ſince my ſeruice in this ſtate) haue bene made for both, and had vndoubtedly taken place, or at leaſt bred diſtraction in theſe provinces, but for his conſtant care and induſtry, tending to thoſe two ends. Whether any alteration will follow in the courſe of affaires, (by reaſon of a different diſpoſition ſuſpected long in the prince his brother, who now ſucceeds him) time will diſcouer; but the beſt is hoped of his walking in his predeceſſors ſtepps, by his entering into them without ſcruple, of late dayes; as his marrying his wiſe in a church erected by the ſuppreſſors of the Arminians, which heretofore he could neuer come into with patience; and his warmth to goe into the field to drawe his army together, when he had a cold fitt of a feauer on his back, at his laſt parting from hence. Some feare here was of tumult vpon this accident, but no greate danger, for ought I could euer perceaue; only here was ſome diſcontentment in this towne, when a companie of ſoldiars was brought in, (as there was lately, and ſtill remaines in the princes courte) in place of a companie of burghers, drawne out ſome few dayes before, (as out of other townes) to doe duty in the frontiers, which theſe inhabitants tooke as a touch to their fidelity. The army, by this means of drawing the wonted garriſons out of the frontiers, which are ſupplyed with burghers, was neuer ſo greate; with which this new prince of Orange beginns his generallate, in which he ſucceeds his brother; and there neuer was a fairer occaſion to win honour. Within theſe two dayes, the wholle army being drawne together in Langſtrate, and the villages adjoining towards the Buſſe, will beginne to march. 1625.

COUNT Mansfelt lyes ſtill at Sprang, with faire troopes of French horſe, 1600 maiſtres at leaſt, good High Dutch, both horſe and foote; and a handfull of poore Engliſh ſnakes, not exceeding 1500 able to bear armes, or rather to ſtand on their leggs; but they account treble the nomber of ſick. Neuer was there ſuch a preſſe, or rather ſkimming of men, to ſend abroad to the warres, for the ſhame of our nation: a recrue is required: God ſend better choice. But that army is fallen into ſo much diſreputation, that no honeſt man will come willingly to it. By commandement out of England, I am dealeing with the States to get credit for a lone of money to ſupply it till our next parliament; and though it be ſtrikeing fyer out of a flint, I am in a faire way to ſpeed for a round ſumm of 400000 guilders, haueing helped them with 200000 allready. Wee are in the entrance of greate actions, which will miniſter vnto me often ſubject to ſalute your lordſhip.

AT the cloſing hereof, I receaue your lordſhips of the 20th of February, and therwith a large packet to the queen. I haue not leyſure to decyfer your letters, and therfore muſt remit all to the next, which requires anſweare: meane while, I kiſſe your ladies hands, and committ your lordſhip to Gods protection.

Hagh, this $\frac{16}{26}$. of
April, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

MY packet remaines open, till I may aduertiſe your lordſhip (as I am required by the queen) of the receit of your beſars; for which you muſt exſpect thancks from her owne hand by the next.

My Lord,

A New delay of ſealing and ſending giues me libertie to adde a few lines, which ſhall lett your lordſhip know, I haue gott count Mansfelt 400000 guilders, which will giue him wings to flie owt of his durtie quarter at Sprang, where otherwiſe he muſt have ſtuck. Within theſe two dayes the whole two armies will march: meane while our negotiations goe well forward, the States hauing diſpatched Sir William St. Leger (of whoſe cumming hether your lordſhip 1625. will haue heard) with a goode anſweare; hauing conſented to the joyning of 20 men of warre to our fleete, and to the ayding of the king of Denmarks armie with ten pieces of artillerie, and other helps both by ſea and land. We are here vppon the point of a treatie to ſett the two kings, Denmark and Swede, both on foote at once, with ſeveral armies.

In your lordſhips former you complained of the ill dealing of the States conſul at Algier, who hath bin ſufficiently puniſhed there, for a piece of villanie he hath bin ketcht with; but would be worſe handled here, yf we could come by him, as all indeauour is vſed, and another to be ſent in his place. He is a knowne knaue, and his doings diſauowed by this ſtate. Till the next, the very next poſt, adieu once more.

This $\frac{18}{28}$ of
Apr. 1625.

Your Lordſhips ſeruant,

D. C.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

I Knowe that fame will outrunne my letters, and I am not much ſorry for looſing gratiam novitatis, becauſe I knowe, that although fama non ſemper errat, aliquando eligit, yet le boiteux is the currier moſt welcome. The activity of the two armyes in the Valtelina and Liguria, and the conſequences of their bold entrepriſes, doth ſilence all other diſcourſe in theſe parts, and make all men caſt their eyes towards thoſe ſcenes of action; ſo that, although I write from Venice, yet you muſt expect nothing in my letters, but the ecchoes of what is thundered vnto vs hither from thoſe two campes.

Vppon the 23th of March, ſtilo novo, a Spaniſh currier, paſſing by a quarter where the French were lodged, were intercepted and brought to the conneſtable. The currier did cary a letter from Don Geronimo Pimentelli, generall of the caualerie in the ſtate of Milan, unto captaine Mario Albertine. The conneſtable, hauing ſeene and copyed the letter, did diſmiſſe the currier, and giue him a conuoy to purſue his voiage; but withall he did immediately diſpatch a poſt to the marquis d'Vſel, who was lodged in Noui, with order to take 150 light horſe, and to cut of the paſſage of thoſe Spaniſh trouppes, at the place and tyme named in Piemontellies letter. The marquis d'Vſel was not wanting punctually to execute his commiſſion, and vppon Munday the 24th of March, not without danger both of the water, which was very high, and of the canon, which did play upon him from the caſtle of Seraualle, he waded ouer the riuer Seriuia, and did meete with the Napolitans two miles beyond the riuer; whom he did aſſayle with ſuch fury, that he killed 200 vppon the place, and routed the reſt, and tooke ſome priſoners.

Vppon the 25th the conneſtable went in perſon to viewe the caſtle of Gaui, and meeting with many trouppes of the Genoeſi vppon the mountaynes, he did ſkirmiſh with them ſome tyme, and with the loſſe of onely one man, did drive them all into the caſtle. They did braue him with a meſſage, That the emperour Frederic Barbaroſſa could neuer take that place; and he ſent them this merry anſwer, That what Barbaroſſa could not do, Barbagriſa would now do. Vppon the 27th of March the duke of Sauoy did take Roſſiglione, with the loſſe of one man, and two hurte; where he did find good ſtore of ammunition, ſome pieces of canon, and a conſiderable ſumme of monny. Vppon the 29th of March, ſtilo novo, the conneſtable did inueſt and take in St. Chriſtophilo, an imperial feude, belonging vnto the conte Gio. Ambroſio Doria; and vppon the 30th, being Eaſter-day, he ſent 300 muſquetiers to diſlodge the Genoeſi, who were quartered in a ruinous caſtle, two myles diſtant from him, and to take that place to aſſure himſelſe on all ſides. Vppon the 31. of March the two regiments of Blacombe and la Grange were ſent to inueſt Gauio, accompanied with 3 pieces of canon, the reſt of the artillerye being left behind at Capriate, by the riuer Orba, by reaſon of the ill wayes. If they can once get their canon to Gauio, they will make quick worke; for then all deepe wayes are paſſed, and they cannot incounter with any difficulty. In Gauio there is Benedetto Spinola, a fantaſtique, but valiant man; and Georgio Mario Arca, a ſober commander; ſo that it is like to proue an 1625. entrepriſe of ſome difficulty. The duke of Sauoy would willingly paſſe in, and goe directly to Genoa; but the conneſtable will not haue at his back any place that may offend him; and he doth always looke as much behind as before. Hitherto nothing is ſayd of the duke of Sauoy, but onely of his taking of Roſſiglione, which indeed was a maſter-piece; but now wee vnderſtand, that monſieur Cauoret, with his regiment, hath ſeaſed himſelfe of Saſſell, vppon the 30th of March, ſtilo novo, a fort of the Genoeſi, of important conſequence in regard of the paſſage, diſtant 8 myles from Sauona; where he found fiue pieces of cannon, and good ſtore of prouiſions; and that the Loraines of St. Reiran are entred into Maron, another caſtle of the Genoeſi, 3 myles diſtant from Campo, a ſtrong place, and an imperial feude, of which the duke of Sauoy is poſſeſſed, belonging vnto Benedetto Spinola, gouernot of Gauio. San Reiran and Cauoret are of the dukes army; ſo that it doth appeare, that the duke and the conneſtable do ſtriue who ſhall do moſt, and get moſt ground vppon the enemy. This was the ſtate of that army vppon the 5th of Aprill, ſtilo novo, for ſo much as doth concerne the offenſiue part. The Genoeſi ſay, That they haue receaued ſecours from Milan, able to defend them; and perhaps the duke of Feria may haue ſent ſome trouppes that way: but if it be ſo, it will proue a dangerous buſineſſe; for the duke of Sauoy and the conneſtable did very much formalize vppon the letter of Piementelli, interpreting it a rupture begunne by the Spanyards; ſo that if they do meete with Spaniſh trouppes, in fauor of the Genoeſi, they do intend to turne their faces, and looke towards the ſtate of Milan.

NOW to come back to the Valtelina: Vppon the firſt of April, ſtilo novo, the marquis di Coeuure did ſurpriſe the caſtle of Codera with a petarde: his purpoſe was to haue aſſalted it on two ſides; but one petarde did the deede, and the other, which did come late, was not vſed. There was in the caſtle a good company of infanterie of Don Franceſco Teruis, a Sicilian, commanded by his lieutenant, who did behaue himſelfe brauely, and receaue the French with a conſtant countenance and reſolution, hurting the petardier in an arme, and a thigh: yet did he not faint; but hanging on his petarde, and giuing fire therevnto, after he had beene hurt, the gate did flye open, and the antient of monſieur Vobecourt was the firſt that entred. The Spaniſh lieutenant defended himſelfe brauely; but granadoes being throwen in, which did much hurt among them, they were forced to retyre, and all the French entred furiouſly. The ladders with which captaine Marot had order to haue giuen an eſcalade, did not take effect, prouing too ſhort; yet did the ſaid captaine goe on nobly, and plant his ladders, although he could not vſe them. On the ſide of the league, Vilar, lieutenant of Vaudenbourgh, and ſix ſoldiers, are ſaid to be hurt; on the other ſide, 25 were taken priſoners, and all the reſt killed. This entrepriſe being donne at noone day, in ſight of the enemy, who is ſayd to be 3 thouſand ſtrong in thoſe parts, and within muſquet-ſhot of Riua, hath added a great deale of reputation vnto the marquis di Coeuures, and made the world thinke, that the contrary party is not very ſtrong.

I MUST here make bold to make a little gloſſe vppon this text, becauſe in the manner of the taking of this towne there was a miſtery, which doth not ſhew itſelfe at the firſt ſight; and I muſt goe as farre as Rome to fetch my commentary: Monſieur de Bethunes, about a fortnight ſince, did propoſe vnto the pope, That if he could procure the Spanyards to ſurrender Riua without further contention, that being the laſt place vnto which the Griſons can pretend, the French king would content himſelfe with hauing reſtored vnto the Griſons all that had beene taken from them, and withdraw his armes out of Italy. This ouuerture, being caryed by the pope vnto the Spaniſh ambaſſador, and cardenal Borgia, was rejected by them, alledging, That the French King had heretofore promiſed the pope not to enter vppon the Valtelina, and deceaued him; and that this was an artifice to take in Riua, and ſo to make a way into the ſtate of Milan. Vppon this refuſall of theirs, that negotiation was broken of; and orders were giuen by Monſieur de Bethunes vnto the marquis di Coeuures, to purſue his point. The Spanyards did ſoone after repent themſelues of not hauing accepted that offer, and did deſyre the pope to renew it with the French ambaſſador, offering to repay vnto the pope 180 crownes, which he had ſpent in the Valtelina, in caſe he could make his agreement: but now it was too late; for the French ambaſſador excuſed himſelfe by ſaying, That he had returned the negatiue, 1625. and could not treat further without newe commiſſion. The Spaniſh miniſters, finding that they could not long hold what did remayne vnto them in the Valtelina, and deſirous to come of with honor, did take the aduantage of this broken treaty, and giue order to thoſe in Codera to giue vp that place in the name of the pope, after they ſhould, for reputation ſake, haue endured two ſhot of canon. This artifice being diſcouered, the marquis di Coeuures would not let his canon ſhoote, although it was planted ouer the caſtle; but did chuſe to take it by petarde, that the Spanyards might not pretend to haue yeelded it in virtue of the propoſition made in Rome.

THE irons do heate apace in theſe parts, and perhaps faſter, and to better purpoſe, then it was conceaued afarre of that they could have donne; and it hath proued well, that the entrepriſe of Genoa was neglected and contemned abroade, as an impoſſible project; for if it had beene thought feaſable, it is likely that it might haue beene preuented, either by the mediation of ſuch as are neutrall, or by a timely and potent aſſiſtance of Spayne. Now, thoſe who did account thereof as of a dreame at the beginning, do beginne to wake out of their lethargie, and to ſee that it is the moſt important entrepriſe that hath beene vndertaken a long tyme; and the dexterous cariage of that buſineſſe hath procured ſuch reputation vnto the duke of Sauoy, and to the conneſtable, that their wiſdome and valor is vniverſally admired and applauded in all theſe parts. It is certaine, that the Spanyards are in a very great labyrynth, and their weakeneſſe doth now euidently appeare vnto all men. They muſt defend Genoa, or elſe their honor, and all they haue in Italye, will lie buried in the ruines of that city; and when that ſource of their monny ſhall be dryed vpp, and the paſſage cut of for their tranſporting of Spanyards, Napolitans, and Sicilians, their armyes in Germany will not be able to ſubſiſt long: but it is a queſtion, whether they can be able at one tyme to ſuccor Genoa, and to maintaine Riua; for as things do ſtand at this preſent, either of thoſe places will take vp all the ſtrength that they haue; and if they do things by the halfes, as hitherto they haue donne, they will queſtionleſſe looſe all in an inſtant. I will marke ſome few chaces, before I tell how the game is played; becauſe although curriers do run away with all that is donne de facto, yet commonly they do out-runne and paſſe ouer the circumſtances, the knowledge whereof is many times as important as the ſubſtance.

IT was long ere the Genoeſi would come to expreſſe any feare; for they did deſpiſe the duke of Sauoy, thinking that of himſelfe he was not able to do much, and not beleeuing that any man would joyne with him in ſo bolde an entrepriſe: they did glorify themſelfes in their monny, which is the onely God they do adore; and forget what they haue learned in the grammer, Malo virum pecuniâ, quàm pecuniam viro indigentem. From this roote of preſumption hath ſprung that bitter fruite, which they are now inforced to eate, there being nothing more dangerous, then for a man to ouerualew himſelfe, and underualuew his enemy. When they did beginne to feare a little, they did ſend to the duke of Feria, to deſire him to ſend vnto them Tomaſo Caracciolo, a man of good renowne, to command their trouppes, and to be their generall. This requeſt was not granted them at the firſt asking, the duke of Feria wiſely intending, out of their feare, to draw ſome aduantage for the ſeruice of his maſter; ſo that they were faine to importune him often, and to ſend two hundred thouſand crownes to Milan, before they could receaue any comfortable anſwer. After this monny was payed, their danger viſibly increaſing, ſomething muſt be donne by the Spanyards in their fauor; but the manner could not eaſily be agreed vppon: for the duke of Feria would haue ſent three terzi, which indeede would haue beene a potent ſecourſe, and might well haue kept the enemy from paſſing the hills: but the Genoeſi did not like to take ſo many, for feare leaſt they ſhould make themſelfes maſters of the citty; ſo that, to pleaſe them, there was ſent onely a terzo of Napolitans, and ſome fewe caualerie; and theſe were broken and decimated by the conneſtable neare Sarauallé, vppon the 24th of March, ſtilo novo, as hath beene formerly aduertiſed. Here was another fault; for this ſecours was too weake, and being routed by the way, did proue of no vſe. When the duke of Sauoy had paſſed the hills, taken Saſſel, Maron, and all the paſſages towards the ſea, then was the alarme taken in good earneſt, both in Genoa and Milan; and all punctillious ceremonies being layed aſide, Caracciolo was ſent away to be generall of the army, and gouernor of Genoa; and the terzi of Parma, Modena, and of Ludouico Guaſco, were ſent thither in all haſt: but this was a little too late; for if they had arriued before the duke had paſſed the hills, they might eaſily haue ſtopped his paſſage, and put him to much troubles; but he hauing got ouer, thoſe trouppes did come too ſoone for themſelſes, as now I ſhall relate:

CARACCIUOLO being arriued at Genoa, and hauing taken poſſeſſion of the gouernement of the towne, and of the command of the whole armye, did, like a wiſe captaine, reſolue to keepe the enemy from the citty regnante, as farre as poſſibly he could do; and, to this purpoſe, taking with him the three terzi ſent from Milan, of Parma, Modena, and Guaſco, and a regiment of the Genoeſi, commanded by Fra. Camillo Cataneo, maeſtro di campo, he tranſported himſelſe to Ottagio, a village fiue myles diſtant from Genoa, famous for the frequencye of paſſage, but of no ſtrength, except what it hath by the ſituation, being incloſed with two hills. There did he purpoſe to fortify himſelfe, and to diſpute that paſſage with all his ſtrength: but the duke of Sauoy who is non pareille in vigilancye, was too quicke for him; for Caracciuolo arriuing onely vppon the 8th of April, ſtilo novo, at night, with all his army, the duke was with him vppon the 9th by breake of day, and did giue the Spanyards and Genoeſi ſuch a brekefaſt as they little expected. The battaile did beginne an hower after ſun-riſing, and laſt vntill almoſt ſun-ſet; at which tyme the Genoeſi and Spanyards hauing loſt 500 men killed vppon the place, and being like ſheepe in a pen, caſt into ſuch ſtraights, that they could not helpe themſelſes, an vniverſall route inſued; and there were taken priſoners, of common ſouldiers, one thouſand, the generall Caracciuolo, all the maeſtri di campo, and moſt of the captaines, as may appeare by a paper here incloſed, which I receaued from the prince of Piedmont.

THE conneſtable hath ſet vp his reſt vppon Gauio, and will not be perſwaded to paſſe further, vntill he ſhall take in that place, which is indeede the keye of the citty and ſtate: he doth beate it with twelfe pieces of battery; and as the defeate of the enemy at Ottagio may much inuigorate his army, and diſcourage the defendants, ſo the prince of Piedmont, to ſecure him from all danger, hath commanded all the infanterie and caualerie, which was lodged vppon the Vercelleſe and Bielleſe, neare the confine of Milan, to paſſe towards Aſti; that in caſe the Spanyards, who do make a groſſe at Tortona, ſhould attempt the ſecours of Gaui, theſe trouppes (which are numerous both of foote and horſe) may make head againſt them; and becauſe he will, in omnem eventum, haue an army on the confine of Milan, towards the Val di Seſia, he hath ſent for 12 thouſand foote, and 600 horſe more, out of Dolfine, Valſain, and Swiſſerland, with intention to lodge them vppon the Bielleſe and Vercelleſe, from which quarter he hath nowe retyred theſe trouppes.

THE marquis di Coeuures doth looſe no tyme nor ground in the Valtelina; and truely, conſidering the oppoſition of the enemy, it may be ſayd, that non regredi eſt progredi. For the duke of Feria, hauing receaued expreſſe order out of Spayne to maintayne Riua, couſte che couſte, hath ſent to Riua, Grauedona, Fort de Fuentes, and places adjoyning, ſuch forces as do make alltogether 8000 men, rather more then leſſe; and now they do ſpeake in good and open language, that the Valtelina muſt be reſtored againe to the pope, in ſuch ſtate as it was when the French did enter, or elſe no peace may be expected. The generoſity of this reſolution doth deſerue much commendation, conſidering how manny irons the Spanyards haue in the fire at this preſent; but it is obſerued by wiſe men, and the euent hath ſhewed it, that this noble and heroical reſolution of Spayne did not arriue in theſe parts in an opportune conjuncture.

FOR, to returne to my gloſſes againe vppon the text, theſe inconueniences haue inſued the execution of that braue order out of Spayne; firſt, That whereas the duke of Feria had intended to ſend a regiment of 2000 Almans to Ottagio with Caracciolo, he changed that purpoſe, and ſent them to Riua, which is an euident cauſe of the ruine of Caracciolo, and of his army. Secondly, Whereas the ſtate of Venice was growen colde, as not willing to appeare in the buſineſſe of Genoa, vppon notice of this magnanimous reſolution of the Spanyards to recouer the Valtelina, they haue ſent the marquis di Coeuures a newe ſecours of other 1625. 2000 foot and 200 horſe, from Breſcia and Bergamo; which was a point that the French ambaſſador hath preſſed here this month, with importunate inſtances; but could neuer receaue ſatisfaction, vntill this ſtate did ſee the duke of Feria bend towards the Valtelina. Now will the marquis di Coeuures be more ſtrong then they; for, hauing this ſupplye of 2000 from hence, and 2000 French more, of the regiment of Normandye, being already, vppon the 12. of April, arriued at Coir, he will holde them at a baye, and keepe all thoſe Spaniſh forces from ſeruing more profitably in ſome other place. Either Riua or Genoa will run danger of falling; for the Spanyards cannot maintayne both, and this diuiding of their forces doth exceedingly diſconciate their affairs.

THE duke of Sauoy hath loſt his admiral gallye, which, by the ill conduct of his generall, did fall into the hands of the Genoeſi; and the prince of Piedmont hath, by proclamation, confiſcated all the goods of Genoeſi within the dominions of the duke of Sauoy.

PART of this diſpatch is but a duplicate of ſome papers ſent to your lordſhip in my former of the 8th of this preſent; whereunto I haue now added this ſuppliment, that you may know all wee do here. I ſend you likewiſe a cifer, whereof uſe may be made, when occaſion ſhall preſent it ſelfe. The newes of the Lowe Countryes your lordſhip will ſee in Sir D. Carletons letter, and I will trouble you no further at this preſent; but crauing leaue to kiſſe the faire hands of your noble lady, will euer reſt

Venice, 19th Aprill,
1625.

Your Lordſhips faithfull ſeruant to diſpoſe of,

I. WAKE.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

BY conference with Mr. Petty, ſent hither by my lord of Arundell, I haue ſomewhat bettered my ſckill, in ſuch figures as your grace hath commanded mee to ſeeke; at leaſt, he hath made mee more aſſured, to venture vpon ſome things, which I ſhould of my ſelfe haue little eſteemed, for the defacings, eyther by age, or accident: if I committ any great error, I muſt excuſe my ſelfe vpon him, on whoſe judgement I relye; yet I will, as neare as I can, reguard the bewtye, which takes the eye, and that the principall parts bee not too much diſgraced.

WEE haue ſearched all this cyttye, and found nothing but vpon one gate, called antiently Porta Aurea, built by Conſtantine, bewtifyed with two mighty pillars, and vpon the ſides and ouer yt, twelue tables of fine marble, cutt into hiſtoryes, ſome of a very great releuo, ſett into the wall, with ſmall pillars, as ſupporters. Moſt of the figures are equall, ſome aboue the life, ſome leſs. They are, in my eye, extreamly decayed; but Mr. Petty doth ſo prayſe them, as that he hath not ſeene much better in the great and coſtly collections of Italye. Your grace, for better enformation, may view his letters to the earle of Arundell, how he hath allowed them. There are of them but ſixe that are woorth the taking downe, the other beeing flatt Gothiſh bodyes, lame, and of later tymes ſett vp only to fill place of the other ſixe. Two, in my opinion, (though Mr. Petty like them) want much of excellence, great, but brute; and, as I coniecture, are ſome ſtorye of Hercules, not mentioned in his labors. The fower, to which I haue moſt affection, are fuller of woorke: the one is (as wee comment) an Endimion careleſly ſleeping by his ſheepe; Luna deſcending from the ſckye with a torch in her hand, repreſenting night; and a Cupid houering in the ayre, to ſignifye her loue. This laſt gentleman is much miſuſed, and wee can only know him; the other two want ſome parts, and the faces battered; but the generall proportions are both braue and ſweete. The next is an hiſtorye I vnderſtand not, eyther of ſome race, or game; in the middeſt is a horſe, a young man naked running by yt, and reaching to pull another off. Some other figures ther are, which I remember not; but it hath beene a peice of great bewtye and art; the releuo ſo high, that they are almoſt ſtatues, and doe but ſeeme to ſticke to the ground: ſome leggs, and other parts, ſtanding holow off, are broken and loſt; yet, in the whole, it hath a ſhow of rare antiquitye. The third is a Pegaſus, with the Nimphs or Muſes; one repreſenting the founteyne Pirenne powring out water. Theſe figures are many, but leſs then halfe the life, as I judge them, not ſo much defaced, ſtanding high, and to a vulgar eye, like myne, of moſt grace and pleaſure. The laſt is a Satyre, ſckipping betweene an Hercules, or a wild man, and a woman, which ſhe ſeemes to auoyd: the one hath a whip in his hand, the other a pott of water held behind her, and may ſignifye a reſcue from rauiſhment: theſe are aboue the life, and rather great and ſtately, then delightfull; but generally they haue all ſuffered much uiolence, both by weather and ſpight: yet they are ſo well eſteemed by this gentleman, that I will endeauor to gett them. Promiſe to obteyne them I cannot, becauſe they ſtand vpon the ancient gate, the moſt conſpicuous of the cyttye, though now mured up, beeing the entrance by the caſtell called the Seauen Towers, and neuer opened ſince the Greeke emperors loſt yt: to offer to ſteale them, no man dares to deface the cheefe ſeate of the grand ſignor: to procure them by fauour, is more impoſſible, ſuch enuy they beare vnto us. There is only then one way left; by corruption of ſome churchman, to diſlike them, as agaynſt their law; and vnder that pretence, to take them downe to bee brought into ſome priuat place; from whence, after the matter is cold and unſuſpected, they may bee conueyed. I haue practiſed this for the foure, and am offered to haue it done for 600 crownes. To ſend them home cheſted, and freight, with ſome other bribes att the water ſyde, may coſt 100 more. This is a great price, and yet I rather deſpayre of obteyning them.

1625.

I HAUE ſent to Angory in Galatia, the ſeate of Midas; and Mr. Petty is going to ſearch ſome other parts of Aſya, with commands; he may diſcouer and chooſe, but can hardly bring any thing away: that I muſt doe by tyme. On the other ſyde, without his directions, I may committ great errors. Therfore, that wee may not preuent one the other, I haue mooued him, and he is well content, yf your grace and the earle marſhall approoue yt, to joyne, and whatſoeuer both can recouer, to putt into one ſtocke; and ſo to diuide them, when they come into England, by lotts, or any other way that ſhall ſeeme beſt to your grace: our meaning is, ſuch things as both ſhalbe intereſſed in, he by diſcouerye, I by procuring: in this poynt I humbly deſire an anſwere. The blacke ſtatue from Alexandria, and ſome other that I hope to prouide alone, your grace will accept from your ſeruant.

I HAUE written this week uery lardgly to Sir Ed. Conwey, all in cyphar: your grace wilbe pleaſed to ſend for the coppy, where I hope you will fynd ſome fruict of my ſeruice to his majeſtie; which beeing by your grace preſented to him, I will not deſpayre of a gratious acceptance.

IN December laſt, I was an humble ſutor to your grace, to fauour my returne: therin I tooke the boldnes to open the true eſtate of this employment, in the behalfe of the merchants; confident that your grace would pardon mee, and take the protection of a companye that caſt themſelues into your armes. They haue importuned mee to ſtay ſome tyme; but it is ſo much agaynſt my inclination, that I yeild unwillinglye, and know no meanes to procure my libertye, with their good will, but to begg of your grace this fauour, to grant them a ſucceſſor, that may build vpon my foundations, and bee agreeable to them. I will not importune this ſuite beyond manners; but I haue written lardgely my deſires, to bee preſented to your grace by my lord Grandeſon, and haue preſumed to propound a man without exception. I am a poore man, that haue fruictleſſly endeauoured: vouchſafe to conſider my life paſt; and I hope to deſerue ſome fauour from you, becauſe no man ſhall euer loue, honor, and ſerue your grace more zealouſlye, nor more faythfully, then, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{1}{11}$.
May, 1625.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON, and Sir ISAAC WAKE: Mutatis mutandis.

My very good Lord,

I LEFT your lordſhip in expectation of the effects of the Tranſyluanian ambaſſadge: The next day after his audience, he uiſited all the reſidents on this ſyde. His diſcourſe and propoſitions, being conferred among our ſelues, were all ſo uniforme, that they ſeemed rather a repeated leſſon, then negotiation, hauing nothing to replye to any thing. The ſubſtance was the ſame generall offers mentioned in 1625. my laſt: That his maſter was willing and readye; but that ſomwhat muſt bee done here, to diſchardge him of his laſt obligation to the emperor, by procuring a command to diſſolue the preſent treaty neare Strigonium renewed; and licence to make new with other princes; and this burthen thruſt upon us: but, if obteyned or not, not one woord can bee drawen from him, what the conditions of his maſter, to bee propounded, are; which hee pretends to haue chardge not to reueale, untill the other two are procured. Being preſed to deale more freely, to encourage us, he alſo requires us to ſhew plenam potentiam to treat and conclud upon them; which his maſter knowes wee cannot haue, and hee profeſſeth that was the hope of his negotiation, and that to that purpoſe he hath ample autoritye on behalfe of the prince: and this ſtops our mouthes. He uſeth greate familiaritye with the emperors agent, who ſeemes as confident as wee, that hee is of that ſyde; and hee excuſeth it to us, that he hath ſuch order to enterteyne him, while he layes his foundation ſure. He hath confeſſed, that his inſtructions, and the princes letter, doe not att all urdge any thing toward theſe two poynts; but that, beeing by us mooued, he hath commiſſion, by way of councell, to aduiſe this ſtate thereunto, as the moſt honorable and ſafe courſe, as the affayres of Chriſtendome are mingled. In the whole of his proceedings, he giueth me much cauſe of jelouſy: firſt, that he walketh more warelye and cunningly then his prediceſſors, who were referred to direction here; but this man ſpeakes the uery actions of his maſter. That which hee hath required of us, (if cordially he intend yt) he is better able to effect then wee; for our councells will bee ſuſpected for intereſt, but his accepted for faythfull aduice; and he hath arts to deceiue theiſe to his owne ends at pleaſure; and it is much too nice to demand leaue to enter under the protection of the grand ſignors frends, when he uſed no ſuch caution to make a peace lately with his enemyes, without the conſulting or aduiſing the port: and theſe I haue made him underſtand that I ſee, to engage him, or, at leaſt, to diſcouer him. But wee muſt take other mens offers theire owne way, and what wee cannot guide, wee muſt hope the beſt therin. This neceſſitye, and the confidence of my fellowes, of the ſinceritye of theſe proceedings, made us all reſolue to performe the offices required, that hee might not caſt his owne declinations upon us; though in uayne wee blow the fire, if hee carry water in the other hand: and wee haue accordingly performed them. The anſwers wee haue receiued, are likewiſe of the ſame tenor; promiſes to grant both, and ſeeming to approoue of the councells, and that they doe intend to giue preſent order to draw a camp together on their frontyre, that the emperor may not thincke they haue treated for want or feare; but, for an abſolute reſolution herein, they haue referred yt to a conſultation within, with the grand ſignor, who alſo, as yet a childe, can giue no opinion but ſuch as they infuſe into him. And in expectation of this anſwer, and order to write theſe letters and commands, wee haue attended twelue dayes. Ther is much to induce mee to beleeue, though they proceed ſlowly, yet that the end will conforme with our deſires; and the proteſtations of the ambaſſador are uehement: but that the treaty is agayne renewed, hath ſome ſuſpition; to allay which, hee undertaketh, that nothing ſhalbe concluded untill his returne: and two dayes ſince he aduiſed, and ſuch rumor is ſpread, that it is agayne broken up, the Imperialls hauing no other commiſſion, but to renew the laſt of Zitwa, which the Turkes tooke as a mocke. If that newes bee true, the goale is ours: but I confeſs, the more I ſtuddy theſe men, and theire wayes, like an aſtrologer, iudging things too far aboue mee, the leſs, I feare, I know of them, and of theire influences. But this I conclude; Seeing the prince hath ſent his conditions to the French kyng, and auoweth that the meſſage ſent him was in the name of the league, I muſt not doubt ther is ſomwhat more then I apprehend; and that his negotiation here is not in expectation of any greate matter or helpe from us, but to gett tyme, and to enterteyne this ſtate by our meanes; while, on the one ſyde, he expects and depends upon an anſwer from France; and on the other, hauing the ſame day of his diſpatch hither, ſent another meſſenger to keepe his creditt with the emperor, to take his beſt aduantage upon both, when hee ſhall ſee the propoſitions and reſolutions of both, and that he may take his choyce, which ſhall bee il migliore partito: though I am conſtant of opinion, if hee fynd any good acceptance and conditions from the league, that hee hath more naturall inclination to them; becauſe, hauing a peace with the houſe of Auſtria, and being encloſed betweene this ſtate and theire dominions, there wilbe no matter left for his ambition to bee uented upon, which cannot bee quenched, but any way comforted agaynſt them. His thoughts will neuer bee diuerted from Hungarye, or at leaſt from the dukedomes of Opolia and Ratibor, in Sileſia; which being fallen to him by the death of the archduke Charls, are newly giuen from him to Erneſtus, ſonne of the emperor. 1625.

IN this court are no alterations nor uarieties. This day ſignor Contarini takes his leaue of the grand ſignor: and thus I conclude your lordſhips trouble, commending you and your noble lady to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$. May, 1625. Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend and ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

AS ſoone as cannon could be brought and planted in battery before Gauio, which was vppon the 15th of April, ſtilo novo, the defendants, ſurpriſed with a panique terror, did at the beginning of the euening abandone the towne, and withdraw themſelfes towards the caſtle; but the gouernor did not onely refuſe them entery, but diſcharge many muſquets againſt them, hoping by that meanes to inforce them to defend the towne. In this perplexety did thoſe poore men liue all the night betwixt the towne and caſtle, and in the morning ſome of them attempted to ſaue themſelfes by flight; but finding all the wayes ſtopped, they thought it beſt to returne to the towne, from whence they did ſend the father guardian of the Carmelitans, with power to capitulate with the duke of Sauoye; and the compoſition hee made was this: That they ſhould not beare armes in fauor of Genoa, againſt the French king, or duke of Sauoye; and that they ſhould immediately depart out of the towne with their armes and baggage, their enſignes folded vp, their drumme at their backe, &c. And ſo vppon the 17. of April they departed, in number almoſt 2000, all well armed, moſt of them Milaneſi, the reſt Corſes and Swiſſes; and ſix companies of French, and four of Sauoyards, did immediately enter, and take poſſeſſion. Succeſſe and euent hath verifyed vnto the French an olde prouerbe of theirs, Gaignee la ville, la cittadelle perdüe: for ſoone after they were maſters of the towne, they found meanes to make themſelfes maſters of the caſtle. Three batteryes were preſently planted by the duke of Sauoye, the prince of Piedmont, and the mareſchal de Crequy; which prouing more terrible then the defendants expected, they ſent out a trumpet to deſyre truce; and that they might haue leaue to ſend one of their owne body vnto their maſters, to repreſent vnto them the danger in which they were. This being granted, they did employ in that meſſage a man of an actiue ſpirit, who did faithfully relate at Genoa the hard condition in which the caſtle was; but withall did promiſe, that if they would giue him 400 choice men, he would vndertake to conduct them thither, and to make good the place ſome tyme longer. This was granted him; but the duke of Sauoye, who doth neuer ſleepe, ſuſpecting ſome ſuch matter, did cut of this ſecours, and kill the commander employed in the meſſage, and in the conduct: whereuppon the batteryes making breach, and the prince of Piedmont hauing gayned the top of a mountayne perpendicular ouer the caſtle, they did yeeld vppon the ſame conditions that the towne had ſurrendred before; and being 1500 in number, they departed ſhamefully, leauing behind them 14 pieces of canon, and great ſtore of ammunition. It is obſerued, that the Genoeſi did preſume too much vppon the ſtrength of that place, which they did conceaue to be impregnable, becauſe of the eleuation of the caſtle, which did euer remayne a virgine vntill nowe: but the conneſtable doth write vnto mee, that he is ſorry he hath to do with ſuch cowardly people, that no honor can be got in conquering of them.

THE terror of theſe victories hath ſo affrighted the Genoeſi, that they deputed ſigniore Stefano Spinola, brother-in-law vnto the French ambaſſador, to offer in the name of their ſtate, that they ſhould make a perpetuall league with France, and renounce the frendſhip of Spayne, and pay the whole expences of the army; which conditions the conneſtable hath ſent to Paris to the French king, and diſcounſelled the accepting of them; alleging that a confederation doth preſuppoſe equality, and that the Genoeſi, being by right ſubiects of France, muſt firſt be ſubjugated, before they can be treated withall.

1625. BETWIXT the duke of Sauoy and the conſtable, a little miſunderſtanding did beginne to ariſe, vppon the dukes giuing the gouernement of the caſtle vnto monſieur di Parella, a gentleman of Piedmont; but it was ſoone accommodated, and the conſtable had liberty to diſpoſe thereof as he would himſelfe, which he hath ſince donne vnto a captaine of his owne guardes. Now it is certaine, that Genoa is aux derniers abois; for all the paſſages are taken, and nothing can hinder the victorious army from marching directly vnto the walles of the towne, wherein there are ſuch diuiſions and diſtractions, that it is to be feared, domus diviſa non ſtabit.

VPPON the 20. of April, ſtilo novo, the priſoners taken at Ottagio were brought into Turin in a very triumphant manner, being incountred and guarded by the militia of the towne, and accompanied with 17 enſignes taken from the enemy; which being caryed by ſo many gentlemen of the duke of Sauoys chamber, were by them preſented, togither with the priſoners, vnto madame; who, lodging the priſoners in the caſtle, ſent the enſignes to the cathedral church.

SINCE my laſt to your lordſhip of the 19th of April, ſtilo novo, I haue been fauored with one from you, dated the 23th of March; for which I do returne you many thancks. The incloſed will, I ſuppoſe, informe your lordſhip of the greate alterations in England; and therfore I will here take leaue to kiſſe the faire hands of your noble lady, and euer reſt

Venice, 3 Maye,
1625, ſtil. nou.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend, and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

I HAUE ſent away your lordſhips laſt unto my lord Conway, baron of Raglaye; who doth yet retayne the place of ſecretary, with Sir Albertus Morton.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I HAUE now attended to the laſt hower of the diſpatch of the poſt, expecting to ſend your honor ſome certeyntye of the reſolutions taken in this court, in the buſines diſcuſſed in my other papers; but the delayes are ſo many and ordinary, that there is nothing done: but my opinion is, that all things will ſucceed to our hopes, though I aſſure my ſelfe, [a] 130 doth only enterteyne tyme here, depending upon an anſwer from [b] 90.

BY the next I ſhall bee reſolued of the proceedings, and ſhall know the conditions to bee propoſed; in the meane tyme, the [c] 210 doth aſſure [d] 214, that the [e] 59 is agayne broken up: but that aduiſe is not ſeconded. The cauſe he attributes to the induſtrye of his maſter, as an euidence of his ſinceritye, which, if the newſe be true, is infalible.

I HAUE then no matter to trouble your honor withall in this, but to excuſe the length of the papers ſent in cyfer; being requeſted by [f] 210, not to write otherwiſe, for the reſpects of [g] 127: to which I haue added my letter written to him, for my diſchardge before 21, rather ſubmitting my ſelfe to his grace, then to conceale the truth of what I haue done, and to bee cenſured for want of iudgment, then honeſtye.

IF there bee no cauſe to iuſtifye me, you may pleaſe to burne yt, and to ſhow only my relations to his majeſtie, and his highnes the duke, to whom I owe a particular account; but haue no other way to conuey yt, then by your honors mediation.

IN this ſtate ther is no motion nor change; only about Smirna ther is a new rebell, and the ſacke of the citty is feared, and the warr againſt Perſia proceeds ſlowly. And thus, retyring to your honors continuall protection, I commit you to the holy keeping of our moſt gratious God.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{5}{15}$.
May, 1625.

Your Honors moſt affectionate humble ſeruant.

AT this inſtant, aduice is ſent mee from [h] 210, that the [i] grand ſignor hath granted all the requeſts of his maſter, and referred both the breach or renewing of the treatye to him: but as yet nothing is paſt vnder writing, and that I ſee the whole is driuen to that poynt, to referr all to [k] Bethlem Gabor, and not abſolutly to diſſolue yt, it confirmes mee in my former opinion, that he ſeeketh tyme here, and dependeth vpon reſolution from the [l] French kyng, and his laſt ambaſſadge to [m] the emperor, to take his choyce of conditions.

[a] Prince of Tranſilvania.
[b] France.
[c] Tranſilvanian ambaſſador.
[d] Ambaſſadors reſident.
[e] Treaty.
[f] Tranſilvanian ambaſſador.
[g] Bethlem Gabor.
[h] Tranſilvanian Amaſſador.
[i] 154.
[k] 127.
[l] 91.
[m] 101.

Conſtantinople, May 5. 1625.

VPON the 18th day of Aprill, beeing the next morning after audience giuen by the grand ſignor to the ambaſſador of Bethlem Gabor, hee came to viſitt mee, and deliuered mee a letter of credence. The preface of his diſcourſe was, That the prince of Tranſiluania, and king of Hungary, (to obſerue his owne methode) had commanded him to declare vnto mee the great affection his maſter had allwayes borne to the ſeruice of his majeſtie: and for the better manifeſtation thereof, that hee had ordered him not only to communicate with mee the effect and ſubſtance of his ambaſſage, but to offer himſelfe, vpon conditions ſafe, and becomming the wiſedome of the prince, (who was now at reſt, and ſecure) to take armes in the common cauſe of the liberty of Germany, and the recouery of the Palatinate, wherein his majeſtie was moſt principally intereſſed; and that, to this only end, he was nowe ymployed in this legation, both to prepare and facilitate his meanes by the countenance of this ſtate, vpon which hee did depend; and to treate with the ambaſſadors reſident vpon ſuch conditions as hee ſhould propoſe, and wherein hee had full authority to conclude and binde his maſter: That it was true, the prince had made a peace with the emperour; to which hee was conſtreyned by beeing left alone, without any apparence of ſuccour from his allyes in Chriſtendome, hauing long expected the duke of Brunſwick, or ſome forces promiſed, to eaſe him: but that the confirmation of this treaty did depend wholy vpon the pleaſure of the grand ſignor, not yet declared; and therefore, ſeeing the great chaunges in other parts, and that hee had receiued ſome intimation from the ſeuerall princes colleagued and vnited, or their miniſters, hee was once againe reſolued to giue teſtimony of his conſtancy and affection to their ſeruice, prouided hee might finde ſuch correſpondence, as ſhould agree with the ſafety of his eſtate.

To this generall diſcourſe I replyed, That his majeſtie could not but accept gratefully the good affection of that prince, expreſſed to his ſeruice, and the common cauſe now vndertaken for the publique peace, which was no way to bee hoped for, but by a iuſt precedent warre; and that I would not faile to make it knowne to his majeſtie in the beſt manner to mee poſſible: That hee ſhould call to mind the beginnings of theſe troubles; howe his majeſtie had not only giuen no countenance to the firſt vndertaking of the prince elector, for the inuading of Bohemia; butt vſed all meanes to procure him to giue ouer that enterprize, and to withdrawe the army of the count Mansfield out of Germany, vpon the many promiſſes both of the emperour, and the king of Spaine, to correſpond in the like courſe in their vſurpation and poſſeſſion of the Palatinate: and hauing with exceeding chriſtian patience forborne 4 yeares, ſpent infinite ſommes of mony in treatyes, and expoſed his only ſonne, his highnes the prince of Wales, to a dangerous voiage, only in hope by the wayes of juſtice, and to auoyd the effuſion of bloud, to obteyne a deſired peace; it could not bee ſtrange, that the prince had receiued no comfort from his majeſtie during theſe mediations: But now his majeſtie finding himſelfe requited with deluſion, as the moſt chriſtian king had done in his treaty for the liberty of the Valtoline, and no other meanes left vntryed, to procure the reſtitution of both; they had together reſolued to vſe the juſtice of their armes, as it was publiquely knowne to all the world: That therefore there was no doubt, if the prince had any purpoſe to offer himſelfe to their majeſties, vpon ſuch conditions as were honorable and conuenient, that hee ſhould receiue from them an anſwere becomming their wiſedome and greatneſs.

THE ambaſſador roundly replyed, That then his maſter had giuen him order to require of mee, if I had full power from his majeſtie to treate vpon conditions, and to conclude them, as hee had, and would ſhowe mee by his commiſſion. I anſwered, That this demand ſeemed ſtraunge, eſpecially hauing by my laſt letters ſo farre expreſſed myſelfe, only as an inſtrument, by way of aduice and counſell, to prepare the buſineſs, referring his highnes to ſeeke a better foundation, either by his letters or ambaſſadors to the founteyne; where hee might receiue more grounded reſolution, then from diſcourſes. Yet, becauſe hee ſhould not think this was a delay or diuerſion, I gave him 3 reaſons, that it neither could bee conuenient, nor expected, to treat and conclude in this place.

FIRST, Hauing receiued intimation, that the prince deſired to bee comprehended in the vnion, hee muſt conſider, that it conſiſted of diuers princes, who had their intereſts and conſents inuolued therein: and that therefore an ambaſſador of England or France alone could not take vpon them, nor bee inſtructed in a buſines of ſo high conſequence for all. Secondly, Hee muſt make a difference in treating with the two moſt potent kings of Chriſtendome, from deputies of Morauia and Sileſia, and ſuch like; and not expect, that their protection ſhould goe a begging, like the bulls of Rome, expoſed to all commers; but hee muſt ſeeke it in a manner becomming his quality. Laſtly, That this was no proper ſceane for ſuch a treaty, where the grand ſignor would expect to bee admitted; and that it would bee enterpreted, in reguard of the place, as ſcandalous; and rumourd by malitious men, as a league made with the Turks, and his dependents, againſt the peace of Chriſtendome: That therefore the prince, if hee eſteemed himſelfe ſui juris, and a prince of the empire, it ſhould bee more honorable for him, to proceed in a faire and direct way, and make his demands knowne vnto them in place fitt to weygh and conſider them, and who had power to graunt them: but that, if hee would propoſe and diſcouer the ſenſe of his maſter, I had ſufficient authority to heare and to aduiſe him; and, if I found his demaunds vaſt, and without hope of acceptance, to counſell him to reforme and proportion them to a poſſibility; and therefore deſired him to enlarge himſelfe, and to communicate with mee his inſtructions, according to the letters and credence of the prince; and that I would receiue them, and ſend them to his majeſtie, and procure a reſolution vpon them, though I doubted not there was a nearer way.

HEE anſwered mee, That wee were not yett come ſo farre; there was ſomwhat firſt to bee prepared, before it was neceſſary to open himſelfe: That I muſt know, his maſter had newly made a peace with the emperour (though conditionall); and that hee could neither with ſafety, nor honor, beginne a newe treaty, vntill hee were free of the obligation of the old: That therefore the prince had ordered him two things; to procure, by the help of the ambaſſadors reſident, a command from the grand ſignor to diſſolue, or at leaſt to ſuſpend, the preſent treaty of Buda, that hee might not bee included on the one part therein, nor excluded, on the other, from neceſſary ayds from the port; and a letter to the prince, to giue him leaue to enter into league with other princes of Chriſtendome, that would receiue him: for, without theſe twoe, hee ſhould both offend the emperour, and this ſtate, by diſcouery of himſelfe, and doe no ſeruice to thoſe for whom hee laboured; but theſe beeing graunted, hee would declare his commiſſion, and followe aduiſe, either to proceed here, or to perſwade his maſter to ſend expreſly to his majeſtie.

I REPLYED, That to putt theſe two offices vpon vs, ſeemed alſo to mee ſuſpitious; and though I would not call in queſtion the ſyncerity, yett hee ſhould giue mee leaue to propoſe my doubts: Firſt, It was prepoſterous for vs to performe that ſeruice for him, before wee knewe the conſequence, what ſhould ſucceed, and what conditions ſhould bee propoſed. Secondly, Seeing it was reported that the treaty of Buda was agayne renewing, while wee here ſhould ſhewe ourſelues in vayne againſt the concluſion, the peace might bee reſolued vpon; or if hee did not, himſelfe, really and cordially labour the diſſolution, it might bee denyed vs, and the prince artificially ſhelter himſelfe, and refuge to a generall defence, that wee haue failed on our parts, while the fault reſted in his owne integrity. To the other point: That it ſeemed vnneceſſary to mee, to procure for him the liberty of taking protection of the grand ſignors frends; when hee knewe hee might doe it more ſecretly, and more ſafely, then to treate and make peace with the emperour, without the leaue, or once conſulting the miniſters of the port, as hee had lately done: That therefore, though I were ready to doe all my endeauour, yet I deſired to bee cleared in theſe points, before I declared myſelfe to no purpoſe.

TO theſe hee anſwered, Firſt, That hee had order not to make any ouerture or declaration, vntill theſe were obteyned; becauſe, if the prince had once tranſgreſſed by neceſſity, it was no conſequence to erre the ſame way nowe, when hee was not enforced. Secondly, That the eyes of the emperors agent were ſharp vpon him: That hee ſayled betweene two rocks, and muſt bee ſure of an harbour: That hee could not ſafely giue the emperour cauſe of opprobation; and that therefore it was neceſſary, that the order of this breach ſhould come from hence: But if wee could with him procure theſe commands and letters, that hee was free; and that then hee had plenam potentiam both to diſcouer his maſters purpoſes, and to conclude, if there were occaſion: That the treaty of peace was renewing, hee did not deny; but that his maſter had taken ſuch order, that wee ſhould not doubt of any concluſion, before ſome anſwere were returned from his negotiation; hauing ſuch direction from the port, that the commiſſioners ſhould not proceed without the conſent of the princes aſſiſtants. 1625.

FOR the ſyncerity of his maſter, hee made proteſtation, That hee had inſtructions by way of counſell, fortified with many reaſons, to diſwade the conſummation of the treaty; and that hee would by all meanes endeauour it; and doubted not, vnder our countenance, to obteyne it; which beeing effected, that the prince really and reſolutly was determined, vpon iuſt and equall conditions, to bee propoſed either here, or in a fitter place, to reſume armes, and to followe the directions of their majeſties colleagued, vnto the hazard of all his fortune: That hee could not herein diſſemble, hauing receiued by a gentleman expreſly ſent from the French king, and in the name of the league, letters and ouertures, which hee had effectually anſwered, and from which hee could not in honor depart, and to which his preſent inſtructions were vniforme. And therefore hee deſired mee inſtantly to ioyne with the other ambaſſadors and him, for the obteyning of theſe demands, as the foundation of all.

HAUING retorned many obiections, I was content to receiue this for current payment; and replyed, That I vnderſtood well of the meſſage of the French king, which I doubted not was ſent with the conſent of all others intereſſed; and therefore it appeared to mee leſſe neceſſary to meddle in matters begunne betweene princes ymmediatly. Yett, that the failing ſhould in no ſort reſt vpon mee, I promiſed him to vſe my beſt creditt and endeauour with all the miniſters of this empire, to procure this command for the ceſſation of the treaty, as moſt neceſſary for the facilitation of the generall ends of the publique peace, and reſtitution of the dominions vniuſtly poſſeſſed by the houſe of Auſtria; as alſo for the encreaſe, at leaſt ſafety, of the eſtates of the prince, vnder theſe two limitations; not to moue the grand ſignor to a warre, and actuall breach with the emperour, which would bee both ſcandalous, and beyond my commiſſion; but only to make a way to the prince to vſe his owne armes. Secondly, To moue a generall liberty to enter into the protection of the kings vnited, I thought it might giue as much ſuſpition to this ſtate, not knowing howe farr it might extend, as any confederacy with the emperour. Neither did I knowe what the concluſion might bee, and how farr his propoſitions might bee approued; and that therefore it would ſeeme a kind of engagement ſought on our parts. But I would reſtreyne that demand to a liberty to maynteyne the old leagues made formerly with the kinge of Bohemia, and his frends; which beeing allready once allowed, would bee free from ſuſpition, and could not bee refuſed; which would proue as effectuall to all his maſters purpoſes, becauſe it was the ſame quarrell, for the ſame prince; only the cauſe a little altered, and more iuſt, for the recouery of his antient patrimony.

BEEING thus farre agreed, I concluded with him, That both I and hee muſt then thinke the buſineſs effected, and that herein could bee no further diſguiſing; for as I would vſe my induſtry, ſo I would expect his endeauour, which would bee much more preualent.

WHAT ſhould proceed from mee, and the other ambaſſadors, might bee vnderſtood to reflect from our owne intereſts: but if the prince by letters, and by his miniſtery, did really counſell and perſwade, I was aſſured hee ſhould obteyne his deſires; becauſe what proceeded from them, would bee enterpreted as ſound aduiſe for the ſeruice of the grand ſignor. That I knew the credit hee had; and that, in ſubſtance, all was allready granted, beeing, in the laſt command procured and ſent by vs, the concluſion of the peace was wholy referred to the prince: therefore there was nowe no cauſe of change, and I could no way doubt of an eaſy ſucceſſe; and muſt impute the contrary to ſome failing, which I would not willingly ſuſpect. This I added, to engage the ambaſſador deeply, that hee might not hope to deceiue mee, and caſt his owne declynations vpon want of leaue from the grand ſignor.

THUS concluding our diſcourſe, and promiſe on both ſides to vſe our beſt endeauors to procure a ſuſpenſion only of the treaty, and a letter to the prince to authorize him to maynteyne his autient leagues with the frends of the grand ſignor, which was as much as was requiſite to the ends deſſigned; and fully ſatisfyed the ambaſſador; hee promiſed the next weeke to retorne, and to make thoſe further propoſi-1625. tions, that hee had in commiſſion from his maſter to moue vnto vs; deſiring vs, that wee would haſten the diſpatch of the command, becauſe the imperialls did labour by all meanes to precipitate the buſineſs, and to procure the concluſion.

THE next day the French and Dutch ambaſſadors mett at my houſe, to compare together the diſcourſes and proceeding of the Tranſiluanian, who had viſited both them and the Venetian; which beeing ſeuerally deliuered, I obſerued no materiall difference, but in one point: When hee preſſed mee to vndertake the procurement of the command for diſſoluing of the treaty; and that I asked, If it could not bee obteyned, what then wee might expect of the prince? hee anſwered, That beeing dependant vpon the grand ſignor, and hauing newly contracted peace with the emperour, hee ſhould neither haue couler nor meanes, without the port, (vpon whom hee deſired to caſt the breach) to take armes; and that it was likely hee ſhould bee included in ſome article of the treaty, and his hands thereby bound. But to the other ambaſſadors hee profeſſed, That though ſuch command could not bee gotten, yett, if the letter of leaue to enter into league might bee obteyned, and that the prince might receiue comfort in the conditions, hee would eaſily find an occaſion of quarrell, without offence or ayd of the port. But ſince that tyme, hauing vnderſtood that I tooke notice thereof, as a contradiction, hee ſent his ſecretary to excuſe it as an omiſſion; juſtifyeing the offer, that his maſter commanded him to aſſure vs, that if only leaue procured, and his eſtates aſſured, that hee would ioyne himſelfe with the princes of the vnion, though this alſo will depend vpon his owne will; for if hee hinder the one, which is doubtfull, hee can as eaſily hinder the other. Vpon theſe diſcourſes, wee aduiſed together what to propound to the viziers, that our demands might bee vniforme. I muſt confeſſe, that I was very ſuſpitious of all the proceeding, and ſo declared my ſelfe to the ambaſſadors, finding the Tranſiluanian ouercautelous, and earneſt to engage vs in a matter that hee knewe only his owne maſter had power to gouerne; and that whatſoeuer wee ſhould doe, if any vnderhand practice of the prince, would proue vayne and vneffectuall. But, ouercome with their confidence of ſyncerity, and the opinion of ſome treaty begunne with the French king, with whom it was not like the prince would trifle, I was content to hope the beſt; and to reſolue with them to goe to the mufty and viziers, to propound the demands, according to the limittations agreed vpon.

HAUING effectually within two dayes performed that office, and fully enformed the miniſters of this ſtate of the aduantages to both, in graunting the deſire of the prince; I receiued anſwere, That they had not yet gotten the letters of Bethlem Gabor tranſlated, but only vnderſtood in the generall, from his ambaſſador, the propoſitions; but that their opinions did concurre with the councell, and that they would acquaint the grand ſignor, and procure a warrant to giue ſatisfaction in both. And to that end, for the better ſecurity of their frontire, and the princes, that they had allready reſolued to giue order to the baſſas of Boſna and Agria, to riſe with their garriſons, and vnite with the baſſa of Buda, to make a campe; and to the prince of Tranſiluania, to drawe his forces into the confines of Hungary, to amuſe the emperour, and to lett him ſee, that they had not begunne the treaty for any feare. That vpon the aduiſe of the ſeperation of the commiſſioners, they had written to the baſſa of Buda, that ſeeing the Imperialls had broken off the treaty vpon no occaſion, or vpon vniuſt ſuſpitions, that the miniſters of the grand ſignor ſhould retyre, and vpon no conditions retorne to the place of conuention: butt if the deputies of the emperor ſhould againe vrdge the meeting, that they ſhould anſwere, they had yet two yeares of peace, and had no occaſion of difference. If therefore the others had any thing to demand, they ſhould come to Buda: and if in caſe they ſhould alſo yield to that, they ſhould then heare them, and their propoſitions, and forme them into articles; but ſhould conclude nothing, vntill approbation ſhould retorne from the port. So that for the preſent there was no feare; and that now they would procure the deſired commands for the full ſuſpention of the treaty.

THE ambaſſadors, hauing communicated by their ſecretaryes the ſumme of the ſeuerall anſwers, found them all in ſubſtance vniforme; ſome addition only of more force to the Venetian, as hauing made the lateſt viſitt, and after the letters of Gabor enterpreted and conſidered: wherein wee receiued ſome ſatisfaction, that the prince had concurred really in the counſell, which hee preſſed vs to giue in his behalfe. So that there may bee expected ſome ſucceſs of this negotiation.

BUT till this day, the 27th, neither the Tranſiluanian ambaſſador, nor wee, can procure any direct anſwere, what reſolution the grand ſignor, and his counſell together, will take: neither is any thing done, beeing referred yet to conſultation. In the meane tyme, the emperors agent vſeth his purſe liberally, to counterpoiſe our reaſons, which is a very ſubſtantiall argument. 1625.

THE 26th arriued a poſt from Buda, bringing certeyne aduiſe, that the commiſſioners on both parts were againe aſſembled at another village: the principal whereof, on the behalfe of the port, newly choſen, is a Jewe turned Turke, late ambaſſador to the emperor, a corrupt fellowe, purpoſely procured by the Imperialls to finiſh the treaty: reporting, that the miniſters of Gabor were left at Buda; who hauing withheld that baſſa from reſoluing to proceed, and beeing able to doe no more, refuſed to ioyne with them.

THIS newes beeing contrary to the word of the vizier, of a prohibition ſent not to meete againe, hath no other anſwere, but that the letters were not arriued; and the Tranſiluanian ambaſſador ſent inſtantly to all the reſidents, to preſſe the diſpatch; but withall, warranting no concluſion vntill newe order from the port.

DURING this treaty with the viziers, the ambaſſadors haue ſought to vnderſtand the ſecond part of his commiſſion, what termes and conditions the prince doth propoſe to himſelfe; and to this end haue made ſome motions: whereupon the Tranſiluanian deſired a publique meeting. But that beeing refuſed, for many reaſons, as ſcandalous; and that buſineſs of this nature ought to bee carried, euen in outward things, with dexterity; wee haue found, that therein hee ſought delay; and at laſt haue drawne a playne negatiue, that hee hath expreſs command to make no ouerture vntill reſolution giuen on the firſt demands.

BEEING preſt vpon this declaration, that in caſe of refuſall, yet the prince was reſolued vpon equall conditions to ſerue the vnion, hee hath anſwered, It is true: butt before hee can open them, hee muſt firſt bee cleared in the former points, becauſe his inſtructions vary according to the anſwere; which as ſoone as hee ſhall receiue, hee will enlarge himſelfe. In concluſion, hee is very Hungarianly dry; and the more I ſeeke to diſcouer him, the further off I am from any well grounded reſolution.

THEREFORE, for myne owne part, I haue anſwered, That I deſire to know no more, then his maſter hath commanded him to vtter: That wee did not ſeeke him precario; it hath bene the benefit of the prince that hath bene ſought in this buſineſs: yett whenſoeuer hee ſhall deſire to haue conference with mee, I will readily heare him, and doe all thoſe good offices ſhall be requiſite. And thus wee reſt in expectation.

NOTWITHSTANDING all theſe promiſes, there is much to bee ſuſpected and diſputed on both parts. All that I can collect is, that the prince doth protract and gett tyme to take ſuo megliore partito; and that hee doth not expect any great matter or help from vs, but by our meanes to enterteyne the port; while, on the one ſide, hee depends vpon anſwere from France, whether hee hath ſent his propoſitions; and on the other, the ſame day of the diſpatch to this court, hee ymployed another meſſenger to negotiate his affaires, and to keepe his creditt with the emperour; either to mend and aſſure his conditions there, or to take thoſe of moſt aduantage, when hee ſhall ſee the offers of both; not doubting, but if hee find acceptance of the princes of the vnion, hee hath that way more naturall inclynation. For, hauing peace with the houſe of Auſtria, and beeing encloſed betweene this ſtate, and their dominions, there is no matter left for his ambition to worke vpon, which cannot bee quenched; but any way fomented or countenanced from the league, hee will neuer digeſt his loſt title of Hungary, and the dukedoms of Opolia and Ratibor in Sileſia; which, beeing fallen to him by agreement vpon the death of the archduke Charles, are newly conferred vpon Erneſtus the ſonne of the emperour.

1625.

To BETHLEM GABOR, Prince of Tranſylvania.

Sereniſſimo Prencipe,

YOUR highnes firſt letters, by the retorne of our meſſenger, referred mee to the relations of your ambaſſador then on the way, who gaue mee another of credence; both which I haue peruſed with due reſpect. Whatſoeuer hath bene requiſite for your highnes ſeruice, hee hath communicated with mee, eſpecially concerning the ſuſpention of the treaty on the frontire, and obteyning letters of authority, that your highnes may freely maynteyne your antient leagues, or contract others with the frends of this port: wherein, though I cannot attribute much to my owne creditt, yett I haue performed whatſoeuer hath bene to mee poſſible; and the good ſucceſſe of all our endeauors I referre to the writings themſelues, and to the more large relation of your highnes owne miniſter; who in all things hath declared himſelfe induſtrious, expedite, and worthy of the truſt impoſed vppon him; whoſe ſodayne departure hath preuented mee many wayes of ſhowing that reſpect I beare to your highnes, and all your miniſters, and of viſiting him at his diſpatch. When theſe ſeruices were performed, and your highnes deſires obteyned, I expected ſome larger intimation of your highnes reſolutions: but your ambaſſador requiring firſt of mee, if I had full commiſſion to treate and conclude vppon conditions, this propoſition made vs both more ſilent; and to mee it ſeemed ſtrange, hauing explayned myſelfe allway, only as an inſtrument to do good offices, and to prepare the way, of which I had laid former grounds: and your highnes in your wiſedome knowes, that this is no fitt ſcene for ſuch a treaty, in reſpect of ſcandall; and that in the vnion of Germany the intereſts and conſents of many princes are involved; ſo that it could not bee expected, that any one ambaſſador here bee fully enſtructed and authorized. But, it ſeemes, God hath diſpoſed this affaire in a more right way: hauing vnderſtood, that your highnes hath receiued ſome intimation from the French king, to which you haue giuen ſpeedy anſwere; and not doubting, but the whole is both communicated and proceeded in with the approbation of his ſacred majeſtie, my maſter; I am moſt content, that the buſineſs is directed to the founteyne, where both their majeſties, and your highnes, may haue more foundation and aſſurance in all your reſolutions. Only, as one that would haue nothing omitted, that might any way conduce to the perfection of this negotiation, your highnes will give mee leaue, by way of counſell, to wiſh, that your highnes alſo, directly from your ſelfe, made his majeſtie acquainted with your affection to the generall welfare of Germany, and reſolution vpon iuſt conditions to partake in the care thereof; which I make no queſtion wilbee very well accepted, and that your highnes ſhall receiue an anſwere conformable to his majeſties greatneſs and wiſedome, and your owne better aſſurance.

IN the meane tyme there is no other office left for mee to performe, but to prepare his majeſtie by a true and feruent relation of your highnes ſincerity, expreſſed fully in this your laſt ambaſſage to the grand ſignior; and howe therein you haue obteyned whatſoeuer is requiſite from hence, to enable your highnes to putt in execution what ſhalbee concluded in other parts. In which, and in all other circumſtances thereon depending, I will not faile in my duty to his majeſtie; to which I will add all my creditt and induſtry in this port, to attend all occaſions, that may aſſure your highnes of my earneſt deſire to doe you ſeruice.

THE generalityes of your highnes propoſitions hauing alſo vnderſtood, I will advertiſe, with ſuch judgment vpon them as is neceſſary; deſiring your highnes to conſider, that the benefitt will equally redound, or rather more, to your highnes, then to any other, by newe requeſts; and to others, there is nothing hoped nor aymed at, but the recouery of their antient poſſeſſions. That therefore your highnes proportion your demands to equality and poſſibility; becauſe it is a rule, that hee which requires conditions aboue reaſon, doth mannerly and artificially declare beforehand, that hee is not deſirous to obteyne them. But I referre the moderation of them to your wiſedome and good affection formerly expreſſed to the liberty of Germany, and our religion there oppreſſed; for which there are many crownes prepared in heauen. And ſo I committ your highnes to the protection of the moſt omnipotent God.

Halahis's, $\frac{14}{24}$.
May, 1625.

From the Queen of BOHEMIA.

My Lord,

I HAUE had of late two ſuch great loſſes, as hath made me vnfitt to write to you, or anie elſe; for the kings death, and the prince of Oranges, did follow ſo neere one another, as it gaue me double ſorrow for the loſſe of ſuch a father, and ſuch a frend, whome I loued as a father. All this hath much afflicted me; and ſhoulde haue bene ſadder, but the comforte of my deare brothers loue doth reuiue me. He hath ſent to me Sir Henry Vane, his coferer, to aſſure me, that he will be both father and brother to the king of Bohemia and me. Now you may be ſure, all will goe well in Englande; for your new maſter will leaue nothing vndone for our good. The great fleet is almoſt readie to goe out. If Bethelem Gabor be an honeſt man, I hope he ſhall haue ſhortlie no excuſe not to be ſeconded by diuerſion. My vncle, the king of Dennemarck, doth beginne to declare himſelf for vs, and ſo doth Sweden. I heere a diſcourſe of what you haue ſo often wiſhed, of a marriage for Gabor. The electour of Brandebourg hath a ſiſter, and he is our brother-in-law: I hope you vnderſtand me, that it is ſhe I meane; but I pray keepe this to your ſelf, till you heere it from others. I feare the toune of Breda will be loſt, which comes in an euill time, though it importes not the ſtate in anie thing but honnour, which is the cheefe at this time. Prince Henry, now prince of Orenge, is in no fault for the loſs of the toune: the States ſhoulde haue giuen better order of vitualles for it, when they might haue done it; for they had time enough. Charles Morgan is within it, whome, you may be ſure, will ſweare ſoundly, to be forced to goe out, as I ame afrayed he will. I ame ſure you heere alreadie of this prince of Orenges mariage with one of my woemen; ſhe is a counteſſe of Solmes, daughter to count Solmes, that ſerued the king of Bohemia at Heidleberg. I dout not but you remember him by his red face, and her mother by her fatneſs: ſhe you neuer ſaw, but two of her ſiſters; ſhe is verie handſome and good. I haue receaued the beaſer ſtones from your wife: I will not thank you for them, but her, which I doe in this incloſed: but I muſt thank you for thoſe Sir Thomas Smith hath ſent by Sir Henry Vane: they are the faireſt that euer I ſaw, and I giue you manie thankes for them. I haue heard that you are to be recalled: lett me know if it be ſoe: if it be true, I hope it ſhall be for a good preferrment, which, I aſſure you, none wiſhes you more than I doe: if you be not recalled, I ſhall, and the king, more freelie imploye you then euer; becauſe I know you will haue more libertie to doe vs good, then euer; for I haue the beſt brother in the worlde: he is now a maried man; for his mariage was performed at Paris the firſt of this month, oulde ſtile, by the duc of Cheuuereux, otherwiſe prince Genuille, as repreſenting my brother: ſhe is now one her way for England. If I can at anie time doe you anie good to my brother, I aſſure you I will, if I doe but know in what; for I will neuer be vnthankfull to you, for the manie teſtimonies you haue giuen me of your good affection. Therefore, honeſt Thom, be aſſured that I will neuer change being conſtantlie,

The Hagh this
26. July

Your moſt aſſured louing frend,

ELIZABETH.

I THANK you for the verſes you ſent me, vppon the death of worthie Southampton, whoſe loſſe I am ſtill ſadd for. I almoſt forgot to tell you of an enterpriſe was made on the ennemies quarter at Terhaide: if it had gone well, Breda had bene ſafe; but it was vnpoſſible, the ennemie being ſo well fortified. Our nation had the vantgard, and gott much honour: general Vere, and my lord of Oxenford, commanded them; who did carie themſelfs ſo well, as all admire their courage. Poore fatt Sir Thomas Winne, and captaine Tuffe, were killed there; and on captaine Dacres, a proper honeſt yong gentleman, who had but newlie maried Sir Duddley Carletons neece, was alſo killed.

Superſcribed,

To Sir THOMAS ROE, Ambaſſadour to the King of Great Britaine, at Conſtantinople.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt to your lordſhip of the 19th of April, ſtilo novo, nothing hath beene done in the Valtelina worthy the aduertiſing; onely ſome ſea fightes haue paſſed vppon the lake, betwixt Spaniſh boates laden with victualls and ammunition to refreſh Riua, and the barche armate, which the league haue made to hinder their paſſage; and by land the cauallerye and infanterie of both ſides haue skirmiſhed often, but to no great purpoſe. Now wee do expect dailye to heare of ſome important action; for the marquis di Coeuures hath, in a generall counſell of warre, reſolued to ſet vppon the enemye with the beſt of his forces; and becauſe he is ambitious, that the French ſhould haue the honor of the good ſucceſſe, which he doth promiſe vnto himſelfe, he hath lodged thoſe of the regiment of Normandye, which came lately to him, in the lower trenches neareſt vnto the enemye, and retyred from thence, into a higher quarter, the colonel Milander, who was hitherto quartered belowe with the Venetian auxiliaries.

THE Genoeſi, hauing beene renforced from Naples with men and gallyes, haue rauaged ſome part of the duke of Sauoyes dominions, which was expoſed to the Liguſticke ſea; and taken Oneglia, a good towne, but open, and without defence. On the other ſide, the duke of Sauoye hath taken Sauione, a ſtrong caſtle belonging to the Genoeſi, lying in the valley of Seriuia; ſo that he hath a playne way open on that ſide, to fall downe vppon the towne. It was doubted at firſt, that Sauione would haue held out, vntill the canon might haue beene brought before it; but it did yeelde as ſoone as it was inueſted, and hath receiued the companye of monſieur de San Reiran, put in by the duke of Sauoy. The conſtable was ſtill in his quarter about Gaui, vppon the 6th of this month, ſtilo novo; and did attend to purge the wayes of ſuch aſſaſſini as did cut of his diuandieri. Some of them he hath puniſhed ſeuerely at a place called Catellazzo, in the ſtate of Milan; but I do not beleeue, that he did ſacke the place (as is reported). Howſoeuer, it doth appeare, that the Spanyards doe vnderſtand theſe incurſions vppon the place campaigne of the ſtate of Milan, to be acts of hoſtility: for whereas prince Tomaſo had commanded his companie of cuiraſſes to paſſe towards Allexandria, in chace of ſome who did infeſt that quarter, at their returne they were followed afarre of by ſome troupps of Spaniſh horſe; and when they were come to their quarter at the Croce Bianca, within a myle of Aſti, they were ſet vppon, and defeated by the Spanyards; which being an act of open hoſtility on the ſide of the Spanyards, may perhaps cauſe an open rupture to inſue immediately: for prince Tomaſo will haue his reuenge, and then it will be too late for the ligate ſent into France to treate a ſuſpenſion of armes.

VPPON the 6th of May, ſtilo novo, the prince of Piedmont did march with an army volante towards Oneglia, to regayne the poſſeſſion of the towne; but wee do not heare yet how he hath ſped.

ONE doctor Prato, natiue of Turin, hauing inſinuated himſelfe into the howſe of the conſtable d'Eſdigueres, did diſcouer vnto the Genoeſi all that he could learne of the intentions of the ſayd conſtable, and of the duke of Sauoye; and after the taking of Gaui, he did write to Genoa, that betwixt the duke and the conneſtable there did paſſe great miſunderſtanding. Theſe letters being intercepted, Prato was apprehended and tormented, and is now in priſon at Turin; where it is like to goe hard with him.

I HAUE this day receaued a letter from your lordſhip, dated the $\frac{1}{11}$. of April; for which I do returne you many thancks, and muſt craue pardon for my haſty ſcribling at this time, becauſe I have been aſſaſſinated all this weeke with ceremonious offices of condoleance, and am at this preſent vppon the point of rediſpatching an extraordinary currier into England, who did come to mee from thence three dayes ſince. Theſe ſeigniori did ſend a ſauio grande, and a ſauio di terra ferma, to condole with mee at my howſe; and the ſame day that I did appeare in the college in black, (which was vppon the 15th) they did chuſe the procurator Erizzo, and caualier Correro, extraordinary ambaſſadors for England. I haue ſent this day your lordſhips letter to the count de la Tour, and here incloſed you ſhall find ſuch as are come to my hands for you. If you ſend my letters without any couer, I ſhall receaue them ſooner by two dayes, then vnder the couer of any merchant. So in great haſte I leaue your lordſhip, and your noble lady, to the protection of the Almighty, and reſt

Venice, 17 Maye, 1625.
ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhip's moſt affectionate, to do you ſervice,

I. WAKE.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

THE prince of Orange, in his camp at Dungen, finding all vnacceſſible on that ſide of Breda, where the enimy had drawne their cheiſe ſtrength to oppoſe him, marched about by Oſterhout to Getruydenberg, on Tueſday night laſt, with 6000 men, where the next day he lay cloaſe; and the night following (being that of the 14th of this preſent) attempted the releiſe of the towne, by beating vp the enimy's quarter at Terheyden, vpon the riuer of Merk: in which, about Seuenberghen, there haue layne boates of this ſtate, laden with victualls, long in readines.

THE Engliſh had the vangarde, commanded in cheiſe by my lord generall Vere, and my lord of Oxford, next him, chiefly in charge. They had a long narrow dike to paſſe vpon, with water on each ſide, vpon which were two forts, beſides certaine trauerſes, and a half-moone, before they could come to the enimyes maine worke. The forts and trauerſes the Engliſh abſolutely gained; and were, in effect, maſters of the half-moone: out of which (both their munition, and their ſeconds fayling them) they were forced to retire with loſſe of about 80 of their beſt men; the cheiſe of which were, Sir Thomas Winne, captain Dacres, and my lord of Oxfords kinſman (his enſigne) Mr. Stanhope: his lieutenant, Bell, came off ſhott through the body; as did captain John Cromwell, and captain Tubb, both dangerouſly hurt, and ſince ſayd to be dead. Captain Tirret was ſhott likewiſe, but with good hope of recouery. In all there, 20 of our Engliſh officers ſlayne and hurt; amongſt which, my lord of Oxford himſelf receaued a fauorable ſhott on his right arme, but without loſſe of blood; and he wonne that day, (for it was broad day before the fight ended) as did the reſt of our countrymen, much reputation. And among ſoldiers, where honour is wonne, nothing is loſt.

WEE haue had another miſchance of a man of warre of the States, lying at anchor before Callais, drawne by a ſtratagem of a counterfet fight of fower Dunkerkers (whereof two putt vp Hollands flaggs) into the midſt of them; and after three or fower howers fight, in which the captain was ſlayne, and, of 80 men, twelue only left aliue or vnhurt, rendred by capitulation, made by a French gentleman, who was on borde for his paſſage hither into Holland; and thereby thoſe which were left aliue, excuſe their not fireing the ſhipp, to which they are bound in ſuch caſes by oath and contract: and ſome haue bene in that ſorte burnt, when they were ouermatched by the Dunkerkers before the truce. But this is the firſt man of warre the Dunkerkers euer tooke from this ſtate, and carryed into their towne; at which they make no ſmall triumphe. I hope the vſe we ſhall here make of that loſſe, will be a better guarde of thoſe ports of Flandres, which haue of late dayes bene ſhamefully neglected.

IT is long ſince I haue had the happines to heare from your lordſhip. My next, I doubt, will aduertiſe the loſſe of Breda. For the preſent, I reſt in as much haſt as euer,

Hagh, this 29th of
May, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

To

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

THE ambaſſador of Bethlem Gabor had his diſpatch the 20th of May, and the next day departed. The manner of his negotiation here did continue in mee the jealouſy, that he did only enterteyne vs, and that his reſolutions depended vpon ſome other place: which, though in my curioſity I deſired to diſcouer, yett in my judgment I miſliked not: for from thence both expedition and certenty in the concluſion wilbee ſooneſt deriued. Notwithſtanding, for more perſpicuity in whatſoeuer ſhalbee propounded in Chriſtendome, the narration of the wayes and proceedings here may bee of ſuch vſe to his majeſtie, as ſmall lights are in the brighteſt day to ſearch in dark corners. To which purpoſe, I muſt looke back where my laſt diſcourſe ended, that wee wayted a reſolute and grounded anſwere to the demands of Gabor, and vpon them ſome farther declaration of his ambaſſador, according to the intimations giuen at his firſt conference, and many promiſſes after it. And alſo adde what I haue ſince learned of his commiſſion, to procure of the grand ſignor, which conſiſted on fower requeſts:

TO obteyne licence to treate and take protection of the princes colleagued, frends of the port; eſpecially with his antient allyes and confederats of Germany.

THAT the preſent treaty of renouation of the peace of Zitwa might bee diſſolued; and the terme runne out without any alteration.

THAT the beghs vpon the confines of Hungary ſhould riſe with their forces, and vnite at Peſt, there to attend the orders of the prince, and the baſſa of Buda.

LASTLY, In conſideration of the great expence, in theſe laſt warrs, in the ſeruice of the grand ſignor, that hee would bee pleaſed to remitt the tribute for this yeare: and in theſe points, to procure a reſolution in writing, ſigned, for his maſters full diſcharge and warrant in all euents.

THESE two laſt articles were not communicated to mee, nor any other of the reſidents, vntill anſwere of the firſt: which, when it was obteyned, was alſo concealed; and wee heard no more of the ambaſſador, but a meſſage in generall termes, that hee had gotten a fauorable and proſperous diſpatch; and that beeing indiſpoſed in health, hee was ſory he could not come ouer the water to acquaint vs with particulars, nor the neceſſity of his expedition giue him leaue to make longer ſtay. Therefore hee deſired vs to ſend our letters to the prince, and to aduiſe vnto our maſters the good ſucceſs of this ambaſſage; and to doe good offices, by giuing teſtimony of the readineſs and reſolution of Gabor to ſerue them, vpon iuſt and conuenient conditions. And ſo hee tooke his leaue.

THIS retyrednes ſeemed to mee not to proceed from the naturall bluntneſs of the ambaſſador, butt that either hee was aſhamed of his anſwere, or that it was ſuch, as differed from our expectations and endeauour. And therefore I ſent my ſecretary to him, inſtructed in writing, to putt him in mind of his promiſe: That after anſwere procured, hee would not only communicate ſyncerely, but acquaint vs with the further purpoſes of the prince, and the conditions propoſed to himſelfe: That generalityes were no grounds for mee to aſſure his majeſtie of any thing: That hauing required my aſſiſtance, which I had ymployed, and perhapps aduanced his buſineſs more then any other, I tooke myſelfe intereſſed in the anſwere: and that if hee gaue mee no other ſatisfaction, I ſhould enterpret his firſt intimations to bee feyned; and his proceeding correſpondent, only to enterteyne vs, and the port, with coulers.

THAT I could write nothing to his majeſtie, but the barrenneſs of his proceeding: which would rather offend, then engage his majeſtie to any credit; eſpecially ſeeing I muſt declare as much as I knewe, that there hath bene no impediment here, either in the fauour of the grand ſignor, nor the induſtry of others, to ſett his maſter at liberty to maynteyne his antient profeſſions; but that the whole failing did and muſt reſt vpon the prince, and his miniſters.

NEITHER knewe I what anſwere to giue the prince, but that I had heard his ambaſſador, and performed whatſoeuer was required of mee in his ſeruice, vpon aſſurance, by his letters of credence, that there was ſomwhat more to bee ſayd: wherein finding myſelfe deceiued, I ſhould rather complayne, then ſatisfy his expectation.

THEREFORE, if hee purpoſed to doe his maſter ſeruice, and that I might bee grounded in what I ſhould aduiſe his majeſtie, I required him to ſhowe mee the copy of the command concerning the treaty, and of the letter to the prince, in anſwere of the other demand: which if hee refuſed, hee muſt giue mee leaue to make my owne judgment ſupra totam materiam, that there was yet more queſtion de fide, then de operibus. 1625.

THE ambaſſador, moued with this roundneſs, replyed, with an ingenuous confeſſion, That it was true, hee had made vs a promiſe to enlarge himſelfe; and that his ouertures (to haue bene made) were ſyncere: but that hee had rather breake with vs, and craue pardon, then with his maſter; who had commanded him to proceed no further, if wee had not a plenary power to conclude in his propoſitions: yet acknowledging the good offices I had done him, and deſirous to giue mee ſatisfaction by way of truſt and narration, hee proteſted to deliuer the truth with all integrity.

FIRST, That hee had inſtruction to procure from the grand ſignor the 4 abouementioned articles, and to deſire our aſſiſtance in two of them.

SECONDLY, To demand of vs, if wee had commiſſion to treat with him; and therein beeing aſſured, to propound to vs 4 other, beeing the ſame ſent to the French king:

THAT hee might bee admitted into the vnion, with condition that no peace ſhould bee concluded without his knowledge and comprehenſion.

THAT the princes colleagued ſhould maynteyne an armye of 20000 men, vnder the conduct of the count of Torne, in Bohemia or Sileſia.

THAT, in reſpect of his great charge, hee might bee ſupplyed with 500000 crownes.

THAT the ambaſſadors reſident here ſhould haue order to bee aſſiſtant to him in all his occaſions.

CONCERNING the anſwere to the firſt demands, of licence to make confederacy with the princes of Chriſtendome, That the chimacham had held a counſell, and found the ſenſe of the viziers contrary thereunto, leaſt it ſhould make the prince too proud, and endanger his faith by change of his dependency: yet, at the deliuery of his letters, hee had order by word of mouth, (pretending it vnfitt to confirme it by writing againſt the generall opinion) to tell his maſter, That it was the grand ſignors pleaſure, hee ſhould maynteyne his antient leagues and confederacyes with thoſe princes of Germany that are frends with the port, and hold a good correſpondence with them, and help and aſſiſt them in all their occaſions againſt their common enemy, according to the contract made 5 yeares paſt with approbation of this ſtate: and that this warrant was ſufficient to his maſters purpoſes.

To the ſecond, That the chimacham had aſſured him, that a command was written to ſuſpend the treaty abſolutly; butt hee had not ſeene it, nor could procure the copy.

To the third, for raiſing the forces on the frontire, That in the ſame command, order was expreſsly giuen to the baſſas, to drawe to Peſt, and there to encamp; and to the baſſa of Buda, to conſult with the prince, and to doe nothing without his conſent and direction. And in caſe the Imperialls ſhould queſtion theſe motions, they ſhould anſwere, The grand ſignor had no purpoſe to offend the emperour; but ſeeing all Germany armed, it was conuenient to take the example. And that in the letter from the chimacham to the prince, hee had order to march with his forces into the frontire, and to giue countenance and help to his frends.

To the fourth, That hee had obteyned the graunt of the remiſſion of the tribute: and this was the true ſubſtance of his negotiation, and the ſucceſs thereof, as much as hee did knowe.

VPON retorne of this anſwere, receiuing ſome ſatisfaction, I wrote my letter to the prince, in conformity, with ſuch additions as I conceiued neceſſary to the content of the ambaſſador, and tooke my leaue of him by my ſecretary.

IN all theſe points, deſirous to enforme myſelfe with the greateſt certenty I could, I conferred them with the chimacham, who made almoſt the ſame relation; only ſetting a better gloſſe to encourage mee, as if they had graunted more then either the ambaſſador had deliuered, or the truth itſelfe.

THE Tranſiluanian ambaſſador, beeing by ſome occaſion of a poſt from Buda, ſtaid a fewe dayes, who aduiſed that the treaty was diſſolued of ytſelfe, (the truth 1625. whereof is ſuſpitious) I inuited him to dinner, and vſed all meanes to penetrate his ſecretts, if hee had any more. Butt I found him conſtant and vniforme in all his diſcourſe.

DURING the delay of this diſpatch, Iſuph aga, a Turke, of greate ſeruice and confidence with Bethlem Gabor, faithfull to him, a wiſe and ſober man, and, if it bee lawfull to abuſe the word, as honeſt as any of his faith, came to mee the day before the departure of the ambaſſador, I hauing alſo practized with him, vpon confidence of his frendſhipp, to knowe the truth of the reſolution of the grand ſignor. Hee told mee, That the Tranſiluanian had his full diſpatch, which conſiſted in a letter from the grand ſignor, only mentioning the diſpenſation of the tribute, and comforting him with promiſe of all fauour and protection, not once touching vpon any other matter. In the reſt, that they had not obteyned their deſires ſo fully as they expected, nor according to the inſtructions of the prince; hauing only receiued, by word of mouth, the licence to continue the correſpondence and alliance with the princes of Germany in amity with the grand ſignor, and to aſſiſt them, according to the league made with their ambaſſadors here. Touching the treaty, That there was a command ſent, but neither deliuered, nor ſeene by the Tranſiluanian, but conſigned to the chiaus baſſa, as agent of the baſſa of Buda, conteyning an expreſſe order, That if the Imperialls did inſiſt vpon the peace of Zitwa, there was no neede to confirme it, beeing two yeares before the expiration; at which tyme they would hearken to fitt conditions: but if they deſired to beginne, ex re integrâ, a newe treaty, that might ſettle and compoſe all differences, that then the baſſa ſhould enterteyne it, vntill further order from the port: in the meane tyme, to raiſe the ſoldioury, and to drawe them to Peſt, to countenance their actions with the ſight of an army, and to hold good correſpondence with Bethlem Gabor. Laſtly, That there was a letter from the chimacham to the prince, of encouragement and fauour, in generall termes: and that this was the truth of what was obteyned, or reſolued on, in this negociation.

THAT it was true, vpon the firſt information and offices done here by the reſidents, the chimacham had once reſolued to graunt all the demands effectually; and had drawne the letters to that purpoſe, in euery point correſpondent to the motions of the prince; but was changed by the treachery of Sigiſmundus Miches, the old agent, nowe diſcharged, who made meanes to ſpeake with the chimacham priuatly, and told him, If the ambaſſador were a true ſeruant to the grand ſignor, and his maſter, ſo was hee; and that hee knewe both the mind of the nobility and people of Tranſiluania, as well as hee, and what conduced to the common benefitt: That therefore hee thought it his duty to ſignify, that the ſtate did not think it fitt for the prince to bee engaged in any warre for the intereſt of the princes of Chriſtendome, againſt the houſe of Auſtria: That in theſe laſt broyles, the cuntry had ſuffered much oppreſſion and dammage, without any gayne or proffitt, but only to feede ambition: That hereby the grand ſignor had loſt his tribute, conſumed vpon pretences, which the people deſired to pay, ſo they might liue in peace, and follow their plough. This yeare they beganne to hold vpp their heads, and to enioy the fruict of their labours; in which beeing againe diſturbed, it was dangerous to putt them into deſperation to ſeeke their quiett vnder a newe maſter: therefore, that it was more expedient for the benefitt of the grand ſignor, and the good of the cuntry, that the prince were commanded to attend the good gouerment of his people, and not to ſuffer him to bee blowne vpp with newe and vncerteyne hopes.

THIS croſs aduice, from another miniſter of the ſame prince, did much amuſe the vizier, and cauſed him to call the mentioned counſell; where a moderation was reſolued on, at leaſt not to giue that liberty which hee affected, in writing, for his owne reſpects. And that hereupon the mufti told the newe agent, That his prince ſhould hereafter pay the tribute, and engage himſelfe in no more ſhadowes of ſeruice without proffitt: for by their lawe, protection was due vnto him only for that reſpect; which beeing withheld, it might giue iuſt occaſion to the grand ſignor to retyre his fauour, and to take away the liberty of the people.

NOTWITHSTANDING all theſe temporiſings on both parts, hee did vndertake (as knowing the inward mind of the prince) to deliuer in his name, That this ambaſſage was ſent in good obſeruance, and for forme; but that Gabor was reſolued, whatſoeuer the anſwere were, to take armes, to vnite with the vnion, and to vſe the aduantage of occaſion: and to that purpoſe, vpon the retorne of the ambaſſador, that hee would preuaile, vpon the generall order to the baſſa of Buda, to follow his directions, at leaſt to take his owne liberty; not doubting, but the proſperity of his actions ſhould not only bee ſufficient excuſe, but redound to his praiſe and honor with the grand ſignor, as they had done in former tymes vpon the like occaſions, when they ſhould bee aſhamed either of their feare or corruption.

VPON this aſſurance, to which I gaue ſome creditt, in reſpect of the author, and vpon the receipt of diuers particular relations of the proſperity of the armyes in Italy, in the Valtoline, andthe ſtate of Genoua, of the rout of Ottaggio, and ſeedge of Gauio, and ſome other aduices of the reſolution of the kings of Denmarke and Sweuia, and a copy of the proteſt of his majeſtye to the princes of the empire; I tooke occaſion ſodainly, en paſſant, to viſitt the ambaſſador, the better to confirme him and his maſter in the pretended reſolutions: and I gaue him a full information of all the affaires of Chriſtendome, to retorne, as the beſt fruict of his voiadge; and receiued a ſollemne proteſted confirmation of the concluſion of the diſcourſe of Iſuph aga; and that though hee vnderſtood the anſwere to all his maſters demands to bee ſatisfactory, yett, if it had bene more cold, that the prince was reſolued to vſe his owne freedome; and if hee might receiue any encouragement from Chriſtendome, to embrace the generall quarrell to the hazard of all his eſtates.

HEREVPON I thought it pertinent by way of diſcourſe, as hee had acquainted mee with the 4 articles of the prince propounded into France, to aduiſe him to perſwade his maſter, if hee really intended that his offers ſhould bee acceptable, that hee would conforme them to reaſon and probability, and to the ſquare and proportion of treatyes in the like nature: for hee that demanded conditions beyond their meritt, did manerly teach, that hee deſired to bee denyed. To bee comprehended in any peace, as one of thoſe that had aduentured his owne fortunes for the liberty of Germany, was, in my opinion, reaſonable; but 500000 crownes was a ſumme able to raiſe a force of more vſe then his could bee; and that wee well knewe the condition of his pay, and the dependencyes of his ſubiects: therefore, that hee ſhould moderate it to ſome conueniency, and then he might expect reaſonable contribution in that kinde. To require an army of 20000 men, was too extrauagant; hee ſhould conſider, that the meanes of ſuch a diuerſion was ſufficient without him: That hee muſt putt his owne deſſignes into the accompt, who aymed at newe acqueſts; but the other princes had no end, either of titles or conqueſts, but the recouery of their antient liberty and patrimony; and that, in treatyes of vnion, euery prince was bound for his proportion, and not all to ouercharge themſelues for the benefitt of one. Therefore he muſt proceed according to rule and precedent in ſuch caſes.

FOR the aſſiſtance of the reſidents, their actions had preuented the requeſt; and therefore therein would bee no great difficulty. This I deliuered as diſcourſe, and my opinion, without authority, or any engagement, and ſo to bee vnderſtood by him.

TO theſe hee replyed ſomwhat of his maſters wants, and greate expence; and, to the point of the army, that hee would not inſiſt vpon the number, whereof much would bee abated; only that hee had neede of ſome groſſe of foote, wherein hee was defectiue; and that there ſhould bee no doubt of conformity, when the particulars ſhould come to bee diſcuſſed by them who had power to conclude. Laſtly, hee enformed mee, That the chimacham had that day ſent for him, and commanded him to aduiſe his maſter to giue ouer the ſtrict intelligence lately begunne betwixt the emperour and him, which gaue cauſe of ſcandall and ſuſpition in the port; and that he ſhould hold no further correſpondence with the enemyes of the grand ſignor. And thus wee parted, in hope that neither of vs was deceiued.

HITHERTO I haue related what hath bene done; and notwithſtanding it bee more difficult to preiudge what will ſucceed, yett it is not vnproffitable to make ſome comments, and, by miſſing neare, to giue better ayme to the marke. The warineſs of the proceedings of this ſtate is the firſt conſideration; which though it might arriſe out of the treacherous diſcourſe of the agent, yet, that hee had any creditt againſt his maſters letters, and newe inſtructions, is full of ſuſpition. For who may not miſtruſt, that knowes the price of a head, that this boldnes had ſome ſupport? Who durſt, in a court where nothing is a ſecrett, by the ſame interpreter vſed by the ambaſſador, expoſe his life to a certeyne daunger, and to oppoſe his maſter diametrally? The ambaſſador had often pronounced him a traitor: Why did hee not make him ſafe? Or why did hee vſe him in all his affaires? Or did hee 1625. keep him to make the balance euen; and finding, contrary to his opinion, that his requeſts were graunted too faſt, which might bee made to enterteyne our maſters, the port, and vs, it was neceſſary to haue a counterpoiſe, to pleaſe and ſatisfy the emperors agent, who had alſo a watch vpon him, and with whom hee held a like correſpondency? Or, if the ambaſſador were innocent and deceiued, might not the agent haue an vnderhand commiſſion, to keepe the reſolution in that æquilibrity from any neceſſity of the princes inclynation, vntill hee had anſwere of both his treatyes, with the emperour and the French king, to take at laſt his election of the beſt game? If it bee not ſoe, this felowe was more prodigall then the diuell, who pronounced pellem pro pelle, et quicquid eſt viro, daturus eſt pro ſeipſo. The ſecond conſideration reſulteth from the retyrednes of the ambaſſador, and his lothnes to communicate the ſucceſſe of his negotiation, as if hee feared that ſomwhat would bee diſcouered of remiſſnes or preuarication in him. But I am perſwaded, it was pure ſhame, that hee had promiſed and vndertaken ſo much, and had liberty in nothing; or, beeing not truſted himſelfe with the full anſwers, hee deſired to diſſemble his ignorance.

THERE are ſo many oppoſitions of equall waight, that I am enforced to fly to a chriſtian faith, and the proteſtations of the ambaſſadors doe appeaſe all my iealouſyes. When I conſider, that Gabor can haue no end but reſt, by a peace with the houſe of Auſtria, which is not his end; for hee cannot allay his ambitions, nor ſuffer them to bee encloſed betweene two walls; and that hee is gone very farre, to ſtretch the creditt hee hath with the emperour, after a peace freſhly made, by ſhowe of an army to force newe conditions; and, laſtly, that hee is more miſtruſted at Vienna, then truſted by vs; I muſt conclude, that hee doth enclyne to a breach with him, warily, and as ſafely as hee may; and that therefore hee attends a reſolution from Chriſtendome, which will ſway him to a declaration; and all expectation from him, or vs here, is vayne and loſſe of tyme; and that he is gouerned by no other councell then intereſt; quicquid utile, honeſtum.

SINCE the departure of the Tranſiluanian ambaſſador, here is arriued a poſt from Bethlem Gabor, who hath brought aduiſe, that the commiſſioners of the treaty, beeing mett neare Strigonium, haue proceeded ſo farre as to drawe articles; and that the command for the ceſſation was not arriued, kept back or delayed, as it is ſuſpected, by the chiaus baſſa, an imperiall pentioner, in hope to conclude it before any prohibition. But by virtue of the firſt order, to tranſact nothing without the approbation of Gabor, the baſſa of Buda hauing ſent the articles to him, hee refuſed to accept of them, and wrote to the commiſſioners not to proceed, and diſpatcht the copy to the port; which here haue giuen very great diſtaſt, beeing rather complaynts, and demands of ſatiſfaction and reſtitution, in power of the treaty of Zitwa, then conditions of a newe peace, ſo much in preiudice and diſhonor of the grand ſignor, that there is no apparance they wilbee accepted; but rather moue diſdeyne, and occaſion an open breach. Vpon theſe demands Bethlem Gabor hath ſent a comment, in anſwere of them, to perſwade their refuſall, and to prouoke this ſtate to giue him leaue to take the opportunity of the diſarming the imperiall frontire. It is an vnſeaſonable and vnexpected brauery of the emperour, in this coniuncture, to diſſemble nothing. Whether hee truſt vpon his intelligences here, or vpon the diſtractions of their preſent affaires, is aboue my judgment: ſo there is another judgment aboue all their councells; Deprehendit ſuperbos in aſtutiâ ipſorum, adeo ut conſilium reluctantium præcipitetur. The copies both of the articles, and of the inſtructions of Gabor to his ambaſſador to oppoſe them, I haue receiued this day; but they are long, and the haſt of the Venetian ambaſſador will not affoord mee tyme to tranſcribe them in ciphar, which I will ſupply by the next. But the concluſion that I drawe from them is, that though there appeare ſome doubt in the prince of Tranſiluania, that the commiſſioners will not obey him, to ſuſpend the treaty wholly, but proceed vpon former inſtructions; and that it is likely the Imperialls will abate much, rather then hazard all; yett hee hath declared himſelfe ſo oppoſite in this action, that I am fully ſatiſfied in his reſolution to breake with the emperor, either by ayd of the grand ſignor, or without it, if hee can receiue any comfort from Chriſtendome, from whence only his confirmation depends; and that, if hee receiue it as tymely as hee expects it, hauing ſent to the French king, the fame of his actions will preuent and outfly the rumour of his treaty: for hee is allready drawing together his forces; and that diuerſion is of moſt ſeruice, that is made neareſt to the enemyes dore, to inuert the prouerb, paries cum proprius ardet. I muſt alſo referre the relation of ſome little conſiderations of this ſtate, as leſſe neceſſary; deſiring your honor to preſent theſe to his majeſtie, and to his highnes, in whoſe ſeruice errare poſſim, ſed non peccare. And thus I committ your honor to the holy keeping of our gratious God.

Conſt. 28. May, 1625.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

SINCE the fayling of the attempt vpon Terheyden, of which I advertiſed your lordſhip by my laſt, this army hath bene buſied wholy in preparing to ryſe from thoſe entrenchments they had made at Dunghen, neare the ennemyes workes; which is accordingly effected, it being now come to the old quarter at Walwick; from whence count Mansfelts army is vpon marching vpwards towards the Rhyne, and ſome troopes are ſent to Berghen op Zoom and Seuenberghen; ſo as it appeares, the deſſigne of this ſyde, for this ſummer, is onely to ſtand vpon the defenſive, and to provide againſt ſuch attempts, as, in all apparence, the ennemy will make, when he is maſter of Breda; from whence wee heare nothing, all paſſages being ſhutt vp: but the common (and I believe the trueſt) conjecture is, that it muſt needs be, at this tyme, vpon termes of capitulation. This I would not fayle to acquaint your lordſhip withall, knowing that greater matters wilbe expected from hence, then are yet done, or likely to be effected. I ſend your lordſhip herewith the delineation of the workes of the ennemyes, which our countreymen attempted to wynne (who are commended, notwithſtanding theyr ill ſucceſſe, as well by theyr ennemyes as theyr frends, for the valour and courage they ſhewed in that ſervice); by which, and the ſignification of them, your lordſhip will eaſily perceave the manner of the fight, and every other circumſtance or particularity of that action. Sir William St. Leger is returned out of England hether agayne, about the ſame ſervice he was at firſt employed, concerning the fleete now going out of England; which wilbe ſeconded from hence in as large a proportion, as the neceſſityes of this ſtate can permitt. Sir Henry Vane, who was ſent hether by his majeſty with a brotherly meſſage to his ſiſter, is now vpon his returne. My lord generall Cecyl, with two coronells, Horwood and Burrowes, and other officers and captaynes, are ſent for over to be employed in the fleete. My lord of Oxford, comming hether ten dayes ſince, to goe over for the ſame purpoſe, ſickned of the camp feaver the very night of his arrivall, and is in great danger of death.

I SEND your lordſhip, and your noble lady, (whoſe hands I kiſſe) letters from the queen of Bohemia.

EXCUSE, I beſeech your lordſhip, this ſhort letter, which my attendance on this dying lord will not ſuffer me to inlarge; in whom, with the late earle of Southampton, I doubt I ſhall, by my next, aduertiſe your lordſhip we haue loſt the flower of our martial nobilitie. So, in much haſt, I reſt

Hagh, this 2^d of June,
1625. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE activity of our neighbours round about vs doth, by way of anteperiſtaſis, dead this lake, naturally calme; ſo that here they are onely ſpectators and diſcourſers of their noble warriers in Liguria and the Valtelina.

THE taking of Pieue, by the prince of Piedmont, was an action of ſo great importance, that, like a violent torrent, it hath carried with it the ſurrender of all the riuer of Genoa, Sauona onely excepted. By the incloſed liſt your lordſhip will ſee, how manny places haue in an inſtant yeelded vnto that victorious prince; who, vppon the 17th of Maye, by this ſtyle, did make a triumphant entry into Porto Mauritio, vnder a ritch canopye, accompanied with all warlique ſplendor, many volyes of canons, and lowde acclamations of Viva Savoya! The ſpoyles and 1625. compoſitions of thoſe places will defray his armye a whole yeare; and it is no ſmall aduantage, to be furniſhed with canon, and munition of warre, at ſo eaſy a rate, that inſteede of conducting artillery at his owne coſt, he may ſaue that labour, and ſpare that expence, and beat his enemy with his owne weapons. One priſoner onely of thoſe many taken at la Pieue, namely Don Pietro Maria Gentile, who was commiſſary generall of the Genoeſi, is valued at 400000 crowns; and it is ſuppoſed, that the general Gio. Geirolamo Doria, who was taken there likewiſe, will not be ranſomed at an eaſyer rate. They haue quite abandoned the defence of all the open country, and left it to the diſcretion of the conquerors; onely the caſtle of Vintimiglia did hold for them, but ſo faintly, that by this tyme it is giuen for loſt, they hauing begunne to capitulate vppon the 20th of Maye; at which tyme the point of ſurrender was accommodated, and onely the manner thereof diſputed. When they ſhall haue nothing left, but the two cittyes of Genoa and Sauona, it will be hard for them to keepe a factious and ill affected people in obedience; and their proceeding with ſo much rigor to the execution of ſome principall gentlemen of their body, ſuſpected to wiſh well to the French partye, hath increaſed ſuch ill humors as were before in the towne, and inflamed the bloud of the French to reuenge the death of their martyres. Seuen millions of ducats are ſayd to be arriued at Genoa, ſent out of Spayne; but they haue more neede of men then of monny, and the fame of ſuch a treaſure will whet the appetite of the French, and keepe them from disbanding, in hope of a greater bootye.

The duke of Sauoy and the conſtable are at a little pawſe, and do make their approaches ſlowly, expecting the arriuall of their fleete, whereof ſome part is already come to Villa Franca, and hath, in ſcowring that ſea, taken three fregates, and two new brigantines of 12 oares on a ſyde, togither with ſome conſiderable bootyes from the enemye. Vppon theſe ſhips and gallyes which are already arriued, the duke of Sauoy is preparing to imbarque ſome of his armye; and it is thought he will beginne with Sauona, the conſtable being vnwilling to inueſt Genoua, vntill it may be blocked vp by ſea, for feare leaſt, by their tranſporting of their monny and wealth, he ſhould take the neſt, and find thoſe golden birds fled, which he doth principally looke after. It is ſayd here, that prince Tomaſo, iſſuing out of Aſti with 1500 horſe, and 500 muſquetiers, hath defeated 1000 of the Spaniſh caualerie which were goeing from Aleſſandria to Nizza della Paglia, with ten pieces of ordinance; and that he hath ſpiked their canon, and brought away their oxen: but becauſe I haue it not confirmed from Turin, I will attendre le boiteux, before I paſſe my word for the truth thereof. If the duke of Mantoua do entertayne the Spanyards in Nizza della Paglia, or any other places of Montferrat, the duke of Sauoye (who doth but watch for an occaſion) will ſhortly after viſite him; and then will that marquiſat be vtterly ruined.

The duke of Alcala is arriued at Genoua, with commiſſion to render obedience to the pope, in the quality of an extraordinary ambaſſador; and it is ſayd, that he hath likewiſe dictatoriam poteſtatem, to command all the miniſters and creatures of the king of Spayne in Italye, whatſoeuer he ſhall judge to conduce to the ſeruice of that crowne, without ſending into Spayne for any newe directions or inſtructions. Since his arriuall the Spanyards and Genoeſi haue made a great noyſe, as if he were able to giue the lawe vnto all Italye. And at Milan they do brage, that he hath giuen them leaue to driue the duke of Sauoye out of Piedmont, and not to ſpare him for being the kings kinſman: but there is a prouerbe of their owne, which doth ſay, that tra dicho & heeho es muy gran trecho; and I do not find, that the duke of Sauoye is much afrighted with theſe rodomontados; for he doth goe on couragiouſly; and hauing the laſt weeke loſt his principal ſecretary, ſigniore Crotti, who was killed with the ſhot of a muſquet at Stelliano, hard by his maſter, the duke did reuenge his death with cutting in pieces all the Spanyards that he found there, without taking any to mercye.

The Venetians are a little troubled with the daily menaces of the emperor, who doth theaten to ſend Maradas with an army into Friuli. Wherevppon they haue deputed a principall ſenator to reſide in the quality of proueditor at Monfalcon, and they are dayly ſending trouppes of Albaneſi towards that confine, to preuent a ſurpriſe, and prouiding likewiſe to arme ſtrongly by ſea. Since the arriual of the ordinary of Lyons, they haue beene much comforted; for by his being commanded to paſſe by the Valtelina, and not to touch any part of the king of Spayns dominions, and his bringing hither a proclamation, wherein all future commerce betwixt France and Spayne is forbidden, and the goods of Spanyards and Genoeſi ſequeſtred through all that kingdome, they do ſuppoſe, that an open rupture will inſue ere long; and that then the Spanyards and Auſtriaci will haue ſo much to do in other places, that they will let theſe ſeigniori reſt in peace. Beſyds, the comming of the king of Denmarke into Germany doth put life into them, and they are not out of hope, that Gabor will take his aduantage of this fauorable conjuncture; but they do enquire after our fleete with ſuch paſſionate deuotion, as if therein did conſiſt their unica ſalus.

HERE is arriued into this towne Don Chriſtophero Beneuido di Beneuento, to reſide in the quality of an ordinary ambaſſador for the king of Spayne. When he hath audience, your lordſhip ſhall know what face he doth put on, and how he is entertayned.

THE laſt that I had from your lordſhip, were dated the $\frac{1}{11}$. of Aprill, and my laſt unto you were of the 17th of Maye, ſtilo novo. Our mariage with France was perfected uppon the 11th of May, at Paris. Our newe queene is now in England, and I ſuppoſe, that ſhee was crowned with our king, uppon the 29th of Maye, ſtilo novo. Here incloſed your lordſhip ſhall receaue relations of what hath paſſed in Liguria ſince the writing of my laſt, and a pacquet from the count de la Tour. A little helpe from Gabor would do much good, and I hope, that ſhortly wee heare ſome newes of his ſtirring. God Almighty bleſſe and proſper your lordſhip in all your proceedings; as euer prayeth, in your behalfe, Venice, 3. June, 1625.

ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull poore frend to command,

I. WAKE.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

THOUGH ill newes flye faſt enough, yet your lordſhip ſhall haue them from me, as well as good.

BREDA was rendred on Thurſday laſt, vpon as honorable termes as could be demanded; the marquis Spinola having graunted the governour and garriſon thereof the fruition of as ample conditions, as ever were given by any accord heretofore made for the rendring of any towne or fortreſſe: and it may eaſily appeare, by one article of the capitulation, they had what could be deſired, being permitted to carrye out with them 4 demy-canons, and 2 morters, with cariages, munition, and all things elſe therto belonging.

THE ſame day the towne was rendered, the ſecond perſon who had the conduct of the attempt was lately made for the ſaving of that place, (the earle of Oxford) ended his lyfe in this towne, after a fortnights ſicknes of a feaver he brought from the camp; and is very much lamented, as well by ſtrangers, as his owne countreymen, not onely for the courage he ſhewed vpon all occaſions, but eſpecially in this late exploict; becauſe it was all hath bene done here, in a manner, ſince the expiration of the truce; and therfore, in a tyme of ſo much ydlenes, the more remarquable.

COUNT Mansfelt paſt the Maze with his army at Graue on Thurſday laſt, and intends to croſſe the Rhyne at Skinck-ſconce: meane while his army ſuffers very much betwixt thoſe two rivers, for want of victualls, money, or other neceſſaryes; but his hope is, that when he is on the other ſide of the Rhyne, he will meete with better treatment, and have commodity to relieue his neceſſityes.

THE marquis Spinola, having reſolved of ſending Don Gonzales de Cordoua with 6000 foote, and 2000 horſe, into Italy, and the like number, under the conduct of count Henry Vandenbergh, after Mansfelt, is now buſied in ſlighting his workes about Breda; which are of ſuch an extent and circuit, that a long tyme muſt be had to effect that worke; and when it is ended, the remainder of his army will not be able to vndertake any thing of moment.

THE prince of Orange remaynes ſtill at Walwick with his troopes, wayting vpon ſuch occaſions as may be preſented, to recover the reputation, which the taking 1625. of Breda drawes with it. And as any thing ſhall ſucceede worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I will advertiſe it with the ſooneſt.

MEANE while reſt, as euer,

Hagh, the 9th of June,
1625. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionatly, to doe you ſeruice,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

To the Archbiſhop of CANTERBURY.

[The former Part of this Letter, the Subſtance whereof is contained in the next, is therefore omitted.]

——YOUR graces abundant letter hath made mee rich in the knowledge of many affayres: yett in one particular it hath troubled mee, doubting howe my operations with Bethlem Gabor may bee enterpreted; when, it ſeemes, a faire ouerture, to the ſame effect, hath bene reiected. Jactæ ſunt aleæ. I vnderſtand my ſelfe to haue good warrant; and I am perſwaded, before much noyſe thereof, (if at leaſt there bee any faith in him) hee will haue paſſed the Rubicon; and then, howeuer the councells wilbee approued, I knowe the iſſue and fruict wilbee found neceſſary and proffitable. Your grace vouchſafe mee the patience to diſpute the queſtion: That his majeſtie made ſcruple to maynteyne any oppoſition, by the houſe of Ragouill, did agree with the piety and wiſedome of ſo good a king, not to nouriſh any diſtemper by a ſubiect, againſt his owne prince: but why Gabor ſhould bee refuſed, is beyond my capacity, either in rule or example; ſeeing, that hee is the moſt able and moſt neceſſary inſtrument of diuerſion, is without all contradiction. Gabor is a free prince to us, in our conſideration of him, and in his owne eſtimation of himſelfe; and though hee pay tribute to the grand ſignor, hee is not therefore a ſubiect; and hee vſeth formality to this ſtate, not as a marke of ſeruitude, but for his aduantage. The emperour in that quality treates, makes peace, and would make league with him, tanquam ſui juris, without any ſcruple of diſparagement, dum ſit utile. I knowe the houſe of Auſtria courts him more then any elector of Germany, perhaps to vndoe him; and that is a confeſſion where their wall is weakeſt. But if the ſcandall of the Turks breed this tenderneſs, I haue often made it manifeſt, hee hath no will to giue them one foote of ground, nor to vſe their ayds, but as a countenance and retraict, in the various euents of warre. And if nothing can bee tranſacted in this world without ſome truſt, is it not more congruous to truſt a prince ſo conſtantly profeſſing our religion? The nature of his warre is not dangerous, to conquer and hold any thing; but rather of incurſions, that will enforce the duke of Bauare to looke back to ſaue his corne and houſes from fire; and the frontire townes of Hungary are all ſtrong, meate for the cannon. Gabor will not looſe his tyme vpon any that will not open to him; butt his marches are ſwift, and hee wilbee before the gates of Vienna or Prague, ſooner then count Mansfield can moue into the Palatinate. There is another conſideration of thrift, that hee can raiſe, pay, or content, 20000 horſe with the charge of 3000, raiſed and armed according to our diſcipline. And, laſtly, if nothing can preuaile to make him bee thought worthy the name of a confederate, (though he aſpire no other honor thereby, then what is common and conſequent to euery one that is comprehended in the proteſtant vnion) yett hee may bee accepted to ſerue for pay. If wee looke into hiſtory, great and wiſe ſtates, ſuch as wee feare to ſcandalize, haue, in their neceſſityes, ſought the Turks directly: as Francis the firſt, of France; the houſe of Aragon, in Naples; yea, his holyneſs of Rome, ſometyme; and the ſtate of Venice, at this preſent. It is aſwell an honeſt rule in warre, as a politicque, Cuius finis eſt bonus, ipſum quoque bonum et iuſtum eſt; & iniquitas partis adverſæ makes many things iuſt in their oppoſition, that are not ſo in themſelues; and therefore it is concluded, Arma tenenti omnia dat, qui iuſta negat. And my refuge is, the French king hath thought it no ſcorne, to ſend a gentleman to Gabor, to ſeeke that which was offered vs; and I doubt not but there a treaty will proceed, that may ſerue the generall ends. This buſines hath bene much canuaſſed here, and the emperour hath vſed all arts to wynne or to ſeperate the prince of Tranſiluania, and to renewe his peace with this ſtate, which hath bene ſtrongly oppoſed by all the reſident ambaſſadors. And notwithſtanding Gabor hath made cleare demonſtration of the vnſeaſonableneſs thereof, and that the houſe of Auſtria is buſied in many places, ſo that it were more wiſedome to attend the euent of theſe troubles, then to giue them any encouragement and breath, by aſſurance of quiett on this ſide; yett ſo litle expectation and ſatisfaction they haue conceiued by his motions the laſt yeares, when hee was left alone in the quarrell, and the emperours gold hath wrought ſo cordially with corrupt miniſters, to whom the treaty was referred, that the commiſſioners haue agreed, contrary to all expectation; the Imperialls yielding, and giuing ouer all pretences and claymes. The ſumme is, Chi tien, tiene. For the reſt, all things are remitted to former treatyes; only one article is inſerted newe, That preſently two greate ambaſſadors ſhalbee mutually diſpatcht to ratify this peace, which was procured by the Imperialls for oſtentation, to publiſh, and therby to threaten his other oppoſites, that hee hath made all ſafe at the back dore: and this is an vſuall pollicy, which, at this tyme, will too much aduantage them. And though the vizier ſeeme to diſapproue this concluſion, which muſt take life from a confirmation here, blaming the baſſa of Buda for miſvnderſtanding his orders, and profeſſing to diſauow the treaty; yet I beleeue him not, the buſineſs beeing ſo farre aduanced, and the councell concurring with the generall ſenſe of the miniſters of this port; conformable to an old axiom of this empire, That whenſoeuer they had warrs with the Perſian, they were content to make vpp all breaches in Chriſtendome, becauſe they can open them againe at their pleaſure. I am perſwaded, the treaty will take effect. In fewe dayes wee ſhall knowe the certeynty, and bee freed out of this labyrinth of contradictions; for there was neuer any buſineſs handled more falſly, nor like themſelues. In Gabor yett remaynes ſome hope, and if hee bee ſyncere, of which hee makes in this court all demonſtration, (and his diſſimulations are deeper then the ſea, if hee deceiue vs) this peace will not ſo much aduantage the emperour, as hee expects, and perhaps turne Gabor to better account: for it will take from him that ſcandall, that hee makes the warre as a vaſſall to the grand ſignor; and his miniſters here make ſhowe to labour, that hee may not bee tyed by the treaty, but left at liberty to his owne quarrells, as prince of Tranſiluania; hauing made a proteſt to the vizier, that their maſter hath performed his duty, and ſhowed his faith to the grand ſignor, by his councell, and asking leaue, before hee vndertooke any action, that might bee contrary to the purpoſes of this ſtate; but if they would neither accept it, nor creditt him, but bee willfully blynd in ſo cleare an opportunity, that hee was reſolued not to looſe it, but to ioyne with ſuch frends, as might ſecure him, and his eſtates. And if there bee no great change in his thoughts, which yet are not diſcouered here, hee hath great hope, by meanes of the French king, to bee taken into better conſideration in Chriſtendome; and perhapps the Turks wilbee content, that while they reſt vnder the ſhadowe of a peace, that Gabor may vexe, and keepe the emperour poore: but if now againe he bee ſlighted, and not countenanced and encouraged by ſome league, or ſome allowance, the authors of that councell will enforce him againſt his naturall inclynation, who would not bee ſhutt vpp betweene two walls, to become wholy imperiall; and make him, of a neceſſary frend, per ſdegno, a daungerous enemy: and by that meanes, the emperour wilbee wholly ſett at liberty, to follow his deſſignes in the Lower Germany. If your grace deſire to vnderſtand the whole proceſs of this negotiation, you may bee pleaſed to procure from my lord Conwey, my 3 laſt diſpatches, from the 5th of May to this date, written, for more ſecurity, in cyphar; which conteyne the proceeding of the ambaſſador of Gabor in this port: and I doubt not, your grace will conclude, that it had bene moſt neceſſary to haue embraced the occaſion; and if it bee offered againe, that you will countenance the councell, by your graue authority. If any reſolution ſhould bee taken, to ratify or diſapproue theſe articles, and newe treaty, before the diſpatch of this ordinary, your grace ſhall likewiſe find it in my letters to the ſecretary; which, I make no queſtion, you may command. 1625.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{9}{19}$.
June, 1625.

Relations of TURKISH Aſſayres.

THIS climate affoords us yet litle matter of relation, much of coniecture: the Perſian prepares to continue the inuaſion, and the vizier to oppoſe him. All the ſouldioury are departed toward the camp, but I think they will nott meete, but warre by diuerſion. Abaſſa hath gotten ſome creditt in this court, and they eaſily apprehend all occaſion to beleeue his reconciliation. One of the chiefe commanders in the Perſian army ſent to Abaſſa, to perſwade him to deliuer Arzrum, his gouernment, to the ſha; which hee ſeemingly accepted, and traynd him on, with 8000 men, to take the poſſeſſion; when in the meane tyme he drewe together his troopes, and ſodaynly ſent them, under the conduct of a prince of *Circaſſia, and ſett vpon them, that ſuſpected no treaſon, routed them, and ſlewe 1000, whoſe heads hee diuided for preſents hither, and to the campe; and now hee is proclaymed the beſt ſubiect to the grand ſignor, and named to bee vizier. But this is not ſo greate an aſſurance of him, howſoeuer they glory in it, as that it wilbee ſafe to truſt him; for hee went not in perſon, nor would come out of his ſtrength, though commanded to drawe into the field, to aſſiſt in the generall ſeruice, excuſing himſelfe upon the neceſſity of defending the frontire. Neither could hee refuſe to ſend ſome of his followers to this exployt, beeing urged therunto by his capteynes, without diſcouering himſelfe too ſoone; his reſolution undoubtedly beeing, that while theſe two greate oppoſites ſtriue for the whole, hee will keepe a part of Aſya, and his owne head; knowing hee can make his peace, with the ſurrender to the conquerour, at pleaſure.

*Georgia

BUT from thoſe parts are not the greateſt, nor the neareſt feares: the prince of Tartars, hauing made peace with the Poles, and taken the Coſſacks into his fellowſhipp, makes ſhowe of ſome deſſigne agaynſt this ſtate; and the people are uery indifferent, many enclyned to him. The Coſſacks, with 300 frigats, haue croſſed the Black-ſea, ſackt and burnt the ſuburbs of Trapiſond, and all the adioyning coaſts; and are retired, and receiued into the port of Ghioſleue, belonging to the Tartars; which augmenteth the iealoſy, that they will unite.

A GALLY hath bene ſent out toward Caffa, to diſcouer the countenance of the Tartars; but the baſſa aduiſed the capteyne, not to aduenture himſelfe on land, and hee is returned with much uncerteynty. Since, there is come a report, that the Tartars and Coſſacks haue ſome deſſigne upon Caffa, the chiefe ſeate and port of the Euxine. Wherupon the capteyns baſſa, hauing drawne all the gallyes of the Archipelago hither, who may number 60 of all ſorts, is ſodaynly commanded into that ſea, with all the force that this citty can make; and the expectation of his deſigne is uarious, and the ſucceſs therof doubtfull: for it is ſuſpitious, the Tartar will proue an open enemy, and reported, That if the winter had not bene ſo mild, and the Danuby therby open, ſo that hee could not paſs his horſe, it had not bene now in ſuſpence; his brother being come downe with a greate army, which if hee paſs upon the yce, being theire tyme to make the warre, and the ſeaſon wherin theſe people will not bee drawne into the field, ther is nothing to ſtopp them from the ports of this citty. Hereby the Mediterran is expoſed, and left without any guard, unleſs they truſt to the forces of Tunes and Algier, and to the gallyes of Biſerte; whome, out of queſtion, they nouriſh purpoſly for their defence, though, in reſpect of trade, to their greate loſſe: or els they are confident, that the armados of Spaine, Naples, and Sicily, that only can offend them, are buſied in preſeruing the idoll gold of Genoua, which hath drawne the French cannon to ſacrifice before it.

THERE hath lately a litle rebell appeared in Natolia, one Janet Ogli, a ſimple Spahee, not aboue 24 yeares of age, dwelling in the playnes of Tirria; who, under the couler of reformation, or il bien public, came downe to Smirna with 10000 followers. The citty, amazed, ſent hither for ſuccours; but receiued an anſwere, as cold as their meanes to helpe them. The Chriſtians fledd to their ſhipps by chance in the port, the gouernour to the caſtle; but, it ſeemes, hee had priuate quarrells with ſome great men in the towne, whoſe faction ſent out 4000 ſhott, to keepe a paſſage; who being beaten, hee came before the citty, and executed his will, beheaded two caddees, puniſhed diuers inſolent ſouldiours, placed and diſplaced the officers; and proclayming peace in the grand ſignor's name, offending no priuate man, nor doing any ſpoyle, but giuing a particular protection to the conſulls, and promiſing them, in their quarrell, if they were oppreſſed, to retorne with his rodd of correction, he departed to his owne home without any further trouble. The opperation of his medicine hath proued wholſome, though it appeared dangerous. Hee pretended to haue order from the ſtate, a diſorderly way; but I cannot diſcouer ſo much here, but that they rather conniue, then approue this rude execution of juſtice; illi meruere; ſed quis te judicem conſtituit? fearing by any rough way, to thruſt him into open rebellion.

YOUR lordſhip hath the platforme of more newes; which, as it growes, I will not faile to ſend you. And ſo, refuging to your lordſhips fauor and protection, I reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$.
June, 1625.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

CONCERNING the publique, I haue little to tell your lordſhip, beſides that I writ vnto you in my laſt of the 3. of June; onely, here incloſed, I ſend you another relation, to be added to that of the prince of Piedmonts progreſſe: his next entrepriſe will be Sauona, which place he doth intend now to inueſt both by land and ſea, being prouided of ſhips and gallyes ſufficient for that entrepriſe. The duke of Sauoye and the conſtable haue reſolued to giue ouer the entrepriſe of Genoua for a tyme; and hauing retyred their ſupernumerary canon and ammunition into Gauye, and well preſidiated all the paſſages, their purpoſe was to retyre towards Aſti. The reaſons of this reſolution are theſe:

FIRST, The duke of Sauoye was aduertiſed, that the duke of Feria had a purpoſe to make a ſtrong incurſion vppon the plat campaigne of Piedmont; and that he had made prouiſion of ſithes and cicles, to cut downe all the graſſe and corne before harueſt; that ſo he might famiſh the armye of Sauoye in the mountaynes of Genoua, where there is no prouiſion, but what doth come from Piedmont. To preuent this inconueniency, and to ſaue his country from vtter deſolation, he hath thought it fit to draw vp towards Aſti, with his army, and to obſerue a little the proceedings of the duke of Feria.

SECONDLY, It is certainely knowen, that the duke of Feria hath expreſſe order out of Spayne, not to hazard a battaile vppon any tearmes; but to aſſiſt the Genoeſi as farre as he can, without aduenturing vppon any perilous incounter. This being knowen vnto the duke of Sauoye and the conſtable, they haue thought it fit to take their aduantage; and do ſuppoſe, that they may haue a good bargaine in aſſayling a generall, who hath commiſſion not to fight; and therevppon they haue reſolued to ſet vppon the ſtate of Milan, where they ſhall haue ſome aduantages of conſideration.

THIRDLY and laſtly, One of the principall motiues of this reſolution is a deſyre they haue to draw in the Venetians into the dance: for whereas hitherto this ſtate hath kept itſelfe from hauing part in any entrepriſe againſt the Genoeſi, now, as ſoone as the French and Sauoyard armyes do enter vppon any part of the ſtate of Milan, they muſt, by expreſſe capitulation, enter likewiſe vppon that part of the ſtate of Milan, which doth confine with their dominions. Wee ſhall ſee uery ſhortly, which way the ſtorme will fall; and if theſe ſeigniori be put to it, I am perſwaded, they will really performe what they haue promiſed: for they are ſtrong enough to make ſuch a diuerſion, and they do prouide to arme potently by ſea, that in caſe the Spanyards or Imperialiſts ſhall attempt any thing againſt them in terra ferma, they may haue their reuenge vppon Apulia and Calabria, which, being open to their ſea, and vnfortifyed, will eaſily be expoſed to any ſudaine inuaſion.

THE Valtelina doth afford no good newſe; for the marquis di Coeuures, who hath beene at a pauſe a long tyme, hauing lately aduentured to ſet vppon Noua, (which is in the ſtate of Milan) hath beene repulſed with the loſſe of fifty men at the leaſt, and 200 hurt. The fault is layde vppon emulation betwixt monſieur de Vaubecourt, and thoſe of the regiment of Normandye; but the marquis doth ſuffer a little in his reputation, although it is thought he will ſhortly regayne it.

2625. THE Spaniſh ambaſſador, who arriued here the laſt weeke, hath not yet made his entry, nor taken any howſe; and therfore nothing can be ſayde of him, vntill he haue his audience.

I DO againe returne unto your lordſhip harty thancks for your laſt of the $\frac{16}{26}$. of Aprill; and as you haue begunne there with the ambaſſador of Tranſiluania, ſo wee are prouiding here to ſecond you; and I am drawing ſome inſtructions for one who is to goe to him from the count de la Tour.

I HAUE nothing elſe to adde unto my laſt of the 3. of June; and therfore here I will make bold to kiſſe the hands of your fayre lady, and euer reſt

Venice, 10 June, 1625.
ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate, to do you ſeruice,

I. WAKE.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

BY the laſt ordinary, I receiued newes ſadd enough to ſilence mee for a fewe dayes: ingentes ſtupent. My teares and ſorro wes will come too late, and perhapps vnſeaſonably, when his ſonne, our Northerne ſunne, by whoſe glorious riſing nox nulla ſequuta eſt, wilbee ſo high in our horiſon, that the beames of his majeſtie will haue dryed vpp the vniuerſall dewe fallen vpon his kingdomes. Yet, ſeeing there is a ſeaſon allowed to euery mans griefe, and that wee liue in ſo happy dayes, where it is lawfull for honeſt men, for ſo good a king, ut cuique libitum, flere; and that they are not the worſt ſeruants to a newe maſter, that loued faithfully the old; I alſo ſhall haue leaue, non ignavo queſtu defunctum proſequi. I purpoſe not to make his funerall oration, but to tell your lordſhip, what impreſſion the aduiſe of the death of ſo great a prince, to whom Europe did owe the bleſſing of her peace, did worke in this vtmoſt corner thereof. Nemo adulatur mortuos: but this relation is due to his honor, and cannot bee buried with him without robbery. When I acquainted the ambaſſadors reſident with that which had before filled their hearts with ſorrowe, they brake out into ſo abundant weeping, eſpecially the French, and to ſo vehement expreſſions of griefe, and celebration of his glorious vertues, as if euery one had loſt a prince, a father, or whatſoeuer could bee deareſt. When this newes came lower, among the chriſtian nations liuing here, idem omnium gemitus, neque diſcerneres Anglos, alienos, ſubditorum, extraneorumve planctus. Only herein was the difference from that vniuerſall mourning in Rome: there was no deſperation, no crye, Concidiſſe rempublicam, nihil ſpei reliquum. All men alike applyed to themſelues the conſolation, that hee had left vs a king, ſo enſtructed and ſeaſoned in his ſchoole of virtues and wiſedome, that though a phœnix was dead, the race was immortall; and that Eliahs ſpiritt would bee doubled vpon Eliſha. And thus our ſorrowes were conuerted into prayers, for the long, proſperous and happy raigne of his majeſtie.

WHEN I ſawe this inclynation, I could not omitt to doe ſomwhat extraordinary, at leaſt here, to the honor of my maſter: I ſent all the ambaſſadors blacks, our owne nation willingly taking the habitt of mourning; and though a charge aboue my ability, I will ſpare nothing that may expreſſe my laſt duty to his bleſſed memory.

THE vizier, in the name of the grand ſignor, and all the miniſters of this ſtate, (a ciuility and honor neuer formerly vſed to any chriſtian prince) ſent an aga, to condole the generall loſſe, and to congratulate the aſcention of his majeſtie, which wilbee expreſſed by the grand ſignors letters, with offer of the antient amity, by the firſt occaſion; and was deliuered in as honorable and reſpectfull termes, as if it had come from the greateſt maſter of art of ceremonyes.

TO leaue a ſadd theame, and to returne to buſineſs: Since the diſpatch of my laſt here incloſed, which brings the demands of the imperiall commiſſioners, wherein is to be obſerued an inſinuation of a longer peace, and a kind of begging thereof, and the aduiſe of Gabor vpon them, which wee thought had vtterly quenched the affections of the baſſa of Buda, to renewe the terme, and to tye the hands of the prince of Tranſiluania; it hath fallen out, that corruption of gold hath wrought more effectually with him, then all other conſiderations; and hee hath ſent his kinſman with the aduiſe of concluſion of peace, made or prolonged, wherein the Imperialls haue yielded, and renounced all pretences. The ſumme is, 1625. Chi tien, tiene: for the reſt, all things are referred to former treatyes, only one article added newe, That preſently two great ambaſſadors ſhould bee mutually diſpatched, to ratify this treaty, which was procured by the commiſſioners of the emperour for oſtentation, and to publiſh, and thereby to threaten his other oppoſites, that hee hath made all ſafe at this back dore: butt withall, it confeſſeth both their weakeneſs, and the old opinion, that the houſe of Auſtria is more ambitious to oppreſſe their chriſtian neighbours, then to oppoſe the common enemy. Gabor hath made cleare demonſtrations of his auerſion to this concluſion, and his diſſimulations are deeper then the ſea, if hee deceiue vs; for his miniſters doe labour that it may not bee confirmed, or at leaſt that hee may bee left free to his owne quarrells, as prince of Tranſiluania. And they haue made a proteſt, that hee hath done his duty, by faithfull councell; but if hee neither haue creditt, nor the viziers will ſee the opportunity, that hee was reſolued not to looſe it, but to ioyne with his frends againſt them, in whoſe peace hee had no ſecurity: and if there bee no great change in his thoughts, which wee cannott here diſcouer, whatſoeuer the councell of this ſtate ſhalbee, hee may paſſe the Rubicon, before hee receiue any countermand. And there doth not appeare to mee any great doubt, that hee ſhalbee reſtreyned; for the vizier hath vtterly refuſed the ratification, both to the ambaſſadors, and to the emperours agent, to his extreame confuſion, which only can giue life to the treaty, which elſe is a ſimple communication; blaming the baſſa of Buda for miſvnderſtanding his orders, and profeſſing, that they hauing peace with the emperour, the grand ſignor will maynteyne it to the expiration of the tyme, which yet dureth 18 moneths: then if the emperour deſire peace, they will hearken vnto him, vpon ſuch conditions as ſhall conforme with the eſtate of their affaires; but before, they would make no agreement, as beeing ſuperfluous. This is the anſwere giuen, both to the baſſa of Buda, and to the miniſters of Gabor; to which the vizier hath added, that the baſſas upon the frontire ſhall drawe their forces to Peſt, according to the firſt order, to ſhowe their confines armed; and that Gabor ſhall renownce all intelligence with the emperour, and vſe euery occaſion for the help of his frends, and the generall good. The agents of the prince haue vrged to haue this commiſſion in writing, which is promiſed; but ſhall bee giuen warily, to auoyd a preſent breach begunne on their parts, for which they are not ready.

WHAT I can collect out of theſe darke and myſteriall proceedings, is, that the vizier is perplexed betweene two affections, loath to giue occaſion to the emperour, and as loath that Gabor ſhould looſe it: and ſeeing a treaty is ſo farre aduanced, and that the deſire of peace concurrs with the generall ſenſe of many great miniſters of this ſtate, conformable to an old rule of this empire, That whenſoeuer they haue warre with the Perſian, they are content to make vpp all other breaches, hee will not aduenture himſelfe to bee the author of any warre; but conſidering that there is no great feare, while the emperour is ſo buſied in other parts, of any offence from that ſide, hee is content, by an vnderhand way, that this ſtate may at pleaſure diſauowe and excuſe, that Gabor ſhall take his tyme, to vexe and keepe the Imperialls lowe, and perhapps to ſnatch ſomwhat from them, working vpon the aduantage of the occaſions, and deferring any concluſion of newe peace, to take or leaue it, as the ſucceſſe of the other warrs in Germany ſhall councell them: in the meane tyme to diſſemble with all, leauing the lions ſkynne to march in the foxes.

THIS beeing the ſubſtance of what is done, I will preſume to deliuer ſome opinion. I am perſwaded, that the vizier really will not ratify the peace, but lett Gabor looſe to take any aduantage; and am confident, hee wilbee in armes, and that ſyncerely he doth offer himſelfe to partake in the generall quarrell, wherein hee is not without aymes and ambitions of his owne; and that this retyring of the grand ſignor from any declaration, will turne him better to account diuers wayes; for it will take off the ſcandall, that he makes the warre as a vaſſall of the grand ſignor, and the proffitt of it will redound wholly to himſelfe, where the Turks can pretend no ſhare in that, in which they aſſiſted not; and that hee ſeekes the continuance of his protection, as cunningly as they giue it, and with diuers ends; theirs, in hope to aduance by him; his, only to haue a ſafe retraict in the various euents of warre. Proin agendum audendumque eſt, obſeruing the rule, opportunos magnis conatibus tranſitus rerum: for if now againe Gabor bee ſlighted, and not encouraged by ſome countenance, 1625. the authors of the councell (ſaluo megliore giuditio) will enforce him to become wholly imperiall, and make him, per ſdegno, of a neceſſary frend, a dangerous enemy. Theſe lucubrations beeing the fruict of my zeale to his majeſties ſeruice, your honor wilbee pleaſed to preſent vnder your protection: in which, and his gracious interpretation, I will reſt ſafe and ſecure.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{13}{23}$.
June, 1625.

Your Honors humble ſeruant.

To my Lord Archbiſhop of CANTERBURY.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

IN the affaires of this empire there is no change ſo greate, nor matter of addition, that may excuſe mee for bringing your grace newe trouble, only the encreaſe of the wrath of God againſt this citty, by the ſickneſs which beginns to rage, and hath driuen mee into ſanctuary to a monaſtery, lent mee by the patriarch, by a retyred life to auoyd the contagion. I expect him here within fewe dayes, to deliuer your graces remembrance of him. And finding, in the concluſion of your graces letter, a purpoſe to write to him, I will preſume to become a ſuitor, that you will bee pleaſed to doe it; and therein, if you haue receiued his letters ſent by my conueyance, to take knowledge of them, and of his many fauours and courteſyes to mee. Your grace ſhall doe mee ſome aduantage, and enable mee therby to doe more in my purpoſe of collecting Greeke authors, that are loſt to vs, and not in print; of which the patriarch is able richly to ſtore England, and hath thereunto a good inclynation. I haue an old manuſcript of the ſeauen firſt councells in my poſſeſſion, but not yett myne owne, lent mee by him, to compare with the edition of Bynius, who pretends to haue taken his from that very copy in the Arabicque tongue, the booke hauing antiently belonged to the patriarchs of Alexandria, and from thence brought, as a great jewell, by Cyrillus. All I can yett find is, that Bynny hath left out 4 canons; what hee hath altered, is more ſuſpitious, the whole number beeing 84, with the ſubſcription of the biſhopps in their owne order, confuſed by Bynny. I haue begunne to deale playnly with the patriarch, who hath made a great collection, that his old books rott and ruſt by him, among ignorant Greeks, that neuer will vnderſtand, nor make vſe of them; that in right they belong to the church of God, that will publiſh them; that they are weapons fitt for champions, and not for colloyres. I find hee ſcarſe knowes the names of many, I am ſure, not their contents, nor the reputation of their authors; many hiſtories, eccleſiaſticall and ciuill, that may bee great lights vnto vs of the darker tymes; and haue motioned to make an exchange, and to furniſh him with a compleate library of all claſſique authors, and bodyes of learning, which the Greek church haue not, which wilbee of vſe to him, and his ſucceſſors, to leaue to his ſea, from whence thoſe learnings may bee drawne, of which they are nowe wholly ignorant, in exchange of ſuch of his which doe no good, beeing buried in obſcurity. Hee hath promiſed to hearken vnto mee, and to beſtowe ſome vpon the libraryes of England; and others hee purpoſeth to other places of Chriſtendome; but my ambition is to keepe them together.

THEREFORE, if your grace will giue mee encouragement, and by his majeſtie, or ſome other able meanes, make mee prouiſion to trade for this rich merchandiſe, I make no queſtion but to giue you a good retorne; and to direct mee herein, your graces chapleynes will take the paynes to ſend mee a catalogue of ſuch authors as are mentioned in any bibliothecque, and are not extant: it is very likely, from hence they may bee ſupplyed; for here are great numbers that none of vs knowe, and my judgment is belowe this worke. I knowe doctor Goade is able to enſtruct mee in two howers, for my ſearch for many moneths.——

[The Contents of the reſt of this may be ſeen in the following Letter.]

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I MUST change my old theame of the treatyes in the border of Hungarye, which yet reſts unratifyed and uncerteyne, the conſtancy of the vizier beeing battered with dayly guifts, and the full reſolution of Gabor depending from France, to take in hand a new of much more conſequence. It ſeemes, though the Imperialls obteyne their deſires in that peace, yet the game is not ſure, nor theire ends without impediments, if Spaine alſo bee not ſett at the ſame libertye; to which end there is dayly here expected (in name an ambaſſador, but, in power not much leſs) a gentleman, ſent from Naples, landed at Raguſa, 28 dayes ſince, with inſtructions to make ouerture of a peace in the behalfe of the kyng of Spayne: hee comes armed, and is reported to prepare his welcome with greate preſents, and a power of mony, with order to guild ouer all his propoſitions, that they may be eaſely ſwallowed: what they are, I yet know not, but the baſis, to make peace, and to perſwade this ſtate, with the Auſtrians, as an eaſy woorke, to diuide the world. The tyme wherin this offer is begunn, may giue theſe people light enough to diſcouer the deceipt, and that the Spaniard doth only purpoſe to enterteyne them with guifts and treatyes, untill he bee diſengaged from his other troubles; and there ſhalbe nothing omitted to unmaske the falſhood; but the odds of weapon is dangerous, and the reſolution is taken, what cannot be woonne by reaſon, to buy with mony. Theſe are the glorious catholicque rules, neuer to make any amity with infidells, except to haue the leyſure to roote out heriticques; and this ſhould open our eyes: it threatens ſomwhat ſome where elſe, that the emperor and the king of Spayne, at one inſtant, ſeeke ſo hottly, and at any prodigalitye of honor and expence, a peace with thoſe their ancient profeſſed enemyes, whoſe neighborhood and terror kept them in ſome bounds from ouer-running the bancks preſcribed them. The vizier, and other miniſters of this empire, profeſs they will not harken unto him, and that they know fidem Hiſpanicam; but yet they deſire to ſee his preſents, and to finger them; whoſe operation I only feare. If this meſſenger be well receiued, an ambaſſador from Spayne is ready, cum plena potentia, to ſecond him. Your honor will in your wiſdome weigh the conſequence, and enforme his majeſtie, and procure mee directions which way to diſpoſe my ſeruice. Wee muſt angle with the ſame golden hooke, and I haue intimated to his grace my lord of Buckingham the ſhorteſt and eaſyeſt way to be furniſhed by St. Marke, whoſe dangers and feares are next the dore.

By this peace, if the Spaniard obteyne yt, his gallyes wilbe free for any attempt in the gulfe of Venice; his gariſons in Calabria, Sicily, Sardignia, and the ſea coaſt, at liberty for any ſeruice in Italye; it may bee accounted to ſpare the chardge of 20000 men, which, turned any other way, wilbe of greate importance. I aduiſed his majeſtie of this practice, a yeare paſt; but the true way to preuent it was then omitted: it will aske tyme to bring to concluſion, and ſhall not want ſuch croſſes as reaſon will offer to us. When hee is arriued, and hath begunne his negotiation, I ſhalbe able to giue his majeſtie and your honor a more certeyne account. In the meane tyme, I beſeech you, lett it bee well conſidered in England.

My owne ſutes to your honor are in their right place, when they are laſt; and becauſe my wife hath preſumed ſo much, to enforme her owne caſe to your lordſhip, I will only aske both our pardons, and lay the fault vpon neceſſitye; that if this penſion bee taken from mee, I muſt ſtill hold this plow, or till in ſome wild vineyard, to liue. I haue ſpent in his majeſties and the publicque ſeruice, of my owne, in this imployment, aboue 1000 l. in many former, more then I am now woorth, and neuer receued one penny from his majeſties coffers.

I am bold to ſay, I ſerue him here with honor; and if hee pleaſe to command mee, I doubt not I might with ſome profitt. I cannot then diſpayre, inſteed of recompence, nor beleeue, that the little I haue, by his bleſſed fathers bountye, ſhalbe taken from mee. My ſute to your honor is only to ſpeake for my poore wife, to enforme our eſtate to his majeſtie, if there bee any feare of reducing of penſions; and to put his grace the duke of Buckingham in mynd of our humble petition ſent him: but if there bee no cauſe of this our jealoſye, then to forgiue us for the importunitye of the back and belly; for they cryed to us to preuent their wants; and to beſeech the duke to reſerue his fauor for other occaſions. If there bee any other error, that I haue ouerſeene, your lordſhip putt it to my wiues account, who, like a woman, may offend more ſecurely; and accept mee for your ſeruant, according to the truth of that heart that honors you. And ſo I committ your lordſhip to the gratious keeping of our moſt bleſſed God.

Conſtantinople, 30. June,
old ſtile, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble frend and ſeruant.

From

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE armyes of the league, in theſe parts, haue done ſo little of late, that the contrary party, hauing had tyme to reinforce, hath (togither with the aduantage of reputation purchaſed by the taking of Breda) reſumed courage; and now it will be a hard matter to effect, with a great ſtrength, that which might eaſily haue beene donne, at the beginning, with ſmaller forces. The conneſtable doth ſuffer in the opinion of the worlde, for hauing proceeded ſo coldly; and the excuſe of his beſt frends is hardly admitted, who would couer his cunctation with the greatneſſe of his age; becauſe he did beginne this warre with more viuacity, then he hath ſince purſued it withall. His enemyes haue beene bolde to accuſe him directly of corruption, as if he had taken monny of the Genoeſi to ſpare their towne; which ſuſpition was grounded vppon the ſurpriſe of the count di Tallard, ſonne vnto monſieur d'Auriac, one of the mareſchalls of the campe, who hath beene diſcouered to haue written vnto Genoa all that did paſſe in the army of the league; and their being of the howſe de Bonne, and of the conſtables bloud, malice had a large campe to ſpeake the worſt with freedome: but, by good fortune, an ill incounter hath cleared him of this aſperſion; for as he was paſſing from Gaui to Riualta, a place belonging to the duke of Mantoua, an imbuſcado was layed for him; and when all the trouppes were paſſed, but his owne guardes, which had the rereward, they were furiouſly aſſaulted, and ten, beſides his lieuetenant, killed vppon the place; and had he not beene relieued by the duke of Sauoye, who did diſpatch, in great diligence, the caualerie Sauoyard to ſuccor him, both he and all his trouppes had beene cut in peices. By this accident it is apparent to the world, that he hath no ſeacret intelligence with the contrary party; and in truth, he doth proſecute with ſuch paſſion both the count di Tallard and his father, that it ſhould ſeeme he doth intend, that their exemplary puniſhment ſhall juſtifye his innocency. Now they muſt goe more ſlowly to worke; but it is thought they will likewiſe proceede more ſurely: for as the Spanyards and Genoeſi are greatly renforced, ſo do there dayly come great recrewes vnto the duke of Sauoye and the conneſtable, who do make account very ſhortly to be able both to make head againſt the duke of Feria, and to purſue their deſigne againſt the Genoeſi; which will be no impoſſible matter, if the ſleete do come about in any tyme.

THE duke of Sauoye, to reuenge the affront offered vnto the conneſtable, did put himſelfe in battaile araye in the very place where the Spanyards had aſſalted the conneſtables guardes; but the enemy, inſteed of appearing in the feild, did ſend a trumpet, to excuſe that act; and to let his highnes knowe, that they had no intention to breake peace with the French king, nor with him; and that what had paſſed was donne in their owne defence, and vppon their owne grownde.

THE forces of the king of Spayne, in Lombardy, at this preſent, do amount vnto 30000 men, whereof 10000 are kept at a baye in the Valtelina, and 5000 at the leaſt muſt be left in ſeueral garriſons, ſo that the duke of Feria will not be able to draw into the feilde aboue 15000 men at the moſt. The Genoeſi haue 10000 auxiliaries, beſides the burgheſſes of their towne; and their greateſt aſſurance doth conſiſt in ſea forces, which do arriue to 60 gallies, and ſome fewe galliones. On the other ſide, the duke of Sauoye and the conneſtable haue of their olde army 20000 men, and there are 18000 more comming to them out of France; ſo that when they ſhall haue ſhips to maſter the Liguſtique ſea, they may perhaps haue the better of the game. The Venetians haue 30000 men at this preſent in terra ferma, and they do arme likewiſe by ſea very powerfully, ſeeming conſtantly reſolued to purſue the deſignes and capitulations of the league. Perhaps the great pawſe, at which the armes of the league haue ſtood of late, may be recompenſed, ere long, with ſome notable action; for I do find, that the leaguers are reſolued not to ſtand vppon the defenſiue, but to improue tyme, before ſupplyes may be ſent to the Spanyards out of Germany, and the Lowe Countryes.

THE duke of Sauoy and the conneſtable haue fixed their tabernacle betwixt Acqui and Nizza della Paglia, where they haue a body of 10000 foote and 3000 horſe, rather more then leſſe. With this ſtrength, they do make account, that they ſhall be able to make head againſt the duke of Feria, and to hinder him from making any inuaſion vppon Piedmont, or from ſuccoring the Genoeſi. The prince of Piedmont, and the marſchal de Crequy were, vppon the 27. of June, at Spino, an imperiall caſtle, ten myles diſtant from Sauona. They haue with them 18000 foote, and ſome few companyes of horſe; and hauing aſſured their backe, by takeing in of Zuccarello, the diſmanteling of Caſtel-vecchio, and well preſidicating all the paſſages, they do intend to march directly towards Sauona, and to lay ſeige immediately vnto that towne. From Liuorne it is written hither, that 40 ſayle of Engliſh, French, and Dutch ſhips, are arriued at Marſeilles; whereof although wee haue no aduice out of Piedmont, yet it is preſumed, that either they are come, or not far of; becauſe it is not likely, that the league would ingage their army before Sauona, vnleſſe they were ſure to be maſters of the ſea, and to ſtop any ſecourſe that might paſſe that way. The Venetians are ſending the beſt and moſt of their forces towards the confine of Milan, wherewith the duke of Feria might perhaps be a little affrighted, if he were not well perſwaded, that theſe ſeigniori will not vndertake any thing offenſiuely, vntill they be much prouoked: and although it be done to giue ſatisfaction vnto the duke of Sauoy, and the conſtable, yet I ſuppoſe they will reape little benefitt thereby; becauſe the duke of Feria will truſt this ſtate, and not weaken his army by ſending any part thereof this way in contemplation of the Venetian approaches. It is true, that if the Venetians had as much actiuity, as they haue circumſpection, theire neighbours might haue juſt cauſe to be afrayd of them at this preſent; for they are able to draw into the feild 20000 men, leauing all their garriſons well preſidcated; and with that force it would be a very eaſy matter for them to poſſeſſe themſelfes of the Gira d'Adda, which is one of the beſt portions in the dutchy of Milan: but certainely they will not leade the dance; and therfore, vnleſſe the army of Piedmont do make the firſt rupture, it muſt not be expected, that this ſtate will paſſe beyond the bounds of a juſtifiable defence. 1625.

MONSIEUR de Candals is arriued here, and hath an entertaynement for 3000 foote; of which number many are already within the dominions of this ſtate, and the reſt are ſayde to followe. He doth profeſſe a great deuotion to this ſeruice, and doth ſeeme reſolued to ſet vp his reſt here. All that come hither are receaued, and all that offer themſelfes abroade are entertayned; whereby it may playnely appeare, that the intentions of this ſtate are reall, and that they will be ready to execute the capitulations of the league.

THE duke of Alcala hath beene at Rome a month, and don Carlo Beneuento di Beneuidos ſix weekes in this towne, without making their ſolemne entry, or taking poſſeſſion of their employments. Now they will beginne to appeare; for our ambaſſador here did made his entry the laſt night, and hath beene admitted this morning into the college, where his firſt audience was publique, and by conſequence formall. Alcala is to appeare in Rome publiquely at this tyme, and the great miſtery of their hauing deferred ſo long tyme to ſhew themſelfes in publique, is found to be a deſyre they had to make their firſt entery in a triumphant manner, for the conqueſt of Breda. They did ſuppoſe, that with that newſe they ſhould haue daunted all Italye; but they will come ſhort of their expectation: for whereas the pope was moued vnderhand to make demonſtration of joy by fireworks, as Paulus quintus did for the battaile of Praghe, and Gregory the XV. for the aſſumption of the duke of Bauaria to the electorate; he returned anſwer, That, as pope, he was placed in that chaire, to iudge onely of matters of faith; and, as a temporall prince, he had no intereſt in theſe affaires. And as for our ambaſſador here, he hath loſt his hope of receauing any congratulation from this ſtate, becauſe they haue already preuented him, by paſſing offices of condoleancy with the ambaſſador of the States, expreſſing as much ſence of that loſſe, as if it had beene their owne.

THE leaguers, who haue ſlept ſo long in the Valtelina, were awaked the laſt weeke with a rude alarme, occaſioned by the perfideouſneſſe of a Griſon; who flying to the enemy, vppon the 24. of June, did aſſure Poppenhaim, that the canon of the league was retyred, and that their garriſon at Campo was halfe ſicke, and altogither carelelſe and ſecure. Vppon this aduiſe Poppenhaim did aduance towards thoſe trenches; but by good fortune, two peices of artillery, which remayned at Verzey, did hinder his paſſage, and force him to retyre with ſome loſſe. Whereuppon finding 1625. himſelfe to be abuſed, he did preſently hang vp the falſe ſpye, and cauſe his wife to be whipped out of the army. The marquis di Coeuures, finding the entrrepiſe of Riua to be impratticable, hath reſolued to build a fort royall at the mouth of the vallye, to aſſure that which he hath taken; and if he can parta tueri, it will redound to his honor, conſidering that the enemy is very ſtrong at his ſydes, and that the Valtelineſchi are very ill affected to the league; ſo that really there is as much danger to be feared from them, as from the enemye.

MY laſt unto your lordſhip were of the 10th of June, and the laſt I had from you were of the $\frac{16}{26}$. of April. What I haue ſince receaued for your lordſhip, doth goe here incloſed; as likewiſe ſomething for Mr. Petty, unto whom I deſire to be remembred. So wiſhing you, and your noble lady, all happineſſe, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 4 July,
1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate, to do you ſeruice,

I. WAKE.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honourable,

THERE hath come no late aduice from Tranſiluania. The ambaſſador newly diſpatched hence, is dead on the way, which may giue ſome impediment: but I doubt not, his papers and letters are collected by a ſecretary, that was his aſſiſtant, and fully enſtructed from hence. I am wholy conuerted to beleeue, that the prince will doe ſomewhat, if ſome cold anſwere from Chriſtendome doe not diſcourage him. The Neapolitan Mercury is arriued in or neare the citty; his major domo was entred 6 dayes ſince, to take vpp his pallace; but, it ſeemes, hee ſeeks one with Port-atras, to ſhift in and out inviſibly. His trayne conſiſts of a fewe manumitted ſlaues, ſent home to introduce his welcome, and ſome 8 or 10 droles of his moyles and black guard. The Portugall Jewes, who ſerue as ſtewards in all great houſes, and ſome banditi Moorefranks, flockt out to meete him, who haue eaſy acceſs in all places for their fables. Theſe haue giuen out woonders of the preſents which hee ſhould bring; and that hee hath two ſhipps in the ayre, laden with all ſorts of rich merchandize, to ſhowe the glory and greatneſs of his maſter; and to inſinuate the vnknowne proffitt, may bee raiſed to this empire, by a trafficque with the golden ſubiects of Spaine. Yett, when I ſearch after his proceedings, I can diſcouer nothing but fumo. Parturiunt montes, naſcetur ridiculus don. I cannot learne where hee layes his politicque head, nor where hee hydes his treaſure: ſome ſay, hee is priuatly entered; others, that he ſtayes abroad in a garden, to giue way to the great infection. All that I knowe, is, that hee is a gentleman, ſent from the vice-king of Naples, to diſcouer whether the meſſage of the Jewe, ymployed by an ignorant vizier the laſt yeare, with a looſe commiſſion, that the ports of the grand ſignor were open to all that deſyred his frendſhipp, in theſe change of miniſters wilbee auowed; and that if hee find good acceptance, hee ſhall promiſe the comming of an ambaſſador, with ample authority to treat and conclude, who ſhall bring thoſe mynes (which are yett ſubterrany, and I think in the Indyes) that ſhall blowe vs all vpp. This is the beſt collection I can make, from the variety of reports; ſome writing hither, that the Jewe was ſent vpon a gally by the vice-king for Spaine, where hee was glorioſly receiued, (and the Spanyards omitt not to make vſe of aduantagious vanityes) publiſhing, That hee was an ambaſſador ſent from the grand ſignor, to ſeeke peace: others, and I thinke more truly, that hee is deteyned in faire priſon in Naples, and his meſſage ſuſpected. Whereupon this nuncio is diſpatched, both to make tryall, and to enterteyne theſe great ſtateſmen with treatyes and deluſions. The chiefe miniſters here haue conſulted about his admittance; and though many were againſt it, yett the fame of his guifts did ſo farr open his way, that it was concluded to heare his propoſitions, which muſt bee vſhered in with his preſents; profeſſing to milk him, and then to turne him a grazing. My hopes were, that his owne lyes, and too great expectation, would diſcouer and breake him: and I haue not miſſt much; for hee appeares not yet in action, and is much fallen in reputation.

THE emperours agent this weeke made a viſitt to the vizier, and beganne to inſinuat for him an audience. I am enformed from one that was preſent, that hee receiued very little countenance; and was anſwered, That theſe 40 yeares, wherein the vizier had ſerued as a publique miniſter, hee neuer ſawe any ſyncere diſpoſition in the king of Spaine to ſeeke peace, nor any meſſenger directly from him, which made this newe and ſodaine kindneſs ſuſpitious; diſauowing (in effect the Jewes letter) that neither the emperour, nor hee, knewe any thing of the matter, nor that euer any ſuch thing was in queſtion or conſultation here; that therefore hee might retorne from whence hee came, and doe his buſines with them that ymployed him. It ſeemes, the hope of his liberalityes is vaniſhed, and the vizier hath either diſcouered, that his moyles are behind, or gaue him this ſharp anſwere, to make him muſter vp his beſt commodityes to redeeme the opinion loſt of him, and to procure a milder enterteynment, when hee ſhall appeare in his owne likeneſs. What to beleeue of this practice, is yett beyond my capacity; but my opinion is, That nothing can bee tranſacted by this engine; and that there will bee tyme to diſcouer and preuent an ambaſſador, if Saint Marke will ſpend; without which weapon the Spaniard (who doubtleſs will follow the treaty, either really or for breathing) may obteyne peace with theſe, who by their many diſtractions are ſoftened, and prepared to agree with all men; and both of them concurre in one maxime, to regulate their faith by their proffitt. In the meane tyme, this fore-runner muſt bee lookt into; becauſe his proſelites giue out, That hee comes aſwell to ſupplant, as to ſowe his owne cockle: and there are ſome ſuſpitious coniunctures. The treaty of Buda; a Greeke, priuatly ymployed hither by the pope, for ends not incongruous; and a practicque prieſt, or *Benedict fryar, that vnder the pretence of trading for ſlaues, conueyes much matter into the Seraglio, at the woemens back dores, all concurrent, and arriued within one moneth: and though yet this Spaniſh inſtrument play leaſt in ſight, conſpiracies are hatcht in the darke, and ſuch is any frendſhipp betweene Spaine and Turky. I make no doubt, hee will ſhortly come abroad, and trouble vs to ouerſee him: I hope hee ſhall not effect his ends, though it bee too much, if hee can but deceiue and deferre his maſters feares, and add ſo much reputation to his armyes, who haue their hands full in other parts, that hee is out of danger from hence.

* Berill.

THE ordinary occurrents of theſe parts I haue ſent apart to your lordſhip, deſiring, if his majeſtie, and the duke, or my lord of Pembroke, take any pleaſure to heare of ſtrange afflictions here, that you will impart them, and theſe my letters, written with zeale to his majeſties ſeruice, though, I ſee, not eſteemed, as too farr out of the way: for I haue receiued but one letter from your lordſhip, nor no other from any miniſter of his majeſties, in 9 moneths. Nothing can diſcourage mee, becauſe I muſt doe my vnproffitable duty. Vnder your lordſhips ſhadowe, if they bee accepted, I haue my reward; if not, it wilbee an eaſe to mee, and your lordſhip, that I preuent you of theſe troubles, and remayne

Halchys in the gulph of Nicomedia,
15/25. July, 1625.

Your Lordſhips faithfull, though ydle ſeruant.

Relations from Conſtantinople, 14. July, 1625.

JANETT-OGLY, a young Spahie, mentioned in my laſt relations to haue diſturbed Smyrna, is agayne in armes, with a far greater power, that follow the proſperitye of his former attempts: he is marched toward Burſia in Natolia, and now this ſtate is forced to take his actions into conſideration, which they would haue ouerſeene. Ther hath beene two councells held about him, and a reſolution taken, dum fluxa authoritas et nova, to reſiſt the beginnings, and to find out ſome ſtrength to ſuppreſs him: but who ſhall command, who will obey, or whom to truſt, is not yet agreed. He uſeth the name of the grand ſignor, and the common blind of rebellion, reformation; but what he would haue, or whither his deſſignes will draw him, is the more dangerous for the vncerteyntye.

THE armado ſent into the Black-ſea, arriuing at Varna, a garriſon kept by Gebegies, an inferior order of ſoldiers, ther fell out a quarrell betweene them and the janizaries. Theſe, after the ſway of their inſolencye, would take from the other their ouens, in their owne towne; which beeing not endured, a priuatt fray was begunne betweene them; which breaking out into a faction, the fellowes of both orders became intereſſed, and engaged; and they fought a ſharp battle: many of 1625. both ſides fell, as is reported, aboue 1000. The capten baſſa, who could not preuent this quarrell, ſought to appeaſe yt, by doing ſome juſtice agaynſt the Gebegies; but, it ſeemes, it was enough to enrage them agaynſt him, as partiall; and too little to ſatisfye the Janizaries, who thervpon forſooke the gallyes, and keepe the land. What they will doe, or whither they are marched, the newes beeing yet freſh, is vnknowne; but hereby the armado is left without ſoldiers to guard yt, in danger of the Tartars or Coſſacks.

THE great vizier in Aſya hath giuen command, that no ſoldier ſhall retyre to winter garriſon, but ſtay with the army about Babilon, the fitteſt ſeaſon to make the warr; diſpoſing himſelfe, in the meane tyme, to take in places of leſs import.

ABASSA baſſa mooueth not, and promiſeth obedience in all things, but to goe out of his hold of Arzerum, which he hath peremptorilye refuſed.

THE yeare and ſeaſon beeing full of contagion, I haue obſerued ſome fore-warnings, and ſome extraordinarye diſpoſitions of the ayre and accidents.

ON the 8. of May, at midnight, ther was an earthquake that ſhooke twice: my bed danced vnder mee, and all the walls of the houſe did cracke. It endured at leaſt 6 minutes after yt awakened mee; and croſſing the ſea, was felt in Greece, Aſya, and the Iſlands.

ON Munday the 29. June, at night, began a moſt terrible tempeſt, with ſo violent and continuall thunder and lightning, that all the cytty of Conſtantinople ſhowed as if it had beene a fire: at the end wherof fell a ſtorme of hayle, that brake tyles and glaſſes. By report, ſtones were taken vp of 150 dramms; but from credible witt-neſſes, that weighed diuers the next morning, there were found of 60 and 70 dramms apeece, which is about 7 or 8 ounces, wherwith many were wounded.

ON Sunday the 3. July, another tempeſt of thunder and lightning began at Conſtantinople; which burned a woman and her child in their bed, and ſlew much cattle in the feild.

THE 5. July the ſicknes was growne to that height, that the Turkes proclaymed their publicque proceſſion and prayers; which is performed with great ſolemnitye by the muſty, and all the mullaes, accompanied with the viziers, and the cheife of the cytty, attended by the people, at a little moſchy on the edge of the playne of Ackmadan, ouer the water, on Pera ſyde; which ceremonye is neuer uſed, vntill the mortalitye exceed 1000 a day; which is eaſely knowne by the burialls, that are all made without the walls, and account of them are kept at euery port: and that day was numbred, only to goe out at the gate of Adrianople, 917. On the 8. following, 1034. By computation of the whole, beeing many ports of buriall, ther cannot dye leſs then betweene 2 and 3000 a day; beſides Galata, Pera and Scutarye. The infection is ſpread into all the villages.

THE ſame day proclamation was made in the cyttye, that no butcher ſhould kyll mutton; a murraine, or plague, whither is vncerteyne, hauing taken that ſort of cattle ſo violently, that they dye in multitudes, with ſoares, in the feilds; and wee know not what to eate, nor where ſafely to prouide yt.

To the DUTCH Ambaſſador, at Conſtantinople.

My Lord,

I Haue to-day mett and conferred with the agent of Tranſyluania, and read both his inſtructions, and the coppy of his maſters lettre, the ſubſtance wherof I receiued formerly from your lordſhip. I haue anſwered him, That I wilbe ready, by all wayes and meanes, to ioyne with my lords the ambaſſadors for the aſſiſtance of his highnes in all his deſires; and lardgly informe his majeſtie, my maſter, both of his propoſitions, and of the ſinceritye hee ſhowes to the generall cauſe, by his negotiations here, and by promiſe to march with his owne forces toward the frontyre, at leaſt to amuſe the emperor. This is as much as I was able to doe, upon a barren hill; and for the better effecting of the princes demand for the lettre of admonition or licence for his highnes to unite with other chriſtian princes, when hee ſhalbe by them inuited therunto, I mentioned to him the motion made by your and their lordſhips, to beſtow vpon Zulphicar chiaus 400 dollers; and gaue my conſent and promiſe therunto, as conformable to your councels; but withall, hauing read and well weighed the coppy of the lettre required, I found in it two faults, the one of exceſs, the other of defect. The exceſs, that it is grounded upon a requeſt made and declared to the grand ſignor, by the ambaſſadors of their majeſties, of Venice and Holland, 1625. that wheras the kyng of Spayne hath begunn to make warr upon them, therfore they deſire, in the name of their maſters, this liberty of confederacye for the prince; or much to that purpoſe. Now I am perſwaded, they will not auow any ſuch declaration of ours, neyther is it true; for the kyng of Spayne, that I know, hath neyther begun warr with his majeſtie, the French kyng, nor the ſtate of Venice; nor is there any publication of hoſtilitye: wee ought as well to obſerue the ſtile of their proceedings, as their actions. In the Voltaline the kyng of Spayne, not able to hold it, retyred, and left the blow upon the pope: the peices yet in his poſſeſſion are held in the defenſiue. The like courſe hee taketh in the ſtate of Genoua, and the Palatinate; though his forces defend them, yet they march under the couler of others pay, and therby no warr declared. Therfore your lordſhip wilbe pleaſed to deſire their lordſhips to conſider this poynt, and to procure the alteration into a generall woord, that the houſe of Auſtria, hauing oppreſſed many princes, and free ſtates, et cetera; or, if it like their lordſhips, to leaue out all names, wilbe moſt conuenient: for it will not become me to pronounce a warr, wherin my maſter is yet ſilent, and his purpoſe undiſcouered, and mutuall ambaſſadors in eyther ſtates yet reſident. The defect in that lettre is, that there is only required an authoritye to unite with the princes nominated, when hee ſhalbe ſought unto by them, which perhaps may neuer bee; and ſo our labor is uayne, and our purchaſe ſand. If ther had beene any clauſe agaynſt the peace, or command, or councell to the prince, to uſe his owne forces agaynſt the emperor in this oportunitye, it would haue beene more uſefull for our ends, and a better pennyworth, at more expence. But if ther can no more bee added, yet I fynd not, that the ſumm of 400 dollars will content them for that little. The agent begunn with new propoſitions, demanding for the chiaus 1000 dollars, to be depoſited in his hands, upon obteyning this lettre; and to giue a preſent to the reizkatab, and Oſman aga, to facilitate the buſines: and of this motion, he ſayes, hee hath aduiſed your lordſhips. To which I, a ſingle man, could giue no reſolution, but for my ſelfe; which was, that I would preſently communicate it with your lordſhips, and ſubmitt my ſelfe to your iudgments, with promiſe that I would not bee the laſt, nor the moſt unwilling to any expence, that might aduantage his highneſs; ſo that I might ſee ſome effects and fruicte therof. Therfore herein I ſubmitt my ſelfe to your wiſdomes, without any other limitation, then a few cautions, which I would utter, if I were preſent at the conſultations. The firſt is, That your lordſhips wilbe pleaſed to conſider, whither it bee likely, that 1000 dollars will turne the ſcale of peace and warr; for one of thoſe are our aymes. Secondly, Whither the leuitye of this nation bee not ſuch, that wee may feare a grant one day for our mony, and a prohibition the next. Thirdly, If that lettre bee obteyned, as it is written, if it bee woorth any thing: and in this poynt, I am in much doubt; for if the prince bee neuer united to this confederacye by our maſters, or not accepted upon his conditions, what doth it profitt us? That hee will not bee ſought unto, I am ſtrongly of opinion, partly from his owne lettre; that the gentleman ſent from the French kyng, and returned with his propoſitions, hath written unto him of his ſafe arriuall; but not once mentioned any the leaſt intimation, that his motions were taken to conſideration, or into councell, and that coldnes is an implicit refuſall. It cannot be, if they had giuen any content, but his chriſtian majeſtie would haue returned ſome order, to haue prolonged his expectation; and the conditions in themſelues are exorbitant, and ſuch as, I thincke, our maſters will deſpiſe; for at that rate they can hire Swiſſes with greater breeches: beſides, I haue had late aduiſe, from good hands, that the rumor of his offers and demands were not acceptable with ſome others, that haue an equall intereſt. Laſtly, Whither theſe propoſitions ſent, come not too farr out of the way, to be recommended by us, if they bee not gratefull in themſelues, and doe ſeeme rather to enterteyne then ſatisfye us. Notwithſtanding, I will not preiudge, nor withdraw my hand from any ſeruice, eſpecially in this, in which I would ſpend my bloud; but hauing, out of my uſuall freedome with your lordſhips, deliuered both my doubts and ſence, I deſire you to communicate them; and, for the concluſion, I giue freely my conſent among your lordſhips, that I will not part from you for a little mony; though I feare, without the other article, to diſauow the peace, which is the mayne bulwarke wee ſhould batter, it wilbe caſt away: for the emperor makes more aduantage of the bragg, that hee is ſecure on this ſyde, then of the forces hee dare ſpare 1625. in the uncerteynty of Gabor. And thus I deſire your lordſhip to preſent my ſeruice to their eccellencyes of France and Venice; and reſt, &c.

Halchys, 27. July, 1625.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

THE Spaniſh meſſenger is at laſt diſcouered, both what hee is, and what hee would haue. On the way he tooke vpon him the name of an ambaſſador, but nowe lurks vnder another title. The truth is, that his imployment is grounded vpon the letters of the Jewe, who was kept priſoner in Naples vntill anſwere from Spaine, which ordered his releaſe; but to bee ſtayd there vntill ſome aduice from this Janus, who thereupon was diſpatched to liue a ſpy, vnder the reſident of the emperor, in the diſguiſe of his ſecretary, to whom the direction of all his buſineſs is referred. Hee is borne a Bologneſe, and ſerued here Gaſparo Gratiano, both when hee was ſent ambaſſador from the grand ſignor to the emperour, and after, when hee was prince of Wallachia; and beeing ſince retyred to the ſeruice of the king of Spaine, hauing ſome practicque of this cuntry and language, was thought a fitt inſtrument of this negotiation. His inſtructions are, to promoue by the agent, in the name of the vicere of Naples, a perpetuall peace betweene this empire and the houſe of Auſtria. To induce the acceptance thereof, hee doth offer to ſett free all the ſlaues, to the number of 400, now in the Spaniſh captiuity. To keepe the Mediterran ſea cleare from any ſpoiles to bee done vpon the coaſts of the grand ſignor, or vpon his ſubiects and ſhipping; and if any prize be taken, to make reſtitution to a boat of 4 oares; but tells not who ſhall diſtreyne: then may the Malteſes, and the order of St. Stephano, dock vpp their gallyes; and the terrible knights, milites Chriſti, ſayle in the ayre. Thirdly, To make warre vpon the Perſian, vntill hee bee compelled to ſeeke peace of the grand ſignor. And laſtly, To procure the king of Poland to reſtreyne the Coſſacks from all attempts or vaſtations in the Black-ſea, and the ſhores thereof; which propoſitions are well bayted for the preſent allurement of this ſtate, applying to euery ſoare an eſpeciall remedy. The Greeke, and padre Berill, the fryar, mentioned in my laſt letters, were and are of his company and confederacy, though they entered the towne ſeuerally, and like ſtrangers. What effect this practize will take, I can no other way iudge, then from the mouth of the vizier, who ſent mee word this weeke, that hee would heare no more of him, but giue order that hee ſhould auoyd the cuntry: which if hee doe not, to diſcouer him nakedly as a ſpye, and to reueale his dependance vpon Gratiano, who rebelld, and occaſioned the laſt warre with Poland, would, if it were not ſcandalous to hang a chriſtian, finiſh his ymployment.

AND leaſt this generall grayne ſhould not take roote, the vicere of Naples diſpatched two other gentlemen, and a Jewe, the inſtruments of all conſpiracyes, bretheren in euill, vpon the ſame galleot, beeing one of the kings, (which augmented the rumour) with preſents, and large promiſes of mony, into Boſna, to raiſe the Zaniacks, and other the inhabitants of the confines of the Venetians, to enter their ſtate in Friuli, and to make all ſpoile by fire and ſword; hoping thereby to occaſion a quarrell with this empire; whereof the baylo here complayning, obteyned commands to keepe thoſe borderers within their limitts.

FROM theſe ſeuerall practices may bee concluded, that ragione de ſtato hath as much intereſt in the councills of Spaine, as their catholicque title; wherewith they vpbrayde all others, that only exchange wooll for goats haire with theſe people, and may teach vs to leaue that tenderneſs, vim vi opponere, et virtutem dolo.

ON the 22th of this moneth, arriued a poſt from the prince of Tranſiluania, a ſeruant of the agent, diſpatched by order of the vizier to Gabor; that ſeeing hee ſeemed to diſapproue the treaty of Buda, that hee ſhould ſhowe his reaſons, and deliuer his opinion, if a peace were to bee concluded, what conditions were requiſite and honorable for this empire.

HIS anſwere conſiſted of two writings, which I haue heard read; a diſcourſe vpon the treaty, to bee giuen the vizier; and inſtructions to his agent, what other councell and perſwaſions hee ſhould vſe againſt it.

THE copy of the articles hee alſo ſent, printed at Vienna, for more authority; and taking them as his theame, hee ſhowes that they are nothing in ſubſtance, but a confirmation of the peace of Zitwa, which was often broken on the Imperiall part, and could not bee thus ſlubbered ouer, and reioynted, without ſome ſatiſfaction, and more particular declaration. That in the ſecond article of Vatz, it doth appeare, that the Imperialls aymed at no true peace, but only to make any ſhowe of ſtopping the gapp in their neceſſity, ſlightly referring it to the diſcuſſing of ambaſſadors at the port; where, if the emperour ſhall peremptorily remand it, and the grand ſignor deny it, the gate is open for them to breake the peace, when they ſhalbee fitt for it. The like reaſon hee giueth in the concluſion of the other articles, that they conclude nothing in the whole, but to gett tyme to quarrell at their pleaſure; profeſſing, that though his miniſters were preſent at the treaty, yet that hee had proteſted againſt it, as inſidious and diſhonorable. Then hee enueigheth againſt the Germans, and the houſe of Auſtria, that they ſeeke to oppreſſe and conquer the whole world; aduiſing, that the emperour hath raiſed in Bohemia, and the prouinces dependent, 20000 foote, and 6000 equites haſtati, light horſe, vnder the conduct of the prince of Waltheim, to ſend downe to the borders of Fraunce, to oppoſe any ſuccour that ſhalbee giuen to the Palatinate. Hee complaynes, that hee hath had no comfort, not ſo much as a letter from the grand ſignor, to encourage him; or elſe, that hee had long ſince recouered all Hungary, and placed the elector Frederick in Prague: and therefore nowe the ſeaſon beeing loſt for any great action, hee yet promiſeth to march with his owne forces to Caſſouia, his frontire, the 15th of Auguſt; and to winter there, at leaſt to amuſe the emperour, and make him ſtay, or retyre thoſe men hee hath leuied, for the guard of his owne cuntry; beeing aſſured that the Imperialls will not dare to leaue their frontire vnarmed, when they ſhalbee informed of his mouing: and if hee performe thus much, hee ſhowes his ſyncerity, and doth a good ſeruice to the generall cauſe.

a

IN his inſtructions, hee firſt appointeth his agent to deale effectually with the reſident ambaſſadors, to procure a letter from the grand ſignor, to ſett him at abſolute liberty, to make confederacy with their princes, and to ioyne with them againſt the houſe of Auſtria; and that, for the obteyning thereof, they ſhould ſpend, rather then faile, 40 or 50000 dollers, ſuppoſing they haue order from their maſters for greater matters: and the draught of this letter hee hath likewiſe ſent, that nothing of his deſires may bee omitted or miſtaken. Then hee preſſeth the ambaſſadors, that they ſhould, with all expedition, perſwade their princes to take him into their league, vpon the conditions expreſſed and encloſed; declaring, that hee is at peace and ſafe; hath no neede, for his owne affaires, to trouble himſelfe, or endanger his territories, or to ſeeke to them; that therefore, if hee ſhall runne the perill of drawing vpon him many enemyes, only for the quarrell of others, that it is iuſt and reaſon hee ſhould haue ſuch contribution and other caution for his retraict, as becomes a wiſe prince to ground his actions vpon; otherwiſe hee profeſſeth playnly, hee will liue at reſt, and embrace the peace in his owne power: but if hee may haue tymely anſwere and content, that hee will enter the cuntryes of the emperour, to the walls of Vienna and Prague; and neuer make any truce or peace, vntill the princes his colleagues ſhall haue ſatisfaction in all their iuſt deſires. Laſtly, That the ambaſſadors ſhould procure letters from their maſters of extraordinary legation, to bee by them deliuered to the grand ſignor, to perſwade him really and cordially to remitt the diſpoſition of the border army, peace and warre, to the diſcretion of Gabor; promiſing, that hee will thereby ſettle the frends of the port in thoſe frontires, and deliuer this ſtate for euer from the feare of the antient enemyes.

TO the vizier hee giueth theſe councells, That hee doe not ratify the treaty, nor yet vtterly diſauowe it; but that hee ſhall write to the baſſa of Buda, that according to former cuſtome and precedent, an ambaſſador extraordinary from the emperour ought to bring the articles ſealed on their part, with a preſent of 100000 dollers, by the concluſion of Zitwa. To which office none beeing yet elected, it would bee Chriſtmas before hee could bee in order, and arriued; then they might enterteyne him 5 or 6 moneths, about the deciſion of the article of Vatz referred hither, and diſcouer whether they intended a firme peace, and to relinquiſh their claymes, or not: That if in thoſe points they ſhould receiue ſatisfaction, then they might alſo nominate another ambaſſador from the grand ſignor, to carry the ratification to the emperour, which, before hee could bee fitted and diſpeeded, would ſpend other 6 or 8 moneths; and ſo the terme of the peace of Zitwa expired under this delay, without danger of 1625. breach. In the meane tyme they might ſettle their troubles in Aſia, and obſerue the other princes, their frends, proſpered in their warrs againſt the emperour, and take a fitter ſeaſon to conclude a peace or warre with more aduantage. And becauſe it was alſo neceſſary, that during this enterteynement, ſomwhat ſhould bee done to weaken the Imperialls, and to bring them to more reaſon; that hauing reſolued to riſe, and march with his forces to the frontire, to keep the emperour in awe, and his frends in heart, and to gett tyme to know their reſolution, hee would bee neare to take the firſt opportunity of the next ſpring: when, if the grand ſignor would aſſigne him 15000 Turks for his ayd, which hee might doe vnder the couler that they were ſtipendiated by him and his allyes, as iuſtly and ſafely, without breach of the peace, as the emperour did ſend ſupplyes in the late warre to the king of Poland, vnder the like diſguiſe; with which forces hee would make ſo many fires in Stiria, Auſtria and Croatia, that hee would compell the emperour to better termes of neighbourhood. And if the grand ſignor ſhould haue any doubt, that this diſſimulation would not ſerue, but occaſion a warre before they were ready, hee promiſeth, only with that force, to maynteyne the frontire of Hungary at his owne charges, and to the loſſe of the enemy, two yeares, without any other expence or trouble to the port.

THESE are the ſubſtances of the aduiſes and inſtructions now ſent, as farr as my memory could take them, at once hearing, in barbarous language; but I hope to procure the copies, which are large, and full of matter, pertinent at laſt to the hiſtory of theſe parts.

THE copy of the articles I haue encloſed, and the briefe of the princes demands, ſent vnto vs, which, I doubt not, are more amply vnderſtood by his majeſtie and your lordſhip, from the communication of the States of Holland, to whom Gabor hath lately diſpatched a gentleman with them, and his full reſolution.

IT will not become mee to giue counſell, nor to perſwade, in a buſineſs of ſo high conſequence, nor in the preſence of his majeſtie: I haue done my office of a bare relator; yet I will preſume to point at ſome obſeruations. His majeſtie will diſcouer, by the ſlightneſs of euery article in the treaty, that the Imperialls, doubting they ſhould obteyne no more, durſt not mention their right, nor eſtabliſh any thing, hauing no other end but the bragge of hauing aſſured this ſide in generalityes; which they preſently putt into print, and ſpread ouer Chriſtendome, to add reputation to their broken cauſe and armyes. Secondly, From theſe operations and councells of Gabor, though in them is too much artifice, yet his ſyncerity to the generall quarrell is approued; and that hee affects nothing more earneſtly, then his owne riſing, by abatement of the greatneſs of the Auſtrian. And notwithſtanding his ſtile ſent hither, as it is requiſite, ſeemes to ayme only at the ſeruice of this empire; yet his majeſties wiſedome will eaſily decipher another hidden character, that hee will not moue without an aſſurance from the princes of Chriſtendome, on whom hee deſires to faſten his dependance, that hee may bee free of the feare of both the other oppoſites. I ſubmitt it to his majeſties and your lordſhips wiſedomes; but wee are deceiued here, if ſome benefitt might not bee drawne from theſe offers: and I am confident, they may bee taken cheaper, without preiudice or ſcandall; and that it were good husbandry to ſhorten the recouery of the Palatinate, by embraceing all helps, and vſing of diuerſions, while the zeale of others is warme; whom, as is uſuall in confederat warrs, ſmall diſaſters and litle occaſions may change and coole. Quid refert Scithos Sarmatis collidere?

BECAUSE I neuer could obteyne any anſwere, how farre theſe operations would bee accepted, I am enforced (leaſt my withdrawing ſhould bee enterpreted an implicite refuſall of his majeſtie, to haue any thing to doe with Gabor, which would vtterly diſcourage and change his reſolutions) to ſpend ſome mony, to keepe him in termes of beeing able to ſerue his majeſtie, if at laſt hee ſhalbee required. I hope it wilbee allowed mee, beeing done at leaſt in good company with other ambaſſadors in proportion, whom I could not forſake vpon that occaſion of miſery.

THE troubles of theſe parts I haue ſent your lordſhip apart, that you may wiſh vs ſafety, as wee pray for his majeſtie, and the proſperity of England, where I hope to liue, to doe him and your honor ſeruice.

July 28th,
1625.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

Articuli pacificationis inter ſac. Cæſaream majeſtatem et Turcarum imperatorem, concluſi in menſe Maio, anno 1625. Cum licentia ſuperiorum. Viennæ Auſtriæ, ex officina typographica Gregorii Gelbhar, anno ut ſupra. 1625.

CUM multa præteritis temporibus, ex utraque parte, in præiudicium pacis in Sitwatowck concluſæ contigerint; placuit duobus iſtis potentiſſimis imperatoribus deputare nos omnes pro ſuis commiſſariis ad illa reſtauranda; id eſt, ex parte ſereniſſimi imperatoris Romanorum, dominum comitem Michaelem Adolphon ab Althaim, comitem Nicolaum de Frangepanibus à Therzak, comitem Nicolaum Eſterhazi de Galantha, Joannem Jacobum Kurz, Sigiſmundum Gailler baronem in Schwanbergh, & Moyſem Cziriaky baronem; et ex parte potentiſſimi imperatoris Otthomanni, illuſtriſſimum dominum vizierium & ſerdarum, Mohamet paſſam Budenſem, Iſa effendi muffti Budenſem, Muſtafa effendi, Timar teffterdar Budenſem, Jahia olim baſſam Caniſienſem, Achmet baſſam Agrienſem, Dervis begum, et Haghij Baijram Alaij begum Budenſem: præſentibus etiam hominibus principis Tranſſilvaniæ, Wolffango Kamuthij, Michaele Teldalaghi, et Thoma Borſos: cumque ſæpius conveniſſemus et conſultaſſemus negotium, concluſimus finaliter ſeptem ſequentes articulos menſe Maijo, anno 1625.

ARTICULUS PRIMUS.

VT alma pax et articuli in Sitwatowk et Viennæ inter utroſque imperatores concluſi, et firmiſſimis ipſorum diplomatibus ſtabiliti et confirmati, conſtanter in ſuo vigore permaneant, et impoſterum utrinque ſanctè obſerventur.

ARTICULUS SECUNDUS.

QUONIAM negotium Vazi inter nos commiſſarios certis de cauſis nunc componi non potuit, præcipue propter arcem Bolondvar; de eo ſic convenimus, ut hoc per legatos in aulis amborum potentiſſimorum imperatorum amicabiliter componatur, ſalva interim manente pace inter ipſos.

ARTICULUS TERTIUS.

PROPTER arces vero Croaticas, Dreſnick, Terſack, Hoyriczangradak, et cæteras eiuſmodi antea diſcretas, quæ contra pacis articulos ex utraque parte ſunt reædificatæ, ſimiliter et metas in ijſdem confinijs Croaticis conſtituendas, fiat commiſſio: pro qua, ex parte Romanorum imperatoris, deputatur dominus comes Nicolaus à Therzak; et ex parte imperatoris Turcarum, dominus baſſa Boznenſis; vel, ſi ipſorum vnus aut alter propter aliqua impedimenta adeſſe non poſſet, aliæ perſonæ huic negocio convenientes, qui controverſiam ſecundum tenorem articulorum antea concluſorum complanent et exequantur.

ARTICULUS QUARTUS.

DE querelis autem et gravaminibus, quæ circa pagos dedititios et nobiles in ijſdem degentes ſunt, rectificationem ordinavimus per commiſſionem in effectum deducere; et nominatur ex hac parte Danubij, à parte Romani imperatoris, dominus comes Nicolaus Eſterhazi; ex parte imperatoris Otthomanni, dominus Achmat baſſam Agrienſem; vt ipſi cum ſibi adiunctis, quo meliore modo fieri poterit, ſecundum ſuperiores conſtitutiones rectificent et ordinent. Si vero aliquis ipſorum certis de cauſis præſens eſſe nequiret, loco ipſius alter ordinetur. De pagis vero circa Caniſam dedititijs, ſecundum contenta priorum conſtitutionum, quæ hactenus in effectum deducta non ſunt, commiſſione mediante effectuentur.

ARTICULUS QUINTUS.

PRÆMISSÆ vero commiſſiones uſque ad proxime adfuturum feſtum S. Martini in effectum deducantur: caſu vero quod iſtud negotium uſque ad dictum feſtum S. Martini non poſſet in effectum deduci, tamen pax ſalva permaneat, et quantocius iſtæ commiſſiones in effectum deducantur.

ARTICULUS SEXTUS.

QUOAD captivos, qui ex utraque parte contra pacis articulos in captivitatem abducti ſunt, quomodo illi commodiſſime eliberari, et negotium eliberationis ipſorum in effectum deduci queat, de eo inter dominum vizirum Budenſem accordationes et determinationes convenienter fiant.

ARTICULUS SEPTIMUS.

PRÆTER hæc prærecenſita, reliqua omnia damna et exceſſus ab una et altera parte, contra Sitwatowkkienſem et Viennenſem articulos uſque in præſentem diem commiſſi et perpetrati, ob certos reſpectus hincinde pœnitus conſopiti ſint, oblivionique tradantur. Impoſterum vero pax et articuli ſuperinde confecti inter utroſque potentes imperatores, ſine vlla læſione et defectu eorundem, ſancte & inviolabiliter ad uſque determinatum tempus, in augmentum mutuæ benevolentiæ, & quietem miſeræ plebis, ut utrinque obſerventur.

DELINQUENTES vero ut ab una et altera parte ſevere puniantur, concluſimus.

IN quorum fidem nos prænominati utriuſque partis plenipotentiarij commiſſarij hic in campis Gyarmatien. præſentes hoſce articulos ſigillorum noſtrorum appoſitione, et manuum ſubſcriptione, firmavimus. Cum vero dominus vizierus Budenſis certis de cauſis adeſſe non potuerit, concluſum eſt, ut ipſe quoque articulorum ipſorum ratihabitationem, manu et ſigillo ſuo munitam, dominis commiſſarijs Cæſareis nulla interpoſita mora tranſmittat.

QUÆ omnia primo quoque tempore ab utriuſque partis potentiſſimis imperatoribus diplomatibus confirmabuntur. Actum menſe et anno ut ſupra.

Loca ſigillorum.

Conſtantinople, 30th July, 1625.

VPON the approach of the great vizier toward the prouince of Babilon, there hath bene ſome motion, on the part of the king of Perſia, of peace; but it is yet vnderſtood as an artifice to delay the army.

THERE are daily expected ambaſſadors from the princes of Georgia, who hauing formerly depended vpon the Perſian, were about 9 yeares ſince betrayed, and tyrannized by him. In reuenge whereof, they haue taken protection of the grand ſignor; and the laſt ouerthrowe giuen to the Perſians, though attributed to Abaſſa, was executed by a nobleman of that nation; and it is reported, that they nowe ſend to offer themſelues into a confederacy of the warre. The meſſage wilbee very acceptable, and the arch-biſhop of Chalcedon, their cuntryman, is appointed to receiue, enterteyne, and to retorne with them, as ambaſſador from the port, to confirme and diſpoſe the whole nation, who are gouerned by 3 princes, to enter into this league, and to make warre vpon the king of Perſia. The race of theſe three families haue long ruled this cuntry, whereof one is accounted the chiefeſt, though the others haue ſeuerall juriſdiction, of which the maſculine line is failed, except only one, who beeing made Turke young, is a baſſa neare the Redd-ſea. The ſtate haue ſent vnto him, and made meanes to the vizier, that hee may retorne, and bee their prince; but on condition that hee become chriſtian: but that beeing denyed them, they haue elected the daughter of their laſt prince, notwithſtanding their antient lawe, that excludes the ſucceſſion and rule of woemen; and hauing procured therein a diſpenſation from the patriarch of Conſtantinople, theſe ambaſſadors haue alſo order, pro formâ, to require her confirmation from the grand ſignor, which ſhalbee graunted them.

THE Janizaries mutined in the Black-ſea: beeing againe appeaſed, the capten baſſa ſent out Sackſachi baſſa, hauing made a fleete of 180 frigatts, and armed them, to keepe the riuers about Oſu, by which the Coſſacques deſcend. Sackſachi arriuing at Oſu, and finding all quiett, on the Biram day went aſhore; and beeing at dinner, was ſurpriſed by the Coſſacques; and hardly eſcaping, loſt all his fleete, and many of his men. The capten baſſa, hauing aduice of this ouerthrowe, made all haſt to Oſu; and finding no ſhowe of enemy, reſolued to go on toward Caffa: but that night the Coſſacques deſcending with their boats, by many out-letts, the baſſa of Oſu ſent to him to retorne ſpeedily, and make haſt toward Conſtantinople; for that the enemy, growne proud with their late victory, ſuppoſing no other force abroad, were directly gone for the Boſphorus, and were reſolued to aſſault the imperiall citty; or at leaſt, as they boaſted, to burne the arſenall. Vpon this aduiſe, the capten baſſa ſett ſayle; and the next morning, by breake of day, and in a fogge, fell in with the fleete of Coſſacques, conſiſting of 350 frigatts, that carried from 40 to 80 muſketiers apeece; and was ſo mingled with them, that hee could neither vſe his ordinance, for the danger of his owne gallyes, nor auoyd them without fight. Thus engaged, the Coſſacques furiouſly beginne the aſſault; and beeing 3 or 4 boats to one gally, boord them. Twice they had entered to the maynemaſt of the admirall of the Turks, kill'd 3 at the helme, and broken the rudder off; which beeing againe faſtened by 4 chriſtian ſlaues, and the ſunne breaking out, ſo that the gallies could vſe their great ſhott, and the wind riſing, the Coſſacques were forced to leaue their fight, and betake them to their oares; where, in the parting with the ordinance, as they report, 30 boates were ſunke, and 6 or 700 men taken vpp. The conflict was bloudy on both ſides, beeing come to hand blowes, and the Janizaries allmoſt conſumed. The capten baſſa hath ſent hither for ſupplyes of men; and all that take pay of the grand ſignor, euen to the emeriti milites, are ſent away; ſome to make guard at Canachi by land, on the mouth of the Boſphorus; other by water, to reenforce the armado; and all is filled with trouble and terror.

THE feare of the Tartars is not ſo extinguiſhed, that there is not cauſe to expect ſome attempt by land, Shachyn Gheray beeing in armes; and theſe motions, if not ſodainly appeaſed, will occaſion another breach with Poland.

THE ſickneſs rageth as if it would diſpeople the citty, and the villages adiacent: the Frank nations haue all felt it; but the Turks and Jewes by armyes, as if they went to conquer hell, if there were no league and confederacy betwene them.

ON the 23. July, there was corban or ſacrifice made at the gate of the Seraglio, 2 beeues and 100 ſheepe; at euery other port of the city, two beeues and ſome ſheepe, for the contagion and warre. A tam multifarijs incendijs libera nos, Domine.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE army of the league in Piedmont being much weakened and diminiſhed with ſickneſſe and mortality, the duke of Sauoy and the conſtable haue thought fitt to refreſh the remaynder of their forces, and to expect ſuch recrewes as are comming vnto them out of France. The enemy, who is at the preſent ſtronger then they, doth beginne to get ground; but by that tyme he hath runne his carrere, perhaps he will be out of breath, and then it will proue an euen game: for in the Spaniſh army they do dye already aboue 300 a day; and therfore it is likely, that when they ſhall haue ſuffered a little more in thoſe intollerable heates, they will melt away as faſt as the French did; and then the tide may turne, and flow as faſt in fauor of the league, as it doth ebbe now in their diſfauor. The want of a fleete hath beene the cauſe of this diſorder; for the Sauoyards did ingage themſelfes too farre by land, in places which could not be kept without the maſtery of the ſea, from whence the enemy was ſuccored at pleaſure: but if the ſhips had come about, when the duke of Sauoy was at Ottagio, or when the prince of Piedmont was at Vintimiglia, either Genoua or Sauona had fallen, or both; for they would not haue turned backe for feare of the Spanyards, if they could haue gonne on with hope of conquering either of thoſe two cittyes: but to ingage themſelfes in a ſeige of places which might be ſuccored by ſea, and to leaue a potent army behind them, which might haue ſhut them vp within the mountaynes, would haue beene too dangerous; and therevppon they did thinke it beſt to retyre betymes, and to expect the fleete by ſea, and recrewes by land, little caring to looſe what they haue gotten, becauſe they do preſume to be able to get it againe as eaſily as it is loſt. The modeſty of the duke of Feria at Acqui is remarquable; for he cauſed all that did belong to the duke of Sauoy, and the ammunition which did belong to the French king, to be regeſtred; and after conſigned it all vnto the biſhop of that place, to be kept in depoſito; wherby it ſhould ſeeme, that they do fight as if they would faine be parted, and that they will not come to the point of an open rupture.

1625. IN the Valtelina the league is likewiſe at a ſtand, the French army being ſo much weakned, and the Spanyards ſo well, and ſo ſtrong fortifyed at Riua, that it is impoſſible to ſet vppon that place. The marquis di Cocuures is earneſtly ſollicited to renforce his army, and to rayſe immediately a royall fort, which may inſure the whole valley; which if he can do, then they will account his non regredi to be as good as progredi; for the Spaniſh army doth ſuffer much in Riua, and their generall Poppenham is mortally ſicke; ſo that it is poſſible, that very ſhortly the tide may turne there againe to the aduantage of the league.

THE procuratore Erizzo, who was deſigned one of the two extraordinary ambaſſadors into England, is now choſen generall in terra firma, in the place of procuratore Barbaro, who is fallen deſperatly ſicke; and in the place of Erizzo there is choſen for England the caualier Ancolo Contarini, ſauio grande at this preſent, a gentleman of excellent abilityes, and of a faire preſence. There were two procuratori that did ſtand for that employment, Cornaro and Foſcarini; but becauſe they are both of them populini, the ſenate did preferre the caualier Contarini before them; conceauing that in England a good patriot would be more wellcome, then a publine.

THE French ambaſſador, goeing out in his gundola this laſt weeke, to take the aire in the euening, with his lady and niepce, did incounter with a barke of inſolent ſergeants, who would needs haue ſearched his gundola; and being repelled by the ambaſſador, who did keepe them of with a halberd and a piſtol, they made a battery of ſtones againſt the gundola, with which the ambaſſatrice was hurt in the head, and the neipce in a ſhowlder. It was much feared, that the ambaſſatrice might haue miſcarried, either with the hurt or affright, becauſe ſhee is within a month of her time; but ſhe doth beare it out well, although the hurt be great. The ſtate, vppon the complaint of the ambaſſador, hath vſed all poſſible diligence to attach the malefactors; and hearing that they haue ſaued themſelues in Ferrara, they haue publiſhed a moſt ſeuere bando againſt them, with addition of a thowſand crowns to any that ſhall kill any of them. Much about the ſame tyme my howſe at Padoua was aſſalted in the night by ſome theeues, who did attempt to come in by a windowe; but being diſcouered by my chaplaine, they retyred without doeing or receauing any hurt. Of this accident I made my complaint likewiſe to the ſtate, and haue receaued from them as much ſatisfaction as I could deſire.

MY laſt to your lordſhip were of the 4th of July, and the laſt I had from you were of the $\frac{16}{26}$. of Aprill. My wife doth preſent her affectionate ſeruice to your lordſhip and your lady, whoſe hands I do deſire likewiſe to kiſſe; and will euer remayne

Venice, 5 July, 1625. ſtilo nouo. Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

SINCE the loſſe of Breda, (which was the ſubject of my laſt) here is occurred no matter of advertiſement, the ennemy having bene onely buſyed in victualling that towne by greate couvoyes, and our men ſeeking to incommodate them by ſmall partyes from theyr camp at Walwick, with ſucceſſes of no conſideration, till the contagion of the ayre in that vnholſome quarter forced them to ryſe, and retyre into garriſon, where now they are, and the prince of Orange, with his chiefes, all in this towne, recounting the calamity and diſaſters of this laſt yeares lying abroade winter and ſummer, with much ſuffering, and little doeing; in which wee have loſt, of our nation, two prime earles, coronells; and 20 of our beſt captaynes, all of the camp fever, beſides three ſlayne at Terheyden, the leſſe to be lamented, becauſe they dyed with honor. Sir James Leuingſton, who ſucceeded the earle of Oxford in the coronelſhip of one of the new Engliſh regiments, ſickned of the plague a little before the camp roſe, but recovers. One of the counts of Styren, taking the ſicknes there, dyed at Huſeden about the ſame tyme; when a lamentable accident befell monſieur Keſſel, gouernour of that towne, lately declared count of Horne; who, at a funerall of his ſiſter at Bommel, (who dyed likewiſe of the camp diſeaſe, which ſhe tooke in viſitting her husband Sir Henry Herbert, one of our Engliſh officers) at his returne out of the towne, a ſalue of 6 or 7 musketts being given him at the porte, with one of them he was ſhott into the head, at the eare, with a tyn-button, not maliciouſly, but caſually; of which he dyed 4 dayes after. His places of governour of Huſeden, and generall of the artillerye, are given to coronell Fauma.

WILLIAM DE NASSAU, eldeſt ſonne to the late prince of Orange, (a yong gentleman of much expectation) is made vice-admirall of Holland, vnder the prince of Orange, and goeth admirall of the fleete of 20 ſhipps now ſetting out to ioyne with his majeſties.

THE 20 ſhipps ſent from hence, in aſſiſtance of the French king, (of which monſieur Haultain is admirall) have mett with an ill encounter before Rochell, where they were aſſayled with greater number by monſieur de Soubize, before the French fleete, or the Engliſh 8 ſhipps, were ioyned vnto them; the vice-admirall burnt, the admirall well beaten, and all forced to retyre from that coaſt. It is an vnhappy ſtate of affaires, thus to be engaged againſt our frends of the religion, whilſt our ennemyes gather ſtrength in all parts to reape the fruicts, (as they have done theſe 4 or 5 yeares paſt) towards the end of ſummer, when the ſeaſon is fitteſt for the field, of theyr providence, and our imprudence; they going on with vnion and deſſigne, and wee with diſtraction and irreſolution.

MANSFELTS army is reduced to great extremity, where it lyes neare Rhees, and in effect come to nothing; the 12000 Engliſh foote, and 2000 French horſe, not exceeding 200 of each nation; and the whole army, horſe and foote, ſcarce making 3000. Yet doth the generall hold vp his head here in this towne, in hope to be renforced; and I, even now, receave letters out of England with new order, to vſe all poſſible indeavour for reſtoring of that army, with promiſe that money ſhall ſpeedily follow; and ſome, taken vpon creditt, I now furniſh: but France fayles as well here as in other places.

THE king of Denmarke is in the field, on the Eaſt ſyde of the Weſel, neare Minden, with an army of 17600 foote, and 5925 horſe (according to a liſt I have receaved from Sir Robert Anſtruther, with his letters from that camp of the $\frac{12}{22}$th of July); to the maintenance of which his majeſty doth contribute 30000 l. a month, as he doth to Mansfelts army 20000 l. monthly, which is a royall ayde.

TILLY lyeth on the other ſide of the Weſer, Minden being neutrall betwixt both, with his army of veterani; having ſent to the king of Denmarke, to know the reaſon of his arming; to which that king hath returned anſweare, That he (Tilly) hath no reaſon to make that demand. Sir Robert Anſtruther is gone from thence to the duke of Brunſwick, and the elector of Saxe. Sir James Spence doth advertiſe me by letters from Stockholme, of the $\frac{14}{24}$th of June, that the king of Swede doth continue a readynes to furniſh 20000 foote, and 3000 horſe, to the advancement of the common cauſe; ſo as he may have aſſiſtance of 10000 foote, and 2000 horſe, and be in perſon in the head of that army. Meane while, till that buſines be ſettled, he goeth with a part of his forces into Liffland, there to treate his truce with Poland ſub clypeo. And good correſpondency is ſettled betwixt that king and Denmarke.

WHILST theſe two extraordinary ambaſſadors from his majeſty (Sir Robert Anſtruther and Sir James Spence) are treating with thoſe two kings, (Denmarke and Swede) to kindle them in the common cauſe; Mr. ſecretary Morton is come hether in the ſame quality, to ſound how theſe States ſtood affected to a league defenſive and offenſive with his majeſty, and to treate the ſame, in caſe he found a good inclination; which here was ſodainly and roundly declared. But at the ſame tyme the States ambaſſadors having made the ſame overture in England, the treaty is tranſmitted thether; and Mr. ſecretary, being ioyned in commiſſion with the lords appointed to treate with the States ambaſſadors, is thervpon revoked home, whether he intends to returne about the beginning of this weeke. Meane while, here I remayne, as formerly, in ſpeach of revocation, but vpon no ſuch ſett tyme as I may not often write to your lordſhip, (as I intend to doe vpon all fitt occaſions) and heare from you, yf you ſo pleaſe, which I have not now done for the ſpace of full two monthes. Thus I committ your lordſhip, with your lady, and all yours, to Gods bleſſed protection.

Hagh, this 4th of Auguſt,
1625. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionatly, to doe you ſervice,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

1625. THE aduertiſements from Antwerp continue ſo conſtant and ſo particular, that la Baya in Braſile was recouered by the Spaniards, the beginning of May laſt, that howſoeuer wee haue here no certayne newes, and are willing to flatter ourſelues with a beliefe to the contrary, yet none of our marchants of Amſterdam will venture any wagers; which is here an argument of much deſpaire.

To Sir EDWARD CONWAY: With Relations.

My Lorde,

THOUGH I deſpaire in myne owne meritt, of receauing any fauour by your lordſhips anſwere, or to bee remembred that I am among the liuing; yet, ſeeing the ſeruice of kings is next the ſeruice of God, I will doe my duty, and bee content with the name of an vnproffitable ſeruant. I know your lordſhip is full of great and important buſineſs; yett this perhapps was needfull, to direct my wayes in this opportunity, nowe almoſt loſt againe, of the offers of Gabor. I haue continued to aduiſe your lordſhip the late proceedings here, and the beſt of his reſolution to riſe and march toward his frontire, pretending in Caſſouia to winter, and to keepe the emperour in ſuſpence. Since, there are letters come from him by a Turke, to the grand ſignor and the great vizier: what the contents of them are, I cannot yet learne; but the meſſenger reports, that hee is gone very ſadd and diſcontent; and the language and countenance of his dependants here are changed and fallen. What to beleeue of him that hath had ſo many relapſes, is beyond my ſpeculation; but I will not conceale other mens coniectures: they feare, that ſeeing in ſo long tyme hee could not procure any comfort from Chriſtendome, nor the aydes required from hence, that hee is reſolued to aſſure his agreement with the emperour, and hath yet hopes of a wife of his guift, which hee is promiſed to receiue at Caſſouia. From his agent I haue not heard a word of theſe laſt letters; which makes mee doubt, the matter is not pleaſing: but I will conclude for him, knowing hee ſhalbee coſened in his treaty of marriage, that if yet hee ſhalbee offered any honeſt conditions, vpon that indignation and ſcorne, hee will riſe, and breake all contracts made with the emperour, though they were ſealed ſanguine humano. And my hopes are yet better of him, then any rumour can ſodainly deſtroy; and that the emperour will not truſt him ſo neare his frontire, with power to bee able to offend him. It will not bee out of my way to retorne by his court: though the journey bee ragged, yet, if his majeſtie command mee, I am ready.

THE ſecret treaty for the Spaniard doth aduance ſo farre, as the propoſitions pleaſe; and the Turkiſh merchants apprehend, with great comfort, the promiſe to keepe the Leuant ſea from deprædation; to which, formerly aduiſed, I vnderſtand that they haue added another offer of trade, to furniſh theſe kingdomes with all ſorts of Europe merchandize, at better rates then they are ſold by the other Frank nations nowe poſſeſſing the trade; for which they will pay cuſtome inward, by the greate, 75000 dollers; and beeing admitted to the ports of Mocha, Judda, and Cairo, in the Redd-ſea, that they will ſupply all Indian commodityes, and retorne the current of the Eaſterne trades by thoſe ports, to the great aduantage of this ſtate, and greater preiudice of Chriſtendome.

I SHOULD bee very iealous of the acceptance of theſe propoſitions, if I ſawe any ability to performe them; but ſeeing the Turks may bee blynded theſe 2 or 3 yeares, before they can diſcouer the deceipt, ſomwhat would bee done in oppoſition; for it deeply trencheth into the intereſt of our Eaſt-India and Leuant merchants, and all other trades of Europe. I dare not trouble his majeſtie with theſe contemplations; but I doubt not your lordſhip doth, for the diſcharge of my duty, acquaint him, and the duke of Buckingham, to whom, without a ciphar, I cannot ſafely write.

THE encloſed is the continuance of our hiſtory, where all things threaten ruyne; yett the whole hangs together by inuiſible thredds, and like a monſter, that cannot dye at once, will ſtruggle long againſt weake oppoſitions, before it diſſolue; but any tempeſt would doubtleſſe finiſh it. Your lordſhip will vouchſafe to continue mee in your protection, as I daily endeauour in deuotion to bee approued

Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$.
August, 1625.

Your Lordſhips humble ſeruant.

1625.

Conſtantinople, 11th Auguſt, 1625.

JANET-OGLI is againe turned toward Smirna; and that chaya, or liuetenant of the bey of that citty, raiſing 3000 ſouldiours, went out againſt him, hopeing to drawe more to follow him. They mett on a playne, and fought valiantly, Janet-Ogli remayning victor, with the death of the chaya, and 2000 of his men: hee is now daily expected at Smirna, haueing ſent before to aſſure the people, that hee will doe no violence to any trader or inhabitant; but only renew the oath of obedience to him, and puniſh ſome that were authors of this enterpriſe againſt him. The merchant ſtrangers are ſo confident in him, as they purpoſe not to ſtirre, but to receiue him as their protector; and thinck that rebell an honeſter man, then the juſtice of their towne. The miſtery of this ſtrange courſe is not penetrated: hee ſtill reports, hee hath authority from the grand ſignor; but itt is heere denied, and they would be glad to know howe to quiet him.

SEAUEN gallies are ſent to ſupplie the capten baſſa, into the Black-ſea, againſt the Coſſacks, who in the laſt encounter much weakened him, and, if the wind had not riſen, had endangered his whole fleete. All the ſoldiours are ſent away, and there continues greater ſuſpition of the Tartars.

FROM the greate vizier there is little expectation, vntill September: ſome places hee hath taken in, of ſmall import. The Spahees haue mutined for benefitts, but by his ſtoutnes appeaſed.

IT is reported, that Abaſſa baſſa hath ſett vpon, and ranſacked the rich carauan returning for Perſia; which, if it bee true, will cauſe a ſodaine and mighty alteration in this ſtate: for thoſe troopes haueing alway paſſed by mutuall conſent, in the tymes of warre, free and vnharmed, only maynteyned the commerce of thoſe partes. Infinite ſumms of money tranſporred publicquely, which could not haue ſcaped Sutors-hill; but heere were euen of theeues eſteemed ſacred and inuiolate. But if the ſweete of theſe booties bee once taſted, and that modeſtie caſt of, not onely all trade wilbe interrupted, but the cuſtomes, nowe the beſt reuenew of this empire, wholly decayed. It may be done by order from the ſtate, by the handes of a ſeeming rebell, to excuſe themſelues, becauſe the Perſians made no retornes but in gold; and itt was reported, they carried away 400000 checquins. The newe ſecretarie or agent, ſent from Naples, to practice a peace for the king of Spaine with the grand ſignor, among many other ouertures and propoſitions to induce the acceptance, makes offer to pay by the greate 75000 dollers, for their cuſtomes within the Leuant; and to furniſh this empire with all ſortes of Europe merchandize, at better rates then the nations now trafficquing; and to keepe the ſea free from ſpoile to be done by any, vpon the ſubiects therof; and, which is of more conſequence, they deſire free trade to the portes of Mocha, Judda, and Cairo, by the Red-ſea; undertakeing to ſupply all Eaſt-india ſpices, and other commodities, and to returne the courſe of trade by thoſe ports; for which they will pay by the greate 75000 dollers yearly. Theſe propoſitions are greate baites, if they can be performed ſo readily, as they wilbee accepted; and doe deeply concerne the intereſt of our Eaſt-india and Leuant companies, for whoſe conſideration I haue publiſhed them: beſides many other practiſes of like nature, moſt preiuditiall to the generall ſtate of Chriſtendome.

THE gallies of returne, from Cairo, are arriued, hauing brought in the eſtate of the greate caſlariga, lately dead; being cheſts 80 of gold, in euery cheſt 40000 checquins; beſides his jewells, and other moueables of infinite valew.

THE ſicknes encreaſeth, and hath filled the places of buriall. By computation, ther fall 3000 a day, though multitudes haue fled the citty.

From Mr. WILKINSON, Agent at Venice.

My very good Lord,

I Haue receaued order from my lord ambaſſador Sir Iſaac Wake, to giue notice unto your lordſhip of his departure from Venice. Vppon Munday laſt, which was the 4th of Auguſt, ſtilo novo, he did beginne his journy from Padoua towards Swiſſerland, with an intention to purſue it with as much diligence as he can poſſibly vſe in theſe exceſſiue heats. I being left here at Venice to giue an account into England, 1625. vnto my lord Conway, of what ſhall paſſe in theſe parts, in the abſence of my lord ambaſſador, will not fayle to write vnto your lordſhip, as often as any thing ſhall come to my hands worthy your lordſhips knowledge. Concerning the army of the league in the Valtelina, whither my lord ambaſſador is now goeing, nothing can be expected from hence; ſince his preſence there doth breake of, and debarre vs here at Venice, of that wonted correſpondency wee ſhould haue otherwiſe enioyed: and although I know, that from other parts your lordſhip doth receaue farre better intelligence, then I am able to giue; yet notwithſtanding, to diſcharge my commiſſion, which hath beene giuen vnto mee, I will not be wanting to make a faithfull relation vnto your lordſhip, of whatſoeuer ſhall come to my hands; although my letters proue but a duplicate of what you receaue from others.

THE French forces in Piedmont do now beginne to looſe their ground and reputation, as faſt as at their firſt arriuall into Italye they did purchaſe vnto themſelfes both; neither is it much to be maruiled, conſidering the aduantage of the contrary faction, who do encounter them with freſh ſupplyes, who haue already borne the burthen and heate of the day. I doubt not, but when thoſe troupes which are expected out of France ſhall arriue, but that the duke of Sauoy and the conneſtable will haue theire reuenge; and eaſily regayne thoſe places they haue loſt, as ſoone as they ſhall ſtand vppon equall termes. The recouery of Gauio by the Spaniards from the French hath not as yet cauſed the ſurrender of the caſtle, whither the French are retyred, and from whence they do play vppon the towne with 8 pieces of good canon; but it is feared, that except the prince of Piedmont do ſuccor them ſpeedily, the caſtle will likewiſe runne the fortune of the towne. Cordoua doth now gouerne and command the Spaniſh trouppes: their army is reputed to be 20000 foote and horſe; and the army of the league will amount vnto 15 or 16000. The approach of the Spanyards neere vnto Aſti hath ſtartled the conſtable to retyre from thence vnto Riuoly; where, after ſome ſtay, he prepareth againe for Aſti: but there are ſome who doe affirme, he purpoſeth to returne into Dauphine, and diſcard theſe dangerous affaires. Now that the prince of Piedmont is faine to act the defenſiue part, and to hinder the Spanyards from making any incurſions, that country is like to runne ſome hazard; except that ſome ſuddaine diuerſion do change the face of theſe preſent affaires.

THE pope hath called an aſſembly of his moſt eminent diuines to determin this queſtion, whither or no he might with a good conſcience, et ſe è eſpediente al publico bene della chriſtianità, maſſime di Alemagna, leuare il Palatinato al Bauaro et Spagnoli, et reſtiturelo al Palatino natio padrone et ſignore. As yet this queſtion remaineth in ſuſpence, neither know I how it will be concluded, vntill I heare further aduiſe from thoſe parts.

AN orator, belonging vnto the Spaniſh ambaſſador in Rome, did make of late a moſt eloquent oration in Lattine, which did ſauor of pride, and intollerable preſumption, he in a manner ſcorning and contemning all other chriſtian princes, in compariſon of the king of Spayne his maſter, al cui imperio non mai tramonta il ſole. I will not trouble your lordſhip with many of his paſſages; onely this I cannot ommit, Chiamò il rè di Spagna, dopo Criſto, redentore del mondo, et la natione Spagnola redentrica dell' vniuerſo.

THIS towne affording not any thing worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I will be at this preſent no longer troubleſome; but deſyring a pardon for my boldneſſe, I humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer reſt

Venice, Auguſt 16.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfully, to ſerue you,

JOHN WILKINSON.

WHENSOEUER your lordſhip will be pleaſed to fauor my lord ambaſſador with a letter, if you will be pleaſed ſtill to ſend them by the way of Venice, they ſhall from hence be ſafely ſent after him, into thoſe parts where he is. Your lordſhips letter, of the 30. of June, is ſafely arriued; and I haue ſent the incloſed into England, and the Haghe, according to your lordſhips deſyre.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

THOSE Spanyards which did appeare before Aſti, as it was thought, with an intention to beſeige that place, haue now beene forced to retyre by prince Tomaſo, and not without ſome loſſe. This retrait of the enemy hath much incouraged prince Tomaſo, with his cauallery to aduenture ſomewhat farther vppon them; and a counſell of warre being called, whereat was preſent the mareſchiall di Crequi, and the barone d'Alais, there were alleged the danger that might follow that reſolution, fearing the Spanyards might ſecure themſelfes with an ambuſcado; in which conſideration the French kings cauallery would not ingage it ſelfe. This could not quell the braue ſpirit of prince Tomaſo, nor change his reſolution; who, with 300 of his Sauoyards, did attack the enemy; but being deepely ingaged and aduanced, a groſſer of 5 in 600, left indeede in ambuſh, as was before diuined, did furiouſly fall vppon them; and had not the duſt fauored them, and clouded them from that dangerous tempeſt, and vnwittingly turned the Spanyards ſwords againſt themſelfes, they had, without queſtion, ſuffered much. But this prince with his Sauoyards came of brauely; and although they haue receaued a little blow, yet the Spanyards cannot brage of aduantage, they being forced to retyre, and to leaue the feild, which is an eminent ſigne of victory. This action hath put newe life and courage into the army of the league, which nowe ſeemeth not leſſe victorious in keeping their owne, then they were when they gayned vppon the enemy: for then, with affrighting ſtrength, they met with little oppoſition; but now, with weake forces, they ſubſiſt againſt a greater power, and haue made the enemy retyre from their poſts. The duke of Sauoy doubteth not but to be able to keepe pace with the enemye, vntill thoſe ſupplyes, which are expected out of France, ſhall arriue. Vnder the command of monſieur de Rohan, are dayly expected, with a great dele of deuotion, 4000 foote, and 2000 horſe, which are now at this preſent in Languidock. Thoſe recrewes out of France would now be very ſeaſonable; for except ſome diuerſion do appeare, it will goe hard with the duke of Sauoye, and a weaker force muſt at the laſt, of neceſſity, yeelde to a ſtronger oppoſition. The French haue not behaued themſelfes ſo brauely in theſe warres, as was expected; whereuppon the ambaſſador Bethunes, now reſident in Rome from the French king, is much mortifyed, and indeede aſhamed to appeare in publique, makeing ſome indiſpoſition of his body his excuſe. It is obſerued, that vppon the good ſucceſſe of the Spanyards in theſe warres, the pope doth much neglect the cardinall of Sauoy, and monſieur de Bethunes, ſeeming now alltogither inclined towards the Spaniſh faction; and indeede his ends are, to marry his nephew to the principeſſa of Mondragone, a Napolitan, and of the houſe of Caraffa; who hath a dowry of 150000 crownes reuennew per annum. Many great ones, as the duke of Parma, the duke of Toſcany, do labour to procure her with all their power; and with this baite do the Spanyards hold in play theſe three princes.

I HAUE, here incloſed, ſent your lordſhip a packet, which I receaued from captaine Manering. The laſt I writ vnto your lordſhip, was of the 19th of this month. Thus, crauing leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, I euer reſt

Venice, Auguſt 26.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt faithfull ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I SHALL render a barren reckoning of your command laid vpon mee to prouide your grace ſome antient ſtatues; yet I had rather giue you any account of my endeauour, then by long ſilence to deſerue the imputation of negligence. That which hath diſcouraged mee, is the failing of my promiſe for the black goddeſſe from Alexandria; which beeing giuen mee by the patriarch, confident it was yet in his garden, I ſent for, in company of his ſeruant; but beeing retorned, they haue only diſcouered, that a colloire left in that charge had ſold it 18 moneths ſince, to the French conſull, for 30 dollers, who hath tranſported it into France, to the exceeding diſpleaſure of the patriarch, and my ſhame. Yet I thought it fitt to aduiſe your 1625. grace thereof: perhaps you may there recouer it at no great charge, beeing eſteemed the jewell of all the ſtones in this part of the world.

I HAUE not left any probable citty vnſearcht into, and heare of diuers peeces; but what they will proue, I cannot yet iudge. Some I am abſolutely promiſed, but nothing entire; halfe bodyes, heads and buſtos. In Salonica a Jewe hath a whole marble, and antient: I haue procured letters to the metropolitan to buy it, if mony will preuaile. From Angora I am in hope, at leaſt, of a faire lyon. Theſe on porta aurea will not bee remoued: no man dares aduenture to ſteale them from the principall gate, nor any fauorite of the vizier preſume to mention the defaceing of the wall: yet I will not leaue to hope, by ſome art they may bee made dropp, and that ſo I may gather them. Mr. Petty hath bene at the ſo much famed Pergamo, and brought ſomwhat away, as hee writes, meane things, not worth his charge, only as teſtimonyes of his trauailes; but hee is a cloſe and ſubtill borderer, and will not bragg of his prizes. From thence hee is gone forwards into the iſlands, and hath this aduantage of mee, that hee makes ſearch with his owne eyes, and is not ſparing to ſpend, when hee finds content; though hee ſhall not out-buy mee, if wee fall in competition. Somwhat your grace may expect with patience, that is, all that I can find or procure; which you will accept by the meaſure of my ambition to your ſeruice.

WHAT I write his majeſtie, will appeare naked and rawe, if your grace vouchſafe not to make my excuſe, that I dare not committ matter, and other mens ſecretts, to the truſt of ſo long and dangerous a way, without a diſguiſe, vnder which I haue to my lord Conwey giuen large account, and hope the iſſue may conduce to his majeſties ſeruice. I haue walked herein in Egiptian darkneſs, without any anſwere, or other intimation of his majeſties orders; but, guided by myne owne zeale, doe hope I cannot erre, wherein I would meritt. I beſeech your grace, affoord mee the comfort and fauor of ſome directions, or lett it not bee taken for a fault in mee, that I enterprett the contrary, as an implicite command to bee ydle and ſylent; and ſo I ſhall haue more leiſure, though no man hath more affection, to bee approued

Halchys, 26. Auguſt,
old ſtile, 1625.

Your Graces deuoted humble ſeruant.

To my Lord CONWAY: With the GRAND SIGNIOR's Letter.

Right Honorable,

I PURPOSED to write to his majeſtie, hauing ſomwhat to aduiſe that might excuſe my intruſion; but attending the laſt hower for the encloſed, and tyed to obey both wynd and tyde in this iſland, to obſerue the diſpatch which is ordered by another, I haue ſcarſe gotten the leiſure to make an abſtract of the ſubſtance. This command is gone away two dayes ſince, ſollicited by the agent of Tranſiluania, aſſiſted by the ambaſſadors. It is a faire gate opened, if his majeſtie haue vſe of ſuch an helpe; if not, there is no harme done. With much labour it hath bene brought about, and if it ſerue no other turne, it will at leaſt ſtartle the emperour. By the next occaſion I will ſend the full copy, and by this haue only tyme to beſeech your lordſhip to make my zeale to his majeſties ſeruice acceptable, howeuer the fruicts are defectiue. And ſo I committ your lordſhip to Allmighty God.

Halchys, 26. Auguſt, 1625.

The Letter to GABOR from the GRAND SIGNIOR, required to licence his Vnion with the princes of Chriſtendome, corrected and ſent by the Venetian Ambaſſador, $\frac{17}{27}$. Aug. 1625.

Excelſiſſime, Præmiſſis præmittendis.

QUONIAM hæc noſtra fulgidiſſima et digniſſima porta omnibus nationibus in toto orbe terrarum exiſtentibus, quæ ſub alas noſtras confugiunt, ſemper aperta ſoleat eſſe; et eos qui potentiæ noſtræ firmiter adhærent, gratioſæ defenſionis noſtræ validiſſimo muro et mœniis ſolemus circumſepire: Notum ſit omnibus, quod cum quidam legati amicorum noſtrorum chriſtianorum, in hac noſtra excelſa porta commorantes, nobis ſignificaverint, imperatorem Germaniæ, et regem Hiſpaniarum, cum alijs ipſorum amicis et confæderatis, aſpirantes ad monarchiam totius mundi, præſentibus temporibus vi et ſine legitima cauſa occupaſſe

diuerſas

diverſas provintias et terras, pertinentes ad diverſos amicos et ſtatus, confæderatos cum dictis amicis chriſtianis noſtris; nos itaque memores quoque, et edocti de ſolenni legatione, miſſa ad hanc excelſam portam, quæ omnium afflictorum eſt refugium, tempore ſultani Oſmani fratris noſtri cariſſimi, (cuius anima in Paradiſo vivat) nomine regnorum, et multorum ſtatuum afflictorum et oppreſſorum, et de tuo tunc temporis erga illos amicos et noſtros, et veſtros, optimo affectu ſtudii, et conſtanti benevolentia: te in hac etiam rerum conſtitutione monemus et adhortamur, ut quemadmodum antehac ſtrenue feciſti, ita etiam nunc, et in poſterum, amicis noſtris ita deſiderantibus, et gratum habentibus, ipſorum juſtiſſimæ cauſæ deeſſe minime velis; ſed amicis noſtris, chriſtianis ipſis potius, et ſupradictis, qui pro defenſione, libertate, et reſtitutione provintiarum et terrarum pertinentium ad dictos amicos, et ſtatus confæderatos cum dictis amicis noſtris chriſtianis, arma ceperunt, pro viribus veſtris auxilieris, fœdus cum amicis noſtris, et ipſorum defenſoribus ineundo, et arma tua cum ipſorum armis conjungendo. Et quia nobis ſatis ſuperque conſtat de animi tui ſinceritate atque fidelitate, præſertim nobis præſtita, et tua etiam in bellis gerendis ſolertia, confidimus te abunde facturum eſſe hæc, et omnia alia, quæ ad regnorum noſtrorum majorem ſecuritatem, et majeſtatis noſtræ gloriam, et ad jura ſupradictorum noſtrorum amicorum ſpectare videbuntur. Itaque ſolito more lumbos veſtros armis præcingetis, et magno Deo annuente, et auxiliante vos, moveatis viriliter, magnaque cum induſtria in inceptis verſemini. Quod ſi feceritis ſecundum gratioſam noſtram admonitionem, hoc ipſo multo majorem noſtram gratiam in voſmet conciliabitis et augebitis; facies quoque veſtra coram nobis erit candida. Quod ſi autem auxilium etiam noſtrum deſiderabitis, vos hac in re non fruſtrabimus; verum copias ſufficientes penes vos ſtatim miſſuri ſumus; et ſi proprijs ſumptibus in imperio noſtro milites colligere volueritis, hoc quoque conceſſum erit.

1625.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

NOTHING of moment being hapned in this ſtate, or the affaires thereof, ſince the prince of Oranges riſing with his army from Walwick, and retyring into garriſon, I muſt looke further abroade for matter of advertiſement.

YOUR lordſhip will have heard of a dangerous fall the king of Denmarke receaved with his horſe, whilſt he lay with his army at Hamel vpon the Weſer, of which he was two dayes ſpeachles; but now wee are informed by a letter of the $\frac{11}{21}$th of the laſt, from Bremen, that he recovers, having bene on horſeback eight dayes before the writing of that letter; and all his members are entyre and ſound, though he be not yet altogether reſtored to his former ſtrength. He was then encamped neare the towne of Ferden, cloſe by the river of Aler, in a place where that river falls into the Weſer; over which rivers he hath made two bridges, which are guarded by 5 regiments of foote, each of 12 companyes; and commaunded by the coronells Limbach, Linſtau, Frenkin, and Lippe. A ſixt regiment is in the towne of Ferden, where the king lodgeth with his eldeſt ſonne, come thether to him ſecretly. His foote are not very fayre, nor well clothed, which made him, at the laſt muſter, caſhiere a great part, charging the captaynes to fill vp theyr roomes with others fitter for ſervice. He hath given the reſt a monthes pay, to clothe them, beſides theyr ordinary entertaynement. The horſe are fayre, and conſiſt of 50 companyes: beſides, commiſſions are already given out for the leavye of 2000 more, and 4000 foote. Tilly, after the kings quitting Hamel, hath poſſeſſed himſelf thereof, and he lodgeth therabouts. That towne ſurrendred vpon conditions to receave a company into garriſon, and to give 8000 rixdalers: and from thence Tilly makes incurſions into the duke of Brunſwicks countrey, as far as Hanouer; where, it is thought, the king will putt a garriſon, wherby to brydle, in ſome ſorte, Tillyes power, who threatneth the inhabitants of Maydeburgh and Halberſtat; and there, in all apparence, an army rayſed about Nuremburgh for the emperor, by the prince of Walleſteyn, (which is drawing that way) will ioyne with him. In this regard, the princes of the Lower Saxe are very much intimidated, and would fayne hold a diete out of hand in the towne of Brunſwick.

THE king of Denmarks intention is to keepe his army on foote, till hee ſee whether the diverſions are promiſed him out of France, in Italy, Elſas, and Picardye, be putt in execution. And great reaſon he hath to be cautious; for, 1625. without that, Tillyes army (conſiſting of 30000 men, horſe and foote) wilbe able to putt him to the worſt, and make him repent his ſo precipitate engagement againſt the emperor, which as yet he hath not declared, nor will, till he may vpon good ground.

The fleete, prepared by this ſtate to ioyne with his majeſties, hath bene kept here for a good while by contrary winds; which being now changed, it is probable they are now putting to ſea with the men ſent hether out of England, to be ſupplyed with old commanders, and changed for old ſoldiers; which hath in part bene effected, ſo many officers being ſpared from the old troopes as is needfull; and the men having bene in exerciſe of armes for theſe 2 monthes, they are judged fitter for action, then thoſe who, hauing layne in the field this twelfemonth, are therby fallen into ſicknes; and my care hath bene to have none but ſound men mixt amongſt them. The States ſhipps have order to anker, till theſe ſpring-tydes be paſt, before Dunkerke, wherby to hinder the comming out of 27 ſayle prepared on that ſide, 11 of which are that kings ſhipps, and the reſt freebooters.

In regard no certayne newes is come from la Baya in Braſil, for the ſpace of 4 monthes, which is no more then 5 or 6 weekes voyage, the wind being good, as it hath long bene, they here lay even wagers, the Spaniſh printed relation of the loſſe of that place is falſe: which I cannot but wiſh; for very much depends vpon that place.

Count Mansfelt, having viſitted his army, (which he found, by reaſon of his owne abſence, and ſuch officers he mett with at Vtrecht, when he went laſt to Rhees, in a deſperate danger of disbanding) and given ſome contentment by a monthes pay to his horſe, and the thyrd of a pay to his foote, returned hether about 8 dayes ſince; whether the officers of the States new High Duch troopes, as well of horſe as foote, taken on for 6 monthes onely, and are now vpon termes of licenſing, were called to treate with him, vpon conditions to ioyne with his army; which they cannot yet agree vpon, he not being able to give them aſſurance of theyr pay; but meanes wilbe found, in ſhort tyme, to content them.

Mr. ſecretary Morton hath bene held back till yeſterday, by contrary winds, in Zealand, which hath much croſſed all affaires.

It is now very long ſince I haue heard from your lordſhip; and yf your ſilence proceede not of want of health, I can the better diſpence with it; though nothing can be more wellcome to me, then your letters; and the queen of Bohemia hearkens after them by euery ordinarie. So I kiſſe your ladies hands, and euer reſt

Hagh, this firſt of
Sept. 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

Dudley Carleton.

From Mr. Wilkinson.

My very good Lord,

VERRUA, a towne of great conſequence of the duke of Sauoyes, is now become the marke the Spanyards aime at; which if they hit and carry, that blow will fall heauy vppon the duke of Sauoye, ſince the loſſe of that place will make them maſters of the feild, euen vnto the gates of Cheri and Turin. To hinder their approaches and batteryes, the duke of Sauoye hath drawen out of the cittadell of Turin 7 pieces of artillery, and tranſported them vnto Creſcentine; with which he hath both fortifyed that place, and ſo flancked the Po, as that the enemy hath no aduantage either to caſt a bridge, or to refreſh himſelfe with water. The duke of Sauoy hath throwen a bridge ouer the Po, juſt at Verrua; which being defended both by the fortreſſes of that towne and Creſcentin, giueth him commodity at pleaſure to enter and iſſue into either. At this preſent Verrua is poſſeſſed by 4000 braue ſouldiers, vnder the command of Monſ. di St. Reiran, well ammunitioned with all manner of warlike prouiſions; ſo that the Spanyards will not eaſily effect their deſigne, which will likewiſe take vp ſome tyme. In which interim the duke of Sauoyes army (being well refreſhed with new recrewes lately fallen downe, and, as wee beleeue, 15000 ſtrong) will endeauor to render himſelfe maſter of the moſt aduantagious paſſages, to hemme the enemy in, and to cut him ſhort of bread and water; and, as it is reported at Turin, they do ſuffer much for want of bread and water already; inſomuch that if theſe droughts continue, and that the army of the league remayne maſters of the Po, they cannot ſubſiſt long, but muſt be conſtrayned to retyre. The ſubjects of the duke of Sauoy do chearfully contribute vnto his wants, and furniſh his campe with ſtore of flower and wine. The marquis di Santa Croce hath brought 3000 Neopolitans vnto Allexandria, where he hath left them to be ſent to refreſh the Spaniſh armye vnder Verrua. The conſtable is retyred from Montcauelier, and is gone to meete his lady at Chamont, and there to ſtay the arriuall of his expected army. He hath left behind him the mareſchiall de Crequi, and the count d'Alais, with 6000 men to aſſiſt the duke of Sauoy in his abſence.

HERE incloſed, I haue ſent your lordſhip a letter, which Sir Dudley Carleton did recommend vnto my lorde ambaſſadors couer. I hauing nothing elſe worthy your lordſhips knowledge, do humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer reſt

Venice, September 4.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip was of the 26. of Auguſt.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

I SENT your lordſhip, by the laſt poſt, a briefe of the encloſed, which now I haue ſupplyed, and tranſlated word for word; that his majeſtie may conſider and iudge, if therby any conſequence may bee drawne to his ſeruice. Hee will bee pleaſed to accept of the ſtile of this court, which wee haue no power to alter. The ſubſtance is a ciuill command, that Bethlem Gabor ſhould bee ready to ſerue his majeſtie, and the other princes colleagued, if hee ſhalbee thereto required. That his majeſtie is therein named, is againſt my will, and the like error againſt all the other ambaſſadors: neither was there euer any requeſt made in his name, but by way of counſell from mee; but the forme beeing drawne by the prince of Tranſiluania, vnskillfull in circumſtances, and ſent the vizier, though wee did correct it, yet it was taken and diſpatcht away, ſollicited by his agent, before wee could remedy it. The effect of all our endeauour is this, briefly: The prince, willing to haue good occaſion to breake with the emperour, and hoping to haue ſome comfort or honor from Chriſtendome, hath deſired this leaue from hence, to countenance his actions; and to ſhow his affection to the generall cauſe, hee is remoued to Caſſouia to winter, to bee neare, and, as it were, to offer himſelfe ready, in the ſpring, to their majeſties, if hee may bee accepted. To this end, the better to excuſe him in reſpect of his late peace, hee councelled, and wee procured this command to bee antidated in March, to preiudice the treaty, as your lordſhip may obſerue. There can from him no more bee expected; hee doth allmoſt openly expoſe himſelfe to the reuenge of the emperour, who cannot but vnderſtand and feare him; but actiuely to breake hee will not, vnleſſe hee haue ſome comfort from their majeſties. Vntill the ſpring there wilbee tyme to apprehend this occaſion. Whether it wilbee ſeruiceable, or not, I referre to that ſupreme wiſedome, that knowes cunctation is a good defence, and ſo Fabius ſaued Rome: but to ridd Hanniball out of Italy, there was no way, but to ſend Scipio to Carthage.

THE Spaniſh treaty proceeds ſlowly, by reaſon of the great contagion; which now, by Gods mercy, beginns to yield to the ſeaſon, and I hope to retorne to my houſe, to ouerſee it. There dyed from the firſt of Auguſt to the third, in the citty, 8900; in the whole, there haue fallen, ſince June, 140000, beſides the out-townes vpon the Boſphorus, whether many fledd. So great a mortality hath not bene knowne in many yeares; and it hath concluded with a ſtorme, that hath torne vp houſes and trees by the rootes and foundation: ſuch I neuer felt. And beeing in a ſmall iſland, was a compaſſionat ſpectator of diuers ſhippwracks. One gally from the armado is come in, from the Black-ſea, without maſt or rudder, who brings no newes how the reſt haue ſpedd; but that ſhee was driuen right into the channell, 1625. without their owne induſtry or knowledge, giuen ouer for loſt men; and the whole fleete is much feared.

JANETT-OGLY, the litle rebell in Aſia, is beaten by Huſſen, the baſſa of Magneſia, a reconcild follower of Abaſſa; yet hee is eſcaped, and beginns to make new head: ſo that the quiet of thoſe parts hath many ebbs and flouds, no remedy beeing giuen to the head of the euill.

YOUR lordſhip will doe mee the fauour to ſhow his majeſtie and the duke of Buckingham this, I hope, my laſt letter in this buſineſs; becauſe all is done that can bee from hence expected, vntill I receiue newe orders; and if therein bee any error committed in the forme, to bee my ſuerty, that I will make it appeare, I haue no part therein; the ſubſtance, I hope, will giue ſome ſatisfaction, at leaſt of my deſire to doe his majeſtie ſeruice. And ſo I committ your lordſhip to the bleſſed keeping of our moſt gracious God; reſting Halchys, $\frac{9}{19}$. Sept.

1625.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE aſſault of the Spanyards vppon a mezza luna of the duke of Sauoyes, hath proued ſo vnfortunately vnto them, that now their courage is much abated, and their harts do fayle them to aduenture any more vppon ſuch falſe ground: yet, had it played well, it would haue wrought more miſchiefe then it did, although beſydes 150 it ſtrooke dead vppon the place, it hath left dangerouſly wounded a nephew of the duke of Feria, and Lodouico Cordoua, the generalls brother; beſydes many particulers ſent in carts to Milan, whereof ſome are of high eſteeme. Since the receiuing of this blow, the Spanyards haue retyred into their trenches, employing their greateſt ſtrength and care to winne a bridge caſt ouer the Po by the duke of Sauoye, by which Verrua is ſuccored. The duke of Sauoy, with his army, doth hold the Spanyards braue play; and indeede Cordoua hath found actiue ſpirits to deale withall, who will boldly hazard any thing vppon a game, and be prodigall of their owne liues, to make themſelues maſters of their enemyes. No queſtion the Spanyards will growe weary of their chace, conſidering the daily decreaſing of their army, both by mortality, reuoltings, want of prouiſions and victualls, and not ſo well fed with recrewes as the voice doth generally runne. The marquis di Santa Croce hath onely deliuered 3000 men vnto the Spanyards; but if I may giue credit vnto the common report, they are alltogither vnexperienced in millitary affaires, and do ill deſerue the name of ſouldiers.

THE duke of Sauoye is exceeding cheerfull, and full of good hope, not only to ſubſiſt againſt theſe Spaniſh inuaſions, but likewiſe to quell their ſpirits, and to haue his full reuenge of thoſe his enemyes, who durſt oppoſe him.

THE French ambaſſador in Rome, ſeeing the popes affection towards Spayne, how that he is ready to declare himſelfe Spanyard, hath made ſuch a threatning kind of murmur in that court, that in ſome things he hath beene forced to change his mind; ſince, contrary to his former intention, he is now reſolued to grant a giubely to the Engliſh college in Rome, for the happy progreſſe of the matrimony betwixt England and France. This is to be publiſhed in Rome uppon the 14. of this preſent.

I HAUE, here incloſed, ſent your lordſhip a coppy of a letter, which my lord ambaſſador ſent vnto the marquis di Coeuures, with a copy of my lords propoſitions to the leagues: they came vnto my hands but lately from Coira. My lord ambaſſador, at this preſent, is at Zurich, where his ſtay is vncertayne. Thus, crauing leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, September 15.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

I FEARE I ouerpreſſe your lordſhip with copyes of matter, not very acceptable; but till I bee ſilenced by your command, I ſhall feare to offend, by omiſſion at leaſt, myne owne conſcience, to his majeſties and his ſiſters ſeruice. The originall of the encloſed beeing ſent 20 dayes ſince, wee attend the effects; and whether it bee too generall, or too litle, I will not iudge, but only repeat the words of the agent of Bethlem Gabor, in ſome of his letters written mee ſince the obteyning: Sereniſſimus princeps noſter voluit habere iſtas literas, non de neceſſe, ſed de bene eſſe: ſua ſerenitas illis eſt contenta, et faciet omnia penes illas audacter, ad emolumentum regum chriſtianorum, quæcunque deſiderabuntur. Quod ad negotium præſens attinet, pro eo ſunt literæ ſatis ſufficientes, et ſatis bene declaratum. This is the creditt and aſſurance hee giues, which I ſend in bonæ ſpei indicium. Without mony it could not bee obteyned; wherein this confeſſion will witneſs, that I haue done my part: Sed quod excellentia veſtra nummos ad me miſerit ad negotium abſolvendum, in hoc, ita ut in cæteris, omnes legatos non tantùm ſuperavit, ſed et totaliter vicit: quod domino meo ſereniſſimo, quamprimum libuerit, perſcribam. Pro certo ſcio, hoc ab excellentiâ veſtrâ gratiſſime accepturum. And I hope alſo, his majeſtie will allowe it.

THE gallyes from the Black-ſea are retorned, with the loſſe only of fower, by the September ſtorme. The capten baſſa brought in triumph 270 poore Coſſacks, and was receiued, as if Pompey had againe finiſhed the piraticque warre, that almoſt famiſhed Rome. Non de victoriâ, ſed de non victo triumphavit. They eſteeme this ſea-fight next that of Lepanto, and the nobler for the eſcape: for doubtleſſe, if the wynd had not riſen too great for the frigatts, which were in number aboue 400, the whole fleet had bene in danger to haue bene towed northwards. The heads of more then 1000 of the followers of Janet-Ogli are brought in; and ſome report him ſince taken. Abaſſa attends who ſhall haue the victory at Babilon, whether the great vizier is but newly riſen to beſeege it, if at leaſt his ſoldiours will follow him; and publicque prayers in the playnes of Achmadan are made for his proſperity.

THIS laſt weeke, the great teſterdar treaſurer of this empire was ſent for in to the kings gardens, and there by the buſtengi baſſa ſtranguled, and flong out in his ſhirt into the ſtreets; an vſuall end of riches and greatneſs in this court.

THE ſicknes is almoſt ſo much abated, that I dare thinke of retorning to my houſe; and hope, before my next, to bee nearer my buſineſs, and to attend the Spaniſh treaty; which, if it proceed, will deſtroy all our Southerne and Eaſterne trades: but I ſuppoſe, they haue learned of ſome Perſian ambaſſadors to offer impoſſibilityes. Your honor will continue mee the fauour, to acquaint his majeſtie and the duke with my trifles; and if my laſt letters bee arriued, the encloſed copy to his majeſtie wilbe vnneceſſary. And ſo, offering your lordſhip my willing ſeruice, I committ, &c.

Halchys, 24. Sept. 1625.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt vnto your lordſhip, of the 15. of this preſent, there is arriued in the campe of the duke of Sauoye 1500 freſh and able ſouldiers; which will be ſufficient to keepe the enemye at a diſtance, vntill the full ſuccours ſhall arriue, which is dayly expected out of France. What will be the end of the French promiſes, is much maruiled; but if they proue true in part, the duke of Sauoye doubteth not but to be able to ſubdue the Spanyards his enemyes. The French army in Piedmont, being accuſed of ſome demerits, whereof indeede they were guiltie, they not fighting with that valor and courage which was expected, are now become ſenſible of the loſſe of their honor and reputation; and to make amends for ſome faults paſt, and to regayne their loſt credit, they are become very valiant, expoſing themſelfes to moſt eminent dangers, inſomuch that the Piedmonteſi, betwixt whom and the French there is an emulation, do confeſſe, that without their helpe and powerfull aſſiſtance, the Spanyards would ſoone ouer-runne all Piedmont.

1625. THERE is dayly expected a generall aſſault to be giuen by the Spanyards vnto Verrua, before the arriuall of the French forces; and indeede they, knowing that now they haue ſome aduantage, do puſh furiouſly to make themſelues maſters of that place; which doth make many beleeue that to be true, which by reports is deliuered vnto vs; that the duke of Sauoye hath intercepted a letter, written by the Spaniſh ambaſſador reſiding in Paris, vnto the duke of Feria; wherein he doth much complayne againſt the duke of Sauoye, blaming him to be the onely cauſe of all theſe troubles in Italye; and therfore deſyreth the duke of Feria to looſe no tyme, but to perſecute him with fyre and ſword to his vtter ruine, and to do it with all celerity, before the French ſuccours fall downe.

THERE paſſeth few howers without bloud being ſhed on both ſydes, and the duke of Sauoye hath prouided 6 more canon to defend the bridge, and is now buſie in building a contrabattery, with a fort, to beat downe a battery of the enemyes, which hath a view of the third part of the bridge caſt ouer the Po.

THE duke of Sauoye is now reſolued to ſend an ambaſſador vnto the ſtate of Venice, hauing made choice of one ſigniore Scarnaffiggi; and it is thought, that the cheife end of his embaſſy is, to ſee if he can procure any monny out of St. Markes treaſury, to helpe to maintayne theſe warres, which are now on foote.

THIS being all the preſent affordeth, I humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer remayne

Venice, Sept. 26. ſtilo nouo, 1625. Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant, to diſpoſe of,

JOHN WILKINSON.

I HAUE here incloſed a letter for your lordſhip, which I receaued from Sir Dudly Carleton, being recommended to my couer.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt vnto your lordſhip, of the 26. of September, there is come vnto my hands a letter from your lordſhip, directed vnto my lord ambaſſador, bearing the date of Auguſt 12. The incloſed, for my lord Conway, and Sir Dudley Carleton, I haue diſpoſed of according vnto your lordſhips deſyre; and I haue ſent your lordſhips letter vnto my lord vnto Turin, where, as I beleeue, he is at this preſent. The great army of the catholique king hath not made of late any progreſſions at all in Piedmont; but ſtanding at a pauſe, they keepe themſelues retyred in their quarters, and dare not aduenture to giue any aſſault, for feare of being blowen into the ayer. Some depredations they haue made about the neareſt places to their campe, for want of victualls; and they haue now throwen their eyes vppon a place called Montechiaro; but monſieur Santena, with 2000 of diuers ſorts of people, hath ſo fortifyed that place, as that the enemy muſt be forced to cut of all hope of making that their ſhelter, and place of refuge to retyre in.

IF the conneſtable had beene as good as his word, in ſending downe the forces promiſed, the duke of Sauoye would haue aduentured to haue aſſaulted the enemye in their trenches; but now hee muſt, of neceſſity, ſtand vppon the defenſiue part, in regard he hath beene conſtrayned to ſend 3000 towards the Weſterne riuer, to defend Vintimiglia, which now the Genoeſi do batter; they hauing already taken in Piu, the moſt important paſſage towards Oneglia.

THERE is arriued in Turin, as the voice runns, 600000 Francks, which is gone to the campe, with the conſ. Balliou, to pay the French kings armye, and to be employed about his affaires in thoſe parts.

THE count Scarneffiggi, whom the duke of Sauoy hath choſen ambaſſador for Venice, is not yet departed from Turin; but within the compaſſe of theſe few dayes, he is to beginne his voyage; and theſe ſeigniori do very ſhortly purpoſe to ſend an extraordinary ambaſſador vnto the duke of Sauoye.

MONSIEUR DE CANDALS remayneth ſtill at Breſſa with his regiment, and is now deſigned to goe againſt Riua: it will be a hard taske for him to make himſelfe maſter of that place, ſince the Spanyards are ſo ſtrongly fortifyed there. When he is arriued thither with his trouppes, and beginneth to put himſelfe in action, your lordſhip ſhall heare further of his proceedings. In the meane tyme I commend your lordſhip, and your affaires, to the protection of the Higheſt, and euer remayne

Venice, October 3.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull, and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

I HAUE ſent your lordſhip incloſed, an anſwer vnto thoſe propoſitions, which my lord ambaſſador made vnto the league at Coira: his propoſitions I ſent your lordſhip in my laſt.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My very good Lord,

THE States extraordinary ambaſſadors, (Aerſſens and Burmana) leauing Joachimi (who was ioyned in commiſſion with them) ordinary in England, returned hether on Friday laſt, with good ſucceſſe of theyr negotiation; hauing concluded with his majeſties commiſſioners, vpon three monthes terme of ratification, a league offenſive and defenſive, againſt the king of Spayne, for 15 yeares, grounded vpon the ſuſtayning of this ſtate, and reſtitution of the Palatinat; and ambaſſadors are out of hand to be ſent from England, and from hence, to the French king, and the duke of Sauoye, to move thoſe princes eyther to enter into the league, or to putt that in execution they have already with Venice; and to proceede ſeparatly, but with ioinct intereſts and counſells. Now, whether theyr hearts will ſerve them to purſue the worke they have already in hand, with armes, or whether they will pacificare ſub clypeo of our confederation, tyme muſt trye.

IN company of theſe ambaſſadors is come Doxelſteyn, the extraordinary ambaſſador of Swede to his majeſty, or rather they with him; they paſſing in one of two Sweden men of warre, which ſerved for his voyage: and though the ſhipps are good, the inexperience of the maſter and mariners brought them into ſo great danger at the entrance into Holland hereby at Gore, that theyr eſcape was miraculous in Zealand, by ſlipping theyr anchors, after a whole tempeſtuous night, and a great part of the next dayes expecting nothing but ſhipwrack. Yeſterday this ambaſſador was receaved in this towne by the prince of Orange, attended on by many coches, who mett him halfe way to Delft; and I thincke this ceremonious reception will ſute with his buſines, which, for ought I can learne, conſiſts, as it did in England, onely of complement.

VLEFELD, chancellour to the king of Denmarke, came hether about 10 dayes ſince in ambaſſage from Ferden (where he left that king in his army) with leſſe noyſe, to demand ſuccours of men; and is now vpon his departure, hauing obtayned a double regiment, commanded by Hasfelt and Vick, of 3000 High Dutch, (being part of the States new levyes, and were now to be licenſed) which the States will entertayne in that kings ſervice for three monthes, and ſo forward, as there ſhalbe occaſion. Here was a diſpoſition to ſend ſome of the ordinary troopes of ſtrange nations; but it was doubted, Tilly, amongſt the High Dutch princes, (who love not to ſee ſtrangers in theyr countreyes) would have rayſed querelle d'Allemand vpon this occaſion, when the king of Denmarke and he are wowing them for theyr good wills; and that Spinola would have ſent ſome troopes likewiſe out of his army into Germany; which, now all the States old troopes are kept in theſe parts, it is preſumed, he will not ſo freely adventure.

THE count Manſfelts army was to ryſe from the quarter neare Rhees (where it hath layne long in want and miſerye) on Saturday laſt; and his foote, (being about 4000, hole and ſick) with canon and bagage, were to be embarqued and conducted by ſea to Bremen, there to ioyne with the king of Denmarke; his horſe (betwixt 5 and 600) by land, convoyed by part of the States cavalrye, who are to paſſe by Linghen. This army, for the number, is of ſmall conſideration; yet the fame of it hath already wrought a good effect, which outrunning the truth, both for ſtrength and expedition, ſtruck ſuch a feare in Tillyes army, which had layne long beſieging Niuburgh vpon the Weſer, that the night of the 24th of the laſt, it roſe in confuſion, as Limpach, governour of that towne, writes by letters of the 25th. In the retreate it attempted a ſurpriſe of Reburgh, but was repulſed; and from thence marched vp towards Minden, to meete with Walleſteyns army, which deſcends 1625. through Heſſen; and thoſe two armyes, ioyned, have deſſigne (as is probably advertiſed) to leave thoſe conſumed quarters, (where they have layne long, and ſuffer of want of victualls) and ſeeke freſh paſture in Halberſtat, Brunſwick, and Meydeburgh, wherby to mortifye thoſe Neyther Saxe princes, who begin to hold vp theyr heads, having (as the duke Weymar writes, by letters of the 25th of the laſt) taken a reſolution, in a ſolemne diete, to ioyne with the king of Denmarke. And accordingly the people of Brunſwick (the moſt military of all the reſt) entred preſently into armes; and the duke Chriſtian is gone from hence, in all diligence, towards them, for whome they call, finding his elder brother (the duke regent) of too dull and heavy an humour for theſe ſtyrring tymes.

IT is further iudged, and that vpon good reaſon, That Tillyes mayne end, in ſtryking vp into the countrey from the river, is to drawe the king of Denmarke out of his ſtrengths, and engage him in fight; wherin he, exceeding the king in number of foote, and thoſe for the moſt part old ſoldiers, may promiſe himſelf the aduantage: but yf the king will follow ſuch counſell as is given him from hence, he will not hazard battell, but take the advantage of tyme in gayning winter; when, if Tilly lodge cloſe, his men (who have moſt of them 30 monthes arrierage) will mutinye; yf he ſcatter, and lye at large in the countrey, as he vſually doth in winter, when his army lodgeth and lives at diſcretion, (wherby he hath hetherto kept his men in devotion) his quarters may be beaten vp every where, and he drawne out of that countrey prælijs, yf not bello: which, yf it ſhould ſucceede, may breede a great alteration in Germany.

THE defeate of the Rochellers, both at ſea and land, is come hither from Paris in printed papers, which make large mention of the ayde the French had of the Hollanders in that ſervice; wherwith the people here are little pleaſed, and the pulpitts ring of it, that they can be ſo faint and improvident againſt theyr ennemyes, (la Baya being gone with Breda) and employ both coſt and courage againſt theyr frends.

I HAUE receaued one letter from your lordſhip, after long diſcontinuance, of which I cannot accuſe the date in an embroilement of papers; and euen now is come to my hands a cyfer for the queen of Bohemia, addreſſed to me, without any thing elſe in companie; which I haue putt into the hands of Sir Francis Netherſol, leſt I may be called home ſooner then I looke for, Sir Robert Killegrey being nominated to ſucceede me; who, being an actiue and ſedulous man, will ſerue me as a ſolicitor for my reuocation. Yet I ſhall ſalute your lordſhip more then once before my departure; and yf the queen of Bohemias wiſhes could take place, I might ſee you in this tranſplantation of forren miniſters: but, Aliter viſum eſt ſuperis. Thus I kiſſe your ladies hands, and reſt

Hagh, the 6th of 8ber,
1625. ſtilo vet.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

DUDLEY CARLETON.

YOUR lordſhip will heare owt of England of the vntimely death of owr honeſt ſecretarie Morton, who is much lamented both at home and abroad. In his place is ſucceeded Sir John Cooke, a man of goode report, but to me alltogether vnknowne.

Beatiſſimo patri in Domino noſtro JESU CHRISTO, CYRILLO œcumenico patriarchæ.

MITTO beatitudini veſtræ in vno volumine (ſi in quo alio) bibliothecam integram, dignam certè et lectione et authoritate talis antiſtitis: et ut Lypſius de Philippo Comineo, optimo et fidiſſimo hiſtorico, de hoc noſtro mihi edicere liceat. Incredibile eſt, quam ille omnia videat, penetret, arcana conciliorum eruat, et ſubinde inſtruat nos ſalutaribus rariſque præceptis: et ut ille Comineum principibus ſummè commendat, Dignus Alexandris omnibus ille Philippus; ita ego ſanctitati veſtræ, Dignus omnibus patriarchis hic pater Paulus. Cui, ſi non tibi convenit, qui toto orienti, et quaſi dimidio eccleſiæ chriſtianæ, perquam dignè præſides, de concilijs iudicare? qui et dignus es concilijs ipſis præſidere. Perlegat beatitudo veſtra; et de artibus, fallacijs, de inſidijs, de ſimulationibus, dolis, technis ſui æmuli, vel potius invidi Romani miſterij pontificis, cenſuram agat. Hiſtoriam ſcribit, non controuerſiam; ſed (neſcio quâ arte) ut hiſtoria eſt veritatis lychnus, ſic, dum acta referre videatur, tur, controuerſiarum veracitatem è tenebris vindicat. Quæſtiones multæ ſunt et variæ, et de fide, et de moribus: vtrarumque ſententiarum multi, et ſtrenui propugnatores; ſed in omnibus victor eſt papa, non rationibus, non teſtimonijs patrum, non oraculo ſacræ ſcripturæ, ſed tædio pertractionis et faſtidio; quæ cum patefacta iam ſint, redit et veritati victoria noua. Sed quid ego tyro extra prouinciam meam ago? judicijs aliorum placet indulgere, et ſane virorum in omni genere doctrinæ inſignium, cum regis mei doctiſſimi, (heu nuperrime defuncti!) cuius auſpicijs in lucem editus hic liber, patrocinio commendarent. Sic eximius quidam: Maieſtatis veſtræ conſpectui et veriſſimam et ſolertiſſimam hiſtoriam eccleſiaſticam, quam vel tempora moderna, vel ipſa antiquitas mundo protulerunt, offero. Et paulò inferius: Si quis alius liber (excipio ſolum omnipotentis Dei librum) optimi patroni protectionem meruit, hic eſt, Tridentini concilij hiſtoria. Et cum aduerſarij noſtri tantum de hoc concilio gloriantur, ut eorum vnus agoniſta ſic prædicat: Tridentina ſynodus, quo magis inveteraſcet, eo magis indies, eoque perennius effloreſcet. Bone Deus! quæ gentium varietas? qui delectus epiſcoporum totius orbis? qui regum et rerump. ſplendor? quæ medulla theologorum? quæ ſanctitas? quæ lachrymæ? quot jeiunia? quæ flores academici? quæ linguæ? quanta ſubtilitas? quantus labor? quam infinita lectio? quantæ virtutum et ſtudiorum diuitiæ, auguſtum illud ſacrarium impleuerunt? Et ſane rem ſuam adulatur? Ante hanc ſynodum, antichriſtus à longè apparuit, ſed nondum regnauit. Blaſphemias, doctrinam, mores prænunciauit beatus Joannes; machinationes et arcana imperij hic Paulus. Abſoluam: nemo vnquam imperium flagitio quæſitum bonis artibus exercuit. Plura latent in librarijs veſtris, beatiſſime pater, quæ eccleſiæ Dei inſeruire, et contentionum caliginem illuſtrare poſſint. Lucerna non ſubter modium, ſed in candelabrum ponitur, ut ſplendeat omnibus qui ſunt in domo. Itaque charitas veſtra et regem noſtrum, et hunc Paulum, et omnes ſanctos anteceſſores ſuos imitari vel antecellere dignetur. Veritati invidet, qui celat. Theſaurum veſtrum in commune bonum aperiat, et eſurientibus panem diſtribuat. Sic omnium gratias, et gloriam condignam in eccleſia militante, mercedem et coronam æternam in triumphante, aſſequetur. Valeat ſanctitas veſtra, et diu uniuerſæ congregationis ſanctorum emolumento feliciter uiuat.

De Pera Bizantij, $\frac{14}{24}$.
menſis Octo. anno ſalutis 1625.

Beatitudinis veſtræ humillimus et deuotiſſimus ſeruus et filius

THO. ROE,

Sereniſſimi regis Magnæ Britanniæ ad portam Ottomanicam legatus.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

AFTER a long oppoſition with ſpade and canon, the Spanyards haue now at the laſt made choice of a tyme to change their weapons: for, aſſaulting the duke of Sauoyes trenches in rainey weather, when guns could not ſerue them for any vſe, they were forced to diſpute their entery with picke, ſword, and ſhort weapons. The vnſeaſonablenes of the weather made them preſume very farre, they ſuppoſing to haue found their enemyes at reſt, and their trenches empty; but their expectation was deceaued, and their approach being diſcouered, their bold attempt met with as ſtrong a repulſe: for San Reiran with his company, though farre exceeded in number by them, the Spanyards being 3 for one of his, did notwithſtanding, with ſuch extraordinary valor, reſiſt their entery, for the ſpace of three howers, the faction laſting ſo long, that they could not gayne on them any the leaſt aduantage. Wherevppon they did reſolue vppon a retraite, which they did performe to their ſhame, and loſſe of about 120 vppon the place, beſydes many dangerouſly wounded. The duke of Sauoye hath loſt the number of 6 onely, among which the count della Manta was cheife.

THE riuer of Po, being ſwelled high with much rayne, hath proued fauorable to a deſigne of the Spanyards; for there being certaine old mills, not farre diſtant from the bridge which the duke of Sauoye hath caſt ouer the Po, in the night tyme they haue vſed meanes to ſend them downe the riuer, laden with ſtones, ſo heauy in waight, as that, meeting with the bridge, they haue borne away 6 boates; but this loſſe will eaſily be repayred in a day, ſo that it will gayne the enemy but a ſmall aduantage. There are other mills below, vppon the riuer Po, on the enemyes 1625. ſide, by which they do receaue much ſuccour, and grind corne for their army. But one night, the country people hauing intelligence, that there were certaine of the enemyes ſide in the mills, they gaue notice to the army of the league: whereupon 40 of them preſently did imbarque themſelfes in the night, and aſſaulting the mills, they found a Napolitan captaine, with diuers of his companions, which they tooke priſoners, and haue brought to the prince. Theſe mills are ſhortly to be ruined with fyre works, that the enemy may not receaue from them any more ſuccors. It is reported, that from Milan they ſend towards the catholique campe 70 or 80 paire of oxen, with which they do intend, as it is conjectured, to drawe away their artillery from vnder Verrua.

THE duke of Mantoua hath beene in this towne this weeke: he is lodged in the moneſtary of St. George. The ſtate taketh no publique notice of his being here; but he hath had priuate audience of the doge, and it is thought, that the cheife end of his voiage hither is to borrow monny.

YOUR lordſhips letters of the 26. of Auguſt, with the incloſed for England and the Haghe, are ſafely arriued. I haue ſent them according to the direction of the ſuperſcription; and hauing nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip withall, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, October 17.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull ſeruant, to command,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Earl of ARUNDEL.

My Lord,

I HAUE receiued recompence enough for more ſeruice then I am able to doe your lordſhip, by your acceptance of that litle I haue a deſire to doe, expreſſed in your two letters of the 10th and 12th of May. If myne, of the firſt and 25. of the ſame moneth, bee arriued, I hope they haue giuen your lordſhip more ſatiſfaction: ſince which tyme I haue bene able to doe nothing here, beeing fledd vntill the laſt weeke, from the great contagion, that hath carried away in this citty, and the ſuburbs, neare 200000 people. Mr. Petty this while hath viſited Pergamo, Samos, Epheſus, and ſome other places; where he hath made your lordſhip greate prouiſions, though hee lately wrote to mee, hee had found nothing of worth. Your lordſhip had good experience in a man for ſuch an imployment, that ſpareth no paynes nor arts to effect his ſeruice. When hee departed, I hoped wee had bene ioyned, and that hee would haue acquainted mee freely with his proceedings: but hee hath therein deceiued mee; for I now perceiue, your lordſhip (by way of preuention) hath reſolued to bee alone; and Mr. Petty, in this ſpace, hath preuented mee, vpon confidence, to haue ſent one with or before him, and hath aduiſed mee, hee can find nothing. I am ſo aſſured in your lordſhips integrity and wiſedome, as I dare write you playnly according to my nature. I haue done for Mr. Petty whatſoeuer was in my power, by giuing him forceable commands, and letters of recommendation from the patriarch. I haue bene free and open to him, in whatſoeuer I knewe, and ſo I will continue for your lordſhips command: but your lordſhip knowing, that I haue receiued the like from his grace the duke of Buckingham, and engaged my word to doe him ſeruice, hee might iudge it want of witt, or will, or creditt, if Mr. Petty (who could doe nothing but by mee) ſhould take all things before or from mee. Therefore, to auoid all emulation, and that I might ſtand cleare before two ſo great and honorable patrons, I thought I had made agreement with him for all our aduantages. Therefore wee reſolued to take downe thoſe ſixe mentioned releuos on porta aurea, and I proceeded ſo farre, as I offer'd 600 dollers for 4 of them, to bee diuided betweene his grace and your lordſhip, by lotts. And if your lordſhip liked not the price, Mr. Petty had his choice to forſake them; but now I perceaue hee hath entitled your lordſhip to them all, by ſome right, that if I could gett them, it were an iniury to diuide them. Your lordſhip ſhall neuer find mee to write you an vntruth, nor diſſemble the truth: Mr. Petty did not diſcouer them. When I carried him to the patriarch, and there diſcourſed with him, what places were like to furniſh vs with old ſtatues; hee told mee of thoſe on porta aurea, and wiſhed mee to goe ſee them, though hee thought the difficulty would bee great to procure them. Whereupon I, hauing no skill, ſent a Janizary with Mr. Petty, to view them;

vpon whoſe report of liking them, I went with him a ſecond tyme; and ſo wee 1625. reſolued to take them downe, if poſſible; and I was not only content, but deſirous, your lordſhip ſhould haue halfe: and ſo I aſſured him, though I both muſt bee the meanes to gett them, and to disburſe the mony, which I would willingly doe for your lordſhip. And this beeing the truth, and I remayning conſtant in the ſame reſolution, I hope your lordſhip will well accept it. Since, hee wrote mee another letter, in manner renouncing them at that price, and aduiſing mee not to ſpend aboue 200 dollers for all ſixe. It ſeemes, hee beeing better prouided at Pergamo, or willing to leaue theſe for a better occaſion, was content I ſhould not meddle with them: but when I anſwered him, hee knewe I had made lardger offers, and if hee refuſed, would take them for my owne account, and yet in England offer your lordſhip your part; hee then wrote mee, That hee would not leaue his intereſt in them, nor yet encourage mee what to ſpend, to procure them: but I am ſorry wee ſtriue for the ſhadowe. Your lordſhip beleeue an honeſt man, and your ſeruant, I haue tryed the baſſa, the capteyne of the caſtle, the ouerſeer of the grand ſignors works, the ſoldiours that make that watch, and none of them dare meddle: they ſtand betweene two mighty pillars of marble, in other tables of marble, ſupported with leſſe pillars, vppon the cheife port of the citty, the entrance by the caſtle called the Seauen Towres; which was neuer opened ſince the Greeke emperour loſt it, but a counterſcarſe and another wall built before it. The vizier dares not, for his head, offer to deface the chiefeſt port, ſo many will clamour againſt him: the capteyne of the caſtle, nor the ouerſeer of the walls, cannot doe it without a ſpeciall command from the grand ſignor: the ſoldiours cannot ſteale them, beeing 30 foot, and 40 foot high, made faſt to the wall with iron pinns; and muſt bee lett downe with ſcaffolds, and the help of at leaſt 50 men; for if they fall, they will breake to duſt, the ground being ſo thinne, and worne with age. There is then but one way left in the world, which I will practice; and if I can procure them, your lordſhip ſhall know my ſeruice by the part I ſend you, without Mr. Petty, or any other helpe. Within the caſtle, and on that gate, is a continuall watch of 20 ſoldiours: it is the kings priſon; and how hard it were to take downe ſuch things, of at leaſt a tonne weight apeece, from the Tower-gate of London, your lordſhip will eaſily iudge. And if I gett them not, I will pronounce, no man, nor ambaſſador, ſhall euer bee able to doe it; except alſo the grand ſignor, for want, will ſell the caſtle.

AFTER all theſe diſputes for nothing, Mr. Petty hath aduiſed mee, that retorning from Samos, where hee had gotten many things, going to Epheſus by ſea, hee made ſhippwrack in a great ſtorme vpon the coaſt of Aſia; and ſauing his owne life, loſt both all his collection of that uoiadge, and his commands and letters by mee procured; deſiring mee to ſend him others, or elſe, that hee can proceed no further. Hee was putt in priſon for a ſpy, hauing loſt in the ſea all his teſtimonyes; but was releaſed by the wittneſs of Turks that knew him. From thence hee recouered Scio, where hee furniſhed himſelfe againe; and is gone to the place where hee left his boate to fiſh for the marbles, in hope to find them, and from thence to Epheſus; and this is the laſt newes I heard from him. To renew commands ſo often, giues great jealouſy to theſe people, hauing taken out 3, in litle more then a yeare, for your lordſhip; ſo that with much adoe, and by force of a bribe, I haue againe procured another, and more large, for your lordſhip, which is nowe by mee, and ſhalbee ſent to Mr. Petty, ſo ſoone as I know where he is: though I haue written to him to leaue the ſea, and to ſpend this winter with mee, where hee ſhalbee welcome.

IN concluſion, I deſire your lordſhip to bee aſſured, that as I cannot faile of my duty to my lord of Buckingham, ſo I will doe your lordſhip that ſeruice, that ſhall witneſſe for mee my affection thereto. I will in all things aſſiſt Mr. Petty, and ſeeing I muſt goe alone in this buſineſs, I will ſearch all Aſia, but I will find ſomwhat worth my labour. My myſery is, vſing others, I muſt take badd and good; and I haue things ſent mee from diuers places, figures indeed, that coſt mee much, but not worth the portage. When I haue done my beſt, and alone, your lordſhip ſhall haue ſomwhat from mee, that you ſhall knowe I would haue dealt fairely, and that I had a ſyncere purpoſe to meritt your lordſhips fauour. I ſhall haue occaſion to enforme the lords of his majeſties councell of a great iniury done to our company by the Venetian conſull; which I cannot requite here for greater reſpects, but muſt appeale to his majeſties and the ſenats juſtice. If wee bee not maynteyned, they 1625. muſt giue ouer this trade. To their lordſhips I haue made the declaration; wherein, as a iuſt cauſe, I beſeech your lordſhip to affoord vs your fauour and protection. And ſo, in full aſſurance your lordſhip will accept my ſyncerity, which I profeſſe to your lordſhip, I wilbee approued in effects, Conſtantinople, $\frac{28}{18}$. October, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and affectionat ſeruant.

To the Lords of his MAJESTY'S Council.

Right Honorable, and my very good Lords,

I HAUE now almoſt fower yeares liued in good correſpondence with all the miniſters and ſubiects of the ſtate of Venice; and becauſe I vnderſtood to haue ſo well deſerued of them in many of their occaſions, which the ſenate hath acknowledged by particular thancks, I hoped to haue finiſhed this my ſeruice, without any diſpute or controuerſye with them. But pride and couetouſnes hath no frends; and Lot quarreled with Abraham for a ſheepes-paſture. For an inſolence offered our nation by the Venetian conſull in Aleppo, I am enforced to become the aduocate of the Leuant merchants, and to bee an humble ſuitor to his majeſtie and your lordſhips, to vouchſafe them that protection, that they may trade in theſe dominions, at leaſt without diſaduantage, and vpon equall termes with other nations; and that I may conclude my tyme with that reputation I haue hitherto maynteyned, and which I cannot looſe, but by beeing forſaken by your honors. I will not trouble your lordſhips with long diſcourſe, vnproportionall to a letter; but hauing made ample declaration of the meritts of our cauſe, to bee preſented by the companye; in this I only entreate, that your lordſhips wilbe pleaſed to giue mee creditt for that which therin I ſhall averre, wherof I haue taken fede in the chanceryes of all the other reſidents, and ſent them to Venice, preſuming your honors will accept my owne teſtemony in thoſe things, the truth wherof, vpon the penaltye of your lordſhips cenſure, I am bound to approoue.

IF ther hath beene any deuiation in the beginnings of this difference by others, by appealing to Turkiſh juſtice, yet I hope, for going one ſtep awrye, the innocent ſhall not bee vndefended in the recouerye of their right. All courts allow ſome errors; and much alſo may bee ſayd in that excuſe, if not to take away, yet to extenuat the fault: That the Venetians beginning the injurye, denying us an vnqueſtioned right of conſolage, euery wiſe man would take the next way to keepe poſſeſſion: but if the woorſt therof bee vrdged, I haue made amends by ſeeking all other wayes of frendly accommodation, without ſcandall here, or trouble to his majeſtie, and your honors; as may appeare by coppyes ſent the merchants of my letter, and proceeding with the baylo, of whom I expected reparation. But rocks are not peirced without vinegar: all offers haue beene refuſed, with a certayne Venetian art, to keepe an aduantage, how vnjuſtly ſoeuer gotten, and to avoyd the force of all reaſon by diuerſion, and retiryng to the judgment of the ſenate; which is a common and uſuall refuge, when they are diſpoſed not to doe right, to profeſs they haue not authoritye. Notwithſtanding, I haue forborne to repay them in their owne coyne, which is eaſy for mee to doe here, where ſentences are ſett at a price: but beeing ſcandalous in the generall, and dangerous in many conſequences, to ſubmitt capitulations to Turkiſh juſtice and enterpretation, and therby to open a way to the miniſters of the grand ſignor to lay any impoſition vpon chriſtian goods, the end wherof, once practiſed, cannot bee at the firſt forſeene; beſides, not preſuming to take that courſe with the ſubiects of any of his majeſties frends, without ſpeciall leaue, which will make an utter breach betweene us here, and may occaſion diſputes betweene our princes; I haue reſolued only to reſtore my capitulations to their ſtrength and eſtimation, to reuerſe a corrupt ſentence agaynſt us, to reduce the queſtion to the firſt ſtate, and then to complayne to the ſenate, and to ſeeke ſatiſfaction by their juſtice, and the mediation of his majeſties ambaſſador there reſident, whom I haue fully enformed. But alſo knowing the tenacitye of thoſe judges, and that they may make contrarye relations to your lordſhips by their miniſters in England, to ſaue their mony, and to eate us out of trade in our owne ſhipping; I haue alſo appealed to your honors, and doe humbly beſeech your protection, that you will pleaſe to procure his majeſties ſentence, and to giue anſwere, That his ſubiects ſhalbe maynteyned in the ſame rights agaynſt others, that others chalendge 1625. and excerciſe ouer them; and to ſignifye ſo much to Sir Iſaac Wake: and this, which is moſt equall, will at once end the diſpute; and if then the Venetians will not doe us juſtice, if I may obteyne licence, I will take yt here, and make them know the odds, and weapons I haue declined for peace, and other chriſtian reſpects.

To confirme this grace to the companye in the future, your lordſhips may be pleaſed to make ſome declaration, that all the ſubiects of his majeſtie, that aduantage themſelues by freight of ſtrangers goods within the priuiledges of the Leuant, may bee tyed to the rules of thoſe who beare the generall chardge, and bee obedient to his majeſties miniſters, as all others are, without exception, to the miniſters of other princes; that my authoritye may not bee leſs, and that in execution therof I may not tranſgreſs the ſence of his majeſties commiſſion. For this ther may bee many reaſons alleaged; That although the nauigation bee free, yet it is not equall, that euery man ſhould enjoy the freedome of comming into theſe ports, which is bought and maynteyned at the only expence of the companye, and the peace and liberty of commerce with Turky begunn and continued for them only, and at their chardges, without which no Engliſhman could haue acceſs hither; much leſs, that the preſumption of a maſter to change his coulors, and renownce his countrye, ſhould defraud them, for the benefitt of ſtrangers. But hauing enlardged vpon theſe conſiderations apart, I will not trouble your lordſhips with needleſs repetitions: only, in this particular accident, I beſeech your honors to bee the more ſeuere, in reſpect of the practice done purpoſely to deceiue us, by the maſter Nathaniel Goodlade, in Venice, and to affront his majeſties authoritye, vnder the flaggs and protection of St. Marke; and of his contumacye, by adhering to the Venetian conſull, and refuſing to obey or to acknowledge the Engliſh, to the diſgrace of our nation in that citty; the example wherof, if it eſcape vnpuniſhed, will make a way open to euery vnfreeman to trade at libertye. Neyther doth the neceſſitye of his contract at Venice excuſe him; doloſum pactum non enervat legem; but more eſpecially, becauſe his owner, (as I am informed) one Ricaut, a Duchman, inhabiting London, is the correſpondent of the family of the Spinolaes in Genua, and of whoſe courſes I aduiſed my lord Conwey, and my lord Baltimore, now a yeare paſt, by my letters of the 4. and 20. Sept. 1624. The ſubſtance wherof was, that the Genoueſes, by their factor in England, were intereſſed in diuers of the beſt merchants ſhips of the Thames, beeing moſt part owners of the St. George, of 500 tunns; of the Benjamin and John; and the Peter and Andrew, the ſhip now mentioned; and of many others, beeing all of great force. The accuſation may bee falſe; but, in my humble opinion, woorthy of examination. The inconveniences then conſidered were, that though the maſters ſeruing in them were honeſt men, and good ſubiects, and that ſecuritye might bee taken for their returne with all their munition; yet it ſhall not bee in their power, when they are in the ports of the kyng of Spayne, or his dependants, to command them. The deſſigne and coulor is, to tranſport goods at freight from port to port in the Leuant (as ſome did lately to the releife of Genua); but the profitt accrewes all to the ſtranger; and in their ſeruice, to our prejudice, are good ſhips worne out; and while they can ſwimme, they are ſubiect to bee taken and imployed by the kyng of Spayne, the bodyes of the ſhips, the ordinance, and furniture, beeing the proper goods of his creatures. And vnder this pretence our ordinance are conveyed away to ſerue them that may bee enemyes, in the fraud of all that worthy care of your lordſhips, and prouiſions of parlament in that behalfe: and when they are in their power, the marriners may bee enforced, or at beſt turned home afoote; and no collaterall aſſurance giuen in England (which may recompence the valew of the wood and iron, but not the ſtate and the preiudices conſequent) can preuent yt. The experience of this danger is not vnknowne to your lordſhips, in the warr of the duke of Oſſuna with the Venetians, who practiſed to freight with baſe commodityes diuers good ſhips to Naples, to bring them into his netts. And though, by your lordſhips wiſedome, he was preuented of his whole purpoſe; yet he poſſeſſed at leaſt one good ſhip, and all her ammunition; and the ſuſpition of like practices is now of more conſideration. But if ther were no ſuch direct incommoditye to the ſtate, yet the liberty to trade vnder the coulors of other princes, will utterly eate out and deſtroy all the trades of his majeſties ſubiects in the Leuant, by eaſe of chardges and aſſurance, in two or three yeares: ten or twelue in the hundreth in 1625. both, is an aduantage that no other induſtrye will counterpoyſe. I feare I haue runne beyond my limitts, in preſuming to giue your honors ſo much trouble; but, aſſured in your wiſedomes and fauor, always extended toward mee, referring my ſelfe to the declaration of our cauſe, I humbly beſeech your lordſhips to affoord mee your direct anſwers, wherunto I may conforme my ſelfe; wherin, and in all other my wayes, I deſire to bee approoued

Conſtantinople, $\frac{2}{12}$.
Nov. 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

A Coppy of my Enformation to the Lords of his MAJESTIES Councell of the Contract in Aleppo, and of our Rights to demand Conſolage; for the more Euidence in the Cauſe, ſent to Venice, 2. Nou. 1625.

The State of the Controuerſy betweene the Engliſh and the Venetian Conſulls in Aleppo.

CERTEYNE Venetian merchants takeing to freight the Peter and Andrew of London, for the ports of Ciprus and Alexandretta, the maſter Nathaniell Goodlade (as hee pretends) contracted to weare the coulers of St. Marke, both in the ſea, and in thoſe ports; and that the ſhipp and men ſhould bee taken and priuiledged, as the goodes and ſubiects of the ſenate, vntill the end of his voiadge; prouided, if hee mett either vnder ſaile, or in harbour, any men of warre, that then hee ſhould aduance the redd croſſe, and take protection of the reputation of our nation, and of our peace with the Turks of Barbary.

ARRIUINGE at Ciprus, hee found att anchor three pirats of Algier, and came into the porte vnder the Engliſh coulers; and ſo paſſed all his buſines in peace with them, and vnder that protection.

HAUEINGE diſpatched, hee came into the roade of Alexandretta, with the flagg of St. Marke; which beeinge vnderſtood by Mr. Kirkham, the Engliſh conſull, he ſent him an order, deriued from his majeſties authority, to take it downe, and to acknowledge his cuntry. The Venetian, at the ſame tyme, commanded the contrary. Goodlade, to pleaſe both, takeinge aduantage of a ſhipp ſeene att ſea, ſtroke his Venetian colours, and raiſed St. George; anſwering the one, hee did itt in obedience; the other, that hee feared the ſhipp ſtanding in might bee a piratt, in which caſe hee was free by his couenant.

WHEN the ſhipp beganne to diſcharge, the Engliſh conſull ſent vnto the maſter and purſer for their bookes of ladeinge, and to the owners of the goodes, to pay the conſuladge due vnto him, according to the cuſtome vſed by all nations: but both refuſed; the one, to obey; the other, that there was any due.

WHAT particular contraſt paſſed betweene the conſulls, is needles to relate. In concluſion, the Engliſh, relying on his capitulations, which in expreſs termes confirme conſulage of all goodes laden vpon Engliſh ſhipps, that trade vnder the peace of the grand ſignor, called the Venetian before the ordinary juſtice; where hauing ſhowed the article no way to bee auoided, the Venetian produceth an obſolete, particular, dormant command, to diſcharge their nation of any duty to the Engliſh; which, by the force of a bribe of 1500 dollers, preuailed with the judge (notwithſtanding an article in our capitulations, that no priuat command whatſoeuer ſhould bee accepted againſt them) to giue ſentence againſt vs.

THE preiudices that from hence ariſe by ill conſequences, and corrupt judgement vpon our capitulations, which are aboue lawe, as the contracts of princes, I haue ſufficiently remedied, and ſett them right at the port. But, to auoid further ſcandall, wee appeale to his majeſtie and the ſenate for juſtice againſt the conſull, and merchants of Aleppo.

THE Engliſh conſull made his complaint to mee, and deſired that by Turkiſh juſtice I would recouer this mony and diſgrace; but for many reaſons, to him expreſſed, I would not add to the firſt error, eſpecially where the bailo was on equall termes of defence; and in right wee can plead no capitulations of the grand ſignor againſt Chriſtians, (not his vaſſalls) thereby to inſinuate a powre in the Turke, to lay any impoſition vppon their goods; which would bee ſcandalous in the preſent, and dangerous in the future; and if one prince ſhould make ſuch capitulation, an other would contract the contrary, to protect his ſubiects; and ſo contentions would be ſowed betweene all nations.

THEREFORE I firſt vſed the meanes of frendſhipp with the bailo, to end all diſputes without noiſe, as appeares by my letters. To which I had the common anſwere: Want of authority. I moued him to enter in by way of counſell and arbitriment; but the Venetian rules are ſo knotty, that they vnlooſe not; he might not put his ſickle into the juriſdiction of a gentleman of Venice. In concluſion, I agreed with him to recommend the cauſe to the ſenate, with the fedes and teſtimonies of our rights and cuſtomes, which his owne conſcience, and daily practice, doth iuſtifie for vs.

THE ſenate of Venice, for their merchants, and they for themſelues, haue only three pleas: firſt, That the conſull committed an error to goe to Turkiſh juſtice; which may bee in him blameable, but cannot deſtroy the right of the company. Secondly, That wee haue not paid to them conſulage. To which I anſwere, De facto, wee haue not done it of late in that name; but the reaſon is, that neuer any Engliſh freighted their ſhipping; Venice lyes out of our way, and their ſhipps are the common prey of the pirats: but, de jure, if wee had, wee muſt haue paied itt, as wee doe the duty by them called cotome, for all goodes tranſported, which is the ſame thinge: and there is an other excluſiue reaſon; that no Venice ſhipp, tradeing the Leuant, can take in a bale of Engliſh goodes, vpon the payne of forſeiture; ſo that the queſtion of conſulage can neuer ariſe on their part, as itt appeares, they haueing bound this our owne ſhipp, nowe in controuerſy, not to take in a pound of Engliſh goods: beſides, the difference of our ſhipping, and our reputation in the ſea, is 20 per 100 aboue the Venetian; therefore wee ought ſome way to bee recompenced. Laſtly, they ſay, His majeſtie will not vndertake to lay any impoſition vpon their goods, nor wee his miniſters can haue no authority, but deriued from his commiſſion. To which I anſwere, Wee clayme the conſuladge on the goodes by implicite contract and cuſtome. If the Venetians will enter into his majeſties dominions, which extend to his ſhipps in all parts of the world, (for in them his lawes are aliue and effectiue) they muſt ſubmitt to the conditions of his other ſubiects, who pay that duty to maynteyne a generall charge.

IF it bee queſtioned, Howe then I will recouer that right, if I cannot doe itt by Turkiſh juſtice, nor by any juriſdiction ouer the goodes of ſtraungers; I anſwere, According to the rule of all nations here, the ambaſſador that commands abſolutely their owne princes ſubiects, if the ſtranger will not pay the duty, doth take order not to lade or vnlade ſuch goods; and ſoe the merchant is forced to reaſon: and I neuer yet knew any ſtand out, but this gentleman of Venice.

The PROOFES of the Rights and Cuſtome of Conſulage.

FIRST, The company leuy the ſame duty vpon all Engliſhmen the kings ſubiects, to beare the generall expence of the ambaſſador, and for the defence of all their priuiledges; and therefore there is no reaſon, a ſtraunger, vpon our owne ſhipping, ſhould trade vpon eaſier conditions.

IT hath beene vſed by all nations, and cuſtome hath preuailed 40 yeares. The Engliſh pay it to the Dutch and French, if goodes bee only tranſported from Smirna, or Scio, to this port, within the grand ſignors ſeas, where there is no daunger: therefore itt is more reaſon, it ſhould bee paid to vs, who defend their goodes like men, with the liues of our countrimen.

MUTUALLY, the Dutch and French pay to one another; both to vs, without diſpute; and wee, to all; as is proued in the particular fedes annexed.

THE Venetians haue paid itt to the Dutch at Smirna, though with contraſt; and to Sir John Eyres, by force of juſtice.

REASONS of Equity, Why they ought to pay Conſulage.

IT is euident, if any ſtraunger may trade in our ſhipping vnder the colours of another prince, that the priuiledges graunted to the Leuant company are of no vſe, but rather hurtfull; for the ſtraunger may couler Engliſhmens goodes, that are not free, and eſcape all dutyes which are paid to the company, to beare the generall charges; as is reported, Ricaut the owner nowe doth, for thirty thouſand dollers.

1625. IF itt bee 12 in the 100 difference betweene the aſſurance vppon a Venice and an Engliſh ſhipp, is itt not ſufficient, that they enioy that commodity, but they muſt alſo not pay the duty, which the Engliſh themſelues pay? A Venetian ſhipp cannot bee aſſured ſcarce at any rate; the vſuall is 18 per^{c} 100: but when they can freight an Engliſh, they enter their polices by factors, in London, where the ſhipp and men are knowne, for 4 in the 100; and ſo ſaue 14 vpon the Engliſh. And enioying the benefitt of our aſſurance, is itt reaſon they ſhould alſo haue the aduantage to vndermyne vs in our trade, by two in the hundred more, which the Engliſh pay for conſulage?

IF the Leuant company haue ſpent great ſommes to make a peace with Barbery, is itt equall, that nowe the Venetians, who dare not looke into the ſea, but vnder our protection, ſhould eat the fruit of our labours better cheape, then they who haue borne pondus et æſtum diei, by ſhifting to our protection, only in tyme of daunger?

IF the Engliſh haue paid it to all other nations, in whoſe princes ſhipps they haue laden any goodes, for many yeres without contraſt, as itt appeareth they haue done, by ſeuerall teſtimonyes vpon oath, regiſtred in the chancery of thoſe ambaſſadors, though but from port to port; doth not equity require, they ſhould receiue itt of others? Or are wee ſubiect to the cuſtomes and lawes of others, and they free, by any priuiledge, from ours? This only aduantage is too great an odds, and will vnderſell vs. And therefore the lords of his majeſties councell may bee pleaſed to giue ſome creditt to mee, who am heerein tranſported with no faction; that if the Leuant company bee not maynteyned in theſe two priuiledges, that they may take conſulage of all ſtrangers, and that no Engliſh ſhipp may come into theſe partes vnder the coulers of a ſtraunger, though itt wilbe tedious to enumerate many leſſer reaſons, which experience in theſe affaires hath ſhowed mee; yett, in the whole maſſe, I dare conclude, a trick is found, which wilbee practiſed generally, to eate them out of all trade in theſe parts.

GENERALL Reaſons, why no Engliſhman ſhould preſume to weare the Colours of an other Nation; eſpecially, where his Majeſties Ambaſſador, or Miniſters, are maynteyned to protect them.

FIRST, Itt is a diſhonor to the ambaſſador, that the ſubiects of his majeſtie ſhould refuge to any other obedience and protection, and doth cauſe many controuerſies about the grand ſignors cuſtomes: for our nation paying but 3, and others 5, in the 100, the Engliſh looſe the priuiledge vpon their owne goods, the Turks making their aduantage to demand cuſtome according to the banner; and will take no knowledge of the nation, but of their colours, to the great loſſe of the company, and to the breach of their capitulations.

IF an Engliſh ſhipp doe take the flagg of an other nation, the goodes and men conſequently take protection of that conſull; wherby, being eſteemed their ſubiects, the Engliſh can haue no juſtice againſt them, neither to ſee their bookes of lading, nor to recouer their other rights. And by this meanes, wheras by his majeſties letters patents of priuiledge graunted to the Leuant company, no interloper, or vnfree man, may trade in theſe partes, vnder the penalty of 20 per 100, to bee leuied heere; itt can neuer bee diſcouered who are the true owners of any goodes tranſported: for any merchant of London may lade for Venice or Marceilles, and there agree with thoſe nations, or directly from London, by contract, to weare an other flagg, and to correſpond with the conſull of that nation, and trade in deſpight of all authority heere; and being free of the chardges by this fraud, will vndermyne and vnderſell the Leuant company, and deſtroy their trade.

IF itt bee obiected, That the nauigation is free, and this impoſition may hinder the courſe therof; I anſwere, It will rather encreaſe itt; for the French and Venetian are out of ſhipping, and itt were more proffitt to the kingdome, that all the trade of the Leuant were in our owne poſſeſſion, then diuided with ſtrangers. But ſeeing itt is free for any man to gett his honeſt liuing, if they can imploy their ſhipping for ſtraungers, (though I make itt a doubtfull queſtion, whether, in the generall conſideration, itt bee proffitable for England to countenance a trade of hireing ſhipps to others, to ſpend ſo many much decayed materialls for the benifitt of others, and to hazard our ſtrength often into the power of enemyes) yet admitted; there is no equity, that ſuch owners ſhould reape the proffitt of the mayntenance of the trade in Turky, which is open only for and by the expence of the Leuant company: for itt is euident, if the Engliſh had not peace and commerce ſettled, then this Engliſh interloper could not, vnder the colours of any other nation, enter into theſe ports withour confiſcation; and the fraud would bee ſoone diſcouered by the Turks, when their aduantage lay that way. As for example: 1625.

No Spaniard or Florentine dare, vnder the banner of France or Venice, aduenture their goods and liues vpon that coulored protection. Therefore, ſeing this liberty originally is deriued to them from the priuiledges of the Leuant company, itt is moſt iuſt, that they who enioy itt collaterally, ſhould alſo contribute to the generall charge.

If Engliſh ſhipps may vſe at pleaſure the colors of other nations, itt wilbee impoſſible to mainteyne any peace with thoſe of Barbery; for they will pretend that quarrell to the flagge, when itt is not Engliſh; and to the goodes, as of ſtraungers, when they ſhall ſee the redd croſſe; for this fraud cannot long bee ſecrett. And itt is euident, that the Venetians doe confeſſe they enioy our peace, or are ſecure by our reputation, in this contract, that itt ſhould bee lawfull for Goodlade, in caſe of any daunger, to ſpread the flagg of St. George; and itt is great reaſon they ſhould ſomway pay for itt.

All other nations are ſo iealous in this point, of ſuffering their princes ſubiects to ſhift the enſigne of their alleageance att pleaſure, that they haue executed many examples of juſtice. A Dutch ſhipp, fraighted from Venice, vpon the ſame conditions, to were St. Marke, arriuing in Smirna, with purpoſe to defraud the conſulage, the ambaſſador ſent downe his orders to the ſhipper, to take itt downe, and to aduance Holland; and for his offence clapt him in irons, and forced the Venetians to pay him his due, before hee would giue him his liberty; and this was approued by the lords the States. And I haue ſede thereof.

An other Dutch ſhipp laden from Marſeilles, with French goodes, in the tyme of monſieur Sancy, now in England, came into this port with the colours of France. The ambaſſador put the ſhipper in priſon, and puniſhed him there ſeuerely: and after much contraſt, the French yielded, and commanded his merchants to pay the conſulage. Of this I haue alſo ſede.

In the tyme of Sir John Eyres, the Venetians beganne to practice this euaſion at Smirna; but they did not ſtand out with him, becauſe the ſumme was ſmall.

The Venetians themſelues are ſo preſiſe and ſtrict in this queſtion, that certeine merchants hauing bought a Dutch ſhipp, and all her apparrell, being laden from Venice, and manned with the ſubiects of the ſenate; the maſter, knowing the Dutch colours (which hee had with the ſhipp) were of better reputation for matter of defence, vſed them in the ſea; and, by negligence, let them ſtand till he came into this port; wherat the bailo tooke ſo great offence, that, complayning to the ſenate, he was condemned to the gallies.

Att this day, there are two Dutch ſhipps in port; one laden from Marſeilles, by French; the other by Venetians and Jewes: both which haue paid their conſulage to the Dutch ambaſſador, without contraſt.

PARTICULAR Reaſons, in this Controuerſy, to puniſh the Contumacy of NATHANIELL GOODLADE.

It doth appeare directly by his contract, that he made itt to defraud the Engliſh, and to haue a refuge and protection againſt the authority of his majeſtie; and if hee, in his owne perſon, had obeied the conſull, the Venetians, without diſpute, had beene enforced to pay the conſuladge.

By his example the purſer went to the howſe of the Venetian conſull, and tooke ſanctuary therin, refuſing to ſhowe his bookes, though he now pretend he was kept by force; which cauſed another difference betweene the conſuls before Turkiſh juſtice, it being a great preſumption in the Venetian conſull, either to protect or animate the ſubiects of his maieſtie againſt their lawfull magiſtrate, by an idle diſtinction, that hee did itt as a ſeruant to them, not as a ſubiect of England: and though in that diſpute wee gott the day, and had judgement for our man; yet it coſt much mony, and the quarrell will not bee ended.

1625. BY this example, the French, Dutch, and all the ſubiects of the grand ſignor, will refuſe to pay vs conſuladge, though they haue exacted it of vs, as appeares by the ſedes annexed.

LASTLY, Goodlade, after the order ſent him by the conſull, and a proteſt publiſhed and regiſtred, vppon his alleageance to his majeſtie, he againe aduanced the flagg of St. Marke, acknowledgeing no other ſuperiour, but the ſenate.

TO conclude, though nowe the French and Venetians beginne to encline to breake off the cuſtome of paying conſolage, and offer to take none of the Engliſh heerafter; the tymes and circumſtances are to be conſidered: if they haue taken itt of vs, while it was their proffitt, I know no priuiledge they haue, to bee looſe at their pleaſure. They haue now no ſhipping left, and wilbe enforced to trade vpon Engliſh: therefore itt is moſt requiſite to keepe our aduantage, which they recouer more then treble, vppon the aſſurance; and by this meanes the Engliſh ſhall curbe them in ſome parte of their trade, and goe vpon euen tearmes with them in the reſt: and I am confident, his majeſtie will not lay his ſubiects belowe any other nation; but defend them, and protect them, in this their antient and vnqueſtioned right.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

ASSOONE as the decreaſe of ſickneſs gaue mee any hope of ſafety, to retorne to my houſe, which I did the rather haſten, beeing informed of the progreſſe of the treaty begunne for Spaine, I enſtructed myſelfe how farre it was advanced; and found, though the inſtrument had not the monyes, in eſſe, that hee had promiſed; yet the noyſe of it afarre off had procured many frends, and infected ſome of creditt neare the grand ſignor. But the great gate was ſhutt; the chimacham would neuer giue him audience, nor admitt of any treaty, perhapps expecting more reality: ſo that hee was forced to practice in the darke, tanquam fur et latro. Hee had gotten of his faction the capi aga within, and chiefeſt houſehold officer of the Seraglio; the wife of the great vizier at Babilon, ſiſter to the emperour; and by her meanes, the husbands of twoe more; Regib, the capten baſſa; and Biram, late aga of the Janizaries. Theſe beeing ioyned, beganne boldly to countenance the buſineſs; and theſe laſt, to mee, acknowledged their reſolution to protect it. And it had gotten a great opinion abroad, that much was done; and that either a commiſſion ſhould be procured immediatly from within, or from the great vizier from Babilon, to giue ſafe conduct for the pretended ambaſſador. It was now high tyme to awake; for the conditions propoſed were ſuch, as did not propound a ſimple peace, without intimation of the preiudice of other princes and ſtates. According to former inſtructions giuen mee, I went to the chimacham, and opened to him all the ſecretts of this treaty, and many other things conſequent; and gaue him diuers reaſons, that hee ſhould not bee ſo neglectfull of his owne honor, to ſuffer others, in his regiment, to bee agents in a matter of ſo greate importance. Hee gaue mee a reſolute anſwere, That hee knewe the whole practice; that it was not requiſite for him to beginne the quarrell; but that, whenſoeuer it came to action, hee would reſigne his charge, and liue an hermitt, rather then conclude a peace with thoſe, who could not keepe any with Chriſtians; and made moſt earneſt proteſtations, that it ſhould neuer bee effected, while hee liued. I knew this anſwere was cordiall in him; but that hee was old, and timorous by nature; and that there was daunger in the heat of other ſpiritts, who openly and earneſtly proſecuted the obteyning of a ſafe conduct. Therefore I went a litle further, to open the eyes of the mufty, the buſtangee baſſa, and ſome other great miniſters, hoping by ſome way the truth would enter the kings chamber, from which only wee feared a ſecret blowe. Theſe were well accepted: what effects they haue wrought, I know not; but ſodainly the meſſenger is gone, not taking leaue, hauing, as I am well enformed, gotten no letter, no writing, no anſwere at all to his propoſition; full of particular indignation againſt mee, and threatening that I ſhalbee ſharply accuſed to his majeſtie. But his owne vanity hath much helped his diſpatch; for, giuing out that hee had mynes, hee wanted mony for meate; and beeing referred wholly to the emperors agent, who is ſolid and diſcreet, and vnderſtands the way of treatyes, hee could not keepe him within any compaſſe: inſomuch as, becauſe the agent hath alſo a penſion from Spaine, hee preſumed to vpbrayd and threaten him, and quarrell with him, uſque ad manus. 1625. While hee reſided here, hee neuer gott creditt for aboue 2000 dollers, and that not in mony, but veſts and jewells at deare rates; which alſo was not imployed (as too little) for the promouing of his great buſineſs; but ſent by padre Berill, mentioned in former lettres, and a Poland, to the capes of the Coſſacques, with credence from the king of Spaine, and promiſe of aſſiſtance of mony, if they would reenforce their fleete of boats, and againe the next yeare infeſt the grand ſignors territoryes; that thereby his gallyes may be ymployed, as they haue bene two paſt yeares, in the defence of the Boſphorus and Black-ſea, and not appeare in the Mediterran; that the Spaniſh coaſts may bee free of feare, and all his armado at liberty for other ymployment. And this is the good office the agent and hee hath done for the port, euen while they pretended to treate of peace; of which if they were accuſed, it would finiſh all admittance of the Troian horſe. But though this ſmall toole bee gone away in deſperation, yet the treaty remaynes recommended to the emperors reſident, of whom there is more feare: and though they cannot obteyne a licence in direct termes, to receiue a Spaniſh ambaſſador; yet ſo earneſt they are in the purſuit, that I am aduiſed, they haue reſolued at Vienna to ſend two Imperialls together, the one to bring the confirmation of the laſt peace, and the other as his aſſiſtant, to make ſome more ſtay, as ſuper-intendant of the emperors affaires, but really to treate the peace for Spaine; and that this man ſhall bring the crownes ſo much ſpoken of; and that, to meete whom they report the Bologneſe is departed: and in this way, thus armed, there is a great deale of cunning and daunger, to procure the reſidence of a Spaniſh miniſter, vnder the emperors name; who, if hee haue mony, will ſo guild his pills, that they wilbee ſwallowed. Our only refuge is in the old chimacham, who profeſſeth to haue giuen order to the baſſa of Buda, that if any Imperiall ambaſſador come, that hee ſhall anſwere him there, there is no need of ratification of a newe peace; that the grand ſignor will depend vpon the old, of which there are yet 16 moneths vnexpired. This is a good point, if it bee obſerued, and ſerues two turnes; but it is not to bee relyed vpon. If his maieſtie continue in the mind to haue this treaty for Spaine oppoſed, your honor muſt bee pleaſed to vouchſafe mee ſome anſwere and direction; hauing in this, and the affaires of Hungary, of affinity hereunto, written 40 letters, and two yeares expected ſome inſtructions. Particularly his majeſtie may bee pleaſed to preſſe St. Marke to open his purſe, whoſe intereſts are nearer, and their feares more preſſiue; and that I may receiue my order how farre I ſhall oppoſe, how I ſhall comport with theſe ambaſſadors, and whether I ſhall haue leaue to ſpend ſome ſmall matters; which hauing often done of my owne, and no penny from his majeſtie allowed, I may want clothes here, and bread in England. My lord, it may bee ſaid to mee, as it was to a woman, Opus eſt dare te operam, ne quid moleſte ſcribas. You wilbee pleaſed to pardon my zeale. Much mony is conſumed in many attempts, which I iudge not: but I am able to make it euident, that a little this way, eſpecially vpon Gabor, would induce a more ſeruiceable diuerſion for Germany, then that ſlow and long expected from the princes of the Nether Saxe: and I beſeech you, bring it into conſultation, or elſe ſilence mee for euer.

WEE expect daily the entry of an ambaſſador from Gabor, with one yeares tribute, to pleaſe: with him retornes the meſſenger, that carried the letter of licence obteyned for his adhæring to the princes his frends; of which hee hath giuen this anſwere to his agent; Though it bee not punctuall and exact, as hee required, yett hee accepts it as ſufficient. How much hee is courted by the emperour, is light enough to diſcerne: how much hee feares him, I receiued aduice from Vienna, that his ambaſſadors were eleuen tymes publiquely feaſted by order, and viſited by the popes nuntio, and Spaniſh reſident; that the emperour hath ſent him the priuiledge of the title of Sereniſſimo, equall to the greateſt kings, to whom hee giues not Maëſta, at which many are ſcandalized. Notwithſtanding that the prince is marched neare Caſſouia, with 10000 foote, and one thowſand horſe, and ſome canon; with pretence to goe to Varadin, in defence of ſome of the religion oppreſſed. But his army encreaſing, hath raiſed other ſuſpitions with the Imperialls; that hee will enter Hungary to hinder the diett, intimated for the election of the emperours ſonne into that kingdome; which will vtterly exclude Gabor, and is of great importance to the princes nowe in warre with the Auſtrians: for though hee hath depoſed his preſent 1625. clayme, yet hee maynteynes his next right of ſucceſſion to that crowne; and for his ſtrengthening himſelfe, it is thought, that hee will now confirme his brother Palatine, an office without whom nothing can bee innouated in that kingdome. Vpon theſe motions, many councells of warre haue bene held in Vienna, without reſolution; but that the army about Egra, vnder prince Walſtein, and marching downe into Germany, ſhould halt or moue ſlowly; and that the order to reenforce it, both with horſe and foote, ſhould bee ſuſpended, vntill the purpoſe of Gabor were diſcouered; who, if hee ſhould aduance toward Auſtria, would find all the frontire vtterly vnarmed. This diett, deſſigned in Hungary, though in a ſeaſon vnfitt, yet the barons haue made no meanes to prorogue it, nor any ſhowe of will to appeare in it; which neglect augmenteth the ſuſpition, that they alſo haue intelligence with Gabor. Laſtly, that vpon this new jealouſy, the Spaniſh reſident in Vienna hath demurr'd vpon the deliuery of a letter, written from that king to Gabor, vntill more certeynty of his intentions, and the reſolution of the emperour.

WHEN Gabor was mouing, Petrus Zechius, the greateſt baron of Hungary, who in theſe laſt warres kept his owne caſtles from both pretenders, yet alway ſeemed to adhære to the prince, putt himſelfe on horſeback, with about 300 of his owne ſeruants, and went directly toward the camp of Gabor, as if there had bene agreement betweene them to ſpeake together: beeing one nights lodging ſhort, quartered in a ſmall village, and lodged in a barne, cloſe by a wood, at night, beeing ready to goe to bedd, in his ſhirt with a veſt ouer it, going out of the dore, was ſhott dead in the middſt of his ſeruants from the ſhade of the groue, and the aſſaſſine eſcaped. It is thought to bee done by one of his owne, kept purpoſely about him, to preuent any conference betweene him and Gabor; who, fearing that the Imperialls would enter his caſtles, ſent inſtantly 1000 foote and 200 horſe to poſſeſs them, and to take protection of his children; which will alſo ſharpen the quarrell, and the murther is very odious to all the Hungars.

WHEN theſe ambaſſadors of Gabor were at Vienna, they continued the motion of a daughter of the emperour; and had anſwere, That the diſpenſation could not bee obteyned; nor could the houſe of Auſtria, with their honor and conſcience, marry with one of contrary religion. But the ambaſſadors, expecting a ciuill refuſall, vrged to haue the letters promiſed to the marqueſs of Brandeburgh for his ſiſter, and to which, it ſeemes, Gabor is wholly enclyned, which were giuen him; but a licence to paſſe with ſo many horſe to that princes court, was refuſed as ſuſpitious. Yet withall, to diuert that alliance, the emperor made a newe motion for a wife of bloud and quality equall, of a family with which hee had himſelfe married, and fairer then the moone: by which match hee ſhould procure the alliance of many princes, and the fauour of the pope, and of a great faction in France; and deſired them to recommend it to their maſter. The princeſs named, is a daughter of the duke of Neuers. Gabor, ſcarſe knowing the name, ſent a currier hither, to his agent, to enquire of the quality and eſtate of that prince; which meſſage beeing deliuered to mee, as the leaſt partiall, I denyed not my opinion, that the family was noble, and the lady, for her birth, worthy any emperour; but that I was aſſured, that the motion was full of fraud, to drawe the prince into ſuſpition and hatred of this port; ſeeing that the duke of Neuers, extracting his deſcent from the Paleology, laſt Greeke emperors, had lately publiſhed himſelfe a competitor, and begunne a newe order of cheualrie, againſt the grand ſignor; hee would ſeeme by ſuch a match to bee of one councell and conſent with him; that hee was a prince rich for a ſubiect, but not able to giue him any help or countenance, if hee ſhould want it; and that it was the policy of the emperour to diuert him from a great and fitt alliance, to a poore and daungerous, in reſpect of the new pretences of that prince. If your lordſhip wilbee pleaſed to putt all theſe practices of Spaine, and the motions, offers, vndertakings of Gabor, into a ballance, and ſee what they will weigh, and preſent them to his majeſtie; I doubt not, it will appeare, that ſeruice, and proffitt, and expedition to the publique ends, may bee drawne from them. And ſo I committ your honor to the heauenly keeping, and reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, Nouo. $\frac{4}{4}$. 1625.

IT is newly reported, that fryar Berill, mentioned to be ſent to the Coſſacques, is murthered on the way, and that Spaniſh deſſigne preuented. Some giue out his companyon the Polack to bee the actor thereof, for the booty carried 1625.

betweene them; but others ſuſpect the baſſa of Siliſtra, and that their letters and inſtructions are alſo intercepted. The rumour of whoſe death, whether true or falſe, might haſten away the Spaniſh meſſenger; and if this judgment of God be fallen vpon Berill, hee hath deſerued it tenn tymes, hauing betrayed the life of a French gentleman once to the Turks, and paſſed his whole life in acts of treachery.

A DISCOURSE about the Treatye of Spayne, with the GRAND SIGNOR, October 2. 1625. Given by me to the GRAND VIZIER.

BEEING reported that a Bologneſe, and ſubiect of the pope, is come to the high port, giuing out, that hee is ſent as an agent from Naples, to offer a peace to the grand ſignor, in the name of the king of Spaine; a good frend hath thought fitt to enforme the truth of his comming, and the falſeneſs of his pretended meſſage.

FIRST, Hee is no publique miniſter, hauing neither letter of creditt nor commiſſion from the king of Spaine; and if hee haue any from the vice-king of Naples, it will not agree with the honor of the grand ſignor, to treat with a ſubiect, whoſe actions may bee at pleaſure diſauowed by his maſter.

THIS meſſenger was ſent, vpon the arriuall of Cormaro the Jewe, who beeing firſt impriſoned in Naples as a ſpy, and aduiſe giuen into Spaine, that hee came to craue peace, it was ordered to ſett him free; but to keepe him in hoſtage, and to diſpatch this Bologneſe to Conſtantinople, to enterteyne tyme with the grand ſignor, while the Spaniard was oppreſſed with other warrs; and by guifts and impoſſible offers, to make a ſhowe of intended peace, which can neuer bee made by the Spaniard, nor kept without the popes allowance. If hee could not preuaile in his meſſage, hee was then appointed to reſt vnder the name of a ſecretary of the emperors agent, in his houſe; to what end, it is eaſy to coniecture.

HIS propoſitions are, like his commiſſion, falſe and abuſiue.

THE firſt offer made, To ſett free all the Turkiſh ſlaues, is impoſſible to bee performed. The prince and knights of Malta, and the great duke, will neuer diſfurniſh their gallyes for the ſeruice of the king of Spaine.

THE ſecond offer, That they will keepe the ſea from all dammage to bee done to the ſubiects of the grand ſignor, or elſe make good the loſſe, is more abſurd. It is well knowne, the ſtate of Malta is a religion, the foundation wherof is to make warre againſt the enemy of their faith; and they are all ſworne to liue and dye in that proffeſſion, and the king of Spaine hath no authority ouer them. The knights of the order of St. Stephano are of the like fraternity, and ſubiects to the great duke, ouer whom the Spaniard hath no command. But, ſuppoſe the Spaniard could perſwade the Malteſes and Florentines to peace, is it to bee beleeued, that the Spaniard will keep the ſea for the grand ſignor, and ſuffer the piratts of Tunes and Algier to land in Italy, and the Spaniſh dominions? If the Spaniard performe the one, the grand ſignor muſt reſtreyne the other. The offer is full of deceipt, and hath no other ayme, but by ſecurity to weare out the grand ſignors gallyes, to diſuſe them to the ſea, while they will catch ſome other pieces of Barbary, and make themſelues ſtrong in the grand ſignors dominion.

THE third offer, That they will ſerue this ſtate by the Redd-ſea, or Ormus, with all ſpices, callicos, ſhaſhes, and goods of India, and therby pay the grand ſignor great cuſtomes, is ſo apparant a deceipt, that ſhame will bluſh at it. It is knowne to all the world, that they are beaten out of Ormus by the Engliſh 3 yeares ſince; that they dare not once appeare in that ſea; that they are ſupplanted in the mogolls cuntry alſo by the Engliſh; that they haue loſt there all their trade of lynnen, and cannot peepe out without beeing made priſe; that they haue nothing left on that coaſt, but Goa, and two or three poore townes; their armados and vice-re hauing bene beaten by the Engliſh in 3 fights at ſea, one in the port of Suratt, the other before Goa, the laſt in the Perſian gulphe by Ormus; ſo that they haue neither meanes nor creditt in thoſe parts; and if they had, the Engliſh would deſire no better trade, then to ſee them where the entrance of the ſea is ſo narrowe, that they could not eſcape.

1625. THE grand ſignor muſt call to mind, how once they poſſeſt Aden at the mouth of the Redd-ſea; and if hee giue them paſſage into thoſe parts, they will caſt their eye vpon their old loſſes. In the iſlands, from whence they promiſe their ſpices, it is knowne, they haue loſt all. The Engliſh and Dutch poſſeſs all thoſe places that produce the ſpices, as Ternate, Banda, Jaua, Polerone, Amboyna, Bantam, Sumatra, and all other the ports; ſo that the ſubiects of Spayne, in 20 yeares paſt, haue not dared to bee ſeene in thoſe ſeas. To make this euident, Doe not all merchants trading at Cayro know, that now the Engliſh and Duch bring thoſe commodityes by ſhipping to Conſtantinople, which were wont by them to bee bought at Aleppo? Therefore it is playne, that this pretence is falſe, and can neuer bee performed.

THE fourth offer, That they will pay a great ſumme of mony to the grand ſignor yearly, for cuſtomes and ſupply more goods of all ſorts, and at better rates then the Engliſh, French, Venetian, and Dutch, now in frendſhipp with the grand ſignor, is a fair tale; but wiſe men know, that the Spaniard will not giue ſo great ſumms for nothing: and, for cuſtome of goods, it is ympoſſible. Where will the Spaniards haue cloth, kerſies, lead, tynne, and all other the merchandiſe brought hither? Is it not knowne, that for their owne vſe they are ſupplyed from England and France? Lett the Granatines bee examined, if Spaine can ſend out ſuch commodityes; and if they will driue the trade they promiſe, it muſt bee in oranges, lemmons, figgs, raiſins, and wyne. Theſe are all the naturall commodityes of Spaine, and they can performe no other; and all wiſe ſtates will preuent them, to ſupplant their trades with their owne commodity. But where are the Spaniſh ſhipps that muſt trade? Is it not knowne, they haue ſcarſe to ſupply their trades in the Indies and Braſill. Therefore this alſo is a coulor to deceiue, and hath no truth nor foundation.

THE fift offer, That the king of Spaine will procure the king of Poland to keepe in the Coſſacks, is more ridiculous then the reſt. If the king of Poland can doe it, it is moſt likely, hee and the ſtate will endeauour yt for their owne quiett; but if they cannot, the Spaniard will not march to Boriſtine to aſſiſt them. Hath the king of Poland more reguard to the requeſt of the king of Spaine, then to the ſafety of his owne poore ſubiects? It is found by experience, that thoſe people cannott be reſtreyned, but by tyme; to bee ſurpriſed in the winter, and their boats burnt; which the Polacks will neuer doe, vnleſs the Tartars bee alſo kept in. The only remedy therefore for that euill is, That the grand ſignor, and the king of Pole, mayntey ne a true peace, and giue no occaſion of offence the one to the other; but with patience beare the inſolence of theſe theeues, and keep the ſea ſtrong for one or two yeares, and to giue tyme to both to catch aduantages, to bring the Coſſacks and Tartars to due obedience.

BY this whole diſcourſe it is euident, this meſſenger is ſent to deceiue, and to offer what they know cannot bee effected; and they will perhapps alſo bee content to ſend an ambaſſador, and to giue preſents, and to treat two or three yeares to gett aduantage by tyme; but it is neither intended, nor poſſible for them, to make or keepe a peace with the grand ſignor. And the vſe of this treaty they now make, is, that they print and diſperſe, in all Chriſtendome, books, that the grand ſignor hath ſent to entreat peace of them; and that therefore the kinge of Spayne hath licenced the vice-king of Naples to ſpeake therof for reſpects of ſtate. In concluſion, the grand ſignor wilbee abuſed, and all his allyes and frends ſcandalized, by the admiſſion of any treaty.

IF this treaty proceed, in the meane tyme the king of Spaine and the emperour will ioyne all their forces to oppreſs the princes of Germany, and to poſſeſs the paſſages of Italy, and to expell Bethlem Gabor out of Hungary and Tranſiluania; for the offences done by him may bee layd aſide, but neuer forgotten: and then the houſe of Auſtria wilbee at liberty to ſhow what frendſhip they haue purpoſed to the grand ſignor, when they ſhall haue no more enemyes to withſtand them. And this only treaty will make all the other princes of Chriſtendome, that were reſolued to oppoſe their encreaſe of greatneſs, to follow the example, and to looke to their owne eſtates, by making peace with Spaine, which is now in their power.

IF this meſſenger haue any other pretences, if they ſhalbee made knowne, the falſhood of them ſhalbee diſcouered, and the truth of theſe anſwers mayntey ned.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My Lord,

I BEGINN wher your lordſhip concludes, with a juſtification, of a complaint that you haue beene long without any returne from mee. I haue often ſaid that were noe excuſe acceptable if I were guiltye; your letters of the 4. of Auguſt and 1. September, accuſe a long tyme; and your former, looke farther back vpon my neglect; if it were mine. By diuers late diſpatches, I haue aduiſed you particularly, all the dates ſent; and now in the generall, I muſt teſtifie for my ſelfe, that I haue examined my papers, and find, that from the 5. October laſt, to this day, which compleates a year. I haue omitted no 14 dayes but only three; and of theſe alway ſent duplicates. Of late I haue beene wronged by I know not whom, nor againſt whom to complayne, the miſcarriage hath beene in Venice, for thither the balyo vndertakes; and I finde no way of ſuſpicion, but that ſome falſe hand beeing vnder merchants couers, hath called for them out of the bola, and carried them perhaps to no frend: 3 originalls of May and June, are miſed in England, and there I am not leſs blamed. Your lordſhip ſhall doe me a fauor to command a ſeruant to ſearch for the dates receiued, that I may know what is wanting, and ſupply itt, if you take pleaſure in the continuance of our hiſtory; and that you will alſo, in all yours, take notice of my laſt.

I FEARE I ſhall not bee able to write to her majeſtie this poſt, though I doe to your lordſhip, much, I hope, for her ſeruice and content; for haueing fallen vpon a contraſt with the Venetians, by two forward conſulls in Aleppo; I am enforced thither, to England and Venice, to write aboue twenty ſheetes in intricate and troubleſome matter.

THE ſtate of this empire hath produced no remarkable alteration; the jealouſye of the Tartars is ſomwhat appeaſed, but the termes with Poland vncerteyne, while the Coſſacks are vnreſtrayned. The grand ſignor hath vſed all flattery to the Tartars-han to enter Poland in reuenge; which he hath promiſed, and rode as far as Akyrman, but from thence excuſed his not proceeding vpon the waters; which is doubtfully enterpreted, that he hath no will. In the meane tyme the kyng of Poland, hath ſent an army againſt the Coſſacks, to ſhew his ſinceritye to the peace, which is well taken by this ſtate; but whether the councell bee good and righteous, (thoſe poore men hauing ſtood in the breach in the laſt inuaſion) the ſucceſſe will beſt diſcouer, and many are ſcandalized at itt.

THE Geiorgians haue giuen the Perſian a blow, and ſent their heads hither by a nuntio, who is diſpatched away with the biſhop of Chalcedon, my good frend, as ambaſſador from the grand ſignor, to enter league with thoſe princes, to make ſome diuerſion. To giue accovnt of their quarrel, were a long hiſtory; but Abaſſa, the old rebell, that will not truſt himſelf with the vizier, pretends that he will vnite with them in the ſeruice of this ſtate; but yet he fortefyes himſelfe ſtrongly, and hath diſcharged his Janizaries. The grand ſignor, to aſſure him, or to preuent that he reuolt not, hath ſent him the dignity of a vizier, a ſword and veſt, and authority to make warr in company of the Geiorgians in quality of a generall; ſo well a ſtrong theeſe proſpers heere. The laſt aduiſe from the great vizier arriued this day, that he was with his army at Moſull, a place recouered from the Perſians in the way to Babilon, who vnderſtanding of ſupply of 8000 ſent thither, to reenforce the garriſon, ſent out a party of Courds, that encountred, and broke them, obteyning a full victory, with the fall of 2000, and the generall, and 2 young princes taken priſoners, who ſhalbe ſent hither with the heades of their followers; and this newes makes much joy in this court.

THE vizier hath demanded a million and 200000 chickens to bee ſent before hand, for 4 monthes pay of the army; giuing this reaſon, that foreſeeing hee muſt winter in thoſe partes, and that Babilon wilbe defended, it is neceſſary to haue mony to hold his men together; for if he ſhall diſmiſs them to their hibernations, it wilbee Auguſt before they can be drawen into the field, and the ſpring loſt; and to hold them that are already almoſt in mutiny, wilbe impoſſible, vpon creditt. To this end, all wayes are vſed to raiſe mony, and a third ſhalbe ſent from hence, which the reſt wilbe found (the ordinary chardge far exceeding the reuenewe) is vnknowne, and muſt light heauy ſome where.

1625. THE king of Perſia reported to bee taken in his limms, which commonly foreruns ſome ſodaine enterpriſe, lyes with his army about Tauris, indifferently to ſuccor Babilon, and to attend the Circaſſians, or to make ſome diuerſion when hee ſhall ſee the viziers army ſettled, and engaged in a ſiege.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{4}{14}$.
Nou. 1625.

To her MAJESTIE the QUEEN of BOHEMIA:

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

I HAUE made lardge relations to my lord ambaſſador of many particulars, which if they were rightly apprehended, may bee converted into your Majeſties ſeruice; and the contrarye, if too long neglected: but I know not by what ſleepy fate, I had neuer credit enough in two yeares, to procure one line, one approbation, one incouragement in my endeauours, or one direction how to proceede in theſe important opportunityes, which are loſt in a moment, and may bee repented an age. The prince of Tranſyluania is agayne entring into action, and many coniectures concurr to ſharpen him, which will reſolue into good or euill, as he ſhalbe reſpected from Chriſtendome. I am threatened to bee diſgraced; but I haue two ſo firme retraictes, your Majeſties protection, and my owne conſcience, that I am not yet afrayd; though I muſt accuſe my ſelfe of ſo much frowardnes, that if the zeale of his majeſties and your ſeruice, and the true loue of my countrye, did not ouerrule all other paſſions, I am weary of ſo many repetitions and preſſures, in a buſines wherin I runne hazard, and ſpend myne owne, without notice taken, or ſo much as the reward of a good horſe, a clap vpon the back. When the clocke ſtrikes, though it hath but one tale euery twenty fower houres repeated, yet ſomebody vouchſafeth to tell yt; but I know not whither I bee heard or not. Your Majeſtie may bee pleaſed to fynd ſome way of remedye, and to procure ſome anſwere, or that the ſtate take all omiſſions and ſilence for better ſeruice; for ſo much I haue my ſelfe intimated to my lord Conway. Your Majeſtie will fynd, in my letter to my lord ambaſſador, a new motion of the emperor to giue a wife to Gabor, full of deceipt and deepe fraud, ſo much I haue diſcouered to him: and if the marqueſs of Brandeburgh bee content to giue him his ſiſter, which wilbe a great tye vpon him, and much reputation and ſtrength to the religion and generall cauſe, your Majeſtie in your wiſdome will apprehend the oportunitye, and procure the kyng of Bohemia to aduiſe with expedition the counterwoorkings, and to conclude the match, if at leaſt it bee acceptable to the elector. I am here worne out with Turkiſh injuſtice and oppreſſions, but hoping the tyme of my redemption drawes neare, I will liue by patience; and the contemplation, that I ſhall recouer the happy day, wherin I may doe your Majeſtie better ſeruice: humbly kyſſing your royal hands, I reſt Conſt. $\frac{6}{16}$ Nou.

1625.

Your Majeſties moſt deuoted vnprofitable worme.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THIS weeke here arriued into this towne a currier ſent by the archduke Leopold, with letters vnto this ſtate, to this effect: That where as his occaſions were ſuch as did require his preſence at Rome, he did entreat this fauor of theſe ſenatori, that they would be pleaſed to graunt him free paſſage though their ſtate, in his journey thither. To this demaund of his, this ſtate hath returned this anſwer: That for himſelfe, and ſome few nearer vnto him, of whom he will make choice to ſerue him, they will willingly graunt a free paſſage, but vnto his whole court they could not, without feare of prejudicing themſelfes, not knowing out of what infectious parts ſome of them might come; who paſiing through their dominions, might leaue ſome infection behind them. The Venetians are indeed, in theſe infectious tymes, very curious concerning the health of all that paſſe through their ſtate, not admitting any to ſet foote on their ground, of whom they haue the leaſt ſuſpicion to come from a place infected. This excuſe they haue made a coloure to ſome other end of theirs; they haue likewiſe deſyred him to make ſome ſtay in theſe parts, and to accept of them ſuch courteſies as his merits deſerue. The arch-duke Leopold hath returned them many thanks for their kind offer, accepting only of the paſſage, by reaſon that his journy requireth haſte. It is ſuppoſed here, that the chiefe end of his journy is to treat a marriage betwixt himſelfe and the widdow of Vrban, of the howſe of Florence. In Rome they are of another opinion, thinking that he hath no other end but to require aſſiſtance of the pope, to helpe to maintayne the warrs in Germany againſt the proteſtants, the pope hath ſhewed himſelfe vnwilling to receaue him, and hath dealt vnderhand to hinder his comming, and no queſtion theſe warrs in Italy will make the pope to keepe what he hath, and not to contribute to warrs in other countries. 1625.

This ſtate hath entertayned into their ſeruice the ſonne of Monſieur de Bethuns, giuing him the command of 2000 foote, he hath this morning beene in the college, to take his leaue of the ſenate, intending ſhortly to ſet forward for France, and there to rayſe his trouppes. The duke of Mantoua is lately parted from this towne much diſcontented, becauſe theſe ſenatori will not agree vnto certaine propoſitions he hath propoſed vnto them. Concerning Verua, there is no feare that it will be loſt; but little action hath beene in thoſe parts of late.

I do conſtantly receaue your lordſhips letters, for my lord ambaſſador, once euery fortnight; and do not fayle to write vnto your lordſhip as often as I haue any thing worthy your knowledge. I haue here incloſed a letter ſent vnto you from Sir Dudly Carleton, recommended to my couer; I haue likewiſe ſent your lordſhip a coppy of thoſe propoſitions my lord ambaſſador made at Zurick, haueing ſent vnto you before, his propoſitions he made at Coire, with the anſwere vnto them made by the leagues.

I WILL be no longer troubleſome vnto your lordſhip at this preſent, but recommending you, and your affaires, vnto the protection of the Almighty, I euer remayne.

Venice, November 7.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

MY lord ambaſſador is ſafely arriued vnto Turin, where he is very likely to winter, &c.

From the Lord Archbiſhop of CANTERBURY.

My very good Lord,

I HAVE received ſundry letters from you, and their duplicates at other times, for which I heartily thanke you; but ſince my laſt writing vnto you, I haue beene hindred from knowing or acting any thinge, as all heere haue beene, by the greateſt plague that hath beene knowne in England, every man beeing driuen to ſhift for himſelfe, the kinge and queene being chaſed from one houſe and countrey to another; and my ſelfe keeping my family locked vp at Croiden, and not daring to go to Lambith, where the ſickneſſe hath much raged, and is hote enoughe at this time.

IN the greate plague that was in the beginning of kinge James his reigne, there dyed in London in the higheſt weeke 3300, but now the greateſt weeke hath bene 5200; whiche hath given a ſtop as to many other things, ſo hitherto to the coronation of the king. That weeke wherein queene Elizabeth dyed, the bill for the plague was eleven, and iuſt the ſame number was in that weeke wherein kinge James departed this worlde; but the ſickneſſe growing, made men wary at the funerals of that kinge, whiche was performed with all magnificence; but more wary at the bringing home of the queene, but moſt of all at the entring to a parliament.

THAT aſſembly began at Weſtminſter, and the laity gave two ſubſidies, the clergy three, vpon ſucceſſion of ſome other whiche are not yet out. But the plague increaſing, and mony being wanting to ſet foorthe a greate fleete, whiche was then at hande, the parliament (as many thought againſt the heart) was adiourned to Oxford. This meeting, Auguſt the firſt, when it was harveſt time, and the ſickneſſe raged every where, had no happy ſucceſſe; for the houſe of commons falling fearcely vpon my lord of Buckingham, the king held it fitt to breake off that aſſembly, and ſo men returned home leſſe contented then they came out.

1625. SINCE that time, a league offenſive and defenſive with the Hollanders is concluded, whereat all good good men reioyce. A very great fleete is ſending foorth, or as wee lately heare, is lately put of from Plimmouth with 10000 land-men in it; I pray God to proſper it. Secretary Wyereton returning from Holland, where hee had ſpeciall imployment, is deade. Diverſe ſhips of Spaniſhe goods, to the value of 200000*l.* are taken as good prize, the Dunkerkers before having inſolently caryed themſelves vnto our merchants, and ſhips. Mansfeld hath newe Supplyes; and the king of Denmarke hath given Tilly a wipe for 4 or 5 thouſand men.

Of Bethlehem Gabor wee heare nothing; and you muſt not marveile, that you have not directions in circumſtances appertaining to that buſineſſe. Hee that ſhould attend you therewith, hath a greater burthen vpon him, then hee is able to beare. You muſt not looke for muche good by any aſſiſtance that prince ſhall have from Fraunce; for the kinge is every way younge there, and many of his miniſters bende to the Spaniſhe endes, as may be gueſſed at by the deſerting of their owne action, by Dediſguieres and the duke of Savoy, whome I pray God they do not leave in the lurche. I feare wee ſhall have no great coniunction from them in our warres, whiche the king of Denmarke did foreſee, and intimate, wiſhing that wee ſhould reſt on none but ſuche as were of the reformed religion. I do muche ſuſpect the iſſue of that whiche is, and the rather becauſe the Frenche leave all other actions to oppreſſe their proteſtants at home; and wee are not able to prevaile to turne them from that deſigne.

WHAT you write concerning the Spaniſhe attempts to make peace with the Ottoman, I eaſily beleeve: they make conſcience of nothing to gaine their owne endes. They hate vs perfectly, and by the credulity of king James, who by no meanes would bee diſſuaded from it, they have gotten many advantages of vs in Germany: I pray God wee may with ſounde counſaile ſettle thoſe attempts that wee ſhall make againſt them.

NOW I write to the patriarke I may miſſe my ſtiles and complements, whiche I ſhould ſet right if I could get to my papers at Lambith: I muſt intreate you to ſupply what is wanting. But I do marveilous well like of your traffiking with him for his Greeke copyes, whiche there do no good, and may ſerve for ſingular vſe here. I hold it vnfitt to trouble the kinge in that argument, but wee will ſtraine ſome other way. There ſhall not bee wanting a good library of bookes to returne him, if thoſe whiche hee deſireth may bee had in theſe partes, and they bee to be compaſſed with any convenient ſumme of mony. I pray you advertiſe mee what it may bee gueſſed will give ſatiſfaction for thoſe copies, and then you ſhall heare mine opinion concerning the ſame: but certainely thoſe bookes are a greate treaſure, whiche now lyeth not onely neglected, but a man may ſay almoſt buryed where now they are.

THEY are ſtrange accidents whiche your letters report to have fallen out about that porte; and the rage of the plague hath bene very muche, whiche hath driven thoſe miſcreants to prayers and proceſſions. Wee have here, with better knowlege, taken a courſe to appeaſe Gods wrathe in the peſtilence, and therefore in parliament decreed ſolemne faſts and publicke prayers throughout the whole kingdome, the king himſelfe, at Weſtminſter churche ioyning with the lords and the reſt of the commons. And certainely God hath bene muche mooved to looke on vs in mercy, the whole number of the deade, this laſt weeke, being fallen to eight hundred; and wee truſt in his mercy to heare of a greater diminution weekely. Since, to 300 and od.

I WAS troubled this yeere with a longer fit of the gowte then at any time heeretofore, which fell out by a relapſe which I had by going to the parliament at Weſtminſter, and taking cold; yet, I thanke God, I was at Oxford at that convention, and grew the better by it. Your noble frend and mine, the lord Carew, was for a time troubled with a palſey, and was glad to go to the Bathe for it; but, I thanke God, is well returned to None-ſuche, and bowleth on the greene there every day.

I WROTE thus farre 20 dayes ſince, and then being troubled with a fit of the goute, I was forced to ſtay. Since that time, the duke of Buckingham is gone into Holland. Wee expect daily ſome newes of our greate fleete. Wee heare that Bethlehem Gabor hath an army on foote, and that the king of Denmarke goeth well on, Mansfeld and the duke of Brunſwicke being ioyned with him.

I

1625.

I DOUBT not but you are advertiſed from ſome of the Turkye company, that one Sir Thomas Philips, preſſeth harde to bee your ſucceſſor. A great man that ſent Sir John Aires thither formerly, will take no naye ; but it muſt bee ſo. God diſpoſe all to the beſt ; and if matters ſhould fall out to his deſire, wee ſhall haue that benefite by it, that wee may ſee you in England. I wiſhe all Gods bleſſings vpon you ; and aſſure you, that I am Croidon, Novemb. 11.

1625

Your Lordſhips loving frende,

G. CANT.

~~To~~ From the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honourable,

BY former aduertiſements you will have vnderſtood the conſtancie of his majeſtie to purſue the reſolutions and deſigns for recoverie of the palatinat, and not to lay down armes vntill hee hath reſtored and aſſured the peace of chriſtendome ; but moſt eſpecially that of Germany, wherein ſo many princes and ſtates haue beene either diſpoſſeſt or oppreſt, for their good affection to the common cauſe and intereſt of religion, libertie, ſafetie, and conſervation of the ſacred fundamental lawes of the empire ; which, of late years, haue beene trampled on by the armes, and to ſatiſfie the ambitions of the houſe of Auſtria. To oppoſe which, beſides the ſetting vpp of count Mansfelt, ioyning with the king of Denmarke, by a contribution of 30000 pounds a moneth ; and ſending to ſea a royal fleete, his majeſtie hath latelie concluded a league, offenſiue and defenſiue, with the States, againſt the king of Spaine ; and hath now ſent the duke of Buckingham, and the earle of Holland, ambaſſadors extraordinary to the Hagh ; there to meete with the ambaſſadors of the French king, the kings of Denmarke and Sweden, the elector of Brandenburgh, and ſuch other princes of Germany as ſhall ſend thither, to treate of an vnion and league offenſiue and defenſiue for recoverie of the libertie of Germany, and the reducing of things from the extremity and danger they are in, to the wonted equalitie, whereby each prince and State may be reſtored and ſecured in their ancient and rightfull dignities and poſſeſſions.

FROM theſe generallities, in your wiſdome and iudgement, you will eaſily collect how well and vſefullie yours haue employed your ſelfe, to keepe vpp the good affections of Bethelem Gabor, and to incline him to action ; of which, by your ſeuerall letters and diſpatches, according to the occaſion and progreſſe of affaires, you haue giuen an ample, a moſt exact, and wiſe account : and I muſt aſſure you, not onelie of his majeſties gracious acceptation, and approbation of the whole negotiation therein ; but alſo that it hath much improved you in his majeſties favor and good opinion, who obſeruing your diſcreete and dexterous handling of this buſines, takes thereby knowledge of your great abilities and fitnes for the greateſt employments. And in this concurrence of affaires, wherein his majeſtie proceeds ſoe roundlie, and ſeekes ſoe earneſtlie to forme a ſtrong and ſure party, and to expreſſe his paſſionate affection to the publicke good, is content to ſpare from his owne contentment perſons of ſuch eminencie, nearenes, and dearnes vnto him, to bee his ambaſſadors. You may confidently proceed, and take all occaſions, which ſhall reaſonablie and fairelie preſent themſelues, to foment that diuerſion by Bethlem Gabor ; the importance whereof you haue wiſelie obſerved. And conſidering his owne intereſts and ambitions, the good ſatisfaction (wee heare) his meſſenger returnes with from France, and the ſtrong attempts wilbe made in ſeverall places, both by ſea and land vpon the houſe of Auſtria, (of which you may aſſure him) ; it is conceived he wilbe eaſily perſwaded to enter into the quarrell, and not expect much invitation, or conditions of aſſiſtance in mony ; ſeeing the mayntenance of the armies att land, and fleetes att ſea, will take vpp whatſoeuer can be found ; and that by them great and faire advantages wilbe offered him, and himſelfe in a great meaſure ſecured againſt his enemies, who will not be able to aſſaile and defend in ſoe many places att once.

THE advertiſements you giue of the [a] 4939242 19667466474 794 357 62.62 154 are well waighed with the conſequence hereof. And as his majeſtie expects, that on your part you ſhould with the [b] 665946 346 and [c] 2.976464271 896 3391 999947 a t.

[a] Spaniſh ouertures for peace with the grand ſignor.

[b] Utmoſt

[c] Induſtrye yow can oppoſe.

1625. 999947 the ſame; ſoe he doubts not but that [d] 355 214 will appeare and concurre effectually with yours herein, eſpecially [e] 208 629471 5.346744. 296747464. are the [f] 9734746 and [g] 2473674.6. And to this they ſhalbe quickened.

FOR your lordſhips information in the ſtate of affaires, I will now giue you a briefe account, both of what hath beene acted here, and receiued from abroad ſince a few weekes.

HIS majeſtie, to view his fleete and armie before they went forth, made a journey to Plimouth; where he tooke ſoe great contentment in the goode order hee found, both in his fleete and armie, gallant ſhipps in good equipage, and exceedinglie well prouided, and able perſons of men, wanting neither courage nor alacritie, as his majeſtie ſtayed a weeke longer then was deſigned amongſt them. His majeſtie left the duke of Buckingham behind him there, to ſee all things accommodated for the orderlie ſetting forth of the fleete; wherein he vſed ſo much dexteritie, as that worke which the chiefe commanders ſaw noe poſſibility to performe in three weekes, his grace finiſhed in one. All that wee haue heard, ſince their ſetting forth, is, that they haue beene ſeene by a marchant, about the North-cape, vpon the coaſt of Spaine, ſcattered by a ſtorme; but gathering together againe, without any appearance of much loſſe or prejudice.

WEE haue not beene altogether free from feare of ſome attempt vpon this coaſt, or Ireland, from Dunkerke; they hauing gotten together a fleete of 20 ſayle, and drawne hither 4 or 5000 land-ſouldiers; and there was cauſe to doubt the more, in reſpect that the Hollanders fleete, with which his majeſtie had ioyned ſix ſhipps that lay before Dunkerke to block vpp the hauen, were forced from thence by a ſtorme ſoe violent, as 16 or 18 of the Holland ſhipps were conſtrained to cutt their maſts, and with difficultie to ſaue themſelues; and three marchants ſhipps of the ſix ſent by his majeſtie were ſunke, the reſt hardlie recouering the downes. To preuent the dangers, fitt cautions were given to the lord deputie, and the trained bands in diuers parts here drawn to the coaſt, which haue ſince beene diſmiſſed, vpon certaine advertiſement, that the Dunkerkers, having a free paſſage, made out of the harbours, to find the Holland buſſes and fiſhermen; amongſt whom they haue done ſo much miſchiefe, by ſinking their buſſes and deſtroying their fiſhing, as beſides the loſſe of men, whom they drowned and carried away priſoners to ſerue in their ſhipps, the Holanders haue hereby ſuffered prejudice two millions of Florins. And this exploit done, they returned home to Dunkerke: and to waite vpon them againe, his majeſtie and the States haue other ſhipps in readines to goe to ſea.

PROCLAMATIONS haue beene publiſhed here, for baniſhing of prieſts and jeſuits; forbidding the bringing vpp of Engliſh Children in forraine ceminaries, calling home all ſouldiers that ſerue the king of Spaine, and archducheſſe; and commanding all captaines in his majeſties pay, to reſide where their charge is.

HIS majeſtie hath alſo giuen order, as well for the diſarming of all recuſants, both lords and others, within the kingdome; as that all others of abilitie, not recuſants, ſhall furniſh theſelues with armes, according to their eſtate, for their owne and the publicke defence. And further, by commiſſion vnder the great ſeale, publiſhed in the court of chancerie, and all other the high courts of juſtice, his majeſtie hath commanded the execution of the lawes concerning recuſancie.

THE parlament att Oxford being diſſolued, without giving ſuch ſupplie to his majeſtie as was neceſſarie and deſired; the neceſſities were ſuch as haue inforced his majeſtie to proceed vpon privy ſeales, to gett in money by waie of loane.

MONSIUR DE SOUBIZE beeing defeated before Rochell in a ſea-fight, came into England, whileſt his majeſtie was at Plimouth; he remaines at Mr. Pouletts in Somerſetſhire, but hath not beene admitted to his majeſties preſence. He brought with him 24 or 25 ſaile of ſhipps, of all ſorts, and 1500 men; which are yett kept together by his majeſties bountie, who hath giuen them two moneths entertainment.

HIS majeſtie preſſeth earneſtlie the French king, for returne of his owne ſhipp, and the ſeaven marchants, lent him the laſt ſummer; the time for which they were lent being expired, and the worke done; and noe intention that they ſhould be vſed for the blocking vpp of Rochell, if that king ſhall ſeeke by force to reduce it.

HIS

[d] All the ambaſſadors reſident.

[e] Venice ambaſſador whoſe maſters intereſts

[f] neareſt

[g] greateſt

His majeſtie alſo labours earneſtlie himſelfe, and inuites other princes and ſtates to ioyne with him, to diſpoſe that king to a peace with his ſubiects of the religion; that, giuing an end to that vnnaturall and vnprofitable inteſtine warre, he may employ his armes and forces with honor, and for his owne ſafetie, in the publicke cauſe, and for reſtoring the publicke peace.

We haue manie daies ſince heard, that the king of Denmarke being throughlie recovered of the dangerous hurt he receiued by a fall with his horſe, and being come againe to his armie, conſiſting of 26 or 27000 horſe and foote, well paid, and in verie good equipage, he hath, by his preſence, putt new life and courage into his men; who, in many ſmall encounters with Tillys men, haue alwaies had the advantage with honor: and that this had moued the princes of the Nether Saxescreis, to declare themſelues for the king; and thoſe of Brunſwick were alreadie in armes, and had ſent to the duke Chriſtian to come and command them. Now wee haue advices, that the king of Denmarke hath, by force driven count Tilly from the ſiege of Nienburg, with the loſſe of 4000 men; and followes after him, Tilly ſtanding vpon the defenſiue. That the king hath given out commiſſion for raiſing 9000 men more: that count Mansfelt, with 5000 foote and 1000 horſe, of his owne, and a regiment of 3000, lent vnto that king by the ſtates, were as farre as Bremen on their waie towards the king: in favor of whom alſo, and for their owne defence, the princes in thoſe parts did arme. And that the kings armie being now increaſed to 30000 foote, and 7 or 8000 horſe, he did call vpon the Hants townes, and ſuch princes as ſtood neutrall to declare; which it was likelie they would find of neceſſity to doe one waie or other, for feare of further inconvenience.

For your lordſhips particular, according to your owne requeſt and the commandement of your noble ladie, I haue long ſince moued his majeſtie touching your penſion. His majeſtie was pleaſed graciouſlie and cheerefullie to expreſſe himſelfe, that although his occaſions might preſſe him to make ſtopp of ſome, yett his purpoſe was, that penſion ſhould be continued and paid. And having ſoe good an aſſurance, vpon this warrant I alſo ſpake to the lord treaſurer; who aſſured mee of his good will and readines to giue your lordſhip ſatisfaction.

I likewise repreſented vnto his majeſtie, the honor you had done him, and extraordinary expence you had beene att, in ſending blackes to the ambaſſadors reſident there, vpon the newes of his fathers death. And his majeſtie making a good conſtruction of what you had done, hath beene pleaſed to giue you a privy ſeale for 200 l. in that conſideration; all other ambaſſadors hauing had but 150 l. I haue giuen charge to a ſeruant of mine to take care of it.

I will now hold your lordſhip noe longer, then to pray you to preſent my ſeruice to your noble lady, and to make vſe of mee in your occaſions, according to the intereſt you haue in

November,
12th. 1625.

Your Lordſhips affectionate friend to ſerue you,

E. Conwey.

This letter was ſent to Paris, to be from thence convayed to Venice; becauſe vpon the breaking with Spaine, the curriers, both on this ſide and that, had beene ſeverall times ſtayed, and their letters ſeized, and their free paſſage not yet ſettled; ſoe as the waie of Antwerp was held vnſafe.

CHARLES, Rex.

INSRUCTIONS for our right truſty, and right entirely beloued Couſin and Counſellor, George Duke of Buckingham, our High Admirall of England; and for our right truſty, and right welbeloued Couſin and Counſellor, Henry Earle of Holland, our Ambaſſadors Extraordinary to our deare Vncle the King of Denmarke.

If our deare vncle, the king of Denmarke, ſhall employ an ambaſſador to treate with yow; or that yow ſhall find it good for our ſeruice, and for the advancement of thoſe ends for which yow are employed, to make any overtures to him: yow 1625. ſhall by all meanes indeavour to give him a perfect vnderſtanding of the iuſt cauſes our deare father, of bleſſed memory, had, to make thoſe overtures to him, which he did by his ambaſſador, Sir Robert Anſtruther. And that wee, vpon the wiſe and kingly anſwears made by him, did double our affection to vndertake a warre againſt the king of Spayne: in purſuite whereof, wee have ſent out a fleete of ſhipps, with 10000 land ſoldiers; and have now employed yow our ambaſſadors to the Hagh, as the moſt convenient place, and that which was appointed for the meeting of the reſt of the kings, princes, and eſtates, by themſelves or their ambaſſadors, to conſult and reſolve of the beſt, ſpeedieſt, and ſafeſt wayes to make a ioint warre, which might conſerve Germany, and the vnited provinces, and advance ſo vpon the publique ennemy, as might conſtrayne him to offer good conditions, or ſettle the peace of Germany, and ſecure the eſtates of the princes and commonweales of the empire, and neighbour kings, by their armes.

HERE yow may take occaſion to ſhew the common intereſt, and how requiſite it wilbee, for every particular prince and commonweale to caſt of all partiality and artifices, for the avoyding of neceſſary charge from themſelves, and caſting great burthens vpon others; but as it is for publique ſafety, ſo with common counſell, forces, and purſes to conjoyne in aſſiſtance for defenſive and offenſive action; and withall, make it appeare, how our deare father, of bleſſed memory, and our ſelf, ſince meeting with that coniuncture of affaires, in which no man appeared to make reſiſtance to that inundation of action and practice, which was ready by force to poſſeſſe the houſe of Auſtria of all the paſſages to their monarchy, and by a projected and declared aſſembly of a diett to confirme their conqueſts, and ſuccour the iuſt heyres, and depreſſe the true religion; our deare father, of glorious memory, and our ſelf, had recourſe to the wiſedome, courage, and power of our deare vncle: and he, fulfilling our hopes to ioyne with vs, and making a propoſition, wee found it requiſite (without examining or diſputing) to enter into the accompliſhment of the demands; but even vnder confidence, that when, by an army vnder the conduct of ſo powerfull a guide as our deare uncle, tyme and opportunity might be given to the reſt of the princes of Germany, to take heart, and to meete in common councell; that then the quotas of every ſeverall prince and member of that ſtate would be ſo equally layd, and (according to their intereſt) ſo rayſed, as wee (who are to doe other great works by diverſion) may not bee in any degree ſo charged, as with the maintenance of 6000 foote, and 1000 horſe, with artillery accordingly, or with 30000 l. a monthe.

AND as yow are to inſiſt vpon a large moderation of the monthly charge, ſo are yow to make a carefull computation, whether it wilbee more advantage for the ſervice, to continue money, of what proportion ſoever, or to furniſh ſoldiers of our owne nations; and whether the charge will not be more to furniſh officers for the trayne of artillery, commiſſaryes for the muſters, treaſurers and paymaſters, or leave them to the generall officers of the army, as they now ſtand, whilſt wee pay money, and find no men, armes or artillery in ſpecie. But before all, yow muſt be ſure that our deare vncle be throughlie affected, and well engaged, before yow preſſe too earneſtly the withdrawing of our payments; leaſt our deare vncle, foreſeeing our reaſon and neceſſityes, and not being confirmed in the will and power of the German princes, may thinke of his owne diſengagement, and, by complying with the emperour, make his owne ſurety and advantage.

Dated at the Court at Saliſbury,
the 17th of October, 1625.

EDWARD CONWEY.

COPIE of the Articles of the Treaty made at the Hagh, betwixt Engliſh and Denmarke Ambaſſadors, and Deputies of the States.

COMME ainſi ſoit que d'un commun conſentement, & en conſideration des mauuaiſes & tres dangereuſes menées, outrages, violences, & opreſions, les quellés depuis quelques années piſques a preſent non ſeulement ne ſont menacées, mais auſſi par guerre ouuerte, & de faut executées contre la pacification eſtablie & confirmée de temps en temps ſucceſſiuement par les emperateurs meſmes, et contre les autres conſtitutions fondamentales de l'empire, & les capitulations jurées. Tout ce qui concerne non ſeulement les electeurs, princes, villes, & eſtats d'Alemagne, mais auſſi par vne ineuitable conſequence les roys, princes, & eſtats voyſins, amys, & alliez, alliez, a cauſe de l'intereſt qu'ils ont en la conſervation des dicts paix, conſtitutions, capitulations, & confirmations, on a eſté pouſſé & contraint, pour en temps, obuier & empeſcher les cours trop violents & inſupportables de ces mauvaiſes intentions & oppreſſions, et pour le reſtabliſſement, & conſeruation de ladicte liberté, droicts, & conſtitutions de l'empire, de s'oppoſer a vne ſi euidement approchante ruine, & a tous ceux qui maintenent ou pour l'aduenir en ſeront les autheurs ; eſt que pour les dictes raiſons le ſereniſſime roy de la Gr. Bret. a envoyé icy a la Haye en Hollande, les tres illuſtres ſeigneurs, George, duc de Buckingham, grand admiral d'Angleterre, Henry, comte d'Hollande, ſes ambaſſadeurs extraordinaires ; & le ſeigneur Dudley Carleton, chevalier, ſon ambaſſadeur ordinaire, pres les ſeigneurs Eſtats Generaulx du pais bas. Et auſſy le ſereniſſime roy de Dannemarc, les ſeigneurs Jaques Vlefeld de Viup, chancelleur du Royaume de Dannemarc, gouerneur de Niburg, & Chriſtian Thomaſſen, de Tommerup, ſes ambaſſadeurs extraordinaires ; & que les dicts Eſtats Generaulx des provinces vnies du pais bas ont commis & deputez les ſeignieurs Floris, comte de Cutenburgh, baron de Pallant, Witthiem, Weerde, ſeigneur de Leede, Lieden, Wildenburgh, Henſwieter, Engelſdorp, Vvechem, Bachem, &c. Nicholi de Bouchorſt, ſeigneur de Noortwick, baillif & grand maiſtre des leuées de Rynland ; Anthoine Duick, conſeilleur & pentionaire des eſtats d'Hollande & Weſtfriſe ; Simon de Beaumont, conſeilleur pentionaire de la ville de Middelburg ; Gyſbert de Herteuelt, Chriſtian Ooſterzée, Grietman de Lemſterland, Thomas Verwer, bourguemaiſtre de la ville de Dementer & Gooſſen Schaffer, ſeigneur de Vthuſen & Meden, leurs commiſſaires, leſquels ayants eſté pluſieurs fois aſſemblez icy a la Haye ſudicte pour traicter & convenir ſur l'ordre & remede neceſſaire pour parvenir aux fins ſuſmentionées, ſont accordez, & conuenus entre eux des articles ſuiuants.

1625

1. PREMIEREMENT, qu'il y aura vne alliance ferme, ſtable, & permanente entre les ſereniſſimes roys de la Grande Bretagne & de Dannemarc, et les ſeigneurs Eſtats Generaulx des provinces vnies du pais bas.

2. QUE pour remedier aux maux ſuſdicts, S.M. de Dannemarc tiendra ſur pied ſon armée, & la groſſira de 28. a 30000 ſoldats a pied, & de 7. a 8000 a cheual, moyennant qu'elle ſoit deuement & ſuffiſamment aſſiſté des confederez.

3. QUE S. M. de la Gr. Bretagne aſſiſtera le roy de Dannemarc de 300000 florins par moys, a payer en la ville de Hamburgh, de moys en moys preciſement, & a conter 32. jours pour vn moys.

4. QUE ſa M. de la Gr. Bretag. en ſuitte de l'alliance contractée entre elle & les dicts ſeigneurs Eſtats Generaulx, & ſelon les conventions d'icelle mettra en mer vne autre flotte, pour ſeconder celle qui deſja eſt en mer, a fin de par ce moyen diuertir & empeſcher les forces de la contrepartie.

5. QUE leſdicts ſeigneurs Eſtats Generaulx aſſiſteront S. M. de Dannemarc de 50000 florins par moys, a conter comme deſſus, et outre ce, en cas que leurs affaires le pourroyent permettre, & que les forces de leur ennemy s'advancoyent, contre l'armée du roy de Dannemarc, feront en faueur de ladicte armée vne bonne caualcade, pour diuertir ledict ennemy, & encores contribueront leur part a la ſuſdicte flotte du roy de la Gr. Bret. Et en l'eſté qui vient mettront auſſy en campagne tant d'infanterie & cauallerie qu'il leur ſera poſſible, pour faire vn bon camp & empeſcher que leurs ennemis en voyent de renfort contre ladicte armée du roy de Dannemarc.

6. QUE nul des confederez ne pourra ſortir de ceſte confederation deuant que l'on aye, par la grace de Dieu, obtenu le reſtabliſſement ſuſdict en Allemagne.

7. QU'auſſi nul des confederez pourra recevoir ouuertures du parti contraire, ſi non celles qui ſeront preſentées par eſcrit, auxquelles auſſy nulle reſponce eſſentielle pourra eſtre donnée juſques a ce que icelles ſeront communiquées aux miniſtres de tous les confederez reſidents icy a la Haye, & ſans le conſentement commun.

8. SY l'un ou l'autre des confederez ſe trouoit cy apres directement ou indirectement moleſté, inquiſté, ou oppreſſé en leur royaumes, pais, dignitez, ou villes, par mer ou par terre, a cauſe de ceſte confederation, les autres ſeront tenus de l'aſſiſter ſoit par mer ou par terre, des forces & moyens par les confederez ja accordez, ou de tout leur pouuoir, a fin d'aider a le guarantir des dictes oppreſſions.

9. Tous leſquels poynts & pactions ſont et ſeront obligatoires, meſmes au regard de S.M. de Dannemarc, moyennant que l'aſſiſtance ſuffiſante lui ſoit accomplie infalliblement.

1625. 10. Et d'autant qu'il a pleu au ſereniſſime roy tres chreſtien de France de faire faire ſerieuſes inſtances au roy de Dannemarc, meſmes par l'envoy de deux ſiens miniſtres, a fin de le diſpoſer pour prendre a la main le remede contre les pernicieuſes menées & oppreſſions en l'empire, accompagnées les dites inſtances de pluſieurs offres & aides pour pouvoir ſouſtenir ce faix, la majeſte du dict roy tres chreſtien ſera au pluſtoſt requiſe de vouloir maintenant entrer en ceſte alliance, ou bien de ſubvenir l'entretien de l'armée du roy de Dannemarc d'un bon & liberal ſubſide ſelon ſes offres royaux, & a l'eſgal des autres confederez qui s'engagent pour le bien publique.

11. D'autant auſſy que le ſereniſſime roy de Suede a faict diuers offres declaratoires de ſa bonne inclination a ceſte alliance, S. M. ſera ſemblablement requiſe d'y vouloir entre, & la ſeconder en conformité des dictes offres.

12. Seront auſſy requis la republique ſereniſſime de Veniſe, & le duc de Savoye, a y entrer & prendre part en icelle.

13. Seront ſemblablement requis les princes electeurs d'Alemagne, & tous autres princes, eſtats, & villes intereſſez a entrer dans la meſme alliance.

14. Ceste alliance ſera auſſi notifiée au prince de Tranſyluanye, pour entendre, ſi ſon Alteſſe trouuera bon d'y entrer, & faire pour le bien d'icelle ce qui conviendra.

15. Ceste alliance ne donnera aucune innouation ny alteration aux alliances que S. M. de la Gr. Bret. a particulierement contractées auec les dicts ſeigneurs Eſtats Generaulx, leſquelles l'on entend que ſeront gardées en leur entier, ſelon la forme qu'elles ſont conclues & arreſtées.

16. Lesquelles conventions, pactions & articles cy deſſus contenus, & chacun d'iceux ont eſté traictez, ſtipulez, accordez, & paſſez entre les dicts ſeigneurs ambaſſadeurs de la Gr. Bret. & Dannemarc ſoubs le bon plaiſir de leur dicts maieſtez, & par les commiſſaires des ſegnieurs, Eſtats Generaulx, auſſy ſoubs le bon plaiſir de leurs ſuperieurs promettans de bonne foy, & s'obligeans en vertu de leurs commiſſions, reſpectiuement, qui ſeront inſerées a la fin de ce preſent traicté, que dans 20me de Mars prochainement venant, ou pluſtoſt, ſi faire ſe peut, par ceux qui ont leurs principaux moins elloignes, ils feront fournir icy a la Haye, ſcauoir les ſeigneurs ambaſſadeurs de la Gr. Bret. aux miniſtres de Dannemarc & des dicts ſeigneurs Eſtats; & les dicts ambaſſadeurs de Dannemarc aux miniſtres de la Gr. Bret. & ſeigneurs les Eſtats; & auſſy les meſſieurs commiſſaires des dicts ſegnieurs Eſtats, aux miniſtres des roys de la Gr. Bretagne & de Dannemarc la declaration ſpeciale de la volonté de leur ſouuerains ſur iceluj traicté, ou lettres de ratification en forme ſuffiſante & vaillable.

En foy & teſmoignage de toutes leſquelles pactions, conventions & articles, les dicts ſeigneurs ambaſſadeurs, & meſſieurs commiſſaires ont ſignée ce preſent traicté, & a iceluj appoſé le ſéel de leurs armes. Faict a la Haye en Hollande, ce 9me de 10bre. 1625.

S'en ſuivent les pouvoirs tant des ambaſſadeurs ſuſdicts, que des commiſſaires des Eſtats, & eſtoit ſigné a la fin d'icelles.

G. Buckingham.
(Sigilli locus) Hollande.
Dudley Carleton.

Jacob Vlefeld.
Christian Thomassen.

Floris compte de Culenburgh.
Nicholaes de Bouchorst.
Antoine Duyck.
Beaumont.
Hertevelt.
Osterzee.
Tho. Varuer.
G. Schaffer.

BALANCE of the ſeueral Ratifications of the Treaty of the HAGH, December, 9th. 1625.

1625.

Ratification du Roy de la Gr. Bretagne.

CAROLUS, &c. Omnibus haſce literas viſuris ſalutem. Cum virtute poteſtatis tam a nobis quam a ſereniſſimo Danie rege, fratre et auunculo noſtro chariſſimo, et ab illuſtriſſimis et ampliſſimis vnitarum Belgij prouinciarum ordinibus, amicis et confœderatis noſtris chariſſimis, legatis & commiſſarijs hinc inde deputatis reſpectiue datæ & conceſſæ, tractatus quidam fœderis offenſiuj et defenſiuj Hagæ Batavorum, die nono menſis decembris, proxime preteritj habitus et concluſus fuerit inter nos regna, ditiones, ſubditoſq; noſtros et præfatum ſereniſſimum Daniæ regem, prædictoſque vnitarum Belgij provinciarum ordines, et eorum vtriuſque regna, ſtatus, ſubditoſque, in hæc quæ ſequntur verba.

Cum ex communj conſenſu.

Nos omnia & ſingula capita in præfato tractatu contenta, expoſitaque, rata grataque habentes, ea pro nobis, hæredibus & ſucceſſoribus noſtris, regnis, prouincijs, ditionibus, ſubditiſque noſtris acceptavimus, ratificauimus, et confirmauimus, bona fide, et verbo noſtro regio ſpondentes, nos ea omnia & ſingula in præfato tractatu contenta obſeruaturos, et inuiolabiliter præſtituros, neque in aliquo directè vel indirectè; aut quocunque alio modo in contrarium ituros vel facturos. In quorum teſtimonium his literis noſtris manu noſtra ſignatis, ſigillatum magnum noſtrum apponi fecimus: datum apud Palatium noſtrum Veſtmonaſterij, 18 Martij anno regni noſtrj primo.

CAROLUS Rex.

Ratification du Roy de Danemarc.

CHRISTIANUS quartus, &c. Notum facimus tenore præſentium, quamvis toto eo tempore, quo gei opt. max. in regio ſolio collocatj regnorum et prouinciarum noſtrarum habenas moderatj ſumus, ſemper quantum fierj potuit pacatis conſilijs ſtuderimus; tamen nos ſuperiorj anno grauiſſimis cauſis, et vrgente extrema neceſſitate ad arma compulſos eſſe. Quæ cauſæ cum et alios, atque cum primis ſereniſſimum principem dominum Carolum Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ & Hiberniæ regem, nepotem noſtrum chariſſimum; nec non dominos Ordines Generales foederatarum prouinciarum in Belgio, amicos et vicinos noſtros dilectos tangerent; et idirco viſum fuiſſet, vt legatj et deputati noſtrj Hagæ comitis cum ſufficientibus mandatis conuenirent, atque de fœdere ad mutuam juſtam defenſionem et ſecuritatem inter nos ſanciendo tractarent. Nos a parte noſtra viros generoſos et nobiles regni noſtri cancellarium et ſenatores, præfectum arcis Nieburgenſis, et dilectos nobis fideles Jacobum Vlfelt in Vrup, & Chriſtianum Thomæ in Tomerup, hereditarios, quorum prudentiam, et fidem ſingularem in rebus grauiſſimis, jam ante expertj eramus, illuc miſimus. Qui cum dicti ſereniſſimj M. Brit. regis, et dominorum Ordinum legatis et deputatis, ſub noſtra ratificatione conuenerunt; ejuſque formulam ſcripto comprehenſam nobis obtulerunt, cuique tenor hic ſubſequitur.

Nos itaque ea quæ hac in parte prædictj legatj noſtrj vi mandati noſtri tractarunt et geſſerunt, rata & grata habentes, fœdus iſtud in omnibus capitibus, articulis, conditionibus, et clauſulis, ita vtj hic inſertum eſt, vigore præſentium approbamus, ratificamus, et confirmamus in optima forma et modo, quibus approbarj, ratificarj, et confirmarj poteſt. Spondemuſque in verbo et fide regia, nos omnibus et ſingulis ejus articulis et conditionibus ſatisfacturos, neque quidquid in contrarium admiſſuros vel facturos. In cujus rei majorem fidem preſentes manus noſtræ regiæ ſubſcriptione robarauimus, et ſigillum noſtrum appendi curauimus. Dabantur Wolfenbitj, 28. Feb. An. 1626.

CHRISTIANUS.

Ratification de Meſſieurs les Eſtats.

ORDINES Generales confoederatarum prouinciarum in Belgio, omnibus haſce literas noſtras lecturis aut audituris ſalutem. Cum inter ſereniſſimorum regum Caroli Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ et Hiberniæ, regis; et Chriſtianj quartj Daniæ, Norwegiæ, Vandalorum, Gottorumque; regis; et illuſtres, generoſos ac nobiles dominos legatos, noſtroſque deputatos, die nono menſis Decembris annj preteritj, 1625. mutuum foedus ſupradictorum regum, ac noſtra ratificatione initum et concluſum ſit, cujus tenor hic ſubſequitur.

Cum ex communj conſenſu, &c.

Nos itaque ſupradictum fœdus omneſque et ſingulos articulos in eo comprehenſos, tenore præſentium declaramus ratos gratoſque habere, approbare, et acceptare, promittimuſque bona fide eos ad implecturos, obſeruaturos et præſtituros. In quorum omnium et ſingulorum fidem et teſtimonium, præſentes haſce literas ſigillo noſtro magno corroborarj, ac ſubſcriptione graphiarij noſtrj munirj juſſimus. Dabantur Hagæ comitis die 7. menſis Maij, anno, 1626.

Ad mandatum prædictorum Dominorum Ordinum.

1625.

ARTICLES SECRETS,

Memoire touchant le traicté fait a la Haye, entre les ſereniſſimes roys de Grande Bretagne, et de Dennemarc, et les Seigneurs, Eſtats des prouinces vnies de pays bas le 9. de Decembre, 1625.

Le Roy de la Grande Bretagne a ratifié tous ces Articles.

1. ENCORES que meſſieurs les ambaſſadeurs et deputez, qui ont traicté, ont trouué a propos de le coucher en termes plus generaulx pour pluſieurs reſpects & conſideracions, ſi eſt ce qu'il faut preſuppoſer, que le Palatinat haut & bas, auec toutes ſes dignitez et dependances doit eſtre tenu, pour compris expreſſement a ce que les confoederez ſoyent obligez d'en procurer et obtenir par toutes voyes poſſibles la reſtitution au prince electeur Palatin, & a ſes enfans, puis qu'on les en a depoſſedez injuſtement. Et que leſdits confœderez n'entreront point en aucun accord auec la contrepartie ſan y comprendre ledit ſeigneur electeur.

2. QUE le ſubſide d'argent, que S. M. de la Gr. Bret. contribue de trois cents mille florins par mois a l'armée du roy de Dannemarc ſera continué juſques a ce que par vne viue et gaillarde diuerſion, que S. M. de la Gr. Bret. fera par vne autre armée, par terre auſſi bien que par les flottes ſur mer, le roy de Dannemarc ſe trouvera par effect, plus aſſiſté que par ledit ſubſide d'argent, ou par d'autres ſubſides et contributions, ſa M. ſera rendue capable de maintenir ſon armée.

3. QU' en cas que le roy de la Gr. Bret. deſire d'envoyer de ſes propres ſubjects 6000 hommes de pied à ladite armée, & d'entretenir 1000 cheuaux à ſes gages, mais a la proportion de la paye de S. M. de Dannemarc, il luj ſera libre d'en faire ainſi au bout de 3 mois, comme il eſt ou ſera accordé entre leur majeſtez de la Gr. Bret. & de Dannemarc par l'entremiſe du cheualier Anſtruther, ambaſſadeur de S. M. de la Gr. Bret. s'entendant, que ce preſent traicté ne doit vien contrarie au nombre & conditions de gens, qui a eſté ſtipulé entre leurs majeſtez par ledit ſeigneur Anſtruther, et que la paye deſdits gens ſera par voye de Rabat de la ſomme promiſe de trois cent mille florins par mois, le reſte du dit argent allant aux autres fraix de ladite armée.

LE roy de Dannemarc en la ratification qu'il a faicte, & enuoyée de ce memoire particuliere obmis ces trois articles qui ſont le deuxieſme, troiſieme, et quatrieme, et par l'inſtruction que S. M. a donnée a ſr. Lorent. Winſin, luj a commandé repreſenter, que S. M. auoit de la conſideration de ratification les dites trois articles, ſur le ſuject des quels elle feroit traicter particulierement auec le roy de la Gr. Bret. meſmes, que c'eſt vn fait qui s'agit particulierement entre leurs majeſtés, et ne concerne pas tout le corps des confœderez.

---

4. QUE l'armée du comte de Mansfelt tandis qu'elle demeurera conjoincte, ou en la diſpoſition du roy de Dennemarc, comme elle eſt a preſent, et s'entend deuoir continuer juſques a vne autre reſolution priſe par les confoederez, doit eſtre priſe et miſe en ligne de comte du nombre de gens, tant de cauallerie que d'infanterie ſpecifié dans le 2 article du doit traicté, entendant que ladite article ne ſoit poynt durement interpreté juſque a ce que les moyens ſeront augmentez, par d'autres contributions, poynt encores ſpecifiés dans ledit traicté pour ſubuenir a l'entretenement de ladite armée de S. M. de Dannemarc.

Nota. LE roy de la Grande Bretagne, en ſa ratification de ces articles adjoute ces mots: Soubs l'obligation de tous et chacun nos biens preſens et auenir.

C.

5. QUE l'on entend auſſy que nul des confederez ne pourra envoyer, ne laiſſer porter directement ou indirectement aux ennemis ou leurs adherants, des ammunitions, de bouche ou de guerre, ou bien des maſts, cordages, ou quelques autres neceſſitez, ſoit de guerre, ou pour armer ou baſtir des nauires, mais les empeſcheront, & defendront a leur poſſible, tant en leurs propres ſubjects que tous autres, a peine d'eſtre tout de bonne priſe.

6. PUIS que par le traicté de confoederation eſt promis, que les ſeigneurs ambaſſadeurs des rois de la Gr. Bret. et de Dannemarc, et les deputez des ſeigneurs Eſtats feront fournir a la Haye la declaration de la volunte de leurs ſouuerains ſur iceluj traicté, dans le 24. de Mars prochainement venant, les dits ſeigneurs ambaſſadeurs et deputez au meſme terme et lieu promettent fournir la declaration de leurs ſouuerains ſur les poynts et articles compris en ce preſent memoire.

To the PATRIARCH of Conſtantinople: With CARDINAL BANDINI's Inſtructions to CANACCHIO ROSSI.

1625.

Beatiſſime Pater,

CUM non convenit ut aliâ manu ſanctitati veſtræ ſcribam, placet diſuetudini meæ, in linguâ Latinâ, indulgere, in qua me ad votum exprimere nequeo; habito colloquio cum illuſtriſſimo Hollandiæ legato, de modo reſpondendi in negotio propoſito, mihi indicavit eſſe ejus conſilium, literam aliquam a ballivo Veneto procurare, in qua verbis generalibus fidem faceret, beatitudinem veſtram ab antiquo ritu Greco nullo modo deceſſiſſe, ſed illo totaliter in eccleſia gubernanda, ſe conformare; quam opinionem minimè approbante, cum ex clementia ſua ſibi placuit, mecum negotia veſtra communicare, putavi eſſe cordati hominis, et veri amici, rationes meas ſanctitati veſtræ exponere; de hac re multum cogitavi, et utramque partem perpendi, et firmiter teneo, beatitudinem veſtram, ſine periculo, minimam notitiam ab homine negotio impari, accipere non poſſe; ſed omnibus viis et modis tempus acquirere, et ſecundum emergentes occaſiones telum texere, debere. Et cum non poſſim per literas ſenſum meum diffusè explicare, et hujus, et reverentiæ et gratitudinis causâ ſanctitatem ſuam alloqui, deſiderio teneor. Nec dubitavi plenam ſatisfactionem proferre. Sed reſiſtentibus ſuis reſpectibus, ſatis mihi erit, cum licentia, liberare animam meam. Propoſitum et baſis eſt, talem reſponſionem dare, vel talem modum invenire, ut malitia eorum non ultrà provocetur. Quid petunt, ergo conſiderandum eſt. Non teſtimonia generalia ſed declarationem in interrogatis, ſic, vel non tenes? quærunt, et nihil aliud, condemnationem et anathema contra reformatos; dum hoc non fit, finem eorum non habentes, alia omnia in deteriorem interpretabuntur; et pro negativo, vel contemptu generalia habebunt. Beatiſſime pater, eorum fraudes, machinationes, et inſolentias, longa experientiâ expertus ſum, nullam anſam, nullam occaſionem, illis præbere convenit. Legatus Hollandiæ mihi replicavit, has literas amicis exarandas eſſe, et ita famam ſpargere, quaſi inſciâ ſanctitate veſtra; ſed cui bono non video; futura incommoda a longè perſpicio. Amicis apologiâ non opus eſt, et cum aliis facta fuerit, ad rem eſſe debet, et evaſio non eſt, niſi in ſilentio. Si quæritur cauſa talis apologiæ, vel illis data eſt, aut fruſtrà; ſi illis, implicita eſt confeſſio, ſanctitatem ſuam has inſtructioues vidiſſe, et ſpreviſſe, nec alium reſponſum dare placuiſſe, et inde indignationis occaſio. Relativa ſunt apologia et accuſatio, et non invenietur aliud fundamentum hujus excuſationis, niſi inſtructio clandeſtina a cardinale Brandino exhibita, qui non ad ballivum Venetiæ, ſed ad legatum Galliæ, vel Imperatoris, hanc confeſſionem requirit; qui, ut juri eccleſiæ Romanæ obſtricti, ſanctitatem veſtram multis inconvenientibus obnoxiam reddere poſſint. Et regula eſt cum Romanis, cùm quod petunt non abſolutum eſt, gratum non erit; proœmium cardinalis reſponſionem dignam inſinuat, non agnoſcere; cum carta beatitudini veſtræ non dicata eſt, ſed certo Tabellario, mediante tertia perſonâ; ut in contumelijs, quæ ſpretæ exoleſcunt, ſic agendum eſt technis Romanorum, dum luctaris, implicaris. Quid non agendum conſideratio facilis eſt, ſed conſilium dare, hic labor, hoc opus eſt. Cunctari vellem et hunc juvenem, vel prolatationibus conſumere, vel omninò contemnere; fidem ſuam explicat, vel Papiſta eſt, vel Græcus, utcunque veritatem confitendo, illaqueatur. Hunc non oportet conſiderare, evaneſcat dum ſpretus, ſed fautorem ejus. Itaque, in preſenti conjunctione negotiorum inter principes Chriſtianos, informandum eſt iis de conſequentia hujus molitionis: et quivis legatus, qui conſilia papæ, et per conſequentiam Hiſpaniæ promovet, peſſimum officium, ut res ſe habent, principi ſuo, et amicis omnibus præſtat. Inde ſi placet ſperare poteſt beatitudo veſtra, per authoritatem regis mei literas procurare, quæ et manus et linguas cucuivis malevoli legare poſſint. De hoc cum ſanctitate ſua ſermonem inire deſideravi; et cum literis multa referre non potuerim, in aliquo loco ſecreto convenire, ſi non nimis incommodum fuiſſet, ut cor meum expandam. Interim nihil omittam, in quo vel obſequium meum erga ſanctitatem veſtram, vel boni publici ſollicitudinem manifeſtare poſſum; inſtructiones excripſi, quas in ſervitium ſuum cuſtodiam, et originalem remitto. Benedictionem veſtram comprecante, votorum omnium ſanctorum compotem faciat beatitudinem veſtram Dominus noſter Deus, et ut feliciter vivat exopto.

Pera $\frac{16}{26}$ Novemb.
1625.

Beatudinis veſtræ humillimus ſervus et devotiſſimus filius.

1625.

INSTRUCTIONS given to CANACHIO ROSSI, a Greeke, brought vp in the Greeke colledge in Rome; a forward ſpiritt, vndertaking to reconcile the Greeke church to the Pope: ſent hither by the cardinal Bandini, protector of the Eaſt, by the councell of the colledge de Propaganda Fide, to entrap the patriarch. Whereupon he came to my houſe the 26. October, 1625. and gaue mee the writing, deſiring it might be regiſtred in my Cancelleria; and to aske my opinion how to proceed: in both which I gave the advice that was convenient.

Inſtruttione per il Sig$^{re.}$ CANACCHIO ROSSI.

1. NON vi eſſendo ſtate letere ne del patriarca, ne de prelati, non le ſi puo riſpondere ſe non in voce conformandoſi alla relatione del meſſe.

2. LA chieſa Romana ha ſempre deſiderata l'unione et pace con tutte le chieſe, eſpetialmente con l'orientale, tanto per alrri tempi bene merita della chieſa Catolica, et non ſolo ne tempi antichi, ma ultimamente ancora nel tempo del patriarca Hieremia, ha fatto quel che ha potuto per ajutarla et reunirſela, non perdonando in cio ne a ſpeſe, ne a fatiche. Anzi per queſto ſteſſo fine ha fondato, et mantiene il collegio di gioveni Greci con le ſue rendite, acciò quella natione ſi nobile et ingegnoſa ritorno a fiorirè in pietà et in letere, come altre volte ha fiorito.

3. NEL particolare propoſito del patriarcha preſente, N^{ro}. S^{re}. tantiſſimo fautore et padre della natione Greca in particolare, come vieſteſſo ſapete, et havete veduto, con grande guſto volontieramente ſpenderebbe ogni gran ſumma di danari per reunir un coſi nobile membro alla chieſa, et ajutare in particolare quella ſedia, dalla quale dipende il rimanente del oriente: ma ſuppoſte le relationi, che di Conſtantinopli ſono venute, et vengono continovamente del patriarcha, non vede in che maniera ſi poſſa fare.

4. DI lui ſiamo aviſati, che nega l'invocatione de ſanti, il colto et veneratione de l'imagini et reliquie de ſanti, la preſenza reale de Chriſto dell' euchariſtia, la libertà del arbitrio, l'autorità de ſacri concilii, le traditioni, l'autorita de ſanti padri, la neceſſita della confeſſione auriculare, et lo ſpiegare in eſſe li peccati della mente; et che in loco di lei haveſſe introdotto una certa confeſſione fatta a Dio publicamente, con parole generali; che manda li gioveni a ſtudiare nelle univerſità d'Inghilterra, et di Germania, dove s'inſegna queſta dottrina, per poter poi, per mezzo di loro, diſſeminarla per il Levante. Che a queſta fine ha fatto ſtampare, et egli ſteſſo diſſemina, dandola alli veſcovi, come catecheſi piena di queſte et ſimili errori, condannati gia tanti anni fa, non ſolo dalla fede apoſtolica et dal concilio Tredentino, ma dalli ſuoi predeceſſori, ancora come egli ſteſſo teſtifica nella profeſſione della fede, laſciata tanti anni fa in mano del arciveſcopo di Leopoli, riconoſcendo queſta et ſimile altri doctrine per heretiche, et dicendo che per queſto era impoſſibile, che la chieſa Greca s'uniſſe mai con li Proteſtanti: che a contemplatione delli ambaſciatori Hugonotti, con li quali liberamente communica, ha tolto via il ſinodico, et ha laſciato di far riverenza alla ſantiſſima euchariſtia.

5. CHE deſiderebbe ſua ſantita che tutti queſti coſe foſſero falſe, et che lui, come capo di tan nobile chieſa, foſſe tale, quale rechiedono li biſogni preſenti, eternali et temporali, di ſuoi ſuddiri per poter, con bona gratia et conſcienza, mettere mano ad ajutare.

6. CHE ſe queſte ſono calumnie, et le pare di poter far conſtare a ſua ſantita la ſua innocenza, ne faccia capace l'ambaſciatore di Francia, ò del Imperatore, che alla relatione loro, per eſſere perſone di tanta autorità et virtù, ſi preſtera ogni fede, et per mezzo loro mandi à N. S. la confeſſione della ſua fede, nella quale accetti il conſilio Fiorentino, et danni li errori de Calveniſti et Luterani, dannati prima da ſuoi anteceſſori, che non mancherà la ſede apoſtolica d'ogni ajuto et favore, per ajutare et rimettere in piedi la chieſa di Conſtantinopoli, et tutte l'altre dependente da lei.

7. CHE non è per richedere ſua ſantita ne da lui, ne da gli altri prelati Greci, altre conditioni, ſe non quelle che ſi ſono conchiuſe et ſtabilite nel ſacro concilio Fiorentino, pur che, come ſin hora ha fatta la chieſa Greca, condanni et anathematizi le beſtemie delli heretici ſettentrionali, cioè Lutherani, Calviniſti, et ſimili. 1625.

Roma, xxi. Febraro, 1625.

Il CARD. BANDINI.

Locus ſigilli.
IN doſſo era ſcritto:
Inſtruttione per il ſignore
CANACCHIO ROSSI.

DESCRITTO con noſtra mano propria, del ſuo originali, moſtrato a noi dal patriarca di Conſtantinopoli Cyrillo, in caſa noſtra, alli 5 di Novembre, circa horas veſpertinas, et doppo fatta collatione, atteſtamur, che, de parola in parola, accorda con eſſe, coſi fatta in caſa noſtra, alli xi. di detto Novemb. 1625.

To the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

THE ambaſſador of the prince of Tranſiluania beeing arriued, I ſent to him the vſuall ceremony; and becauſe the letters were to depart, I deſired him, if hee had any extraordinary commiſſion or aduiſe, that hee would communicate it tymely, knowing wee could not meete vntill hee had his audience.

Hee anſwered, Hee had a letter to mee from his maſter, with charge to deliuer it himſelfe, and to acquaint mee with ſome particulars, which could not conueniently bee imparted by any ſecond perſon: That there was a gentleman on the way ſent poſt with freſh directions expected to arriue that day, of whoſe inſtructions it was neceſſary to bee firſt informed, and that hee would haſten by all meanes to ſpeake with mee.

UPON the 20th preſent hee came to my houſe, and deliuered his letter of credence encloſed. His diſcourſe was, That the prince hauing offered himſelfe two yeares to the ſeruice of his majeſtie, for the only reſpect hee bare to his perſon, as protector of the ſame true religion that hee profeſſed, and for the common liberty of Germany, and the reſtitution of the rights of the elector Palatine, his brother and colleague, vniuſtly vſurped, hee did wonder that hee could neuer obteyne any anſwere, nor the leaſt intimation how his good will was accepted. That hauing ſent expreſſly a gentleman into France, and by his laſt ambaſſador hither, diuers propoſitions, of which he long expected ſome reſolution, and to the end to giue better creditt to his words, hee had actually armed, and to his greate charge marched with 10000 foot and 1000 horſe, and proportionall canon and prouiſion to Caſſouia, aſwell to amuſe the emperor as to ſhow himſelfe as it were in the gate, ready to embrace any good correſpondence: To which force hee had in readineſs, and could haue ioyned 15000 more in 20 dayes. That hee had hindered, by all meanes to him poſſible, the ratification of the late peace of Caniſcam, and giuen ſo great and apparant cauſes of jealouſye to the emperour, (who ſought his frendſhipp by all deuices and arts) to his great preiudice and daunger. Therefore finding himſelfe vtterly neglected, hee could not imagine to whom to impute the fayling, but muſt either conclude, that his offers were not eſteemed by his majeſtie, or that I had not ſent the articles, and fully enformed his negotiations here. And therefore deſyred that I ſhould ſpeake clearly to both the points, becauſe accordingly hee had order to make mee ſome newe propoſitions.

I REPLYED, That I could not giue him ſo direct a reſolution as I deſired. To the later I profeſſed, That I had not failed in my part; but acquainted his majeſtie fully with the offers and demands of the prince, to the particular whereof I had receiued no anſwere; but that therefore it could not bee inferred that his majeſtie did not accept and embrace his good affection, but that rather the tymes and great occaſions in Chriſtendome ſhould be conſidered; that in the former yeares the princes propoſitions were in generall and doubtfull termes, vpon which no foundation could be eſtabliſhed; that ſince, when it pleaſed him to declare roundly, to deſcend into particulars, and to preſent articles, hee ſhould remember, that they arriued here in the moneth of May, from which tyme there was not ſo much paſt as might ymply any neglect, or a refuſall, eſpecially beeing ſent newly vpon the death of his late majeſtie, when many the greateſt affayres of the kingdome muſt ſuffer ſome interruption.

1625. ruption, the marriage of his majeſtie ſucceeding, and the great ſickneſs in England, might bee iuſt excuſes for the deferring a reſolution of ſo great importance, which doubtleſs muſt bee proceeded in by aduiſe of the French king and other princes, and with mature and deliberat councell. That the prince ſhould alſo call to mynd, how I often dealt with him freely, that this was no proper ſtage, for many reſpects, eſpecially of ſcandall, for the manage of ſuch a treaty; and that perhapps our maſters did not think vs fitt inſtruments to negotiat ſo great a buſineſs, and therefore, that I councelled him not to depend vpon any anſwere from vs; but that he ſhould addreſs himſelfe to the founteyne, by his owne letters to his majeſtie, which was requiſite and expected; who undoubtedly had, in ſuch caſe, long ſince giuen him ſome ſatisfaction; and if that way had bene omitted, the error would returne home, and could not bee imputed to mee. Notwithſtanding, I deſired him to aſſure the prince, though I had no direct order, yet in the generall I had vnderſtood, that his majeſtie had declared by publique proclamation, that hee would proſecute all the iuſt councells and deſſignes of his bleſſed father, for the protection of his frends and allyes, and the recouery of the inheritance of his ſiſter, the electrice, and his nephewes; and that I had ſufficient warrant to ſignify the good affection of his majeſtie to the prince in particular, and to doe him all ſeruice. And that therefore, I was confident an anſwere could not long bee deferred; and that his maſter ought not to make any ſiniſter enterpretation of the delay, where there had riſen ſo many iuſt impediments by the hand of God.

HEE anſwered, hee was very gladd at leaſt to heare thus much, that the princes hopes might yet bee nouriſhed, and that the offers made in mere loue, were not deſpiſed; and therefore had order to acquaint mee, That the prince, for the ſame reſpects of religion and the common intereſts, and to giue aſſurance to his majeſtie, and the princes of the vnion, of his purpoſe, conſtantly to continue in the ſame councells, had ſought the alliance of the elector of Bandeburgh, and obteyned his conſent to marry his ſiſter, whom he had contracted by his proxy, and had ſent ambaſſadors to conduct her to his court. That hee had diſpatched this laſt poſt, to ſignify ſo much to the grand ſignor and this ſtate, according to requiſite formality. That he had taken this reſolution, as well for the ſatisfaction of his conſcience, as to engraffe himſelfe into the good opinion of the princes of the religion. That hee had refuſed three other matches offered by the emperour; who, notwithſtanding that hee had graunted a ſafe conduct, and written formall letters to the elector in approbation thereof, (which hee knew he did to haue a ſhare in the benefitt, which hee could not hinder by any perſwaſions) that yet during the tyme of his treaty in the court of the elector, the emperour had ſent 3 ſeuerall nuntios, to hinder and diſcounſayle the match; wherein not preuayling, as hee had ſhowed great diſcontent, ſo hee feared ſome practice to hinder the conſummation, by ſhutting vp the paſſages, or by other violent wayes. That his brother had vſed all meanes to diſſwade him; but that hee had reſolued, ſign'd all writings, and contracted only for the reſpect of alliance with the religion.

THAT now the complements of the princes marriage would occaſion thoughts of retyring and eaſe, and the winter ſeaſon vnfitt for action, hee had expreſs order to deſire me to ſignify to his majeſtie, That hee would reſt neare the frontire to receiue the princeſs, and not diſſolue his ſmall army, but diſperſe it into winter garriſons, to expect yet once more ſome reſolution from his majeſtie and the French king. That hee did againe, really and ſyncerely, offer himſelfe to be ready with 25000 men in armes, in the ſpring of the yeare, to be ymployed in his ſeruice, vpon ſuch reaſonable conditions as beſeemed a wiſe prince. Hee told mee, hee had ſent priuatly a gentleman into England, and had procured a generall ſafe-conduct for him from the emperor, vnder couler of letters to the marqueſs of Brandeburgh; and that this was his ſecret, which hee had order to communicate to none but mee; and that though hee vſed the ſame generalityes to the French and Venice reſidents, of his propenſeneſs to the publique cauſe, yet hee had not opened himſelfe ſo fully, nor was it conuenient to them, to mention the reſpects of religion, contrary to their profeſſion, which hee had chaunged into the termes of juſtice. That hee only relyed vpon his majeſtie, as being tyed vnto him by the ſtricteſt bands of the ſame faith and religion. In concluſion, hee coniured mee to vſe ſynceritye, and to procure from his maieſtie ſome reſolution within 4 moneths, that the ſeaſon of the next yeare might not bee loſt; or elſe that the prince will deſiſt for euer from the thoughts of warr, and apply himſelfe to his commodity and priuate affaires. This I haue vndertaken to performe, as farr as I haue creditt; and haue promiſed, that though I doubt not his owne meſſenger will preuent mee, and bring the prince ſatisfaction, yet I would ſollicitt his maieſtie, and doe my endeauour to ſhow the integrity of myne owne proceeding.

THIS beeing the ſubiect of his negotiation, hee added for obſeruations, that vpon the fall of the king of Denmarke, the emperour, to giue a check to the prince, ſent a meſſenger to his ambaſſadors then at Newſtat, to reioyce with them in theſe words, That his greateſt enemy was dead. To which they replyed, His majeſty was then a fortunate prince. That he had intercepted letters from monſieur Tilly, preſſing preſent ayds; and that the army of Walſtein was ſtayd, but how it would proceed was vncerteyne; becauſe his maſter did make all ſhow of good quarter with the emperor, and refuſed him no ſatisfaction in his jealouſies, for the reſpect of his lady, who muſt paſſe the imperiall dominions. That there was arriued at Caſſouia, with the prince, an ambaſſador from the king of Swethland, to treat with him in the generall cauſe; and another expected daily from the ſenate of Venice, concerning the diet of Hungary, for the election of the emperors ſonne to that crowne: that the firſt deſignation was interrupted, and another intimated for the ſpring; but that the prince had giuen him nothing in inſtruction in that point, and that hee doubted hee did not vnderſtand the ſecrett, that any ſuch propoſition would bee made. I preſſed him to mention it to the vizier in hypotheſy poſito, that ſuch a ſodaine motion ſhould bee begunne; that the prince might haue authority lying by him for ayds in a ſodayne neceſſity. But hee replyed, That nothing was a ſecrett here; that hee muſt ſpeake by interpreters: that hee had commiſſion to giue no offence to the emperour in any diſcourſe, nor to ſhow any diffidence; becauſe in this coniuncture of the paſſadge of the princes, the emperors agent might giue ſome badd aduiſe, which might occaſion trouble; but that the next day hee would diſpatch a poſt, to acquaint his maſter with the aduertiſement, and to require directions. But in the generall hee knew, if it once came to that propoſition, the prince would hazard all things, rather then ſuffer it. That hee held his owne election after the emperour, to bee without exception, and that hee would maynteyne it with his laſt bloud.

IF it were lawfull for mee, I ſhould alſo wonder, if any of theſe ouertures bee acceptable to his maieſtie, why it hath not pleaſed your honour to giue mee ſome direction, at leaſt to enterteyne them, and preuent the contrary; for in this buſineſs there is no meane: Gabor muſt fixe himſelfe vpon ſome dependence. If his propoſitions were vnproportionall to the opinion, and valew of his ſeruice, they would haue bene filed, and reformed to reaſon.

I AM well aſſured, hee only is able to diuert and afflict the emperour; I know his frendſhipp is more ſedulouſly affected, then any other league: it is moſt euident, that his only mouing, did cauſe great feares, and alterations in the councels of the emperour. And though perhaps his marching to Caſſouia proceeded not only, and ſingly, to ſhow his readineſs to apprehend the firſt opportunity, if he ſhould bee admitted into the vnion, but had ſome reflexion vpon his priuat occaſions; and that knowing all the complements betweene the emperour and him, to bee deepe diſſimulation, and painted diffidence; and that the prince might iuſtly doubt ſome affront, to hinder him in his ſo much deſired marriage; and that therefore hee would ask the courteſy of paſſage armed, yet it had ſome mixture and nouriſhment from the other cauſe; for doubtleſs the prince did think his ayds and power ſo neceſſary, that they would haue bene roundly embraced, and no other reaſon appeares (by the conſequence of doeing nothing) to enter into the charge of an army, and to giue diſtruſts to the emperour. And now, in my opinion, a ſtronger engagement is vpon him by this new alliance, which will giue great reputation and ſtrength, if rightly vſed, to the cauſe of religion in Germany. I will not preſume to giue counſaile, nor bee an vndertaker, but the current of reaſon enforceth mee to ſay, that I am perſwaded the prince doth treat ſincerely. I know hee is powerfull to performe, and the feares, and yieldings of the emperour, the deſcent and adulations of Spaine, proclayme the conſequence of his adhæring to either party, when they thinke they 1625. obteyne much by a neutrality; and I am aſſured there is no loſſe of honor, nor tyme, to putt him to a tryall. If in all theſe I am miſtaken, and that there are other myſteries by mee impenetrable, I am ambitious to bee chidden for my labours, and ſilenced. I beſeech your honor, ſhow my letter to his majeſtie, and make of it the beſt enterpretation. Lett mee haue ſo much creditt, as to bee entruſted, and to bee able to giue ſome anſwere, in which only I ſinke, and am of leſſe value then all my fellowes, whoſe maſters eſteeme them ſeruiceable, and affoord them the comfort of their commands: That I may not take vpp the complaynt of the old fewes; Muſt I euer continue faſting and lamenting the guiltineſs of myne owne ignorance and demeritt. Your lordſhip therefore bee pleaſed to doe ſomwhat. The iſſue, I hope, wilbee a reward of honor, the ſeruice of his majeſtie and our religion requires it, at the humble ſuite of Conſtantinople, 21.

November, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

Letters receaued from my lord ambaſſador Sir Tho. Roe, 30. June. 25. July. 29. July. 12. Aug. 9. Sept. 24. Sept.

FROM the firſt of Auguſt unto the end of October, I was ſo planetary that I could not write vnto any place, nor ſafely receaue any letters; yet had I the happines in my uoyage to receaue ſome from your lordſhip, and at Turin I haue ſince met with others. Before my departure from Venice, I did accaſe all ſuch as I had then receaued from you; and ſuch as I haue had from you ſince that time, you ſhall finde marked in the margent.

FOR the fauor of ſo many letters, I do returne unto your lordſhip moſt affectionate thancks, and do deſire to be excuſed if I haue not of late correſponded with you according to my deſire; for it was impoſſible for mee to uſe my pen in my voyage, and I did giue my nephewe charge to ſupplye my default in my abſence.

THAT which your lordſhip hath been pleaſed to communicate unto mee concerning the prince of Tranſiluania, is of great importance, and I haue made my profit of it. If he do reſolue to continue conſtant, queſtionleſſe he will do much good for himſelfe and the publique.

FORTUNE hath turned her wheele in theſe parts, and the Spanyards who had vento in pappa from June to October, haue loſt themſelfes before Verrna; but I will not enter into that diſcourſe, becauſe I do preſume that my nephewe will acquaint your lordſhip with all thoſe particularities.

CONCERNING Nathaniel Goodlade, I muſt tell your lordſhip, that I haue receaued your complaints, which are accompanied with the complaints of the ſtate of Venice, who haue written into England to haue your conſull, at Aleppo, puniſhed, for hauing referred the deciſion of that cauſe vnto the juſtice of Turkes. The doge did ſend for my ſecretary in Venice, to appeare in the college; and the matter was exaggerated uery farre. I am requeſted to write into England, concerning that particular; but I do reſolue to excuſe myſelfe.

FOR ſo much as doth concerne mee, my name being uſed in your lordſhips letter of 24th of September, I will deſire you to beleeue that Nathaniel Goodlade did neuer aske my leaue to commit ſuch a folly; and if the conſull at Aleppo will dare to auowe ſo notorious a lye, I will ſeeke my reuenge uppon him, if my armes can reache ſo farre. Let mee deſire your lordſhip to do mee right in this particuler, and to ſend Goodlade to mee aliue or dead; for I cannot ſupport ſuch a calumnie with patience: and I do knowe ſo well what doth belong unto my charge, that I cannot dare to incroache uppon the charge of another miniſter.

I HAUE giuen my ſecretary at Venice order to appeare in college, and to expoſe your lordſhips juſt complaints, in your owne words; and ſeing that ſtate doth make complaints, which haue conformity with thoſe of your lordſhip, I haue willed him to deſire them to puniſh their conſull, and to leaue the puniſhment of the Engliſh conſull unto your lordſhip, who hath abſolute power and juriſdiction in thoſe parts.

AND becauſe their fraighting Engliſh ſhips, with condition that the colours may be changed when they liſt, may cauſe greate inconueniences, and foment pyrats, my ſecretary ſhall deſire them not to open that dore; but to leaue our nation free to ſerue, as they ought to do, with the coulors of St. George: and I will deſire your lordſhip to puniſh ſeuerely ſuch maſters of ſhips, as ſhall dare to put up any coulors uppon an Engliſh ſhip, but thoſe of our nation. 1625.

I HAUE much to write to your lordſhip; but non ſum tanto oneri par. I haue lately diſpatched an expreſs into England; and yeſterday I ſent my ſecretary thither. This day I haue ſent another into Swiſſerland, ſo that I haue none to helpe mee; and therfore I muſt craue leaue to referre your lordſhip to my ſecretaryes at Venice, who will ſerue you with the occurrences of theſe parts, or elſe they deceaue mee. Our affaires here do beginne to proſper; and I hope, that ſhortly your lordſhip will heare good newes. I will here remember my humble ſeruice to your noble lady; and after hauing kiſſed your lordſhips hands, I will take leaue, and reſt

Turin, 29. November,
1625, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

My Lord,

I LEFT your lordſhip, by my laſt, in expectance of a lardger relation, hauing only intimated the ſubſtance of our negotiation here; but ſo many windings and contradictions fall betweene, that I often am irreſolute and fearfull what to write: and the people with whom wee traficque, Hungars, Siculi, and Tranſyluanians, eyther ſo groſs, or ſo falſe, and their maſter ſo ſubtill, eyther by nature or neceſſitye, that you will find I haue enough to do to diſintangle my ſelfe from their laberinths; and thus much you will diſcouer by the enſuing diſcourſe: There is vantingly intereſted a report, by the miniſters of the emperor, That the dyet hath proceeded in Hungarye; that the firſt day Nicholaus Sterhas was choſen Palatine; and the next, by him, the propoſition made for the election of the emperors ſonne to that crowne, which was preſently agreed vnto, by all the ſtates aſſembled, and preparation made for the coronation. Though this ſeeme a great haſte, contrary to the pace of that people, yet your nomination of that baron, wholly imperiall and ſtrong in friends, makes us doubt it may bee true, eſpecially concurring fully with the deſſignes of that faction; but there are many circumſtances agaynſt yt: it may be given out, by the emperors agent, purpoſely to delay and coole the oppoſition practiſed here, and to gayne ſo much tyme, that no impediment bee prepared agaynſt Februarye; that then the diet beeing intimated, they might aduantage themſelues by this neglect. It cannot be done without the conniuence of Gabor, who hath a third of the kingdome in his power; and many ſubiects that haue right of voyce in the acts of that countrye, whoſe miniſters conſtantly profeſs utter ignorance thereof: It hath not beene uſuall in that nation to præcipitate their great affayres; and 3 moneths was ſpent after the laſt was opened for the election of Ferdinand, and I know not what he hath merited ſince of that ſtate, to aduance this obſequiouſneſs: Laſtly, in the tyme of vintage, which muſt agree with this report, the Hungars will hardly bee drawne from their wine-preſſes, wherin conſiſts their chiefe reuenew. But their diſſimulations ſomewhere are ſo deepe, that I cannot penetrate them; yet may excuſe my ſelfe, that where a prince is forced to vſe arts of all ſydes, to ſpinne into length his hopes, and to deceiue his owne miniſters and friends, it wilbee no ſhame to be deceiued with them, when nothing is hazarded but opinion; and Gabor will fynd a ſtrong retraict, that hauing ſent his propoſitions into England, and France, in the ſpring, and marched to Caſſouia with an army, to no other purpoſe that yet appeares; he will pretend he ſtood there readye, but finding himſelfe neglected utterly, he durſt not oppoſe alone, and was compelled not to ſee that which he could not remedye. Theſe are but my diſcourſes; his miniſters ſtand to the offers mentioned in my laſt letters, and the truth of their word, that the prince hath ſent a gentleman to his majeſtie into England, will clear many doubts. This, as my duty, I haue written thither, and offered my ſelfe beyond their expectance; and as I conceiue the little opinion they haue of my ſeruice, becauſe I will doe my dutye, tanquam ſeruus inutilis. I thincke it alſo neceſſary, ſeeing I can gett from England no directions, to communicate with your lordſhip my thoughts; and what I collect, if at leaſt by that way any thing may ariſe to the ſeruice of her majeſtie, to whom I haue nothing to write, but excuſes that I can doe no more. I haue alſo ventured my opinion to his majeſtie in my playne manner, that this rumor may doe

no

1625. no harme, nor hinder the negotiation pretended, if euer ther were any purpoſe to looke this way, that I retyre not, whither it bee true or falſe; for Gabor could not reſiſt alone, without new pretences, with any honor, conſidering his ceſſion in the laſt treaty: but there are holes enough to gett out of that nett, when he is fitt to breake through; and that he is woorth the tryall in reſpect of his marriage, which hath prædictions, from whence good may bee expected, becauſe the aduerſe party expect yll from yt. The emperor hath denyed him paſſage for ſuch troopes as he required, to fetch his princeſs, and agreed only to ſixty horſe, promiſing to ſend her other company to conduct her: in this place alſo, I hope ſpeedily to diſcouer ſome ſecretts, that haue troubled us. The ambaſſador and agent of Gabor are fallen to a great breach, vpon ſuſpition of falſhood in the reſident, that he betrays all his maſters counſells; and yt is out of queſtion they are betrayed. The emperor, or his agent, getts all the coppyes of his letters and negotiations hither, and of all others written to him, which doth much ſcandalize us that are his frends; and I purpoſe to nouriſh this diuiſion, and ſearch yt to the botome, to vnmaske a knaue, which is in my power: for els there is no more correſpondence to be kept with them, though out of the zeale of this hott diſſention, carried before the vizier, I collect ſomwhat that pleaſeth mee; that the intelligence is not betweene the emperor and the prince, but by falſe inſtruments; and this being layd open, will enlighten us in many other things, wherof wee ſtagger, vnder the torture of an inconuenient jealouſye. Your lordſhip bee pleaſed to kiſs her majeſties hands in my behalfe, and to bear my letter: I will in all other wayes bee

Conſtantinople, 1$\frac{4}{4}$.
Dec. 1625.

Your Lordſhips ſeruant.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE ſafely receaued your lordſhips letters of the 18. of 8ber, and haue ſent the incloſed, as I found them directed: your letters vnto my lord ambaſſador, and my ſelfe, were duplicates of what you had ſent before; with an addition vnto myne, of the lettre you ſent to my lord ambaſſador. Vppon the receite of the former letter of the 24. of 7ber. my lord did write vnto me to let you know, that it is ſafely come to his hands; and that your lordſhip ſhall receaue from him a very ſatisfactory anſwere, as ſoone as he can either get cleare from Turin, or negotiate with any miniſter of the ſtate of Venice; which, as yet, he cannot do, becauſe theire ambaſſador there is lately dead, and no ſubſtitute as yet appointed. And that concerning captaine Nathaniel Goodluk, and his proceedings at Aleppo, my lord knoweth not any thing, but what the lords hath written; and thoſe who haue vſed his name therin, do lye moſt falſely: by the next occaſion my lord doth purpoſe to write himſelfe unto your lordſhip, and will not be wanting to ſerue your lordſhip moſt punctually in this buſineſſe, for ſo much as may depend vppon him. This buſineſſe, which your lordſhip, in your letter of the 18. of October, did recommend vnto me, by reaſon of my lords abſence, doth exceede my commiſſion; but I doubt not but that my lord ambaſſador will ſo proceede in it, as that your lordſhip ſhall receaue ſatisfaction.

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip, was of the 28. of 9ber; ſince when the army of the leage in Piedmont hath beaten the duke of Feria from vnder Verrua, and put his army to flight, making them forſake their trenches. This welcome neuſe is receaued in theſe parts, with exceeding great joy; and great hopes are conceaued, that now the duke of Sauoye is on the offenſiue part, that he will proue a troubleſome thorne in the ſide of his enemy, ſince he neither wants ſtrength nor courage to proſecute his victoryes, and take his reuenge. I will not trouble your lordſhip with any relation of what hath ſucceeded in thoſe parts, but only with a coppy of a letter, which the duke of Sauoye hath beene pleaſed to fauor my lord ambaſſador with from the campe; by which your lordſhip ſhall breifely vnderſtand what ſucceſſe he had in his aſſault.

THE army of the league in the Valtelina, hath not of late giuen the enemy any aſſault, but are now buſy in building two reall forts; the one at Tuahona, and the other at Tirau, to the intent that they may ſecure the paſſage free through the Valtelina into Germany. Either of theſe forts are already 15 foot high, which when they are finiſhed, they will proue very prejudiciall to thoſe who haue the poſſeſſion of Riua. 1625.

THE laſt night here arriued into this towne the count Scarnaffiggi, ſent ambaſſador vnto this ſtate from the duke of Sauoye. He did take his journy hither through the ſtate of Milan, but vnknowen, and in the nature of a ſeruing-man: he is as yet lodgen in a monaſtary, being not prouided with a houſe; when he hath had publique audience in the college, your lordſhip ſhall heare further of his proceedings.

THUS, with my harty prayers for your lordſhips proſperity, I craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer reſt

Venice, December 5.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip, was of the 5. of this preſent, ſince when I haue receaued a letter from my lord ambaſſador for your lordſhip; which I haue here incloſed, and ſent by the firſt opportunity.

THESE ſeignori do now beginne to prepare for action in good earneſt; for beſydes thoſe forces, which they did prouide the ſummer paſt, by entertayning into their ſeruice the count de la Tour, monſieur de Candals, and now of late the ſonne of monſieur de Bethunes, who is gone into France to rayſe trouppes for their ſeruice; they do likewiſe purpoſe to arme potently by ſea, hauing already giuen order for the furniſhing of 50 gallyes, and two gallyons; beſydes 40 gallyes, which they haue already abroad: all which will amount vnto the number of 90 and two, a force in theſe parts of great conſideration. For the prouiding of men and monny on the ſuddaine, to furniſh theſe gallyes withall, they haue likewiſe taken ſpeciall order; for beſydes the decima, which is due to this prince of his ſubjects, he hath borrowed of them another decima, beſydes an extraordinary tax which he hath impoſed uppon them, to be payed within the compaſſe of few dayes; ſo that for monny their wants cannot be great. For a ſupply of men, they haue reſolued vppon this courſe, which is ſhortly to be putt in execution: It ſhall be proclaymed through this ſtate, That all thoſe baniſhed marriners, which, for what demerit ſoeuer, haue beene expelled the ſtate heretofore, ſhall now, vppon their returne, not onely haue their former freedome and liberty, but likewiſe they ſhall not want employment. By theſe their proceedings it is certaine, that they do really intend to do ſomething; but what, as yet it is a ſecret.

THE Sauoye ambaſſador hath not yet appeared in college, but remayneth ſtill ſconoſcinto, as the cuſtome of this place is; vntill ſuch tyme as he hath made choice of a houſe.

THE incloſed printed paper will enforme your lordſhip, concerning the flight of the Spanyards from vnder Verrua: from the reading of which, I will no longer detayne your lordſhip; but humbly crauing leaue to kiſſe your hands, I reſt

Venice, December, 12.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

A FRESH poſt from the prince of Tranſyluania, hath brought aduice to his miniſters here, that there hath bene a diett held in Sopſonium, where the emperour was preſent; and that two of his great dependants were elected to the offices of palatine, and chief juſticiar of that kingdome, but that there was no publique motion for the ſucceſſion of the young archduke. This was but a preparation to another, wherein it was deſſigned to perfect that worke, which ought ſeriouſly to bee conſidered in Germany; and I find that Gabor doth warily abſteyne from any ſhow, what he purpoſeth to doe, when that ſhalbee propoſed; beeing daungerous to 1625. make the oppoſition with his owne forces, if he procure not ſome countenance abroad ; and that hee will abſolutly gouerne himſelfe, according to the long expected anſwere hee ſhall receiue from his majeſtie, or France ; in which he hath, before this day, I hope, ſome ſatisfaction ; hauing aduiſed mee, that there was come within 2 dayes journey of his court, a gentleman from the French king, with inſtructions and commiſſion to treat with him. I am content that any man haue the honor, ſo his majeſtie haue the fruit of my labours ; for it cannot bee taken from mee, that if any ſeruice be drawne from that prince, though others lately haue ioyned, yet I haue kept the ballance vpright, and maynteyned his hopes from many deſperate declynations. I haue againe preſſed his ambaſſador, at his taking leaue, to repeat his meſſage and offers, mentioned in myne of the 27. of Nouember, and whether I ſhould aſſure his majeſtie, that his maſter remayned conſtant to theſe propoſitions, who hath confirmed them by all requiſite aſſeuerations, and deſyred mee to renew the motion into England. Whereupon I haue written an anſwere to the prince, as well for good manners, as to take knowledge, by intimation of the ſubſtance of his ambaſſadors diſcourſe with mee ; which was only recommended by a generall credence ; and to oblige myſelfe, as farr as I thought I had any ground, to procure him ſome anſwere. The copy of my letter, I haue ſent your lordſhip, that his majeſtie may ſee how farre I am engaged, and how fearfully I haue proceeded, without inſtructions. If I haue exceeded my limitts, the blame will only reſt on mee, the ſeruice, if it bee any, wilbee my maſters ; and I was vnwilling to omitt what I haue done, foreſeeing the great inconuenience, if the prince ſhould caſt himſelfe into the emperors protection. Within two dayes the Tranſiluanians depart, hauing bought many furnitures and prouiſions for the wedding, which is appointed to be ſolemnized at Alba Julia (whither the prince is retyred to winter) the 14th day of Feb. next. I haue formerly preſumed to write to his majeſtie, but not knowing how theſe negotiations are gracious, hauing receiued no command nor encouragement, I dare not renew in his mynd my errors, if for ſuch they are cenſured ; but deſire your lordſhip ſo to qualify them, that at leaſt my honeſt heart may bee acceptable. And ſo humbly kiſſing his majeſties feet, I committ your lordſhip to the gracious keeping of our bleſſed God, reſting

Conſtantinople, 18. Dec.
1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant.

To the Prince of Tranſyluania.

Sereniſſime Principe,

YOUR highnes letters and credence, giuen mee by your ambaſſador the lord Paul Kereztesſy, I haue receiued, and vnderſtand by his relation, your propoſitions and reſolutions ; to which I haue made ſo reaſonable an anſwere, as I doubt not will giue your highnes ſatisfaction : and though there hath bene ſome delay in your expectation, in your wiſedome you will not impute it to any neglect ; but rather conſider the great mutations in our parts ; and laſtly, the hand of God, which hath interrupted many conſultations of great importance. I haue now written into England, with ſo much zeale and feruour in the generall cauſe, that though I beleeue a ſpeedier reſolution will preuent mee, yet I make no doubt to giue your highnes ſome account of my endeauour. I haue often intimated to your highnes, that this court was a way too farr about, and that you could neuer, from vs, receiue that content, whereon you might ground your ſelfe, in ſo great a buſineſs ; and therefore your highnes hath taken a right courſe, by ſending directly to his majeſtie, that will bring you ſuch an anſwer, whereupon you may rely. There hath bene much ſpeech ſecretly caſt abroad, concerning the diett in Sopſonium ; but knowing your highnes intereſt and wiſedome, the rumours of vayne men haue not preuailed. It wilbee vnneceſſary to make to your highnes any large diſcourſe of the condition of this ſtate, nor of your owne affayres, your ambaſſadors beeing fully informed in all matters for your ſeruice ; yet I would not omitt to enforme your highnes, that there hath bene giuen much ſcandall to all the ambaſſadors here reſident, and hinderance to your owne negotiations, by the treachery of ſome falſe hand, who hath reuealed whatſoeuer hath bene treated, to the emperours agent ; and the copies of all letters giuen him, euen thoſe ſent your hignes by your owne ſeruant, are publique in Vienna : ſo that wee haue not knowne on whom, nor where to repoſe truſt. Your highnes wilbee pleaſed to conſider, that ſecreſy is as the ſoule of great affayres; and though wee haue done whatſoeuer to vs poſſible, yet wee cannot penetrate the depth of this iniquity. There reſteth great ſuſpicion vpon diuers, by whoſe hands your highnes buſineſs hath paſſed, I leaue the inquiſition to your wiſedome; and becauſe in matters vncerteyne, ſometyme the innocent fall into like ſcandall, your agent ſignor Ballaſaza hath ſuffered much affliction: but nothing beeing proued againſt him (though I haue deſyred to ſearch the truth in your ſeruice) that hee hath committed any willfull offence; but perhaps the aduerſaryes haue, by inſinuations and prayſes, purpoſely to diſcreditt him, que incautius deciperetur, palàm laudatum, by a new art, ſought to depraue him, whom they found not ſo eaſy to corrupt. And if your highnes find him as cleare, as I hope hee is and deſyre hee ſhould bee, I muſt giue teſtimony of his other ſufficiencyes for your ſeruice. The aduiſe of your highnes purpoſe to marry with a princeſs of ſo high eſtate and alliance, doth much comfort thoſe of the ſame oppreſſed religion; and as it is a demonſtration of your ſyncerity and wiſedome, ſo it wilbee a great ſeale and aſſurance to all your highnes frends: and I conclude with propitious augurs, and congratulations, that poſteritye may reioyce, and enioy the expected fruict thereof. And ſo offering myſelfe, in all your highnes occaſions moſt ready, I wiſh your highnes all felicity in this life, and a crowne of glory in heauen; reſting Conſtantinople, 17. Decemb.

1625. ſtilo nouo.

Your Highnes moſt humble ſeruant.

To Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

THE ambaſſador of Gabor is departed with good content, the grand ſignor hauing approued his alliance with the marquiſs of Brandeburgh. A few dayes before, arriued a freſh poſt, that aduiſed, the prince had giuen order to adde vnto his former troopes 8000 recrewes, to make his army 20000 full; and appointed them a rendeuous the 18th of January, purpoſing that day to riſe from Alba Julia, and to march to Caſſouia, to meete his lady, whom hee expects in February. Theſe ſodayne leuyes giue matter of diſcourſe, and it is thought by ſome, hee only doth it to ſhowe his greatneſs, and to wynne eſtimation of thoſe Germans that accompany the princeſs; but others, that haue better intelligence from Vienna, haue diſcouered, that there is ſome practice to hinder his marriage, and that hee is not ſo ſure, as hee eſteemes himſelfe, of a wife, though hee hath enuited the grand ſignor, and made great prepartions, both here and at Venice; which beeing newly ſuſpected by him, hee hath reſolued to bee found ready and able on the frontire, to reuenge any oppoſition that ſhalbee made againſt him, or her paſſadge. And certenly his heart is ſo fixed, and his reputation ſo engaged vpon this match, that if his aduerſaryes giue him any occaſion, he will attempt to fetch her a uiua forzza. Theſe many clouds cannot all blow away, without ſome ſtorme and rayne. What anſwere hee hath receiued from France, by the meſſenger mentioned in my laſt letter, I know not; but the French ambaſſador here, ſent lately his ſecretary to mee, to demand whether I had receiued any order from his majeſtie, touching the propoſitions made to vs by the ambaſſador of Gabor in May, and then diſpatched by generall conſent to our princes. I replyed the truth, that I had not heard from England in many moneths, and couered myne owne ſhame as well as I could; deſiring, if his majeſtie had any anſwere, that hee would acquaint mee: to which hee ſaid, That the ambaſſador had receiued a letter from the king, wherein hee had ſome direction; but what it was, hee was ignorant, only hee had in charge to enquire, if I had the like. The ſame day, in the ſame termes, he paſſed with the Venice bailo; and wee both deſirous to know the ſecrett, ſent ſeuerally to him, to intimate, that the buſineſs hauing bene common, and aſſiſted by all, wee thought wee had intereſt in the anſwere; eſpecially, that beeing aſſured it was, if not in the name, yet with the conſent of all our maſters, it would bee to vs a light how to gouerne our ſelues. But his anſwere was vniforme, as was was his queſtion, to both; that hee had order to communicate it by his owne mouth, which beeing nowe hindered by ſickneſs, hee deſired vs to excuſe; that hee hoped in fewe dayes to come abroad, and to diſcharge his duty, according to his inſtructions. To this punctuall retyredneſs, wee are vſed; and though in this cauſe it ſeemed ſtrange, yet cuſtome hath taught patience, particularly in mee, 1625. who find that I am not a fitt inſtrument, or the buſineſs itſelfe vnaccepted; and though it bee late to open the eyes, when one is benighted, yet I will ſo farr repayre my errors, as not to trouble your lordſhip any more with this matter, vntill I receiue command or encouradgment. Why the French forbeares to communicate with vs, hauing confeſſed hee hath order to doe it, we can make no other coniecture, then that if it bee good newes, hee affects to ſend it to Gabor alone; or perhapps it is vnneceſſary to make haſt to tell us, that the buſineſs ſhalbee immediately treated from France, and for ſome reſpects of the place, no more mentioned here, where nothing can bee a ſecrett, eſpecially managed by the Turks, and the groſs miniſters of that prince. It ſhall ſuffice mee, that I haue deſired to doe his majeſtie ſeruice. And thus, wiſhing your lordſhip a happy, and many newe yeares, I humbly take my leaue.

Conſtantinople, 1. Jan. 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant.

RELATIONS 31. December, 1625.

THE great vizier hath beſeeged Babilon, wherein are 8000 Perſians in defence; the regular army, conſiſting of the Janizaries and Spahees directly payd from the grand ſignor, are lodged on the one ſyde; and the Beghs being 13. with the Timariets and ſoldiours repartited on their gouernments, on the other. As they beganne their approaches, in a morning 20000 Perſian horſe fell in to the quarter of the vizier, and did a great execution; but the alarme taken by the Beghs they came to his reſcue, and the Perſians retyred. In this faction, though it bee diuerſly reported, the truth is, there fell 5 or 6000 Turks: ſince there hath beene made a generall muſter, and there are not found aboue 4000 Janizaries of 12000; nor 10000 Spahees of 30000, that are written for that warr: ſo that all the ſtrength now reſts in the Beghs, who are well followed, and little care or obedience in the other orders. There are about ſeauen princes of the Arabs, who are ſubiects to the grand ſignor, and ought to ſerue and ayd him when they are commanded, who haue beene ſommoned; but they, hauing rayſed their forces, by common conſent, ſtay on their owne borders, and anſwer, they dare not aduenture to diſpleaſe the poſſeſſor of Babilon: if the victory retorne, they will yeild their antient obedience; but if the Perſian hold his recouered right, they alſo will no longer acknowledg any ſuperior, beeing borne of free anceſtors. The way betweene Aleppo and Babilon is cloged vp with theſe newterall Arabs, who robb all Carauans; ſo that there is no more entercourſe nor paſſadge, without a ſtrong conuoy. What wilbee the ſucceſs, wee can make no judgment upon partiall rumors. The Turks nouriſh their hopes; others are of opinion, that the ſha beeing neare with an army, to keepe them waking, and to take all occaſions, the worke will proue difficult: upon the defence, and taking of this citty, the reputation of both theſe eaſterne princes is engaged. The king of Poland hath made ſome ſhowe of correction of the Coſſacques; which, as it giues great content here, ſo it may bring us quietneſs, and confirme their peace: which otherwiſe ſtands vpon weake pillars, if eyther ſyde were fitt.

To Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

THE emperors agent ſpreads abroad confidently, that the new Palatine of Hungary, choſen factiouſly at the late diett of Sopſonium, hath ſodainly elected and crowned the young archduke in that kingdome. The haſte is great, but wee knowing out of what mint this report is vttered, doe ſuſpect the coyne to be alchymy; beeing vſuall to them to encounter all rumours and aduices with ſomwhat contrary: your lordſhip will know the truth long ſince; only I preſume to add this cenſure, that if Gabor haue conniued in that point, (the hope whereof was the reward and ſcope of all his actions) it is ſuſpitious, that not much wilbee vndertaken hereafter by him, for more remote ends. Yet his miniſters ſay, other could not bee expected from him, while hee had no encouradgment, and that crownes are not mayntеyned by voyces. If hee were able to remoue the father, the ſonne can little aſſiſt him; and if hee haue anſwere from England to his liking, this clandeſtine action ſhall not preiudice him. I confeſs this buſineſs is an abyſs: his majeſtie in his 1625. greate wiſedome, I doubt not, hath long ſince reſolued, though I am vnworthy to know it. And ſo I kiſſe your lordſhips hands, reſting at

Conſtantinople, $\frac{15}{25}$.
January, 1625.

Your Lordſhips ſeruice.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE this day receaued your lordſhips letter of the 20. of October, with coppyes of thoſe letters I receaued from you the fortnight before. Concerning your lordſhips buſineſſe about Mr. Goodlade, my lord hath written vnto your lordſhip a fortnight agoe; and concerning the difference betwixt the Engliſh conſull and the Venice, my lord hath giuen order vnto Mr. Rowlandſon, his ſecretary, reſident here, to appeare in the college, and to informe the duke of all proceedings in that buſineſſe: Mr. Rowlandſon would haue beene with the duke before this, had not ſickneſſe hindred him; now I thanke God he is recouered, and when he hath an anſwer he will write vnto your lordſhip himſelfe, and informe you punctually of what ſhall be done here in that matter.

THE extremity of the weather hath hindred the execution of the duke of Sauoyes deſignes in Piedmont, and now it is feared that it will proue impracticable, becauſe long delay hath diſcouered their plott. If the dukes army cannot lodge ſafely vppon the ſtate of Millan, by ſurpiſing ſome ſtrong place, they muſt be forced to put it into garriſon, and expect more forces out of France; for the haſtening whereof it is thought that the marſhell de Crequy and monſieur de Bullion ſhall poſt to the court, and the conſtable will retyre to Grenoble, and returne againe with a greater army.

THE pope is importuned by the Spanyards, to appeare in their fauor, and not to remayne a neutrall any longer, but to pull off his maske, and diſcouer to the world which faction he will leane vnto. The pope doth ſtill keepe them off, and is unwilling to declare himſelfe on either ſide; and it is thought, vntill he ſee ſome great aduantage on the one ſide, he will remayne a neutrall. In the meane tyme he doth fortify himſelfe, and caſt canon; but whither feare of enemyes makes him do this, to defend himſelfe, or courage, to offend his enemy, it is a ſecret. I will at this preſent be no longer troubleſom vnto your lordſhip; but humbly crauing leaue to kiſſe your hands, I reſt

Venice, December 26.
ſtilo nouo, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To Mr. WILKINSON.

SIR,

I HAUE receiued together 3 of your letters from the 28. Nou. to the 5. of the laſt moneth, whereby I haue knowne the paſſadges of Italy, neceſſary for his majeſties ſeruice here, in many reſpects. I haue acknowledged to my lord ambaſſador your fauour to mee, hoping hee will ſupply my defect of thanks.

HERE is no newes, and therefore I will only trouble you with our owne buſineſs; I perceiue that my complaynt againſt the Venetian conſull, is by him preuented, an art of leſſening an injury, which I hope ſhall not auayle him. I find my lord ambaſſador both very ſenſible of the abuſe done to him, and the affront to our priuiledges. In the firſt, I think I haue ſatisfied him, that I was ſo farre from giuing creditt to thoſe that vſed his name for their owne aduantage, that I withſtood the report here, both to the bailo, and at Aleppo; but that both the Venice conſull and Goodlade did traduce his name, I haue good ground to beleeue; becauſe in the publique proteſt made againſt Mr. Kirkham, which though it were worded cautelouſly and with equiuocall clauſes, hauing by a long preface declared, that the ſhipp was fraighted with conditions to bee wholly eſteemed Venetian for the voiadge, with fauour and conſent of the ſenate, and for the proffitt of the Engliſh nation, hee addeth, ma principalmente a contemplatione del eccellentiſſimo ſignore ambaſſadre reſidente per la majeſta del re della gran Brittagnia app^{o} la ſer^{ma} ſſ^{ria} ſi e co npiacuits di dare a queſta nave per queſta volta, la prelatione di vaſcello Venetiano.

1625. Which words, not naming the flagg of St. Marke, they may enterprett at their pleaſure, bearing a doubtfull ſenſe, whether prelatione may not as well bee taken for all priuiledges, as preſerrment to Lade; but howſoeuer they may ſhift by their writing, they explayned themſelues at Aleppo, that whatſoeuer Goodlade did, was by leaue of my lord ambaſſador; and of this I haue wittneſs, the letters of our conſull, and the aduice of our nation. Thus much I haue thought neceſſary to aduiſe by way of preuention, becauſe I underſtand that our cauſe is referred to your negotiation; and beeing likewiſe enformed, that the ſenate haue begunne to complayne, and that they ground themſelues only vpon the indirect way of Turkiſh juſtice; you may pleaſe to know, it is true, our conſull did ſeeke to confirme and maynteyne his capitulations by them, with whom they were made; when hee was thereunto forced by inſolent carriage of the controuerſy, when the other refuſed all comprimiſe there, all reference to the bailo and mee here, and all other wayes of accommodation but poſſeſſion of the mony, and abſolute liberty to protect the ſubiects of his majeſtie contrary to our treaty with the grand ſignor, only offering the caſe to bee tryed in England, while the example would wholly haue deſtroyed our priuiledges; and this I haue proued by authenticque ſedes. But confeſſing an error in our conſull, in the way of ſeeking to defend our right (which cuſtome will iuſtify, beeing no other, to maynteyne our capitulations); yet the worſt conſequence is, that our action in that plea may fall, but our right not thereby extinguiſhed. Now, if they inſiſt vpon crimination, they teach mee the way to proteſt againſt them, that they beganne by a ſurpriſe; hauing formerly taken out in Turkiſh juſtice, a command diametrally againſt, and to infringe our treaty and capitulations with the grand ſignor, in direct words againſt the Engliſh; which ſhowes they had the mynd to wrong vs by that juſtice, of which they complayne; and if the ſenate pleaſe to conſider the fraud, it was a more dexterous and ſubtile, but withall, a more daungerous injury done to vs, to ſtrike at the roote of our priuiledges. Laſtly, in the ſecond quarrell about the purſer, and the protection of his majeſties ſubjects on that ſhipp, the Venice conſull beganne the ſtrife, and not only kept the purſer in his houſe, but defended it by Turkiſh juſtice, calling our conſull before the caddee; and beeing there condemned, did after ſeeke to fetch him away, by raiſing the officers of the baſſa to vſe violence. This is the information giuen mee, the truth whereof our conſull will mayntayne. The bailo here promiſed mee better meaſure from the ſenate, for my moderation, which I yet expect with patience, becauſe our part is not wholly pleaded. Iniury they haue repaid vs two for one, lett them vſe the ſame conſcience in our mony and charges, and I am content they enioy their tryumph; if not, they may expect that I will ſhow them here, how eaſy it is to ſteale out a command to doe a diſcourteſy that ſhalbee felt before it bee ſuſpected.

BUT I hope his majeſtie in England will take order, and heare his poore ſubjects, and that by your good mediation I may leaue this cuntry in peace, and myne owne creditt vntouched to haue bene borne downe. And ſo I committ you to the heauenly protection, reſting

Conſtantinople, 29. January,
old ſtile, 1625.

Your affectionate frend to doe you ſeruice.

From Sir ISACC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE of late receaued diuerſe letters from your lordſhip, whereof your two laſt did beare date the $\frac{15}{5}$. and 21th of Nouember, and I haue likewiſe had the ſight of all thoſe with which you haue been pleaſed to fauor my nephewe Wilkinſon, who, I hope, hath not been wanting in his duty, nor fayled to aduertiſe your lordſhip by euery ordinary of the occurrences of theſe parts, in conformity to the charge which I did giue him at my departure from Venice. If you haue not ſeen my owne hand a long time, my long trauaile muſt pleade my excuſe; and as I do hartily thanck your lordſhip, for congratulating with mee in your laſt, my returne to my ſetled reſidence, ſo I do wiſh that I were there where you do imagine mee to be, that I might ſerue you better then I can do at this diſtance.

VPPON the 29th of November, ſtilo novo, I did write unto you from this place, that Goodlad, maſter of the Peeter and Andrewe, had ſhamefully belyed mee, in ſaying that I had giuen him leaue to inurborate the Venetian ſtandard vppon any occaſion whatſoeuer. He is ſince returned to Venice, where hauing been examined uppon this particular, he doth denye and foreſweare the hauing ſayde any ſuch thing; ſo that your lordſhip may reſt aſſured that the Venetian conſul at Aleppo did forge that lye out of his owne brayne. And as I am ſure that I did neuer giue you any occaſion to thinck that I could commit ſuch an error, ſo I do preſume you will both cleare mee in your owne hart, and juſtiſe mee to all others. 1625.

CONCERNING the maine controuerſye of Aleppo, I am ſorry I cannot giue your lordſhip that ſatisfaction which you may as juſtly expect as you do worthily deſerue; but the Venetians, like bad detors, do aske where they do owe; and taking for good all that their conſull doth write, they will not heare your lordſhips reaſons; but hauing referred the cauſe unto his majeſtie by way of complaynt, as if they were the patients, and not the delinquents, they haue importuned mee to deſire juſtice of his majeſtie in their behalfe. My ſecretary reſiding at Venice, hath, by order from mee, tolde them categorically in my name, that I do deſire to be excuſed from writing into England in that ſubject, becauſe Aleppo is no part of my dioces, and his majeſties ambaſſador at Conſtantinople is accountable to him for all that doth paſſe in the Leuant, Nemo deorum extra cœlum ſuum regnat. I am glad, for your lordſhips ſake, that they haue appealed to his majeſtie; for in Venice they would neuer haue donne you right, they being obſtinately partiall in all controuerſyes wherein any of their owne body is intereſted, and I am ſure that in England your lordſhips letters will weigh downe all the falſe informations of their conſull at Aleppo. I am of opinion, that they haue referred the cauſe to his majeſtie, in hope that multiplicity of buſineſſe, and length of time, may make it fall into obliuion, which is that they deſire, becauſe they are aforehand; and therefore if your lordſhip can right your ſelfe there, de facto, it will be the moſt ſpeedy and moſt honorable courſe. It doth anger mee that I cannot haue my reuenge uppon Goodlad, becauſe the Venetians will aſſuredly protect him againſt mee, if I ſhould for this cauſe require his puniſhment by their juſtice; but I hope, that when he ſhall arriue in England, he ſhall be called to a ſtrict account for this inſolencye.

THE aduertiſments wherewith your lordſhip hath been pleaſed to fauor mee concerning Gabor, are of uery greate importance; and I can aſſure you, that wee do ground much vppon the hope of that diuerſion, and he ſhall be ſure to receaue from theſe parts as much ſatisfaction as he can well deſire. Brandebourg hath prouided a wife for him, and one to his liking, allyed with moſt of the princes of Germany; and when he ſhall by that mariage be allyed to the king of Denmarke, I hope he will drawe his ſword to keepe him company.

CONCERNING the occurrences of theſe parts, I will make bolde to referre your lordſhip to the relation of my nephew, who will not be wanting to acquaint you with all that may be worthy your knowledge; and therfore I will here craue leaue to kiſſe the faire hands of your noble lady; and euer reſt Turin, 26. Jan. 1626.

ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE laſt night here arriued into this towne from Rome, the newſe of the creation of twelue cardinalls, the one whereof is the ſonne of the doge of Venice; for which here is great rejoycing in this towne, which is expreſt by fyreworkes, ringing of bells, and by the ſenators putting on of ſcarlet. The cardinall Barbarini doth make great preparations for his journy into Spayne, and part of his prouiſion is already on the way thither, he himſelfe being very ſhortly to follow. The French ambaſſador hath freely tould the pope, that if he pleaſe to ſend his nephew into Spayne, for pleaſure, or for his owne priuate intereſt, he may; but if for peace, his journy would be loſt; becauſe the French king, his maſter, and other princes of the league, are reſolued not to haue peace with that crowne, but warre. The Spaniſh ambaſſador, reſident in Rome, doth publiquely giue out the agreement made betweene the pope and the kinge, his maſter, for the ſending of 6000

1625. foote, for the recouery of that part of the Valtalina, which is loſt: thoſe captaines which are appointed for that enterpriſe, deſpaire of good ſucceſſe in that buſineſſe; neuertheleſſe the neuſe of the ſafe arriuall of the flotte, for which the Spaniſh ambaſſador hath made fyreworkes in Rome, doth giue them ſome courage by aſſuring their pay.

I DO conſtantly receaue letters from your lordſhip, euery fortnight; your laſt was of the 13. of Nouember, which I haue ſent vnto my lord ambaſſador, who is yet at Turin, and there is like to remayne this winter. Concerning your lordſhips buſineſſe, I do yet attend an anſwer; and I thinke little good is to be donne in this place. I haue nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip with at this preſent, but humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your hands, and euer reſt

Venice, January, 30.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip, was of the 30. of Jan. ſince when I haue receaued from Turin, a letter from my lord ambaſſador, for your lordſhip; which I haue here incloſed, and ſent by the firſt opportunity.

HERE hath beene priuately in this town, theſe ten or twelue dayes, an agent ſent hither from Gabor; who, though ſecretly, hath diuers tymes appeared in college; but what he negotiates with theſe ſeigniori is not yet diſcouered: during the tyme of his ſtay here in Venice, he is allowed by theſe ſeigniori 25 crownes a day. He maketh great prouiſion of ſilkes and clothe of gold, for his maſters wedding; which is thought to be the principall end of his comming hither.

THE cardinall of Sauoy, deſyring to borrow 20000 duckets of theſe ſeigniori, hath receaued 12000 from them, as a preſent; they rather chuſing to giue him freely the better part of what he deſyred to borrow, then to lend him all.

Dimidium donare lino, quam credere totum,
Qui mauult; mauult perdere dimidium.

THE Spaniſh ambaſſador hath made great feaſts and fyreworkes here in Venice, this weeke, for ioy of the young Infanta borne to his maſter; vnto which he inuited the Nuntio, the French ambaſſador, the reſident of Florence, and all the agents of other princes, which are reſident here, the Sauoy ambaſſador onely excepted, who was abſent, being not inuited.

ALL thoſe letters I haue had the honor to receaue from your lordſhip, concerning the buſineſſe of Aleppo, I haue ſent vnto my lord ambaſſador to Turin; who, vppon the receite of thoſe letters, hath diuers tymes giuen order vnto Mr. Rowlandſon, his ſecretary, to appeare in college about that buſineſſe, and to bring it vnto a concluſion, if it were poſſible. Mr. Rowlandſon hath beene with the duke diuers tymes, but ſeeth that little good is to be donne here in Venice: he hath acquainted my lord with all the paſſages, who, I doubt not, but that in his incloſed vnto your lordſhip, hath giuen an account vnto your lordſhip of what is paſt, and what is to be donne in his judgment. I will trouble your lordſhip, no longer at preſent; but here humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your hands, and euer reſt

Venice, February 6.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

I CAN ſend your lordſhip at this preſent no newes from Turin, the ſharpeneſſe of the winter keeping the duke of Sauoy out of the feild; but what hath paſſed of late in theſe parts, this incloſed relation of the ſeige of Verrua will giue your lordſhip a punctuall account, &c.

To the KING.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

I KNOW it becomes mee not, to preſſe into your majeſties preſence vpon light occaſions, that recompence not the loſſe of any leiſure; and ſuch I may feare the aduices haue bene (vncorreſpondent to your majeſties deſſignes) that I haue obtruded ſome moneths paſt, hauing receiued no dyrection in them: but knowing your majeſties goodnes, that you value the ſacrifice of a true heart aboue the happineſs of woorks, and that my endeauours haue riſen from that roote, I cannot deſpaire of your gracious acceptance. I haue bene too much deceiued, if the nouriſhing of the hopes of the prince of Tranſiluania to bee receiued into your majeſties protection, and reſiſting the practiſes of Spaine in this court, would not concurre with your preſent ſeruice: in both, I haue ſucceſsfully done, according to my diſcretion, and giuen frequent and diligent account to my lord Conwey. So farre myne owne conſcience warranted mee; and when they were preſented before your majeſties ſingular wiſdome, I thought I might reſt in humble attendance of your pleaſure. But thoſe motions hauing bene well heard in France, and anſwere, and orders retorned hither, with reference to mee; beeing called vpon by the reſidents here, I thought it my duty to aduiſe your majeſtie all that I know, in the proceeding of theſe affaires; which I haue done, for more conueniency, by another hand. I know I am vnworthy to receiue your majeſties commands, and doe rather expect to be called home, tanquam ſeruus inutilis, then ymployed; yet hauing begunne, it ſhalbee my honor to finiſh any thing in your majeſties ſeruice; and whatſoeuer ſhalbee your pleaſure, ſhall nouriſh my obedience, and bee my content. What is defectiue in mee in other abilityes, is ſupplyed in continuall prayers, that your glory and felicity may haue neither bounds, nor end.

Conſtantinop'e $\frac{11}{21}$. Feb.
1625.

Your Majeſties moſt humble ſeruant, and ſubiect.

To Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

AGAINST my reſolution, fearing my many importunityes haue bene diſpleaſing to his majeſtie, I am againe enforced to mention the name of the prince of Tranſiluania; becauſe I would not omitt any part of my duty.

AFTER a moneths delay, and tyme to make his owne ſecret diſpatch, the French ambaſſador came to mee, to renewe the queſtion, whether I had receiued any directions from his majeſtie on the propoſitions of Gabor; to which I replyed, that I had not any anſwere: whereupon hee ſeemed much to meruaile, and told mee, that, by the three laſt ordinaries, hee had the honor of his maſters letters. In the firſt, a generall liking of the buſineſs, and command to continue the treaty vntill further order; which, hee ſhould expect vpon anſwere from England. In the ſecond, that hee had ſent an extraordinary ambaſſador to his majeſtie, and, among other inſtructions, recommended that inſtruction; which, he doubted not, would bee well heard, and correſpondent directions giuen to mee. For the third, that hee had ample commiſſion, in the French kings name, to accept the conditions; and to engage his promiſe for his portion of mony, and power, on his part, to perfect the treaty; preſuming that I had receiued the like authority, without which, hee could not proceed to any abſolute concluſion.

FROM that queſtion, hee proceeded to the other, what command I had concerning the oppoſition of the Spaniſh Treaty; in which, though wee had ſent away the firſt inſtrument, yet the deſſigne was cloſely followed by the emperors reſident, and a corrupt faction. Hee acquainted mee, that hee had directions to vnite with mee, and the other ambaſſadors, and to ſpend, by common conſent, his portion of ſuch reaſonable mony as might croſſe that practice.

To both theſe, I had no modeſter anſwere then, that I thought his majeſtie would reſolue of ſome nearer way, and knewe mee vnworthy or vnfitt for ſo great affaires; but that, vntill I receiued a direct prohibition, I would continue a conformity with them, in all things which I ſuppoſed might conduce to his majeſties ſeruice; but to treate, or write to the prince of Tranſiluania, without commiſſion, I could not.

1625. HEE replyed, that hee had ſent a ſeruant to Tranſiluania, to ſignify to the prince his maſters acceptance, in generall termes; and that hee had receiued inſtructions to conclude with him for his proportion, if his majeſtie of England ſhould, either by mee, or any other way, giue the like authority, which hee could not but daily expect: and that therefore the meanes of a treaty might bee thought vpon; but that, ſeeing I had no order, hee muſt forbeare. And ſo, for any thing I know, the buſines ſticks vneffected, and the ſeaſon will ſoone bee ouerpaſſed.

THE French ambaſſador hath made this vſe to his glory, that the negotiation hath bene heartily by him followed; and that hee hath creditt with his maſter, though hee were the laſt that entered the vineyard, at the eleuenth houre.

I CANNOT but bee ſenſible of myne owne ſhame, becauſe it proceeds from myne owne demeritt. If his majeſtie hath reſolued vpon any other more expedite way for his ſeruice, it ſhall fully content mee that it bee effected; and I will yet liue in hope, that my endeauours haue found his gracious conſtruction; and though others haue the honor, I ſhall haue comfort of myne owne labours: for I preſume, that I only haue maynteyned the opportunity of this buſineſs, if it take effect.

THE grand ſignors miniſters beginne to murmure, and to expreſſe ſome jealouſy, that there hath come no letter of renouation of this amity in ſo long tyme; and I know not in what termes I ſtand, without confirmation or warning to retorne. I am aduiſed, that my ſucceſſor is ready to depart, and I ſhalbee moſt glad to kiſſe his majeſties feete; though I ſhould haue held it to bee an honor to haue deliuered the complement for the concluſion and ſetling of affaires of trade here, by mee receiued and brought into order. The merchants haue held mee in the ſame doubt, which is the worſt of conditions; but his majeſties pleaſure ſhalbee my content.

THE ſtate of this empire ſtill languiſheth. The vizier continues the ſiege of Babilon with no great hopes, at leaſt as wee conceiue by the ſilence; the king of Perſia beeing encamped neare him, to attend occaſion. Vpon the ſucceſs of this action depends thé whole quiett, if not the ſafety of this ſtate.

THE ſoldiours are not retorned to due obedience; they rather attend the farming of cuſtomes and offices of juſtice, then the ſword, which ruins trade, and brings all orders into confuſion, and neceſſity dares not ſee it. The wants of mony are importunate, and begett daily newe and inſupportable oppreſſions.

IT is aduiſed, that Algier and Tunes are fallen into a great quarrell, thoſe hauing vowed the deſtruction of the others; but the grand ſignor hath ſent to intercede betweene them, if the blowe bee not firſt giuen.

THE Tartars haue a-newe (at the unſeaſonable inſtigation of the chimachan) broken the peace, and entered Poland; with what ſucceſs, I yet know not: but the peruerſeneſs of that councell doth now appeare, to puniſh and diſcontent the Coſſacks old ſeruants, for faithleſs frends; who therupon are ioyned with Shahin Gheray, brother to the Tartar Han, and conſent to the ſpoile of Poland, that hee may conniue at their incurſions in this dominion; and this is a dangerous union of brethren in euil: The report is, that they are preparing for the ſea 600 boats, and will proue very troubleſome. The armada here is ordeyned to guard the coaſts, I think, not willing to encounter them; and ſo the Mediterran wilbee free, and the Spaniard at liberty, who hath, as I haue formerly aduiſed, practiſed theſe diſorders for his owne ends. Radula, the old prince of Bugdania, is dead; and a baron of that prouince made prince, not of the bloud and race, contrary to the fundamental lawes and continuall practice, which may occaſion ſome broyles in thoſe quarters; becauſe the Tartar Han hath in his court, and in his fauour, a true prince, for whom hee hath bene an earneſt ſuiter with many promiſes; and it is likely, hee will by force eſtabliſh him, for the reſpect of this empire is quite extinguiſhed.

I HAUE preſumed to write to his majeſtie, rather to obtrude myſelfe into his gracious thoughts, then for any matter; hauing referred him to your lordſhips relation, whom I will eſteeme my patron, vntill I haue deſerued to bee caſt off, howſoeuer I haue not had the honor to be remembred, as Conſtantinople, $\frac{11}{21}$. Feb.

1625.

Your Lordſhips humble ſeruant.

To Archbiſhop the of CANTERBURY

[The former and latter parts of this Letter being incerted in others, are therefore here omitted.]

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAUE a particular account to giue your grace, which I haue deferred vntill I ſawe the end, or ſomwhat neare it, of a like practiſe, and not much leſs dangerous, from Rome, to ſubuert the whole Eaſterne church, and conſequently to make them Spaniſh. With the mentioned nuntio from Naples, came a fryar and a young Greeke, brought vpp in their ſchole at Rome; ſo that this forked ambaſſadge had three heads to one body. The counſayle was, either to make a feigned peace with the grand ſignor, or elſe to trouble him by a foraine warr; and if that failed, to corrupt his ſubiects at home. To euery one of theſe, was fitted and entruſted a ſeuerall inſtrument: the nuntio to treat the peace, which was happily and ſtrongly reſiſted, and hee ſent empty away: to raiſe the warre was the fryars part, who had preſents and letters of creditt to the heads of the Coſſacks, perſwading them, in the name of the king of Spaine, with promiſe of great pay, to enter againe the Black-ſea, and to continue their incurſions on the grand ſignors dominions; that thereby, all the ſea forces beeing neceſſarily ymployed in that defence (as they haue bene theſe two yeares) the Spaniard might be free of all feare in the Mediterran, and vſe his gallies in other ſeruice. This man, it is reported, hath likewiſe miſcarried in his journey, on the frontire of Poland. The third engine, the young Greeke, Roman and Jeſuite bredd, ſubtle, cunning and learned, in reſpect of thoſe with whom hee was matched, had his inſtructions from cardinall Bandini, preſident of the newe ſociety de propagandâ fide: What they are, your grace may pleaſe to read in their copy? The ſumme is, in appearance, they ayme at nothing but to change the patriarch from his conuerſation and frends, and to curſe the Proteſtants; but what hath that to doe here, where are not forty? This proſelite beganne at the head, and offered, in the popes name a ſumme of mony to releiue the preſent ſtate of the church, and a penſion in the future; and deſired nothing but a writing, conformable and ſatiſfactory to the points of his inſtructions. The patriarch came inſtantly to mee, and, beeing fearfull, and deſirous to giue ſome content, enclyned to ſett downe a ſymbole of his faith and doctrine; and that hee had not changed ab antiquo ritu, in gouernment. But, from this purpoſe, I wholly diſwaded and altered him: I lett him know, it would weaken his reputation, and to giue any account, were a kind of ſubmiſſion: hee could write nothing to ſatisfy them, if hee did not come to the point, to anathematiſe vs; no ſecond thing was aymed at; all would diſpleaſe alike; and that hee could publiſh nothing which they would not confute, hauing aduantage of meanes, men, and bookes; and that they perhaps deſired nothing more, then ſome declaration vnder his hand, whereby to proceed againſt him (if contrary to their doctrine) either by practiſe, or ſcandall, or excommunication. I ſhewed him other wayes to get tyme, and to auoyd the blowe, to keepe his aſſured frends, and not to prouoke his enemyes. When the Greeke ſawe, that hee was drawne in length, and enterteyned with delayes, and could no way atteyne either of his ends, without taking leaue hee went away, as yet wee know not whither; but ſince his departure the patriarch hath felt the effects of his practiſe. Hee had order, that, if hee could not wynne him, to promiſe the ſame mony to ruyne him, to take his life, and to procure the election of another in his roome, that ſhould depend vpon the pope and Spaine; who in tyme, making all the biſhops of thoſe bredd in Rome, and recommended from thence, they would haue a ſtrong party in the grand ſignors dominions. But becauſe this was too open, hee abuſed the ſimplicity, or rather wrought vpon the ambition and folly of ſome diſcontented prelats, and ſecular men, vnder pretence of goodneſs; and that the preſent patriarch had much indebted the church, and gouerned tirannically, and made them complaine againſt him to the vizier, as vox populi, and to deſire another, that ſhould giue for his admittance to the emperour 20000 dollars. This bayt was eaſily ſwallowed of the Turks, and the poore patriarch fell into great trouble; to auoyd which, hee was forced to keepe cloſe and to forſake his ſee, vntill hee could diſcouer the bottome and ſpring of this aduerſity: for, if hee had bene taken in the fury, his life had bene in danger; and though the popiſh faction was not yet ripe, they deſired nothing more then, as the firſt ſtepp, any way to be ridd of him. They knew the next would bee an ignorant ſtatue, whom

1625. whom they could remoue when their occaſions fitted. In this extremity, foreſeeing many inconueniences to the church and ſtate, that the popiſh faction ſhould become ſo powerfull, I went to the vizier, and opened to him the whole plott, ab ore ad imum; and ſo farre preuailed with him, by letting him ſee, that this perſecution was plotted by enemyes, becauſe a faithful ſubiect would not become Spaniſh; and that theſe three meſſengers were all of one faction in ſheepes clothing, that hee was ſeemingly reconciled; which beeing helped with ſome mony, hee is retorned to his church, I hope in ſecurity, vntill the next practiſe from Rome. In this, I preſume, I haue done nothing but correſpondent to his majeſties ſeruice, and your graces order; which, if you pleaſe, you may make knowne vnto him, that hee may ſee the oppoſites omitt no meanes, no way, to encreaſe their double vſuped monarchy. I haue long expected from your grace, ſome anſwere of his letter, which would aduantage mee, in getting books. Of his Metrophanes, hee hath at laſt heard from Nurenburgh, who writes him a ſtrange diſcourſe, that Gondomar did ſeeke to debauch him, and ſend him to Rome; but failing, attempted his life, which made him forſake England, with many other friuolous aduentures. I wiſhed the patriarch to beleeue little: but hee willingly heares nothing againſt him, vpon whom hee hath ſett his affection: the truth is, they are futiliſſima natio. Long ſlauery hath made them for the moſt part lyars, baſe, and treacherous ——

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip, was of the 6. of this preſent; ſince when I haue receaued your lordſhips letters of the 18. of December, old ſtyle. Your lordſhips packet was directed vnto my lord ambaſſador, which, in his abſence, I opened, according vnto his commiſſion; and ſent the incloſed, as I found them ſuperſcribed.

THE laſt weeke, the pope hath ſent hither, vnto Venice, a redd hatt, vnto the Venetian cardinall; who, on Monday morning, being accompanyed vnto church with great ſtore of biſhops and ſenators, had it there at a ſolemne meeting put on his head by the nuntio.

IN Rome, they do publiquely print and ſell libells of our Engliſh nauy, giuing out, that it is altogether annihilated, by the miraculous force of 400 Spanyards onely, making Engliſhmen to bee ſo manny pigmyes, borne vnder the pole; and ſo manny ſheepe, ſuffering their owne throts to be cut without reſiſtance. The Spanyards did firſt perſwade the pope to give licence, that this ſcandalous libell might be printed, to the end, that Rome, before being fearfull of our Engliſh armada, might now altogither caſt away that feare, and adore onely the Spaniſh power, which hath conquered ours; and with which they profeſſe to haue put to flight, and diſtroyed the cheifeſt forces of England, Scotland, and Holland. Thus do they ſeeke to keepe the pope in awe, rather by reputation then force; and haue almoſt wonne him to their owne deuotion.

MONSIEUR DE CANDALLS is come from his regiment hither, to Venice; this Carnavall propoſing to ſpend his tyme here vntill Lent, and then to returne to his charge.

I WILL be no longer troubleſome vnto your lordſhip, at this preſent; but here humbly crauing leaue to kiſſe your hands, in all humility I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, February. 17.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble, and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

Extract of a Letter to Mr. WILKINSON.

SIR,

IN the controuerſye betweene our conſulls at Aleppo, wherof I vnderſtand yow haue now the negotiation, I haue found, that the Venice ther, nor the ſenate, haue no pretence of complaynt agaynſt ours; but that he went to Turkiſh juſtice, to recouer his owne. I haue alway confeſſed, I would not haue done yt, though it bee vſuall in that place; and it may iſſue right, to pleade our euidences, in that court, wher only they take vigor, and are of uſe; but lett them vrdge therin what error they pleaſe. I haue ſent you the encloſed to requite yt, wherby it is euident, that the Venice conſull called Mc Kyrchum before the caddee, with Turkiſh juſtice, vpon a poynt of leſs right, to take from him the power of command ouer his majeſties ſubiects; I hope, though it come late, it wilbee of ſome uſe: wee long to heare a reſolution and anſwere, from the ſenate, to doe us juſtice; which, if I cannot obteyne, wee muſt repay injurye for injurye, and ſhall play the foole here for the paroul of honour; for our nation ſhall not ſitt downe by the loſſe and affront. The encloſed I recommend to your fauor, according to their directions; deſiring, if you fynd Sir Dudley Charlton remoued, that you will putt on his, another caſe, and giue it conveyance to her majeſtie the queen of Bohemia in the Haghe; and ſo I committ you to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God,

Conſtantinople, 25 Feb.
old ſtile, 1625.

Your louing freind to ſerue you

THO. ROE.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

TO accompany your encloſed coppy, I expected to haue ſome certeyntye to aduiſe of many things therein mentioned; but I muſt make uſe of rumors and trifles, or haue beene ſilent at this tyme. It is reported from Buda, that the marriage of the prince of Tranſiluania is conſummate in Caſſouia, without any impediment, which was greatly feared: I hope it bee ſo, though the tyme caſt vp (which ſeldome is preuented in great affayres) is too ſhort to bring the newes. Vpon the riſing of the Tartars, vnited with the Coſſacks, it was noyſed here, that they both, with conniuance of the Poles, had waſted Tranſyluania; uſing the oportunitye of the princes abſence in Hungarye, with whom marched the ſtrength of his countrye: but as it is not proued true, ſo it were friuolous to mention, if ther were not ſomwhat to bee collected out of yt; for the rumor had ſome foundation. The Tartar Han, hauing ſent to Radula, Vayrode of Bugdunia, a few dayes before his death, to demand paſſadge, victualls, and ſome ayds for that enterpriſe; and at the ſame tyme, he diſpatched twelue horſemen, wherof one had the name of his ambaſſador to Gabor; who hauing arriued at Caſſouia, and fynding the prince departed toward his bride, are gone after him: their meſſage is vnknowne, but in wine ſome words were lately let fall, that they came to demand gold, to ranſome the ſpoyle of the countrye. By the euent of things, it appeares, that the Tartars were not reſolued, eyther for reſpect of this ſtate (vpon whom Tranſiluania depends) or not ſeconded by the Bugdans; but it is concluded, that they were ſtirred by ſome freinds, or miniſters of thoſe that did not deſire the finiſhing of his new alliance, and marriage; and that therfore they had practiſed, eyther to invade his countrye, or at leaſt ſo to feare him, that he might keepe all his forces on this frontire, whoſe mouing toward Hungarye was ſuſpitious and diſpleaſing. What yet wilbee the euent, after the returne of thoſe meſſingers, is doubtfull; but Gabor may fynd herin what frendſhip hee muſt expect; and I am of opinion, this was the impediment giuen out, and wheron they relyed; which they thought (though done by Infidells) would bee leſs ſcandalous. From Gabor ther is come no late aduice: what the French ambaſſador doth, I know not; thoſe buſines, I thincke, reſting in the former ſuſpenſion for want of my companye. The emperors agent makes freſh way for the Spaniſh treatye: the meſſinger formerly ſent hither, is returned to Naples; and the fauoure of that affayre expect, within 14 dayes, an abſolute reſolution for the comming of an ambaſſador, or to proſecute yt ſecrettly by mony, which is the more dangerous way.

OUR fleete on the Spaniſh coaſtes (as the looſers ſay) hath driuen in all the piratts into theſe ſeas: from Modon and Tenedos, ther are numbered 40 ſayle diſperſed by ſixe and 8 in a ſquadron. The Arches, and all the ports therin, are quite ſhut vp; without wings a frigatt cannot eſcape them. The laſt weeke brought vs the newes of two French, one laden from hence, and the other from Smyrna, taken at their comming out of the grand ſignors harbour. A Duch newly departed hence, a great ſhip, that profeſſed himſelfe a man of warr, that had ſerued the duke of Guiſe, and 1625. from Marſeills fraighted hither, with a Venetian in his company, were the ſame tyme ſnatchd vp before Millo. Another French chaſed into Scio, and there kept in. Cape Janizarye, beeing the mouth of the Heleſpont, and Metteline the entrance into the gulph of Smyrna, are guarded and watched ſo narrowly that ther is no more paſſadge from port to port, and the grand ſignors cuſtome-houſe is emptye. The ambaſſadors interreſſed in the late loſſes haue conſulted, and reſolued to renew fruictleſs complaynts; but as yet they haue only talked, while their merchants haue made a righter reſolution, that ther is no more trade in the Medeterran for the weaker. It agrees not with the policye of this ſtate to ſuppreſs theſe theeues, that pretend they keepe poſſeſſion of the ſea for the grand ſignor; or, which is a like truth at this tyme, they dare not, nor are able to bee effectually angrye with them. Their priſes they boldly bring in to the next porte, and there ſell them; and as boldly the gouernors, that ſhould protect us, buy them: and wee expect that the next degree, if ther bee any lower, ſhalbe, that they will take chriſtians in their harbors vnder the forts, and ſell their goods before their faces, by out-cry, in the ſame cyttyes. That ther are ſo many abroad makes me doubt that Algier and Tunes are of themſelues reconciled, though of theſe I heare nothing in theſe ſeaes: it is to bee feared, they keepe their courſe about Cyprus and Scanderone. The bey ſent to mediate betweene them is diſpatched; but the new baſſas nominated haue refuſed the charge, finding that their authoritye, depending on the good or ill humors of the ſolderye, hath more danger attending it, then honor or profitt: by this your lordſhip may judge the eſtate and obedience of thoſe cyttyes. By this meanes Iſouph, baſſa of Algier, who made our peace, is like to keepe his place long, and, beeing himſelfe a merchant, he will endeauor to maynteyne peace: to which alſo the moſt refractorye will encline, if the newes bee true which wee heare, that wee are in the way of beeing their neighbors. Your lordſhip wilbe pleaſed to acquaynt his majeſtie, and my lord admirall, with theſe poore aduertiſements, if from them any thing may tend to the generall ſeruice; hauing ſome conſideration, that from thoſe coaſts, or in thoſe harbors, ther may bee found retraycts and prouiſions in neceſſitye. The way of my returne wilbe troubleſome, and therfore I attend his majeſties pleaſure tymely, that I bee not ſtreightned. I would bring my wife, not only free from dangers, but fears. And ſo I kyſs your lordſhips hands, reſtinge

Conſtantinople, 25. Feb.
old ſtile, 1625.

Tour Lordſhips affectionat and humble.

To the Same.

My Lord,

THE reſidents in this port hauing diſcouered, that the treaty for Spaine is againe ſecretly reuiued, and that there is expected an ambaſſador from thence, or ſome other ſpiritt of more effectuall operation, beeing commanded by their princes to be vigilant therein, and to oppoſe by all meanes that practice; to which purpoſe they are enabled to vſe vehiculum negotiorum in this court, guifts and monys; they haue reſolued, rather to preuent a danger farr off, then to fight againſt it at hand, when the aduerſary ſhalbee armed: therefore they haue thought fitt to procure frends, and to prouide rather againſt his comming, then his golden arguments. Many meanes haue bene propoſed; but finding that whatſoeuer ſhalbee done by viziers, and officers of that nature, may bee altered by the next, and all expence loſt vpon them, who hold their places with vncertenty; it hath bene concluded to worke by a fraternity that is permanent; and to this purpoſe they haue choſen mee to bee the director and inſtrument, the moſt vnable and woorſt prouided; hauing no expreſs warrant giuen mee, nor encouragement to diſburſe, other then myne; owne zeale to his majeſties ſeruice. That this office is fallen vpon one, the neceſſity of ſecreſy required it, and vpon mee, becauſe the way was by mee opened, and to mee knowne. The reſolution is, to engage of our ſide the men of their lawe, that is, their clergy; who in councells haue the greateſt authority, and no great action concluded without them. Theſe men ſtand out of the way of ordinary bribes, and are ſeldome ſought vnto in ſtate affaires by ſtrangers; and how-euer they change offices yearly, yet they fall not like others; they are ſtill reſpected and reuerenced, and retorne againe to their charges once in three yeares; and whatſoeuer ſhall proceed from them, wilbee leſſe ſuſpected of intereſt, but rather eſteemed

pure

1625. pure zeale and wiſdome. Among theſe wee haue elected one to bee the head of the whole, by him to enforme and enſtruct ſuch as wilbee capeable of the ſeruice, and by them to diuert the minds of thoſe who fauor the Spaniſh faction, that the litle miniſters here may bee diſcouraged and diſcouncelled, to venture the creditt of their maſter by ſo publique a declaration as a ſollemne ambaſſadge, when they ſhall ſee all men fallen from them, or afraid to know them. This way wee hope wilbee effectuall, and without noyſe, eſpecially vſing but one man, who hath a ſultana of great creditt in the Seraglio to his wife, and can by her diſcouer and reſiſt the cabinet practices. The next week I muſt beginne, hauing allready made fitt preparations, that our propoſitions ſhalbee embraced; herein I muſt ſpend with my fellowes; and though I haue not bene worthy of any order, yet I am confident in my gratious maſter, that hee will giue mee bread, for whom I will ſpend my life.

HERE is arriued a poſt from the prince of Tranſiluania with letters to the vizier: he reports the conſummation of the marriage in Caſſouia; and ſome other newes out of Germany, which I ſuſpect hath rolled by the way in the deepe ſnowe: it is too greate to bee beleeued at once. From England I haue not heard in 5 moneths, nor receiued any commands from his majeſtie in the whole yeare; ſo that I am utterly diſabled, and doe feare to looſe a faire harueſt. In this long vacation wee are toſſed with rumours, like a ſhipp in a tempeſt without a rudder, and daily aſſailed with good and badd newes; which hauing weakened our ſences, wee are fallen into that ſickneſs, accipere credereque omnia, cum triſtia ſint.

WHAT I propheceid in my laſt letters is haſtily come to paſſe. There I told your lordſhip how the piratts reigned in the Arches: ſince, they haue chaſed a French man into the port of Limiſſo, in Ciprus, and made priſe of her vnder the caſtle, which ſent 3 ſhott, for a couler of defence, but ſuffered the theeues to poſſeſs the ſhipp; the poore men eſcaping a ſhore (to ſuch inſolence are they growne) were demanded as ſlaues. This laſt weeke wee haue bene aduiſed of 3 or 4 others, Dutch and French. Theſe miniſters haue ſent a frigatt to all the out ports, to arreſt and ſeiſe all they can find, not for the loue of juſtice, but for ſhame that the graſs hath ouergrown the cuſtomhouſe. They promiſe reſtitution, and our intereſſed ambaſſadors haue renewed the hope of vnfaithfull remedies; but theſe are bruta fulmina: I will beleeue in no redreſs but the thunder of the cannon.

FROM Babilon are come two curriers, who bring word, the great vizier is rather beſeeged in his camp, then in hope to take the place; his forragers and conuoyes cutt off in veſtibulo caſtrorum. There is ſpeech to chaunge the generall, and thereby the fortune of theſe declynations; but it is more like, that of their empire is the predominant.

FROM Poland wee haue nothing certeyne, rumours many; that the king of Sueueland greatly aduanceth in Liuonia, and that the Tartar hath bene called in to oppoſe him, and to oppreſs the proteſtants in Lituania that are thought to fauour him: venenum in pharmaco; for the lateſt aduice is, that they (hauing vnited with the Coſſacks, full of reuenge, who entred with them to the number of 12000) haue not only made all ſpoile like enemyes, but that they fortify in ſome part of that prouince, from whence hauing carried captiue (to ſpeake halfe of the report) 40000 ſoules, they plant their owne, and, inſteed of wonted depredations, make ſhow of a purpoſe to conquer, and keepe what they gett; but the paſſages beeing ſhutt while the Tartars range, wee take theſe things on truſt, paſſionately deliuered, without much ground for particulars from both ſides intereſſed. Certenly there is great dammage done to that kingdome, and that is all I dare deliuer for truth. I beſeech your lordſhip preſent this humble paper to his majeſtie, beeing forced to write in ciphar I durſt not trouble him; and continue to ſhow that grace to your ſeruant that I will ſtudy to meritt. And ſo I commit your lordſhip to the heauenly protection.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{11}{21}$.
March, 1625.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

From

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

HOW earneſtly the pope doth ſeeke to vnite himſelfe with Spayne, I gaue notice vnto your lordſhip in my laſt, of the 4. of this preſent: ſince when, the cardinall of Sauoy, and the French ambaſſador reſident at Rome, haue threatned the pope, that if he will not deſiſt from entering into a league with Spayne, againſt other Chriſtian princes, that both France, Venice, and Sauoy, will recall home their ambaſſadors from Rome, and will likewiſe diſmiſſe thoſe miniſters which the pope hath ſent vnto them; beeing vnwilling to keepe correſpondency with ſuch a prince, which doth aſſiſt and vnite himſelfe with the common enemy. The pope as yet doth little regard their threatnings; but doth proſecute his enterpriſe begunne, and hath already depoſited monny for the payment of his ſoldiers, vntill Nouember, which he hath rayſed for the recouery of the Valtelina; and doth promiſe himſelfe, that, with the aſſiſtance of Spayne, Leopold, and his owne ſtrength, he ſhall recouer, before May be ended, whatſoeuer hath beene loſt in the Valtelina.

THAT which doth begett in him this beleife, is the falſe aduice of ſome, who perſwade him, that France and Venice haue not betweene them in readineſſe, 4000 ſouldiers, and thoſe ready to rebell for want of pay. This vnderualewing of his enemy may make him preſume very farre, but in the end is likely to proue prejudicall.

VPPON the arriuall of the newſe of the vnion betweene the catholique and proteſtant Swiſſes, in the fauor of the Griſones, the pope was exceeding angery, threatning to turne away his guard of Swiſſes, and to take people of other countryes in their ſteede.

THE king of Spayne doth ſhortly intend to ſend an ambaſſador from Milan, to all the princes of Italy, to make vnto them a relation of the affront he hath receaued at Cales by our Engliſh nauy. The Spaniſh ambaſſador here hath beene in college about this already, to let theſe ſeigniori vnderſtand, that if the king of Spayne, his maſter, ſhould draw his ſword againſt England, that he did not do it without a very juſt cauſe.

I HAUE here incloſed, by my lord ambaſſadors commands, an atteſtation of Nathaniel Goodlad, taken by Mr. Rowlandſon, my lords ſecretary, and written by his owne hand; vnto which atteſtation the vnderwritten are witneſſe.

YOUR lordſhips letters of the 15. of Jan. are ſafely arriued, and the incloſed ſhall be diſpoſed of according vnto your lordſhips deſyre: my laſt vnto your lordſhip were of the 4. of this preſent. This being all I haue to trouble your lordſhip with at preſent, I here humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands; and reſt

March, 11. ſtilo nouo,
Venice, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithful and obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

TO accompany this bearer, and giue him addreſſe vnto you, though I conceive my letters wilbe verie long on the waie, yett I will preſent vnto you a briefe view of the ſtate of our affaires att the preſent, referring you to my letters that I haue, and ſhall ſend over land, for your more particular information.

MY former letters haue accounted to you, how well your negotiations for keeping vpp Beth. Gabor in good affection, haue beene received and vouchſafed by his majeſtie, as having ſpeciall reference to his majeſties deſignes for recovering of the Palatinat, and reſtitution of the peace of Chriſtendome; but his majeſtie being ingaged in a vaſt expence, for maintayning count Mansfelt, aſſiſting the king of Denmarke, and ſetting out his fleete to ſea, which tooke vpp all the monie that poſſibly could be found, and further verie farre ingaged his majeſtie, there was noe meanes left for him to enter into a ſpeciall treatie with Gabor, ſeeing his principall demand was money, which was impoſſible to be had from hence: beſides, his majeſtie held not that port a place proper for ſuch a treaty, for thoſe reaſons by you ſoe well preſt: and did expect that Bethlem Gabor ſhould haue ſent immediately hither, as he did to the French king; becauſe otherwiſe his majeſtie knew not how conveniently, either to invite the moſt intereſſed princes, nor thinke of any indifferent place in theſe parts of Europe, for ſuch a treaty. And though his majeſtie thus ſuſpended all declaration of himſelfe for theſe, and ſome other reaſons; yett his majeſtie never vndervalued either your diligences or abilities to manage this or any other greate affaire, in places and times fitt and ſeaſonable. But when things were fully ripe, the time of the meeting att the Hagh come, and Bethlem Gabor having a gentleman there who had paſſed by the king of Denmarke, all things were communicated to his agent; and vpon the framing of the treatie betweene his majeſtie, the king of Denmarke, and the States, with the knowledge of the French and Venetian reſidents, one article was inſerted to invite Bethlem Gabor to enter into the league for the common liberty, and to that purpoſe to ſend his ambaſſadors to the Hagh, the 20th of the preſent, to be preſent att a further treatie. And notwithſtanding the ill ſucceſſe his majeſties fleete hath had, his majeſtie is not diſcouraged; but reſolues to continue his aydes to the king of Denmarke, and his ſupport of count Mansfelt, and to performe all things requiſite and poſſible, for defence and offence, againſt the king of Spaine and houſe of Auſtria, wherein he doubts not of a conſtant concurrence from the king of Denmarke and the States, a liberall contribution from France to the warre of Germany, and a vigorous purſute of the deſignes of Italie; and that moſt Chriſtian princes, eſpecially Beth. Gabor, will ioyne in this cauſe. And to ſupplie himſelfe, his majeſtie expects from the parlament liberall aydes; and though they doe yett a little inſiſt vpon ſome particularities not verie acceptable, yett there is hope and likelyhood, that, according to their owne large and liberall offer, in the generall, vpon a meſſage from his majeſtie, they will aſwell provide for the preſent neceſſities of the State, as they ſee apparently the danger and prejudice, if it be not ſpeedily done. According to which ſtate of affaires, the conſultations and reſolutions here wilbe guided ſoe, that whatſoeuer you can fitly doe to keepe Beth. Gabor vpright, and breake the Spaniſh treaty there, wilbe well taken, and is according to his majeſties intentions, which you haue, and ſhall more particularly vnderſtand, by my other letters.

HERE hath beene much diſpute about your revocation, or continuance. If you had deſired it as a thing good for you, his majeſtie would haue continued you; but you deſiring firſt to returne, and after making it a thing indifferent; and his maſter and the duke being ingaged for Sir Tho. Phillipps, his majeſtie hath given him a commiſſion to ſucceed you; which, I doubt not, will be for your advantage, anſwerable to your worth and meritt, wherein, if I ſhalbe able to contribute any thing, you ſhall, by good proof, find that I am really

March, 18. 1625. Your Lordſhips aſſured friend to ſerue you,

E. CONWAY.

I BESEECH you, preſent my ſervice to your noble ladie. I haue beene forced to keepe my chamber now ſix weeks, but hope within a few daies to goe to the king, and then I ſhall write more att large to you over land, which I ſhould have done ſooner if the violence of my fever, which, I thank God, hath now left mee, would haue given mee leaue.

Superſcribed,
To the Right Honorable Sir THOMAS ROE, Knight, his Majeſties
Ambaſſador, reſident with the Grand Signor.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt vnto your lordſhip, of the 11. of this preſent, I haue receaued your lordſhips of the 29. of Jan. old ſtyle, wherein your lordſhip doth renew the buſineſſe of Aleppo, both in your letter to my lord ambaſſador and to my ſelfe. In my laſt letter vnto your lordſhip, I ſent incloſed an atteſtation from Goodlad, written by Mr. Rowlandſon, my lords ſecretary: and what further commiſſion I ſhall haue from my lord, from Turin, after the receite of your lordſhips letter, which I ſent the laſt weeke, I will acquaint your lordſhip withall. In the mean 1625. tyme, I will make bold to trouble your lordſhip a little with the preſent affaires of theſe parts.

THE Spanyards do voice abroad in theſe parts the arriuall of another flotte vpon the coaſts of Spayne, which hath brought great ſtore of gold from the Indyes, to ſupply the preſent occaſions of their king and country. In confirmation of this newſe, the king of Spayne hath ſent vnto all the barrons of the kingdome of Naples, to prouide among them 150000 crownes, which ſhall bee ſpent in payment of ſouldiers, and in prouiſion of warrelike ammunition. Thoſe taxes which are impoſed vppon the nobility of that kingdome are very great and intolerable; and certainely no other flotte is arriued with any treaſure, but what is extorted out of their coffers.

THE Pope doth conceaue great hopes of an accommodation of peace, betwixt the French king and the king of Spayne, which makes him deferre the ſending of his forces into the Valtelina, for the recouery of thoſe paſſages which are loſt.

CARDINAL Farneſe, protector of the Engliſh nation in Rome, is lately dead; and the Pope hath made cardinall Barbarini, his neaphew, protector of our nation in his place.

HERE are books dayly printed in theſe parts: ſome in fauor, others in disfauor of the Spanyards, and the league; and whiles the ſeaſon ſerues not for a warre of ſwords, they do perſecute one another with their pens.

I HAUE here incloſed ſent your lordſhip the Auiſi, I receaued from Rome the laſt weeke; and as often as they come to my hands hereafter, I will ſend them vnto your lordſhip.

I RETURNE your lordſhip moſt humble thankes, for vouchſafeing mee the honor of ſo many letters, and for the taking notice of myne vnto your lordſhip; I am bound to continue my duety vnto your lordſhip ſtill, as I haue begunne, in a double reſpect, both of my lords commands, and of your lordſhips kind acceptance of my endeauors.

SO, humbly crauing leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, in all humility, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, March, 20.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt obedient ſeruant,

J. WILKINSON.

Extract of a Letter to Sir DUDLEY CARLETON.

——THE Tartar Han, ouerburthened with a prey, retorning out of Poland, hath receiued a check, and loſt part of his booty with part of his army: Hee abydes in Bugdania, to what purpoſe, is rather feared, then knowne; becauſe hee hath brought with him a pretender to that principality, whom, if hee place by force, it wilbee a great affront to this empire. The Coſſacks prepare boats to fill the ſeas; and wee wiſh them no good ſucceſs, if they come hither. The armada is making ready, to guard the Boſpherus: theſe troubles are the fruicts of the Spaniſh treaty; and many obſeruations may bee taken out of this little matter. From Babilon, wee haue no better: the horſes muſt eat graſs, and that muſt ſaue their honor. ——

Conſtantinople, 25. March,
old ſtile, 1626.

Extract of a Letter to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

——AS troubles ſeldome come alone, it is muttered, that there hath fallen a nother quarrell in the frontire, with the baſſa of Boſna, about a caſtle built by the Venetians, and bloud ſhedd on both ſides, and that this alſo wilbee ſett a foote againſt them; whether in theſe needy tymes to gett mony, or their fate carrying them headlong to looſe all frends, when they moſt need them: but they are not like to preuaile ſo eaſily (if the euidence bee no better) for beginning injuryes: for I beleeue no man of witt doth think, that the Venetians ſeeke occaſion of breach with them; but they, in euery offence, ſeeke to make proffitt of their owne inſolence. This ſtorme is like, with the tayle, to wett mee. The gouernour of Zant forced two Engliſh ſhipps to ſerue the Senate, to fetch corne in the Arches; where, beeing vnder the command of others, it is ſaid, they ſhott at the Bey of Morea, and 1626. that their boat robbed a carmiſall. The Turks pretend great dammage: when they beginne with mee, I will defend as well as I can; but if no other ward, I muſt alſo lay this vpon the back of the Venetians, in whoſe ſeruice the ſhipps were taken. I feare this buſineſs will giue your lordſhip ſome trouble: they are too importunate, not only to force our ſhipps, but to imploy them in vnlawfull actions, that may entreague mee, and all our eſtates in this cuntry. They vſe our ſhipps, with St. Marke in the topp, to deceiue vs of our right; but committ diſorders vnder St. George, as a ſoldiour better able, they think, to beare it out. ——

Conſtantinople, 25. March,
old ſtile, 1626.

To the Earl of ARUNDELL.

My Lord,

MY laſt letters brought your lordſhip the aduice of Mr. Pettyes ſhipwracke, and loſſes vpon the coaſt of Aſya, returning from Samos: his commands and letters of recommendation, and his labors, togither there periſhed. The firſt I preſently renewed, and ſent them to Smyrna; and the other, I thincke, he hath by great induſtrye, ſince recouered. From that tyme, what aduentures hee hath paſſed his owne encloſed will giue beſt ſatisfaction; and it ſhall ſuffice mee to ſay in groſs, that, although he will not boaſt to mee, yett I am informed hee hath gotten many things, rare, and antient. Ther was neuer man ſo fitted to an imployment, that encounters all accidents with ſo vnwearied patience; eates with Greekes on their worſt dayes; lyes with fiſhermen on plancks, at the beſt; is all things to all men, that he may obteyne his ends, which are your lordſhips ſeruice. He is gone to Athens, whither alſo I haue ſent; and from thence promiſeth mee to viſitt this city, wher I ſhalbee glad to enterteyne him, and to know the hiſtory of his labors. I haue in my endeauour bad ſucceſs, by the ignorance of thoſe that I am forced to employ, who ſend mee heauy ſtones at great chardge, that prooue newe images, wher I ſeeke old idolls; for ſuch alſo were the Roman ſtatues of their emperors. From Angory I had an hal-woman, brought 18 dayes by land, vpon change of mules, which wants a hand, a noſe, a lip; and is ſo deformed, that ſhee makes me remember an hoſpital: yet the malicious Turkes brought trouble on the buyers, by a falſe command, accuſing them of a great wealth ſtollen out of the caſtle; it hath coſt mee mony to puniſh them, and that is all I haue for my labor. I haue ſent three ſeruants togither to Taſſos, Caualla, Philippi, and all the coaſt of Thrace; followed Mr. Petty to Pergamo, and Troy; am digging in Aſya; and, to fulfill the prouerb, turning of all ſtones. Somwhat I hope to gett, to ſaue my creditt; but I dare not write to his grace, vntill I am in poſſeſſion: ſo often I haue beene by Greekiſh promiſe deceiued. Thoſe on Porta Aurea ſtand vp, ready to fall, in ſpight of all my arts, and offers; the tymes are ſo dangerous that I dare not venture to entreague others; but ther is an opportunity attended to make them ſtoope: the glorye of taking them from the gate of Conſtantinople inciteth mee farther then any bewtye I ſee in ruines, that only ſhowe their was once bewtye, good emblemes of one that had beene a handſome woman, if an old woman were not a better; yet few loue them. When I haue made my collection, I will not forgett that I was engaged by your lordſhips commands; as I am aſſured your lordſhip will not grudge mee to performe the ſeruice I owe the duke of Buckingham, betweene whom, and your lordſhip, if ther had beene an vnion, ther had nothing beene difficult to us both here, and many things much cheaper. The condition of this empire hath little amendment; the ſoldiors are agayne in ſedition: the Tartars hauing inuaded Poland, and taken a great bootye, in their returne were incountered, and beaten: the loſſe is as great as their prey, reported 20000. The Coſſacks prepare to moleſt us; and the armada to meete them, or rather to defend the coaſt. This is the ſumme of our affayres; and ſo humbly kyſſing your lordſhips hands, I committ you to the heauenly protection.

Conſtantinople, 28. Mar.
old ſtile, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt ready ſeruant.

To 1626.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

I THANK your lordſhip for your letter of the 26. of January. Perceiuing that you haue wintered at Turin, where, among actiue princes, you haue bene of moſt vſe for his majeſties ſeruice; for our petty quarrells, in compariſon, are not worth the mention: only it will concerne mee, beeing the higheſt of my buſineſs, to maynteyne our antient rights. I neuer doubted, but Goodlad would deny at Venice what hee had ſaid at Aleppo; and I am ſorry your lordſhip hath taken any occaſion to doubt, that I did beleeue it: if any expreſſion of my letters were vehement, it proceeded from deſire of reliefe, and from no miſvnderſtanding of your knowne and approued wiſedome. I haue there wittneſſes, that, when the bailo vrged that point here to mee, I anſwered negatiuely, that it was a ſlander, of which I knew you would bee ſenſible: inſomuch, that hee diſputed the caſe, and vrged examples for the like, but ſuch as were lame: for that cauſe only I ſtopped our conſulls letters for England, leaſt, in his firſt heat, hee might there miniſter occaſion of ſuch report: and laſtly, I neuer mentioned that excuſe for Goodlad, but layd all vpon his owne contumacy. The gentleman of Venice, in his publique proteſt, made ſuch an intimation, though in more reſerued words, not to lye vpon record. Lett this ſuffice your lordſhip: though I am a ſtranger to you, I am not ſo to your life and actions; but one that loues and honors you without adulation.

I PERCEIUE, both from your lordſhip and Mr. Wilkinſon, that I muſt expect cold amends, and juſtice from the Senate: I did not expect much more, and therefore by anticipation ſent, at the ſame tyme, a declaration of the cauſe to the lords of his majeſties councell; where I doubt not, if I were ore tenus, I could defend my part; but the aduantage of a publique miniſter aboue a merchant is greater then I would allow them. I am able here to requite it, and to take out a priuat command, ſodainly to call their conſull into juſtice, and to order the repayment; eſpecially at this tyme, when the Venetians are in diſgrace. But I am an Engliſhman, and ſcorne to ſtrike any, behind his back; and when I ſhould, their purſe is ſtrong, and the bailo would by another ſurpriſe retorne the like: the Turks would take both our monyes, and laugh at vs. Laſtly, I haue miſliked the way in the conſulls, and hauing alſo referred the complaint into England, I expect ſome anſwere; for I haue asked direct leaue, without which, in the preſent coniunctures, I may reape ſome reprehenſions, inſtead of a flaſh of honor. But if either I haue licence, or no anſwere, I will take my ſelfe at liberty, and my tyme ſo, that they ſhall not bee able to repay mee, in my tyme.

I DOE not find, that any thing I haue done, or written into England, either of Gabor, or the Spaniſh treaty, is ſo well accepted there, as with your lordſhip. I neuer could gett any reply, though the buſineſs reſts vpon mee; ſo that though I am reſolued to ſpare my penne, yet I will omitt no part of my ſeruice, which perhaps wilbee beſt accepted, and iuſtified in the effects. Hee knowes the emperour hath held a councell, and taken a reſolution, as ſoone as hee is able, to driue him out of thoſe parts of Hungary, on this ſide Tibiſcus, which hee poſſeſſeth by his ſword, and the laſt peace; and therefore, I hope, hee will preuent him preſently, beeing ready in armes to doe ſomwhat.

WHAT they will doe, I think themſelues know not; and therefore I leaue them to their daily counſells, wiſhing myſelfe a good deliuery from them; and your lordſhip all happineſs, reſting Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$. Aprill.

1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAUE receiued from my lord Grandeſon your graces anſwere to him, concerning mee, which hath brought mee into confuſion, that you haue not vouchſafed to command him, that hath wholly dedicated himſelfe to your grace: I muſt confeſs it is a great fauor to leaue mee to myne owne election; but not that which I ſought, to bee ſubmitted and gouerned by your graces pleaſure. Thoſe whom you eſteeme your owne, you will direct; and I haue no other ambition: I will preſume to open my heart to your grace, conſcius rectæ mentis; which I hoped you had vnderſtood nakedly, and without diſguiſe. When the company ſollicited mee, with many earneſt letters, and added thereunto a command from the lords of his majeſties councell, to prolong my reſidence; I yielded ſo farr vnto them, as to bee contented to finiſh this yeare, which fullfilleth fiue; and will end ſixe in the ſeruice before I ſee England: with this limittation, that your grace ſhould accept it, and that it might bee your fauour to them, leaſt I ſhould giue any occaſion to oppoſe your purpoſes, to mee vnknowne. Thus much I wrote to them, and more clearly to my lord Grandeſon: ſince, I am better enformed, that my retorne hath bene reſolued, and my ſucceſſor named. I muſt confeſs, in my wiſhes, knowing the neceſſity of good agreement, and vnion, betweene any that ſhall ſerue here, and the merchants, I deſired their accommodation, with reſeruation of his majeſties pleaſure, and your graces fauour; which, whatſoeuer it ſhalbee, I haue learned the humility and diſcretion to beleeue there are reaſons aboue mee, and to find myne owne contentment in the will of my ſuperiours. Therefore whoſoeuer ſhall come, hee ſhall bee to mee moſt welcome. If it ſhalbee thought fitt to diſcharge mee by this expected ſhipping, I ſhall eſteeme it ſo much life gayned, and what I ſpend more here, among graues. Therefore I humbly beſeech your grace to diſpoſe of my retorne, (if I ſtay ſo long) at the end of this yeare, and to accept mee, for euer, as your deuoted ſeruant. I will not ſuſpect any miſtaking in ſo much clearneſs, if there bee any pretender that may reflect vpon mee; though, dum res integra fuit, I hoped an equall ſhare of your graces fauour, or that there hath bene by mee any oppoſition. For I am not ignorant, that few men iudge well of themſelues; and the beſt courſe of life for mee wilbee that which your grace ſhall pleaſe to fauor: to that I ſurrender my ſelfe, and in that only I will repoſe.

I HOPE to giue your grace ſome good ſatisfaction in marbles. Thoſe on Port Aurea are promiſed, and mony depoſited; but I will not aſſure them, in theſe dangerous tymes. I haue three of my owne ſeruants in Greece, to ſearch Taſſos, Caualla, and Phillippi, and all that coaſt. I haue procured a command to the protomaſter, ouerſeer of the grand ſignors works, who is like to know more, and hath authority to ſearch and take downe any old ruynes, and hee is gone purpoſely into Aſia. I haue ſent a caloyre, by the help of the patriarch, to Athens and Thebes; and I haue giuen order to our conſulls in Aleppo, Smirna, and Morea: all theſe haue promiſed mee, that I ſhalbee furniſhed. Lately there is ſomwhat new diſcouered to mee, that hath difficulties; which I will ſtriue againſt. Mr. Petty hath uiſited the iſlands, and, beeing preſent, and of judgment hath gotten many things: what they are, I can ſay nothing, but, that hee gott them.

I WILL not trouble your grace any more with mention of Gabor, who beginns to arme; nor with the Spaniſh treatyes, hauing ſo often preſſed and vrged ſome direction; and all the ambaſſadors here, hauing receiued their inſtructions with reference to mee, haue by mee loſt much tyme; and I muſt at laſt collect, that thoſe aduices are lightly eſteemed in England: yet I ſhall not deſiſt to doe my ſeruice, which perhaps willbee beſt accepted in the effects. I hope your grace hath bene acquainted with all my letters to my lord Conwey; or elſe the buſineſs may haue miſcarried for want of conſultation, to which, if it had once come, I am confident it would haue procured mee at leaſt ſome anſwere.

THE gouernment of this empire hath many paroxiſmes: great and ſtrong bodies haue proportionall luctations, before they yield and waſte. The Janizaries, the laſt moneth, mutined againſt the Buſtangi baſſa, for beating (by the grand ſignors command) one of their order, for diſorder committed in the night vnder his windowe. By the canon, they ſhould bee ſent to their owne capes; yet though the emperors word ſhould bee aboue the lawe of his ſlaues, though hee auowed the fact ſent and wrott to them, nothing would appeaſe them; only his life at much ſuite was pardoned, exacting his diſplaceing with a ſentence of incapability of office for euer. Hee was a good ſeruant to his maſter, my frend, carefull of the publique honor, ſeuere againſt the licentiouſneſs of the tymes; and therefore vnfitt for them. Since, the Spahees haue taken vpp the example, and begunne to quarrell with the vizier; who are for a while ſilenced, but not quieted. What can wee poore ſtrangers expect, when the emperour ſuffers inſolencyes of his owne bondmen?

1626. The Tartar Han, retorning out of Poland, ouer burthened with a prey, was mett, and loſt part of it ; with a greater part of his army.

The Coſſacks prepare to fill the ſea, and the armada here to guard the coaſt and channell. The Mediterran wilbee free, to the great content of the Spanyard. From Babilon, there is no newes that pleaſeth ; the horſes muſt nowe eate graſſe, and that ſhall ſaue their honor.

Vnder your graces patronage, I haue preſumed to write to his majeſtie, rather now to diſcharge myſelfe, then in hope I ſhall tymely receiue his commands to finiſh what I haue long attended, as I doe now to kiſs his feete ; and by nearer ſeruice to waite vpon you, as Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$. Aprill.

1626.

Your Graces moſt deuoted humble ſeruant.

To the Queen of BOHEMIA.

May it pleaſe your majeſtie,

Vntill the end of February, I continued, vnder Sir Dudly Carletons couer, to write vnto your majeſtie ; and I feare theſe letters haue ſought him in an errant courſe, though principally addreſſed to your majeſties ſeruice, which, if arriued at the Hagh, I hope you haue opened. Since, I haue made a little pauſe, as well to attend an anſwere from England, which I could neuer yet obteyne, as that there was no other ſpeech of the prince of Tranſiluania, but his marriage ; and it was fitt to allow him a moneth or two, to enioy his faire bride : yet I can ſend your majeſtie no aſſurance, the ambaſſadors here ſtill reſting in expectation of my orders, to which theirs haue reference. And I conclude, there is ſome other ſcene choſen, and perhapps more fittly to ſettle that buſineſs, though I hoped I had merited ſome reply, ſome direction, or ſome acceptance. My reuocation is reſolued in England, how ſoone, I am vncerteyne ; and therefore your majeſtie will take mee to bee on the way, when I am ſilent : while I ſtay, I will not omitt to aduiſe what is requiſite. At the election of the young duke to the crowne of Hungary, thoſe voices that depended, and were ſubiect to Gabor, were mute, and expreſſed neither content, nor contradiction : but aſſoone as the diett was paſt, hee ſent two ſollemne ambaſſadors, to congratulate. It may ſeeme ſtrange to thoſe that know not that prince, who at this day treates with ſo many, vnder other ſhadowes, only to recouer that kingdome : if hee had receiued any comfort, hee had long ſince vſed the armes hee kept by him ; and of which hee may now haue neceſſary occaſion. Hee hath vnderſtood, that the emperor hath held a councell, and taken reſolution, as ſoone as his other affaires will leaue him any meanes, to recouer thoſe cuntryes of Hungary on this ſide Tibiſcus, which hee now poſſeſſeth by his ſword, and the laſt treaty ; which I hope will enforce him to vnmask, and ſtrike firſt, and not to trifle vntill the fire bee brought home to his owne dore. The grand ſignor will, doubtleſs, aſſiſt him, when this ſhalbee diſcouered ; and wee wonder, that in 4 moneths wee haue not heard from him vpon this occaſion. Hee hath ready 20000 men, and rumor ſaith, hee will preuent all newes of him ; but it hath ſo often failed, that I beleeue nothing, vntill hee bee beaten vpp by iniuryes, or that I ſee him well aſſured, and ſeconded from Chriſtendome : if hee, and that back dore, bee wholly neglected, it is an ouerſight that wilbee irrepayreable. The Spaniſh faction follow their treaty, as if they meant it : the actiue part of oppoſition is allotted to mee, and I will narrowly ouerſee it. I preſumed long ſince to bee a ſuitor to your majeſtie, to taſte the king my maſters opinion of mee : I will not doubt you haue vouchſafed mee that fauour, eſpecially hauing had a fitt opportunity, by the preſence of the duke of Buckingham ; to whom, if you haue recommended mee as your ſeruant, I will hope of ſome way wherein to giue your majeſtie more fruictfull teſtimonyes. The remoue of Sir Dudly Carlton, beeing, I hope, for his good, I reioyce at, knowing your majeſtie ſhall haue no loſſe in his woorthy ſucceſſor ; whoſe affections to your majeſtie, and abilityes are behind no man.

The gouernment of this empire hath many fitts and luctations : the Janizaries haue lately mutined againſt a principall officer of this court, protected by the emperour ; yet they haue preuailed. But the relation of theſe parts, as vnconcerning your majeſties ſeruice, is ſuperfluous ; and I will not preſume to extend them beyond the limitts thereof, as my only ayme and ambition ; and in which, I will liue and dye : humbly praying to God for your majeſties eternall happineſs.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$. Aprill 1626.

Your Majeſties deuoted ſeruant.

To the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HUMBLY thank your grace for the comfort I haue receiued in your letter, and the encloſed to the patriarch ; which beeing arriued in the holy weeke, when our deuotion and their ceremonies are at higheſt, I muſt defer the deliuery vntill after Eaſter ; and therefore can giue your grace no full ſatisfaction, either what I ſhall gett of him, nor vpon what conditions. But whether in exchange of books, or any other contribution, the charge will not exceed two or 300 l. becauſe I foreſee the numbers are but ſmall, by which they iudge, not knowing the value of many authors : what this offer, comming from your grace, may diſcouer, I cannot ſay ; I hope it will moue him farre, and I am confident, there are worthy matters in his power ; but hee is miſerable of books, out of a generall eſtimation, that they are a treaſure ; and ſometyme the beſt may bee ſooneſt procured, for their obſcurity. I will ſtreyne all my forces and witts, to doe ſome ſeruice this way; finding in all other I haue bene vnprofitable. I ſuppoſe I haue already the jewell of his library in my poſſeſſion, but not yet my owne ; an old and great manuſcript in Arabicque, antiently belonging to the patriarch of Alexandria, and by Cirillus brought away. It is, if I miſtake not, mentioned by Baronius, and by Byny, as hee profeſſeth (concerning the Nicene councill) ſett out ; but I haue found corruptly. It conteynes all the firſt councills, their hiſtories and acts ; with many church conſtitutions, and other matters of diſcipline, and eccleſiaſticall gouernment. Some popes haue vſed great meanes to haue it ; a braue letter, and uery antient. Leaſt I ſhould not preuaile for the originall, I haue attempted to tranſcribe that part, and to examine it by Byny. In this little ſearch, I find many notable obſeruations ; firſt in the ſubſcription of biſhops, both in order and number ; and next, a great light in that controuerſy, how many the canons ſhould bee : where it is playne in the hiſtory, that there were twenty made, which are firſt ſet downe for the Uniuerſall church, and then 84 apart, as I conceiue, for the Eaſt, which Byny numbreth and leſſeneth to 80 : and laſtly, other canons and acts for the Affrick church ; ſo that all the diſputes are in the foundation true, though indiſtinctly and vnreſolued how they were ſo many. Your grace muſt excuſe a ſciolus, and my ignorance, that doe but gueſs at things without any help : in the book are rare matters, beyond my capacity and expreſſion. I haue begunne to tranſlate the 84 acts, to conferr them with the Jeſuit : ſome difference I haue obſerued, and the 37th canon wholly left out ; which I ſend your grace encloſed, in Arabick, and our Latine, neuer before, as I ſuppoſe, extant. My inſtrument is a Jewe : how well it is done, ſupra me eſt ; ſure I am, it was a fraud to omitt it qvite. The words giue great præeminence to the pope, but in my opinion, make the other patriarchs, in matters of their church vndependent, and his equalls: that it mentioneth Epheſus is more than euer elſewhere I obſerued ; but withall it is a playne canon, diuiding the Chriſtian world to 4 patriarchs, which hath bene by tradition receiued ; but by what authority, and from what ground, I think vncerteyne. Hieruſalem, honoris cauſa, had the title, but neuer antiently the juriſdiction of a patriarch. Beeing come ſo farre, and hauing found one of Bynyes ſuppreſſed canons, I hope to imprime the reſt, and in the end to hold the booke as myne owne ; and then your grace will cauſe it to bee digged in England, as in a rich mine. In the Vatican, I haue heard of a Greeke copy of the hiſtory of the Nicen councell ; but it cannot compare with this, perhaps not in antiquity, certeynly not in fullneſs, beſids ſo many other councills adioyned, that it may bee called, corpus canonum, et theſaurus hiſtoriarum eccleſiaſticarum.

Conſtantinople $\frac{8}{18}$. April, 1626.

[The reſt of this Letter, being inſerted in others, is therefore omitted.]

1626.

To Dr. GOADE, Chaplain to my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Sir,

I HAUE receiued a great meaſure of encouragement by your freindly letter, and will, by Gods grace, endeauor to repay that good opinion you haue lent mee: what I haue done, I haue related to his grace, who, I doubt not, will acquaint you; what I ſhall doe, as yet I cannot judge. The patriarch is faſt handed, and his promiſes are miſteriall: I doe beleeue hee hath treaſures hee doth not know; for hee gathers bookes from monaſteries, and by uacancies of biſhops: ſome I ſhall gett, if I were able to chooſe. The manuſcript of ancient canons, mentioned to his grace, is the jewell of the Eaſt. I haue aymed at things, in my letter, aboue my underſtanding, and out of my profeſſion; you will helpe to excuſe my ignorance, for my affection to learning: but I am perſwaded that booke will enlighten and cleare many doubts and controuerſyes, and I am ſure Binny yet profeſſeth to publiſh the councell of Nice, by the labor of another Jeſuite, out of that indiuidual book, for there is not another hath played the Jeſuite, and maymed it: but there are other long treatyſes of that councell, which hee hath not; nor as yet I cannot underſtand them: it ſhall ſuffice mee, to ſtudy the titles. Mr. Petty, a woorthy gentleman and learned, employed hither by my lord of Arundell, for antiquities, by my meanes had admittance into the beſt library knowne of Greece, where are loades of old manuſcripts; and hee uſed ſo fine arte, with the helpe of ſome of my ſeruants, that hee conueyed away 22. I thought, I ſhould haue had my ſhare, but hee was for himſelfe: hee is a good chooſer, ſaw all, or moſt, and tooke, I thincke, thoſe that were, and wilbe of greate eſteeme. Hee ſpeaketh ſparingly of ſuch a bootye, but could not conteyne ſome tyme to diſcouer, with joy, his treaſure. Hiſtoryes ſome, Ephraim and Manaſſeth two Greeke fathers, Phocion, Euſebius, and ſome other names that I haue forgott. When hee returnes, I make no doubt he will communicate, and contribute to the publicque good; for I eſteeme him a woorthy man. I meant to haue a reuiew of that library; but hee gaue it ſuch a blow, under my truſt, that ſince it hath beene locked up under two keys, whereof one kept by the townſmen that haue intereſt or ouerſight of the monaſtery, ſo that I could doe no good: but I hold my ſelfe to haue good title to ſome of them, though in his hands I eſteeme them ſafe for the ſame uſe; but my hope is, to deale with the patriarch, and not to truſt to my ſelfe, and to chances. The barron of Sanoy, now a clergyman, and attending her majeſtie in England, with great induſtrye, and a ſtrong purſe, robbed all Greece: hee carried away two bookes borrowed of the old patriarch, of which this doth much lament; he knowes not the names, and the church was promiſed reſtitution, eyther in ſtampe, or by themſelues; but nothing performed: theſe bookes were highly eſteemed here, and are doubtleſs gone to Rome, toward a redd hatt. What I haue gotten, is not woorth the naming; yet you ſhall haue it: Teclaes bible with notes: the patriarch gaue it, and eſteemeth it a coppy of her own hand, and a relicque; but Mr. Petty thincks it not ſo ancient: a old comment upon all St. Paules epiſtles, without the name of the author: the life of Conſtantine, and Helena; with the inuention of the croſs: an great fayre manuſcript, with part of Chriſoſtome, Damaſcen, Ephraim, Andreas arbiſhop of Crete, Baſill the great, Gregorye, Nectarius, uariæ tractationes, and others; but theſe are, I doubt, fragments: Anaſtaſius treateſies, I thincke, not extant: a comment on the Pſalmes, without name throughout: a little booke of the conſtitutions of the biſhops of the Eaſt, for eccleſiaſticall gouernment, and their tenets, about 150 yeares ſince; I ſuppoſe a booke of good uſe, but I cannot underſtand it: Nicholas Caliocandes, an hiſtorye of the latter Greeke emperors, and the beginning of the Turkes: Poſſeuine notes one Moteſone of that name in print, but calls him Leonice; which made mee hope this may bee another, and not extant: another of Chriſoſtome, and Greg. Naz. An Hebrew manuſcript, with bookes of Ariſtotle, Auicen, and ſome philoſophers. Theſe I haue picked up, tanquam quiſquiliæ: I ayme at higher and greater matters, and I eſteeme the councells woorth a librarye: I will ſearch for Cyſippus; and, to conclude, will let goe nothing I can gett. If I may receiue any farther directions from you, I ſhall endeauour to execute them, when I come to bargayne: I ſhall elſe ſhew my ignorance, and committ great errors; for here are 500 great bookes old enough, but if common and printed, quid nobis lucri?

YOU ſhall doe mee a fauor to remember my ſeruice to doctor Fetlye, and Sir Thomas Hatton. And ſo deſiring to be bleſſed in your prayers, I commit yow to the holy keping of our gracious God, reſting 1626.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$ Aprill,
Eaſter-eaue, 1626.

Your affectionat frend to do you ſeruice.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I LATELIE wrote vnto your lordſhip, by the ſhipps that went from hence, being then vpon recoverie of a feaver, which had kept mee more then a moneth priſoner in my chamber; and if that letter arriue before this come to your hands, it will referre you to what I intended to ſend over land, whereof you ſhall now receiue full and particular account. Wherein, for mine owne diſcharge, and to acquitt my ſelfe of that blame might otherwiſe be caſt vpon mee, I muſt, in the firſt place, cleare vnto you two things, wherein you ſeeme to be verie much vnſatiſfied, and of which, by your doubtings in many ſeverall letters, you ſummon mee to giue you a right vnderſtanding.

THE firſt is, What acceptation your endeavours, and negotiations there, haue found with his majeſtie? The ſecond, What the cauſes may haue beene, you receiued not ſo ſpeedie and punctuall directions from his majeſtie how to proceed, as the propoſitions by you ſent deſerved?

FOR the firſt: If my letters in November laſt haue not fallen into wrong hands, you will thereby, in a good meaſure, haue received ſatisfaction: and I muſt aſſure you, his majeſtie hath alwaies ſett a due value vpon all your negotiations and advertiſments, obſerving, through the whole courſe of your proceeding, the characters of a ſober and ſolid iudgment, and liuelie expreſſions of your zeale to his ſervice, attributing it chiefelie to your wiſdome and induſtrie, that Bethlem Gabor hath beene kept ſteadie ſoe long in his good inclinations to the publicke cauſe. And as your letters ſucceſſivelie gaue knowledge of his nearer approach, the greater welcome they ſtill found: and if you alſo looke vpon his majeſties cheerefull readines to continue your penſion, to giue you an extraordinarie allowance for blackes; to transferre the payment of your penſion and arrerays (vpon my late motion) from the Exchequer to the court of Wards, as in the late kings time; and to expreſſe himſelfe thus farre, That if you had ſought to be continued ambaſſador there, as a thing good for you, he would haue continued you; I conceiue you will find abundant cauſe to acknowledge his majeſties favour, and rejoice in the eſtimation he hath of your abilities to ſerue him.

FOR the other point; I might tell you, that the propoſitions you ſent in May, arrived not here vntill the end of Julie, even when the parlament was readie to ſitt att Oxford; that the parlament being diſſolued, and his majeſtie removeing to the New forreſt, the treatie with the States ambaſſadors was then handled att Southampton; and that being finiſhed, his majeſtie inſtantly took his journey to Plimmouth; and, within three or foure daies after his returne to Saliſburie, there arrived an extraordinarie ambaſſadour from France, whoſe negotiations, and the diſpatch of the duke of Buckingham to the Hagh, tooke vp the whole time to the verie end of October. And whatſoeuer time was ſpared from theſe ſoe waighty occaſions (which followed cloſe on the necke one of the other) was employed, either about the affaires of France (of the accommodation whereof his majeſtie had a verie paſſionate care), or in examining the ſtate and neceſſities of Ireland, and prouiding remedies or ordering of deferrences here att home, and ſuch like generall publicke and preſſing buſineſſes, which could not admitt delay; ſoe as, vntill within a few daies of my diſpatch to you, even time was wanting for the conſultations requiſite vpon the propoſitions ſent: but I will not inſiſt on this, ſince the following arguments will ſhew you, that the buſines was not laid aſide; and that it was held to be moſt convenient for his majeſtie not to declare himſelfe either one waie or other, vntill the duke of Buckinghams ambaſſage to the Hagh was reſolved on. And theſe were the conſiderations:

1. FIRST, It was not fitt for his majeſtie to ingage himſelfe ſinglie in a treatie with Bethleme Gabor; it being held ſoe neceſſary, firſt, to lay a good foundation of a firme and ſolemne league with other intereſſed princes, as, vntill that were done, it was thought he could not be made vſefull.

1626. 2. A PRINCIPAL demand of Bethlem Gabors being money, and his majeſties coffers ſoe exhauſted by great and extraordinary expences, as even the ordinarie and moſt neceſſarie occaſions were hardlie ſupplied, it would haue beene no wiſdome to haue taken vpp ſuch a treatie which muſt haue broken, for want of that ciment, with diſhonor to his majeſtie, and peradventure, the utter loſſe of that prince hereafter.

3. HIS majeſtie holding Conſtantinople an vnfitt place for ſuch a treatie, even for the reaſons you giue, it could not be conceiued where and when that buſines might conveniently be handled, vnleſſe a confederation were firſt made with othe princes, or att leaſt, a meeting appointed for that purpoſe, where Bethlem Gabors miniſters might alſo come.

4. IF Bethlem Gabor meant ſeriouſlie to treate with his majeſtie, whie did he not then ſend a meſſenger to his majeſtie aſwell as to the French king? ſince there was more likelihood that, for the common intereſt of religion, and his majeſties particular ends of reſtoring his brother and ſiſter, his majeſtie would ſooner hearken to his offers then France, and howſoeuer, deſerved not leſſe reſpect.

5. HIS propoſitions were addreſſed primarilie, and directlie, to the French king, and vnto his majeſtie, rather as a voluntarie information what was propounded to that king, then as offers to be treated on; and therefore, in regard that king was in an actuall league with the Venetians and duke of Savoy, and that they neither gaue his majeſtie knowledge what come from Bethlem Gabor, nor ſought him therein, his majeſtie held it fitt for him to ſitt ſtill and obſerue what the ſucceſſe would be there, having as yett noe formall league with the king of Denmarke, and German princes, and not expecting to haue any att all with France, the holie fathers, the Jeſuits, having informed the tender conſcience of that king, that, without danger to his ſoule, he cannot enter into a league with heretickes, to make warre againſt Roman catholickes.

6. BETHLEM GABOR could not but collect, by the arming of the king of Denmarke, that ſome vnion of the proteſtant princes was projected; and therefore, ſeeing a ſtronger and more powerfull diverſion preparing then he demanded, if he had affection and will to be preſentlie of the party, it could not be imagined, but that he would preſentlie ſend to the king of Denmarke (as he hath done) from whom he might haue a ſpeedie reſolution of his purpoſes, and what was to be expected from confederatts.

7. LASTLIE, His majeſtie ſaw by your letters, there was, in appearance, a forward willingnes in Bethlem Gabor to be in action; and obſerving with what wiſdome and warines you proceeded, both to preſwade and quicken him, and ſhew him the waie hee ſhould take, and yett to keepe your ſelfe free from anie engagement, his majeſtie was confident, that he would not forſake his owne inclinations and intereſts, vntill he had tried all waies, and that you would ſoe nowriſh his hopes and conſtancie, as that he ſhould not fall off, but remaine readie att leaſt to embrace the firſt occaſion, if not to ſeeke it, wherein you haue worthilie anſwered his majeſties expectation, to his great contentment.

THESE things I haue the rather thus inlarged, that your lordſhip may haue not onlie wherewith to ſatisfie your ſelfe, but others, if there ſhall be cauſe. For although his majeſtie deferred, for the reaſons aforeſaid, to appeare openlie in the buſines, yet he alwaies had a right eſtimation of the vſefulnes and advantage of a diverſion by Bethlem Gabor, and purpoſed to ſhew himſelfe plainlie therein, as ſoone as the occaſions ſhould be fitted to his deſires. And, therefore, when the long intended meeting att the Hagh was now become certaine, and by the concurrence of good affections, a good yſſue like to follow, intimation was given to your lordſhip of this preparation to a league, of his majeſties earneſt affection and deſire to bring Bethlem Gabor in action, and what would be done in theſe parts to facilitate his diverſion. Which, with the reſt conducing thereunto, was repreſented vnto you, to frame arguments to mooue him to take armes, and to ſhew him the way to enter, if he deſired to be aſſiſted, or comprehended in that league. And more, for that tyme, could not be ſaid, becauſe his majeſtie knew not how farre the French king, or that league whereof he is head, might haue entertained his offers.

THE affaires being in this courſe, the Gentleman, mentioned in one of your letters to be ſent from Bethlem Gabor to his majeſtie, having beene with the king of Denmarke, came along with his ambaſſadors to the Hagh, and was there ſtayed by the duke of Buckingham. The treatie proceeded, and was concluded, betweene his majeſtie, the king of Denmarke, and the States, the French ambaſſador profeſſing he had noe commiſſion, though formerlie he had pretended one, and the king of Swedens ambaſſador being dead there not long before. All things were communicated with the French and Venetian reſidents, and this gentleman of Bethlem Gabors, and one particular article inſerted in the treatie to invite Bethlem Gabor to enter into the league. The ſcope and ſubſtance of the whole treatie is, That it ſhalbe a firme and conſtant league, to continue vntill the reeſtabliſhment of Germany. The king of Denmarke to increaſe his armie to 30000 foote and 8000 horſe. His majeſtie to continue his 30000 pounds a moneth, and ſet forth a ſecond fleete. The States to furniſh 5000 l. a moneth to that king, and to contribute to his majeſties fleete. Noe ouertures to be received from the ennemy but in writing; and not to be anſwered till they haue beene communicated to the ambaſſadors of all the confederatts at the Hagh. The French king to be invited to enter into the league, or contribute liberallie. The king of Sweden, the electors, princes, and townes of Germany intereſſed, Venice and Savoy, and Bethlem Gabor, to be alſo invited; and the ratifications hereof to be furniſhed reciprocallie by the 20th of March laſt, att what time a further meeting was alſo appointed. And in a * 942636 71346235 71 24 789539771 62361 627 474626662991 94, 24 24 1749732355 8 395947279777 and 99 3339471 69 37 6262966 26. And 942636758 7495 71 2962536299 634 22679169 72 97 127, that if he would 5357 13726744299, the 39977774364 696571 39964236671 69 62361 3234271 794681 62964 3971 4287955344 13 599762.

1626.

WITH this knowledge of the reſolutions and purpoſes of the confederatts, did this meſſenger returne to Bethlem Gabor; and by this you ſee, both in what ſtate the buſines then ſtood, and where and with whom it was from thenceforth to be handled; wherewith I had long long ſince acquainted you, if my ſicknes had not entirely diverted mee from all thoughts of buſines.

SINCE, and latelie, † 130 hath 3346329677 the 39977774364 with ſuch 756 as he hath on foote, and made ſome 9.49994242.994. He aſſures that he will 2297741 the 4362.7.2336299 of the 59 betweene 101 and 154 6962551 43296 2794274. 6877 and hath ſent 23 1629643971 7955344. to 9.474 796 175 70 for that purpoſe: he will 3364.71 66.91 or 62477 175 396 to 5343.21 696.34 4 133 107 and the 696974 of the 5969632974. And 141 intending to fall into 152 with all his forces, having alſo ſent to 101 for 6791 94 66.7567 162964.3971 115 to 94767961 622.41 29634299 127 will cauſe 727.68 or 428627 62964397 199 to make a 726744.2.99 in 140, and in the meane time adviſeth 174 to make

The above is decypher'd as follows:

* Priuate article is explayned, That the reſtitution of the king of Bohemia is eſpecially comprehended, no accord to be without it. And privately, from ambaſſadors, intimation was giuen to the agent of Bethlem Gabor, that if he would make a diuerſion, the confederates would contribute to that charge forty thouſand Rexdollars a moneth.

† The prince of Tranſiluania hath acquainted the confederats with ſuch deſignes as he hath on foote, and made ſome propoſitions. He aſſures that he will hinder the ratification of the treaty betweene the emperor and the grand ſignor vntill Saint Georges tyde; and hath ſent 23 thouſand dollers to preſent the Turkiſh miniſters, for that purpoſe. He will cauſe twoe or three Turkiſh armyes to march towards Stiria, Vienna, and the townes of the mountaynes. And the king of Poland, intending to fall into Sweden with all his forces, having alſo ſent to the emperor for tenne or twelue thouſand Germans, to preuent this inuaſion; Bethlem Gabor will cauſe fifty or ſixty thouſand Tartars, to make a diuerſion in Poland, and in the mean time adviſeth 1626. 57 6262 205 that he may employ 224 794374.1 323294.6 140, and provide for his owne ſecuritie againſt 144. He intends to ſend to 153 to communicate counſells with him, that all things may proceed by common advice; and propounds, that the 61 4296571 9493.647 152 to 7249.94.7 203 to 66 6999 141, to which he cannot but bee eaſilie mooved for the 5944.71 97 4595 794.3.29 and 3774996 latelie done 22471 in 140, which he much 47447964. And theſe 7267442994 will much facilitate 1306 756, who alſo 7753974 172226 62964. 3971 79967, and 669 62964 3971 29447 vnder 53947756 to draw towards 116 and 120; with which 6499974 he will 29897 with 7964716296439717. 9967, 997 of 29447, 72226 of 53932744 669 of 144, and 66.99 of 152. 226 29447, out of 131 and 137, and 573671 372297 in 128 669 or 624771 3.3594 to 229774 the 296342994. from 140. And he hath ſent to 25.93461 theſe 756 to 22.4. 39972.77964 in 124, and to 62551 6275 to be in 47372974. Hee alſo deſires, that the 48 9495.24771 38 61 may be 93271 36 234, and from thence 53771691 6.24793642. The 5292, 97 77953457 is earneſt to 34292 130 2.9691627 72757. And though vpon theſe propoſitions noe reſolution is yet taken, neverthleſſe all due care and ſpeed wilbe vſed to 43624.7271 39621 629471 942.9374. The meeting att the Hagh, now readie to proceed, will give vs information and light in all theſe things. Thither the king of Denmarke hath ſent his ratification of the treatie, and diſpatched his ambaſſadors to meete there. On his majeſties part, Sir Robert Killigrew is going with his ratification and inſtructions for a further treatie.

IT now remaines, that I giue your lordſhip knowledge, that, as his majeſtie doth well approoue all your proceedings for the ſtirring vpp of Bethlem Gabor; ſoe, if there be further cauſe vpon anie new ouertures of his, his majeſties pleaſure is, that you labour to keepe him conſtant, according to the ſcope of what I haue declared; and that, in all occaſions of his, wherein you may be of vſe to him there for furthering the generall and publicke cauſe, and his particular ends conducing thereunto, you employ your ſelfe for him as effectually as ſhalbe poſſible, ſaving only in that point of ſcandall, if he ſhall ſeeke it, of drawing the Turke to any invaſion in Chriſtendome.

‡AND for the 49392.4259, his majeſtie hath commanded 224 71. 36234 to 4276 to 235, how it is vnderſtood by his majeſtie, and how much hee conceiues it doth concerne 3962, 6275 and the 6.29571 46367 97 178, and adviſeth the Turks to make peace with the king of Perſia, that he may employ his forces againſt Poland, and provide for his owne ſecuritie againſt the Coſſacks. He intends to ſend to the king of Sweden, to communicate counſells with him, that all things may proceed by common advice, and propounds, that the allyes ſhould procure Sweden to diſpoſe the Muſcovites to warr upon the king of Poland; to which he cannot but be eaſily mooved for the loſſe of Smolenſco, and affront lately donne his ambaſſadors in Poland, which he much reſents. And theſe diuerſions will much facilitate the prince of Tranſiluanias deſignes, who alſo demands eight thouſand foote, and twoe thouſand horſe, vnder Mansfeld, to draw towards Bohemia and Sileſia. With which troopes he will ioyne with fower thouſand foote, one of horſe, eight of Lanciers, two of — and twoe of light horſe, out of Moldauia and Wallachia; and leaue behind, in Tranſiluania, twoe or three camps, to hinder the inuaſions from Poland. And he hath ſent to impart theſe deſſignes to his confidents in Hungary, and to will them to be in readineſs. He alſo deſires, that the money procured by the allies may be paid at Venice, and from thence made to Wiſenburgh. The king of Denmarke is earneſt to bring the prince of Tranſiluania into the field. And though, upon theſe propoſitions, noe reſolution is yet taken, nevertheleſſe all due care and ſpeed wilbe vſed to ſatisfy both thoſe princes.

---

‡ Spaniſh treaty his majeſtie hath commanded his ambaſſador at Venice, to ſhew the ſtate of Venice how it is vnderſtood by his majeſtie, and how much he conceives it doth concerne both them and the whole ſtate of Chriſtendome, and to preſſe them to furniſh their 353344.3794 both with ſufficient 366294268 and 3496974 to 999.947 the ſame. And for himſelfe, his majeſties pleaſure is, that by all fitt and practicable waies yow labour as yow haue begunne to 77464981 623619 49273.6, and ſtirre vpp the 474 61 97.71, if there be 3957974 in 3981 97 6275, to haue a true ſence of the 3955991 29674746 therein; and accordingly to 298971 6.2621 896, and by a good 69299, and 39447499977793.719.493777 in your 999942 62.99, and ſtriue by all meanes poſſible 3779471 261 23621 635791 6991 77797 49967, 691. 78629262.421 355 299.741 97.1 627 14.63.37447 aymed att. Theſe being times of want, and your lordſhip not fixing vpon any certaine ſumme, I received noe order to giue yow warrant for disburſing of monies; though I conceiue that, if the cauſe require it, and the ſumme be not great, it wilbee accounted well emploied for ſuch a ſervice, and reimburſed to yow with thankes.

THE queſtion, touching your revocation or continuance, hath beene a buſines of ſome trouble. The marchants haue beene earneſt ſuitors for your ſtay; and by all waies poſſible, by petitions and informations to the king, to the counſell, and laſtlie to the parlament, haue oppoſed the ſending of Sir Thomas Phillipps. How his majeſtie hath beene pleaſed to declare himſelfe concerning your perſon, yow haue ſeene in the former part of my letter; but holding the nomination of ambaſſadors to be a marke of his prerogatiue, and meerlie att his pleaſure and choice, and having given his royall promiſe to Sir Thomas Phillipps to ſucceed yow, and finding nothing objected that ſhould mooue him to alter his choice, his majeſtie hath given him both his commiſſion, and letter of credence; but when he takes his journie, I know not.

THIS being growne to ſoe great length, I will referre your lordſhip to my next, by the next ordinarie, for the occurrences here; and will end with this aſſurance to yow, that I am Whitehall, 20. Aprill, 1626.

Your Lordſhips aſſured friend to ſerue yow

E. CONWAY.

A Duplicate of the above Letter, was ſent to Sir THOMAS ROE, dated May 4; to which was added the following Poſtſcript.

YOUR lordſhips, of the 11th of February, came to my hands even when the originall of this duplicate was ready, to be diſpatched vnto yow. I haue repreſented the ſame vnto his majeſtie, who purpoſeth to purſue the treaty with Bethlem Gabor, jointly with his confederatts in the courſe he is in, and ſhalbe gladd to heare that the French king would doe any thing apart. The paſſages of this letter giue your lordſhip full information in all things, according to which yow may be pleaſed to guide your ſelfe both in this and the other buſines, to advance his majeſties ſeruice, with your accuſtomed wiſedome and conſtancie; and reſt aſſured, that the proſecution of the ſame in thoſe waies, which occaſion and neceſſitie may councell yow to follow, will find gracious acceptation and approbation from his majeſtie. The affaires here are ſomewhat embroyled; we hope notwithſtanding a good yſſue. Verie much buſines, and a little indiſpoſition of health, which too frequently oppreſſes my weake and aged bodie, giue mee not time or meanes to be ſoe particular with yow, in many things, as I would: I hope ſhortly to giue yow a larger account, and ſhew you a better face of buſines, then now I can. Your Chriſtendome, and to preſſe them to furniſh their ambaſſador, both with ſufficient authority, and crownes, to oppoſe the ſame. And for himſelfe, his majeſties pleaſure is, that by all fitt and practicable waies yow labour as yow haue begunne to deſtroy that proteſt, and ſtirre vpp the reſt of the ambaſſadors, if there be coldneſs in any of them, to haue a true ſence of the common intereſt therein; and accordingly to ioyne with yow, and by a good vnion and correſpondence, proceed in your oppoſition; and ſtriue by all meanes poſſible, before it hath taken too deepe roote to extinguiſh all hopes of the ſucceſſe aymed att.

---

1626. deſigned ſucceſſor is dead; what the reſolutions may be, or the purſutes of the marchants, I yett know not; but ſhall, for my part, be ready to doe all things which I may poſſibly conceiue to be for your honors ſervice and ſatisfaction. Your privie ſeale, for payment of your penſion out of the court of wards, his majeſtie hath ſigned.

From Mr. Wilkinson.

My very good Lord,

I MUST entreat your lordſhips pardon, for my ſilence the two laſt weekes; which, by reaſon of my abſence from Venice, theſe Eaſter-holydayes, I could not poſſibly auoyde: now I am returned againe to Venice, from my planetary courſe, which I make once a quarter, I will not fayle to write vnto your lordſhip, as often as occaſion ſhall preſent itſelfe.

Those two biſhops, which the pope did long ſince purpoſe to ſend for Ireland, remayne yet in Rome; and his holineſſe hath newely created a third, who, as wee are informed here, is an Iriſh gentleman, of great quality, who is likewiſe deſigned to goe along with the other two: they do earneſtly ſollicit their departure from Rome, and very ſhortly expect to beginne their journy; at this preſent onely attending when the pope will be pleaſed to diſmiſſe them.

There hath lately beene a great diſſention betweene the gouernor of Milan, and Torquato Conti, generall of the eccleſiaſticall forces: the vnreaſonable deſyre of the Spanyards, who would have the pops ſouldiers commanded by one Serbellone, a captaine of theirs, and not by any one of the pops chuſing, hath beene the cauſe of their diſagreement. The pope doth ſtrongly oppoſe this requeſt of the Spanyards, and hath ſent ſpeciall order vnto his generall, to looke carefully vnto his charge, and not to let any Spanyards whatſoeuer diſpoſſeſſe him of the office he hath placed him in. The Spanyards holding the peace of Italy concluded, would, by this meanes, if the pope would condeſend to their requeſt, conduct the pops forces out of Italy into Germany, where their aſſiſtance would be more aduantagious to their preſent affaires, then it would be here. This policy of theirs the pope doth very well perceaue, which makes him exceeding wary, and ſuſpitious of all their proceedings.

Cardinall Barbarini, ſince his arriuall into Spayne, remayneth very much diſpleaſed, by reaſon of diuers affronts which haue beene offered vnto him by the Spanyards: that which doth moſt trouble him, is, That he being ſent into Spayne, to treat the peace of Italy, that the peace ſhould be publiſhed there, before he could be admitted to ſpeake or negotiat with that king; and ſo he ſhould be depriued of that honor which was due vnto him, the pope hauing made him a chiefe inſtrument in that buſineſſe. At this preſent, the cardinal remayneth very ſicke in Spayne, and retyred, into a Monaſtary, with eight of his ſeruants to attend on him; the reſt of his followers being dead in Spayne, which ammount vnto the number of 80.

Your lordſhips letters of the 25th of February, are ſafely arriued, which I haue ſent vnto my lord ambaſſador to Turin, to know what may be done in your lordſhips buſineſſe. I haue nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip with at this preſent, but here humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer reſt

Venice, 25th Aprill,
ſtilo novo. 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull ſeruant,

Jo. Wilkinson.

From Sir Francis Nethersale.

My Lord,

I CANNOT expreſſe the contentment I receyued theſe laſt dayes, by your lordſhips to me of the $\frac{15}{25}$ of January, written with your owne hand, after the copy of others of the 31 December, which I haue receyued no otherways, finding by both of them, that it is my owne faulte I haue not had the happines to receyue many more from you, in the long time ſince my returne out of the Palatinate: and that, notwithſtanding that faulte, your lordſhip is yet willing to renew our correſpondence, wherein I haue ſo much aduantage, that the greateſt cauſe of my giuing it ouer, was ſhame of being able to make you no worthy returne, although the vncertainty of my abode, whereof your lordſhip taketh notice, hath beene another cauſe thereof; hauing, in this ſpace, made very many vnprofitable journeyes: but I am now in hope I am fixed here for a great while; and therefore, since you giue me 1626.

leaue, ſhall hereafter take the boldnes to trouble your lordſhip with ſo much of the affayres of theſe parts as ſhall come to my knowledge; and, whatſoeuer it may pleaſe you to conueigh to the queene, my miſtreſs, by me, ſhall be deliuered ouer to her majeſty in the beſt manner I can doe it, as I haue done your letters, to her, of the 18 December, and $\frac{1}{11}$ January; which, as my owne, had followed Sir Dudley Carleton into England, from thence into France, and ſo came backe hither, which is the cauſe you haue had no ſpeedyer accompt of them.

AND now, at this time, to lay onely a foundation for my future aduertiſements of the affayres of Germany, the preſent ſtate of them is briefely this: The kinge of Denmarke, about ſixe or eight weekes ſince, ſent the duke of Weymar with a ſmall troope of horſe and foote, into the biſhopricke of Vſenburg, to draw that into contribution; which, he effected happily, and returned ſafely. At the ſame time, count Mansfelt marched vp on the further ſide of the Elne; the colonel Fulkes, ſent from the king of Denmarke, marching ouer againſt him, on the other ſide, with boates drawne vp the riuer for the joyning of their forces, if occaſion had beene offered by the enemy, but they had none. By this meanes, the count Mansfelt hath fiered on the towne of Hauelberg, ſituate where the Hauel falleth into the Elne, and of diuers paſſages on that riuer, together with the towne of Brandeburg; whereby his way is now open into Sileſia, if Bethlem Gabor would come on to joyne with him; and if not, he is in a good way to attempt the taking of ſome paſſages on the Elne, in the principality of Anhalt, and ſo to fall into the elector of Saxony his countrey, and make that the ſeate of the warre; as the elector of Brandeburgs is like to be otherwiſe, for a reward of his neutrality. The count Mansfelt is much re-enforced ſince this expedition, vpon theſe hopes, being now reported to be 18000 good men.

THE king of Denmarke remayneth ſtill in the land of Brunſwicke, where the young duke Chriſtian is alſo now left gouernor thereof, his elder brother being retired into the land of Holſtein. They haue betweene them aboue 10000 horſe, and about 30000 foote, an army able to do great matters, and the king willing and reſolued to attempt them, notwithſtanding all the mighty armyes of the emperor, of which, I am ſure, you heare enough: but the parliament in England hath not yet enabled the king to comply with his promiſe of 30000 pound a moneth, whereon the reſt of the confederation dependeth. And, for other intereſts, the king of France, who hath giuen much hope of a greate ayde, though he would not enter into the league, is now come off with 50000 crownes onely for the preſent, and good wordes for the future. So that we, who haue moſt intereſt in the holding of that army on foote, are not altogether out of feare, that the king of Denmarke may in fine be conſtrayned to accept of conditions for himſelfe, and the circle of the lower Saxony; although he haue of late ſent away certayne commiſſioners who were long together to that purpoſe in the toure of Brunſwicke. But our hope hath yet life in it.

THE eſtate of theſe countreyes I reſerue for my next, thinking it no diſcretion to venture too much at once, till I haue tryed the ſafety of the way for my letters, which I now ſend to Sir Iſaake Wake; but if you ſhall direct me otherways, will obey you in that, and in all things els, as

Hagh, 3d of May,
new ſtile, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and affectionate ſeruant,

FRA. NETHERSALE.

I SEND your lordſhip an anſwere from her majeſty, and craue leaue here to kiſſe the handes of your lady; as my wife doth your lordſhips and hers, with dew acknowledgement of your fauour in remembring her ſo kindely.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE affaires of Italy, France, and Spayne, remayne ſtill vnſettled, and out of joynt; and the late treatyes of peace in theſe parts hath found ſo cold acceptance, that, in the eye of the world, a concluſion of peace is as farre of as at the firſt. Thoſe articles ſent out of France, into Spayne, concerning the ſurrender of the Valtelina, and peace of Italy, are not agreed vnto by the Venetians; who in no wiſe 1626. will yeald to the demoliſhing of thoſe forts, which they haue already built, to command the paſſages through that vally into Germany. The pope likewiſe, whom the Spanyards hath employed as an inſtrument, to diſpoſe both France and Italy to a peace with them, is now become their vtter enemy, by reaſon of diuers affronts, which they haue lately offered him; which he cannot put vp without the prejudice of his honor and reputation: and whereas he was before a procurer of their good, and advantage, he doth now ſtudy by what meanes his reuenge on them might be their ruine. He hath already expreſt an ill talent towards the Spanyards, by honoring ſo much monſieur Bagni and his brother, in his court; and by promiſing ſhortly to create them cardinalls, who are ſuch profeſſed enemyes to the crowne of Spayne. Vntill he do heare further what will become of his nephew in Spayne, he will not breake forth into open rage: the letters of the popes phiſition from thence giue little hope of his recouery; and queſtionleſſe, if he ſhould lay his bones in thoſe parts, the partiall loue of the pope towards his nephew would ſpurre him forward to reuenge the loſſe of his life, and of his owne reputation.

THE pope now falling of from Spayne, doth beginne to inſinuate himſelfe into the fauor of the Venetians, as fit inſtruments to execute his fury vppon the Spanyards; but theſe ſignori well knowing what antipithy there is betwixt the ſenat of Rome and Venice, do keepe themſelfes of at a fit diſtance, and do fauor the pope onely in ſuch things, as do concurre with their owne profitt.

THE Venetian ambaſſadors, vppon the 4. of this month, did beginne their journey for England, being accompanied with ſix young gentlemen of Venice thither.

I DO expect dayly newſe from Turin, of my lord ambaſſadors returne hither, which I hope will be very ſhortly: in the mene tyme, I committ your lordſhip to the protection of the higheſt, and euer reſt

Venice, May 5.
ſtilo nuo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

TENN dayes paſt, there came an extraordinary diſpatch from the gouernour of Catara, to the Venice ambaſſador here reſident; acquainting him with the landing of a Spaniſh gentleman at Raguſa, in a galliot of Naples, earneſtly recommended from the vice-king to the gouernors of that citty. Hee ſtayed to expect ſome ceremony, and to bee publiquely receiued; but that failing, hee was carried in a cloſe chayre, to the monaſtery de i frati minori, and kept himſelfe priuat; only ſending another letter, pretended to bee written by a great vizier to thoſe magiſtrates, who preſently provided him two Turks, as was reported, to conduct him to Conſtantinople. Hee diſpatched a poſt to Belgrade, to a correſpondent there; and this was the ſubſtance of the aduice.

THE Venice ambaſſador inſtantly gaue notice to all the reſidents, who reſolued, that he was imployed to continue the treaty of peace; and that the king of Spaine would not ſecond the firſt motion, without that power of mony which might effect his ends, whether to gayne tyme, or really to conclude that, which hee could breake at his pleaſure. Hereupon they reſolued to make all oppoſition, hauing ſuch order from their princes, and rather to hinder his admittance, then to diſpute with him here, where hee would out-promiſe any man, and ſo preuaile; and to this end, it was concluded to ſpend ſome reaſonable ſumme. I, that had no direction, could not yet breake the union, eſpecially beeing the inſtrument, whom they had choſen to negotiate for them; and that this treaty ſeemed more directly againſt his majeſtie, becauſe the count di Oliuares lately anſwered a publique miniſter, that his maſter neuer regarded the ouertures made from hence, beeing, as hee ſaid, capriccios of the vice-re of Naples: but that, now hee was aſſaulted in his owne houſe, hee did not know how farre that might alter him. Beſides, a peace with this port will directly ruyne this trade; becauſe the Spaniſh gallies wilbee all free, to keepe the ſtreights of Gibralterra, and merchants ſhipps will with great difficulty eſcape them: our care therein differing from that of France, and Venice, who trade within the Streights.

THESE conſiderations, with the firſt command from his late majeſtie in the firſt motion, made mee enter into the liſts. I had lately receiued a letter, printed in Spaine, cum licentia, and ſpread into all parts, from the grand ſignor to that king; offering peace, and refuſing to aſſiſt his ſecret enemyes, mentioning a large preſent: the whole falſe and ridiculous. This I tranſlated, and gaue copies to the great miniſters, commenting thereupon, as was requiſite: whereat they tooke ſo great diſdeyne, that they reſolued to giue no admittance to any Spaniard, nor to hearken to any treaty. I firſt dealt with the Mufti, and the heads of the lawe; who encouraged mee to goe to the Chimacan, and to acquaint him with the arriuall of this new gentleman, and to aske a command to meete him on the way, to take his feyned letters, and to conduct him ſafely out of this dominion. This office was performed by the French ambaſſador, and myſelfe, ſeuerally: wee inſiſted for the not receiuing him, principally vpon theſe reaſons; that, perhapps, the Spaniards did deſire no more then fumo, to ſpread a report, that their ambaſſador was admitted at Conſtantinople, which might juſtly giue ſcandall and ſuſpition, that there was ſome enclynation to accept that of which they were content to treate: that it was very vnreaſonable, at this tyme, to leaue old frends for old enemyes; and that the league made betweene the emperour, Spaine, the pope, and Poland, was alike dangerous to this ſtate, as to ours; and that wee did beleeue, in this enterpriſe, nothing was aymed at, but to worke ſome diſunion among the princes colleagued, by feares, which by no other practice could yet bee brought to paſs: and laſtly, that it would ruyne our trade, vpon which the frendſhipp depended.

THIS command wee haue, with reaſons and guifts obteyned; and another to Raguſa, to admoniſh that republique, not to intermeddle hereafter, nor to aſſiſt in the paſſage of any miniſter of the king of Spaine; and ſo wee hope that proiect is, for a tyme, if not for euer, diſſolued. To-daye wee diſpatch them by fower horſemen, with inſtructions to watch all wayes, and ſafely to conduct this gentleman out of theſe dominions. The copy of the commands I will ſend his majeſtie, by the next ordinary; that if the Spaniards make any vſe of the rumour of this their counterfaict treaty, there may bee oppoſed the truth of the enterteynment; for euen in this caſe, publique fame is not to bee neglected: and I hope his majeſtie will take in good part what I haue done, without order, in the zeale of his ſeruice.

AN open rupture, betweene this empire and Poland is very like to ſucceede the late inuaſions of the Tartar Han; whoſe brother, Gehan Gheray, refuſing to accompany the action, as contrary to the peace and his oath, ſent the generall Coneſpolski the copy of the order from this port, which now is diſauowed here; and they hearken after any ouerture or meanes to make vpp the breach, and to procure a new reconciliation: but the ouerthrow giuen to the Tartars hath encouraged the Poles to declare their reuenge, and to auow the attempts of the Coſſacks; who (as is reported) are ready, with 700 frigatts, to fall vpon ſome part neare this citty; munition beeing allowed them from the king, and a Poliſh capteyne to euery boate. They threaten to fight with the grand ſignors armada, and haue made a vowe, to inueſt and carry away the admirall gally. All the villages on the Boſpherous, to the gates of Conſtantinople tremble, and the citty is not without feare; ſoftened by certeyne prophecyes and aſtrologians, who foretell a great blow from a Northerne people. Twenty gallyes keep the mouth of the channell: the capten baſſa, with about 40 more, will depart within tenne dayes, almoſt already conquered by his owne, and the common feares.

FROM Babilon it is certeynly aduiſed, that the king of Perſia hath beſeeged the viziers camp, that hee is lodged vpon his trenches, and hath cut off all acceſs of prouiſion; ſoe that now the care is greater to ſaue that army, then to recouer the citty: yet theſe miniſters abate little of their pride, but are more ready to doe a wrong, or any inſolence, then euer; inſenſible of their owne eſtate, or diſſembling it a peruerſe way.

THESE aduices beeing directed to his majeſties ſeruice, I am confident your lordſhip will preſent them; though I deſpaire vtterly of any anſwere: and ſo I humbly take my leaue.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{6}{16}$.
May, 1626.

1626.

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

BY my letters of the 11th of February, I acquainted your lordſhip with a priuat diſpatch of the French ambaſſador to the prince of Tranſiluania, to ſignify, that hee had receiued full commiſſion to conclude with him, in the name of his maſter, vpon the propoſitions ſent hither in Aprill laſt, to take armes in the common cauſe of Germany, with reference to his majeſtie, if hee pleaſed to enter for his proportion, of which it was expected I had ſome order.

THE meſſenger is retorned, and hath brought with him a gentleman of the princes court; to what purpoſe I cannot penetrate, not beleeuing the French will conclude without mee; but rather to keepe the ſtart and aduantage in his owne power.

* 6. May. THIS *day, vpon the occaſion of the expedition of the commands for Raguſa, wee mett; and hee told mee, that the ſubſtance of his negociation to Gabor was, to giue anſwere to the fower demands: the firſt, of 40 thowſand dollars the moneth, that the French king had accepted it for his 4th part; and giuen him authority, in his name, to bind himſelfe for the due performance: to the ſecond, that the prince required to bee comprehended in the occaſion of peace, and to oblige himſelfe to make none without generall conſent; it was alſo agreed vnto, prouided that his majeſtie and the States of Venice and Holland, did conforme. The other two were ſuperfluous, or implyed in the former; ſo that in effect, all was accorded.

To which, the prince had now replyed, that if, ſome years paſt, he had hazarded his owne eſtats, and conſumed his treaſures for loue to his frends, and lately, at the inſtance of the Hollanders and the count of Torne, anewe taken armes, and expected ſome ſupplyes, whereof hee failed; it could not bee doubted, that hee receiued with great content this declaration, and that hee was much more ready to embrace the ſeruice and protection of twoe ſo mighty kings; proteſting, in the name of a Chriſtian, that hee had no other intereſt, nor deſſigne, but the liberty of Germany: for which hee would imploy all his forces; and if the ouertures by him made to the duke of Angoleſme, and monſieur de Bethunes, had bene tymely hearkened vnto, the eſtate of that cuntry had, at this day, reſted in better termes. Now it muſt be conſidered, that, hauing lately made a peace, hee muſt giue ſatisfaction to his nobility, both of Hungary and Tranſiluania; and that therefore it was requiſite to bee well grounded, to bee able to pay them, and not to leaue the burthen wholly vpon them, as formerly he had done. To which end hee had ſent this gentleman thither, with full inſtructions to attend a reſolution, and to know whether I, and the Dutch ambaſſador, had yet receiued power to conclude in thoſe two articles, and to furniſh our proportion; which if wee had not, yet the prince did offer himſelfe, receauing only 100 thowſand dollers inpreſt, which is two moneths and a halfes pay of the whole, only from the French, to bynd himſelfe within 10 dayes after, to riſe and march directly to Vienna, and to haue patience, and hazard the anſwere of his majeſtie, which he hoped to receiue from Holland, whither he had diſpatched capteyne Quad, lately retorned from thence, to the king of Bohemia, and the States, with ſignification of the readines of his moſt Chriſtian majeſtie to excite them to awake their frends, and to looſe no more ſo faire opportunityes. And that hee had ſhewed this anſwere to the count of Swartzenburgh, who conducted the princeſſe as ambaſſador from the elector of Brandeburgh, and by him ſent the copy of the French inſtructions; from whom hee was aſſured of correſpondence, and ayds. Laſtly, if there were no preſent meanes of mony, ſo hee might bee any way aſſured in tyme to receiue ſatisfaction, hauing intelligence with the count of Mansfelt, whom hee expected in Sileſia, and with many principall lords of that prouince; and beeing aduiſed from the king of Denmark, that Mansfelts army ſhould receiue competent ſuccours from him, if he ſawe the occaſion proſecuted, that hee would ſhow himſelfe ſo feruent a louer of the publicque good, that hee would vnite with him all his forces; but reſtreyned this promiſe, that thereupon their majeſties ſhould not ſo ground themſelues, as to neglect the performance of the monyes, in which he truſted their kingly words.

THAT the 100 thowſand dollers, now demanded, would ſerue for three muſters, which ſhould be diſcounted vpon the 40 thowſand monethly. The whole amounting ing to 480 thowſand in the yeare ; to ſhow that he did not engage himſelfe only for mony, hee was content to abate 80 thowſand, to thoſe princes that did pay him, by aduancing 3 or 4 dayes on euery muſter, hee would make but 10 in the yeare, for their aduantage.

I THINK there ſhallbe no queſtion of his performance ; firſt, becauſe hee hath, in company of this gentleman, ſent the command procured by vs in Auguſt laſt, to the baſſa of Buda, to furniſh him vpon all occaſions with neceſſaries of warre, and to bee in readineſs vpon the frontire ; not purpoſing to vſe any Turk in the action, but only to haue the countenance of the grand ſignor for the defence of his owne cuntry, threatned by the king of Poland, if hee take armes againſt the emperor. To procure this fauour of the baſſa, and to buy him from the Imperialls, hee accompanied this meſſage with a large preſent. Beſides hee is vncerteyne of the peace on the part of the Auſtrians, when they ſhall haue meanes to oppreſs him ; hauing receiued from his ambaſſador at Vienna aduice, that the emperour told him hee was not bound to maynteyne it, becauſe the prince had entered into new practices againſt him at this port. Laſtly, I preſume it is out of all doubt, that the diuerſion made on this ſide wilbee of more conſequence then any other yet in action, and better cheape by a great proportion ; for if his majeſtie pay 50 thowſand pounds a moneth, to the two armyes of Denmark and Mansfelt, what is 2 thowſand pound a moneth to raiſe a powerfull and ſpiritfull prince with an army of 25 thowſand ſwords vpon the back of the enemy ?

THE prince demandeth the payment in this citty, which will bee eaſily furniſhed by the Turky company, who haue no commodityes to retorne, and the exchange of mony neuer ſo lowe ; if his majeſtie will aſſigne them currant acceptation of their bills.

IT is to be conſidered, that this diuerſion of Gabor doth not ſo directly ſerue the affaires of Italy, as thoſe of Germany ; therefore, if the French king ſo willingly embrace it, it much more concerneth his majeſtie, whoſe intereſts haue more reſpect vpon Germany then Italy.

I SUBMITT theſe propoſitions to the wiſedome of his majeſtie : if hee hath taken any other order in France, or Holland : to conclude, I ſhalbee moſt gladd to haue bene the remote inſtrument of his ſeruice. If hee ſhall pleaſe to giue mee order and creditt, I am ready to obey and fulfill his roiall inſtructions.

THIS meſſenger retorned, doth report, that the king of Spaine ſent a titulado in quality of an ambaſſador, to congratulate the princes marriage, and to preſent two jewells vallued at 25000 ducats ; who arriued at Caſſouia, and falling ſick, as is beleeued by commiſſion, to ſeeme to doe that honor to Gabor, and yet not to doe it, diſpatched 3 gentlemen of his trayne, with his excuſe, and the jewells, which were deliuered, and accepted ; and he retorned without further complement.

8. May, 1626.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

WHAT I haue done, and what hath fallen to my knowledge for his majeſties ſervice, I haue acquainted my lord Conway, and bene a ſuitor to his lordſhip to preſent your grace a copy of 3 papers ſent in cyphar : I preſume they wilbee acceptable to his majeſtie, if your grace vouchſafe the patronage of your humble ſeruant.

MY agents from Greece are retorned with no great fruit of their labours, other then diſcoueryes of ſome marbles vnder ground, which will require tyme and priuacy to take vpp, to avoyd the envy of theſe people, who ſuſpect treaſure in euery place where Chriſtians breake the earth. I haue omitted no ſearch nor expence to giue your grace ſome teſtimony of my deſire to obey your firſt command, wherein I would not bee judged by effects, though I doubt not alſo by them to bee in part iuſtified.

Mr. Petty, in the iſlands, hath gotten many marbles : hee takes all ; what they will proue, is beyond my judgment. I haue ſome, but I deſire not to lade your grace with vngracefull ſtones : they ſhall haue ſome bewty with antiquity which I will preſent ; and if there come other, they muſt paſſe in a throng, for number, not for weight, though they bee very heuy.

1626. I HAUE a litle marble, a halfe woman, in releuo, excellent workmanſhipp, and a ſtone of rare whitneſs and hardneſs, recouered from Troy, though, I think, in thoſe days, no ſuch maſters, but the hand of ſome later Roman. It will ſerue for a chimney, though it bee no ſtatue. A head of Germanicus from Angury, whence I expect daily a whole peece, brought vpon a litter, by fower mules. From Athens I haue no retorne; but looke this moneth to know the ſucceſs. In an iſland called Auguſto, neare Paris, in the Arches, I haue heard of two great marbles, and haue taken a command to fetch them, by the biſhopp of Naxia. Another of Scyra hath promiſed mee a whole cupid, taken upp in Delos, of white alabaſter. From Tiria I expect a retorne of another factor. From Pergamo, by the conſull of Smirna. From Morea, by the merchants of Patraſs. From Aleppo and Alexandria, by the induſtry of Mr. Kirkham. If all theſe ſhould produce nothing, I may bee aſhamed, but not accuſed of negligence.

THOSE on Port Aurea are like to ſtand, till they fall with tyme: I haue vſed all meanes, and once bought them, and depoſed, 3 moneths, 500 dollers. Without authority, the danger and impoſſibility were alike; therefore I dealt with the great treaſurer, who in theſe tymes is greedy of any mony, and hee had conſented to deliuer them into a boat without any hazard of my part. The laſt weeke hee rode himſelf to ſee them, and carried the ſurueigher of the citty walls with him; but the Caſtellano and the people beganne to mutine, and fell vpon a ſtrange conceit; inſomuch that hee was forced to retyre, and preſently ſent for my enterpreter, demanding if I had any old booke of propheſy: inferring, that thoſe ſtatues were enchanted, and that wee knew, when they ſhould bee taken downe, ſome great alteration ſhould befall this citty. Hee ſpake of a vault vnder ground, that I vnderſtand not; which, concurring with the rumour of the Coſſacks, filled them with ſuperſtition, and ſuſpition of mee; in concluſion, hee ſent to mee, to think, nor mention no more that place, which might coſt his life, and bring mee into trouble; ſo that I deſpair to effect therein your graces ſeruice: and it is true, though I could not gett the ſtones, yet I allmoſt raiſed an inſurrection in that part of the citty. What I can doe, your grace will accept, in whoſe fauour I repoſe, and whoſe ſeruant I will liue and dye.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$.
May, 1626.

Your Graces moſt humbly to obey you.

Extracts of two Letters to Sir ISAAC WAKE. Dated Conſtantinople, May 8. and 21.

The reſt of the Contents being compriſed in other Letters, are here omitted.

—— I HAUE a priuate ſuite to your lordſhip, which I think not to be irregular, beeing deſſigned for a publique good. Much of our trade depends upon Scio and Smirna. In the firſt, there liues an old Roman biſhop decrepid, and this yeare vnable to performe the offices of his function. The principalls of the iſland haue vſed greate meanes to mee, to procure the coadjutorſhipp and reuerſion for the archbiſhopp of Smirna, Fra. Pietro de Marchi, borne in the iſland. The meanes propounded is, any recommendation to the pope from the cardinall of Sauoy, Bandini, or any other of the congregation de propaganda fide. Your lordſhip knowes, that I haue no correſpondence in Rome, and any direct meanes from mee would bee ſuſpitious: but I haue preſumed to hope, your lordſhip may, by Sauoy, preuaile for a ſimple recommendation, which will ſurely effect it; there wants nothing but a frend to name him, beeing well knowne, and eſteemed by the pope, and all the college: hee hath bene twice employed hither viſitatore apoſtolico, and giuen, both at Rome and here, good ſatisfaction: a man modeſt, and louing to our nation. In recompence of his former ſeruice, the congregation forced vpon him the archbiſhopprick of Smirna, where hee is receiued without a church, for the one chappell belongs to the Venetians, and they will not yield vp jus patronatus. The bailo will write for him in that reſpect; hee hath no oppoſite, and one word will preuaile for him. The aduantage to mee and my nation is reputation; all theſe biſhoppricks are giuen at the ſimple requeſt of the French and Venice ambaſſadors, ſo that all they and their flocks doe abſolutely depend vpon them, ſome tyme to our great diſaduantage. In Scio are more Franks, that is the diſtinction, then in all the Arches, and his authority in that iſland will much auaile mee in many

1626

many publique affaires, and bee of great vſe and proffitt to our merchants. Your lordſhip may ſo farr repoſe truſt in mee, that I would not lightly enter into this buſineſs. If his highneſs of Sauoy will write 3 lynes to his ſonne, wee are ſure it will take place. If this bee any inconuenience to your lordſhip, I ask not the fauour; but beeing a ſmall matter, and the perſon recommended acceptable, if your lordſhip will doe mee this grace, I will correſpond in any ſeruice yow ſhall command mee. Howſoeuer, I deſire your opinion and anſwere, which ſhall ſatisfy mee. And ſo I commend your lordſhip to the bleſſed keeping of our gracious God.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate ſeruant.

Extract of another, to the ſame. Conſtantinople, $\frac{21}{31}$. May, 1626.

—THE ſuit I haue commended to your lordſhip, is ſo eaſy, beeing only a letter, that I will hope, though I ſhall depart in the end of Auguſt, yett, that I may leaue ſome hope behind mee of beeing able to make vs frends here for the future. Hee hath bene twice, not only viſitatore but legato apoſtolico. His name will aduance him, if hee had any great frend, as fewe modeſt men haue: beſides the aduantage to our nation to haue a party in the catholique flocke, not for a faction, but a correſpondence; hee will and doth aſſiſt mee for marbles for the duke, hauing bene biſhopp long of St. Errinna in the Arches, and in all thoſe iſlands of great authority.———

From Sir FRANCIS NETHERSOLE.

My Lord,

IN my laſt to your lordſhip of this day fourthnight, with which I ſent yow one from his majeſty, I let yow know in what eſtate the affayres of Germany then were, which I am ſory I muſt now ſend you word, is, ſince that, much impayred. The count Mansfelt hauing ſeized on the chiefe paſſages vpon the Hauel, aduanced to Deſſaw in the principality of Anhalt, where there is a bridge vpon the Elue, defended with a fort, whereof he had a great deſire to make himſelfe maſter; and had gayned ſome aduantages towardes it, when he was fayne to quit them to go to the ſucours of colonel Fulkes, who hauing his quarter at Wolmerſtat on the other ſide of the Elue, was preſſed by Wallenſtein and his whole army, for which finding himſelfe to weake, he ſent for Mansfelt to come to helpe him, but being not able to ſtay his comming, made his retreate to Tongermindi, ere Mansfelt was halfe way. Hereupon Mansfelt reſolued to returne to his enterpriſe on the bridge at Deſſaw; but lingred two dayes to refreſh his men. When he came thither, he found thoſe aduantages he had formerly gotten, now in the poſſeſſion of the enemy, yet with the loſſe of ſome men he regayned them, and was in good hope of effecting his deſſein, when Wallenſtein began to paſſe ouer his men, partly by the bridge, and partly by boates, in ſuch numbers that he ſoone grew too ſtrong for Mansfelt. He ſeeing that, and being loath to retire, ſent now to Fulkes for ayde, but ſpecifyed not in what proportion, which Fulkes ſent him backe worde he muſt do, before he could ſend him any, and while this was doing Mansfelt percyuing the enemy to drawe to get behind him, was forced to thinke of making a retreate, which he did a good way in good order; but at laſt his horſe, whereof he had 3000, being charged home by the enemy, ran all away; yet he ſtayed with the foote, and with them ſuſtayned two aſſaults, but they being then put into route, he eſcaped to Zerbſt, whither and to Brandeburg, within two dayes after, gathered to him about 2500 of his foote, but without armes: 1500 were loſt, and many officers, and 2 ſmall pieces of canon. On the other ſide, about the ſame time, the duke Chriſtian of Brunſwicke marched with 3000 horſe and 1000 muskateers, into the land of Heſſe, where he and the boores of the Lantgraue Maurice, haue cutt in pieces the regiment of the duke of Holſtein, and ſome other of Tillyes folke quartered there. That landgraue is now growne deſperate; his couſin the lantgraue of Dermſtat, of whoſe hauing gotten the county of Sharpurg from him by a ſentence of the emperor you muſt needes haue heard long ſince, hauing now lately obtayned another ſentence, by which the Lantgraue Shaurjle is condemned in more ſumes of gold, for the rentes of Sharpurgh, Dommages, &c. then he is able 1626. to pay. This hath made him reſolue to try if he can beate the enemy out of his country, which hath eaten it now theſe three or foure yeares.

CERTEYNE troopes of horſe and foote, to the number of 6000, or more, ſtayed in the land of Siege, and thereabouts are lately paſſed ouer the Rhine, a little below thence, to go to Tilly; and Spinola hath alſo ſent two regiments to him.

I WRITE theſe thinges thus particularly to your lordſhip; partly becauſe I ſuppoſe yow may not be vnwilling to be troubled with them in that manner, being affayres with which I know yow are affected, and partly becauſe I am not willing to fill vp my letters with other matter of the eſtate of theſe countreyes, vntill I haue tryed how certayne the paſſage is to your lordſhip. And ſo I humbly kiſſe your hands.

Hagh, $\frac{18}{8}$. May,
1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and humble ſeruant,

FRA. NETHERSOLE.

To Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

I VNDERSTAND from Venice, that my two diſpatches of January, and one of Frebuary, both to his majeſtie and your lordſhip, are intercepted, which may bee the occaſion, that my ſeeming neglect hath merited this puniſhment, to receiue no intimation of his majeſties pleaſure in thoſe two matters, the offers of Gabor, and the Spaniſh treaty of peace, ſince his happy reigne; and now I heare by rumour, that I am recalled, and my ſucceſſor on the way, without any warning; ſo that I may giue ouer hope, and labour; yet to my laſt hower I will not omitt the duty I owe to his majeſties, and your lordſhips ſeruice, though I returne aſhamed of all, but myne owne actions; not that I retorne, for his majeſtie hath gratiouſly releaſed mee from a condemned priſon, but that all my fellowes haue bene graced with their princes orders, only I haue mourned my owne diſgrace.

THE encloſed will haue aduiſed your lordſhip what was done in oppoſition of the arriuall of the Spaniſh agent; 18 dayes ſince fower horſemen were diſpatched to meete or ſeeke him on the way.

THE contrary faction haue vſed all their forces, but too late; and I hope God hath giuen him into the hands of thoſe ſent; for wee haue freſh aduice, that hee was come on 9 dayes journy, and by a fall, brake 3 bones, ſo that hee was enforced to bee carried back to Raguſa to bee cured, and is lodged ſecretly in St. Dominicos monaſtery, where hee can hardly eſcape the meſſengers, goeing directly with a command to that citty. Our doubts were, that hee would paſſe diſguiſed, or vnder the emperours name. If hee bee taken, it is like that the Spaniard will not digeſt ſo eaſily the affront, as to attempt another ſodainly; and wee purpoſe to confirme this refuſall by an act of publique councell, which I am now ſolliciting. The deſſigne of the treaty, had many diſaduantagious branches to his majeſties ſeruice in particular, which beeing daſhed, are vnneceſſary to repeate; and it hath coſt mee a good ſomme of mony for my part, humbly hoping his majeſtie will vouchſafe it.

THE gentleman of Bethlem Gabor, mentioned formerly, after the diſpatch of the laſt poſt, (for the French ambaſſador would haue the honor of the firſt aduiſe) brought mee a credence from the prince, continuing the offers of his maſter, if I had power to conclude. I told him hee had done a diſſeruice, to keepe his letters, and to looſe 14 dayes tyme, and was content to accept his excuſe. I anſwered him delatorily, to continue his hopes, that I had aduice, the buſineſs was referred to a treaty in France or Holland, where the miniſters of all the princes intereſſed, might bee aſſiſtant: that yet I expected, with the firſt ordinary, ſome direct aſſurance from his majeſtie, and ſo haue left the buſineſs aliue, though to litle effect, the French ambaſſador not beeing able to proceed, to his great diſcontent, who deſired to value his ſeruice by this negotiation.

THIS day I receiued a diſpatch from the elder duke of Sbarraſs, Caſtellan of Cracouia, the firſt peere of Poland, retorning a newe to my help, profeſſing the deſire of his king, to continue the peace aſſiſted by mee at my firſt arriuall, by his late majeſties order, accuſing the attempts of the Coſſacques, and complayning of the Tartars; it ſeemes deſirous that I ſhould interpoſe to make vpp the breaches lately happened; but I ſpent and laid out mony for them, for the honor of his majeſtie, and neuer ſaw other retorne but paper, and after ſo much meritt, that they beganne to enclyne to the French, and now that they haue tryed others, would haue recourſe in their neceſſity to the authority of his maieſtie, in mee his vnworthy miniſter. Therefore hauing no newe order from my maſter, and knowing the great change of affaires, and the alliance and league of the houſe of Auſtria with Poland, I haue not dared to accept the charge, nor doe I think it conuenient for his maieſties ſeruice; yet well belanceing the preſent occaſions, ſo farr forth as may hinder the inuaſions of the Coſſacks, who keep the armado employed in the Blackſea, to the great advantage of Spaine, I will preſume to try, if I can find any medium to both, that the feare may retorne into the Mediterran. This office now both ſides ſeeke of mee, the vizier hauing made ſome ouerture, that I would mediate a ceſſation of theſe incurſions; but my ſodayne departure will not giue mee leaue to worke any great effect, only I will giue ſuch an anſwere to the duke, as ſhalbee conuenient for the preſent coniuncture.

THERE is arriued at Venice, and expected within tenne dayes here, monſieur de Hayes, ſonne of the ſieur de Montargis, with diuers gentlemen, and a competent trayne ſent from the French king. The ambaſſador here reſident reports, his principall buſineſs is, to ſettle his great debts at Aleppo; but I beleeue it not. Others coniecture, hee hath order to paſſe into Tranſiluania; but as farr as I can penetrate, hee is directly ymployed into Perſia, to treat for the ſilke trade, and to doe ſome office in the way of reconciliation; when hee arriues, I ſhall diſcouer him.

I know not whether I ſhall haue any more occaſion to trouble your lordſhip in his maieſties ſeruice, beeing now buſy to ſtudy my way home, without mony or meanes, all wayes beeing too dangerous for my poore wife. Yet I cannot deferre to acknowledge my great obligation to your lordſhip for the fauours, I vnderſtand you haue done vs both, in procuring the renewing of our priuy ſeale, for ſome help to mee for my mourning; for which I will not bee a barren debtor. So I will euer bee

Conſtantinople, $\frac{23}{13}$.
May, 1626.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

VPON the laſt adviſe from Raguſa, of the accident fallen to the Spaniſh gentleman, the ambaſſadors reſident haue thought fitt to diſpatch another meſſinger at our chardge, with freſh orders, to the firſt ſent, how to gouerne themſelues, and for other important reaſons; hauing diſcouered, that the emperors agent hath diſpeeded a poſt to giue warning. And wee haue reſolued, for the full preuention, to follow cloſely the obteyning of a publique act, by the heads of the law; for which purpoſe, I am engaged the next weeke to proſecute our firſt way: and this alſo will coſt mee my part of expence: I know not how to retyre with honor, nor how to proceed without order.

Conſtantinople, 23. May, 1626.

THE meſſinger of the prince of Tranſyluania is departed: what hath beene concluded betweene him and the French ambaſſador, I know not; but I beleeue the letters of the French kyng were only ſhowed him for confirmation, being no authoritye giuen to proceed farther without company. I haue written to the prince to take my leaue, and to excuſe my ſelfe; and if poſſible, to continew his hopes, which were grounded on mee. Except ſome new occaſion, which I expect not, of his maieſties ſeruice, I ſhall not importune your lordſhip any more; but dayly looking for my ſucceſſor, in an ill ſeaſon to travel, and worſe prouided, I hope ſuddenly to returne to the felicitye of his maieſties preſence, and to tender your lordſhip the true deuotions of 1626.

Conſtantinople, 5. June,

Your Lordſhips, et cæt.

To her MAJESTIE the QUEEN of BOHEMIA.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

I SUPPOSE I ſhall trouble your Majeſtie no more in this kind, my reuocation beeing ordered, and my ſucceſſor, as I am aduiſed, on his way, without other warning. Which though it now take mee vnprouided, and at ſome priuate diſadvantage, 1626. advantage, yet I eſteeme it a great bleſſing to bee redeemed from this contemned priſon.

I HAD no comfort nor ioy in this imployment, but my hope to doe your Majeſtie ſeruice, and therein my maſter; but that alſo hath failed; not in mee, hauing neuer receiued one lyne in anſwere of thoſe affayres which I had brought to perfection. And now I will giue your Majeſtie the laſt account, in what ſtate I leaue them. The prince of Tranſiluania hath abated all his propoſitions, and reduced them to twoe, that is 40000 Crownes a moneth, which is a ſumme of ſmall importance, to raiſe an actiue prince with 25000 ſwords vpon the back of the enemy, in reſpect of infinite contributions in other parts. And ſecondly, To bee comprehended in any treaty. I haue urged theſe conditions with all earneſtnes, and force of reaſon. The French king hath, for his part, accepted them, though the rumour of his agreement with Spaine doth breed ſome irreſolution; and hee hath ſent a gentleman hither to conclude with the French, and to expect the pleaſure of his majeſtie from mee. Hee promiſeth within 20 dayes, after aſſurance giuen him by theſe two crownes, to march directly toward Vienna; and, if Mansfelt appeare in thoſe parts, to ioyne with him. All things are prepared, only I can giue no anſwere but delatory, which will no longer paſſe; that I preſume his majeſtie hath giuen his directions to his miniſters in France or Holland, where the ambaſſadors of all other princes might bee aſſiſtant; and ſo I am enforced to leaue all in vncerteynty, to my griefe and ſhame.

Realls of 8.

AND this, and many publique affaires, hath conſumed mee; I haue ſpent myne owne mony freely, and haue no promiſe of allowance, nor other comfort. I know not in what opinion I ſtand with his majeſtie; a miſerable reward of long, faithfull, and dangerous ſeruices. I haue none to rely vpon but your Majeſtie, to whom, I preſumed, in Auguſt laſt, to bee a petitioner, that you would vouchſafe to mention mee to his majeſtie, and to lett mee know myne owne poore eſtate. Your Majeſtie hath had a good oportunity, by the preſence of the duke of Buckingham; and it would haue bene a great conſolation to mee, to haue finiſhed wandrings with aſſurance of fauour, or acceptance; and I will not doubt your Majeſties goodneſs to all men, hath forgotten mee your humble ſeruant.——

Conſtantinople, $\frac{20}{30}$. May,
1626.

The other Parts of this Letter are omitted, they being inſerted in others.

To the Prince of TRANSYLUANIA.

Sereniſſime Prencipe,

YOUR highnes letter by il M^{le}. S^{r}. Bornemiſza, I haue receiued, as an eſpeciall teſtimony of your fauour, beeing a retorne of that meſſenger, by whom there might ſeeme ſome omiſſion in mee, not to haue written to your highneſs. But, as I then knewe nothing of his departure, ſo I am well content, to take no farther knowledge of the preſent negotiation of your ſeruant, who I doubt not will bring you from others, full ſatiſfaction. In the generall buſineſs, I can giue your highneſs no other but generall aſſurance, that his majeſtie doth very gratefully accept the many offers of your affection; and I am moſt aſſured, that your highneſs hath, or ſhall receiue anſwere and content from Chriſtendome, hauing euer in this point dealt ſincerely, that I neuer beleeued that this was a fitt place for the concluſion of ſuch treaties; both in reſpect of the impoſſibility of ſecrecy, and of the jealouſy of thoſe people, who will ſuſpect, and enuy any coniunction of Chriſtian princes.

THEREFORE whatſoeuer your highneſs ſhall doe apart, (though in ſuch affaires, wherein there is common intereſt, particular treaties are not the right way to a good concluſion) I ſhalbee moſt gladd to ſtand by and enioy the fruicts, and to heare that all things are done to your highneſs content, and the publique vtility.

I HOPED that capten Quad, ſo often ſent by your highneſs into Holland, had had ſome order to haue ſeene his majeſtie; and I will not doubt, what hath formerly bene omitted, is now in his laſt imployment ordered: there your highneſs ſhould haue receiued long ſince full aſſurance and reſolution.

I HAUE receiued a warning, that it hath pleaſed his majeſtie to graunt mee my liberty, and to recall mee to his nearer attendance; whereof, as I haue great cauſe in my particular to rejoyce, ſo I dare promiſe your highneſs that I ſhalbee able to doe more ſeruice to this affaire, and to you, by large and true informations uiua uoce; which, though I haue not neglected by writing, yet many things are vnperfect, which diſcourſe and replication wilbee able to cleare and demonſtrate. In September I hope to beginne my journey; in the meane tyme, if I receiue any newe orders (as I expect none) I haue creditt and meanes to fullfill them, whatſoeuer. Aſſoone as I arriue in England, I will aske leaue of his majeſtie to hold a correſpondence with your highneſs, by Venice; which, if you pleaſe to continue and accept, I will not doubt it ſhalbee to ſome good purpoſe, and to your ſatisfaction. Il Mre. Sr. Ballaſhaza doth hold with mee a good intelligence, and the flight of Stefano doth witneſs for him ſo much, that your highneſs will cleare him of all aſperſion: I can only teſtify his ability, and I hope his religion is a ſeale of honeſty. 1626.

I WILL not preiudice Sr. Bornemiſza, by relation of any newes from theſe parts; only offering my ſeruice, I will conclude with prayers to Allmighty God to encreaſe your highneſs felicity.

Conſtantinople, 26. May,
old ſtile, 1626.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

SINCE my diſpatch to your lordſhip of the 20th of Aprill, and the duplicate thereof ſent the 4th of the preſent, which brieflie tooke knowledge of yours of the 11th of February, thoſe from your lordſhip of the 25th of February, and 11th of March, are ſafelie arrived. In anſwere to all which, I will now inlarge myſelfe, according to the commands I haue received from his majeſtie, and as the occaſions offer themſelues.

YOUR lordſhips letters to his majeſtie and the duke of Buckingham, I delivered, and repreſented particularly thoſe addreſſed to mee. His majeſtie was pleaſed to obſerue and call to mind, according to his owne gracious goodnes, with how great wiſedome, faith, and judgement yow had proceeded in both the buſineſſes concerning [a] 127 and the [b] 493922159, and all things concerning his ſervice; and withall to expreſſe a gracious ſence of your meritt, acceptation of your endeavours, and confidence in your perſon, with honor and dexterity to beginne and finiſh matters of the greateſt weight; having never had thought or purpoſe to doe any thing that might ſeeme to caſt any reflection of diſgrace vpon yow, whom he eſteemes ſoe able and faithfull a miniſter. And your deſſigned ſucceſſor dying (to whom not onely his majeſtie, but his royall father alſo, had promiſed the employment when yow were a ſuitor to returne, and could not therefore with honor, recede being ingaged) his majeſtie hath looked exactly into the ſtate of your negotiations and the marchants affaires, and both for his owne ſervice, to ſhew eſtimation of yow, and to ſatisfie the marchants, his majeſtie hath reſolved not to make any new choice as yett of any to ſucced yow, but to continue yow there his ambaſſador for one year longer; and requires yow to diſpoſe of your ſelfe and your affaires, to attend the ſervice accordingly.

[a] Gabor
[b] Spaniſh treaty

HIS majeſties letters, for renovation of the amity with the grand ſignor, and confirmation of the peace with Algier and Tunes, haue beene diſpatched diuers weekes ſince, and ſent unto yow by the marchants; and according to the purpoſe of thoſe, your lordſhip may be pleaſed to preſſe as farre as ſhalbe poſſible the obſervation of that peace, wherein, beſides the benefitt and ſecurity of trade, which your lordſhip finds in danger to be interrupted, his majeſtie expects, in vertue thereof, and of his friendſhipp with the port, a retraite and ſafety in thoſe ports for his fleetes, with accommodation of neceſſaries in their wants, when by foule weather, or to ſupply themſelues they ſhalbe forced, or find it neceſſary to repaire thither. Vpon which ſubiect the Turkiſh meſſenger that came hither the laſt yeare from Algier was treated with, and hope given, that vpon his returne thither, and propounding the matter there, it would be hearkened vnto; ſoe as both thoſe intereſts of his majeſties are to be conſidered in the infraction of that treaty, and ſuch remedies ſought and applied, as may aſſure thoſe ends.

FOR [c] 59 with [d] 127, my late diſpatches have ſufficiently informed your lordſhip of his majeſties deſires and purpoſes, which are conſtant to continue in thoſe waies

[c] treaty
[d] Gabor

1626. therein declared with *224 61 to mooue and doe all that by 39559913994796 ſhalbe agreed on for the ſecurity and ſatisfaction of 130; and, being thus ingaged, neither can or ought 20.47757 or 3337961 9761 63274 or 529: nor hath there beene the leaſt ouerture or intimacion from 207 2747 vnto 21; nor from the 74 7932 70 to 218 71 in 90 concerning 622460 or the proſecution of it. So as the directions to 207 and his proceedings may verie well ſtand ſubiect to interpretation, and noe cauſe appeares for him to boaſt or glorie: his majeſtie notwithſtanding wiſheth, that this forwardnes of the 747932 might be converted into ſomething of vſe for the publicke; and that they would not abſolutely decline all aſſiſtance and encouragement of 130, though his majeſtie cannot ioyne in the 59 being ingaged in another courſe. The preſent vnſetlednes of their affaires and affections ſeemes to make this doubtfull, yett not impoſſible: and peradventure if 89641 59474229 by ſome 52924674 of 127 did giue occaſion to 207 to repreſent the ſame, it would take beſt ſucceſſe.

TOUCHING the †4939242 59, as yow haue already received his majeſties approbation and pleaſure for 99994292 the ſame; ſoe, ſeeing your laſt repreſents the worke ready to be proceeded in by 3955991 3994796 and 39694755 and 896 the 29464657961 329479 his majeſtie is aſwell pleaſed that the managing of that affaire is fallen into 89641 23974, as that in 536674 of 7897937 896 139936447 with 214 for 89641 9946299, as the neceſſity ſhall require, wherein his majeſtie relies vpon your diſcretion and moderation.

THE ſlow proceeding of the parlament, to ſupplie his majeſtie, hath ſuſpended his majeſties deſſignes: the army of the king of Denmarke, with thoſe vnder the duke of Brunſwick, and count Mansfelt, are, wee heare, in good ſtate; but noe wonders haue beene wrought on our ſide: the worſt was, that Mansfelt, attempting the paſſage of Deſſaw, which he was in a fair waie to carrie, and the ennemy coming in the meane time with farre greater forces, he was ſoe overlaid with numbers, and his horſe running awaie without ſtriking one blow, that he was forced to make a retraite with his foote; wherein he loſt one whole regiment, and the reſt ſaved themſelves in companies. Att that time he had with him but the third part of his army, which were about 5 or 6000 men, the reſt being in garriſon; which, it was expected, he would draw forth preſently, and attempt ſomething for revenge. Mr. Dickenſon is going towards the king of Denmarke, with inſtructions to propound ſomething concerning the diſpoſing of the armies, and oppoſing of the ennemy. Wee expect to heare daily from Germany, and the Low Countries, what the deſignes and motions wilbe. The land-officers and captaines, borrowed from the Low Countries the laſt yeare to goe in the fleete, are now returning. His

The above is decypher'd as follows:

* His allies to mooue and doe all that by common conſent ſhalbe agreed on for the ſecurity and ſatisfaction of the prince of Tranſilvania; and, being thus ingaged, neither can or ought the kyng ſeeke, or accept new waies or treaties: nor hath there beene the leaſt ouerture or intimacion from the French ambaſſador here, vnto his majeſtie; nor from the French miniſters to his majeſties ambaſſadors in France, concerning this league, or the proſecution of it: Soe as the directions to the French ambaſſador, and his proceedings, may verie well ſtand ſubiect to interpretation, and noe cauſe appeares for him to boaſt or glorie: his majeſtie notwithſtanding wiſheth, that this forwardnes of the French might be converted into ſomething of vſe for the publicke; and that they would not abſolutely decline all aſſiſtance and encouragement of the prince of Tranſyluania, though his majeſtie connot ioyne in the treaty, being ingaged in another courſe. The preſent vnſetlednes of their affaires and affections ſeemes to make this doubtfull, yet not impoſſible; and peradventure, if your lordſhip, by ſome miniſter of Gabor, did giue occaſion to the French ambaſſador to repreſent the ſame, it would take beſt ſucceſſe.

† Spaniſh treaty, as yow haue already received his majeſties approbation and pleaſure for oppoſing the ſame; ſoe ſeeing your laſt repreſents the worke ready to be proceeded in by common conſent and counſell, and you the inſtrument choſen, his majeſtie is aſwell pleaſed that the managing of that affaire is fallen into your hands, as that in matter of expence you concurre with the ambaſſadors reſident for your portion, as the neceſſity ſhall require, wherein his majeſtie relies vpon your diſcretion and moderation.

majeſtie hath now a faire fleete of 40 ſayle, in readines to goe to ſea; with which the States are alſo to ioyne a proportion. I pray your lordſhip to preſent my ſervice to your noble ladie, and hold mee in your eſtimation,

Whitehall, 29th May, 1626.

Your Lordſhips aſſured friend to ſerue you,

E. CONWAY.

To GEORGE, Duke of Sbaraſs, Caſtellan of Cracouia.

Illuſtriſſime et Excellentiſſime Signiore,

IT is the benignity of your excellency, and a ſigne of true greatneſs, to accept and eſteeme of little offices, ſuch as I haue beene able to doe, either in the ſeruice of his majeſtie the king of Poland, or your lordſhip, ſo courteouſly and gratefully expreſſed in your twoe letters of February and Aprill, receiued almoſt together; which addeth to many publique obligations, a particular deſyre, to retorne your excellency ſome fruict of my affection.

WHEN I well conſidered the ſincerity of your firſt letter, wherein you profeſſe (and I beleeue) that his majeſtie of Poland hath vſed all iuſt meanes, to maynteyne the peace lately contracted with this empire; and, on the other part, the infidelity of the Tartars, which is imputed to theſe miniſters, I thought there was no better way to bee able to write your lordſhip ſome truth, then in the confidence of my friendſhipp with the Chimacam, to goe directly to him, and to ſhowe your owne writing, and iuſt complaynts; and to preſs him to a conſideration, as well of his maſters and his owne eſtate, as of yours, that all the burthen and blame would finally light vpon him, it beeing the vſuall way of great princes, to diſcharge their failings and errors vpon their miniſters. Your excellency will not beleeue how much this admonition moued him, and I will deliuer his anſwere in his owne words. In all lawes and religions, there is nothing more odious then to be eſteemed a lyar; becauſe lawe and religion preſuppoſe truth, eſpecially in great miniſters, vpon whoſe faith much of the publique quiett depends; but moſt eſpecially at this tyme, our holy Ramazan ſeperated to deuotion, it were moſt abominable to God to ſweare a lye: by whom I ſweare, and by the life of the king, all whoſe benefitts to mee may bee poiſon in my heart, if euer either hee or I gaue any order or intimation to the Tartar Han to enter Poland, or to doe any act contrary to the peace: which if I had done, I might iuſtify, ſeeing the Coſſacks the laſt yeare did make the firſt breach, and giue the occaſion. To witneſs this aſſertion, hee called the Reitzkatab, who made no ſcruple, iurare in uerba magiſtri; only hee confeſſed there were commands written to Mehemet Gheray, by intelligence and conſent of his excellency the generall, to enter the cuntry of the Coſſacks on both ſides, to reduce them to obedience, with reſtriction of any dammage to bee done to thoſe comprehended in the peace; and that whatſoeuer the Tartar Han had done more, was, and ſhould bee diſauowed, as beyond his commiſſion. Many other matters hee repeated, as the remoue of Cantemir, and the death of Hagi Key, only to auoyd any occaſion of their parts; and in concluſion, all his diſcourſe ended to an expreſſion of deſire to maynteyne a good and perfect peace. Lett your excellency iudge what I could reply to ſuch proteſtations, and therefore I asked him what hee was willing I ſhould write; and hee anſwered, that they had no intention but to keepe the laſt treaty exactly; and, that if, on your part, as you had begunne, the Coſſacks ſhould bee reſtreyned, they would take abſolute order with the Tartars, who had no other pretence of quarrell, but a clayme of a certeyne penſion, vſually giuen them; which if his majeſtie of Poland would eſtabliſh, there ſhould neuer be more occaſion of theſe mutuall laments: that it were a diſhonor to the grand ſignor to ſeeke and entreate the comming of an ambaſſador to reſettle thoſe late diſorders; but that, if you pleaſed to ſend, hee ſhould bee receiued with all manner of rights, and reſpects. To this I replyed, that I doubted ſome ill example, of the vſage and detention of others, would make you wary and difficult, to engage any perſon of quality; to which hee gaue all ſuch aſſurance of good and free acceptation, as words could expreſs. Vpon this diſcourſe, I leaue the iudgement to your excellencyes owne wiſedome, not beeing able to reſolue, and the buſineſs too dangerous, to giue any cenſure that may turne to your preiudice. But ſeeing you will expect ſome opinion, I will not refuſe to venture theſe conſiderations, that may ſerue you as further light: I know it is newly reported, that the Tartars againe are entred your cuntry; for whom, as I hope you are provided, ſo I clearly beleeue they had no

newe

1626. newe order, and that the firſt proceeded from Diach Mehemet; who while hee abuſed ſome here, with vaine treaties of a newe peace, did exceed his commiſſion, hoping to pleaſe thoſe humours, which hee knewe would bee gladd of any proſperous affront done to you; which not ſucceeding, they can eaſily diſauowe.

THEREFORE, as it is cleare, that your borders can neuer liue in ſecurity, and that the miſeries are extreame and full of compaſſion, to ſee ſo many poore Chriſtian ſoules daily ſold here to damnation; while this looſe warre made by the Coſſacks and Tartars doth continue, which brings neither honor nor benefitt to either ſtate, but infinite ruyne to the poore ſubiects: ſo, I think, you can attend no better counſaile then to conniue at all that is paſt, and endeauour by all meanes to reſtreyne theſe mutuall incurſions; which muſt on your parts be begunne, becauſe the noiſe of the Coſſacks ſtrikes the imperiall citty, and wilbee apt to occaſion a greater breach: to effect this, whether by a ſharp reuenge on the Tartars, or by a newe conuention and treaty, I referre to your owne wiſedomes. Wherein alſo, when you haue all done, the aſſurance and repoſe muſt be in your ſelues, to keepe your border in readines, and not to truſt too much a reconciled enemy. Hoc igitur ſi quid aliud, qui rempublicam regunt, ſollicitè obſeruandum meminerint; ut quos animos efferant, qui ingratiam, poſitis inimicitijs redeunt, aut nouam amicitiam ineunt, ne ignorant, quando temporibus cedentes, quando uictis animis, pacis conditiones amplectantur, ut ab illis quidem, ſed temporum ſuorum inſidiatoribus, ſemper ſibi caueant. Here hath lately bene a meſſenger from the Tartar Han, who, whether hee carried back reprehenſion, or animation, I cannot penetrate; but muſt coniecture from effects, that he is retorned vpon a gally with a veſt and ſword, and demonſtration of fauour; what that doth ſignify, is not in mee to iudge. At this tyme I haue good reaſon to beleeue, that this State really doth deſyre, and will endeauor to keepe a good peace, hauing heard ſo many of the principall miniſters reproach and blame the preſent occaſion, and condemne all the inſtruments thereof as traytors and diſturbers of the publique peace; but when other coniunctures and aſpects ſhall retorne, I will not wiſh you to beleeue in the ſame effects.

THUS I haue ventured my opinion with your excellency, in the ſincerity of my heart, to the vtility of Chriſtendome, as my laſt act vpon this ſtage; hauing receiued intimation of his majeſties grace, who hath pleaſed to giue mee my liberty, and to recall mee to the felicity of his preſence; whereof, as I haue greate cauſe, in my particular, to reioyce, ſo the generall will find no want of my weakneſs. I hope to beginne my journey in September; in the meane tyme, if any occaſion bee preſented of the publique, or your lordſhips ſeruice, I will neither omitt here what I am able, nor to giue your lordſhip requiſite aduice: and in all other places, where God ſhall diſpoſe mee, I will embrace, as an honor, that correſpondence and frendſhipp, you haue pleaſed to offer mee. Coſi, &c.

Conſtantinople, 31. May,
old ſtile, 1626.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE agreement of peace, betweene France and Spayne in theſe parts, is held for certeyne; and the late commiſſions ſent to the marquis di Couers from the French king his maſter, which recall him homeward from the Valtelina, confirme the truth of this report. The world did long conceaue a better opinion of France, then by this reconſiling itſelfe with Spayne it can juſtly claime by meritt; and now doth not ſpare freely to cenſure that nation, ill affected to the publique good, which, in ſuch a conjuncture, would become frends with the common enemy.

THE ill blood, which hath alwayes beene betwixt this republique and Spayne, is now inflamed on either ſyde as much as euer; and were the ſtrength of thoſe ſeignori equall to their coller, they would quickely ſeeke their owne reuenge, without requiring the aſſiſtance of France, to ſecond their encounters. This friendſhip, betweene the two crownes of France and Spayne, doth cauſe all broyles in Italy to ceaſe, (although ſtill ſuſpition keepes a guard in each ſtate) from France, from whence ſupplyes were expected, fayling to aſſiſt Venice and Sauoy, muſt needs put vp their ſwords; and now the Spanyards haue leaſure to breathe, and ſafely to retyre their forces out of Italy, both Holland and England may expect to heare of them ſhortly, at both which they haue already threatened to take their ayme.

THE Valtelina remaynes yet vndiſpoſed of, and at this preſent in the hands of the French, and Venetians; and although the French be preparing ſhortly for to retrayte homeward, yet the Venetians do purpoſe to keepe their ground, and not to recall their forces from thence, vppon thoſe conditions which haue beene propoſed.

I HAUE receaued your lordſhips letter of the 22. of Aprill, which is a duplicate of what I receaued before, and already anſwered; the incloſed I will diſtribute, according vnto direction. I gaue your lordſhip notice long ſince, of Sir Dudly Carletons departure from the Haghe, and of the election of Sir Robert Kyllegrew in his place; of whoſe arriuall, I do not yet heare any thing. Sir Dudly Carleton remaynes yet in France, where he hath beene extraordinary ambaſſador, and is now very ſhortly to returne for England. My letter, which gaue your lordſhip notice long ſince of this newſe, I perceaue by this your letter, did miſcarry; ſince you complayne for want of intelligence of this particular.

THUS praying for your lordſhips proſperity and increaſe of honor, I humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and reſt

Venice, June, 1.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble, and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip was of the 10. of this preſent; ſince when the emperor hath written vnto the pope, to acquaint him with a diet which he doth purpoſe ſhortly to hold, deſyring him to ſend for his aſſiſtant the cardinal Lodouiſio, being a man of a great ſpirit and ſingular abilityes, but eſpecially being a protector of the catholique league in Germany againſt the proteſtants; of which in this dyet they were principally to treat. The pope, who had alwayes determined to honor his nephew with that employment, after his returne from Spayne, is much offended that the emperor ſhould ſollicit for any other, then for whom he had purpoſed ſhould ſubſtitute for him. The emperor did purpoſely preuent the popes choyſe by this demand, well knowing the pope not to haue the ſame confidence in the cardinall Lodouiſio, which he hath in his nephew; and by this meanes hopeth to conceall from the pope the greateſt part of what ſhall paſſe in the dyet, hauing already the hart and affections of whom he hath recommended to this office.

THE pope doth expreſſe great loue and affection towards our Engliſh nation of late, and hath, inſteed of cardinall Mellino, made his owne brother, the cardinall Onofrio, vice-protector of the Engliſh, in the abſence of his nephew.

THESE ſigniori do ſhortly expect an extraordinary ambaſſador from France, to make good, or at leaſt to giue a good coulour to the late proceedings of the French king; but here we vnderſtand, that he, which was nominated in France for this embaſſy, refuſeth to goe; proteſting vnto that king, that he cannot without ſhame ſhew his face among theſe ſigniori, whome they haue ſo lately cooſened and abuſed.

IT is yet thought, that this republique will not yeald the Valtelina vppon any conditions; and although the peace be generally beleeued, yet theſe ſigniori ſeeme ſtill to ſuſpect it, by giuing new commiſſions vnto count Leueſtaigne a ſeruant of theirs, to leauy 4000 men with all poſſible ſpeed; and certainely, were they aſſured of peace, they would not draw vppon themſelfes this needeleſſe expence.

MY lady Wake remembers hir beſt loue and ſeruice vnto your lordſhip, and your noble lady; and doth couet nothing with more ambition, then to receaue the honor of your commands, during hir ſtay in theſe parts. Thus humbly crauing leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, I reſt

Venice, June, 22.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

J. WILKINSON.

YOUR lordſhips letter of the 18. of May, I haue receaued ſince the writing of this; for which I returne your lordſhip moſt harty thankes, &c.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

THE Spanyards do report abroad, and publiſh by writing, that the pope ſhall haue the charge and honor of effectuating an agreement from the Valtelina; and that he ſhall demoliſh thoſe forts which haue lately beene built there, at the great expence of the French and Venetians, giueing poſſeſſion of that place vnto the 1626. Griſons, but in ſuch a manner, as that the catholiques of the Valtelina ſhall be ſecured from their oppreſſions. After the execution of this deſigne, the popes forces, which at this preſent are lodged in the ſtate of Milan, ſhall remoue from thence, and march towards Germany, to be employed, as it is thought, againſt the proteſtants there; and vppon that condition and no other, the Spanyards do afford him the honor of being arbitrator.

VPPON the 19. of this preſent, the count d'Oprat, ordinary ambaſſador for Spayne arriued in Rome; and in the agreement for the Valtelina, according to the writings which he brought with him from Spayne, there is not any mention, ne verbum quidem, of Venice or Sauoy, as if that buſineſſe did not any way concerne either of thoſe ſtates, onely the pope is fauoured by being put in the margine; and they haue purpoſely included him, to purchaſe his fauor by this meanes in their owne occaſions.

ALTHOUGH the pope and Spanyards do publiſh the peace of Italy for certayne, yet there are many probabilityes to the contrary; and howſoeuer the French do dayly part homeward from the forts in the Valtelina, yet the Venetians ſtill keepe ſure poſſeſſion, and do not purpoſe to yeald it without blowes, as they got it.

THIS being all the preſent affords, worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I here humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your lordſhips hands, and euer reſt

Venice, June 30.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

1625.
30 March
16 Aprill
5 May.
25 May.
13 June.
30 June.
15 July.
28 July.
12 Aug.
26 Aug.
9 Sept.
24 Sept.
4 Nou.
21 Nou.
3 Dec.
18 Dec.
1 Jan.
15 Jan.
11 Feb.
25 Feb.
11 March
1626.
25 March
6 May.
8 May.
20 May.

I HUMBLY beſeech your lordſhip to pardon an afflicted heart, drowned in the conſideration of my owne vnworthineſs, if I ſhall ſeeme tranſported either beyond my limitts, or the due reſpects wherein I deſire to conteyne my actions. I cannot but bee ſenſible of my owne diſgrace, nor out of feare that my endeauours haue bene vnaccepted, nor free from confuſion, how I ought to proceed in two dangers, to neglect his majeſties ſeruice, or to entangle myſelfe therein, without inſtruction and authority. Giue mee leaue to number in the margin, the dates of my letters ſince his majeſties happy reigne, beſides a continued courſe in the former yeares, and their duplicats, hoping to obteyne ſome directions in two important affaires; the offers of the prince of Tranſiluania, and the treaty of Spaine: in both which I haue laboured, and ſpent mony, guided only by the conſcience of myne owne affections; wherein, if I haue erred, the leaſt admonition would haue ſilenced mee for euer. To all which I neuer receiued any anſwere, nor but one at all from your lordſhip, of November, now 19 moneths paſt: which, after many conſiderations of my duty, made mee reſolue to withdrawe my hand, and to collect an implicit prohibition. Neither had I now preſumed to haue interrupted your lordſhip, if neceſſity had not enforced mee: not to mention myne owne poore creditt, vpheld here againſt the malignity of enuy, which hath concluded for mee, and not ſpared to ſend it as farre as Alba Julia, that I had none with his majeſtie, neither this imployment, nor any thing that can moue from hence, was eſteemed in England, though I will euer aſſume, what it is, to haue created, and vpheld it. So that the reuenge of Apollo upon Caſſandra may bee applyed to mee; ut vera ſemper prædiceret, nemine auſcultante, nemine credente. But beeing here arriued an extraordinary ambaſſador from Gabor, vpon important buſineſs, as hee pretends, with the approbation of his majeſtie, vrging mee to bee an actor therein; I haue found a rock on each ſide, and no other ſafety then to fly to his majeſties grace, rather to erre in zeale, then obſtinacy.

THE foundation of his diſcourſe is grounded vpon the encloſed letter of credit, intimating both his majeſties will, and command vnto mee; the ſubſtance is a relation of a league concluded and ſworne at the Haghe, whereof his majeſtie is the head, comprehending the kings of Denmark and Sueueland, the ſtate of Venice, the elector of Brandenburgh, the prince of Tranſiluania, and the Vnited Prouinces, for the defence of Germany, and the recouery of the Palatinate; whereof hee hath in charge to giue account to this empire, vpon whom his maſter doth depend; and by the aſſiſtance of the ambaſſadors, to procure a letter of licence and ratification of his colleaguation; a command to the baſſa of Buda, to riſe with the frontire army, to threaten the emperour, and to defend his countryes, in his abſence; to hinder the acceptation of the peace lately made at Caniſia, not yet ſigned; and to breake off all treaty with Spaine. Laſtly, to nouriſh the Tartars againſt the king of Poland, that hee may neither ayd the emperour, inuade Tranſiluania, nor diuert the king of Sueueland. Hee profeſſeth, that the prince, by the end of Auguſt, will meete the king of Sueueland with 20000 good ſwords, in Sileſia, and make a ſharp warre vpon the dominions of the emperour and the duke of Bauare, and ſo proceed as God ſhall enable and proſper them. 1626.

LASTLY, Hee required in his maieſties name, my aſſiſtance in theſe fower propoſitions with all expedition, beeing only tenne dayes allowed for the negotiation, confident that I had receiued ſuch order.

YOUR lordſhip will eaſily diſcerne the ſtreight wherein I found my ſelfe, how to giue any anſwere: to ſay playnly, I had yet obteyned no directions, might haue diſcouraged him, and perhapps haue giuen cauſe of diſtruſt to his maſter, to take vpon mee to knowe more then I did, or to runne blyndly into action of this nature without authority, and to truſt to reports before I ſaw his maieſties hand for my warrant, eſpecially in thoſe two points of raiſing the Turks vpon the emperour on the one ſide, and the Tartars vpon Poland on the other, ſo contrary to my ſtanding inſtructions, had bene great indiſcretion, and high preſumption. Therefore I firſt asked him, if the prince had receiued any letter from his maieſtie? which hee affirmed, and was thereby referred to mee to concurre with him in all things; and that his maieſtie to that purpoſe had written mee. This alſo I would not deny: but aſſuming a generall knowledge of his maieſties pleaſure, promiſed him I would conferre his propoſitions, with my orders, and performe whatſoeuer was requiſite; and ſo, auoyding any particular, deferred him, vntill hee had begunne his buſineſs with the vizier; and ſo gaue him ſuch content as I was able: but withall, I deſired him to giue mee his propoſitions in writing, for my better information, and warrant in my proceedings.

THE next day hee freely ſent mee his inſtructions, ſo farr forth as concerned the ambaſſadors reſident, and the generall buſineſs; of which I tooke copye; which beeing long, I ſhall not bee able to putt them into cyphar; the ſubſtance is, to moue vs to aſſiſt in theſe demands, only one difference, to procure an actuall breach, and inuaſion by the baſſa of Buda; to perſwade vs by many reaſons, to vrdge at leaſt the interruption of both pretended peaces; to moue our princes to ſend a ſollemne ambaſſage hither, to confirme the grand ſignor againſt the houſe of Auſtria, which I thinke is ſuperfluous; and to ſollicitt the good performance of the mony promiſed. By the next poſt I will ſend, for my diſcharge, the whole, as I receiued it.

IN this darkneſs, not knowing which way to preſerue myne owne creditt, and the buſineſs entire, and conſidering that the neceſſity and change of affaires might iuſtly change his maieſties councells, and conſequently my inſtructions, though I had not receiued any intimation, I conſulted with the Venice bailo, and opened to him my extremity, that I knew not how to proceed with ſafety. Firſt, hee ſhewed mee a letter from the ſenate, ſignifyeing to him, that his maieſtie had told their ambaſſador in England, that hee had taken to conſideration the offers of Gabor, and giuen mee order to aſſiſt and ſerue him, eſpecially mentioning the countenance of the baſſa of Buda; and that from Sir Iſaack Waake, their reſident in Sauoy, had the like information, with many other particulars. This brought mee into greater confuſion, beeing a kind of encouragement, and no refuge left for mee to ſtand ſtill, nor any ſufficient warrant to vndertake. By his aduiſe wee concluded, that any retraict in mee might much preiudice his maieſties ſeruice, and that I might ſafely proceed ſo farr as I had formerly done, to procure his licence, and to oppoſe the peaces. In the raiſing of the baſſa, wee reſolued to diſcounſell him from mouing an actuall and originall breach on this ſyde, becauſe wee knewe the preſent ſtate was vnfitt, and would not approue it, and it might hinder all the other propoſitions, and make them ſuſpected; but rather to vſe art and dexterity, and to conuert theſe commands to the defenſiue, and to occaſion; which would aſwell ſerue the prince, hauing the baſſa of Buda ready, and of the ſame councell; and ſo I alſo, without ſcandall, or vſing his maieſties name, might by way of aduice, for the ſecurity of Gabor, procure and aſſiſt in the effect, to better purpoſe.

IN the laſt, not to mention it att all, knowing that the Polacks would beginne with the Tartars, and haue their hands full of that offence to this ſtate.

THUS counſelled, I haue taken vpon mee, to giue all good aſſurance to the prince of Tranſiluania of his maieſties fauour and countenance; and hope ſo to 1626. diſpoſe the reſt, that hee ſhall neither diſcouer my wants, nor engage his majeſties name further then I haue generall warrant.

IT remaynes, that I acquaint your lordſhip what is done, and what is like to bee the ſucceſs. The Tranſiluanian ambaſſador hath agreed to follow our directions in the forme of the commands, and hauing had his audience, and deliuered the ſubſtance of his meſſage, hee hath aduiſed mee, that the vizier hath ſeemed to accept his propoſitions, as they were moderated, without much difficulty, and required to haue them in writing, with his reaſons annexed. Whereupon hee promiſeth to make petition to the grand ſignor: howe much wilbee obteyned is doubtfull, but I am confident to procure ſufficient, to giue the prince liberty, countenance, and ſatisfaction

THE new league mentioned, and the great forces ſodainly rayſed, beeing without my horizon, I will only hope much is true, and that the prince will not abuſe himſelfe: within myne owne region here, of Turky, I will preſume to make ſome judgment, that Gabor is moſt zealous and vehement to enter into this warre, beeing wholly diſcouered to the emperour, and obnoxious to the firſt reuenge: hee hath conuerted the baſſa of Buda from the imperiall faction, and made him his owne; ſo that any eaſy command of licence, now they concurr in affection, will ſerue to begett a quarrell, without much inſtigation from hence; ſo that I am reſolued, by the engagement, that ſomwhat is done to encourage him, and that hee will take armes; which God proſper, for the generall peace of Chriſtendome, and the humbling of all thoſe that ambitiouſly diſturbe it.

BEFORE the departure of the poſt, I doubt wee ſhall collect no certeynty of the grand ſignors anſwere; which if it preuent, I will add it to your lordſhips further trouble. And am now in hope that my diſcharge ſhall ſodainly bring hither an abler miniſter, better enſtructed and graced, and eaſe to my juſt griefe, that I haue ſerued, till I was forgotten; the conſcience of my actions will bring mee home, and one gratious looke of his majeſtie reuiue mee, that haue no comfort of my life, but in the meditation of his benignity. Your lordſhip, I am confident, will make the beſt conſtruction both of my will and induſtry to haue done him true ſeruice; vnder whoſe fauour I will ſhelter, as Conſtantinople, 30. June,

old ſtile. 1626.

Your lordſhips humble and honeſt ſeruant.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THOUGH the preſent occaſion may ſeeme impertinent to trouble his majeſtie, yet, in reſpect of ſome conſequences, I would not omitt the opportunity to aduiſe the ſtrange occurrents and mutations in this citty. On monday the third of this moneth, the Spahees aſſembled in the Hippodrome, diſcontent with the gouernment of the old chimacham, who hath the authority of the great vizier, in his abſence at the warr, and in great fury ranne to the houſe of the mufti, and demanded of him to pronounce a ſentence of death againſt him, and that hee would riſe, and enforme the grand ſignor of their will; which, if hee refuſed, they threatened a generall reuolt, and to doe their owne juſtice. There was no remedy, the emperour, beeing enformed, was pleaſed inſtantly to diſplace him, and to giue the office to the capten baſſa, and his to the maſter of the rolls; hoping thus to quiett all matters. But this gaue them no ſatisfaction; they demand in greater fury, his life. The poore old man was retired into the grand ſignors protection, who vſed all meanes to appeaſe them, offering to baniſh or confine him; but nothing would content and ſeperate them, vntill hee did deliuer him vpp; who the next day was ſtrangled, and throwne into the ſtreetes, where the Barbarians vented their ſpleene vpon his dead body, cutting off eares and noſe, and carrying them in triumph to their fellowes. Preſently they demand the life of ſome others, principally of Moratt Chiaus the cuſtomer, odious to all men; whom, when they could not find, they ſacked his houſe. To day they beginne to bee quiett, vpon promiſe, that if hee can bee found, hee ſhalbee rendered to them, and others to bee brought to juſtice; but wee all feare, that this peſtilence and deſtruction of the citty will eſcape by force of his mony, hauing 3 tymes bene in the like danger.

THIS great miniſter was 96 yeares old, had bene 45 yeares vizier of the bench; ſerued 5 emperours, once great vizier, and thrice chimacham: the moſt able, and only wiſe man in this ſtate: the great ſeruices hee had done, euen to the preſeruation of the empire, nor any other reſpect, could protect him from this rage. The occaſion taken now againſt him was, that hee did conceale the ill eſtate of the army in Babilon, flattering the grand ſignor while their fellowes periſhed; and certeyne letters written in bloud, as from the camp, produced to accuſe him; which ſince, as is reported, are diſcouered to bee written in this towne. 1626.

SINCE my reſidence here, hee was my only frend and refuge, the chiefe ſupport and protector of the prince of Tranſiluania, and a conſtant enemy of the houſe of Auſtria, by whom I haue euer preuailed in all my occaſions.

HIS ſodayne death vpon the inſtant of the diſpatch of the ambaſſador, and thoſe buſineſs which I mentioned by my letters of the 30th June to his majeſtie, I feare will cauſe ſome great delay, if not alteration. The preſent chimacham hauing bene the head of the faction that fauoured the Spaniſh peace, wee are all to beginn againe; and, by reaſon of my oppoſition, there is yet ſome diſtruſt betweene him and mee; but I haue a good counterpoiſe, the new capten baſſa, of great authority; and I make no doubt but to recouer and gett good meanes of generall reconciliation; wherein I will omitt nothing that may concerne his majeſties ſeruice. By the next ordinary I ſhalbee able fully to enforme, or at leaſt to iudge, how the demands of Gabor wilbee now accepted, of whom I make no queſtion that a litle liberty will ſerue, and that ſome things refined, which were treated with the laſt miniſter, there wilbee ſufficient obteyned.

AGAINST the Spaniſh treaty I hope ſo much is done, as wilbee irrecouerable for this yeare.

Conſtantinople 5. July, 1626.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE French extraordinary ambaſſador hath marched very ſlowly from Paris, being not yet arriued here, where he hath beene expected many dayes ſince. Theſe ſigniori haue prouided him a fayre pallace, which they haue richly furniſhed, purpoſing to defray his charges, and to receaue him with a great dele of pomp; ſo that in outward ceremonyes they will not not be wanting to expreſſe their loue and affection towards the crowne of France, howeuer their harts ſtand affected towards that nation, for this diſhonorable peace they haue made with Spayne. This ambaſſador will fynd a hard taske, to giue ſatisfaction to this republique, for ſo great an error, and therfore miſtruſting ſo much, before his departure out of France, did refuſe the honor of this employment hither; and onely force of his maſters command, not any ambition of his owne, hath put him forward in his journy.

FROM Rome I vnderſtand, that the pope hath had particuler notice of the affaires of England, of him, which, by his order, did carry the giubely to the queene; and after information of his majeſties behauiour towards the queene and catholiques, doth much commend the goodneſs of his majeſties diſpoſition, of which the jeſuits had before, diuers tymes, both falſely and malitiouſly informed him. The jeſuits ceaſe not ſtill being ſpightfully bent towards the kingdome of England, to inuent and publiſhe any vntruth whatſoeuer, to make our ſtation odious, and do dayly voice abroad, that the catholiques in England are both heauily taxed, and bloudily perſecuted by his majeſtie.

THE pope, hauing now diſcouered their malice, is not ſo apt to beleeue them as he was heretofore; which in tyme will make them leſs clamorous, they fynding their reports to gayne no credit.

THAT buſineſſe which your lordſhip recommended vnto my lord ambaſſador, concerning the election of one to be a biſhop, hath by him beene erneſtly followed, and he hath procured the duke of Sauoyes letters for that party whom your lordſhip deſyred; whereof, by order from him, I haue ſent you a coppy of the dukes letter which he ſent to his ſonne, the cardinall of Sauoye, in that mans behalfe.

YOUR lordſhips packett of the 21 of May is ſafely arriued, and the incloſed diſpoſed of according to direction; your lordſhip neede not feare hereafter the miſcarrying of any of your letters which goe for England vnder my couer, ſince I haue both changed my ſeale and hand; but what hath beene loſt before, I cannot 1626. recouer their dates; it being almoſt a quarter of a yeare after they did miſcarry, that I was informed of the loſſe of any of my letters.

I AM ſorry I ſhall ſo ſodainly be depriued of the honor of ſeruing your lordſhip in theſe parts, your letter making mention of a reuocation for England, which you ſhortly expect; yet, if my ſeruice abroad might be of any vſe vnto your lordſhip after you are ſettled at home, I ſhall be both ready and willing to do whatſoeuer ſhall ly within the compaſſe of my ſmall power, and in the meane tyme I will endeavor to approue my ſelfe to be Venice, July, 13.

ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the KING.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

THE comfort of your Majeſties gratious acceptance of my endeauours, and the honor to receiue your roiall directions ſo plentifully deliuered by my lord Conwey, aſſured and ſealed to mee by the manifold effects of your majeſties bounty, hath raiſed mee from that deſpaire, wherein the contemplation of myne owne vnworthineſs had deiected mee. Poore, and vnfurniſhed with other ſacrifices, I humbly beſeech your Majeſtie to accept the vowes, deuotions, and thankfullneſs of a loyall heart, which beeing filled, and ouerflowing with the ſenſe of your benignity, hath left no faculty of expreſſion, but to powre itſelſe out in prayers to Allmighty God, to multiply vpon your Majeſtie the choiceſt of his treaſures and bleſſings. Your Majeſtie will find, by the preſent retorne of my ſeruice, how opportunely your commands arriued to perfect that work, wherein I long and fearefully laboured: not that I valued my ſelfe, or was inconfident of your Majeſties abundant goodneſs, to enterprett the actions of your miniſters by their intention; but that where I had no light, I knew I might erre, and doe diſſeruice in either extreame, too litle or too much. Now, hauing aſſurance added to my zeale, I doubt not, but your Majeſtie ſhall ſee the effects and fruicts, which are allready well aduanced, if there bee any truth on this ſide the Danube. I will not preſume to enforce any reaſons for the proſecution of this diuerſion, your Majeſties wiſedome is your owne ſunne; but hauing giuen ample account to my lord Conwey, of what is now here in action, I haue neceſſarily fallen vpon ſome diſcourſes, which my experience of theſe parts, and the manner of proceeding in this buſineſs, hath aſſured mee wilbee ſome light to your Majeſties deſſignes, which are guided with ſo excellent reſpects of chriſtianity. I will ſtrictly keepe within the cautions giuen mee, and I hope ſhall not haue cauſe often to trouble your Majeſtie in this theame, but only to hearken after the ſucceſs, for the honor of your Majeſtie, and the generall good of all the louers of peace; whoſe fruicts, which are the bleſſings of the earth, and whoſe perfection and complement in heauen, that they may add to your Majeſties crownes two other, the rewards of your owne virtues and piety, ſhall bee the conſtant prayers of 1626.

Conſtantinople, 16. July,

Your Majeſties moſt humble ſeruant and loyall ſubject.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THOUGH I cannot recall, I willingly recant in whatſoeuer my feruency hath exceeded; and I know your lordſhip doth find it an honeſt fault to be warme in his majeſties ſeruice, and ſenſible of myne owne honor. I confeſſe I did deſpaire both in the negotiation, and in myſelfe. I expected, ſo late, no anſwere; which beeing ſupplyed mee by your lordſhip ſo amply, and ſo opportunely, it hath come to reſtore creditt to mee, and perfection to your buſineſs, which I haue acknowledged to his majeſtie with humble and deuout thanks for his fauour and bounty, plentifully ſignified by your honors letters; wherein I find myne owne obligation to your lordſhip to bee ſuch, as I willingly render myſelfe for euer, to bee your debtor and faithfull ſeruant.

The originall of your lordſhips letter of Nouember 1625 neuer arriued, nor any attall, though theſe intimate ſome others, but one in that moneth a yeare before; ſo that I was not certeyne whether you had any of myne, or had receiued the ciphar, fearing many things, and aſſured in nothing. If theſe were recommended to Paris, they might fall vnder envious couers, as well as into enemyes hands, both in the end alike.

Your lordſhip hauing giuen mee ſo copious ſubject, I preſume you will alſo graunt me leaue to diſcharge myne owne thoughts, and to cleare ſome points, that there may bee now a perfect vnderſtanding in this affaire, as well of things paſt, as the preſent eſtate thereof; wherein, to ſpeake ingenuouſly, I durſt neuer fully diſcouer myſelfe in that coldneſs I found from England, which did freeze all but my affections to his majeſtys ſeruice. It ſhalbee needleſs to looke too farr back, laying this for a ground, that it did euer appeare to mee, by many circumſtances, as well as profeſſions, that the prince of Tranſiluania did really ſeeke to ſtrengthen and honor himſelfe by an admittance into a proteſtant league of Germany, thereby to bee enabled to recouer the kingdome of Hungarie from the emperour, as his portion; the reuerſion whereof hee yet holds to bee his right, notwithſtanding the new election of the young archduke; becauſe, by the laſt conuention of peace, wherein hee yielded a kind of poſſeſſion, it was agreed there ſhould bee practiced no newe election without his approbation: but the ſeuerity of his late majeſtie not to haue any mixture with that prince, who carried in his armyes the coulers and noyſe of Turks, did both repreſs in him his hopes, and bridle my affections, which did deſire vpon any conditions, to putt him into action; but not daring to doe that without warrant, I yet practiced with him to take away that ſcandall by his owne miniſters, and perſwaded him to make his purpoſes and meanes better knowne to his majeſtie and his allyes; and ſo kept vpp his hopes two yeares before the French ambaſſador had any intereſt in him or the negotiation, when in this tyme hee was only treating marriage, and full reconciliation with the emperor: not that thoſe were his naturall deſires, but to enterteyne tyme, and to haue a retraict when hee ſhould be deſperate of other wayes, ſeeing then the ſtate of Germany declyning, and almoſt in deſperation. His alliance with the elector of Brandeburgh I firſt moued, to diuert, if not to aſſure him to the proteſtant princes, and the religion.

I enter into this diſcourſe, becauſe your lordſhip hath pleaſed to enſtruct mee by many reaſons, why his offers were no ſooner taken into conſideration, and that in them you make ſome obiection. I accept them all for good and well grounded; yet leaſt the impreſſion of ſome of them may hinder in the future, I will vndertake to anſwere for Gabor, that I know his firſt affections were directed to his majeſtie, and not to the French king. The reſpects of Germany and religion are inferences ſtrong enough. His negociation with mee ſo long before, eſpecially that whereof I gave account 21 Nouember paſt, wherein hee makes a particular profeſſion to his majeſtie, are euident witneſſes. But that hee ſent firſt into France, hee was driuen thereunto by deſpaire on our ſide, and inuitation on theirs. I durſt neuer promiſe him, nor engage any word, that hee ſhould bee accepted or aſſiſted; but as ſoone as the French reſident had entered into this conſideration, whereof hee had his light and information from mee, hee thought to make it his owne buſineſs in France, and inſtantly procured warrant and order to beginne to treate: whereupon diuers meſſengers paſſed betweene Paris and Tranſiluania, whereof yet, the prince allway made me acquainted. The French, ſeeing mee without authority, ſeekes to drawe all into his owne hands, and troubled himſelfe in the duſt hee did not raiſe; and, out of envy, ſent a meſſenger to Gabor, to take all vpon him, and to diminiſh mee, as without creditt. Hee hoped to value himſelfe by this worke with his maſter, to draw the treaty hither, and the payment of the mony through his hands; of which hauing failed, whether his orders are retracted, or that hee loues nothing hee doth not gouerne, hee is become relapſed and cold. This was the cauſe and the occaſion of thoſe offers ſent firſt to France; wherein there was no purpoſe to enter into the league of Italy, but to procure a newe for Germany, the conſtitution and wayes whereof hee did not ſo well vnderſtand, but was ready for the firſt that would accept him. Beſides, there had paſſt ſome courteſies and reſpects from the French king formerly, by the viſitt of the duke of Angoleſme, to whom this negociation in generall termes was firſt communicated. Gabor was made beleeue, that the French king would mediate his cre-

1626. ditt in England, of which hee deſpaired by mee; and the reſident here aſſured mee, that the marqueſs of Bleinueille had inſtructions to promoue his propoſitions: what diuerted it I cannot conjecture, nor what the French doth now practice; there beeing newly arrived a gentleman in Alba Julia, with the title of a ſecretary from his moſt chriſtian majeſtie.

SECONDLY, Whatſoeuer hopes Gabor might haue of the arming of the king of Denmark, and incitations from his priuat ends, I knew hee had tryed his owne forces in the like coniuncture, and would neuer more moue at aduenture, vntill hee were aſſured by ſome colleaguation, and aſſiſted with ſome mony. I well conſidered the extraordinarie charge of his majeſtie, and the difficulty to ſupply ſo many iſſues: but when the ſumme for his majeſties part was weighed with the importance of his armes, and that it would arriſe in one yeare but to 14 dayes pay of the contribution to the armyes of the king of Denmark and count Mansfield, I thought it would bee ill husbandry to ſpare this penny, in ſo great expence, which I could, with my creditt, haue furniſhed here vpon his majeſtys order; and therefore, if that ſupply bee not giuen him, all other promiſſes, which are not reall, will vaniſh and come to nothing.

LASTLY, For the conſequence and opertunity of this diuerſion, your lordſhip giue mee leaue peremptorily to conclude, that it will proue of more terror, if not effect, then all that hath bene yet done in Germany. I know my weakeneſs to giue counſell, but I will venture my thoughts, That if the army of the king of Denmark had ſpent this paſt tyme in the emperours owne cuntryes, which are ready to reuolt, Gabor had ioyned long ſince, the princes of the nether Sax had ſooner declared when the head had bene oppreſſed, and this round courſe had forced all to a reſolution. The emperour feeles not the warr that is made in poore neutrall princes cuntryes ſo warme and dangerous, as hee would the fire at his owne doores. This is the judgment of Gabor, that the whole force of the league ſhould meete directly at Vienna; vpon the firſt noiſe whereof, Bohemia, Sileſia, and Morauia, would ſhake off their fetters of ſeruitude. Reſpect of not breaking ouertly and actually with the emperour, only doth contradict this councell; and an opinion, that the proceeding masked is more ſafe and wary: but all Germany ſhall find, that reuenge will ouerſee none, if the Auſtrians ſhall preuaile, there beeing left no ſecurity but in paring of the eagles clawes, who, vnlike to Achilles, is not to bee killed with a wound in the heele, but in the head.

I WILL now proceed to the preſent affaires. I promiſed your lordſhip in mine of the 30th June, to ſend the copy in ciphar of the inſtructions giuen to the ambaſſador now negociating; becauſe, beeing required to aſſiſt in them, many things ſeemed to mee vaſt and vngrounded; and I that heard nothing of the league by Gabor intimated, and into which hee ſeemes to bee admitted, hauing diſpatched capten Quaad with his reſolution, did feare, that there was much more ſmoake in them then matter: but now I ſhall ſaue your lordſhip that labour, hauing conferred his commiſſion hither, with the relation from your honor, I find them vniforme and concurring in the ſubſtance, ſome circumſtance only differing; ſo that you know as much as I can write; and I am fully enlightened and ſatisfied, that treating here the ſame things hee hath propounded at the Haghe, hee doth ſincerely meane to performe and proſecute them: and becauſe his majeſtie may bee fully enformed of the poſſibility of his motions, I wilbee bold to make a gloſſe, and to giue my judgment vpon them. To hinder the confirmation of the peace with the emperour, hee hath conuerted the baſſa of Buda, vpon whoſe counſel it did depend. There wanted nothing but the complement thereof, by the comming of a great ambaſſador from Vienna, with a preſent of 100000 dollars, according to the articles: which, hauing allmoſt two yeares bene protracted, the imperialls finding ſome ſhowes of alteration, diſpatched ſodainly an internuntio with the ratification; whom we ſtayed at Buda, vpon pretence, that it did not agree with the grand ſignors honor to accept it in this clandeſtine manner, and without the preſent, and after ſo great delay. But I conceiue this was a quarrell apprehended by the baſſa, which paſſeth with our help for current, and confirmes mee in the opinion of his conuerſion, and both their ſincerityes.

THAT he will procure Turkiſh armyes to march towards the emperors territories, I am perſwaded the baſſas on the border will conſent, and are gladd of the occaſion of prey; but he hath ſince moderated that propoſition, and I haue caution not to aſſiſt in it : neither will theſe miniſters graunt it, while their warre of Aſia doth conſume all their forces, and the iſſue vncerteyne, they will bee wary to prouoke a new enemy ; which wee haue thus altered, that theſe baſſas may riſe only with their frontire garriſons, and make a camp on the borders, to attend occaſion, to amuſe the emperour, and to hinder all hope of concluſion of the peace.

To prouoke the Tartars to buſy the king of Poland, is a worke of ſupererogation, and of the ſame nature of ſcandall. The quarrell is afoote already, and if the neceſſity of defence againſt the king of Sueueland require not all the forces of that kingdome, they will themſelues beginne the dance ; ſo that on both ſides the Poles will haue their hands full, and Gabor may reſt ſecure of them.

To perſwade the grand ſignor to make peace with Perſia, is a hard work, which hee doth not mention here ; and rather makes number than weight.

The Muſcouite, whether by a confederation with the king of Sweden, or for his owne occaſions, wilbee drawne in ; for wee are perſwaded, the great army of the Coſſacks prepared, and ſo much feared here, ſhalbee imployed for a diuerſion into that kingdome, by the riuers falling into the Euxine ſea.

In the riſing of count Mansfield, or ſome greater force to vnite with him in Sileſia, vndoubtedly ready to receiue him, and the payment of the ſmall contribution, conſiſts the heart and life of the buſineſs ; which, if furniſhed, hee is able to bring the foote and horſe mentioned, in 20 dayes, and to leaue his cuntry guarded ; and there is no doubt of his performance.

The death of the old chimacham, vpon whome wee did all depend, did not only hinder the expedition of what was required from hence, but made vs very doubtfull of the ſucceſs: the newe hauing bene the only protector of the Imperialls.

The ambaſſador of Gabor did the firſt day beginne the negotiation, and the next I vndertooke to ſecond him. I found this miniſter vtterly ignorant, and conſequently fearefull ; but with much labour making him capeable, rather of the neceſſity then vtility, and that this was a treaty of a yeares conſultation, which hee could not breake ; and proteſting that Gabor muſt doe that for his owne ſafety and the publique ſeruice, without leave of which hee might haue the honor : I preuailed with him aboue our hopes, and after many proteſtations, that hee would in the future beleeue and adhere to the miniſters of antient amity, hee gaue order to ſeeke in the regiſters for his inſtruction of the former concurring councells, and promiſed a ſpeedy anſwere. The ſame night hee ſent to the ambaſſador by his interpreter, that I had fully ſatisfied him ; and that hee ſhould drawe the formes of his owne letters, which hee would ſend to the grand ſignor, and giue him expedition. This teſtimony I haue vnder the ambaſſadors hand : ſince, the other reſidents haue done the like office, and confirmed him ; and the French laſt, of whom we were afrayd, hauing abated his wonted feruency.

Wee haue contracted the ſumme of our requeſts to two heads ; to procure a letter to the prince of Tranſyluania, to encourage him to enter into confederacy with the antient frends of the port, and to vnite with them, either for their defence, or the recouery of the territoryes of any of their allyes vſurped, or oppreſſed by the common enemy ; and to maynteyne a good and firme correſpondence with them in all their occaſions, for the reſtitution of peace and liberty to Germany.

The ſecond, to obteyne a command to the baſſa of Buda, to raiſe thoſe of Boſna, Agria, and Caniſia, to make a camp vpon the frontire, and to attend the ſafety of the border, and in all neceſſities of Gabor to bee in readineſs to defend his cuntryes from any incurſion.

This is the ſubſtance ; but that I may not ſeeme to deceiue his majeſtie, I am perſwaded the baſſas of Hungary are content to gett the couler of any licence to bee in armes ; and that there is a purpoſe in them to make aduantage of oportunity, and not to ſitt ſtill. Any thing that proſpers is eaſily anſwered in this port ; becauſe that I am well aſſured by a horſeman newly arriued, that is not a party any way, that Morteſa, baſſa of Boſna, was already departed with 4000 foote, and 6000 horſe, and that daily other troopes were following him, before any command or licence obteyned ; who, asking whether they marched, was anſwered toward Gabor, to receiue his commands : which precipitation confirmes mee in a confidence, that they are interreſſed in his counſayles, and wilbee in action before their warrant bee vnder ſeale ; which will drawe on more then is foreſeene, or to vs proiected. This Spahee 1626. brought two packetts to the emperours agent, which he ſhewed mee, and I attempted to gett them, doubting they might bring ſome newes, whereof hee would make ill vſe, and multiply it vpon rumours ſpread of ſome blowe giuen count Mansfield, which in the inſtant of diſpatch might retard, if not ſhake the chimachams new reconciliation: but not preuailing, I obteyned a promiſe of him, to keepe them tenne dayes, in which tyme all things wilbee finiſhed.

THE treaty with Spaine, I hope, hath receiued a deadly wound; for though our meſſengers, ſent with the command to Raguſa, are not retorned, yet wee heare, that they haue layd all paſſages; and in euery citty it is diuulged, that no Spaniſh miniſter may bee admitted; and wee doubt not they haue found the gentleman ymployed, and conducted him ſafely out of theſe dominions. It hath coſt mee my proportion of charge, but no ſuch ſumme, as ſhall giue diſtaſt: I will bring myne owne account, and truſt to his majeſties benignity. Myſelfe, and all that God hath giuen mee, I moſt willingly will expoſe for his ſeruice.

BY the retorne of the Tranſiluanian ambaſſador, I will take the heart to write at large to the prince, and both confirme him in his majeſties purpoſes towards him, and in his aſſurance of mee; to giue him a good account of all thoſe negotiations here, which hee ſhall committ vnto mee.

THIS letter is drawne out into a length, I feare beyond your lordſhips leyſure; but I was deſirous to make one worke, and to erre any way, rather then in defect. I find your honors fauor to mee ſo abundant, that I am confident you will preſent my ſeruices to his majeſtie, with thoſe circumſtances as ſhall make them accepted.

IF, before the diſpatch, the expedition ſhalbee procured and ſigned, or any other alteration, I will add it: and nowe, I conclude for myſelfe, that I am very ſenſible of the benefitts I haue receiued by your lordſhips mediation; for which, I beſeech you to take mee for a moſt thankfull man, that will liue and dye

Conſtantinople, 16. July, 1626.

Your moſt obliged humble ſeruant.

MY wife ouerioyed in your lordſhips fauours, knowing the inability of her ſeruice offered, doth pray to God to requite you.

To ~~From~~ the QUEEN of BOHEMIA.

May it pleaſe your majeſtie,

AS men ſay, that ill turnes ſeldome come alone, ſo ſometyme bleſſings and comforts are doubled vnto vs: within few dayes I haue receiued your majeſties moſt welcome gratious letter, and full ſatisfaction and direction from my lord Conwey, how to proceede in the generall buſines, and ample aſſurance of his majeſties benigne acceptance of my ſeruices, expreſſed by many fauours and bountyes, which hath reſtored me creditt and heart to perfect that worke, wherin I haue ſo long dangerouſly and fearfully laboured. Not ten dayes before, here arriued an extraordinarye from the prince of Tranſyluania, with large inſtructions grounded vpon ſome conference at the Haghe; in which, it ſeemes, he receiued ſatiſfaction: who brought mee a ſummons in his majeſties name, to aſſiſt in many propoſitions, which to doe without order, were very irregular in me. In this ſtreight I was confuſed, eyther to neglect the perfection of a great ſeruice, or to proceede in matters of ſo high nature, and contrarye to my ſtanding inſtructions, without warrant. I concluded rather to looſe my ſelfe, and truſt to his majeſties goodnes and your princely mediation, then the oportunitye to confirme your majeſtie how willing a ſacrifice I would bee, to ſerue you. When the new ambaſſador had formed his buſines ready for action, behold the miſeries of this empire returne: the good old chimacham, adopted father of Gabor, my only freind, the ſtay and ſupport of this ſtate, vpon whom wee did all depend, is ſtrangled, by the clamor and inſolence of the Spahees; whoſe hiſtorye I haue encloſen to Sir Francis Netherſole: in his place was aduanced ſodenly the captain baſſa, the head and protector of the Imperialls, and for your oppoſition my enemye. Wee deſpayred not only of the buſines, but juſtly feared ſome contrarye effects, when new heart and comfort oportunely arriued to mee, by his majeſties commands; wherefore wee reſolued to putt yt to tryall, and the ambaſſador began the firſt day with the new vizier, (delay beeing to vs as dangerous as denyall) the next

I

I did ſecond him, and from the beginning of this treatye opened his vnderſtanding; 1626. I found him utterly ignorant of all affayres of ſtate, and conſequently fearefull; but from perſwaſions, I aſcended to proteſtations, vrging the neceſſitye, wher he could not apprehend the utilitye; and concluding, that Gabor muſt goe forward for his owne ſafetye and the publicque good, without his aſſiſtance, wher he might now take vpon himſelfe the honor. In concluſion, I conuerted him aboue all hope; ſo that the ſame day he ſent to the ambaſſador, that he was by mee ſatisfyed, and that he ſhould draw his owne letters, which ſent in to the grand ſignor, ſhould ſpeedely bee diſpatched. Since, the other reſidents haue done the like office to confirme him, and wee expect expedition; ſo that I may rejoyce in Gods bleſſing, that I haue ſtayed to perfect that which I begun vpon weake grownd, maynteyned by delatorye treatyes, confirmed by an alliance with the religion, and I hope your majeſtie ſhall ſodenly ſee and taſt the fruicts therof. The principall poynts are, a direction to Gabor, to unite and make confederacye with the princes of ancient amitye with the port, to concurre and joyne with them in their occaſions, for the recouerye of the libertye of Germany, Another command to the baſſa of Buda, to rayſe the frontyre army, and to march to a place deſſigned to amuſe the emperor, interrupt the peace, and to defend the territoryes of Tranſyluania, from inuaſion, and to aſſiſt him in any neceſſitye: your majeſtie may bee aſſured before the arriuall of this letter, that there armes wilbe well aduanced; for I am truly enformed, that 14 dayes ſince, Morteſa, baſſa of Boſna, with 4000 foote, and 6000 horſe, was marching, and other troopes following, to receiue the princes commands. Thoſe of Agric and Caniſi began to moue, ſo that it is euident, they haue intereſt in the counſayles of Gabor; and are agreed among themſelues to bee in action, before their warrant be vnder ſeale: and, which is of greateſt conſequence, the baſſa of Buda, vpon whom all reſolutions of the confines did depend, formerly wholy imperiall, is reconciled, and at the deuotion of the prince of Tranſyluania, with whom many in this court are fallen off; of whoſe fayth wee haue this earneſt, that he hath apprehended a quarrell to ſtay the inter-nuntio of the emperour, arriued in poſt as far as Buda, with the ratification of the peace; which ſhould haue bene ſolemnly ſent, now almoſt two yeares paſt, with a preſent of 100000 dollars, according to the articles: but beeing protracted from tyme to tyme, and the Imperialls foreſeeing ſome motion and alteration, made this preuentiue diſpatch, which the baſſa hath refuſed, pretending it to bee agaynſt the grand ſignors honor, to receiue that ſo late, ſo clandeſtinely, and without the preſent; and as this is a good aſſurance of him, ſo yt may occaſion the utter diſſolution of the treatye. The other from Spayne hath, I hope, receiued a deadly wound; for though the meſſingers ſent to Raguſa, are not returned, yet we heare they haue preuented all entrye, and ſtopped all paſſage to any miniſter of the kyngs, or his viceroy of Naples and Milan.

THE prince profeſſeth to march directly into Sileſia, ready to receiue him; and we are moſt aſſured, that if any ſeconds appears, and the contribution furniſhed (without which your majeſtie may reſolue all will vaniſh into ſmoke, and therfore you will take care of aduancing thoſe two eſſentiall motiues) Bohemia, Morauia, and all the oppreſſed prouinces, will, at firſt ſight of any refuge, ſhake off the fetters of their ſeruitude.

IT is the opinion of the prince, that the king of Denmarke loſeth tyme in poore neutrall countryes; and that the whole force of the league ſhould meete directly at Vienna. The emperour feeles not the fire ſo farr from home, and the innocent only ſuffer: vndoubtedly ſuch a reſolution would finiſh the war. I know the reaſons and obiections for and agaynſt this councell, which I haue preſumed to mention and leaue to his majeſties wiſedome; to whom I haue written very lardgly, and I hope, to ſatisfaction.

THE death of my ſucceſſor hath ſtayed mee here vntill the ſpring, but I will uſe all meanes for my deliuerye; hoping, I ſhall not bee vnprofitable to your majeſtie in England. I humbly thanck your majeſtie for the gratious remembrance you haue pleaſed to uſe of me to the duke, the effects wherof I will not doubt: but if your majeſtie would vouchſafe to take this occaſion of finiſhing my ſeruice here, to mention me to my maſter, who hath already good apprehenſions of mee, they will come ſeaſonably to aduance them; and as I haue from your infancy honored, adored, and 1626. humbly ſerued your majeſtie, ſo I will to you, and from you, owe and acknowledge any grace that ſhall befall me.

THESE affayres I ſhould communicate with Sir Robert Kyllegrew, who ſhall haue the refining of them, at the Haghe: but want of a cyphar, and a weary hand that this diſpatch fills 20 ſheets of paper, and receiues ſcarce ſo many in 20 weekes, though I thincke my incke as good as anothers, will excuſe me; knowing your majeſtie will enſtruct him in all things neceſſarye.

I HUMBLY kyſs his majeſties the king of Bohemias hands, whoſe commands if I ſhall now receiue, I haue courage equall to my deſire to giue him a good account of them. Almighty God bleſs your majeſtie, and make you the happieſt queene of Europe.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{16}{26}$.
July, 1626.

Your Majeſties, &c.

RELATION of the laſt Troubles in Conſtantinople.

VPON the 3 of this moneth, the Spahees aſſembled in the Hippodrome, and mutinouſly came to the Mufti, and demanded of him ſentence of death againſt the good old *chimacham Georgi Mehmet, baſſa; and that hee would riſe and enforme the grand ſignor of their will; which, if hee refuſed, they threatened a generall reuolt, and to doe their owne juſtice. There was no remedy, and the emperour beeing informed, was pleaſed to diſplace him, and to giue the office to Regeb, capten-baſſa, and his to the †Imrohor-baſſi, hoping thus to quiett all matters; but this gaue them no ſatisfaction: in greater fury, they aske his life. The poore chimacham retired into the grand ſignors protection, who vſed all meanes (by offering to confine, or baniſh him) to appeaſe them; but nothing would content and ſeperate them, vntill hee was ſtranguled, and throwne out naked; ouer whoſe dead body they barbarouſly trampled, cutting off his noſe and eares.

* Vizier of the port, who hath the authoritye of great vizier in his abſence.

† maſter of the horſe.

ALLREADY this State beginns to reſent the loſſe and iniuſtice done to that great miniſter, who beeing 96 yeares old, had bene 45 yeares vizier of the bench, once great vizier, and thrice chimacham. Before that, baſſa of Ciprus, Buda, Damaſcus, Babilon, and grand Cairo. He had ſerued ſixe emperours, the moſt able and . . . . ſorte, wiſeſt miniſter of this State, vnder whom wee liued ſecure, and neuer wanted a frend; the great ſeruice hee had done . . . . . . in the preſervation of this empire often, and laſtly in its re-eſtabliſhment after the laſt troubles, nor any other . . . . . . were able to reprieve him from this rage. The occaſion taken vp againſt him was, that hee did conceale the yll eſtate of the army at Babilon; flattering the grand ſignor, while that ſuffered (as was pretended) great want; and certeyne letters, written part in bloud, as from the camp, were produced to accuſe him; which ſince, as is reported, are diſcouered to bee a practice, and made in this citty. Hereuppon wee know not what to beleeue, of the ſucceſs of that warr; but thus much is certeyne, the Perſian army ſitts by them, many good blowes haue paſt with mutual loſs, and the Turks haue wrought themſelues vnder ground, men and horſe, . . . the heates, ſtubbornly reſolued to carry it, which yet is here much doubted.

I HAUE bene curious to know how the Chimacham, that truſted in the emperour and his mother, tooke his death: when the ſentence was deliuered to the buſtangi-baſſa, he held it in his hand, rather to intimate then to bee the meſſenger. The poore man perceiuing it, deſired an hower to pray, and conjured the buſtangi-baſſa, to warne the grand ſignor hereafter, not to bee ſo eaſy to conſent to take innocent bloud, which within two dayes hee would repent: and laſtly, hee entreated, that hee might not dye by the fowle hands of the hangman, which coſt him deere; for the buſtanges, either for reſpect and reuerence, or for want of skill, could not finiſh his life, ſo great was this old heart, in one hower. Hee was buried with a few raskalls, his owne ſeruants hidd, and no man daring to accompany him to his laſt bedd.

THE former relation is filled with the iniuſtice and inſolence of man, this ſhall bring examples of the juſtice of God; who reuengeth the bloud of his enemyes and wicked men, vnjuſtly ſpilt, to preſerue his image euen amongſt them that ſtudy to deſtroy it. To this may bee fittly applyed, that . . . . neſs, non eſſe curæ Deis ſecuritatem eorum eſſe ultionem: the Janizaries, either enuious that they had 1626. no part in the laſt ſedition, or beeing innocent, vnwilling to participate in the infamy, or rather it was their turne to doe ſomewhat, forced the boats of the gallyes which lay aboue in the channel, and came downe to a garden-houſe vpon the ſea, in the night, where the emperour priuatly repoſed; and beganne to exclayme againſt the death of the innocent, proteſting they had no ſhare therein, but as obedient ſlaues, they deſired the peace of the ſtate, and that juſtice and quiettneſs might retorne to the citty; and requiring reuenge vpon diuers whom they accuſed as the authors of theſe tumults: they named their owne *ſegmen-baſſi, as the principall, and eighteen of their owne officers, and diuers others of the chiefe ſpahees, who held councells together, and were become heads of factions, which vntill they were all cut off, there was no hope of gouernment and peace. The grand ſignor gaue them good words, and promiſed to doe further juſtice, and to puniſh all ſuch as ſhould bee found guilty; but nothing being done to ſatisfy them, and it being beleeued that the newe chimacham conniued, and had bene a party to all their counſailes, at leaſt his preferrment made him obnoxious to that ſuſpition; and it was moſt true, that the ſegmen-baſſi, and his followers and faction, were the contriuers of the fall and murther of Georgi Mehemett baſſi, and very probable, that hee was fauoured, if not practiſed by the newe miniſter. The janizaries roſe againe, and by force brought downe the gallies neare the citty, and landed; and held a councell very ſecrett in their chambers. This bredd much ſuſpition and feare, but the day of audience beeing come, according to the cuſtome, they repaired all to the ſeraglio, and wayt in their order, their ſegmen-baſſi only did not appeare; and it was thought hee abſented purpoſely by agreement with the chimacham, leaſt there ſhould bee ſome occaſion to examine the paſt buſineſs, which could not endure the light. Diuan beeing finiſhed, and the viziers and caddee leskers comming toward the gate, they were ſtopped by the janizaries, and told playnly they would ſpeake with the king. Such perſwaſions as were requiſite, were vſed; but there was no remedy: they would deliuer their owne meſſage. The young emperour at firſt was afrayd, and retyred; but to auoyd greater inconueniences, reſolued to come out to them. Order was inſtantly giuen to ſend for the mufti, and the antients of the lawe, and many ſantons, the ſegmen-baſſi, and others of quality, to bee preſent at this action. In the meane tyme the throne was brought out, and placed in the great court, and the grand ſignor came forth and ſate in his majeſtie, attended and aſſiſted by all the great miniſters and officers of his empire, to ſtrike a reuerence and feare into the ſoldiers, whoſe purpoſes were not yet diſcouered. Contrary to all expectation, an electo ſpake for them, in all humble manner, profeſſing their obedience and lamenting the ſickneſs of the ſtate, and theſe daily inſolencyes; and declaring, as they were not guilty of this laſt mutiny, ſo they were ready to ſpend their bloud in defence of their prince, and for the reformation of theſe diſorders; to which there could bee applyed no remedy but the ſword of juſtice, to cutt off thoſe heads which held conuenticles, and plotted daily alterations, and to gouerne the whole empire at their will. They deſired their petition might bee accepted, and theſe diſturbers of the peace ſought out and executed, in which they would perſiſt; and that newe names and titles might bee foregone, which many had taken vpp as capes of factions; and the ſouldiery reduced to their ancient diſcipline; which, if his majeſtie would graunt and ſpeedily putt in practice, they were ready to dye in his ſeruice. If otherwiſe, as there was no hope of quiettneſs, ſo they did foreſee greate miſchiefes daily contemplated, which they would oppoſe, as well as they were able. At the end of the ſpeech, which might haue become a Cato, they deliuered their petition in writing, wherein they modeſtly accuſed . . . . of confederacy, and conniuence with . . . . . . of their owne officers and Spahees, vpon whom they threw the burthen of the daily tumults. The emperor made them a ſhort but ſatisfactory anſwere, yielding to ſome things, yet mingled with ſome admonition, ſuch as became him; and they departed euery man to their owne reſt. Segmen-baſſi hauing ſome intimation, that his name was renewed in that liſt of death, tooke the firſt opportunity and fledd, and hidd himſelfe; and diuers others, conſcious of their owne meritts retyred, and thereby condemned themſelues. Not one roaring Spahee, to bee ſeen in the citty: all things were ſo calme, as if Aſtræa were deſcended; there was no diſtemper but in the heart of the chimacham, who was afraid to bring his complices into tryall; and was ſure, if they were not taken, their eſcape would be

* Lievetenant to their Aga.

1626. his ruyne; for the janizaries exacted of him an account of the execution. With much diligence the ſegmen-baſſi was apprehended and brought to the court: hee was firſt examined, rather to confeſſe his owne treaſure, which was infinite, (for hee had the ſpoile of Greece in the laſt gathering of tribute-children to fill the ſeraglio, at the death of Sultan Oſman) then to impeach other men. The grand ſignor ſent for him, and after fewe words gaue ſentence, to haue his head ſtricken off, which was inſtantly performed before the doore: ſince, diuers of both orders haue beene taken, as they ſay, to the number of 22. priuatly ſtrangled, and throwne into the ſea; ſome principally branded are yet hidden and fledd.

THIS trouble hath turned the grand ſignor to account many wayes: it is reported, that by confiſcations hee hath aduanced a million, and 250000 dollers by the ſegmen-baſſi; by the ſcriuano, as much; by others, very greate ſummes: and as if peace had riſen out of the graue of the old chimacham, there is heard no more noyſe, the ſpahees ſhrink, and the janizaries, as their glory, take vpon them an auſtere reformation. But there are many inward ſoares and diſcontents, which, notwithſtanding all this cleare ayre, will breake out; and one day is not ſufficient to cure or purge the corruption of this ſtate.

SINCE, there are arriued ſome ſeruants of the great vizier at Babilon, who bring certeyne aduice, that the camp was in great extremity, beſeeged without by the Perſian, maſter of the field, and conſequently of their prouiſions: nakedneſs, famine, and diſeaſes within, were more terrible then the enemy: the ſupplyes ſent, ſtayed at Dearbeker, not daring to march forward without better guards; inſomuch that, if ſpeedy ſuccours bee not giuen them, the army muſt diſhonorably and dangerouſly breake, and ſteale away.

HEREVPON hath bene held a publique councell, in which all orders, as well ciuill as military, aſſiſted; a preſent ſupply was ordered, and a generall, now in Aſia, appointed to conduct them. The rendezvous aſſigned at Iconium, and the ſoldiours are now daily repairing thither; where, if they come not too late, they may help to deſtroy the cuntry.

Conſtantinople, July, $\frac{20}{30}$.
1626.

From the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

Noble Sir,

I HAUE had a view of diuerſe abſtracts of diſpatches, ſent from yow to my lord Conwaye; by which there is ſo good an opinion conceiued of the imployment there, as concurring att this preſent with the mixture of the affaires of Chriſtendome, and the abilityes of your perſon, ſo fitted by your knowledge of thoſe parts, to doe the king and ſtate further ſeruice there, That as yet yow are not likely to be relieued by a ſucceſſor, but to have your reſidence prolonged vnto the latter end of the yeare; ſo that your voyage for England will not be ſo ſoone as your owne, and the wiſhes of your freinds, here expected: in the meane tyme I ſhall not fayle to think vpon ſomething for yow, that may both haſten your retourne hither, and incourage it. I haue likewiſe receiued two letters from yow, concerning ſome buiſines of my owne; the latter bearing date the $\frac{1}{18}$. May, 1626. wherein I find my ſelfe much obliged to an extraordinarie dilligence yow haue vſd, in ſearch of ſuch pieces and antiquityes, as yow gueſſe will be moſt wellcome vnto me; and I ſhall endeauour to deſerue the paines yow beſtowe vpon me there, in any ſeruice yow ſhall imploye me in heere; deſireing a continuance of your reſpect vnto mee in this kind, with this caution only, that yow laye not out much money vpon any alablaſter pieces, vnleſſe they be figvres of exquiſite cvrioſity: for your antique maſters (as I am informd) neuer wrought vpon alablaſter. Neither am I ſo fond of antiquitye (as yow rightly coniecture) to court it in a deformed or miſhapen ſtone; but where yow ſhall meete beautye with antiquitye together in a ſtatue, I ſhall not ſtand vpon any coſt your judgment ſhall vallew it att. For thoſe other pieces on Porta Aurea, ſince they cannot be compaſt without difficultye and danger, I am ſatisfyd with the attempt your induſtrie had vpon them; and ſhall hope for ſome other rarityes that may be purchaſt with leſſe trouble, and for a good occaſion to expreſſe my ſelfe

Yorke-Houſe, July, 19.
ſtilo vet. 1626.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and humble ſeruant,

BUCKINGHAM.

Superſcribed,

To the Right Honorable Sir THOMAS ROE, Knight, his Majeſties Ambaſſador, reſident with the Grand Seignor.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt vnto your lordſhip was of the 13. preſent, ſince when I haue receaued yours of the 15. of June, with the incloſed; all which I haue already ſent away, according vnto their direction. The incloſed for your lordſhip came to my hands this weeke, in a packet of myne from England; from whence, if I had any wellcome newſe, I would impart it vnto your lordſhip.

THERE hath beene a hot diſputation of late betweene the pope and the Spanyards, concerning the buſineſſe of the Valtelina; for it being agreed before at the inſtance of the pope, that the vally and the forts ſhould be conſigned into his hands, to the end that he might demoliſh them; he doth now beginne to retyre from what he did formerly ſollicitt, profeſſing that if he ſhould vndertake that buſineſſe, that the honor would not equall the charges. The Spanyards make an other conſtruction of this his ſuddaine retrayt, confidently beleeuing, and peraduenture not without ſome ground, that the pope purpoſely to diſaduantage them in their affaires, will not ſtrive any longer to effectuate an agreement, and to take vp the quarrel of the Valtelina into his hands: the pope indeed doth feare none ſo much as the Spanyards, and the more he can add to their feares and troubles, he may promice himſelfe the more ſecurity. If the pope ſhould conſent to the vnion of Venice, Sauoy, the Swiſſes, and the Griſones, for the keeping of the Valtelina, as it is probable enough that he will, he would deceaue the Spanyards of their intended end, which is to watch a fit conjuncture to make themſelfes maſters of that place, either by policy or power; but if it haue ſo ſtrong a vnion of ſo many princes to guard it, the Spanyard will haue leſſe hope then euer, to get it into his hands.

THE French extraordinary ambaſſador is not yet arriued, but dayly and howerly expected; and I doubt not the next weeke, but to giue your lordſhip neuſe of his entertaynement. Thus with my harty prayers for your lordſhips encreaſe of all honors, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, July, 24.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant

JOHN WILKINSON.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſime Prencipe,

THE ſodaine occaſion of the diſpatch of this meſſenger will not giue mee leaue to enter into any large diſcourſe of your highnes affaires and propoſitions in this court; but fearing either the delay, or the mutations, or ſome rumor ſpread by the aduerſaries, might alter the baſſa of Buda, or retard your heroique reſolutions, I would not omitt to giue your highnes this teſtimony of my ſelfe, and ſome aſſurance of a good concluſion. I doubt not Sr. Todolagi, your worthy miniſter, hath enformed you of all the proceedings to this day; and of the ſlowe and fearfull motions of the newe chimacham, (the fruicts of ignorance) and of the vnaduiſed courſe of a publique conſultation; but as I knowe your highnes actions are grounded vpon the foundations of wiſedome, which are euer accompanied with conſtancy; ſo I haue thought it requiſite, to giue your highnes ſome light and aſſurance, that though this buſineſs hath mett with many difficulties, yet you may reſt ſatisfied that I haue vſed ſuch meanes, and will ſo dilligently follow them, that wee will ouercome all oppoſition, and within fewe dayes wee ſhall diſpatch all ſuch letters and orders, as ſhall giue you full contentment.

1626. To day I haue concluded with the chimacham, whom I found in a good affection to the generall buſineſs, but wary to beare the envy of a direct breach; ſo that wee agreed to march diſguiſed, and vnder ſuch arts as the enemies haue taught vs.

To this purpoſe, to looſe no more tyme, I went home with the reizkatab, and drew the minuts of the letters and commands; which though wee could not obteyne in ſo open and direct termes as your inſtructions require, yet in ſuch as the preſent eſtate of affaires would comport, and effectually to your highnes purpoſes, as the orders to the baſſa of Buda, written as to a ſubiect, doe more clearly expreſſe.

Therfore your highnes wilbee pleaſed to proceed in your princely reſolutions, and ſhall need to vſe no delay, in reſpect of the ſlowneſs of the anſwere, which hath happened firſt by the mutations, and ſince by the ſickneſs of S^{r}. Todolaghy; but as I haue in this occaſion ſupplyed his place, ſo you may be confident, that I will leaue nothing, that concerneth the publique and your highnes ſeruice, vnperfect. The imbrahor-baſſi, who is the correſpondent of the baſſa of Buda, by faint and diſſembled aſſiſtance, as wee feare, hath done more harme then if hee had bene a direct oppoſite; and new reconciled frends ſhould not at firſt bee truſted with too much: but truth and a good cauſe, and your highnes propitious ſtarrs, hath conducted all things to an happy end. And though your highnes hath loſt a principall frend, God hath prouided you another; Huſſein Affende, the caddee leskar of Greece, a moſt wiſe and conſtant man, and now of abſolute creditt and authority with the grand ſignor, who willingly offers himſelfe to the protection of all your affaires. I haue therefore perſwaded S^{r}. Todolaghy, to viſitt and depend vpon him; and I doubt not, all things ſhall conclude to your ſatisfaction.

Hauing many things to communicate with your highnes, by the retorne of your ambaſſador, I will not enlarge by this occaſion; which I haue taken only to giue your highnes knowledge, that I haue receiued full orders and commands, of which I will giue a good account, both by continuall aduice, and by my endeauors here in your ſeruice: and ſo beſeeching Allmighty God to proſper your highnes in all your princely deſſignes, and to multiply vpon you all felicity, I reſt.

25. July, 1626.

To my Lord Conway.

My Lord,

THE troubles of this court haue bene many and violent, of which, if your lordſhip take pleaſure to heare, I haue appointed Mr. Brantwait to attend you with the relation. It is no meruaile if they deferred and hindered all buſineſs abroad, when it was enough to quiett and appeaſe the tumults within the citty. Since my laſt, which aduiſed your lordſhip that I left the chimacham in a good diſpoſition to giue a ſpeedy and contented expedition to the ambaſſador of Tranſiluania, ill and preſſiue newes beeing come from Babilon, there was called a generall councell, to which are admitted men of all orders, as well military as ciuill, to the number of aboue 1000. This courſe was antiently vſed in matters of high conſequence, as the beginning of a warre, or other great mutation: now rather done for feare, and to content the ſoldioury, then neceſſity; which was only to conſult of ſpeedy and fitt ſupplyes. At this aſſembly, very impertinently, ignorantly, or maliciouſly, this newe miniſter doth propound the councells of Bethlem Gabor, and reads all his letters and inſtructions publiquely, makeing out of them an abſurd queſtion, Whether it were now fitt to breake with the emperour and Poland at once, according to the ouertures made, but groſſly miſtaken? An opportunity picked out, to be ſure of a negatiue, and in ſo great a multitude, ſome being Imperialls, franckly diſputed againſt it: others, that ſawe either the folly, or the iniquity, reduced the demands to ſuch a moderation, that nothing was then concluded againſt it, and of that wee were gladd enough: for myne owne part, I am perſwaded that feare and ignorance was the greateſt cauſe of this error; though I doubt not, the emperours agent did work vpon it, and thruſt the chimacham into this courſe, as beeing thereby ſure to diſcouer all, and to foile it. Your lordſhip doth now ſee howe ſolid the negociations are in this court; and it was more chance then prouidence, that our names eſcaped. But the emperour and king of Poland ſhall know all that was propounded, and more then was meant by Gabor, by fooliſh conſequences, miſunderſtood, both by the reader and hearers of his letter. Wee iuſtly doubted all was vndone; and that beeing purpoſely thus carried, the baſſa of Buda would retyre and followe the ſenſe of the ſtate, and not to performe with Gabor. His ambaſſador was, and is dangerouſly ſick, and no man to reforme the errors, or to ſollicitt the buſineſs. I found that hee was extreamly diſcontent, eſpecially that his maſters ſecretts ſhould bee diuulged, and wreſted to a falſe or to a lardger ſenſe; yet in the concluſion reſolute, that if hee could procure a diſpatch, it would bee for his aduantage; if not, hee proteſted his prince would take leaue without the port, and truſt to his other frends without their help: notwithſtanding, hee deſired mee to rectify and reduce the treaty againe into order, or ſome moderation: whereupon, I firſt dealt with the caddee leſker, a man wiſe and of great authority; and made him vnderſtand both the falſe conſtruction of the propoſitions, and arts of the aduerſaries, and the neceſſity of the buſineſs, that by refuſing, they might looſe Gabor, but could not withold him from taking care of his owne in the common ſafety, when hee was ſo neglected by them: and after ſome office by him performed, I went to the chimacham, complayning of his action, and vrging his miſtaking; (for there was no other way but to fall vpon a moderation, the demands of Gabor beeing ſo freſh and vnreaſonable) with whom I preuailed ſo farre, that wee agreed vpon the diſpatch, and the chancellor was called to drawe it. I was afraid that delay might occaſion newe alterations, and therefore I went to his houſe, and ſate with him vntill they were finiſhed. In the manner I had much adoe, for though they were content to graunt the ſubſtance, yet they were very wary howe to expreſs it, to auoyd the accuſation of a breach on their part; and therefore to Gabor they vſed more caution; in ſubſtance, encouraging him to vnite and colleague with the princes, the antient frends of the port, and to bee concurrent with them in all their occaſions for the publique good; but not one word to make an actiue warre, though they wilbee gladd of it. To the baſſa of Buda they conſented to more freedome, as to a ſubiect, ordering him to keepe good correſpondence with Gabor; and becauſe it might bee doubted, that the enemy (without other name) would make ſome attempt vpon the borders, that hee ſhould riſe with the army and make a camp, to bee in readineſs vpon all occaſions; and if any inuaſion ſhould bee made by any, vpon the territories of the prince, that hee ſhould aduance and repell them; and after, proceed for the common defence, according to ſuch counſell as the coniunctures ſhould require. Laſtly, If the emperour ſhould ſend any miniſter vnder pretence to negociate a newe peace, that hee ſhould ſtay him, and anſwere, that the grand ſignor would not treate vntill his frends were ſatisfied. In the ſtile I obſerue ſo much caution, as if they ſtudied to imitate the antient oracles; but the ambaſſador of Gabor beeing aſſured of the baſſa of Buda, is contented, and iudgeth theſe ſufficient for their ends. 1626.

A THIRD letter is written to all the chriſtian princes, deſirous to enter into amity with the port, inuiting them to ſend hither their ambaſſadors according to an offer intimated by Gabor, promiſing honorable reception, and protection from all their enemyes, animating them to proceed cheerfully in their vnion for the common good. Of what vſe this is, I know not, except to oppoſe ſuch like ſhowes and oſtentations ſpread abroad by the enemy: though it bee grounded from that motion of Gabor, which, it ſeemes, hee hopes to effect, to procure the kings of Denmarke and Sueueland, and the elector of Brandeburgh, to ſend hither a ſolemne ambaſſage; or elſe, to enterteyne this ſtate with faire ſhadowes to facilitate his counſells.

THE ſame euening, doubting that either the delay, mutations, or rumours ſpread by the aduerſaries, might retard Gabor, or change his frends, and the ambaſſador not likely to depart ſodainly by reaſon of his ſickneſs, I procured him to diſpatch a poſt the next morning; by whom I wrote to the prince the proceedings here, and gaue him aſſurance, that wee had obteyned the ſubſtance of his demands, encourageing him to looſe no tyme, nor to vſe delay vpon expectation from hence; and that ſuch diligence ſhould bee employed, as he ſhould not doubt to receiue full ſatisfaction.

THESE letters and commands are not yet deliuered, but written, allowed, and ſent in to the grand ſignor for his affirme; and therefore, I cannot ſay they are ſure, but I am confident nothing can hinder their ſpeedy diſpatch. Your lordſhip may then bee pleaſed to enſtruct his majeſtys ambaſſador at the Haghe, and arme him with the 1626. knowledge of what is here ſufficiently done, and that there remaynes no excuſe for Gabor to retyre from his propoſitions ſo often repeated.

OUR meſſengers ſent to Raguſa are retorned, hauing found the Neopolitan gentleman in the citty; and deliuering their letters to the duke and magiſtrats, required that hee ſhould bee giuen to them: but they refuſed to infringe ſo farr their owne liberty, but promiſed that they would execute the grand ſignors will; and to that purpoſe wrote a cold letter to the chimacham, of complement, fearefull to offend either Spaine or this ſtate: but howſoeuer, the other commands are regiſtred vpon all the wayes, and I doe not beleeue that either this can come forward, or that any other in haſt will bee ſent to hazard the like diſgrace. The Raguſean ambaſſadors are daily expected, with their tribute, whom though wee know to bee halfe Spaniards, yet wee will procure ſuch admonition to bee giuen them, that at leaſt, they ſhall ſtand neutrall in this buſineſs: and vpon all newe occaſion, wee will uſe ſuch preuention, as ſhalbee neceſſary and in our power.

WHEN I had written thus farre, the enterpreter of Gabor brought mee the copies of the letters and commands, which I found ſo ambiguous and cold, (the fruicts of feare and ignorance) that I vtterly reiected them, and proteſted playnly, that ſuch cautelous proceeding would rather teach the princes to imitate it, then encourage them; and that as wee wanted nor deſired not to engage the grand ſignor in any warre, ſo hee muſt reſolue to defend Gabor alone, if the emperour ſhould turne his forces againſt him, who was iuſtly prouoked to reuenge, by their owne publiſhing his affections: and that they ſhould conſider, whether they did not hazard either to looſe the dependence of Tranſiluania by this tepidneſs, or the occaſion of an vnion, that would ſecure their owne borders. At the laſt, I haue procured them new written, and ſomewhat amended, and changed frendſhipp, which was needleſs, into confederacy, and conformity with a generall approbation of all his propoſitions, and encouragement to proceed in them. The command to Buda is more cleare and efficacious, expreſſly ordering the riſing of the army, to correſpond with Gabor: and ſo much is alſo intimated in the letter to the kings and princes, to inuite them to ſend ambaſſadors hither, and to animate them to a liuely proſecution of their deſſignes for the common good: theſe, are this day to receiue authority by the ſeale, and wee muſt bee content to take them ſuch as they are; I confeſs, not ſo vigorous and quick as I deſired; yet ſeeing the ambaſſador of Gabor doth think they are ſufficient, and that hee, whom it more nearly concernes, is ſatisfied, I thought longer contention would only looſe tyme. I would willingly ſend the copies, but doubt I ſhall not haue leiſure to tranſlate them; of which, if I now faile, the next poſt ſhall ſupply, that his majeſtie may iudge from the text, what the effects are like to bee. In the meane tyme, I will make them as ſtrong, by inferences, to the princes vnderſtanding, as I can, and lay before him his honor and his ſafety engaged.

CONCERNING my particular, I haue humbly beſought his majeſtie to releaſe mee of this dry and ſterile ymployment, that I may not bee tyed by neceſſity, but that my ſucceſſor may beginne his journey with the next yeare. Your lordſhip hath laid vpon mee many obligations; and if you will now pleaſe to aſſiſt to bring mee and my poore wiſe out of Egipt, wee ſhall both acknowledge your manifold fauours, and preſent you two ſeruants deuoted to the wayes of thankfullneſs. In this hope, I leaue your lordſhip to the bleſſed keeping of our gratious God.

Conſtantinople, 21 July,
1626, old ſtile.

Your lordſhips moſt humble and gratefull ſeruant.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

VPPON the 26 of July, the French ambaſſador extraordinary did make his priuat entery into Venice, being met halfe a dayes journy out of the towne by the French ambaſſador ordinary, who accompanyed him to his owne howſe; where he entertayned him, and all his followers, that night and the daye following, at his own expence. The ambaſſador hauing reſted himſelfe a day here after his journy, the ſtate did take notice of his arriuall, and ſent vnto him ſignior Valareſſo, who was ambaſſador in England, being accompanyed with 44 ſenators, to giue him the wellcome in the princes name, and to waite on him to the pallace this republique prouided for him. The day following he had his publique audience, being accompanyed to the college with the ſame number of ſenators as before; and during his ſtay here, which is yet vncertayne, he is allowed by this ſtate 300 duckets a day. I cannot yet giue your lordſhip an account of what propoſitions he will propound to this ſtate, in his maſters name, he hauing not yet had priuat audience of this prince. He hath hitherto beene buſy in receauing and returning viſits to all thoſe ambaſſadors which are reſident here, and within this two dayes he doth expect his ſecond audience.

THE pope is not now ſo violent as he was heretofore, to haue the Valtelina into his hands, but is contented to let it remayne in the poſſeſſion of the Venetians and Griſons; and ſo much the rather, becauſe by that meanes he hopeth it wilbe ſecured from all Spaniſh inuaſions.

THE incloſed for your lordſhip came to my hands this weeke, in my letters from Mr. Queſtor. My laſt vnto your lordſhip was of the 26 of July, ſince when I haue not any from you. Thus, haueing nothing elſe at preſent worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I humbly craue leaue to kiſſe your hands, and reſt

Venice, Auguſt 1,
ſtilo nouo. 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſime Prencipe,

VPON the 25 of the laſt moneth, I wrote your highneſs a briefe relation of the eſtate of your affaires negotiated in this court, diſpatched only to preuent any ill impreſſion of rumours and delayes, happened by the ſodaine mutations, and vnſeaſonable death of your frend Mehemet baſſa; which beeing arriued, I hope your highneſs hath receiued ſuch ſatisfaction, that you haue proceeded in your princely reſolutions.

BEFORE I enter into the diſcourſe of the concluſion and anſwere of your highneſs letter, though I doubt not S^{r}. Todolaghy, your faithfull miniſter, hath giuen you ſome intimation; yet it is requiſite, that I ſhould amply acquaint you, that at laſt, I haue receiued his majeſties gracious command and directions, to correſpond with your highneſs, to aſſiſt in your worthy affaires, and to giue you full aſſurance of his roiall determinations, and acceptance of your frendſhipp, which you haue ſo often and ſo ſeriouſly propounded: wherein your highneſs may bee pleaſed to know, for a foundation, that his majeſtie hath formed and eſtabliſhed a ſtrong and perfect league with the king of Denmark, and the ſtates of the vnited prouinces, to continue vntill the affaires and peace of Germany ſhalbee reduced vnto their antient eſtate and condition, by the recouery of the palatinate, and the reliefe of all other princes and commonwealths oppreſſed, and for the reſtitution of vigor and life to the fundamentall ſacred lawes of the empire, violated by the armes of the common enemy: to which end, there are deſſigned ſufficient forces and contributions, conſtantly to bee ſupplyed. Wherein it is agreed, no ouerture of treaty or accord ſhalbee accepted by any of the colleagues but in writing, nor any anſwere giuen but by the knowledge and conſent of all intereſſed: in which confederacy, it is out of doubt, that the king of Sweueland had concurred, if the death of his ambaſſador at the Haghe had not preuented. It was then alſo determined, and ſince putt in execution, to inuite the French king, the electors, princes, and free citties of Germany, the ſenat of Venice, and duke of ſauoy. At this treaty, capten Quaad, your highneſs ſeruant, was preſent, and all things with him fully communicated, and ſuch conditions preſented to him, as might giue your highneſs aſſurance and encouragement to enter into this ſanctuary of peace; whereof, as I make no queſtion, you haue had from him a particular account, ſo I hope you haue retorned your reſolution and confirmation according to the tyme limitted. Concerning the contribution by your highneſs demanded, the ſollicitations whereof you haue recommended vnto mee; therein alſo I ſuppoſe you haue receiued ſuch ſatisfaction, that there wilbee no neede of ſo weake helps as myne; becauſe the ſumme beeing accepted, and agreed vpon, your highneſs doth treat with kings, whoſe honors are aboue all obligations, and in whoſe promiſſes there was neuer failing.

1626. AND becauſe your highneſs hath often and long expected an anſwere and reſolution in this buſineſs, with ſome ſenſe of doubt or diſtaſt, that your loue, expreſſed ſo conſtantly to the publique cauſe, had not that ready acceptation and correſpondence that it duly merited, in your wiſedome you may bee pleaſed to conſider, that actions of high importance are like great buildings and births that are long in forming and produceing to perfection, and thereby the more firme and durable: herein I will preſume to bee wittneſs, that this delay proceeded from no coldneſs in his majeſtie toward your highneſs, whom hee doth duly reſpect, but out of that prudence whereby all his roiall actions are vniformly directed; eſteeming it too much præcipitation to declare his reſolutions vntill the foundation were firſt deeply eſtabliſhed, by compoſing the league, vpon which, and into which, with ſafety, all thoſe who concurred in the like affections might bee receiued; imitating the wiſe king in the goſpell, that weighed his forces, and meanes, and confœderats, before hee entred into the dangers of warre: and beeing confident in your highneſs prouidence, that you would diſcouer in the firſt engagement of the king of Denmark, that other operations and deſſignes were in contemplation, and that you would perſeuere in your owne noble affections vntill the occaſions were ripened and fitted for a declaration, eſpecially hauing often from mee receiued generall aſſurance and intimation, ſuch as did comport with the ſecreſy of negociations and the degrees of that which is nowe concluded.

NEITHER could his majeſtie with honor offer to take that treaty out of the hands of the French king, which you ſeemed principally to addreſſe to him, by ſundry meſſages and letters, whereof his majeſtie had only from mee a collaterall account, wherein there was ſome omiſſion; ſeeing it was euer moſt probable, that his majeſties neareſt intereſts in the peace of Germany, would engage him in the protection thereof, and his preheminence in any league of the religion chalenge vnto him the firſt place; which I haue often intimated to your highneſs.

MANY other reaſons might bee added, but theſe beeing applyed only to your highneſs ſatisfaction, ſeeing it hath pleaſed God to conduct all the proceedings to a good end, I will conclude, that the wayes were bleſſed, ſo as your highneſs may bee aſſured of the conſtant affection of his majeſtie, who maketh no doubt, but you will vigorouſly and couragiouſly aduance your armes for your owne honor, and the publique benefitt of chriſtendome.

CONCERNING the preſent anſwere of your highneſs letters and informations to this ſtate, and the difficulties arriſen from them, I will not preuent the relation of your owne ſeruant; who hath with great faith and affection endeauoured to procure ſuch a diſpatch, as might giue you full contentment. What could bee obteyned is now written, which though they are not ſo direct and playne as the weight of the buſineſs required, yet in ſubſtance they wilbee ſufficient to warrant your highneſs proceedings. Beſides all the arts and induſtry of the aduerſaries, with falſe promiſſes and reports to corrupt or terrify the chimacham, your highneſs will conſider the vnhappy coniuncture of the loſſe of your frend, and of the newes from Babilon; vpon which aduantage the emperors agent did work, to bring the negotiation to a publique counſell; where, ſome for faction, others for feare of a newe warre, vſed many arguments againſt your propoſitions: notwithſtanding the wiſeſt and ableſt men haue concurred in opinion, and laboured to giue you ſatisfaction, foreſeeing it is leſs dangerous to keepe an aſſured enemy exerciſed and lowe, then to diſſemble vntill hee ſhalbee enabled to turne all his forces vpon your highneſs, which vndoubtedly wilbee done, aſſoone as proſperity ſhall correſpond with the deſire of reuenge; eſpecially, ſeeing the emperor wilbee prouoked by the diſcouery of this negotiation, which is become publique and will neuer bee forgotten. Your highneſs will find the ſtile of theſe letters and commands ambiguous, fearfull, and cold, proceeding from ignorance and weakneſs, which I haue obſerued in many conferences, that they haue ſought words to auoyd the accuſation of a breach; but in the generall, their deſire is, that you ſhould take the opportunity to vnite with your frends, and to vſe your armes for your owne and the common benefitt; which, though they dare not command in expreſs termes, yet in your highneſs letter there is an vniuerſall allowance and acceptation of all your ouertures and propoſitions, and a declaration, that to concurre with the princes in amity with this port is conformable to the will of the grand ſignor; concluding with a prayer for the proſperity of your armes, and the confuſion of your enemyes. In the letter intended to the kings of Denmark and Sueueland, there is nothing omitted to encourage and animate them, by promiſe to aſſiſt and to make no newe peace without their comprehenſion. The commands to the baſſa of Buda are ſufficient in your abſence, for the defence of your owne dominions, and to amuſe and terrify any that ſhall oppoſe you. And laſtly, An expreſs order to concurre in councell with your highneſs, and to expect no further directions from hence, but that whatſoeuer ſhalbee reſolued betweene you for the generall good, ſhalbee accepted and auowed. So that I conclude your highneſs is ſecured by a good correſpondence with the baſſa of Buda, vpon whoſe authority all the reſolutions of the borders doe abſolutly depend: though I ſhould haue bene glad, and haue much laboured, as S^r. Todolaghy can witneſs, that theſe declarations had bene more bold and couragious; yet knowing your highneſs wiſedome and good affection, I doubt not you will collect the ſubſtance and force out of them, which is an earneſt deſire to aduance your actions, in termes diſguiſed, and ſuch as the tymes and their owne affaires will permitt. I am aſſured your highneſs did not depend vpon any great matter from hence: you knowe the preſent eſtate and diſability of the great miniſters, and how ſubiect they are to daily changes. In the foundation you are ſafe, and ſure to bee defended in any vncerteyne euent: the firſt ſtepp and degree is the hardeſt; if your highneſs beginn, their owne intereſt will drawe them further then any perſuaſions: neither doe I think it was your highneſs deſire to vſe the ſcandalous help of their ſuccours, the noyſe whereof would doe more harme in Germany, then good in Hungary. You haue now begunne to enter into a more honorable and ſecure way, by a confederacy with thoſe princes, who by the common bond of one chriſtian faith, will nor forſake their allyes, nor bee wanting to their owne honors: and I hope, ſuch ſhalbee the ſucceſs of your victorious armes, that as there is before you a roiall reward and crowne, ſo you ſhall rather bee ſought vnto, and feared of theſe cold frends, then haue cauſe to attend the chaire of the ſcornfull. There reſts then nothing to the perfection of ſo many labours, and to the ſatiſfaction of ſo many princes, and the diſcharge of your owne honor engaged, then to beginn that glorious work, which proclaymeth reſtitution to the oppreſſed in their eſtates, and freedome to the tirannized in their conſciences, and liberty to religion. I haue largely enformed his majeſtie, that from hence ſhalbee no impediment; that the ambaſſadors wilbee continuall aduocates and ſentinells vpon all your occaſions; and that I haue receiued aſſurance from your miniſters, that allready you haue paſſed the Rubicon; and therefore I will conclude eatur, quo amicorum vota, & inimicorum iniquitas vocat; which beeing the reſolution of Cæſar, I wiſh your highneſs his ſucceſs, ut veniat, videat, et vincat, princeps Cæſaris æmulus. To this prophecy, I will add my prayers to Allmighty God, for your continuall encreaſe of honor, and reſt. 1626.

Conſtantinople, Auguſt $\frac{9}{19}$, 1626.

From my Lord GRANDESON.

Noble Lord,

I AM extreamely behinde hand, having receaved ſondry of your letters ſince I wrote any vnto yow. I ſtayd long for my lord dukes letters, and was loath to preſſe him whom I ſawe oppreſſed with ſo many buſineſs: at the length he found a tyme himſelf to write vnto yow, and ſent it away 20 dayes ſince. The diſpoſer of them was Mr. Maſon, his ſecretary, a very honeſt man, and one that deſires to be knowen vnto yow, and to doe yow ſervice; I finde his grace to reſpect him well. I hope in theſe letters his grace hath given yow good ſatiſfaction concerning his affection towardes yow, and the care he will take to value your ſervice to the king, and orderring your ſtay, and comming away after your owne liking. For our publique affaires, the king goes on with his former conſtancy and reſolution, to make warre with Spayne, notwithſtanding the many difficultyes he hath mett with ſince th' vnkinde fayling of the parliment.

HE hath alſo done an act that hath gayned him much honor and good affection among his people, though I thinke it will anger our neareſt neighbours. The French that attended the queenne, faſhioning a commonwealth among themſelves, and running 1626. ning courſes diſpleaſing of the king, we now hope of amendement, gave occaſion to the king to fall ſuddenly vppon them, and to ſend them away into France, men and woemen, 3 or 4 excepted; which, after much reluctation, much againſt their wills, they are gone above 400 of them: God ſend vs as fewe of them as may be.

THERE is a fleete of 30 good ſhipps ready to goe towardes the South, vnder the conduct of lord erle of Denbigh, and the lord Willoughby: and an other fleete in their abſence to guard our owne coaſt.

IN the court, th' erle of Pembroke is made lord-ſteward, and his brother of Mongomery lord-chamberlen in his place; whoſe eldeſt ſonne is fianced to the daughter of the duke of Buckingham.

WE heare that the king of Sweeden is broken-out with the king of Poland, and ſome of the townes in the Baltique-ſea; and hath taken Elven, and attempts for Danzicke.

I MADE bold with your houſe in mine occaſion when I was not well; now James Palace is in it, as Sir John Faermett hath certifyed you; and I remaine your debtor for the tyme I ſpent in it.

I AM ſorry I ſhall remaine ſo long from ſeing you and my neice; and wiſh there may be a good occaſion to drawe you home ſoone, and to your honor. In the mean tyme I will engage my beſt affections to ſerve you both, and be ever 10 Auguſt, 1626.

Batterſey.

Your moſt affectionate loving vncle to ſerve you.

GRANDISONE.

Superſcribed,

To the right honourable his very good lord Sir THOMAS ROE, knight, his majeſties ambaſſador att Conſtantinople.

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE ambaſſador of the prince of Tranſiluania is at laſt diſpatched, after many difficulties and delayes, interpoſed by the emperors faction, of which wee grewe very fearfull and iealous; but the concluſion beeing ſuch as wee haue collected, that there was no worſe intention then feare vnſeaſonably to bee engaged in a warre, and that the ſenſe of the State, was to giue as much encouragement to Gabor to vſe his owne armes, of which they hope to make their advantage, as their preſent condition would permitt, wee were contented to take what could bee gotten, which is, in ſumme, a generall approbation of all the propoſitions; a wary inanimation to proſecute them; a letter to bee vſed by Gabor, to inuite the kings of Denmark and Sueueland, and other princes of Germany, to a confederacy, both with the port, and with him (in my opinion friuolous and needleſs) and two commands to the baſſa of Buda, to appoint a conference with Bethlem, where all matters neceſſary ſhalbee reſolued, and to raiſe the frontire army, rather to threaten and defend, then to doe any act of hoſtility. And though in the ſtile of thoſe there is not that cleareneſs and vigour (and ſome particulars omitted) as was required by Gabor; yet, if hee bee determined really to proceed, (of which I haue no cauſe to doubt) they are ſufficient for all his intents; which were to vſe noe Turks but for his defence, wherein hee is fully prouided.

I HAUE ſent your lordſhip my letters to Gabor, that you may ſee what vſe I haue made of this negociation, and how I haue enforced it Wherein I found it neceſſary (according to your lordſhips inſtructions) to make ſome excuſe of my want of former orders, both to confirme him for the preſent, and to repaire myne owne reputation. The copies alſo of all the letters and commands I haue incloſed, ſuppoſing they will giue his majeſtie ſome ſatisfaction, and may bee vſefull in any further treaty; and there is no omiſſion that they come not in ciphar; for I am perſwaded, if the Spaniards had but ſo much on their part, they would print, and publiſh it to all the world.

I WILL preſume to giue my opinion of the effects of theſe negotiations; that out of all queſtion Gabor will drawe into Hungary, and make an aduenture to gett that crowne for himſelfe, vpon this aduantage, of the rebellion in Auſtria and warre of Germany; and that if the contribution bee ſupplyed, and any force ſent vpp to vnite with him, that hee will vigorouſly proſecute the quarrell to the gates of Vienna; and I am perſwaded there is no other way to finiſh the warre but by his meanes, who is more terrible to the enemyes cuntry then any formed army, which marcheth ſlowly, and may bee oppoſed. To this purpoſe hee hath made a generall muſter, and ſent forward to the frontire all his horſe, his foot beeing in garriſon in Hungary, and hath publiſhed, that hee will riſe vpon the 21th of this moneth, almoſt in playne termes declaring warre againſt the emperour. This his ambaſſador doth deliuer, and many merchants, newly arriued, affirme; but if hee ſee no ſeconds, hee will not goe beyond the poſſibility of a ſafe retraict; and hauing put all the cuntry into contribution, retorne with mony, knowing his peace with the emperour will allway bee in his owne election and power.

THE Turks doe not penetrate the ſecretts of his deſſignes, whom hee hopeth to vſe as ſentinells to watch his cuntry, or to engage them, before they vnderſtand it, in ſome action, whereof hee may reape the benefitt; but they alſo haue a kind of ſubtility, and hope to deceiue; and therefore I am perſwaded they will either not moue, or goe beyond their commiſſion. Fiue baſſas are appointed to the camp, whereof ſome are marched in hope of booty; and if they bee once brought to the frontire, it wilbee hard to keepe theeues from ſtealing.

THE emperour hath ſent what ſupply hee can make, to reenforce the garriſons, but will not bee able to drawe into the field; ſo that all the open cuntry wilbee left at diſcretion.

THE feare of this ſtorme hath made the emperour diſpatch in great diligence a meſſenger, who is two dayes ſince arriued with letters to the grand ſignor, and a ratification of the peace, which ſhould haue bene preſented now two yeares ſince: particularly I know not the contents, but I will endeauour to procure the copies, and then to make ſuch oppoſition as the occaſion ſhall require, and doubt not to hinder the acceptance, or at leaſt to deferr it vpon the point of honor, beeing not brought by an ambaſſador, and without the preſent, according to the articles. If there bee in this expedition any ſeruice done to his majeſtie, I haue done it; and as the ambaſſador of Tranſiluania did wholly addreſs himſelfe, and depend vpon mee, ſo I am perſwaded it wilbee acknowledged to his majeſtie, both from Gabor and Venice. Your lordſhip wilbee pleaſed to preſent it, ſuch as it is, to his majeſtie, and to preſerue mee in your accuſtomed fauour, as Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$. Auguſt, 1626.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

I HAVE receaued this weeke two packets from your lordſhip, the one being dated July the $\frac{1}{11}$, the other the $\frac{5}{15}$, which I receaued from your lordſhips ſecretary. The incloſed for England, I will ſend away by the firſt occaſion, and recommend them to Mr. Queſtors care, to be deliuered with all diligence.

THE French extraordinary ambaſſador of late hath had almoſt dayly audience of the ſenat, to whom he hath made knowen thoſe articles of the peace, concluded betweene the two crownes of France and Spayne. Theſe ſigniori, as yet, haue retorned him no direct anſwere to what he hath propoſed, but haue deliuered him their mynd in ambigious termes, like the anſwers of the oracle, which may be conſtrued in a double ſence; likewiſe deſiring him to conſider, without partiality, whither or no it had not beene fitting, that they ſhould haue beene acquainted with thoſe articles of peace before they were concluded and agreed on, as it was diuers tymes promiſed. This ambaſſador hath not yet procured from them any categoricall anſwer, though he hath earneſtly ſollicited it; but if theſe ſigniori do explayne themſelfes any further before his departure, I will not fayle to giue an account of it unto your lordſhip, by the next occaſion. It ſeemes that the French ambaſſador hath ſome hope that this republique will conſent to the peace made betweene France and Spayne, he hauing this weeke diſpatcht an expreſſe meſſenger to the pope, to know in what manner his forces ſhall enter into the Valtelina, vppon ſuppoſition that this ſtate ſhould embrace the peace allready 1626. concluded. Whither theſe ſigniori will accept of peace or no, is a ſecret which onely this ſenat is yet guilty of; there are diuers probabilityes on either ſyde, but I dare not make any bold conjecture.

THE French ambaſſador at his laſt audience, did ſollicit theſe ſigniori in the behalfe of the marquis di Coeuures, to whom, as he pretends, they are indebted, 80000 crownes. This debt is thought to be deſperate, and too great to be payed, they hauing ſo manny other occaſions at preſent to beſtow their monny, and therefore to this demand they haue returned no anſwer.

FROM Rome I vnderſtand, this weeke, that the pope is dangerouſly ſicke of a feauor, and that beſydes the diſeaſe of his body, he is no leſſe troubled in mynd, that the preſent affaires of Italy do ſo much croſſe his intentions.

THUS with my harty prayers vnto Almighty God for your lordſhips proſperity, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, Auguſt 15.
ſtilo nouo. 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

SINCE the writing of my letter vnto your lordſhip, I vnderſtand that theſe ſigniori haue giuen the French ambaſſador this anſwer: That although they will not expreſſely conſent to what he hath propoſed, yet neuertheleſſe they will content themſelfes to recall their forces out of the Valtelina, and not to oppoſe the effectuation of the articles, &c.

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE duplicate of your lordſhips letter of the 20. Aprill, with an addition of the 4th May after much ſleepe upon the way, is arriued; wherby I am confirmed, and heartened to proceed in his majeſties ſeruice, according to my rules, and that truſt you haue pleaſed to referr to my diſcretion, and the varietye of occaſions.

THE manifold graces and bountyes receiued from his majeſtie by your lordſhips mediation, with which you did formerly acquaynt mee, and haue now repeated, I did in moſt humble thanckfullnes acknowledge to his majeſtie, by my letters of the 16. July; and though I cannot ſufficiently expreſs my ſelfe to your lordſhip at this diſtance, yet I deſire you to beleeue, that I haue learned in the ſchooles, that gratitude is one of the grounds of juſtice. Ther only reſts to the perfection of all your fauours, and to fill vp my debt, that you wilbe pleaſed to putt his majeſtie in mynd of my laſt ſute, which I preſented in two ſeuerall petitions, to grant my tymely reuocation at the end of this yeare; which ſeaſon, if I ſhall looſe, I am rather taken in a nett, then continued; and I know my freinds in London, will make any uſe to keepe me, and deferr my returne. Bonus ſervus, ſemper aſinus: I ſhall finiſh a prentiſhip, and I hope it will ſatisfye them. For my ſucceſſor, I heare many doe pretend, and that it hath pleaſed his majeſtie to leaue the nomination of 3 to the company, reſeruing the election of one; I will not preſume to be a ſutor for any, though I ſhould bee glad to ſee ſuch a one, as would grace the imployment, and build vpon my foundations. For though this place bee farr from England, yet his majeſties honor is as precious here, and perhaps more tenderly to bee reguarded, then nearer home; and other ſtates doe ſend the choyceſt, or at leaſt men well knowne and qualefyed. I will onely name my kynſman, and bee otherwiſe free to receiue and ſerue whomſoeuer his majeſtie ſhall pleaſe to chuſe to releeue mee. In the meane tyme, if ther bee any farther occaſion in the publique, I will not neglect yt, humbly offering my ſelfe ready to receiue any other directions, wherin if ther bee no cauſe, yet it wilbe a great ſatisfaction to mee, if your lordſhip will pleaſe to command one of your ſecretaryes, in foure lines, to take knowledge of my letters; becauſe ſometyme the fayling of any one may interrupt the progreſs of buſines, or at leaſt the dependencys: ſince I receiued his majeſties directions, I haue written the dates in the margen.

Will. Roe.

16. } Jul. 29. } 3 Aug. PRESENTLY after the diſpatch of the Tranſyluanian ambaſſador, aduice came hither of the death of the baſſa of Buda, an ancient penſioner of the emperor, and but newly reconciled to Gabor, and therfore my confidence in him was weake.

He knew too much of the ſtate of the border, and had long taſted the ſweetnes of a bought peace, and was in his nature too cold, and conſideratiue, to beginn any great alteration; howſoeuer he was now wonne to make ſome ſhow of action, by rayſing the frontyre army, wherof he would haue held the reynes ſtiff in his owne hand; and might perhaps haue other ends then he pretended, and where the prince and he might hope to engage and deceiue one the other, both might haue fayled, for I am perſwaded they drew diuers wayes, and truſted in their arts. At his death he did conſtitute Morteſa, baſſa of Boſna, both gouernor and generall, a man much fitter for the Tranſyluanian deſſignes, becauſe Gabor may rule him, and the imperialls will not truſt him, his nature beeing remuant and ſtirring. He hath written hither to receiue the grand ſignors orders how he ſhall proceed, and made ſome free intimations of his owne affections, not to loſe the occaſion. Wherupon both chardges are conferred vpon him, and authoritye giuen him to proſecute the firſt counſayles, wherin he was intereſſed, and the moſt forward; and to this purpoſe I haue procured (with a ſmall preſent to the chancelor) to renew the commands to him, and letters to the prince, in the ſame tenor: and knowing that the new baſſa deſires no more but any colour of leaue, beeing agreed with Gabor, and in the head of his army, I am perſwaded the firſt newes will aſſure us, that they are both in action; and that this change will greatly aduantage the prince, and croſs the enemye. Notwithſtanding all theſe hopes and helps, which may alter with euery change of miniſters, the life and ciment of the buſineſs doth depend wholly vpon the performance of the contribution, with which Gabor wilbee engaged without any reſpects from hence, and without that, no authority can moue him. Therefore, to that point, her majeſtie muſt apply all her forces. 1626.

Vpon the emperors letters of ratification of the treaty, ther hath beene held a conſultation, and a way ſhowed them mannerly to deferr the acceptance: wherin yt was concluded, and confirmed to me by the chimachams faythfull promiſe, that they ſhould not be receiued thus obſcurely, contrarye to the articles; but remayne dormant in the hands of the agent, vntill a qualefyed ambaſſador ſhould come to preſent them; before which tyme, ther may happen many alterations, and the condition of the border, changed. What they conteyne by this happy meanes, exactly I know not, beeing no coppy abroad; but I haue ſeene another written to Halil baſſa to accompany them, (I ſuppoſe of the ſame ſubſtance) to perſwade him to counſayle the mayntenance of the peace, and to giue a credence to the reſident, to doe any act requiſite for the confirmation: which beeing not admitted, the concluſion may bee carried in length, vntill yt vaniſh.

From the Eaſt, wee haue no certeyne newes: The ayds ordeyned, ſcatteringly are gone from hence, and all the good hoped of them is, that the cytty wilbe the quieter; for the action of Babilon muſt be ended one way or other, before they can arriue. I haue not written to his majeſtie, becauſe my matter is rather a variation of the laſt, then new; confident in your lordſhips fauourable relation, I humbly take my leaue.

Conſtantinople, 26. Aug.
old ſtile. 1626.

Your lordſhips devoted thanckfull ſeruant.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

VPPON ſaturday laſt, which was the 22. of this month, the French extraordinary ambaſſador did take his leaue of the ſenat, who did preſent him with a chayne of gold of 2000 crownes price, and two of his ſecretaryes with 300 crownes apeece: vppon the 25. the ambaſſador did depart from this towne, leauing the worth of halfe his preſent behinde him, which he did beſtow vppon thoſe officers, which by the dukes appointment did attend him during his ſtay here. His firſt dayes journy was from hence to Padoua, where he was enterteyned with as much ſtate as that place could afford; and for thoſe few dayes journes which he is to trauill through the Venetian dominions, his expence ſhall be defrayed by theſe ſigniori. After his departure out of this ſtate, he is to enter into the Valtelina; from whence he is to take home with him, into France, the marquis di Coeuures: from thence he is to paſſe through Swiſſerland, and the Griſons, to negotiate with them concerning thoſe articles of peace which he hath 1626. allready propoſed to this ſtate I cannot giue your lordſhip the particular anſwers of this ſenat, to the ſeuerall articles of the ambaſſador, which in number were 20; but the ſumme of their anſwer in generall, I gaue your lordſhip in my laſt. That though theſe ſigniori will not yeald an expreſſe conſent to what hath beene propoſed, yet neuertheleſſe they will content themſelfes, to recall their forces out of the Valtelina, at the requeſt of the French king, and they will not oppoſe the effectuation of the articles.

YOUR lordſhips packet of the 26. July is ſafely arriued, and the incloſed deliuered. I hauing nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip with at preſent, do returne moſt humble thankes for the often aduiſe I haue receaued from your lordſhip, which will oblige me euer to remayne.

Venice, Auguſt 29.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

MONSIEUR de Preaux, the French extraordinary ambaſſador, before his departure from hence, did very much triumph that he had obtayned ſo fauorable an anſwer from the ſenat, to the demands of his maſter; and perſwaded the world to beleeue for a while, an abſolute agreement of theſe ſigniori to all the articles he had commiſſion to propoſe vnto them; but ſince, this prince hath imparted vnto thoſe ambaſſadors which are reſident here, the anſwers of the ſenat, vnto his propoſitions, his triumphes appeare to be but vaine, and without any victory: out of that great volume of his articles which he preſented to the ſenat, he hath receaued anſwers onely to theſe three:

1. FIRST, The French king doth require theſe ſigniori to vnite themſelfes with the Griſons, to keepe the paſſage of the Valtelina ſhut vnto the Germans for comming into Italy, for the ſeruice of the king of Spayne, except it be for the defence of the dukedome of Milan. To this the Venetians haue yealded their conſent.

2. SECONDLY, He doth require that this republique would coopperat for the chuſing of a gouernor and officers in the Valtelina, and for the ſetling of the penſion and annuall allowance which the generall ſhall giue to the Griſons. To this requeſt they haue fayrely excuſed themſelfes; and profeſſe that they will not haue any hand in that buſineſſe.

3. THE third and laſt requeſt to which theſe ſigniori returned any anſwer, was, that the Venetians ſhould retyre their forces out of the Valtelina. To this they anſwer, that hauing freed and regayned the Valtelina in the tyme of danger, which is now paſt, they are contented, vppon the requeſt of his majeſtie, not to ſtirre any farther.

I HAUING not any thing elſe to add to theſe anſwers of the ſenat, do here humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, September 4.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble, and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

MY laſt unto your lordſhip was dated Auguſt 29. The incloſed for your lordſhip I receaued this weeke in my packet from England.

T ~~From~~ Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord, 4/14 Sept. 1626.

INCLOSED in a Letter from Mr. Wilkenſon, I haue receiued a great pledge of your lordſhips fauour, the copy of his highnes of Sauoyes recommendation of the archbiſhop of Smirna to his ſonne; which hath done mee ſo much creditt, and will, if it take effect, ſo ſtrengthen mee and my ſucceſſors among theſe people, ouer whom one faction hath long tirannized often to our diſaduantage; that both I and they ſhall owe to your lordſhip many good fruicts, that we hope to gather by his authority and frendſhipp. I haue giuen a tranſcript to the archbiſhop, to ground his owne ſollicitation by his agents in Rome, the ſecret only paſſing betweene our ſelues; for there can bee no feare of any impediment, but the diſcouery of any correſpondence with vs heretiques: ſo that as yett I muſt lye hidd, and he will deferr his acknowledgment to your lordſhip. The iſlanders of Sio will petition for him, and there reſts nothing but that this recommendation be auowed by the cardinall, when he ſhall neede it. I can make your lordſhipp no valuable retorne, vnleſſe you will accept my vowes, that in all parts of the world (ſeeing this will not help mee) I wilbee your thankfull ſeruant.

THE Jeſuits haue long practiced to get a church, or a ſcholehouſe, in Smirna, and lately bought a peece of ground of the Greeke biſhopp, which I haue reſiſted; and hope they ſhall not ſettle there, to ruyne that church, and practice againſt vs. There are but fower here, and they haue twice attempted great alterations, to diſplace the patriarch, and to bring in ſome proſelite of their owne, bredd in the Greeke colledge at Rome, who in few yeares would fill all the ſees with Romiſh and Spaniſh dependants; but I haue ſtood in the breach, and ſent their inſtruments back fuller of deſpight, then hope to obteyne their purpoſes. This is one cauſe why I would haue ſome frends of the catholiques, that are not tranſported with paſſions nor buſy in proiects, whoſe temper and moderation will make a good counterpriſe to thoſe engines. ——

[The reſt of this Letter being more fully incerted in the next, is therefore omitted.]

To Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE comfort of his majeſties gracious acceptance of my meaneſt ſeruices, ſignified in your lordſhips letters of the 24. May, add wings and ſpurrs to my humble affections, and like infuſed grace, at once ſtrengthen both my will and ability in them: from that fauour, I will take the boldneſs to reply to the diuers parts thereof, in the order preſcribed mee.

CONCERNING the election of my ſucceſſor, I muſt confeſſe that I wiſhed, from experience of the neceſſity of good agreement betwene him and the marchaunts, ouer whom hee muſt carry a continuall carefull and watchfull eye; this imployment beeing different from all others, as hauing power ouer their eſtates and the gouernment of their trade; that ſuch might be choſen as in the firſt approaches there might not bee ſcattered any ſeeds of diſcontent, of which ſect too many are to bee found here; but that his majeſties pleaſure and their ſatisfaction might haue concurred. But when I vnderſtood the engagement of his roiall word, I retracted euen myne owne thoughts, and did not doubt there were reaſons aboue my vnderſtanding, to which I wholly ſubmitted my will; and now finding that there is an opinion that I am content to ſtay, by the command of fulfilling this yeare, I humbly obey; but beſeech your lordſhip to acquaint his majeſtie with the fallacy, that the yeare aboue my contract, which I conſented vnto at the command of the lords, and the requeſt of the marchaunts, is finiſhed in December next; and if it bee extended to another, I am taken in a nett, and ſhall not bring home thoſe comforts I carried abroad. Your lordſhip will find in the preſent conſtitution of this empire, which I will add in the concluſion, that I haue great reaſons to deſire my liberty; my owne affaires require it, and in his majeſties ſeruice I can doe no more: perhapps at my retorne, I ſhalbee able to cleare and deliuer many things impoſſible to write; and therefore I moſt earneſtly beſeech his majeſtie, to enterprett me aright, and to grant my reuocation, ſo tymely in the ſpring, that I may not bee ingaged, and looſe the ſeaſon, according to my petitions ſent him in my two laſt letters, wherein I deſired your lordſhips aduocation. Whoſoeuer his majeſtie ſhall pleaſe to ſend, I will receiue as becomes mee, and ſerue moſt faithfully; and among the candidats named, hearing of Mr. Tromboll, I cannot ſuſpect any other will weigh with his antient meritt; and next him, I muſt bee pardoned to wiſh well to my kinſman, ſubmitting my affection ſimply to the declaration of his majeſties pleaſure. I cannot omitt to acknowledge a grace receiued in contemplation of his majeſties honor from the ſenate of Venice, who hauing only an intimation from the bailo of my purpoſed retorne at this tyme, and that I deſired to paſſe by Italy, ſent a command hither, that one of their gallies ſhould bee ready to attend mee at Zant, and bring mee to my deſired port; of which, if your lordſhip, vpon occaſion of any conference with their ambaſſador, wilbee pleaſed to take knowledge, I ſhall receiue it for an eſpeciall fauour.

HIS majeſties letter to the grand ſignor is not yet arriued, our ſhipp riding halfe-full theſe 50 dayes in the channell, kept out by ſtrong northerly wynds; of which, aſſoone as it ſhall come to mee, I doubt not to giue his majeſtie a good account, and to leaue all things in fayre order, as far as the preſent coniunctures, which are very ill, will comport.

IT hath not bene out of my contemplation, that the liberty of the ports of Barbary might bee ſerviceable to his majeſties fleets, and to other men of warre within theſe ſeas; eſpecially if there bee any thought vpon Sicily, which is now the weakeſt of all the Spaniſh dominions, and trembles at euery noiſe, where great ſpoile and booty may bee found at a cheap rate. Therefore I haue treated with theſe miniſters, and ſhowed them the aduantage to the grand ſignor by our comming into the Mediterran, aſwell for the weakening of his enemyes as the keeping of the Streights open, to maynteyne the trades; and haue preuailed ſo farre, as to bee promiſed commands to all thoſe ports, to receiue the Engliſh as frends, and to relieue their neceſſityes for mony; of which it is neceſſary to take many duplicats, that the officers of any fleete may haue copies, which I doubt not to prouide; but vpon theſe I dare not counſell too much to relye. Your lordſhip bee pleaſed to knowe, that the citty of Algier hath rebelled againſt their baſſa, who poiſoned himſelfe; and thereupon it is reported, that they haue erected a commonwealth, and choſen officers, reſolued not to accept of any gouernours from hence; and that this ſtate is doubtfull how to proceed, vntill they receiue ſome ouertures or aduiſe, autenticall from themſelues, according to which they may gouerne their actions: for to ſend a baſſa to bee refuſed, is to call for oppoſition, and wilbee an open affront and engagement to maynteyne their authority; and there is no man that dares aduenture, for the inſolencyes lately committed, to accept the charge. Therefore they are content to conniue and to take no notice, beeing vnable to force them, and to work vpon the occaſion; which they attend from the controuerſy betweene them and the Venetians not yet reconciled. When I ſhall ſee the reſolution of the port, and that a newe gouernour ſhalbee appointed, I will treate with him; both for the admittance of his majeſties fleetes, as alſo for reſtitution to Mr. Leate, who hath ſuffered a great loſſe for a little ſpoile done by the Cales armado: in the mean tyme they will not dare to refuſe the ſtrongeſt; and I will procure letters from the grand ſignor to that purpoſe. With thoſe of Tunis, there is better meanes of treaty, becauſe they liue in ſome obedience, and the port is not leſſe commodious. To which place a newe baſſa now beeing deſſigned, I will deale effectually, and drawe from him what aſſurance I am able: it wilbee a moſt happy thing for the merchants, if any deſſigne ſhall bring part of his majeſties forces into theſe ſeas: for, as I am perſwaded, within the Streights there may bee found as good prey and ſpoile vpon the coaſts of Spaine, and the iſlands, beeing leſſe guarded, as on the Weſterne ſhore; ſo it wilbee a meanes to humble or weare out the piratts, and to conſtreyne them to reſtitution, and a better proceeding with the Engliſh; where a ſodayne reuenge may bee taken, and their ſhipps fall into our power for ſatiſfaction, or ſecurity.

WHAT the proceeding of Gabor, and the diſpatch of his laſt negotiation hath bene, I haue formerly therewith acquainted your lordſhip by ſeuerall letters of the 16. 31. July, 12. and 26. Auguſt; wherein I aduiſed the ſodayne coldneſs of the French ambaſſador; which ſince hath ſo farr encreaſed, that I perceiue not any correſpondence but formall, betweene him and the Tranſiluanian agent; and haue diſcouered from the bailo, that hee hath receiued ſome countermand to proceed in any engagement. Notwithſtanding that, the French giue out, that their miniſter doth vnderhand contribute and animate Gabor, by ſecrett wayes betweene themſelues: the reaſon of this retraict from ſo much forwardnes, heate, and calling vpon mee, I cannot penetrate; though I am perſwaded, the reſident here had no more ſtomack to aduance it, when hee found that the concluſion and mony ſhould not paſſe his fingers: his majeſties wiſedome will diſcerne the failing. The deſertion of the Valteline, and this, hath ſprung from one roote: I will not preſume in this point to vtter my thoughts, but help to maynteyne the opinion of French ayds, aſwell as I can, and conclude, that if there bee no diſgrace from the affaires of Germany, and the proceedings of the king of Denmark, the neceſſity will not bee ſo great, as to diuert Gabor from his purpoſes; purpoſes, who hath aymes only to bee ſupported by the league of the religion. I am not ignorant, that in the beginning of this warmth with the French, that there were ſome light motions to caſt the empire vpon France, which was mentioned here, but I never thought it worthy aduiſing; and with it all that correſpondence is vaniſhed, and my opinion is, that the inward change of the French is greater then outward ſhame will ſuffer it to appeare. His majeſtie will pardon mee this boldneſs.

THE Spaniſh treaty is for a tyme reiected, vnleſſe it reuiue by the comming of a great ambaſſador from the emperour, whoſe acceptance the agent doth much preſſe, and promiſe his ſpeedy arriuall; of which from Vienna wee haue no aduice, and will reſiſt the credit, or that the retorne of the Jewe Cormaco, ſent into Spaine, bring newe inſtructions, who is gotten to Liuorne, and defrayed by the king of Spaine; but I make no doubt to raiſe difficulties ſufficient to hinder any concluſion, if no alteration from Germany melt this ſtate, already by their owne affaires ſoftened. The charge hath not bene ſo great, as that his majeſtie will find it any burthen: in that I haue had care, not to ſpoile the commodity by the price; in which equally all other ambaſſadors haue concurred, except only in petty expences, as I was the miniſter, of which I would not make a bill, and will wholly referre myſelfe to my owne maſter.

SINCE my laſt letters, the prince of Tranſiluania hath ſent hither a poſt in great expedition, with newe letters and inſtructions to his agent; to bee firſt communicated with mee, and then related to this ſtate, with expreſs charge to negotiate and driue to a reſolution their concurrence with him; wherein, for newes and animation, hee aduiſeth many great matters, out of which I haue choſen part to ſend your lordſhip for better authority, in his owne words. Rex Daniæ Joannem Erneſtum, ducem Weymarienſem et Mansfeldium, cum 20000 belli gerantium, nobis in auxilium miſit, cum quibus fideles noſtri Franciſcus Kun, & ſecretarius Germanicus, quem in civitatem Miggies expediveramus, uſque ad Braſlaviam metropolim Sileſia, ſimul adventarunt. Sileſiam ſuperarunt, caſtra poſuerunt ad Teſſin, diſtantem ab oris Hungariæ duobus ſolummodo brevibus milliaribus, verùm affluvio Vag^{s}. et Solnæ octo Germanicis milliaribus abeſt. Iſti jam nos duntaxat adire volunt, et nos præſtolantur. Ego, ſecundum conjurationem meam vigeſime die Auguſti expedivi tria millia equitum haſtatorum ab oppido Thorea ad Johannem Erneſtum ducem Weymarienſem: ipſemet quoque Deo volente, et cæptum fortunante 28 die Auguſti iter aggrediar. I haue cited the text, becauſe it ſeemed to mee a quick riſing, according to my intelligence, that the count Mansfield ſhould bee victorious ſo high in Sileſia; but on the other ſide, I know not why Gabor ſhould deceiue himſelfe, and muſt therefore creditt his words, eſpecially ſeeing his preſent negotiations here are conformable. The ſubſtance whereof is reduced to two heads; Firſt to declare to the grand ſignor, That his eſtates in their diett, by his conſent, haue elected his lady to the ſucceſſion of that principality; and to require the confirmation according to the antient rites and capitulations betweene them: for this ſodaine reſolution, without conſulting this ſtate, and in excuſe of the ſexe, hee hath propoſed many reaſons, all directed to one ſcope, that the encreaſe of the houſe of Auſtria is ſo dangerous to all Germany, that it was requiſite ſo to prouide for Tranſiluania, to preuent the corruptions of an interregnum; wherein the imperialls might worke diſtemper and diuiſion, as that the ſucceſſor ſhould bee declared, and in poſſeſſion, and one well allyed and ſtrengthened by the princes oppoſite to the Auſtrians; which condition meeting in his wife, made her without all exception. That this election was paſſed with the conſent, and in contemplation of his allies and frends of this port, and vnder their aſſurance of protection; and that therefore hee ſhould vrge the grand ſignor to concurre and to approue his care, imployed only to preuent and humble the common enemy. Secondly, that whereas now ſixe yeares paſt when hee liued in peace, and without offence of the emperour, hee had bene commanded to mooue his armes, and to prouoke an enemy now irreconcileable; which councell hath bene continued vntill this tyme by the moſt experienced miniſters of this empire, and letters ſent him the laſt year of the ſame tenor, that hee ſhould procure a playne approbation of his proſecution of thoſe deſſignes, which beeing formerly indifferent, were now become neceſſary; and to perſwade not to looſe this opportunity of confining the emperour for euer within Germany, and ſetling an aſſured peace and ſafety to the Turkiſh frontire, that is, by his conqueſt of Hungary; that if hee found any 1626. difficulty in either of theſe, that he ſhould vnmaske and playnly proteſt, that already theſe reſolutions and confederations were made by the authority of the grand ſignor, too late to bee reuoked; and his owne honor ſo farr thereby engaged, that hee cannot retyre. Therefore as hee will pay his tribute, and continue his faith; ſo, if they will leaue him to himſelfe, they muſt not diſdeyne the like meaſure in their occaſions from him and his frends.

THESE letters and meſſages haue bene roundly deliuered, and a generall anſwere giuen, that for the ſucceſſion they will conſult, and reſolue to his fitt ſatisfaction; and that a letter ſhalbe preſently written to approue the antient counſayles. The agent not content with this coldneſs, nor well diſcerning the tymes, preſſed both the vizier to a direct and particular anſwere, and mee to aſſiſt him; but in the inſtant arriues the newes from Babilon, (which I had 6 dayes before) that the camp was riſen and fledd by the fauour of the night, forced to burne their tents and prouiſions; and to breake their greate artilery, and caſt it into the Euphrates: that the miſeries of this army haue bene ſuch, as men in the field neuer ſuffered, conſumed by famine and ſuffocated by heate; by this, 12000 dyed in one day; the other may bee iudged by the price of a buſhell of barly, ſold for 58 checquins of gold: that the great vizier had beheaded 3 of the moſt valiant baſſas, hoping thereby to caſt the enuy of this ſhame vpon them; and that retiring to Moſull, the Perſian vſed his victory, and following a flying army did continuall execution for 10 dayes vpon the reare; ſo greate a blowe the Turkiſh empire neuer receiued; the newes whereof was taken with ſo much ſaddneſs, that it was no ſeaſon to treate of making newe warres. The emperors agent makes vſe of this deiection, oppoſeth all diametrally, and promiſeth the preſent comming of a great ambaſſador to ratify the peace; and this ſtate knowes not whom to beleeue, weakened in ſpiritt by their ſucceſſes, and the preſent conſtitution. Futuri ambiguus, et magis quid vitaret, quam cui fideret, certus. Wherefore I haue councelled, not to prouoke by importune preſſure a deſpairefull anſwere, but to giue tyme to recollect and gather hearte; and to accept of this generall letter, with a promiſe from the chimacham annexed, that aſſoone as a fewe dayes of conſultation and prouiſion for their affaires in Aſia are paſt, that hee will enter into a particular conſideration of the propoſitions of Gabor, and giue him ample content in them; and that in the meane tyme hee may proceed cheerfully. This I hope to diſpatch in two dayes, and doe beleeue it wilbee ſufficient for the preſent, and perhapps will not bee ſo yll for the deſſignes of the prince nor the coniunctures of Germany, to whom the name of a Turkiſh inuaſion is ſcandalous, that hee is not ouerawed by them; when I doubt not, to vſe ſuch cordialls and preſeruatiues, at leaſt to diſcredit the preſent comming of any imperiall ambaſſador, to deferre the peace, and to keepe the balance as it ſtands. There is no cauſe to ſuſpect, by the feruency of theſe negotiations, but that Gabor is in earneſt, ſincere, and wilbee engaged, if no croſſe from Chriſtendome diſhearten him; vpon whoſe ſucceſſes and fauour hee is more attentiue and dependant, then from theſe vnable to giue him any great aydes, and afrayd to prouoke him to diſpleaſure.

YOUR lordſhip will perhaps think it impertinent, that I make any judgment of the reſolutions of this ſtate; but becauſe they haue ſome relation with the affaires of Chriſtendome, I will relate what they doe, and what councells, in my opinion, they wilbee enforced to followe. At preſent they ſtriue to diſſemble both their knowledge and feeling, and haue conſulted this day what courſe to take, to ſtopp the progreſs of a victorious enemy. It hath bene propoſed, to make a newe great vizier, but the charge of his ſetting out doth not comport with their meanes; and there is ſome feare of diſcontenting the old, who is acceptable with the multitude for bringing them off from their great miſeries. Therefore, though another is vulgarly named, yet the beſt opinion and moſt likely to preuaile, is that they will conniue and ſend newe commands and encouragement to the generall, to make a ſtand to retyne the reliques of the army, and to fortify himſelfe in Moſull or Diarbecker for this winter, promiſing to make ſufficient prouiſions of ſouldiours, mony, and munition for the ſpring; and that then it wilbee neceſſary for the grand ſignor to goe in perſon, at leaſt as farr as Aleppo; without whoſe preſence it wilbee difficult, either to raiſe or keepe together a competent army, proportionall to the ſeruices: which reſolution, if it proceed, this citty wilbee left deſolate, and no buſineſs done here but to guard it, trade decayed, and the vſe of ambaſſadors fruictleſs: for to follow the camp, wilbee impoſſible. I retorne therefore to my humble petition, that my reuocation may preuent my miſery; and in this confidence of his majeſties goodneſs, and your lordſhips fauour, I liue in hope to ſee my cuntry. And ſo, full of thankfulneſs for all your lordſhips meritts towards mee, I reſt Conſtantinople, $\frac{6}{16}$. Sept.

1626.

1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

From Lord CONWAY to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Right Honorable,

HIS majeſtie hauing taken into due conſideration the propoſition made vnto you by the marquis of Baden, and conſulted the ſame with a comitte of his moſt confident counſellors; although his majeſties preſent great engagements, his neceſſityes, and the proſecution of the deſignes already projected, for offence and defence both by land and ſea, might juſtly excuſe him from embracing any new allyances, or entering vppon new actions that will require coſt: yet, to declare his readineſſe to aſſiſt the good cauſe to the vttermoſt poſſibility of his power, his majeſtie is pleaſed not onely to entertayne the ouerture with good likeing, and acknowledgment and thankes to that gallant prince for his good reſolution, and purpoſeſſe, and particular affection to his majeſtie; but allſo to proceed to further treaty with him, in this matter. To which purpoſe his majeſtie, by this incloſed to the marquis, giues your lordſhip creditt to conclude with him, and to bind his majeſty to the performance of that treaty which ſhall be agreed on. And therefore his majeſtie, approuing the propoſition in all poynts, hath commanded me to ſignify his pleaſure vnto your lordſhip, that you accept thereof in his name, and ingage his majeſtie to the performance; ſo as the Venetians, the duke of Sauoy, and the marquis, doe on their parts alſo engage and bynd themſelfes, to performe what is propounded and required to be by them performed: that is to ſay, that his majeſtie ſhall contribute to the preſent deſigne and diuerſion intended, ſo much monny as ſhall be ſufficient for the rayſing and pay of fiue thowſand foote, and one thowſand horſe, for ſix months. That the Venetians and the duke of Sauoy, according to what you intimate in your letter, ſhall ſeuerally mayntaine the like proportion. That the marquis ſhall allſo furniſh his foure thowſand foote and one thowſand horſe, and ſhall prouide a ſufficient proportion of cannon, munition, and other military prouiſions, compitent for ſuch an army: that his army ſhall be forthwith rayſed, and march into Germany with all diligence; and the preſent faire opportunity be in no ſort neglected, nor the enterpriſe delayed by any default of any of the confederats. And theſe conditions being reciprocally agreed vnto and accepted, his majeſtie is well pleaſed to enter into the action; but if any of the confederatts ſhall retyre, or ſo long deferre to aſſent to their quotas, or to ſatiſfye the ſame, as that the ſeaſon ſhould be loſt, or difficultyes rayſed againſt the probabillityes of the ſucceſſe, which now ſeemes apparent, his majeſtie in ſuch caſe cannot conſent to be a contributor, but will hold himſelfe free and diſingaged from the payment; and for that particular offer made by the marquis of Baden to disburſe his majeſties quota, his majeſties pleaſure is, that you aſſure him of his majeſties kind acceptation and thankes, and the action going on with joynt contribution, that you oblige his majeſtie to the reſtitution and reimburſement of all ſuch monies, ſo to be disburſed for him at the end of two yeares: what the proportion will amount vnto, being vncertayne here, and not particularly expreſt, it is left vnto your lordſhip, to take care that his majeſtie be not ouerburdened; and alſo to prouide, that in the forming of the treaty his majeſtie receaue no diſaduantage, nor be ingaged further than the Venetians and the duke of Sauoy; without whoſe conjunction, his majeſtie holds it not fitt for him in any ſort to enter into the buſineſſe. And they hauing returned anſwere allready, that they will contribute vnto that diuertion their part, in caſe his majeſtie will enter and contribute a proportionall quota; his majeſtie now requires you, vppon receipt of this his order, to quicken them in the performance ſo effectually and ſpeedily, as the opportunity that offers it ſelfe to do ſo great a worke may not be loſt.

YOUR lordſhips care and wiſdom, in aduancing this buſineſſe, his majeſtie doth gratiouſly vouchſafe, and eſteemes it as a very great ſeruice; and he alſo takes in gratious part the aduertiſments of the 8. of Auguſt, and approues your endeauours 1626. to ſtirre vpp the proteſtant Swiſſes to refuſe the treaty of peace, and ſtand vppon defence of the good cauſe, not doubting but that by your induſtry much good may be effected, both with them and elſewhere, by perſwading the oppoſition of that peace, and encouraging them to employ their armes to preſerue their owne, and the common liberty.

St. Martins Lane,
8. Sept. 1626.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I AM verie ſorrie to find by your letters of the 30th June, and 5. of July, (both which I receiued on Fridaie laſt) that mine to your lordſhip haue had the ill fortune to be ſoe long on the waie, and thereby the contentment and ſatisfaction, which I hope you will receiue by them, ſuſpended and deferred to your griefe and diſcomfort; the height of which you haue ſoe paſſionately expreſt, as euen with ſorrow I lookt vpon it, and ſhould haue beene much aſhamed of mine owne defaults, if my heart did not beare mee witnes of my affection and reſpects vnto you, and my reaſon aſſure mee that my letters arriving will fully ſatisfie you in all points.

YOURS, both to his maieſtie and to mee, I haue preſented vnto him, who graciouſly continues the vouchſafing, and approbation of your good endeavours. And for the buſines of the *49392421 59 which you haue ſoe happilie broken, by procuring their meſſenger to be ſent backe, his majeſtie eſteemes it as a ſingular ſervice, and is confident of your watchfulnes to ſtopp, as farre as is poſſible, the 47976292 even of all 596299 of ſuch a 59, att leaſt to prevent the 2734579292 to any ſuch 96746647, wherein you ſhalbe ſure of effectuall concurrence from .208. And for the 7897937 you haue made in that 999942426299, as my laſt (whereof the incloſed is the duplicate) gaue you warrant from 21. to 49797 your 46963, with .214. So you ſhall not need to doubt, but that vpon particular 775397 of your 94999462991 20 will giue order for your 436247336299.

IN the † 97296236299 of .127^{s} 71 there, though I know not of 64 immediately from 20. to .130, or other 344643937122679, then 224 72 47372677 in .257, yett you haue exactly ſatiſfied his majeſtics intencion and order, ſignified by my former letters, which was to 344 2461225 29 all things 436292 in that 43397359 64 and 7392749641 99296 97 drawing 154 to 39 29634299 of 178. And if the 947744 which you 37624771 224 70 to 775397 haue beene 2439677 with thoſe 463527233 62994 it will be ſufficient 4736 42681 794 225.

WEE

The above is decypher'd as follows:

* Spaniſh treaty which you haue ſoe happilie broken, by procuring their meſſenger to be ſent backe, his majeſtie eſteemes it as a ſingular ſervice, and is confident of your watchfulnes to ſtopp, as farre as is poſſible, the renewing even of all motion of ſuch a treaty, at leaſt to prevent the hearkening to any ſuch ouuerture, wherein you ſhalbe ſure of effectuall concurrence from the Venice ambaſſador. And for the expence you haue made in that oppoſition, as my laſt (whereof the incloſed is the duplicate) gave you warrant from his majeſtie to ſpend your quota with the ambaſſador reſident, ſoe you ſhall not need to doubt, but that vpon particular demand of your proportion, the kyng will giue order for your ſatisfaction.

† Negotiation of Bethlem Gabors ambaſſadors there, though I know not of letters immediately from the kyng to the prince of Tranſiluania, or other aſſurance giuen then his agent receiued in the Low countryes; yet you have exactly ſatisfied his majeſties intention and order ſignified by my former letters; which was to aſſiſt him in all things ſauing in that ſcandalous and dangerous point of drawing the grand ſignor to an inuaſion of Chriſtendome. And if the orders which you aduiſed his miniſters to demand, haue beene granted with thoſe qualifications, it wilbe ſufficient ſecurity for him.

1626.

WEE haue heard from Germany, and hope that part of Bethlem Gabors forces are ioyned to count Mansfelt in Sileſia, and himſelfe readie divers weekes ſince, to march with the reſt vpon ſome deſigne. The * 5292 971 77953457 not long ſince hath ſent him 391 3877 97 48, and written to 258 to 932712 25 by the waie of 42, the 48 they are to 3996423667 by the 60.

THE 942937, I heare, hath now a 2796 in 257, Mr. 463346, who was there when 60 was 399356777 the laſt winter.

HE ſaies he expected to haue found there 20^{s} 71 the 70 97 96274 94293741, according to the former reſolution, for a 7646274 59; but fayling therein, he purpoſed to 3957 with 9667466474 to 21, hauing 64 of 34777937, which he would not haue vſed if he had found 71 7495 17 in 257. The end of all, I conceiue wilbe to 77539 713442463937 of 48. When 72 ſhall 344267 and haue 37797127347, and 394674771 2 will giue 8961393339696.

IN the meane time, if it ſhalbe needefull, your lordſhip may [a] 344647. 130 of his majeſties conſtant purpoſe, not tc deſiſt from ayding the good cauſe, and oppoſing the common ennemy of the publicke libertie and true religion, nor to leaue vndone or vnattempted whatſoeuer, either in offence or defence, he can poſſibly compaſſe by his owne power, or prevaile with his frends to vndertake.

[a] Aſſure the prince of Tranſiluania.

And that it is not to be doubted but that † 22419697. 72 in 627471 93464 will ſpeedily 4766497 with full 4362473362991 69632292 21^{s} 2967962994.

YOUR lordſhip may alſo ſhew vnto [b].127 how great and heavie a burthen his majeſtie hath and doth beare in this publicke worke; for beſides his engagement to the king of Denmarke, which his majeſtie endeavours with all care poſſible to ſatisfie; his aſſiſtance to the Low-countries, the charge of Mansfelts troopes, which haue coſt his majeſtie aboue eight ſcore thouſand pounds, and the vaſt expence of his laſt yeares great fleete and land army (which though it was vnſucceſſefull, yett was it not vnuſefull, having putt the ennemy to infinite coſt for defence of his coaſts, and diverted his thoughts from enterpriſes abroad, to looke to himſelfe att home); this yeare his majeſtie hath beene continually alarmed from abroad with the mightie preparations of ſhipping in the ports of Spaine, and att Dunkirke, and land armies to be therein imbarked for ſome attempt vpon England, or Ireland, where the ennemy had formed an intelligence. And his majeſtie, holding it wiſdome to doubt the worſt, found it neceſſarie to provide againſt the ennemies deſignes, by all waies poſſible; and to that end, that his kingdomes ſhould be put into good ſtate of defence, the trayned bands well armed and diſciplined, the forts and ſtrong places repaired and putt in order of defence, the magazines ſupplied with all military prouiſions, and good fleetes put in readines for the guard of the coaſts and narrow ſeas, and to attempt the ennemy within his owne harbours, to hinder them from ioyning, or to amuſe and divert them, by forcing them to looke to their owne defence. To which purpoſe there are now diſpatcht to ſea, vnder command of

[b] Bethlem Gabor.

---

* The king of Denmarke not long ſince hath ſent him an ayde of mony to the States, to paye him, by the waie of Conſtantinople, the mony they are to contribute by the league.

The prince, I heare, hath now a gentleman in the Low-countries, Mr. Quad, who was there when the league was concluded the laſt winter.

He ſaies he expected to haue found there the kings ambaſſadors, and the miniſters of other princes, according to the former reſolution, for a further treaty; but fayling therein, he purpoſed to come with ouuertures to his majeſtie, hauing letters of credence, which he would not have vſed, if he had found ambaſſadors from England in the Low-countries. The end of all, I conceiue, wilbe to demand aſſiſtance of mony. When the agent ſhall arriue, and haue beene heere anſwered, I will giue you an account.

† His owne agent in theſe parts will ſpeedily returne with full ſatisfaction touching his majeſties intenſions.

the lord Willoughby, [c] 1794627 good ſhipps, and 100 intended for the guard of our owne ſeas, whereof part are readie, the reſt preparing with all ſpeed: beſides all which, his majeſtie employes divers ſhipps to ride in the river of Elb, and lye vpon thoſe coaſts to ſtopp the tranſportation of all ſorts of ammunicion of warre to any the dominions of Spaine, which is a matter of ſingular conſideration, there being att this time aboue 40 ſayle in that river laden with thoſe commodities, many of which haue, for divers moneths, beene ſtopt in their voyages. And this relation I haue made vnto your lordſhip, that if * 130, or 224 70, ſhall 33551 6999. 8961 794 48 29 679777 from .20, your lordſhip may 74357 ſome 72 61 3946747 for the 6857 and the 93334299, and 47774471 225 to the 394 6741 224 72 ſhall 47372 671 2749.

Your lordſhip, I preſume, will, before this arriue, haue heard of the diſmiſſing of all the French that were ſervants to the queene. Herewith I ſend you the relation and true reaſons mooving his majeſtie thereunto. The lord Carleton was vpon this occaſion ſent into France to ſhew the cauſes. There it is taken verie highlie, and an ambaſſador is comming to demaund the reſtoring of them or others, in the roomes of ſuch as his majeſtie ſhall haue iuſt cauſe to be offended with. I conceiue his majeſtie will not in any ſort hearken to it, having found the inconvenience of diſturbances in the ſtate, by the practiſes of the prieſts, and diſquiett in his houſhold by the partiallityes of the French, who for their owne ends ſought to eſtrange her majeſtie from our Engliſh nation. But her majeſties houſe is now ſetled with the ancient ſtate and honor of the queenes of England, and with more contentment to both their majeſties. Vntill that ambaſſador hath had his audience and anſwere, the lord Carleton doubts the French will delay his diſpatch; which is noe great comfort vnto him, being not much careſſed, nor well aſſured from the ſcorne of the ruder ſort of people, incenſed by the fabulous aggravations of thoſe that went from hence. Soe aſſuring you of my affection and readines to be vſefull to you in all your occaſions, I remaine

St. Martins-lane,
8. Sept. 1626.

Your Lordſhips affectionate friend to ſerue you,

E. Conwey.

The Reasons of his Majeſties diſmiſſing of the French, the Queenes ſeruants, are theſe, viz,

1. That his majeſtie had with infinite patience obſerued, that the happie converſation that ought to paſſe betwene him and his deare wife, which was the principall comforte of marriage, had not onely bene interrupted, but wholly quenched or perverted by the over much authoritie that ſome of them had exceſſively vſed, inſomuch that ytt was to bee feared leaſt the vnkindneſſes, refuſalls, and offences, which had ſo often happened, ſhould, if it were not prevented, growe into a habitt; whence irrepairable croſſes and diuiſions might ariſe.

2. That they had ſoe wholly captivated her majeſties will and affections, gouerning the ſame by their enterteinement and advices, as thereby ſhee had bene perſwaded both to reſiſt his majeſties commands, and follow theirs, and wholly to eſtrange her ſelfe from that converſation, yea, knowledge of this nation, his majeſties naturall ſubjects, which ſhee ought to haue, and was moſt requiſite.

3. That having thus framed a faction, like a little republick, amongſt themſelues, euen they tooke vpon them in many things to oppoſe his majeſties pleaſure, to fauour and countenance thoſe whome his majeſtie did not like, and to haue intelligence with them, which ys a matter of that daungerous conſequence, as the wiſdome of his majeſties gouernment, and conſtitution of this ſtate, could not permitt.

---

[c] Forty.

* The Prince of Tranſiluania his miniſters ſhall call vpon yow for mony intended from the kyng, your lordſhip may draw ſome fit anſwere for the tyme and your occaſion, and referre him to the anſwere his agent ſhall receiue here.

4. THAT more particulerly the biſhop of Mannde, and ſome others, pourſuing 1626. the practice begunne betwene the marquis of Blainville and him, did labour to forme a faction of Romaine catholiques within that kingdome, and did ſoe much miſreporte vnto the French king (though without any iuſt ground) all his maieſties actions and purpoſes, as ytt ſeemed nothing was more ſought, then occaſions to make a ſeparation betwene the crownes, and a breach of that ſtrict correſpondency which ought to be betwene princes ſoe auntiently and now ſoe nearly allyed.

5. LASTLY, They had ſoe much preuailed vpon her majeſties ſweet nature, as vnder colour of devotion to perſwade her to ſome vnwarrantable acts, and moſt vnbeſeeming the dignitie of ſoe great a queene, more eſpetially to make a pilgrimage to the comon place of execution att Tiburne, where, with the biſhop, and diuers others of the principall of them kneeling, praiers were made to thoſe whome they falſly call ſaints and martires, that haue ſuffered there; who, in truth, haue bene executed ether for treaſon or fellony againſt the lawes, and not for the cauſe of religion.

THESE their exorbitant proceedings, gaue his majeſtie juſt cauſe to conſult with his confident counſellors for the ſpeedy preuenting of the inconueniences and miſcheifes which were threatned, if the ſame ſhould be permitted. And thervpon his majeſtie reſolued (without expoſtulation or deſſigning out of perticuler perſons or cauſes) to deliuer himſelfe and the queene, his deare conſorte, from them, and imediately to ſend them away well rewarded and attended with all accomodation neceſſary for all ſortes of prouiſions, till they ſhould be landed in France, and then forthwith, they being diſcharged, to proceed to the ſetling of her majeſties houſhold, with as much ſtate and ſplendor, both for nomber of perſons, and qualitie of her officers and attendants, both men and weomen, as euer queene of England had. And for her perticular content, if ſhe ſhould deſire ytt, to ſtay here ſome ſelected perſons and officers of the French, together with a confeſſor of her majeſties owne choice, to whome ſome other prieſts ſhould be joyned; that neither for the pointe of her religion, or ſeruice of her howſhould, there might bee any cauſe of complaint lefte, his majeſtie herein ſeeking nothing elſe then their mutuall honor, comfort, and contentment. And theſe reſolucions haue bene accordingly performed.

HIS majeſtie beſtowed vpon the biſhopp, madame de St. George, the count and counteſſe de Tillieres, and count de Sipieres, in jewells, to the value of 10000 pounds; and in ready money, amongſt the reſt, aſmuch; and further, yeelded to all demaunds of theirs of debts due from the queene, for money lent or laid out, or pencions pretended; and at the requeſt of the queene added 7000 l. for further rewards to her ſervants, aſſigning the payment of all theſe vpon the portion money due from France. The whole in jewells, ready money, and aſſignations, amounted to well nigh 50000 pounds. And Sir Henry Fanne was ſent to conduct, accommodate, and defray them to the ſea ſide, where ſhipps lay ready prouided to tranſporte them.

To the Prince of TRANSYLUANIA.

Sereniſſimo Prencipe,

THE negotiations of your highneſs worthy miniſter Sr Thomas Burſes, I haue from him well vnderſtood and apprehended, whoſe dexterity and diligence in your affaires might well excuſe mee from giuing your highneſs this vnneceſſary trouble: but I cannot omitt, without diſobedience to his majeſties commands, repeated to mee by euery ordinary poſt, to correſpond and ſerue your highneſs in all your occaſions, and to ſignify to you his royall reſolution with his allyes, to proſecute the warrs of Germany: to which end, his majeſtie hath lately ſent an ambaſſador to the king of Denmark, and ſuch monyes as his part of the contribution required for the payment of thoſe armyes; not doubting but that this letter ſhall find your highneſs farr aduanced towards your frends that attend you, according to your aduiſe ſent hither, with which I haue acquainted his majeſtie. The retorne of this meſſenger will bring with him a good excuſe of the delay of a full and ſatisfactory 1626. tory anſwere to the particulars of your highneſs laſt letter, which arriued but a fewe dayes before the ſadd newes of the riſing of the grand ſignors army from Babilon, where the loſſes and miſeries haue bene ſo greate, that it would trouble mee to relate them. In this tyme, when the minds of all the viziers were perplexed, and their owne eſtate ſo nearly concerned, your highneſs in your wiſedome will conſider, that it was vnſeaſonable to propound and preſſe any thing that might pretend or endanger the ſpeech of a newe warre, eſpecially when the emperors agent vſed the opportunity of the rumours, (that in ſadd accidents are euer encreaſed) reporting that your highneſs was retyred, and had made peace, and that an imperiall ambaſſador was on the way: the falſity whereof when wee had made knowne, hauing conſulted with your reſident, wee reſolued together to accept of the generall letter ſent your highneſs, rather then by vnfitt importunity to prouoke an anſwere ſuteable to their diſcontent, vpon promiſe from the chimacham, and all the other great miniſters of this empire, to whom your highneſs and all your proceedings are moſt gratefull, that aſſoone as theſe preſſiue and neceſſary troubles ſhallbee appeaſed, that they will ſend a cappigi-baſſa with a ſollemne ambaſſage, who ſhall bring your highneſs both thoſe enſignes and ceremonies of honor neceſſary, and full authority, ſatiſfaction, and approbation of all your propoſitions. Your highneſs will pleaſe to accept of this aſſurance in the meane tyme, that you cannot bee forſaken here, and that I will ioyne with your reſident ſo firmly in all his wayes, that nothing ſhallbee able to croſſe your proceedings. And though at this inſtant all the intention of this ſtate is imployed vpon the affaires of Aſia, yet they are not ſo free of the feare of the frauds of the Germans, that they will not take eſpeciall care to ſtrengthen your highneſs againſt an enemy irreconcileable.

THE imbrahor-baſſi, late chiaus-baſſi, beſt frend of the Imperialls, is dead, by the fall from his horſe, and I know no ſuccor they haue left. Therefore I will conclude with a firme and conſtant aſſurance of your highneſs, that all the authority of his majeſtie and my endeauours ſhallbee vſed to doe you ſeruice; and that beeing once aduanced, the proſperity of your armes will engage this ſtate, who dare not giue your highneſs any diſcontent; and the occaſion of the rebellions in Auſtria make your conqueſt eaſy, to your eternall glory. And ſo wiſhing to your highneſs all felicity, I reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople 19. Sept. 1626.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

SINCE the departure of monſieur de Preaux, the French extraordinary ambaſſador, this towne hath beene exceeding calme, vntill ſome few dayes ſince the emperors letters vnto his agent here, bringing the newſe of an ouerthrow giuen by Tilly vnto the king of Denmarke, hath filled it full of confuſion. The meſſager which brought this newſe from thoſe parts, is diſpatcht in diligence from hence vnto the pope, with letters from the emperor to the ſame effect. In the meane tyme his agent, and the Spaniſh ambaſſador here, do much rejoyce in this blow, and make both feaſts and publique fyres in the ſtreets, to blaze abroade the more the fame of this victory. The reports of the Spaniſh faction make the king of Denmarks loſſe farre greater then it is; but it being their old cuſtome, audacter mentiri, for their leaſt aduantage, they gayne but little credit. Yeſterday here arriued neuſe which hath already quenched the Spaniſh blaze, that the king of Denmarke hath not onely recouered his loſſe, but cut in pieces fiue regiments of his enemyes: this I haue ſeene confirmed by letters from diuers places, which makes it the more probable; and, indeed, it arriued here very opportunely to ſaue the Spaniſh ambaſſador a great deale of charges in fyreworkes, which he had a purpoſe to make for fiue nights together; but this vnexpected neuſe hath cauſed him to deferre it vntill ſome other occaſion.

CARDINALL BARBARINI is at length returned from Spayne, laden with ſtore of rich preſents: at this preſent, he remayneth in Tuſcany, from whence he propoſeth ſhortly to ſet forward towards Rome.

I HAUE receaued your lordſhips letters of the 31. of July, and earneſtly recommended the incloſed to Mr. Queſtors carefull deliuery; from whom I haue receaued, in my letters from England, the incloſed for your lordſhip, which came both to my hands this weeke; and I haue taken this firſt occaſion to ſend them vnto your lordſhip. Thus, not hauing elſe at preſent worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I humbly take leaue, and reſt 1626.

Venice, September 18.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

Lord CONWAY to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Right Honorable,

CAPTAINE Henderſon being ſtayed here diuers dayes after his diſpatch was ſigned and ſealed, in that interim arriued here the newſe of the diſaſter befallen the king of Denmarke, which was truely apprehended by his majeſtie, according to the conſequence thereof, if that king ſhould not preſently be reinforced and inabled to ſtand vp againe in oppoſition of the progreſſe of a victorious army, and defence of thoſe places and paſſageſſe, which, remayning ſtill in his power, might giue ſtopp to the courſe of the enemyes deſignes: and therefore his majeſtie hauing had aduertiſment of the ſafety of that kings perſon, and the conſtancy of his courage, preſently entred into conſultation what was fitt to be donne, and fell vppon a generous reſolution, without delay to aſſiſt him both with men and mony. The ſix thouſand foote payed by his majeſtie in the Low-countryes, are thought of as a ready and good ayde to be ſent vpp vnto him; to which number his majeſtie will adde ſuch further forces from hence, as that king ſhall reaſonably deſyre: to whom his majeſtie hath giuen knowledge of this his purpoſe, by his owne royall letters; and for that kings further encouragement, hath acquainted him with his acceptation of the marquis of Badens propoſitions, and the great eaſe he is likely to receaue by that diuerſion, which your lordſhip may be therefore pleaſed to quicken with as much ſpeed as ſhalbe poſſible, and giue aſſurance to all whom it may concerne, that as his majeſtie infinitely eſteemes the vnchanged conſtancy of the king of Denmarke, and his care and diligence to recollect his army, and reinforce himſelfe ſpeedily and effectually, ſoe his majeſtie, on his part, will not be wanting in any thing in his power for the aſſiſtance and ſupport of that king, and the good cauſe, according to his obligations, and reiterated profeſſions to that purpoſe: and therfore the preſent occaſion and neceſſity requiring both a preſent ſupply of men and monny, and a deſignement being made in part of the firſt, his majeſtie further proceeds according to the preſſing importance of the matter, which will not admitt of delayes, by an extraordinary way to rayſe a ſumme of monny amounting to 40000 pounds; which is to be donne by commiſſion to ſome ſelected perſons in each countie, to perſwade and conſtrayne all ſubſidie men, according to the rates they ſtand in the ſubſidie bookes, to lend ſuch a portion as may, by a juſt calculation, rayſe the ſumme mentioned.

DEUI~~S~~c is now goeing for France, and carryes letters of revocation for the lord Carleton, whoſe returne his majeſtie commands, to ſhew that he reſſents their refuſall to admitt of Mr. Montagues comming to that court, being ſent with letters of congratulation for the marriage of Monſeigneur the kings brother: and that he is altogether vnſatisfyed in their delayes, being in effect little leſſe then a denyall to make reſtitution of his ſubjects goods ſeized manny months ſince, hauing ſeuerall tymes promiſed and aſſured the ſame ſhould be reſtored; which proceeding of theirs may happily cauſe his majeſtie to thinke of ſtopping his ſubjects from further trade there, till they receiue juſtice and ſatiſfaction for the wrongs donne them in the ſeizure and detenſion of their goods.

THE lord Willoughbie, with his fleete, hath receiued a full diſpatch, and will now, with the firſt faire wind, putt to ſea. God make his voyage proſperous.

YOUR lordſhip may be pleaſed to giue conuayance to the letters herewith ſent to Sir Thomas Roe.

St. Martins-Lane,
20 Sept. 1626.

To the Queen of BOHEMIA.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

I WAS vnwilling to enterteyne your Majeſtie with vncerteyntyes, ſeeing the prince of Tranſiluania ſent new propoſitions to this court, and ſeemed vnſatisfyed with the ambiguous orders formerly giuen him; his agent here almoſt proteſting, that the execution of his maſters purpoſes did depend vpon clearer authoritye, and better aſſurance from hence: and though he ſtill conſtantly affirmed, that he was marched toward Sileſia, and would maynteyne his promiſes with his allyes in Germany; yet he ſhowed mee great difficultyes and dangers, eyther to bee abandoned, or to ſeeme to neglect his dependance vpon this port. Therfore his negotiation falling in the tyme of much ſadnes and trouble for the retrayct of the Turkiſh army from Babilon, vnfitt to moue a new warr, and himſelfe hardly admitted audience, and Gabor expecting a reſolution, he preſſed mee to vndertake the procuring of ſome anſwere, which I the next morning did, and haue obteyned full ſatisfaction in all poynts; wherof I haue amply enformed his majeſtie. The ſumme is, that the inveſtiture is granted to the princeſs, and an honorable ambaſſage deſſigned to carry her the banner and ſcepter, and other ceremonies of her confirmation. The frontyre army is commanded to make a good guard, to ſecure the territories of Gabor, and to enterteyne the enemy with feare, and to uſe the occaſion. If the emperor ſend any ambaſſador to treate a peace, or to make any other ouerture, he ſhall not bee admitted to come hither; but to deliuer his meſſage to Gabor, and the baſſa of Buda, to whom full power is delegated. And laſtly, that no peace at all ſhalbe concluded, without the conſent of the prince and his allyes, and my approbation, and the knowledge of the other reſidents here. Better conditions cannot be propounded; and I am glad to ſend them to your Majeſtie, that you may know and conſtantly pleade the meritt of his majeſties authoritye in fauoring the deſſignes of Gabor, and that he hath no excuſe. The election of the princeſs is of great importance, both to oblige her husband and brother, and all the proteſtant princes, in a conſtant oppoſition, and defence of her title; which the Auſtrians doe extreamely ſtomach, and to preſerue that prouince in obedience and dependancye of the religion, and to preuent an imperiall faction in any change; who haue no greater ayme in theſe parts then to ſhuffle the cards, and corrupt the eſtates of Tranſiluania, to diuide that countrye from the grand ſignor, and to bee freed of the feares of ſuch another neighbor, as Gabor hath beene, by election of one vpon themſelues depending.

ALL things thus prepared, before this letter ſhall haue the honor to kyſs your Majeſties hands, I hope you ſhalbe ſatisfyed by ſome good effects of Gabors actions, who hath written hither. His miniſters profeſs, and wee beleeue, that he is 40 dayes ſince gone with a powerfull army, to meete the duke of Weymar, and count Mansfelt; which, I am perſwaded will make an end of the warr, or of the power of the emperor; which Almighty God grant for his glorye, and benefitt and honor of your Majeſtie, and all your royall children. In this fayth I liue, and for your cauſe would dye; that ther are bleſſings ſtored vp, and now ready to bee opened for your Majeſtie, in double meaſure to your patience and ſufferings, which are both the fruicts of heroicque vertue, and forerunners of true happines. Amen, amen.

Conſtantinople, 22. September,
old ſtile, 1626.

Your Majeſties, &c.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

AFTER a little pauſe and time giuen to digeſt the ſorrowes of this ſtate, for the diſgrace of their army, retyred from Babilon; and to conſult vpon the preſent neceſſity of their owne affaires; the Tranſiluanian agent, fearfull to looſe the opportunity of his maſters ſeruice, (which required expedition vpon the inſtant of his reſolution to march) and of the ambiguous letters lately ſent him, preſſed mee with a modeſt proteſtation to aſſiſt him, and to procure an anſwere to his negotiation; beeing himſelfe, to his great diſcontent, with difficulty admitted audience, and deferred ſo long, that hee doubted ſome inconuenience either to the generall cauſe, or the princes particular, who could not ſafely proceed without clearer authority and aſſurance from hence: wherein though he profeſſed, that no reſpect nor tepidneſs of this ſtate could abſolutely hinder the prince from performing with his allyes; yet hee ſhowed mee the dangers hee ſhould runne, both by the fortune of warre, and by the diſpleaſure of the grand ſignor, if hee ſhould bee abandoned, or enforced to ſhake publiquely off his dependence vpon this port. To this end hee gaue mee the encloſed briefe of his demands, and vrged mee to preſent them to the chimacham; whereupon I deſired a conſultation with the bailo, and the Dutch ambaſſador in his preſence, becauſe ſome of thoſe articles ſeemed to mee impertinent and ſcandalous.

WHEN wee had together conſidered of them ſeuerally, the firſt and ſecond wee accepted without limitation; the third, intimating an inuaſion of the emperors dominions, by requiring a command that they ſhould winter in the imperiall territories, which could not bee, without firſt entring of them in hoſtile manner; for my part, wherein the bailo concurred, wee deſired to bee free of any ſcandall, and to reforme that clauſe, and reſtreyne it to the border. The Dutch was content to perſwade the actuall breach, as black enough allready; but conſidering his majeſties chriſtian reſtraint, and that wee thought it would rather hurt the affaires of Chriſtendome, then aduance them, and that wee ſhould bee ſuſpected of too much intereſt to counſaile an vnſeaſonable warre, which would not bee graunted, and might foile our iuſter demands, wee reſolued to preſs no further, then that the grand ſignors army ſhould guard the frontire, ſecure Gabor, and enterteyne the enemy with feare.

THE fourth and fift wee vndertooke to fauour with all our induſtry, as beeing eſſentiall to the publique good.

THE ſixt wee abſolutely refuſed, both as wicked and impertinent; knowing that though the king of Poland had affection enough to ayd the emperor, yet hee was at preſent vnable, beeing enforced to keepe an army allready on foot for feare of the Tartars, and to drawe his beſt ſtrength into Liuonia, to oppoſe the king of Sweden; and that there was no cauſe to ſuſpect that hee durſt attempt any thing vpon Tranſiluania, which would bee a direct breach with the grand ſignor; and ſo wee concluded to omitt the mention of that article.

TO the ſeauenth wee conſented, though the motion were needleſs, thoſe nations beeing not worth their meate; and yet the command was allready ſent the princes, to ſupply that ayde.

IN the 8. wee all agreed to vſe our endeauour for the confirmation of the princeſs, euery one drawne either by their owne reaſons or inſtructions. In this particular I muſt refuge to his majeſties grace, that hauing no expreſs order, which was impoſſible tymely to receiue, I haue preſumed to mediate in a buſineſs of that high nature; but theſe reſpects did gouerne mee: Firſt, not to bee wanting to Gabor in a point whereon both his affections were placed, and his creditt with the elector of Brandeburg, and all his allyes, deeply obliged. Next, in reguard of the religion, to preſerue that prouince in the obedience of a proteſtant prince; whereby perhaps all her frends may bee engaged in a conſtant oppoſition, and defence of her againſt the Auſtrians, who doe extreamely ſtomack this inueſtiture. Laſtly, to preuent an imperiall faction in any accident, who haue no greater ayme on this ſide, then vpon any change to ſhuffle the cards, and to corrupt the States of Tranſiluania, to elect a dependant of the empire, to diuide that territory from the grand ſignor, and to bee freed of the feares of ſuch another neighbour as Gabor hath bene.

THESE reſolutions beeing taken, the next morning I went to the chimacham, and effectually treated with him from point to point, and obteyned for himſelfe a generall graunt of all the propoſitions; which beeing digeſted into forme, as wee deſired, were giuen him in writing for the information of a councell intended, without whom hee would not peract any buſineſs of importance. In the meane tyme I prepared my frends to bee fauorable, and enſtructed them in the juſtice of the right of election in the States of Tranſiluania; and ſhowed them that this was a confirmation of the grand ſignors right vpon that cuntry, and an aduantage to all his frends. The conſultation aſſembled, they all conſented, and thereupon a petition was yeſterday made, and ſent in for the affirme; and wee make no doubt of a full, abſolute, and ſatisfactory order. I was the more feruent in the diſpatch of this negotiation, becauſe the Tranſiluanian agent did proteſt hee would diſpatch his ſonne to 1626. the prince, with a doubtfull relation of the ſlowe proceedings; which how it might haue diuerted Gabor from his reſolutions, or haue entangled him in future inconueniences, I thought was a motiue of great conſideration. And though it make my letters long, yet for the clearneſs of my actions, and for the confirmation of the creditt of the prince of Tranſiluania, who in my judgment treateth ſincerely, and I hope purpoſeth to goe on conſtantly, I will not omitt ſome circumſtances of the diſcourſe betweene the chimacham and mee, at this laſt conference.

I PROPOSED to him, as the principall foundation of this buſineſs, that the grand ſignor would not enterteyne any ouerture of peace with the emperour, without the aduice of Gabor, and the conſent of the antient frends of this port, his allies; which was abſolutely promiſed. Next, that if the emperour ſhould ſend an ambaſſador to Buda, what order they would giue for his admittance or refuſall: to which hee replyed, that a commiſſion ſhould bee ſent to Gabor and Morteſa baſſa, and full power delegated to them to heare his propoſitions, and to proceed according to the occaſions: ſo that the concluſion ſhall reſt wholly in them.

THEN I asked him, if an ambaſſador ſhould there arriue, and pretend hee had order to come to the port, and not to treat with any deputies, what in that caſe ſhould bee anſwered? Hee ſaid, That hee ſhould bee ſtayed there, and no admittance graunted without the aduice and conſent of Gabor.

LASTLY, I demanded, if any other way ſuch miniſter ſhould priuatly come hither, and then ſhowe his power and commiſſion to offer a peace, what enterteynment hee ſhould find? To which hee replyed, That no audience ſhould bee giuen him but with my knowledge, and the conſultation of the other ambaſſadors reſident. In all theſe, I could deſire no more ſatisfaction.

I DARE not diſſemble with his majeſtie, vpon the point of giuing order to the baſſa of Buda to aſſiſt Gabor, and to march to the frontire. I enquired what the army ſhould doe idle on the borders, it beeing a difficult matter to conteyne ſoldiours quiett in their tents and trenches? To which hee replyed, That hee much doubted the impatient nature of Morteſa baſſa and his followers, leaſt they ſhould doe ſome impertinent action, and make an vnſeaſonable rupture; and therefore, that he had giuen him a moſt strict command, only to make a good guard, and to amuſe the enemy; yet to keepe his ſoldiours in action, that they ſhould build ſome bridge or fort vpon any paſſadge to enterteyne them, that might bee aduantagious in the future, either to enter the enemyes cuntry, or to defend their owne: but if he ſawe the occaſion faire to giue a great blowe, that hee ſhould not looſe the opportunity of doeing the grand ſignor an acceptable ſeruice. And therein, to vſe his owne morall, that he ſhould remember the tale of a man that had catcht a foxe, and carried him in a ſack; his neighbour asking what hee had, hee told him, The old foxe that robbd them; who replyed, Foole, make ſure, and knock him on the head, leaſt hee eſcape and doe more miſchiefe: it was a chance to catch him, but would bee a folly to lett him goe; applying his fable, that if hee could take the emperor at any great aduantage, that hee ſhould vſe it. By this parable, his majeſtie may vnderſtand their affections; and as it was not my part to diſwade, where I ſawe no cauſe to feare, ſo, if they doe any harme, I am guiltleſs of the leaſt motion or conſent; though, if examples were good arguments, a pope, a king of Aragon, a French, and all catholiques, haue taught vs, that it is not crimen mortale to vſe one enemy of God againſt another, that vſed the Turks againſt their oppoſites of the ſame religion; but as I doe not beleeue theſe are now in ſtate to endanger any part of Chriſtendome, ſo I will neuer counſaile any ſcandall.

I haue bene the larger with your lordſhip in theſe relations, that his majeſtie may make vſe of my ſeruice, both to Gabor, and the elector of Brandeburgh; whoſe affaires I haue ſupported in this court, and brought them to ſo good a concluſion, that they can find no excuſe; but rather muſt confeſſe a great obligation to his majeſtie for his roiall protection, which, I doubt not, the prince of Tranſiluania will gratefully acknowledge: and his majeſtie may iuſtly plead, that I haue bene the principall meanes to procure the inueſtiture for his lady; which, as wee are promiſed, ſhalbee ſodainly ſent by a capigi-baſſa, with the banner, ſcepter, and vſuall ceremonyes. And I hope the actions of Gabor ſhall, in his majeſties ſeruice, ſhowe ſome meritt of congruity, ſuppoſing that hee is marched according to his owne proteſtation.

HIS majeſties letters to the grand ſignor I haue deliuered, as the cuſtome is, by the vizier, and his to his owne hands; which hee read before mee, and gaue mee aſſurance of ſatisfaction in all his majeſties demands. I haue not yet a direct anſwere, which muſt come from within, and wilbee ſent by letter; but the cuſtomer I haue humbled, ſo that ſince the trade of Turky, the Engliſh neuer paſſed with ſo much reputation and quiett. In the buſineſs of Algier, and the mony taken from Mr. Leate, the chimacham hath giuen mee this anſwere, That this ſtate doth attend to know a reſolution from them, whether they will declare themſelues rebells, or, acknowledging their errors, retorne to the Ottoman obedience. If the firſt, they are reſolued to compell them by the ſword: if they will conforme, then a new baſſa ſhalbee ſent to gouerne them; who ſhall here receiue ſtrict order from the grand ſignor to repay whatſoeuer hath bene vniuſtly taken. The action is ſeriouſly diſauowed and diſliked, and I haue allready ſent letters, and will vſe all other meanes for reparation, hoping to recouer the moſt part, though the caſe bee very dangerous. For admittance of his majeſties fleets into any of theſe ports, I haue treated with the capten baſſa, who hath promiſed mee a meeting with the newe baſſa, now vpon departure for Tunes; who hath alſo commiſſion to accommodate the affaires of Algier, and take order with him in that buſineſ; and if it ſhalbee requiſite, to giue mee what commands and letters I ſhall require.

THUS I conclude, that all my buſineſ in this imployment is finiſhed and perfected; and therefore I will hope his majeſtie will graciouſly releaſe mee, according to my humble petition; and that your lordſhip will by your aſſiſtance confirme and oblige

Conſtantinople, 22.
Sept. 1626.

Your moſt humble ſeruant.

The laſt Demands of GABOR.

ARTICULI aliquot adiuncti poſtulatis ſereniſſimi principis Tranſiluaniæ.

PRIMUS. Quam citiſſimè iniungat potentiſſimus imperator [a] Murtaza paſſæ, ut in omnibus quæ uita priuati Memhet paſſæ fuerant commiſſa, ipſe etiam perduret, atque cum domino meo clementiſſimo conſentiat, eum diligenter audiat. Enimuerò meus dominus clementiſſimus eſt is qui ſuum ipſius caput præfert in exercitu.

[a] Now baſſa of Buda.

SECUNDUS. Seriò præcipiendum eſt Murtaza paſſæ, ut milites inuictiſſimi Cæſaris non reponat in crumenam, iuxta ritum et conſuetudinem ſuam; uerum contendat eos in bellum abigere.

TERTIUS. Firmiſſimè iubeat vizerius nomine imperatoris, tam [b] ſzerdario quam paſſis, et etiam, ut, ſi neceſſitas ita poſtulauerit, non præ ſe ferant [c] Kazron giun, ſed in imperialibus ſint hyematuri regionibus, quemadmodum et meus dominus; ubi ſimilem habebunt aptum a domino meo ordinatum locum, pro hyemis tranſactione.

[b] The generall.

[c] Snt. Demetrius day, 26. Octob. when the Turkes retyre from warr.

QUARTUS. Quodſi Germanica natio de aliquo negotio paſſam requiſiuerit, abſque fauore ſereniſſimi principis Tranſiluaniæ, non auſit quicquam ei reſpondere; aſt principem Tranſiluaniæ de omnibus certiorem faciat, ſicque omnia ex unanimi agant conſenſu.

QUINTUS. Sub ſigillo imperatoris potentiſſimi tale ſcribat vizerius [d] atname: Si Germania maluerit pacis tractatum inſtituere, quam belli exitum expectare; illud potentiſſimus Turcarum imperator fidei principis Tranſiluaniæ, et vizerij Budenſis curæ commiſit: cum his capiat conſilium. Porrò in hoc conſilio et tractatu præſentes ſint Jaya paſſa, Trifut Amhet paſſa Nazradinogli Muſtafa Efendi, et Szolnakienſis Maharem Bek, cedo plures ſint; his omnibus tempeſtiuè demandet potentiſſimus imperator, ut ſeſe ad hoc negotium præparent.

[d] Capitulations.

1626. SEXTUS. Non ſinant Getas domi diutiùs moram trahere, ſed extemplò contra Poloniam expediant, atque in hoc laborent maximoperè, ut cogant eos in Podolia hyemare. Inſuper renuntiet imperioſè potentiſſimus Cæſar ſzordario Tartarorum, ut ſi pluribus opus fuerint ad dimicandum militibus, atque meus dominus clementiſſimus ipſum requiſiuerit, eſto non plura ſaltem ſex millia uirorum mittat in ſuccurſum ipſius.

SEPTIMUS. Vtriuſque Wallachiæ begis imperet magnificus vizerius per ſuos capuczios, ut ex duobus regnis duo millia equitum, omni poſthabita morâ, mittantur in auxilium principi Tranſiluaniæ.

OCTAUUS. Quemadmodum nos et in alijs ſcriptis exhibuimus, et uiua uoce etiam propoſuimus atque petiuimus vizerium; pro confirmatione electionis ſereniſſimæ principiſſæ Tranſiluaniæ condonandum [e] atname, unà cum ſuis pertinentijs, uexillo ſclt. atque ſceptro non differat potentiſſimus imperator quam citiſſimè tranſmittere ad dominam meam clementiſſimam. Siquidem imperator Turcicus, iuxta ſuorum prædeceſſorum iuramenta, et regni noſtri priuilegia uetuſtiſſima, tenetur huic noſtro conniuere poſtulato. Præterea dignus eſt dominus meus clementiſſimus pro tot tantiſque laboribus, per kapucziam, qui atname et alia abſtulerit, condecoretur unico duntaxat equo, tantummodo is ſit admodum generoſus, ſimul cum indumentis et framea, unde poſſit meus dominus aliquam habere prerogatiuam ex dono Cæſaris. Inſuper ſaltem uiginticinque aut 30 elegant. kaſtanos mittat, quibus cohoneſtari poſſint magnates ſecum habiti.

HI ſunt articuli octo exhibiti kaimekamo. Reſtat adhuc peculiaris commendatio ſereniſſimæ principiſſæ, qualis, et quanta ſit, quam ex claro ſtemmate oriunda, quamque uirtuoſa. Hæc ſunt iam proponenda, quibus fortaſſe faciliùs et citiùs perſuaſerimus eis, ut omni morâ et dubitatione reiectâ, quam citiſſimè conferment electionem regni Tranſiluaniæ, ſcribant [f] atname, et mittant ad ſereniſſimum principem et principiſſam ſimul cum vexillo, ſceptro, atque alijs muneribus et donis per kapuzy paſſam ad id ordinandum.

[e] Capitulations.

[f] Capitulations.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE peace of Italy, depending vppon the Valtelina, is alltogether vncertayne, ſince the Swiſſes and the Griſons refuſe to accept of thoſe articles propoſed by the French king; wherevppon the Spaniſh miniſters in Rome, who infinitely deſyre peace in theſe parts, do beginne to treat as freſh with the pope the reſtitution of that vally as euer. The pope refuſeth to let his ſoldiers enter into the vally without the company of the Spaniſh forces, but the princes of the league admitt not of ſuch an vnion; ſo that hitherto, after ſo many treatyes, and ſo great expence, the affaires of that place remayne as vnſettled as at the beginning.

THE cardinall legat, before his departure from Madrid, did acquaint the king of Spayne with 4 of his requeſts; in one of which he did humbly entreat his majeſtie to gratify him in: firſt, That he would be pleaſed to honor his father with the title of a grande of Spayne; to this the king did anſwer, That he did beſtow that dignity only vppon princes, and therefore deſyred him to excuſe him, that he could not ſatisfy him in that. Afterward he did demand ſeuerally, that his majeſtie would beſtow vppon him for a wife, either the princeſſe of Singliano, or the counteſſe of Jaro, or the ſiſter of the duke of Parma; but to all theſe, he receaued negatiue anſwers. The pope is much troubled at the little ſatisfaction his nephew hath receaued in the court of Spayne; and therfore, to reuenge himſelfe, doth endeauor to croſſe the Spanyards in all his deſignes.

THE duke of Bauaria, knowing how much it doth aduantage the houſe of Auſtria to procure him ſelfe kindred in Italy, doth treat a marriage betwixt his nephew and the ſiſter of the duke of Parma, to whom hir father hath left for a dowry 300000 crownes. This match is very likely to be concluded, ſince the princeſſe did refuſe to match with the cardinall Barbarini, in hopes to be marryed to the nephew of Bauaria.

THESE ſigniori do purpoſe very ſhortly to diſmiſſe 20 companyes, which at preſent are in their pay; and to eaſe themſelfes this winter, in as many expences of keeping ſouldiers, as the preſent occaſions will giue them leaue.

I DO conſtantly receaue your lordſhips packets euery fortnight, and diſpoſe of them according to direction; and thoſe which are directed to Mr. Queſtor, I am certifyed from him of their ſafe arriuall. Thus, praying for your lordſhips proſperity, and increaſe of honor, I humbly take leaue, and euer reſt

Venice, October 4.
ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE baſſa of Buda hath ſent hither a poſt, confirming the arriuall of the duke of Weymar and count Mansfelt in Sileſia, and that the prince of Tranſiluania was riſen to ioyne with them, hauing mutually exchanged and ſent ſome troopes one to the other; and that himſelfe was marched neare Vatz, to conferr with Gabor in his paſſage, to reſolue together of the proſecution of their deſſignes. Whereupon the emperors agent hath made violent exclamations, proteſted the breach of peace, and vſed ſome ſcandalous arguments againſt the frends of the prince, beggd, threatened, and enforced all his powers, to diuert or fright this chimacham, who knowes no more then is infuſed into him, and for the moſt part beleeues the laſt man, or as his feares guide him. This hath cauſed ſome ſtopp of the diſpatch of the inueſtiture, and the other negotiations of the prince; and the agent hath procured a letter to the emperour of excuſe, yet referring all concluſion, if they ſeeke peace, to Gabor and Morteſa baſſa of Buda, commanding the baſſa to beware of impertinent actions, to occaſion an vnſeaſonable rupture; yet ſo mingled and qualified, as that they intimate any thing wilbee accepted, that is throughly done. Againſt the inueſtiture the agent hath ſhewed all his witt and ſtrength, obiecting that ſhee is a wooman, a ſtranger, and a German: by this only hee hoped to beginne a diſcontent betweene this ſtate and Gabor, knowing, that the election paſſed would not bee recalled; and that if it were not confirmed here, the prince and eſtates of Tranſiluania would find themſelues wronged, and their liberty encroached vpon, and perhapps ſeeke other refuge. The emperour would willingly accept any retorne, or aſpect towards him. Theſe things at large opened to the great miniſters here, it is againe reſolued to diſpatch the graunt, and to ſend the ambaſſador with the vſuall ceremonyes; and wee hope to ſee him depart in ſixe dayes.

THE Imperialls alſo report, that there haue paſſed ſome blowes betweene Gabor and Iſterhas, palatine of Hungary, wherin the prince ſhould haue the worſt. I beleeue but the one halfe; and the whole, beeing but ſcratches, would doe no harme to drawe warme bloud. Somwhat likewiſe hath happened, betweene the baſſa of Buda, and the Hungars; ſo that I am perſwaded, the chaſe will bee hott, before theſe later letters can arriue, and that it wilbee too late to part them.

HERE is arriued an internuntio in title, but an ambaſſador in power, to reſettle the affaires of Poland, and this empire; recommended to mee by the kings and the generalls letters, to whom I will doe all ciuill and chriſtian offices. But the face of affaires beeing changed, ſince my late maſter commanded mee their protection, and hauing receiued therein no newe, and knowing that the eſtabliſhing of this deſired peace on their parts, will encourage them againſt the king of Sueueland, his majeſties good frend, and that the queenes faction will aſſiſt the emperour, or moleſt Gabor, if they were free of all other feares; perhapps it is now requiſite to interpoſe ſome difficulties, and to keepe the balance as it ſtands; not to make any open breach, but to let the iealouſy remayne ſo, that they may not withdrawe their armes from the guard of their frontire, nor ſwell with too proud a ſecurity of the Tartars.

OF theſe matters I ſhall write your lordſhip at large the next poſt, when they wilbee riper, and better digeſted. In the meane tyme I beſeech you to acquaint his majeſtie with this litle, and to preſerue in your noble protection

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$ October, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

THE

1626. THE French ambaſſador here reſident, ſince their inglorious peace with Spayne, hath beene very cold in the affayres of Gabor; but ſeeing them proſper, would now ſeeme to haue new orders to fauour them; and vnder that pretence made a viſitt to the chimacham; and reported at his returne, that he found the ſtate vnwilling to confirme a woman in the principalitye of Tranſyluania: when the ſame day I receiued aſſurance of the reſolution in councell the night before, and was preſent when Gabors agent had order to diſpeed a præcurrier to carry the aduice of the grant, and a letter from the chimacham, promiſing the diſpatch with all expedition. This hath made us ſuſpect he hath done ill offices, and beene a ſecrett oppoſite, envying the religion, and any addition of ſtrength to yt, guided by the Jeſuites, and perhaps in his owne heart ill affected.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſimo Prencipe,

YOUR highnes, I hope, hath not judged the affections of the grand ſignor, and the good miniſters of this port, by the ſlow pace of the bad and couetous; who are ſo uſed to guifts, that they expect them for juſtice. I know your reſident S^{nr} Thomas Burſos hath amply enformed your highnes of all proceedings, wherin he hath uſed extraordinarye diligence and wiſedome, and omitted no way to manifeſt his fayth and zeale in your ſeruice: but leaſt your highnes ſhould collect by the delay any coldnes of the ſtate toward yow, I thought it neceſſarye to aſſure yow, that vpon the firſt intimation to the grand ſignor, he accepted your requeſts, and gaue order, that all the buſines being well digeſted in a councell, yow ſhould in all receiue ſatisfaction. Since, eyther by the malice of enemyes, who haue oppoſed various falſhoods, or for ſome corrupt reſpect, the execution hath bene delayed, vntill I was enforced to open the eyes of theſe willfully blind; proteſting, that your election of the princeſs (which was the poynt of difficultye) was free, and would be mayntеyned; vrdging ſuch and ſo bold reaſons in the preſence of your agent, that at laſt the chimacham declared the reſolution, and nominated the Capigi baſſi to be ſent with the confirmation, ſcepter, and uſuall ceremonies, promiſing to diſpatch him in ſixe dayes, and in the meane tyme to write his owne letters to your highnes and the princeſs, to ſignifye and aſſure you of the grand ſignors fauour and acceptance of all your demands, which, I ſuppoſe, ſhalbe ſent by this conveyance. In this buſines Huſein-affende, cadde leskar of Greece, hath ſhowed his affection, and performed his promiſe to be your highnes aduocate; for my owne endeauour, I refer my ſelfe to the teſtimony of your ſeruant, whom I haue perſonally and by all my creditt aſſiſted, and I will preſume to thincke, that the authoritye of his majeſtie hath ouerruled and preuayled agaynſt the obiections and oppoſitions of your aduerſaryes; and therfore I will hope, that your highnes will acknowledge yt to him, and continew conſtant in thoſe reſolutions yow haue begun, to vnite and ſtrengthen your ſelfe with thoſe freinds, who by our common bond of religion and fayth, will not fayle yow, and that cauſe, into which for the publicque good yow haue entered.

WHAT hath beene written lately to Morteſa baſſa, I know no more, then their owne profeſſion, that ſeeing their owne affayres in Aſya will not permitt any breach, or vpon declaration agaynſt the emperor, whoſe agent uſeth all arts to renew a peace, yet they haue commanded him to attend on the frontyre, to uſe occaſion, and to bee directed by your highnes.

THAT if the emperor ſhall ſend any ambaſſador hither, that he ſhalbe ſtayed, and the treaty wholly referred to your highnes, and the baſſa of Buda.

FROM hence, which the Imperialls ſeeke by vertue of the articles, that alternis vicibus ambaſſadors ſhould be ſent, and that now it is the turne of the port, theſe haue utterly refuſed; ſo that if the emperor maynteyne his honor, and doe not ſeeke it, to the preiudice of his treatye, ther wilbe no feare of any concluſion.

HERE is arriued an ambaſſador from Poland to ſeeke a ratification of the laſt treaty, and to ſettle the accidentall diſorders, requiring the retention of the Tartars; but I ſuppoſe, his demands being for ſatisfaction and reſtitution, and he hauing no commiſſion to capitulate, nor to make any addition, that all matters will reſt as they are, and the feares of no ſyde bee remoued. But if they proceed to any treatye, I doubt not, your agent will prouide to ſecure your highnes eſtates by ſome expreſs and ſtrong article, according to our conſultation.

I HAUE taken the boldnes to ſend your highnes a booke, by error come in Italian, the language of the author: I know your highnes will take delight in yt, and fynd out more then my prayſes can inſinuate; yet this I will preſume to ſay, it is a whole librarye, and, next after the ſacred hiſtorye, the moſt wiſe and excellent worke that the chriſtian age hath brought forth, and worthy to bee tranſlated into all languages. As ſoone as I can, I will prouide your highnes a Latin coppy; in the meane tyme yow will vouchſafe to accept the ſincere affection of Conſtantinople, 15. Octob.

1626.

Your Highnes, &c.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE receaued your lordſhips letters of the 26. of Auguſt, old ſtyle; and thoſe for England I haue ſent with myne to Mr. Queſtor, from whom I haue receaued this weeke the incloſed for your lordſhip. Your lordſhips packet to my lord ambaſſador I keepe vntill his arriuall here, which, I ſuppoſe wilbee very ſhortly, he beeing now 15 dayes in his journy.

THIS towne at this preſent is as empty of newſe as of people, moſt of the gentlemen being retyred this tyme of vintage to their vilages in the country, to make their prouiſion of uines. From Rome I vnderſtand, that cardinall Barbarini arriued thither the laſt weeke, beeing very willingly receaued by the pope, who did much ſuſpect his ſafe returne out of Spayne. Both the cardinall and all his company came from thence very ill ſatisfyed; being neither viſited by any grande of Spayne, nor vſed with that reſpect which his quality did require.

THE Spanyards, hauing long deluded the cardinall legat, and the prince of Modena, with hopes of matching with the princeſſe of Strigliana, do now treat a marriage betweene that princeſſe and the nephew of the duke of Alca, vice-king of Naples; and the aime of the Spanyards is not ſo much for riches, as for the ſure poſſeſſion of Sabioneda, a citty in Lombardy, little diſtant from Mantoua, Modena, and Parma, with which bridle they might curbe Italy vppon all occaſions. This being all I haue at preſent worthy your lordſhips knowledge, vntill the next occaſion, I humbly take leaue, euer reſting

Venice, Octob. 18.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE prince of Tranſiluania, being united with Morteſa, baſſa of Buda, hath from his campe at Zetzen aboue Nouegrad, diſpatched a currier to the grand ſignor, aduiſing that the prince Walſtein, and Iſterhas palatine of Hungarye, are drawne up with their army to oppoſe his proceedings, and to keep him from joyning with count Mansfelt, who ſent to him a gentleman to know the cauſe of his entereing the imperiall dominions; and profeſſing that they came as frends, and offering many conditions, deſired that order might be giuen to both their armyes, to retyre a dayes journy; and betweene them a place aſſigned for commiſſioners to meete, and conſider of ſome accomodation: to whom the prince anſwered, He had no parpoſe to uſurp any thing in Hungarye, but only to deliuer them from the tirany of the Germans, and to releeue his allyes oppreſſed, whom he could not betray, nor had any power to treate without them. The armyes beeing neare, and partyes abroad, did occaſion ſome blowes and great skirmiſhes for two dayes; wherein on both ſydes bloud was ſpilt, the prince taking himſelfe to haue the better, hauing gotten priſoners 26 German lanciers, and ſome light-horſe Hungars; and that Walſtein the third day retyred 9 Duch mile, and fortefyed himſelfe at Wyuar. This faction was begun upon the 5. of October. Vpon the enemyes remoue, meſſingers did mutually paſs betweene the prince and Manſfelt, and appoyntment made for their ſecure meeting the third day after: vpon which, he promiſeth to follow the Imperialls, and attempt them. Morteza baſſa made an offer to ſitt downe before 1626. Nouegrad, but was withdrawne by Gabor, not to ſpend tyme before a towne, and loth to giue it to the Turkes.

HE writes, that count Mansfelt hath made agreement with the cyttyes of Sileſia, all ports being open to him, and that he paſſed without any offence, and hath brought with him ſome deputyes from Breſlaw, and the nobilitye of that prouince. That all the ſtrong places of Hungarye haue ſent to him, that they will not ayd the emperor agaynſt him, if he committ no ſpoyle; and are ready to receiue and obey him, if he be maſter of the feild, and able to protect them. And therefore he hath now deſired a command from the grand ſignor to the baſſa of Buda, that he may not retyre according to the uſe of the Turkes, but winter with him, leaſt, his allyes therby diſcouraged, the oportunitye of his part ſhould be loſt, and a fayre enterance opened to the emperour to follow a reuenge.

THIS ſtate, who formerly were ſo warye and backward to conſent to any breach, being now unawares engaged, lupum auribus tenens, without ſcruple hath granted his deſire, and the orders are ſent away: That what is done being paſt recall, Morteza ſhall winter with Gabor, and not retyre without his conſent, but in all things follow his direction; yet limited according to their neceſſityes, and the nature of feare, full of caution not to aduenture upon uncerteyne grounds, with power and inſinuation to make a peace, if profitable and ſafe conditions ſhalbe propoſed.

THE poſt doth affirme the princes army to bee full 32000, the Turkes 25000, Walſtein and Iſterhas 40000.

THE emperors agent proteſts and threatenes, that it is in his maſters power, at his pleaſure, to accomodate and make his peace with all the princes, and to draw them that are now counterfayt freinds to aſſiſt him, to puniſh, as he pretends, this breach of fayth; and that he will doe wonders in reuenge. But to theſe generall ſcandals, fitt anſwers are oppoſed: and though I cannot coniecture what wilbe the finall reſolution of this ſtate, upon any ſharp tryall, who would not fall into an open warr; yet I fynd their preſent confidence doth ariſe from Morteza, who, fearing to bee drawne into the Aſian warr the next ſummer, where hee ſhalbe far from home, and at infinite expence, hath with the conſent of the other frontyre baſſas plotted a quarrell in Hungary, to make their ſtay neceſſarye, and to haue deceiued the grand ſignor for theire owne ends, and engaged him at improuiſto; which ſome ſo far diſlike, that ther is yet ſome doubt they will reſtrayne their army, and giue ſome ſatisfaction to the emperour.

I MUST truſt the princes owne enformation, and the relation of his meſſinger, for theſe aduertiſments, hauing no other correſpondence; not doubting but his majeſtie, now that the intereſts are mixed, ſhall haue full and freſher aduiſe from count Mansfelt; and that thoſe fitt courſes ſhalbe taken, that Gabor may be encouraged to proceed couragiouſly, as he hath beene engaged happelye. Your lordſhip was pleaſed once to intimate to me, that my negotiations ſhould encreaſe in his majeſties acceptance, as the fruicts and effects did grow, which now are ripe. The prince is in the feild, and in action, and the incredibilitye ouercome. I ſhall receiue it as an infinite grace, if you will procure his majeſtie, by 3 words ſigned by his owne royall hand, to take knowledge of his uouchſafing my endeauours; to which the zeale of his ſeruice hath added ſome forces, and his owne felicitye ſhall, I hope, make the ſucceſs proſperous. This honor I haue thrice had from his bleſſed father, and I keepe them as relicques.

THE grant of the inueſtiture to the princes was almoſt foyled by corrupt freinds, or the art of enemyes; which would haue giuen great diſcontent to Gabor, and perhaps alienated the people of Tranſyluania, to haue their free election refuſed, and a doore opened to the emperor to make ſome compoſition, who is ready to giue yt, and more, upon any condition, ſo that it might proceed from him to renew his ſleeping title. Wherfore I was enforced to uſe all my freinds, and to ſhow the danger of the loſs of the dependance of that prouince; and haue at laſt obteyned the encloſed letter, with another to Gabor more ample; wherin the aſſurance of the grant is declared, though wee cannot preſently diſpatch the ceremonyes, the vizier protracting to draw ſome guift. Yet the Tranſiluanian agent hath ſent his ſonne with theſe, by whom I haue written whatſoeuer is neceſſarye, to preuent all doubt of this great delay, and to ſecure the prince and his people of the acceptance of their deſire.

The letters were brought to me, and by the conſent of the agent opened; for whom I tranſlated them, that wee might both bee ſure of the ſubſtance. 1626.

THE Poliſh ambaſſador hath had audience: his letters are querulous and high, demanding ſatisfaction and reſtitution. The vizier would diſpatch him with a ſealed anſwere only, and not acquaynt him with the contents; which wilbe ill accepted, and I thincke he will refuſe to carry yt. I haue not yet viſited him, becauſe the French ambaſſador too officiouſly began. The baylo and Duch yet with me forbeare: but hauing receiued a letter from the kyng of Poland, and much preſſed by the ambaſſador to aſſiſt him with counſell, profeſſing the reſolution of his comming was in parlament decreed; upon the preſumed fauour of his majeſtie, and the experience of my ſeruice formerly done them, and my late letter ſent at the inſtance of the vizier, I haue thought it conuenient to ſee him, not in a publicque qualitye, but priuetly as a frend, and for my owne occaſions. I will uſe that temper which the preſent coniunctures require: and I hope therin alſo, at leaſt, to doe his majeſtie no diſſeruice; for I am perſwaded, to ſett the grand ſignors armado at liberty for the Medeteran, wilbe more aduantagious to diuert the forces of Spaine, then the inuaſion of the Tartars to buſy the kyng of Poland: for of the one wee ſhalbe ſure, but the Poles of the other euer unſure.

MANOGLY, the emir of Sydon, taking aduantage of the diſcouragements of the viziers defeat at Babilon, hath ſurpriſed a port near Alexandretta, and many places in Syria, and they ſpeake doubtfully of Damaſcus. This little prince hath in theſe troubles thrice flowne out, and encreaced his dominion, to the great affront of the grand ſignor. When this ſtate makes ſhow of reuenge, he doth the like of ſubmiſſion, but to his profitt, et fruitur diis iratis. My buſines with this letter is at a full end. I haue diſpatchd the ſhip, and ſhall giue his majeſtie good account of his demands to the grand ſignor, by a preſent and effectuall anſwere; ſo that I muſt euer conclude with a continued ſupplication for my libertye, which I humbly beſeech your lordſhip to repeate to his majeſtie upon euery occaſion; and ſo I committ your lordſhip to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God.

Conſtantinople, 22. Octob.
old ſtile, 1626.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right honorable,

IN the two principall points of your negotiations, there is nothing at this time to be added to what my former letters haue aduertiſed. To * 974773.61 thoſe 9674664741 4.97 59921 97296236771 5.994.2764146337 is 3442677 here; hath 23713672.7937 of 21, and 3955.24.4299744 are 399929677 to 6473671 6262 225. Soe ſoone as any thing ſhalbe determined, I will giue your lordſhip the account.

IN the meane time yow may be pleaſed to know, that vpon the late diſaſter befallen the king of Denmarke, his majeſtie, vpon the firſt notice, tooke a preſent and generous reſolution to ſend him a large aſſiſtance both of men and money. The 6000 paid by his majeſtie in the Low-countries, are accounted of as a readie ſupplie; and 4000 more of thoſe ſouldiers returned from Cales, which haue ever ſince beene kept on in entertainement, are thought of, if other occaſions hinder not, to make vpp a compleate number of 10000: all which troopes are alreadie provided of good commanders; and the lord Vere hath beene ſpoken of to goe generall.

FOR a ſufficient proviſion of money, both to ſupplie the king, and to maintaine the troopes that ſhall goe to him, his majeſtie hath taken a reſolution, according to the preſent preſſing neceſſities, which will not admitt of delaies, and the long and formall waies of parlament, according to former preſident, to raiſe a ſumme of

---

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

Perfect thoſe ouertures ſoe long negotiated, monſieur Quaad is arriued here; hath had audience of his majeſtie, and commiſſioners are appointed to treate with him.

400000 l.

1626. 400000*l.* to be leavied by waie of commiſſion throughout the whole kingdome, vpon all able and ſubſidie men, after the rate of fiue ſubſidies, and this by waie of loane; wherein ſpeciall care is had, that all thoſe that haue beene charged with privie-ſeales, or given money by waie of benevolence, ſhall receiue ſuch eaſe by repayment, as that they ſhall not be further charged, then according to the rate of the preſent loane. And it hath beene further found expedient for the preſent rayſing of monies, and the ſetling of a conſtant reuenue for his majeſtie, to make ſale of all the kings lands in doubling the rents, and paying ſoe many yeares purchaſe, as the true value of the lands will beare.

YOUR lordſhipp is further to take notice, that his majeſtie, purſuing his good intention to the common cauſe, hath lately * 33379677 of a 9499.9426299 made by the 5344624 of 33779, by which his 21, 235 241, and the 5.344624, are to be engaged for the 53296793937 of an 39 of 6107 9681 629643971 79967 and 72671 629643971 29447 for the 473967427 of the 2745391 5237468.

YOUR ſeverall letters to his majeſtie I haue preſented, together with your relations ſent to mee. And I muſt truely ſaie, his majeſtie doth not onely graciouſly vouchſafe your endeavours, but reads your letters with pleaſure and delight. For your particular, I ſhall readily employ my ſelfe as farre as I can, to procure your contentment; and I am gladd to obſerue, that my expectance hath not beene deceived, but that your lordſhip hath received good ſatisfaction by thoſe letters of mine which are come to your hands. I pray yow, preſent my ſervice to your noble ladie, and take confidence I am

Your Lordſhipps.

THIS letter, being in readines to be ſent, was ſtayed vpon change of counſells, and ſome new propoſitions: and the buſineſſes having ever ſince beene in agitation, and now newly ſetled, it was thought fitt to waite the concluſion, and forbeare the diſpatch of this, leaſt otherwiſey our lordſhipp, grounding your ſelfe vpon theſe relations, might haue given thoſe hopes and aſſurances which afterwards yow muſt haue retracted, not without prejudice.

Whitehall, 25. October, 1626.

To the Lord CONESPOLSKY, Palitine of Sandomiria, Generall of the Poles.

Illuſtriſſimo ſig^r. ſig^r. mio obſervantiſſimo,

LONG before the arriuall of ſig^r. Staniſlaus Suliſowsky, while he was yet at Pas, hauing notice of the preparation of the Tartars, and my foundation beeing taken away in the death of Georgi Memett, I went into the Black-ſea to the capten baſſa, (of moſt eminent authoritye in this port, and truſted by the Tartar han) to acquaynt him with the negotiation formerly begun with the late chimacham: the like office I performed with the new, and prepared the way of a frendly reception by both their promiſes; wherin I cleared ſome difficultyes interpoſed. Your lordſhip will conſider the diſaduantage of change of miniſters: yet I found a propenſion in all, to continew the peace, profitable for both nations. How I haue ſince endeuored to procure a ſatisfactorye and quick diſpatch of his ambaſſadge, it ſhall be his honor to report, rather then my oſtentation. This I aſſume to haue done more then any, with leſs noyſe. I will leaue to his owne relation many particulars, and only in the generall wittnes with him, that he hath had an honorable acceptation, and ſuch an expedition, as, giuing to him content, I doubt not will alſo giue his majeſtie ſatisfaction. If he haue not in euery circumſtance obteyned that juſtice which was required, your lordſhip hath experience by whom and with whom he treated, men guided and blinded by the peruerſnes and pride of their owne will; neyther did the tymes comport too violent a proceeding with the Tartar han. I muſt giue this teſtemonye for him, that he hath behaued himſelfe wiſely and befitting the dignitye of his majeſties miniſter.

---

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

Accepted of a propoſition made by the marqueſs of Baden, by which his majeſtie, the ſtates of Venice, the duke of Savoy, and the marqueſs, are to be engaged for the maintenance of an army of 20 thouſand foote, and foure thouſand horſe, for the recouerye of the German liberty.

IN the negotiation of particulars, if others were vſed, the ſucceſs will declare ytſelfe: my knowne affection to his majeſties ſeruice, and power in this port, hath beene in ytſelfe a diſaduantage.

THE diſpatch is no more then a formall acceptance of peace, and a mutuall promiſe in a publicque conſultation, that if his majeſtie doe pay the donatiue to the Tartar han, and reteyne the Coſſacks, that the grand ſignor will keepe true peace, and take good order for the Tartars: to which purpoſe, letters are written effectuall to the han, and the baſſaes and beghs on the frontyre: and I am perſwaded, this ſtate, during the neceſſytye of their own affayres, doth affect the peace, and dealeth ſincerely. Yet it ſhould bee in mee a ſiniſter diſſimulation, to conceale what, vpon good ground, I am enformed, that the Tartar han doth beare to this port an obedience only to him ſelfe profitable; and fearing to bee drawne into the Aſian war, leaſt an oportunitye of a change by his abſence might be giuen to this ſtate, he will ſo well diſſemble, as to make his ſtay neceſſarye, by kyndling new and continuall troubles on the borders, for which euery eſcape of 3 boates of Coſſackes ſhalbee made a juſt excuſe. Therfore it wilbee the ſafeſt counſell to relye vpon your owne guard and ſtrength, and to truſt reconciled enemyes in your owne ſight: and to this purpoſe was my laſt letter to the duck Cracowsky, though his majeſtie hath pleaſed to intimate, that he ſent his nuntio vpon my encouragement; in which I did not preſume to giue counſell, but made a bare and true relation of what paſſed betweene mee and the chimacham, and my ſenſe thervpon, that I thought they would receiue gratefully an ambaſſador, and giue as good content to him as woords would affoord; and ſo much at leaſt hath beene performed.

I ACCEPT with due gratitude his majeſties fauour, and your lordſhips inuitement of me to returne through Poland, which would to mee bee a great content and happines: but the ſodeyne death of my ſucceſſor hath engaged mee beyond my expectation, and both my tyme and my wayes depend vpon his majeſties direction.

THE danger of the ſea is not much encreaſed: our new enemyes are as often prey to vs, and I will not avoyd them: let the weakeſt beare the blowes. But I ſhall be moſt glad of the oportunitye to kiſs his majeſties hands: to whom, during my ſtay in this employment, I will, according to the command of his majeſtie my lord, performe the ſeruice beſetting the frendſhips of their majeſties, and a good chriſtian; particularly to your lordſhip I offer my ſelfe, and what ſoeuer my correſpondence can ſerue you, wherof I doubt not my former actions hath giuen you aſſurance. So, wiſhing to your lordſhip all encreaſe of honor and felicitye, I reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, October 30. 1626.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE Valtelina remaynes ſtill the onely ſubject of diſcourſe in theſe parts; the ſetling of which place in this tyme of peace, and ſuſpenſion of armes, monſieur de Preaux doth as earneſtly laboure with treatyes, as not long ſince in the heat of warre the marquis di Coeuure did with the ſword. It is now aboue two months ſince the departure of monſieur de Preaux out of this ſtate, the moſt part of which tyme he hath ſpent in treating with the Griſons, allthough to ſmall effect, fynding that dull and heauy people not ſo eaſy to winne and worke to his purpoſe, as he might haue conceaued vppon the anſwer of this ſtate to his articles. The Griſons haue made choyce of three extraordinary ambaſſadors, which they purpoſe to ſend to the French king, this republique, and the duke of Sauoy, to let them vnderſtand how prejudiciall it would be to their ſtate, to conſent to thoſe articles propoſed vnto them by the French extraordinary ambaſſador. Whereuppon the French ambaſſador hath propoſed vnto them ſome new propoſitions, which hath ſtayed the ſuddaine diſpatch of theſe ambaſſadors ſomewhat longer. The French ambaſſador is departed from them towards the Swiſſes; but the generall beleefe is, that all will be to little purpoſe, both the Griſons and Swiſſes being ſtrongly reſolued to mayntayne the vttermoſt of their rights: ſo that by the face of the preſent affaires, which 1626. haue of late beene ſtill the ſame, without ſuffering any change, the world may eaſily diſcerne, that all tempeſts are not blowen ouer thoſe mountaynes.

VPPON the 25. of this preſent, I receaued neuſe from Turin of the death of the young principeſſa, borne vnto prince Tomaſo, who dyed and was baptized the ſame day. The duke is infinitly afflicted with the death of this yonge lady; but yet hath this comfort left him, that both his ſonne and his lady are yet yonge, from whom he may yet expect a hopefull iſſue.

THE duke of Mantoua had a purpoſe to ſpend this winter in Venice, had not death preuented his intention. It is not yet a weeke he hath beene dead, ſo that yet wee heare nothing here. What intereſt the duke of Sauoy will chalange, is his eſtate, who vppon former pretentions, it is thought, will clayme a ſhare.

THIS ſtate did yeſterday ſend the illmo. ſigre. Vendramino, ambaſſador for Conſtantinople; and haue made choyce of an other, which is ſhortly to be ſent into Piedmont.

YOUR lordſhips letters of the 20. of September, are ſafely arriued. Thus, hauing nothing elſe worthy your lordſhips knowledge, I humbly take leaue, and reſt

Venice, October 31.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I ACCOUNT it amongſt my diſgraces, not to haue receiued a fauor from your grace, which my lord Grandſon hath aduiſed mee that yow uouchſafed to ſend mee by your letter; then the loſs wherof the enemy could not doe mee a greater ſpight, both for the honor, as that I expected therin a reſolution of myſelfe, giuen up into your graces diſpoſition; and your farther order how I ſhould proceed in the ſearch of marbles, which I haue found a quarry and ſtony buſines. In the firſt, I will hope his majeſtie, by your graces mediation, hath granted and directed my reuocation; which I haue humbly ſollicited by many letters, particularly by thoſe of June and July, without any other limit of tyme then the ſooneſt; hauing fulfilled my contracted tyme, and one yeare, at the requeſt of the merchants, or by neceſſity, their affayres ſettled, their trade reduced to rule and order; and thoſe ſeruices which I undertooke for his majeſtie, brought to perfection, as your grace will perceiue by my letters to my lord Conwey, which hee will communicate with yow. All the incredibility and difficultyes are ouercome. Gabor is far aduanced in Hungarye, Mansfelt joyned with him, the enemy retyring with loſs before them, whom hee promiſeth to follow to the gates of Vienna; and to confirme him by many obligations, hee hath married a proteſtant princeſs, and for her procured the election of ſucceſſion in that prouince from the eſtates of Tranſiluania, and the confirmation of the inueſtiture here, to the great ſtrength and comfort of the religion, and the preuention of the emperor, who hoped in any vacation to ſhuffle the cards, and to corrupt a party to reduce the dependence of that country upon the houſe of Auſtria, or at leaſt, to ruine it by a ciuill warr or breach with the grand ſignor: and all theſe haue beene aduanced principally in contemplation, and by the authoritye of his majeſtie; ſo that now there is no farther uſe of my ſeruice, wher ther is more uſe of action and proſecution, then of negotiation; of which I doubt not his majeſtie will take care, that this happy diuerſion may helpe to giue Chriſtendome that peace, for which all good men doe pray.

IN the ſecond, For your graces command of marbles, I haue beene ſo unlucky, that with much induſtrie and expence, I haue yet beene able to procure none ſuch as, I feare, your curioſitye doth expect. Mr. Petty hath raked togither 200 peices, all broken, or few entyre: what they will proue, I cannot judge. Hee had this aduantage, that hee went himſelfe into all the iſlands, and tooke all hee ſaw, and is now gon to Athens, where I haue had an agent 9 monethes, and haue now ſent the Venice bayloes letters to his conſull their reſident, to aſſiſt mee, patiently attending ſome better iſſue. I haue foure buſtoes, and ſome heades and peices collected in Aſya and Paris; but being left at Scio, I cannot commend what I haue not ſeene. New hopes are giuen me from Andri and Santerino, and other parts: but my refuge is in your graces benignitye, that yow will accept my endeuors, and conſider that I am tyed to a reſidence almoſt to a priſon; and my ignorant inſtruments take all figured marbles, how diſgracefull ſoeuer, for ſtatues, and with them haue cloyed mee; with this proteſtation, that whatſoeuer I can procure by authority or mony, ſhalbe the witneſſes of my deſire to doe your grace more ſeruice. In confidence of the continuance of your graces fauor and protection, I liue in hope to ſee my countrye, and to be found there

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$.
Nou. 1626.

Your Graces moſt humble and deuoted ſeruant.

To the Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

THE encloſed is, I know, a labour ſuperfluous, not doubting but your lordſhip hath the full relation of all the paſſadges of count Mansfelt vp into Hungarye, and of their proceedings after his joyning with the prince of Tranſiluania, and proſecution of the enemye; to which I can add nothing but a confirmation of the ſame by his ambaſſador newly arriued, who telleth us, that Gabor is reſolued to follow Walſtein with expedition, and to force him to fight, leaſt retyring vnder ſome ſtrength, he ſhould haue tyme to entrench and fortefye himſelfe, wherby to gayne the winter, and draw the warr into length.

THE Poliſh ambaſſador hath his diſpatch, and is departed: ther is no new matter nor better aſſurance of peace concluded. His fower demands to receiue hoſtages from the Tartar princes; to haue it proclaymed, that no Poliſh priſoners ſhould be here bought; that the Tartar han ſhould ſend an ambaſſador into Poland; and that the grand ſignors anſwere might bee communicated to him; were all refuſed, though vndertaken and ſollicited by the French ambaſſador, after I had excuſed my ſelfe. And ther hath beene no more done, then a formall acceptance of peace, pronounced in an aſſembly of the great miniſters, that if the kyng of Poland did pay the yearly donatiue to the Tartar, and keepe in the Coſſackes, that the grand ſignor would maynteyne a true peace, and take good order to reſtreyne the Tartars; and a letter to this purpoſe (as they profeſſed) was deliuered to him, without coppy or farther treaty, and ſo hee was diſmiſſed, not much contented. Such promiſes haue beene often renewed, to no effect; and that no more then promiſes could now bee obteyned, hath made the creditt of them the worſe; for I thincke neyther ſyde is able, if they haue the will, to performe. And at the ſame tyme that the ambaſſador hoped here to bynd the hands of the Tartars, they entered Poland agayne, but were beaten out; ſo that the diſcontent is rather nouriſhed then ſecured. And fynding the baſſa of Siliſtra to bee ſince diſplaced, vpon ſuſpicion of intelligence with the Poles, we conclude, that the grand ſignior will not offend thoſe for theiſe; ſo that the army on the frontyre muſt ſtill be maynteyned, the jealouſy remayning, which was all the ayme of the kyng of Poland to ſpare that chardge, that he might draw vp all his forces agaynſt the kyng of Sweden. Such a concluſion befitted the tymes, wherin ther is no ſcandall, nor offence done to Chriſtendome, but matters equally ballanced. And euen in this little, it was not forgotten to take care of Gabor by a ſolemne proteſt, that any attempt made vpon his terretoryes, or ayd giuen agaynſt him, ſhould be vnderſtood a direct breach of the peace.

THE laſt poſt that came from Gabor told me, that he heard a rumor in the camp of the priuate arriuall of a gentleman ſent from the French kyng to the prince, to make an ouuerture of peace, and to perſwade him not to proceede, and bring all hopes therof into deſperation: I doe not warrant this report, though I ſuſpect yt.

LODOUICUS CAMERARIUS, reſident for the kyng of Sueuland in the Haghe, hath made an intimation, that he deſires to correſpond with me. I haue anſwered, that I ſhalbe glad of his letters. Therfore I entreat your lordſhip to know his majeſties pleaſure, how far I ſhall enlardge myſelfe to him; and vouchſafe me the ſpeedy anſwere.

THIS ſtate doth hold continuall councells, to fynd mony and meanes for the Aſyan warr, the loſs before Babilon being much greater then the fame. They left behynd them neare 300 field peices of braſs, which they now repayre.

I HAUE

1626. IHAUE renewed my ſuite to his majeſtie for my reuocation. All things I hoped after in this place, God hath bleſſed; and now, leaſt I ſhould ſee an ebb tyde, I beſeech your lordſhip, help me in my laſt hope to ſee my countrye, that I may publiſh there my ſelfe to bee Conſtantinople, $\frac{1}{1}$. Nou.

1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt obliged ſeruant.

RELATION of the aduice from the camp of GABOR at Kements upon the river Gran in Hungary; dated 19. October, new ſtile; and ſent for England, 30. Oct. old ſtile, 1626.

Subſtantia literæ in caſtris ad Kementz poſitis ſcriptæ, 19. die Octob. per manus domini mei; ac huc ad Conſtantinopolim, 5. die Nou. veſperi allatæ.

DOMINUS Mansfeldius aduenit, et uniuit ſe cum domino meo, et Morteſa baſſa cum 20000 ſelectis militibus; nam habebat in proprio excertitu 18000, ſed in Siletia data ſunt illi mille: in Morauia ſimiliter mille milites, Deo iuuante, habuerunt conflictum maximum cum exercitu Valſtenii, penes fluuium qui vocatur Gran, die 16. Octob. Cæſi ſunt ex militibus Cæſarianis plurima, et multi captiui: quos captiuos iterum omnes decollauerunt.

ILLE Valſtein nullo modo ualens ſuſtenere arma et uires noſtrorum, cum maximo detrimento, quaſi fugam ſibi conſulens, iterum receſſit, tranſcendens in duobus pontibus fluuium qui uocatur Vagh, qui eſt in ſuperiori parte Hungariæ, alibi nullibi habens caſtrametandi locum, niſi ſub Poſonio, uel ſub Vienna. Iſti noſtrates ſtatim inſecuti ſunt eos.

Ex altera parte Danubii erat iſte Scrini-Ogly cum 12000 Croatis, Germanis, et cæteris mixtis nationibus: ipſi auditâ fugâ præcipui exercitus imperialis diſperſi ſunt; quiſq; quomodo potuit, reuertendo in patriam et locum ſuum.

THO. BURSOS, S$^{r.}$ T. Pr. reſidens in Conſtantinopoli.

THE aboue written lame Latin was ſent me 6. Nou. new ſtile, by the Tranſiluanian agent. Since, I haue procured to ſee the princes letters written to the chimacham, wherin I fynd at lardge the ſame relation with this addition; that wheras it ſeemes this fight began upon the riuer of Gran, upon the remoue of Walſtein, the prince doth aduiſe, that his vaunt-gard did follow them, and had ſlaughter of their reare all the way betweene Gran and Vagh; which riuer the enemy paſſing upon two bridges of boates, there was a new fight begun, and many of the Imperialls cutt off; and that his troopes did enter the bridge peſle meſle with them, and gott the paſſage. Hee writeth, that hee will follow them in their footſteps to the gates of Presburgh or Viena. This letter I haue ſeene and read by my owne interpreter; the truth, I doubt not, count Mansfelt hath long ſince confirmed. The bringer of this newes was a Timariot of good qualitye, who makes the report of the enemies loſs and feare much greater then the princes letter; which hee hath juſtefyed to the great miniſters of this ſtate. Hee is diſpatched backe with letters of encouragement, and 3 veſts of honor; one for Gabor, one for Morteſa; the other for Muchemet baſſa of Agria, who followed the retrayt of Walſtein.

Conſtantinople, 28. Octob.
old ſtile, 1626.

To the Lords of his MAJESTY'S Council.

Right Honorable, and my very good Lords,

THE controuerſye ariſen betweene the Leuant companye, and M^{r}. Leate, about the chardges of the negotiation and mayntenance of the peace with the Moores of Algier and Tunes, wherein I am by both requeſted to enforme your lordſhips what I know, will, I hope, excuſe mee of this preſumption; and becauſe there can be no queſtion in that buſineſs, which may not reflect upon me, I humbly aske your lordſhips fauour to beginn from the firſt inſtance: The yeare 1620 and 21, before, and the firſt of my employment, there were taken of Engliſh veſſells ſmall and great aboue 100; and in Algier alone were found 1200 captiues, 1626. his majeſties ſubiects; and about 800 iron peices in their ſhips, wharfes, and ſtorehouſes. The greateſt loſs and miſerye fell upon the weſterne and poore fiſhermen, the ſhips of London ſeldome being ouercome by them; but the condition of trade for ſmall ſhipping, and the hope of liberty to the priſoners, was become ſo deſperate, that the one was quite abandoned, and the other dayly bought their worldly manumiſſion at the price of their ſoules. This was then the eſtate, when it pleaſed his late moſt glorious majeſtie to ſend me to this warfare; from whom I receiued particular and preſſiue inſtructions, to require of the grand ſignor juſtice agaynſt thoſe enemies of the peace and common comerce; and that he would take preſent and effectuall order, to cutt off and ſuppreſs both them and their fauourers. Conformably ther was a clauſe in his majeſties letter to ſultan Oſman, requeſting an anſwere and reſolution in the poynt: which when I had deliuered, and my meſſage, as effectually as I was able, and had made remonſtrance of the impoſſibilitye of the continuance of trade, and conſequentlye of the ametye, without ſome redreſs, to all the greate officers of this ſtate, the grand ſignor, by his letter to his majeſtie, did anſwere, That he would reſtreyne all piracye within theſe ſeas; and did undertake to reduce into obedience thoſe of Tunes and Algier, that they ſhould not moleſt the ſubiects of his majeſtie; and did promiſe the libertye of all the captiues in thoſe cyttyes: and to me, to this end, were offered moſt powerfull commands, ſigned with his owne hand, capigies, and a gally purpoſely to carry them; the coppies wherof I ſent for England. This being as much as I could expect or aske, it was not in mee to fore-judge how they would be obeyed, and, upon a ſubtile jealouſy, to refuſe them. Therefore I accepted them, and ſent them forward with a Turke of qualitye, accompanied with an Engliſhman, upon as eaſy chardge as I could, or a buſines of that nature did require. But when the mony here was to be diſburſed, ther aroſe a difficultye: the treaſurer of the companye hauing no order to take it upon him, I was enforced to runne an aduenture, truſting upon your lordſhips equitye, that the burthen ſhould not bee caſt upon me; humbly becoming a ſutor, that ſome publicque meanes might bee conſidered to beare the chardge of a publicque beniffitt. To which I receiued anſwere from my lord Caluert, That 1000 l. ſhould be allowed from the piratt contribution, which was ſufficient to ſatisfye all, and more then I had undertaken. What the ſucceſs hath beene, your lordſhips may pleaſe to remember, that the cytty of Algier ſent 24 commiſſioners hither, with whom I made a capitulation, by the authoritye of the grand ſignor, and the mediation of his viziers; who beeing returned, the peace was proclaymed and publiſhed, and my part was done: what effect it hath taken, and how it hath beene obſerued, the conſull there reſident is the beſt wittnes. He hath not complayned to me of any priſe brought in, in 20 moneths; and hath written mee, that almoſt all the ſlaues haue bene releaſed, to aboue the number of 800. Of what mony hath beene ſince ſpent to theſe uſes, I can giue no account; he that did diſburſe yt, doth beſt know by what authoritye: but that the whole chardge ſhould eyther be caſt upon the companye, or fall upon M^{r}. Leate, neceſſarilye layd out in a publicque ſeruice, your lordſhips, in your wiſdome, when you conſider that neyther of them were uoluntarilye engaged, and that the benefitt is univerſall, and redoundeth more to the weſt coaſt then to London, will vouchſafe ſo far to fauour their forwardnes to aduance a common good, as to judge that a common purſe ſhall aſſiſt them. In my opinion, (which I offer with all fitt reſeruance) ther is nothing more juſt and naturall, then that all this chardge ſhould be borne by the new leuiation gathered for the ſuppreſſion of pirates. I know there are ſome that neglect the peace, and diſualew what ſo euer hath beene done, grounding themſelues upon the particular oppreſion lately done to M^{r}. Leate, and upon other ſmall loſſes that haue happened in the ſea. But to the firſt I anſwere, That ther was ſome occaſion giuen by their fleete; and thoſe that are practiſed in Turky know, that all aduantage giuen muſt be auoyded, becauſe we trade in the foundation upon diſaduantage: yet if that iniurye were done by the uiolence and neceſſitye of one man, agaynſt the will of the councell of that towne, which they deſire to repayre and ſatisfye, it is no better reaſon agaynſt the trade with Algier, then ſuch like and greater extortions haue bene here agaynſt Conſtantinople and Aleppo, wher they yet continew. What reſtitution I hope ſhalbe made 1626. to M^{r}. Leate, I refer to his owne relation, whom, as next concerned, I haue lardgely enformed, at leaſt, what is done here with their new commiſſioners, come to ſubmitt to the grand ſignor, upon ther alteration of gouerment; who doe diſauow the fact, and confeſs the injuſtice therof, and haue made oath to the vizier, that before their departure two farmes were granted to M. Frizall, for his reparation; In confirmation wherof I haue deliuered the new baſſa the grand ſignors moſt effectuall command. If this be performed, the firſt obiection is reſolued. The ſecond is of leſs weight; for it could neuer be expected, that abſolutely all ſhould be reſtrayned: ther wilbe theeues at Sutors-hill, in diſpight of all the next juſtices and lawes. But, in the generall, the peace hath beene kept, his majeſties ſubiects freed to ſerue him, and much eaſe giuen to the weſt fiſhermen; and if ſome one or ten haue beene taken, it is moſt certayne, it hath beene done by the new plantation at Saleh, whether ſuch as could not ſecurely come into Algier, are remoued; which, euen for Algier, is a good argument of ſome ſceenceritye. I will not farther preſs any mans beleefe, but humbly ſubmitt to your lordſhips, and future tryall, preſuming to deliuer my opinion, that it is neceſſarye and beneficiall to England, as the face of affayres are, to keepe this peace, though at ſome expence and diſaduantage; and I doe beleeue it wilbe dayly better obſerued: not out of facilitye, for no man knowes Turkiſh falſhood better then I; but grounded reaſon, that it is found, by the wiſeſt of them, profitable not to be enemy to all the world at once, and to haue their ſtate ſubſiſt upon no other baſis but theft; and the change of gouerment is, to this hope, a great preparation. Therfore I haue proceeded, untill I receiue his majeſties and your lordſhips farther declaration, to renew the contracts with both thoſe cittyes, upon the occaſion of new baſſas, and confirmed it by powerfull commands giuen them, not only to obſerue a peace, but for free trade, and admittance of any ſhips, or fleetes, in all the ports of their terretorye to water, and bee prouided of all uictualls or other neceſſaries for their mony; of which euen the ſtouteſt may haue great neede, hauing no ſafe refreſhing from Zant to the Lands-end, the coaſts of Spayne being enemye. If this ſhall prooue acceptable to his majeſtie, I humbly beſeech your lordſhips to make ſome juſt prouiſion for the expences paſt and depending; for without chardge nothing can long bee maynteyned, where, if it were poſſible, the ſunneſhine would be ſold to the naturall ſubiects. And that all the Turkes, now priſoners in England, may bee releaſed, of whom the detention of one, who are of no ſeruice but to ſpoyle bread, is a ſufficient cauill for theſe, that eſteeme their falſe Muſelmen at a high rate, as beeing all alike free, and without much diſtinction of qualetie, to hinder the releaſe of many poore Chriſtians, who might uſefully ſerue his majeſtie; and to this diſaduantage and obſequiouſnes, all that trade with them are ſubiect; becauſe wee haue no tye upon them, but only to ſerue ourſelues, and make a uertue of neceſſitye. The French are glad of worſe conditions; and for this purpoſe, I know not any inſtrument ſo fitt as Frizell, how ſo euer diſcontent hath made him deſirous to remoue; for he is ſo hardened to patience, and ſo well beloued, that in all occaſions he is able to make a faction, and to defend himſelfe. I am not ſo drye, as that I haue ſpent nothing in this publicque ſeruice. I haue borne my part aboue my abilitye, not knowing upon whom to chardge it; and haue redeemed more ſlaues out of my owne poore meanes, then doth concurre with thrift, or worldly prouidence: yett I will omitt my owne caſe, and conclude a petitioner for M^{r}. Leate, that hee bee not made a ſad example to warne others not to ſerue the publicque at their owne hazard and ruyne. I will not oppreſs your lordſhips patience by longer diſcourſe; but hoping in his majeſties benignitye for my ſpeedy reuocation, I cannot doubt to giue your honors ample ſatiſfaction in this buſines, and therin to doe more ſeruice at my returne, when I ſhall, with leſs tediouſnes, make all particulars cleare, and ſhow both the proffitt and poſſibilitye of this trade and peace, in theſe coniunctures, important to the commerce of England. In the meane tyme, unable to ſerue your lordſhips, I humbly take ſanctuary in your honorable protection and fauour, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{20}{30}$.
Nouemb. 1626.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

BEING newly returned to my reſidence here, after a long peregrination, I haue thought it fit (although I am not yet ſetled) to ſend unto your lordſhip primitias calami, which ſhall aſſure you of ſuch unfained affection and ſeruice as may juſtly be expected from one, who doth truly honor your worth and merit.

I HAUE here receaued two pacquets from your lordſhip, whereof the firſt is dated the $\frac{4}{14}$ of September; the later hath the ſame date in the letter, being a duplicate of the former; but the poſcript doth beare date the $\frac{20}{30}$. of September. The incloſed, directed to Sir Frances Netherſol and M^{r}. de Queſtor, ſhall, God willing, bee ſent away by the firſt opportunity; the one by a currier, whom I diſpatched to Lions; the other by the ordinary of the Low-countryes.

HERE incloſed, your lordſhip ſhall receaue two pacquets from my lord Conway, which did come to my hands when I was in Heluetia, in my way hitherward: the one of them I did open, not out of curioſity, as your lordſhip will eaſily ſuppoſe, but becauſe the endorſement did direct it unto mee; which error I do preſume to attribute unto Cheſterman, his lordſhips ſecretary. Howſoeuer, I do aſſure my ſelfe, that your lordſhip will not be offended with my peruſall thereof; becauſe, in regarde of one particuler, I may ſay, Si non erraſſet, fecerat ille minus; for there is mention made of papers ſent your lordſhip concerning the diſmiſſing of the French out of England, which by negligence were forgotten; for I found no ſuch thing in your lordſhips pacquet, nor in any of mine brought then by captain Henderſon; and therfore, to ſupplye that omiſſion, I ſend you here incloſed thoſe which I receaued at Turin in a former pacquet before my departure from thence.

THAT you may ſee what worke I am about, and how neceſſary I do conceaue it to acquaint your lordſhip with all my proceedings, I ſend you the copyes of my laſt letters receaued from my lord Conway. Of my operations you ſhall haue part, as ſoone as the buiſineſſe doth come to maturity; for hitherto I haue onely tranſacted with the marquis of Baden, whom I haue left conſtant and reſolute to execute his propoſition; and hauing put all the cardes into his owne hand, I haue left it to him to playe the whole game, hauing onely promiſed to aſſiſt his miniſters here and at Turin, to haſten the performance of what hath been promiſed. As for the duke of Sauoye, I haue his word ingaged for his quota; but I dare not promiſe any thing for theſe ſigniori, becauſe I did make my propoſition but yeſter day, and haue not yet an anſwer. The marquis doth aſſure mee, that they haue paſſed their word unto him to concurre for their rate, in caſe he could diſpoſe his majeſtie to enter; and now I do expect, they ſhould declare ſo much unto mee; which if they do, I will immediately giue my bond for the monny which his majeſtie is to paye, and haſten this diuerſion as much as poſſibly I can, for the eaſe of the king of Denmarke, and the incoragement of the prince of Tranſiluania; unto whom, I doubt not, your lordſhip will thinck fit to giue part of theſe proceedings of his majeſtie, and of his strayning himſelfe beyond his power to aduance the common cauſe in all places.

I HAUE likewiſe moued theſe ſigniori concerning the particuler of the prince of Tranſiluania, and deſired their concurrency with his majeſtie in his aſſiſtance, in caſe they haue not already ſupplyed him; or their continuance, if they haue begunne to contribute that way; whereof I haue ſome reaſon to doubt, in regarde that fewe dayes ſince I did, at Breſſia, ſee letters of his to the count de la Tour, which did complayne of their coldnes.

I MUST deſire your lordſhip to excuſe my breuity at this preſent, which I preſume you will eaſily do, when you ſhall underſtand, that I am but of three dayes ſtanding in this place, not yet ſetled in my howſe, diſtracted with much buiſineſſe, and a little weary after a long journy. By the next opportunity, God willing, I will renewe this trouble unto you, and ſo continue, without interruption, as long as my tabernacle ſhall be fixed here. In the meane time I will deſire to kiſſe the faire hands of your noble lady, and beſeech you to beleeue, that I am Venice, 18. 9ber, 1626. ſtil. nou.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull, and moſt affectionat frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

1626. THE cardinall of Sauoye hath long ſince taken notice vnto mee of the commiſſion he had from his father, and promiſed to imploy himſelfe uigorouſly for the archbiſhop. If any do goe to Rome for that buiſineſſe, I will put him into the right way, if he will addreſſe himſelfe unto mee.

To Mr. WILKINSON.

SIR,

EXCEPT I ſhould propheſy, I can ſend you no newes: from Gabor hath none lately come; but without any great ſpiritt of diuination, wee foreſee more rumors in this cytty: the beaten ſoldiers, returned from the war, inſolent as cowards, demand impoſſible rewards, as if they had deſerued, for not turning to the ennemy. It is ſayd, the grand ſignor will ſitt out and face them, to ſee what they dare, and what they would haue; but if you will haue ſuch a character of them, as with vs paſſeth, a Spahee being denyed a benifitt of the vizier, vnfitt for him, told him alowd in the ſtreete, That while he was buried at Babilon in the duſt, (I thincke rather then in bloud) that thou hadſt thy handfull of thy wiues poluted (   ) threatening to doe things not to bee ſpoken. The poore man had no anſwere, but the patient ſhrugge, yet hath married the emperors ſiſter. Now you know what is ſuffered here, and what it doth pronoſticate, and how low I am driuen, that write you ſuch matter; which is the cauſe that I ſpare my lord ambaſſador, that would not ſpare my ſelfe, to doe him ſeruice. So, ſaluting captain Manwayringe, and Mr. Rowlanſon, I euer reſt

Conſtantinople, 20.
Nou. 1626.

Your moſt aſſured freind.

COPY of a Diſpatch to Lord CONWAY, from Sir ISAAC WAKE, 21. Nov. 1626.

AS ſoone as I arriued at Venice, I demanded audience; and vppon the 15th of this month, ſtilo novo, I had the honor to enter into the college; where after hauing complyed a little ceremoniouſly with the duke and the ſigniori, I did giue them a ſhort account of my voyage, how I had left the duke of Sauoy conſtantly reſolued to hold good for the common cauſe, the proteſtant Swiſſes infinitely diſcontented with the late treaty, and the Griſons vppon the point to precipitate themſelues out of deſperation.

THE firſt thing that I did recommend vnto their conſideration, was the preuenting a great danger which did threaten the publique, and would turne to a notable prejudice of this ſtate in particuler, if fit remedyes were not opportunely applyed: for the Spanyards, preuayling themſelues of the ill ſatisfaction which the Griſons receaue from the French, do not onely malitiouſly nouriſh them in their juſt diſcontentment, but ſtrongly incourage them to reject this treaty, by offering very aduantagious conditions both from the gouernor of Milan, and the archduke Leopold, in caſe they will renounce their alliance with France, and treat with either of them a-part. Wherevppon I did deſyre theſe ſigniori to conſider how pernitious it would be for all Chriſtendome, and for this ſtate in particular, if that gate of Italye ſhould fall into the hands of the Spanyards, for the mayntayning whereof free and open, ſo many men, and ſo much monny, hath beene conſumed: That allthough the French had ſo farre diſobliged their friends, and ſcorned and neglected their allyes and confederatts, that their loſſe were rather to be deſyred then preuented; yet conſidering that the common enemy was to gayne ſo much by the bargaine, it would well become the wiſdome of this ſtate to keepe that howſe from falling, the ruines whereof would bury them: That there was but one remedy, to keepe this diſeaſe from prouing incurable, and that muſt be by cheriſhing and comforting thoſe people in ſuch ſort as that they fall not into deſperation; for the applying whereof none was ſo proper as his ſerenity, from whoſe hand they did expect this charity, hauing deſyred me to recommend them to his protection, and to moue him in their behalfe, firſt, to giue order, that their ambaſſadors might be aſſiſted by his miniſters at Paris; and, ſecondly, to aſſiſt them with competent meanes to defend themſelues from violence, in caſe the execution of this treaty ſhould be inforced vppon them againſt their wills.

FROM this diſcourſe I did paſſe vnto that which did more particularly concerne his majeſtie, vſing the ſame language vnto them here, mutatis mutandis, which I had formerly vſed in Heluetia and Rhætia, (with the repetition whereof I will not trouble your lordſhip) without omitting any thing that his majeſtie had donne already, did at this preſent, or did intend to do hereafter, for the aduantage of the common cauſe in all places; deſyring them to preuayle themſelfes of this conjuncture, which they had ſo long wiſhed for, and to cooperate with his majeſtie, whilſt he did employ himſelfe ſo vigorouſly for the publique.

AFTER this, I did deſcend to particulers, and let them know, that notwithſtanding the great and infinite charge his majeſtie was at, both at home and abroade; yet, to expreſſe the zeale he did beare to the good cauſe, he had beene pleaſed to giue a gratious eare vnto ſuch [a] 51. as had beene made vnto him by 64.70.$\overset{g}{20}.\overset{a}{1}.\overset{b}{7}.\overset{o}{40}.\overset{r}{45}$. 65.68. and [b] 55.6. and that he would be ready to performe what had beene deſyred by them both, in caſe that others, who had equal intereſt in the publique liberty, and did beare a leſſe weight, would contribut their parts, accordingly as had beene intimated to his majeſtie. Laſtly, I did deſyre them to giue order to their miniſters in all places, to haue a vigilant eye vppon the proceedings of the Spanyards and Auſtriaci, to informe themſelfes what prouiſions they did make of men, monny, or ſhipping; what deſignes they had; and to acquaint his majeſtie, or his miniſters, therewithall from tyme to tyme.

VPPON the 20th of 9ber, ſtilo novo, I was called into the college, where, after a ceremoniall preface of much compliment, I receaued theſe anſwers following, vnto the eſſentiall points which I had recommended vnto their conſideration:

FIRST, concerning the Griſons: That as they had not beene hitherto wanting, on their parts, to contribute, as much as did lye in them, to reſtore thoſe people vnto their libertye and ſoueraineţy; ſo they would conſtantly perſiſt to aſſiſt them with their beſt offices, both in France, and all other places, deſyring me to giue them that aſſurance; and that this laſt treaty was made without their participation and conſent.

SECONDLY, concerning $\overset{g}{20}.\overset{a}{1}.\overset{b}{7}.\overset{o}{40}.\overset{r}{45}$: That hauing of late ſpontaneouſly, and of their owne accord, donne as much as was poſſible to incourage him in the execution of his deſignes, and well foreſeene of what vſe his diuertion might be for the publique, they would now the more vigorouſly aſſiſt him for the preſeruation of his perſon and ſtate, in regard that his majeſtie had, out of his wiſdome, taken that buſineſſe into conſideration, which they did conceaue would be of important conſeſequence for the aduantage of his majeſties ſiſter and brother-in-lawe.

THIRDLY, concerning [c] 55.6: That they did ſingulerly approue and applaud the aſſiſtance which by me they had vnderſtood his majeſtie was diſpoſed to giue vnto him, whoſe perſon they had long had in particuler recommendation without fayling, vppon occaſions, to giue him aſſurance of their good will towards him.

LASTLY, That they had giuen order to ſignior Contarini, their ambaſſador in England, to communicate vnto his majeſties miniſters in England, weekely, ſuch auviſi as they did ſend him from hence, or he could receaue from other parts; and that they would do the like vnto me here, and be as vigilant vppon any thing that did concerne his majeſtie, as if it were their owne intereſt.

I DID make no reply vnto this anſwer, but onely acknowledg thankefully their readineſſe to correſpond with his majeſtie, and to concurre with him in his generous deſignes; whereof I did promiſe to giue his majeſtie a faithfull account.

THEIR anſwers vnto the firſt, ſecond, and laſt point, are as categoricall as I could deſyre; and as for the third, which doth concerne [d] 54.6. as they haue not declared what they will do in particuler, ſo I did not thinke fit to preſſe them, becauſe I haue no commiſſion ſo to do: and takeing for granted, that he hath already the word of this ſtate ingaged vnto him, as he hath aſſured me, I leaue the proſecution thereof vnto thoſe whom he doth intend to ſend thither for that purpoſe, ſuppoſing that I haue donne enough in making his way by the aſſurance which I haue giuen this ſtate, that I haue power from his majeſtie to conclud with him, when I ſhall ſee that others, who were firſt ingaged, do performe what they haue promiſed.

---

[a] Ouuertures.

[b] The marqueſs of Baden.

[c] Marqueſs of Baden.

[d] Marqueſs of Baden

1626. promiſed. As for the ſecond point, not knowing what they do or haue donne for that prince, I cannot vrge it further vppon them, vntill I ſhall heare either from him, or his majeſties ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, that there is juſt cauſe of complaint; and then I will paſſe ſuch offices with this inſtant, as I ſhall be required to from them, without attending further commiſſion from his majeſtie. In that point, which doth concerne the Griſons, there is one circumſtance very remarquable; and that is, their categoricall declaring vnto me, that the treaty of peace is paſſed ſenza noſtra veruna participatione et aſſenſo; wherein they do giue the lye directly vnto the miniſters of France, who haue publiſhed in Heluetia and Rhætia, that this ſtate had approued of the treaty; and hereof I do intend to make good vſe, hauing to the purpoſe taken their anſwer in writing.

From the Same, to Sir THOMAS ROE.

My very good Lord,

VPPON the 18th of 9ber, ſtilo novo, I did aduertiſe your lordſhip of my returne hither to Venice; and beſides ſuch letters as I had receaued for your lordſhip out of England, I did ſend you the copyes of the two laſt, which my lord Conway had ſent unto mee: all which, I hope, will ſafely come to your hands, and that I ſhall underſtand ſo much in due time.

A DUPLICATE of my laſt to your lordſhip, you ſhall receaue here incloſed, and likewiſe an abſtract of what I haue written to my lord Conway, ſince my comming hither, togither with ſuch papers as do concerne the Griſons; by which you will ſee the true ſtate of that buiſineſſe, as it doth ſtand at this preſent.

AS any thing ſhall occurre in theſe parts worthy your lordſhips knowledge, you ſhall be ſure, God willing, to haue part thereof by euery fregate, during my abode here; knowing how much it doth import the ſeruice of his majeſtie, that your lordſhip ſhould punctually be informed of all that doth paſſe here, in regard of the notable uſe you do make thereof for the good of the publique.

THESE ſigniori here haue giuen mee to underſtand, that the prince of Tranſiluania hath begunne to appeare in our cauſe, and that in ſuch a ſort, as is conceaued to be a publique declaration. His firſt beginnings haue been crowned with good ſucceſſe, hauing defeated part of Valleſtains armye, and taken priſoners the count Slict generall of the Imperiall artillery, Lorenzo Maeſtro, and two other colonells of quality; whereby it may be preſumed, that he may be incoraged to proceede uigorouſly. And yet from Vienna they do write doubtfully of him, as if he did giue ſecreate aſſurance to the emperour of his reſolution to holde good quarter with him, which is a riddle that I cannot unfolde.

I WOULD willingly do him any ſeruice here, as I am commanded to do; but at ſo greate a diſtance I cannot ſee ſo cleare into his actions, as to reſt ſecure of his intentions; and this ſtate doth ſpeake of their correſpondence with him in ſuch generall tearmes, that I may preſume they had rather ſupplye him by their bailo at Conſtantinople, then be knowen here to be ingaged towards him; although I haue ſome good reaſon to ſuſpect, that they do but verba dare, as I intimated to your lordſhip in my laſt. The certainty hereof I ſhall deſire to know from you, unto whom, I do aſſure my ſelfe, that his miniſters do diſcouer arcana imperij; and therefore, whenſoeuer your lordſhip ſhall thinck it fit to command mee any thing for his ſeruice, without expecting any newe order out of England, I will paſſe ſuch offices for him as ſhall be enjoyned mee by you; which point I do ſeriouſly recommend unto the conſideration of your lordſhips wiſdom.

THE king of Denmarke, by well meſnaging the diſaſter which did befall him in Auguſt laſt, hath uerefyed a paradoxe of Monſieur de la Noüe, who doth undertake to proue, Qu'il eſt profitable à un chef de guerre, d'avoir receu une route; for hauing then giuen proofe ſufficient of his courage, he doth now make his wiſdome appeare; and I doubt not but Fabius will proſper better then Marcellus, wee hauing already ſeen, that by his dexterity he hath recollected the reliques of his broken army, and ſo wearyed Tilly with cunctation, that they do not onely ſtand at the preſent vppon equall tearmes; but, in all appearance, his majeſty is likely ſhortly to haue the better of the game: for he hath not only ſtopped the torrent of his enemyes proceeding, ceeding, by hauing opportunely and ſtrongly preſidiated Nieburg, Stoltena, and Wolfenbittle, where he doth intend to quarter all this winter; hauing the riuer Weſer to ſupply him with uictualls, and the North to ſecure his back, and tranſport ſafely unto him ſuch newe leauyes as he hath ordayned; but further, by this temporiſing, he hath ſo wearyed the army of Tilly, that whole companyes do disband: ſo that when the time ſhall be fit to returne into the feilde, it is uery probable, that the king will be the ſtronger of the two.

IN Piedmont all things do ſtand as I did leaue them, there being neither peace, nor warre, nor ſuſpenſion of armes; and this fruite wee do reape of theſe uncertaintyes, that the Spanyards do pro interim conſume themſelfes to no purpoſe; and it muſt be my worke to continue them in this hectique feauer, that they may not tranſport any of their forces into Germany, whereof I am now out of feare for this winter, and chi ha tempo ha vita.

OUT of France, I haue nothing to write, but that it is like Gallily, unde nihil boni, unleſſe you will ſaye, that they are ad mala ſolum boni; but there is ſome hope in their naturall inconſtancy, and, if they do uarye, it muſt needes be to the better, becauſe it is not poſſible for them to do worſe then they haue donne of late.

I WILL trouble your lordſhip no further, at this preſent; but deſire you to beleeue, that I am unfainedly and truly Venice, 3. December, 1626, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

VPON the 30th Nouember, here arriued another currier from the prince of Tranſyluania, who brings fire in on hand, and water in the other. The next day his ambaſſador extraordinary and reſident were with mee: they report and ſhow the princes letters, relating a new and great fight upon the paſſadge of the riuer of Vagh, wherin Gabor hath gotten a great uictorye by the proweſs of count Mansfelt, without whom he durſt not joyne in the former skirmiſhes, and affirme to haue ſlayne and taken of the Imperialls 10000. In wittnes wherof, Morteſa baſſa of Buda hath ſent 300 captiues, Germans and Hungars, as a preſent to the grand ſignor; a miſery that deſerues pity, but cannot be auoyded. Habet aliquid ex iniquo omne magnum exemplum, quod contra ſingulos utilitate publicâ rependitur. The ſecond part is full of allay; for they confeſs, that he hath made a truce, and conſented to ſend two commiſſioners to treate, what, I know not: but upon the heate of victorye, when proſperitye would haue beene urdged, to fall to parlye, ſauours too much of this ayre and border fayth. I haue not ſpared to preſs what jealouſy this outward leuitye will bring to his freinds, what diſhonor to himſelfe, to riſe and goe out like a meteore, fuller of gaze and woonder then effect; but, not knowing particulars, and inward thoughts, nor his owne miniſters, more then concurreth with his preſent ſeruice, I muſt hope, that their coniectures are better grounded, then my feares, who ſay, that the terrible noyſe of the king of Denmarkes diſgrace made him ſtand; and ſeeing the winter begunn, that it was not ſafe to bee too far engaged, before he had aduice of the recouery of the affayres in Germany; and that therefore, according to his nature, he did ſeeke to winne tyme, and to enterteyne the emperor with treatyes, of which he will make no concluſion without his alliyes: and to this purpoſe, that count Mansfelt was priuatly departed (leauing his army with Gabor) to ſome conference, wherof they were ignorant. Laſtly, that the prince was weary of the Turkes company, and tooke this occaſion to ſend them home, reſoluing to garriſon his owne forces in Hungarye, and to take the firſt opportunitye of the ſpring to renew the warre. Theſe are fayre coloures, and ther is much to creditt them; cheefly, that Gabor hath putt to death two principall barones, and Morteſa the late baſſa of Agria, for intelligence with the emperor; and it is moſt certeyne, that Bethlem will neuer ſleepe in quiet without that crowne, of which he had once poſſeſſion. But, on the contrarye part, wee know here, that as the baſſa of Buda leaped in to action without the expreſſed conſent of this ſtate, ſo all

This poſt doth report ſix cannons taken by count Mansfelt.

1626. all theſe miniſters preſs a peace to their owne affayres moſt neceſſarye; who declyne ſo faſt in Aſya, that they dare not thincke of conqueſts in Europe; and therefore, if Gabor bee not well heartened from Chriſtendome, it is to be feared, he cannot continew the warr to the offence of the grand ſignor.

I HAUE wiſhed, that count Mansfelt had receiued directions to haue correſponded with mee; for now I can know nothing of the purpoſes of Gabor, but as he and his owne miniſters will ſeaſon them; and muſt bee content with the taſt they pleaſe to giue; when perhaps I might haue croſſed here, and kept him to his fayth; becauſe to his owne ends he will uſe me, and for them, blind and abuſe this ſtate at his pleaſure. What is wanting this way, I hope is done from other parts, by more able inſtruments: yet I will not omitt to perſeuere in my duty, purpoſing to write to the prince, and to giue occaſion to count Mansfelt to doe him ſeruice; in confidence, that though I haue no order to begin, yet I haue leaue to uſe diſcretion and oportunitye, and that his majeſtie will accept my good heart, inſteed of all other ſacrifice. And ſo I leaue your lordſhip to the holy keeping of our bleſſed God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{4}{14}$.
Decemb. 1626.

From the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

[a] B Gabor.
[b] Quaad

THE ambaſſador from [a] 127, monſieur [b] 1463371, having made his propoſitions, and in a long diſcourſe related his maiſters affections, what he had vndertaken and was ſtill readie to vndertake, for the common cauſe; and herein at large expreſt his demaunds and advices for proſecuting the warre; after ſome weekes debate and conſultation, he hath now att laſt received his diſpatches. I will forbeare to trouble your lordſhipp with the diſcourſes, being, I preſume, the ſame yow haue often heard there. The heads and ſubſtance of the whole are in effect the ſame yow haue repreſented from thence. Firſt *130 demands to 37147372.6771 2969 the 60. Secondlie, An 3877 of 794681 629643971 7955344 a 5.996762. Thirdlie, Another 3277 of 6675671 62964.3971 579. Fourthlie, That the 61 ſhould ſend a ſolemne 35.3344327 to 42, to 7249.947 that 46367 to 73694 the 774.22974 and 345.74 of the 9.42937 and 61, and not to make 398 57 with 106; or if 61 ſhall not find this proper, then to giue order to their 214 to doe the 43571977.2374. Laſtlie, Vpon theſe 3997262994, he would without delaie 79674 720 119 94 116, or that 9346 where the 7997527 might moſt conveniently and profitably 377134.4365677 and 72674677.

IN conformitie to theſe propoſitions, †21 hath 697741224 2397 and 473571 22679 an 336 vnto 71, by which he 77353474, that he doth 375.26 and 4737267

130

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

The prince of Tranſiluania demands to be receiued into the league. Secondlie, An ayde of forty thouſand dollers a moneth. Thirdlie, Another ayde of twelue thouſand men. Fourthlie, That the allyes ſhou'd ſend a ſolemn ambaſſage to Conſtantinople, to diſpoſe that ſtate to fauour the deſſignes and armes of the princes and allies, and not to make any peace with the houſe of Auſtria; or if the allyes ſhall not find this proper, then to giue order to their ambaſſadors reſident to doe the ſame offices. Laſtlie, Vpon theſe conditions, he would without delaie enter Sileſia, Morauia, or Bohemia, or that part where the enemy might moſt conveniently and profitably bee aſſaulted and diuerted.

† His majeſtie hath vnder his hand and ſeale giuen an act vnto the ambaſſador, by which he declares, that he doth admitt and receiue the prince of Tranſiluania into the league made att the Haghe, and to everie clauſe and article of the ſame; and for his part hath further accepted and agreed to the articles following, and recommends the ſame to the acceptation of the allyes, to be confirmed and obſerued, as if they had beene concluded att the Haghe; theſe being the ſame which formerly had beene propounded from the prince. Firſt, The prince of Tranſiluania ſhall with all his power make warr vpon the emperor

and 1626. 130 into the 60 5377 att the 23227, and to everie 353647 and 34623.57 of the ſame; and for his part hath further 33379.677 and 324777 to the 34623574 following, and recommends the ſame to the 33.3.79633299 of 61 to be 3997245.77 and 934.74677, as if they had beene 3.993567771 att the 232227; theſe being the ſame, which formerly had beene 9499.9697771 7495 the 9.42937. Firſt, 130 ſhall with 3551 2241 996741 5357 66 6999 101, and 106, and 96274 the 3955991 7975.2741 3232.9461 6.295 this 77 is 6977463579; and ſhall 79457139 39 of 72.7677971 629643971 575736.125; and with 6275139.346, or with the 38774 of 61, as ſhalbe moſt advantagious, ſhall 2963771 the 79752741 67442694274. Secondly, The reſt of 61 ſhall att 627241 39461 4797 to the 3277 of 130 6675671 629643971 496572744; which they hold done alreadie, when 5394.7756 was 47961 69.9. Thirdly, 61 ſhall 38771 127 with 7.94681 629643971 428 62355744 a 599762, whileſt he ſhall 39962967 this 66 of the 60, the reſpectiue 469634 to be 9327 29 42 everie 5997621333.969629232 73874 to a 5.9962, and to 3.955.7937 from the 6257 that 130 ſhall 96661 2969 the 72.757: And becauſe in the inſtant 61 cannot 647367 and 476657 their 4749736267 1469634 21, that the 29971 33647 may not 467.7741 9495.24762 in 26971 9786 to 938 in 42 6791629643971 996974 7925242; and in the meane time will 647367 with 61, what the 46963 of each one ſhalbe. And 21 hereby 3752662.92 127 into the 60 of the 23227 that 59. is to this 3997877, in fide, &c. For that point of the 35334.4327, 214 having order to 974794571 3551 29971 9772.374 for the 9.42937, it was held ſuperfluous; and touching the 469634, your lordſhip may be pleaſed to know, there aroſe a queſtion, 71ʳ, inſiſting, that 20ˢ 9499.946299 was the 23577. According to which 4367 the 5292 of 77953457 had furniſhed 224 9346, having 93271 62246271 629643971 7955344, being the 7964621 9.346 of 624771 59976241 3.99642266299: but

and the houſe of Auſtria, and other the common enemies, againſt whom this confederacy is vndertaken; and ſhall forme an army of fifteene thouſand elect Hungarians, and with them apart, or with the aydes of the allyes, as ſhalbe moſt advantagious, ſhall inuade the enemies terretories. Secondly, The reſt of the allies ſhall att their coſt ſend to the aide of the prince of Tranſiluania twelue thouſand ſouldiers; which they hold done alreadie, when Mansfelt was ſent vp. Thirdly, The allyes ſhall ayd Bethlem Gabor with forty thouſand rixthallers a moneth, whileſt he ſhall continue this warr of the league, the reſpectiue quotas to be payd in Conſtantinople everie moneth, accounting 32 daies to a moneth, and to commence from the time that the prince of Tranſiluania ſhall putt into the feild; and becauſe in the inſtant the allies cannot treate and ſettle their reſpectiue quotas, his majeſtie, that the good cauſe may not ſuffer, promiſeth in June next to pay in Conſtantinople ten thouſand pounds Engliſh; and in the meane time will treate with the allies, what the quota of each one ſhalbe. And his majeſtie hereby admitting Bethlem Gabor into the league of the Haghe, that treaty is to this annexed, in fide, &c. For that point of the ambaſſage, the ambaſſadors reſident having order to performe all good offices for the prince, it was held ſuperfluous; and touching the quotas, your lordſhip may be pleaſed to know, there aroſe a queſtion, the ambaſſador inſiſting, that the kings proportion was the halfe. According to which rate the kyng of Denmarke had furniſhed his part, having payd thirty thouſand dollers, being the fourth part of three moneths contribution 1626. but his 5327468 did not vnderſtand he ought to 37347 more then a 62247; and according to that 9499946299 hath 7923277 himſelfe for his 9346 for three 5997624, yett without declaring it ſoe; but leaving that point to be ordered by agreement, and this to paſſe in the meane time as in 9346 of 21^{s} 46963 in generall whatſoeuer it ſhalbe. And ſoe 71 is 724.9363277 with 64 69 130 of 7939643275796 to proceed, and 4746746 to him to 736964, and 344.2461 53947756 and 344643937 of 21 3994639327 to 964467 the 2997 33647, as he hath 3726997.

AFTER many conſultations, touching the aydes to be ſent to the king of Denmarke, and ſome changes of counſells vpon advertiſements from thence, and other intervening accidents, it is reſolved, and all diſpatches requiſite are made and giuen, to ſend vnto him the 6000 foote in his majeſties pay in the Low-countries, with order and proviſion for their entertainement. And the lord Willoughby, (who was eldeſt collonell) and the lord Vere, excuſing themſelues from the journey, the lord Willoughbies regiment is appointed to Sir Charles Morgan, and choice made of him to haue the commaund of theſe troopes in chiefe, as collonell generall. A courſe is alſo taken for the preſent furniſhing and ſatiſfieng vnto that king the ſumme of 100000 pounds, which being agreable to his owne demaund, wee are confident will both content and confirme him.

HERE hath bene a gentleman from the †5344624 97 133779 with propoſitions ſomewhat varieng from thoſe which his majeſtie accepted, which were ſent from 42412.4333516.357. His majeſtie, notwithſtanding, in forward zeale to the publicke good, hath embraced them, and engaged himſelfe for the 57368 and 9381971 7.96471 629643971 7996, and 997 971 29447, for 997187347; ſoe that 235 and 241 doe 733.2176492.42 the 52571 9.494946299, as they formerlie promiſed; and to bring them to 9747.945.3937 124 now in 972962.36299 with them. And they 395.958292127472 9, it is out of doubt the 5.344624, by 225.47577 and his 7427974, wilbe able to performe what is expected.

I HAUE, as yow inſtructed mee, acknowledged to the Venetian ambaſſador the grace and honor that ſtate intended yow vpon your returne; and what in your ſeuerall letters yow wrote, touching his ſucceſſor, his majeſtie hath read. Three are to be elected, and preſented to the king, by the company, out of which number his majeſtie will name one; and the choice in likelihood will fall vpon Mr. Wyche, who ſhould haue beene agent in Spaine, his majeſtie having alreadie recommended him by letters to the company. Soe that yow ſhall not need to doubt your revocation; of which I wilbe carefull that it may be ſoe timely, as yow ſhall not looſe contribution: but his majeſtie did not vnderſtand he ought to beare more then a third; and according to that proportion hath engaged himſelfe for his part for 3 moneths, yett without declaring it ſoe; but leaving that point to be ordered by agreement, and this to paſſe in the meane time as in part of his majeſties quota in generall, whatſoeuer it ſhalbe. And ſoe the ambaſſador is diſpatched with letters to the prince of Tranſiluania, of encouragement to proceed, and requeſt to him to fauour and aſſiſt Mansfelt, and aſſurance of his majeſties conſtancy to purſue the good cauſe, as he hath begunn.

---

† Marqueſs of Baden, with propoſitions ſomewhat varieng from thoſe which his majeſtie accepted, which were ſent from Sir Iſaac Wake. His majeſtie, notwithſtanding, in forward zeale to the publicke good, hath embraced them, and engaged himſelfe for the leauy and pay of foure thouſand foote and one of horſe, for one yeare; ſoe that the ſtate of Venice and the duke of Sauoy each furniſh the like proportion, as they formerlie promiſed; and to bring them to performance, is now in negotiation with them. And they complying hereto, it is out of doubt, the marqueſs, by himſelſe and his friends, wilbe able to performe what is expected.

the fitt ſeaſon for your returne, which I wiſh may be proſperous vnto yow, and remaine 1626.

Whitehall, 6. Dec. 1626.

Your Lordſhips aſſured friend to ſerue yow.

To the Counteſs of BEDFORD.

Madam,

I AM glad to fynd an excuſe, and force an occaſion to renew in your remembrance the name of an old ſeruant; for when I had no other matter but myſelfe, and my fruictleſſe oblations, I haue to my greife tryed, that they fall like little riuers into the ocean, without memory, loſt, neyther able to add to yow, nor to conteyne themſelues in their owne channells, being a naturall and due tribute. Thertore I haue recalled my thoughts upon what your ladyſhip tooke the lateſt pleaſure, that I ſaw yow marſhalling of antient coynes and medalls, delighting in the records of vertuous tymes, vertuous men, and uertuous actions; ſo that I haue preſumed to enterteyne yow one hower with the encloſed catalogue of ſuch, as in this pilgrimage I haue collected: amongſt which there are ſome ſo rare, that I ſuppoſe the cabinets of Paris, which muſter 12000, cannot match them. This curioſitye of antiquityes, though by ſome ſeuere men cenſured, hath yet diuers uſes beſides delight, not to bee contemned: they are a kynd of lay humanitye, teaching and inciting deuotion to morall uertue, as well, and more ſafely then images among the new Romans, to the contemplation of diuine miſteries. They propoſe a liuely cronologye on the one ſyde, and a repreſentation of hiſtorye, heroicque or greate actions, on the other. They carry in them a ſhadow of eternitye, and kindle an emulation of glorye, by ſeeing dead men kept long among the liuing by their famous deedes. This apologye made for the generall, your ladyſhip will giue mee leaue to ſay ſomwhat of particulars. Foure things are required in medalls, truth, antiquitye, bewty, ſtorye, or poetrye: for theſe, the mettall is one of the beſt wittneſſes. Copper is ſeldome here a counterfayt, harder to woorke upon, and therfore of moſt eſteeme, eſpecially the unciales, and trueſt in reſpect of chardge, where ſo many were ſtamped, ſiluer and gold, untill the fourth hundred year urbis conditi, being ſcarce and not in uſe. In antiquityes wee muſt diſcerne which were made upon publicque triumph, or for honor, from thoſe which were nummi: theſe latter are leſſe eſteemed, though, where they haue numbers, they are an equall light to hiſtorye. The others, truly medalls, are moſt rare in the tymes of the conſulls; and I doubt whither there can bee any ſhowed and maynteyned before the firſt Punicque warr. Roman coynes, as a quadrans, ſextans, triens, were ſmall, of braſs, and bare only ſome inſcription of Rome, as urbs Romæ; or ſtampe of a beaſt, a ſheepe, cowe, or wolfe. Siluer was firſt beaten at Rome, anno 484, Fabius Pictor and Quintus Oculeius conſulls. 62 yeares after, C. Claudius Nero, and M. Liuius Salinator, ſtamped gold, all of one weight and name, aurei. Now began medalls of the ſame greatneſſe, which alſo paſſed for their value, though caſt abroad, and made upon ſome occaſion. From theſe tymes conſulary monyes remayne to us, though I know not why they are not ualued, as ordinary in their birth, with reuerſes of biga and quadriga, conteyning no hiſtorye. The tribunes and cenſors alſo coyned, but I reckon theſe all in one order: yet I cannot ſo bee beaten of, as not to eſteeme them, being they haue three of the qualityes required; and therfore, euen of theſe, I haue bought all I could fynd, as your ladyſhip will ſee in the firſt ſeries, amongſt which, I confeſs, moſt are nummi. Playne monyes, as appeares by the inſcription Roma, and the X, ſignifing denarius, quinarius, and ſextertius, noted with Q and S, I haue not ſeene: but among theſe I fynd many that were not coynes, but pure medalls, becauſe they relate to hiſtorye, or the memory of more antient tymes, as the Mercury of Camillus, the combat ouer a virgin, of Sabinus, the altar of Libo, the Diana of Lucretius, the pontificall ornaments of Cæſar, and the Libertas of Brutus. But here alſo wee muſt take heede of an error, neyther to condemne all for falſe, that wee fynd inſcribed with elder names or actions, then our rule will iuſtefye; nor to eſteeme them made by thoſe men, or in thoſe tymes, whoſe memorye they carry; as of the Sabine rapture, Camillus, Lucretia, and ſuch like, long dead before the uſe of medalls in Rome, or the ſtriking of ſiluer: but wee muſt acknowledge them

ſtamped

1626. ſtamped by ſome of their poſteritye, who, upon occaſion of new honor, did reuiue the glory of their anceſtors, and inſinuate their owne: and ſo wee ſhall fynd the moderne emperors honor Auguſtus Cæſar, ſo the Furii did renue the memory of Camillus; Sabini, of the peace made with the Sabines; Lucretius the conſull, of that famous chaſtetye which gaue Rome her libertye: but leauing theſe obſcure and coniecturall tymes, from Craſſus and Pompey downward, medalls begun to bee neceſſary and uſuall, greater then coynes, and for the moſt part braſs. In the beginning of the empire, this honor was allowed to the wiues, daughters, ſonnes adopted, and the bloud of the Cæſars, their great freinds and fauorites: as Auguſtus ſtamped medalls of Agrippa, and honored Virgill with an imperiall band, faſcia, upon his garland, of which I haue one made, as I collect, to caſt to the people, in the honor of the prince of poetts. But in the next age, this uſe was vulgated and depraued, being communicated to their concubines, libertines, and maſters of their ſordid pleaſures: but now was the art at the higheſt, and infinite numbers were ſpread in the world; ſo that, from the Cæſars, it is poſſible to continew the cronologye, if not the hiſtorye, to Paleologus that loſt the Eaſt empire. Of this moderne kynd ſome are hardly found, but I haue gotten the rareſt, and all that are here to bee had, as the ſecond title will ſhow; ſome whereof are not to bee ſeene in euery ſhop, as Claudius, father to Nero; Geta killed in his mothers armes; Maximianus Thrax; Qu. Herennius, ſonne and colleague of Decius; Gordianus Afer; Poſthumus, ſett up among the 30 tirants agaynſt Galienus; Seuerus, adopted by Galerius, colleague of Conſtantius Chlorus; Conſtantine the greate, and his ſucceſſors, to Focas. But now barbariſme and ignorance preuayled, arts were forgotten or diſgraced, all the ſtamps are brute. Such as they are, I will endeuor to follow the ſucceſſion as low as I can, becauſe in the Weſt they are not ſeene.

GREEKE medalls, in my opinion, as they are more antient, ſo they are bewtifull, full of art, and moſt miſticall in the reuerſes, alluding to their ſacrifices, religions, or warrs. I haue ſome rare peices, a dedication for the health or ſaftye of Hercules, an hierogliphicque of the Heathen diety, a Pallas of Athens, a head in braſs, not to bee cutt in many moderne ages, in which I read almoſt Agamemnon. Moſt of theſe are great, braue, and bold figures, ſemiunciales, of gold and ſiluer; in breife, coſe di cardinale. To the contemplation of their inſcriptions I leaue your ladyſhip, not doubting yow will teach mee, when I returne, more then I can fynd of them without helpe. With this intruſion, I hope at leaſt, yow will not bee diſpleaſed; nor, when yow might expect newes, that I talke of their contrarye antiquities; when by them I am putt in mynd, that I am your antient ſeruant, and will euer profeſs and mayntevne, that I loue and honor yow aboue all weomen; and therfore, at this diſtance, yow will accept this all poſſible expreſſion of Conſtantinople, $\frac{9}{19}$. Decemb.

1626.

Your Ladyſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

WHITHER from the ſeaſon of the yeare, or any change of affayres, ther hath no newes arriued from Hungarie ſince my laſt letters: but ther is a generall rumor, that Gabor is retyred to winter his army, and count Mansfelt gone priuatly away, a truce taken, and a treaty begunn; which the Imperialls, we know, will apprehend and proſecute vpon any conditions. Vpon this apparance of any alteration, the emperors agent ſpreadeth the fame of his maſters victorious armyes, and ſo well uſeth the occaſion, that he hath almoſt poſſeſſed all the officers of this ſtate with an opinion of the neceſſitye of peace: ſo that it is very probable, that if an ambaſſador be ſent from Vienna, he ſhalbe accepted, and his comming will obteyne whatſoeuer he ſhall deſire. On the other part, the miniſters of Gabor ſollicite, at leaſt in apparance, ſome diſpatches oppoſite, and inferring contrary effects; but vpon ſo little ground of eyther ſyde, as to relye vpon their reports fitted to their owne ends. So I will vndertake nothing, aſſured that his majeſtie hath from count Mansfelt thoſe ſecretts reuealed, at which I can only coniecture: to whom alſo the knowledge of the paſſages and reſolutions of this court had beene neceſſarye, and might haue balanced Gabors priuat councells; but I know nothing vpon what conditions he is come vp, nor in whoſe name he marcheth, nor any particular but what I take vpon truſt; and therfore my ignorance will plead my pardon. Yet I am perſwaded, that Gabor hath no purpoſe to make peace, but to paſs the winter with comoditye, and to renew the warr in the ſpring; for he can neuer be reconciled ſecurely to the emperor, nor in ſafety by his proſperitye, nor quiett without more aſſurance of Hungarye, eſpecially hauing once touched that contribution which was promiſed him; the earneſt wherof, I heare, is to bee payd in this cytty, by the hands of the Duch ambaſſador, who hath receiued bills for 30000 dollars remitted by order of the kyng of Denmarke, though I doubt not moſt of the mony is my maſters. I am aſhamed, and I cannot conteyne to lament yt, that if this buſines hath beene rayſed and vpheld by mee, yet ſtill I am kept downe, and the grace conferred vpon others. The Duch (without acquaynting any man, vntill he had alone diſpatched to Gabor) ſent him the firſt newes of his orders, and will as priuatly make the payment, as if he alone were credited; ſo that hereby he only ſhalbe retruſted, by whom they fynd the ſweetnes, and I am diſabled and diminiſhed with all his miniſters. I wanted not creditt nor affection; yet was ambitious of nothing but to haue knowne and marched pari gradu with others, the better to haue ſerued my maſter.

THERE is made a new great vizier, Halil-baſſa, long obſcured, the only ſoldier of the old breed of this emplre; with him a new aga of the janiſaries, and all officers of the warr; and, which is ſtrange, and contrary to all uſe and preſident, they were, in ten dayes from their creation, commanded to depart. The one is already paſſed the water, the vizier followeth to morrow: though the winter be extreame, the ſnow deepe, and the wayes full of difficultye, yet no excuſe or delay is admitted. What this change and diligence doth portend, I cannot prophecye, whither a haſtening to diſſolution, or that, reddita juventute, præter ſpem ſenectus imperii quaſi revireſcit; but the example is new, to ſtirr in this ſeaſon. The army, ſtragglingly returned hither, ſhall not be compelled to march till the ſpring: yet many offer themſelues to this miſerye, and to any danger, for loue of their old generall, who finiſhed the laſt warr of Perſia with glory in the tyme of ſultan Achmett, and now ſetts on as cheerfully as to a wedding. Yet I foreſee, that the envye that thruſts him out more then neceſſitye, vpon pretence to keepe togither the remnants that wilbe ſcattered before he can arriue at Aleppo, will, when he is gone, breake out, and the ſoldiers will call to a new account ſome that ſtay behind, as authors of this innouation: ſo that all is not ſo cleare as the firſt day appears.

I HOPE his majeſtie hath pleaſed long ſince to diſchardge mee of this diſgracefull imployment; in which I liue with more diſcontent, then, being vnguilty, I could doe in any priſon of England; from which if your lordſhip will help to deliuer mee, I ſhalbe bound to pray for yow as often as I now write to yow, and will remayne for euer Conſtantinople, $\frac{20}{30}$. Dec.

1626.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE not fayled to ſalute you by euery poſt ſince my returne hither, and the date of my laſt your lordſhip will ſee by the duplicate here incloſed.

THE agent of the marquis of Baden, hauing hitherto receaued generall anſwers to his propoſitions, without any categoricall aſſurance of ſuch reall aſſiſtance as was required by his maſter, hath met within theſe two dayes with two contrary incounters, which do giue him ſome newe hope of better ſatiſfaction before his departure: whereof the one is the unfortunate death of count Mansfelt; and the other, the happy arriual in this towne of an ambaſſador from the king of Denmarke. Count Mansfelt dyed in his way hitherwards, and the expectation of ſuch negotiations as he was incharged withall, did ſuſpend the acceptation of any propoſitions made from any other, in regard that his name was uery plauſible in this ſenate, for the opinion that was conceaued here of his ualor, dexterity, and ſincerity, accompanyed with better fortune in all his enterpriſes, then the marquis hath hitherto been fauored withall. They did intend here to haue receaued him nobly, and to haue lodged and defrayed him as a prince; and it is thought, that if his body be brought hither, he ſhall receaue that honor now dead, which was intended to him liuing.

1626. WHAT alteration this accident will produce in thoſe parts, wee ſhall ſhortly ſee by the proceedings of the prince of Tranſiluania: but it is here conceaued, that this ſtate, hauing loſt their greateſt champion, will harken more willingly unto the ouuertures which are made unto them from other places: and for the better diſpoſing of them to do that which is fitting for the aduantage of the publique, the comming of doctor Joachim Kratz from the king of Denmarke is uery opportune. He is directed principally unto mee, and I will not be wanting to aſſiſt him as farre as may lye in mee. The ambaſſador of Holland hath order to joyne with us both, and to treate communicato conſilio; but as yet, our newe ambaſſador is iconoſciuto, and wee do intend that he ſhall continue ſo, and make no greate noiſe for feare of oppoſition; and if wee can haue la noce, wee do not care for la uoce, as affecting more ſubſtances then ſhadowes. I do intend, God willing, to make his waye as ſoone as may be; and when the buiſineſſe ſhall come to any maturity, your lordſhip ſhall know how wee ſpeede. Concerning the affaires of the Valtelina, I will referre your lordſhip to a paper here incloſed, which I receaued from this ſenate; unto which I do giue the more credit, in regarde that it doth confront well with my auviſi from Rome ſent mee from the prince cardinal of Sauoye. The laſt I had from your lordſhip, were dated the 23. of October, ſtilo uet. and I will hope that all mine are ſafely come to yout hands. Here incloſed you ſhall finde one which I receaued for you this weeke out of England; from whence I underſtand, that all our differences with France are fully accommodated; and as I am ſure that they are well pleaſed, ſo I pray God they giue us that ſatisfaction which wee deſerue, and they haue promiſed. In France there is helde une aſſemblee des notables, the iſſue whereof wee muſt attend. I haue nothing elſe to trouble your lordſhip withall, and therfore here I will craue leaue to kiſſe your faire ladyes hands, and euer reſt

Venice, 22. Dec.
1626. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

From Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

THE Venetian ambaſſador, in an audience with his majeſtie ſome few daies ſince, by order from the ſig^{rie}. repreſented, that the ambaſſadors reſident att Conſtantinople, obſeruing that the choice made of the new baſſa of Tunis, being of a perſon who had formerly bene a chiefe pyratt amongſt them, and was ſtill owner and commannder of a conſiderable quantitie of ſhipping in thoſe portes, had conceaued a jealouſie, that he would be ſtill a fauourer, if not a protector of the pyratts. And howſoeuer hee might not, or durſt not, publiquely and avowedly ſuffer to be comitted pyraticall ſpoiles and outrages, yett hee might be moved to connive att ſuch acts vpon coulourable pretences, and ſtopp the waies of juſtice and reparation to ſuch as, being endomaged, ſhould complaine; whence would follow noe ſmall interruption of trade, if not the like diſorders and hazards, as formerly our merchants haue bene ſubject vnto: and therefore the ambaſſadors reſident had all concurred, that it was requiſite to oppoſe the ſending and imployment of that baſſa for Tunis; and that they ſhould reſpectively giue knowledge hereof vnto their maſters, and move them to wryte vnto the grand ſignor, not to imploy that perſon whome they ſuſpected, to the end that not onely the breach of the amitie and good correſpondencie betwene them, but euen all doubt and jealouſie thereof might be prevented: and in conformitie to this reſolution, if his majeſtie would be pleaſed to wryte his letters, and lead the way, the ſig^{ri}. of Venice would doe the like. This point the ambaſſador handled confidently, as if yow had aduertized the ſame thing hither: but vpon peruſall of your letters to the lateſt I haue receiued, which is of the 8th of October, I finde not the leaſt intimation of any ſuch matter; and by yours of the 22th of September, I ſhould rather collect there is not ſuch cauſe of feare, then ſuſpect the contrarie, ſince there yow informe, that the new baſſa for Tunis was vpon departure, and that yow were to deale with him in a point for his majeſties ſeruice, an argument rather of confidence then diſtruſt. And if ſoe great cauſe of excepting againſt that perſon, as is now preſented, had appeared to your lordſhip, it is here beleiued, out of good experience of your wiſdome, that yow would not haue paſſed by a matter, which in the conſequence may ſoe much concerne both his majeſties ſeruice, and the ſecuritie of the merchants and their trade, without appearing preſently in the oppoſition. This anſwere was therefore giuen vnto the ambaſſador; That his majeſtie had as yett receiued nothing in this pointe from yow, whome hee did deſire to heare firſt; and, vpon aduertiſement from yow, his majeſtie will proceed, as ſhall be moſt for the publique good, and communicate his reſolution vnto the ambaſſador.

I MAY not omitt to lett your lordſhip know, that the ambaſſador, in his diſcourſe with mee, tooke occaſion to apply parte of it to your perſon; wherein hee was not wanting to affoard yow many worthy and thoſe deſerued attributes of honor; and gaue aſſurance, that not onely the qualitie of his majeſties ambaſſador, but your perſonall vertues, had wonne yow ſinguler reſpect and eſtimation with thoſe ſeignri. who acknowledge that yow haue greatly merrited in the ſeruice of the publique.

I WAS truely glad to heare this reporte from him, and did not lett ſlipp the firſt occaſion to acquaint his majeſtie therewith, that hee might ſee hee had receiued both honor and ſeruice by your employment, and in how faire a reputation yow ſtand with that ſtate, which hath had opportunitie and cauſe to obſerue your proceedings.

THE Venetians, hauing alſo ſeene and obſerued how really and conſtantly his majeſtie hath and doth pourſue the vindicating of the publique libertie, and how effectually and profitably his majeſties miniſters, namely your lordſhip and Sir Iſaac Wake, haue ymployed yourſelues in oppoſing ſuch projects and deſignes of the enemyes, as might bee of prejudice; and on the contrarie, in advancing thoſe that might be of advantage to the common cauſe, and the encoragement and ſupporte of ſuch as did or would ſtand vp in defence of their owne and the publique ſafetie, they haue reſolued to hold a ſtrict correſpondence with his majeſtie, to be vigilent vpon all things that might concerne his majeſtie, and by themſelues and their miniſters abroad, communicate vnto his majeſtie and his miniſters all ſuch aviſi as they ſhould receiue from any parts. This they haue declared vnto Sir Iſaac Wake, who made inſtance vnto them to this purpoſe: and I am confident hee keepes ſoe good correſpondence with your lordſhip, as hee acquaints yow with all paſſages; ſoe that I doe rather by this take occaſion to mention to yow Sir Iſaac Wakes name, as one who much eſteemes and honors your perſon, then offer it as an aduertiſement. Yett, if there bee cauſe, I doubt not but yow will advantage your ſelfe hereby, and make vſe of it towards the Venetian miniſters in that porte.

THE propoſition mentioned in my former letters, made by the * 5344624 97133779 is now in the way of being made 7462.6574471 235 47764292. to engage themſelues 39964348 to former hopes and intimations giuen from their miniſters abroad; which 634236299 is 3993 72 677 to 9493777 from hence, that 235 are 696255292 to 47974367 from 90 by 3953292 92 with any other 942937, ſtill 299292 91 will open his 7874 and 47747447 794574174494 4; in which caſe they ſhall haue 99719777 of the 5344624: and, 2. their 78973.63399 of 9667466474 by 53947756 from 127 about a 726744299 in 133 and 134, of much more 2599463937, and much more 7742477 by 235, if it can be compaſſed. Howſoeuer, 21 muſt haue the 29994 not to haue 972573677 this 97774 well and profitably grounded for the publique, if the 4746129674744771 23 71399364477.

YOUR

---

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

Marqueſs of Baden, is now in the way of being made fruictleſs, the ſtate of Venice refuſing to engage themſelues contrarye to former hopes and intimations giuen from their miniſters abroad; which variation is conceiued to proceed from hence, that the ſtate of Venice are vnwilling to ſeperate from France by combining with any other prince, ſtill hoping the French king will open his eyes, and redreſs former errors; in which

1626. YOUR lordſhip will now ſhortly receiue order touching your retorne, Sir Peter Wiche (who was one of the three preſented to his majeſtie by the companie) being choſen for your ſucceſſor, and his commiſſion and letters of credence in preparation: and I conceaue, he will fitt himſelfe (as all things will be fitted for him) to take his journey in the beginning of March. I will not faile to haſten him with all conveniencie; and, to deale plainely with your lordſhip, I haue alwaies conceiued, and ſtill thinke, that the neceſſitie of his majeſties ſeruice would haue required your continowance yett a yeare longer; though, to ſatisfie the earneſt requeſte of your ſelfe, and your noble ladie, I haue both forborne to adviſe his majeſtie therein, and recommended your ſute preſented in ſeuerall letters for your retourne.

HIS majeſtie approues well the aſſiſtance yow haue giuen to Bethlem Gabors agent, in the ſeuerall pointes of his negotiations, repreſented in your laſt letters, and eſpetially in that pointe of inveſtiture of his ladye.

THE refuſall and alteration of ſome of the points, with your reſolution how yow will gouerne your ſelfe in the buſines concerning Poland, are agreeable to his majeſties intention; which regulates itſelfe by the rules of chriſtian pietie to auoide actions of ſcandall, and yett for the reſt gouernes itſelfe according to juſtice and neceſſitie of ſtate; and vpon that ground will not neglect the waies and opportunities of advancing the publique good, the ſafetie of himſelfe, his friends and allyes, and the religion he profeſſeth.

I KNOW not what orders the French ambaſſador there may haue receiued; but the proceedings of the French here are far vnſutable to the rules of amitie, they hauing, contrary to expreſſe articles of the treaties betwene the crownes, lately confirmed by both kings, arreaſted generally through France all our marchants ſhypps and goods, hauing noe other pretence, but that ſome few French were ſtaied here; which is true of ſuch as, being mett att ſea, haue bene found laden with goods belonging to the ſubjects of Spaine: wherein alſo this juſtice hath bene done them, that noe ſhipp nor parcell of goods really belonging to the French haue bene deteyned; and onely ſuch goods as vpon good proofe haue bene found to bee of our enemyes, haue bene confiſcate and adiudged for good prize: which is warranted by the law and practize of all nations. But the treaties betwene the crownes beare, that vpon priuate complaints of parties intereſſed, noe arreſt of ſhipps in harbours, or goods on land, ſhall be graunted. Att the ſuite of our marchants, his majeſtie hath commannded the ſtay and ſeizure of all French ſhipps and goods within the kingdome, or that ſhall come in, to be diſpoſed towards the ſatisfaction of their loſſes, in caſe they ſhalbe refuſed juſtice and reſtitution in France. Wee expect to heare of their reſolution herein: *627937126727579615381 be 5.37716276274 the 9474796152469774463972 92416253771 4736272771 or 29534277179421 will not 7798122414632736 419496736299, in 3347127713399969493647162751264623713661677129971 all things will be well accomodated.

I WILL now hold yow noe longer then to continew to yow this aſſurance, that I am

Whitehall, 28. Dec.
1626.

Your Lordſhipps aſſured friend to ſerue yow,

E. CONWAY.

which caſe they ſhall haue noe neede of the marqueſs: and, 2lie, their expectation of ouuertures by Mansfelt from Bethlem Gabor about a diuerſion in Styria and Carinthia, of much more importance; and much more deſired by the ſtate of Venice, if it can be compaſſed. Howſoeuer, his majeſtie muſt haue the honor not to haue neglected this offer well and profitably grounded for the publique, if the reſt intereſſed had concurred.

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

Whence iudgement may be made, whether the preſent miſunderſtandings wilbe rectifyed or inlarged; for his majeſtie will not deny his ſubiects protection, in caſe hee cannot procure timely iuſtice. But we hope all things will be well accomodated.

To

To the Lord CONWEY.

My Lord,

I HAUE encloſed ſent your lordſhip two coppies, vpon which I will ſay nothing, not doubting but his majeſtie hath from count Mansfelt receiued full enformation, both of the proceedings in Hungarye, of the wintering their forces, their wants, and the cauſe of his departure to Venice. What concerneth my owne duty, I haue amply anſwered them; but haue not tyme to tranſcribe them into cyphar vntill the next poſt. To the one I haue replyed, That I am confident his majeſtie will take care of him, according to the contract. But what payment the Duch doth make, though I heare that the prince of Tranſiluania hath aduice of the mony remitted by the kyng of Denmarke, and giuen order to his reſident to make acquittance, I know nothing; only, that ther is great difference vpon the exchanges, wherof ſome will make their profitt; and I am perſwaded our merchants will deliuer here at better rates, if they were treated and aſſured of acceptance of their bills, becauſe from hence are little returnes. To the other, I haue acquaynted him with the true eſtate of this empire, that theſe miniſters deſire a peace; yet, that the conſummation therof will depend vpon the will of Gabor, who is able to driue the concluſion to his owne purpoſes; and ſhowed him the way to engage this ſtate by neceſſitye, who will truſt no chriſtian arguments; and that, vntill therin a reſolution be ſettled, the propoſition of free paſſadge thorough the grand ſignors dominion wilbe impoſſible. If they or wee can preuent the proceeding of a treaty, the other will not be difficult; and I dare vndertake to procure commands to his ſatisfaction. Ther was lately ſome good apparance of diſtaſte nouriſhed betweene this ſtate and the emperor, whoſe agent was taken out of his houſe diſgracefully, and carried to an old lodging anciently appoynted for the Imperiall reſidents, when they were guarded and reſtreyned the liberty of publicque viſitts, by which this man corrupteth and peruerteth the affections and vnderſtandings of many: and it had beene a great aduantage to haue reduced him to the firſt inſtitution. He was ſequeſtred 8 dayes, but ſince he hath procured his freedome, partly by the mediation of the French ambaſſador, reſpecting more the punto of outward honor, then the preſent exigent and neceſſitye of the publicque affayres: wherin he hath done us much more harme, then his formall negotiation will, with twenty complements, repayre. His reſtreynt would haue ſtopped all expectance of a great ambaſſador, who muſt haue looked for the ſame meaſure. The extraordinary of Gabor doth depart within two dayes, ſatisfyed, as he ſeemes, of his demands, which were of priuat intereſt, referring the publicque to the reſident and to us, as hauing tyme ſufficient in the winter to procure ſome reſolution. Your lordſhip will perceiue how Gabor doth make it a matter of neceſſity to continew the Turkiſh aydes, which were not firſt propoſed, nor can eaſely be now obteyned, though their feares be more then their extremetyes. But it may be collected, that he ſeekes this refuge, becauſe he complaynes of not performance with him; though his miniſters, for any thing I can diſcouer, endeauour to maynteyne the warr: and he profeſſeth, and I beleeue, if he be ſeconded from any part, that he will neuer make peace without the crowne of Hungary. I hope to be better illuminated by count Mansfelt, to whom I haue intimated the poynts of our correſpondence; and humbly beſeech your lordſhip, that ſeeing theſe affayres are ſo aduanced, to inſtruct me how to proceede, that I may not erre by miſtaking the ſenſe of his majeſtie. Here I will doe whatſoeuer my judgment will direct, or my creditt reach; and muſt ſuppoſe, that theſe letters are to me, that haue no other, ſufficient warrant. Humbly kyſſing your lordſhips hands, I reſt Conſtantinople, 3 Jan.

1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt obedient ſeruant.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſimo Prencipe,

THE proſperous ſucceſs of your highnes armes and affayres, vnited with the forces of his ſacred majeſtie my lord, and the princes colleagued for the generall libertye of Germany, vnder the conduct of count Mansfelt, receiued from your owne hand, hath filled my heart with joyes vnexpreſſable: eſpecially being therby aſſured 1626. of your heroicque and conſtant reſolution to proceede and carry them to perfection. To which I doubt not, but your highnes is long ſince encouraged and ſatisfyed in that complaynt, that yow had not receiued any fruicts of thoſe hopes of ſuccours and contributions promiſed, particularly from his majeſtie. In which, hauing no direct command to replye, being thoſe payments were reſolued to bee ſettled by Venice or Germany; yet knowing in generall, that they haue beene ordered, and that part therof is remitted to this cytty from the kyng of Denmarke, (in which mony I ſuppoſe my maſter is cheefly intereſſed) I will preſume confidently to affirme, that whatſoeuer hath beene agreed on the behalfe of his majeſtie, ſhalbe, like all his woords and vndertakings, royally performed. Ther may perhaps reſt ſome ſcarcetye in the exchanges, which, by reaſon of the war, are hardly found, or at great loſs: but I haue long ſince made an ouuerture in that poynt, and am able to furniſh in this port whatſoeuer I ſhalbe commanded, wherof I dayly expect anſwere. This is the leaſt part, when the greateſt is already fullfilled by the ſupply of the army ſent to joyne with your highnes, which is principally maynteyned by his majeſtie, and is both a great ſtrength and engagement; wherby ther is left no apparence of doubt, that the generall cauſe, your highnes, or his majeſties owne forces, ſhalbe abandoned. The importance of your armes, and the honor of the league, are well conſidered: and though ther may be ſome difficulty in the beginning to diſcouer or force a fitt channell, and to fynd out new wayes for ſupplyes and other prouiſions; yet the neceſſitye of the publicque utilitye will ouercome all, and yow may proceed ſecurely vpon the aſſurance of the fayth of princes: for ther can be nothing more incredible, and diſſonant from honor, then to conceiue, that a worke of ſome yeares digeſtion to make a league, ſhould be diſſolued and forſaken in the byrth, without cauſe, and in the coniuncture of the proſperitye of your victories. And theſe arguments euery one may apply to himſelfe, becauſe it hath beene rumored here, that your highnes hath granted a tyme of truce, and made ſome ſhow of treatye: of which as the emperors agent maketh great aduantage, and this ſtate groſsly judgeth by outward actions, ſo it may giue ſome ſhadow of jealouſy to your allyes, vntill they ſhalbe cleared by the light of your owne reaſons, who doth both know how to conquer, and not to looſe the oportunitye to make uſe of yt. The winter doth call to garriſon, and ther wilbe tyme to renew mutuall intelligence. I wiſh your highnes had as much firmnes from this ſtate, as might content yow, though I neuer conceiued, that the league did depend vpon the ayd of Turkiſh forces, no more then to balance the reputation of Spaniſh ayds, by keeping the houſe of Auſtria from the ſecuritye of a peace, in which ther wilbe no great difficulty. I will deale clearly with your highnes in this poynt, and ſo I ſuppoſe euery good miniſter ought to doe; for truth will preuayle, like the ſunne, vpon all ſhadowes. In your wiſedome yow will conſider the neceſſitye of this empire doth not ſo much hinder, as the ignorance and corruption of the miniſters. The emperors agent workes vpon theſe, threatens, augments, and fills them with rumors; who, knowing nothing, feare all things. Theſe are, I know, deſirous to ſecure themſelues on that ſyde, and much cannot be expected from them; but euery moneth produceth a change of them, when the antient hatred of the houſe of Auſtria remaynes ſtill engraffed and firme, and will haue his turne. And therfore neyther your highnes ſhould bee moued, nor Morteza baſſa bee much affected, with a lettre, the writing wherof is not openly here avowed. The cure muſt come from your parts. If Morteza nouriſh not the jealouſy of the borders, he and all his Spachies wilbe commanded to the miſerable Aſyan war, wher is no bootye nor profitt, but famine, duſt and blowes; or els diſchardged of their dignityes and pay. From care of them ſelues it muſt then proceed, to uſe thoſe arts, which muſt keepe them there by neceſſitye: wherof the principall is to hinder the comming of any ambaſſador hither, and then ther wilbe no more doubt. Neyther ſhall Morteza be in ſo much danger, by continuing the quarrells, as by appeaſing them: for once in 6 moneths, another faction or men better inſtructed will riſe, who will blame his lacke of wiſedome, to uſe oportunitye, more then theſe doe his too much courage: and when he ſhalbe out of action, he is loſt. Of this wee had a late tryall, Halil baſſa being made great vizier; but being ſuddenly commanded to the army, wee could not preuayle vpon him. The chimacham is a man gouerned by his owne reſpects; yet I preſume, howeuer he is now lead, that he dares not proceed to conclude any thing of peace, or to retract the former orders, without a conſultation; wherin it wilbe impoſſible, ſo abiect and meane an opinion, grounded only vpon feares, ſhould be approued. The beſt and wiſeſt men in this ſtate, likeſt to bee aduanced, the captayne baſſa, Huſſein vizier, and Huſſein Affende, are better informed, and faythfull to the empire. Laſtly, If no other reaſon will take place, your highnes may pleaſe to aduiſe them, that hauing vpon the grand ſignors command receiued count Mansfelt, and his troopes, their retraict, both in reaſon of ſtate and honor, muſt bee conſidered, before any concluſion. What is my part to doe, I will not omitt; and dare vndertake, howſoeuer their preſent troubles doth weaken their judgement, yet when it ſhall come to bee ventilated in a councell, a peace at this tyme with the emperor ſhall not bee accepted. The buſines recommended to me from count Mansfelt, I haue conſidered; which depending vpon the former, I cannot giue him aſſurance, vntill that be firſt ſettled: in both which I will doe my endeauour, and giue your highnes therof ſpeedy account. In the meane tyme, kyſſing your hands, I reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, 3. Jan. 1626.

To Count MANSFELT.

Illuſtriſſime et Eccellentiſſime Signore,

YOUR excellence hath preuented me, by your letters from Bars, hauing determined, with the firſt occaſion, to offer you the correſpondence of this court; which howſoeuer otherwiſe meane and barbarous, may be neceſſarye and uſefull to the publicque vtilitye, wherin yow haue now a principall employment. Your excellence remoue to Venice, and therby the vncerteynty of fynding yow, makes me a little reſtreyne the liberty, which I eſteeme expedient for your full enformation; which I ſhalbe ready to enlardge, as ſoone as yow giue me a certeyne addreſs. In the meane tyme, to the particular motion for free paſſadge of ſuch forces, as yow ſhall land in Dalmatia, thorough ſome parts of the grand ſignors dominion, the propoſition will ſeeme new here; for ſo great is the envye of this nation agaynſt all Chriſtians, that though they hate ſome more, yet they are jealous of all. But not doubting that this conſideration hath beene well weighed by your excellence, with the prince of Tranſyluania, I will doe my endeauour to giue yow ſatisfaction, and to procure ſuch commands to be ſent to your excellencie, as ſhalbe requiſite; which I will not doubt to obteyne, if firſt the affection of renewing peace, to which this ſtate is earneſtly inclined, be remoued; and a reſolution, if not to aſſiſt in the war, yet at leaſt to ſuſpend the treatyes, and to lett them reſt in the tearmes they are, bee fully eſtabliſhed, which is now the cheefe obiect of our negotiation; and wherin I haue lardgly written to prince Gabor, opening to him the true condition of this empire, and the way to keepe them engaged, which muſt come from the borders; no argument being able to prevayle here agaynſt their ignorance, feares, and a generall maxime, not to embrace two warrs at once. This is the poynt moſt neceſſarye for your excellencies knowledge; for they are moued eſpecially by the prince, to whom they giue creditt, as one of theirs; and from him, and Morteſa baſſa, muſt proceed the occaſions, eyther to perſwade or to enforce them by neceſſitye. I haue neuer vnderſtood from his ſacred majeſtie my lord, (who after any other is not to be named) that he, or the princes colleagued, did depend vpon Turkiſh aydes; but only to keepe the ballance eauen, to hinder the ſecuritye of a peace, and to haue that army alway in a readines vpon the frontyre, to countenance and aſſure the prince his retrayct and countrye in all accidents: and thus much he at firſt pretended; and when no more ſhalbe required, I am able to preſerue all things in their preſent condition. But I feare, if a breach and engagement bee too farr vrdged, it will produce contrary effects, a ſodeyne concluſion, and acceptation of peace; eſpecially hauing obſerued the great miniſters here to collect from the rumor of a truce granted, and your excellencies departure, ſome ſuſpition of neceſſitye; wherof the emperors agent hath made great aduantage, brauing, threatening, and multiplying all matters. I haue giuen yow a taſt, not daring to aduenture too much in this vncerteynty. Your excellencies wiſedome will collect my thoughts. Vpon the prince, and his proceedings, the reſolution of this ſtate doth depend; and he is able to guide and deceiue them both wayes, to make warr, or to finiſh yt. Therfore, if yow pleaſe to obſerue

his

1626. his purpoſes, that I may know how they conforme to his negotiations here, I may bee able to do yow better ſeruice : to which I offer my ſelfe, with ambition and alacritye, as he that hath long beene

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$.
January, 1626.

Your Excellencies moſt humble ſeruant.

From Sir FRANCIS NETHERSOLE.

My Lord,

THE ſecond froſt we haue had here this winter is broken, after a fourthnights continuance; which is a ſigne, that none will hold long this yeare : yet it is not thought good to ſend the foure regiments from hence to Germany, vntill the danger of that impediment on the way be quite ouer. I pray God, the king of Denmarke do not ſtand in neede of them ſooner : for Tilly hath repriſed Hoya, and thoſe other paſſages which were taken in by the king of Denmarke vpon his retreate; and, no doubt, will do his beſt to preſſe that king, before this new reenforcement come to him.

AN ambaſſador of that king, who remayned ſome time here about the compounding of certayne differences there are betweene his maſter and the French king, about wronges done at ſea on both partes, whereof the States are made arbitrators, in his returne, a while ſince, hath beene taken by the garriſon of Linghen. They pretend him to be good prize ; becauſe he had a conuoy of the ſoldiers of theſe States. It may be, that will not be made a ſufficient cauſe by the king of Spayne, with whom the king of Denmarke is not in warre; but in the meane time, the papers he had about him, are like to be viſited, and ſome of them will diſcouer more, then it is good for vs ſhould haue beene knowne to our enemyes ſo certainely, though they could be not altogether ignorant of it before.

MONSIEUR Quade, who was ſent hither by Bethlem Gabor ſome moneths ſince, to demand performance of that was promiſed him by the treaty made a yeare ſince in this place, and who went from hence to England on the ſame errand, is lately returned thence, and paſſed by here, reaſonably well ſatisfyed with the aſſurance hath beene there giuen him, of performance the next ſummer. If his maſter be ſo too, it is well.

COUNT Henry de Berg, hauing at laſt finiſhed ſome fortes he hath beene building for the defence of the canal, cutting betweene the Rhine and Meuſe, hath manned them well, and ſent the reſt of his army to garriſon. Wherupon the prince of Orange hath alſo giuen order for the drawing downe of his army, which hath hitherto lyen in the townes aboue, with great incommodity to the poore ſoldier.

THE States haue lately made an act, whereby it is declared, that no officer, of what degree ſoeuer, ſhall haue leaue granted to be abſente from his charge aboue three moneths at once ; after which time, if any procure a further leaue, he ſhall yet haue no out-ſtayment ; and if he ſtay away without leaue, his place ſhall preſently be ſupplyed : colonels onely excepted in this laſt poynt.

A SKIPPER of theſe countreyes, with the knowledge and leaue of his excellencie, hath gone vp to Collen, ſince the paſſage was ſhut, vpon a deſſign which hath ſucceeded with more aduantage, then himſelfe could well expect : for he lately tooke in a Spaniſh commiſſary going with mony to Wezel, for the payment of that and other garriſons, with a conuoy of 20 muſketiers ; who going on ſhore to warme themſelues at an inne on the way, the skipper and his men tooke that time to fall on the commiſſary, who remayned with his money in the boate, gagged and bound him, and ſo haue brought him to Emmeric, with his money, ſayd to be 800000 florins at the leaſt : but that is not certayne ; the reſt is, and that the ſumme is great. The skippers greateſt danger and feare was, how to get by the man of warre, which lyeth at Wezel ; but, as God would, that was frozen in, and could only make ſome ſhot at him, which hurt him not.

MY laſt to your lordſhip, was of this day fourthnight : I haue ſince receyued yours of the $\frac{8}{18}$. Octob. with an encloſed to the queene, to which ſhe meant to haue made yow anſweare this day : but being diuerted by company, doth pray yow to excuſe her till the next weeke. Till then, and euer, I reſt

Hagh, $\frac{4}{14}$. January, ſtilo no. 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and humble ſeruant,

FRA. NETHERSOLE.

From

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE body of count Manſfelt making contumacia as yet in the Lazaretto of Spalato, his court is here arriued, conſiſting of 70 perſons: they haue brought unto mee his will, which is of no ualidity, in regard that it is not ſigned; and they do caſt the whole burthen upon mee, pretending that they had order to gouerne themſelfes by ſuch directions as I ſhould giue them, who did beſt know his intentions and deſſignes. For the generall, I haue cauſed them to intitle the queene of Bohemia unto all his eſtate, in regarde that great ſummes, which are due unto him from diuerſe greate princes, will hardly be recouered by priuate perſons, and by the power of his majeſtie wee may hope to get in a good part. Our firſt care is, to giue unto the prince of Tranſiluania ſuch contentment as he doth require; and his demand doth conſiſt of an aſſurance of the payment unto him of 40000 dollers the month, and of a ſupplye of 10000 foot, which may inable him both to beſeige townes, and to keepe them. This laſt demand is newe unto mee, although I am informed that it is grounded uppon neceſſity, in regarde that his caualery is good onely to rauage and ſpoyle, and not proper to maintaine ſedem belli in any permanent place. And he doth promiſe, that if his aſſignations be duely payed unto him, he will neuer make peace without the generall conſent of all perſons intereſſed; and that he will cary the warre into the center of the emperors dominions. Count Manſfelts army is left in his hands, and it is ſuppoſed, that the trouppes of the duke of Waimar are likewiſe fallen out of Sileſia into Hungary, to winter under his protection: and that he may the better preſerue the integrity of that armye, which would periſh by lying in the feilde all the winter, he doth treate a ſuſpenſion of armes untill the end of Aprill, aſſuring us here, that if by that time he ſhall receaue ſatisfaction in his demands, he will breake of all treaty of peace, and purſue the warre with conſtancye. Wee haue here a Tranſiluanian, who, under the pretext of buying ſome gold ſtuffs for his maſter, is to cary back our anſwers; and according to the relation which this ſecret miniſter ſhall make at his returne, that prince will reſolue uppon peace or warre. Wee haue three letters from the prince, and from Morteſa (who doth now ſtile himſelfe viſir); one to his majeſtie, another to the French king, and a third to this ſtate; all of them of the ſame tenor, mutatis mutandis; and contayning no more in ſubſtance, then what I haue already mentioned. The care of all the ambaſſadors here muſt be to giue contentment to this meſſager; wherein Denmarke, Holland, and I, will not be wanting: but wee are much troubled with the French ambaſſador, who, hauing no commiſſion from his maſter concerning the affayres of Germany, can onely wiſh well unto the cauſe, but not cooperate with us. For ſo much as doth belong unto his majeſtie, I will let him know, that I haue, by particular order, moued this ſtate to aſſiſt that prince, and that his majeſtie will not be wanting to contribute his quota, in caſe that other princes will do the like; and for the confirmation thereof I will referre him to your lordſhip, who hath particuler commiſſion to treate with his miniſters there. I will write my ſelfe to the prince, to the ſame purpoſe, and informe him punctually of the proceedings and intentions of his majeſtie, and of his frends; who do not ſpare any coſt or paynes to preſerue the publique liberty, and will haue a particuler care to include Gabor in any peace that may hereafter be treated. This meſſenger of his I haue retired to a frends howſe of mine, where he is lodged and defrayed honorably, and I hope that wee ſhall diſmiſſe him with good ſatisfaction.

THE agent of the marquis of Baden is diſpatcht with a categorical excluſion; and concerning our negotiations here for the king of Denmarke, I will write nothing, untill our buiſineſſe be fait or failli; and then your lordſhip ſhall knowe the iſſue by the firſt opportunity, for now wee are in the greateſt heate thereof. To returne to my firſt ſubject, which doth more particulerly concerne you there, I may not conceale from your lordſhip, that Gabor doth complaine of the French ambaſſador at the porta; who hauing formerly inſtigated him to declare himſelfe in this cauſe, with an aſſurance that he had in his hands monny from the French kyng for his uſe, doth now ſince his going into the feilde eſtrange himſelfe, and not uouchſafe to make any anſwer to three letters, which the prince hath written vnto 1626. him; with which proceeding the prince is much offended, and doth complayne thereof with ſome acerbity. Your lordſhip may be pleaſed to make ſuch uſe thereof as ſhall ſeeme beſt unto your wiſdome, and I ſhall be glad to know how that ambaſſador, the bailo, and the ambaſſador of Holland, do gouerne themſelfes towards him, and whither they haue really order to ſupply him with monnyes, as I am here made to beleeue. The incloſed for your lordſhip I haue receaued this weeke out of England, and your laſt to my nephewe, dated the $\frac{20}{30}$. of Nouember, are arriued this day, with two pacquets directed to Sir Fr. Netherſol, and Mr. de Queſtor, which ſhall be ſent away, God willing, by the firſt poſt. I will trouble your lordſhip no further at this preſent; but here take leaue, and euer reſt

Venice, 13. Jan. 1627.
ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

AT this inſtant I haue receiued letters for your lordſhip from the Haghe, which you will finde as ill conditioned as mine from thence, which haue onely a piece of mine uppon the couer, to direct them to my houſe.

To Lord CONWAY: With Advices from Vienna.

My Lord,

IN this great vncerteynty of reports, I am perplexed what to write to your lordſhip; the actions of the prince of Tranſiluania, and the negotiations of his miniſters with this ſtate, being no otherwiſe knowne to me, then in ſuch colours as they pleaſe to putt vpon them: and therfore I haue thought it my duty to his majeſtie, to enforme all, and leaue the judgement to his ſingular wiſdome. From Vienna I am aduiſed, that ther was arriued a meſſenger of Gabor, excuſing his taking of armes vpon the vnperformance of ſome articles in his laſt treaty, and the not ſending an ambaſſador to the port, aſſuming the neceſſity of obedience, and offering to make a truce for 3 monethes, and to diſpatch commiſſioners to the emperor, to mediate the concluſion of peace with the grand ſignor. To which he receiued anſwere, That if firſt he did not diſmiſs the Turkes, and ſeperate himſelfe from count Mansfelt, and his troopes, with whom he would admitt no parly, nor make any accomodation, he could giue no audience to any that came from him: This being performed, that he ſhould clearly declare all his purpoſes in writing, and leaue nothing to his ambaſſadors, to the end that hereafter an excuſe, formerly vſed, might not bee prepared; that they had not well expreſſed, or conceiued his mynd; and with this he was diſmiſſed. How the prince doth vnderſtand this reply, I hope himſelfe will giue account to his majeſtie. But we heare, that he is retyred to Caſſouia, and Morteſa baſſa to Peſt. Thus the Turkes that come from Buda report, and I beleeue; yet his owne miniſters ſay, that he doth winter about the riuer of Gran, in a fort taken by him in this expedition, which the Turkes demanded as theirs, and being refuſed them by the Hungars, there brake forth ſome diſcontent, ſoone appeaſed. Certeyne I am, that this ſtate deſireth the peace; that they doe blame Morteſa for what is paſt, and will endeauor to encline Gabor to accept yt; which dependeth wholy (for ther is no other difficulty) vpon the comming of a great ambaſſador with the preſent of 100000 dollers, which the Turkes require; though it be not the emperors turne, and he much deſcendeth from the tearmes of honor, if he beginn. So that, vpon true ground, wee cannot hope, that this ſtate will for any our arguments be farther engaged; and how Gabor will proceed without them, in reſpect of his dependance, is a matter of great conſideration. In this poynt I haue written clearly to him and count Mansfelt, that I know the reſolutions of this empire will follow his counſells, and the opinion of the border, that they may be guided by him, at leaſt not to conclude the peace; and that it doth reſt wholy vpon him; and that therfore ther is no retrayct to be found here, to defend any remiſſnes or change of mynd; which if he pleaſe to hinder, it wilbe abſolutly in his power: and ſo much all the great officers doe proteſt, That though they are vnwilling to hazard a warr, yet they depend vpon the aduices and conſultations of Tranſiluania. Neyther did the prince at firſt pretend any deſire of Turkiſh aydes, much leſs make them ſo neceſſarye, as that without them he was not able to contract, and perform his promiſes. I know 1626.

well, he needes no more then licence from hence: he hath horſe ſufficient, and when he ſeekes to engage this empire, he endangereth the reſt. Therfore, in my opinion, he ſhould be preſſed and encouraged from Chriſtendome; for it is not credible, that he ſhould aduance, and ſo far declare himſelfe, to make fires of ſtraw. He complayneth vehemently for not performance of the contribution, and from thence will take his beſt excuſe, the Duch refuſing to pay the bills remitted vpon him, without eſpeciall warrant from the prince, though the extraordinary and reſident offer to make acquittance, ſhowing a generall order to receiue yt, which they take ill. Prince Walſtein is retyred to Tyrnouia, commanded by the emperor to winter and fortefye himſelfe in that quarter, promiſing him ayds and ſupplyes. What to judge of the proiect of count Mansfelt to rayſe new foote, and to tranſport them by Spalato, thorough the grand ſignors dominion, is aboue my reach. If he procure the men, I thincke ther wilbe more difficulty to gett licence of the ſtate of Venice, then of this; for they wilbe very wary ſo openly to declare themſelues agaynſt the houſe of Auſtria, except he can fynd a deſcent in ſome corner of Dalmatia, wher they haue no fort; and that they may excuſe the paſſadge, as out of their power to deny yt. Here, if the warr on the part of Gabor doth proceede, or no peace concluded with the grand ſignor, but that the ſuſpenſion remayne, I will not doubt to giue him ſuch ſatisfaction as ſhall conforme with my orders, and his deſires. I haue heard, that your lordſhip, in September paſt, vouchſafed to ſend mee a packett by the way of Turin, which hath mett ſome impediment; for I haue receiued none, and without a duplicate I now deſpayre of them. I preſume not to write to his majeſtie vntill the next poſt, to conuey the grand ſigniors letters, complayning of ſome forged injuries done his ſubiects in the Red-ſea, of which I will then enlardge. I hope his majeſtie hath pleaſed to order my liberty, that I may returne in the ſpring, to giue him account of my ſeruice here, and your lordſhip of my humble affections, as Conſtantinople, 13. January, 1626.

Your Lordſhips.

HERE is come a report, that count Mansfelt is dead at Boſna-ſeray neare Spalatro, the truth whereof wilbe ſoone at Venice: it amazeth us, and we feare it will haſten ſome alterations.

Jan. 14. 1626.

Abſtract of ADVICES from a Perſon of good Intelligence in Vienna.

VPON the firſt newes of the truce, the prince of Eckembergh was ſent to Prugh, to conſult with the palatine of Hungarye, and Walſtein, who for ſome diſcontent did not meete them.

THEN it was reſolued to renew the peace with Gabor, vpon the ſame articles made two yeares ſince in Vienna, with ſome additions and exceptions.

1. THAT the ſtates of Hungarye and Tranſiluania ſhould ſweare to the obſeruance of the concluſion, in the behalfe of Gabor.
2. THAT the 30000 dollers couenanted to be payd by the emperor yearly, for certeyne garriſons held in the frontyre, ſhould be remitted and voyd.
3. THAT the rebells of Hungary, now declared, ſhould not bee comprehended, eſpecially Elias Sazei.
4. THAT all priſoners ſhould be ſett at liberty without ranſome.
5. THAT Gabor ſhould licence the troopes of count Mansfelt, to whom ſhould be granted free paſſadge; and that himſelfe ſhould inſtantly retyre into Tranſyluania.
6. THAT ſeeing the Turkes could not be compriſed in this treaty, not knowing the conditions they will require, Gabor ſhould enterpoſe to make the peace.

THESE articles being propoſed to the commiſſioners of Gabor, who had not authoritye to conclude, a meſſinger was diſpatched vnto him to receiue his anſwere, which was dayly attended. In the meane tyme, hauing made a ſuſpenſion of armes vntill March, it was thought that Gabor would accept the conditions; and therfore it was reſolued, that part of the Imperiall troopes ſhould march into Sileſia, which 1626. prouince was in great neceſſitye; the duke Weymar, being maſter of the feild, poſſeſſing himſelfe of the places of moſt importance.

THER was great feare of mutinye in the army of Walſtein, vpon the ſpeech of his renuntiation of that chardge, and the want of pay; who was entreated to continew the command for another yeare, and had promiſed to rayſe great forces agaynſt the ſpring.

THAT ambaſſadors were arriued from Sileſia, complayning of the oppreſſion of the German ſoldiers, and ſuing to be freed of the ſtranger garriſons, offering by their owne meanes to expell the troopes of duke Weymar.

Vienna, 2. Dec. new ſtile, 1626.

THER being no anſwere returned from the commiſſioners vpon the articles and meſſinger ſent by the palatine of Hungarye to Gabor, the Imperialls began to doubt, that he dallyed with them, hoping, by keeping the camp in the feild, to deſtroye the army by the great mortalitye reigning among the ſoldiers; and therfore the chancelor Verda, and Maximilian Walſtein, were diſpatched from Vienna to penetrate the cauſe of this delay, and to prouide for all euents. Wherupon it was reſolued not to leſſen the troopes, nor to diſlodge; becauſe the truce hauing only paſſed by word, betweene the palatine and the commiſſioners of Gabor, it was judged vnſafe to truſt the enemye with an oportunitye, and to deferre the ſuccors intended for Sileſia, notwithſtanding the whole prouince was in extreame danger; duke Weymar there making great progreſſes without any ſolide oppoſition.

THE ambaſſadors of that ſtate not being able to obteyne the diſchardge of the ſtranger ſoldiers, made great inſtance, that at leaſt one of their owne nation might command them. Which was alſo denyed them, the emperor reſoluing, as ſoone as he could, at once to bridle thoſe people, as ſuſpected of little fayth.

Vienna, 9. Dec. new
ſtile, 1626.

GABOR, after many delayes, hath finally refuſed the conditions, as they were propoſed.

TO the firſt he anſwered; That neyther the ſtates of Hungarye in his ſubiection, nor the Tranſyluanians, ſhould take any oath but ordinarye, and according to vſuall cuſtome.

THAT if the emperor would not pay the 30000 dollars to him, that then he ſhould take vpon him the mayntenance of thoſe garriſons, which he would haue continued to his uſe.

THAT he could not vnderſtand any man to be a rebell, who had followed or aſſiſted him; pretending full and lawfull juriſdiction in all the upper Hungarye.

THAT he would ſett free all the priſoners, whoſe ranſome was not formerly agreed (becauſe hauing threatned the count Slich, and colonell Maeſtro, to ſend them to Conſtantinople, the one had promiſed 10000 dollers, and the other 4000); which mony he would be payd.

THIS anſwere being vnderſtood, preſent order was giuen to the emperors commiſſioners, to inſiſt firme vpon the firſt propoſitions; but with ſome ſuch limitation, as giues ſuſpition, that they ſhall endeauor to agree.

ON the part of Gabor ther is a promiſe to procure the reſtitution of Damaska, or Palanga, from the grand ſignor; which is an impoſſible vndertaking.

THE truce yet continuing, and a ſhow of treaty, Gabor is retyred to a *cytty in the mounteynes, and ſome Turkes quartered behind him; but yet in the Imperiall dominions. Ten regiments of Walſteins army are marched toward Sileſia; the reſt is lodged in Hungarye, to attend the iſſue of this negotiation; which if it ſo proceed, as they may ſafely ſeperate, part of it ſhall draw into Morauia for the winter, part to the confines of Gabor, and the Croatians to the Turkiſh border, Walſtein hauing obteyned leaue to ſee the emperor at Vienna.

* Leutch.

DON Balthaſar de Murades is appoynted to command in Sileſia. The nobilitye of that prouince, being about 3000 in armes, are licenſed, as ſuſpected of intelligence with duke Wymar.

Vienna, 16. Dec. new ſtile, 1626.

1626.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

HERE is arriued a poſt from the prince of Tranſyluania, eſpecially to bring an acquittance to the Duch ambaſſador, and order to his reſident to receiue the mony remitted hither, which hee now will pay. The death of count Mansfelt hee doth affirme, hauing ſpoken with him in his ſickneſs; the newes wherof comming unto duke John Erneſtus, already weakened with a feuor 14 dayes, hee alſo fell into an appoplexye, and dyed at Turocz in the north part of Hungarye, where hee had quartered for the winter. His body was opened, and not one drop of bloud found; but his heart withered to the ſmallnes of a nutt. Of theſe ſad accidents your lordſhip will long ſince haue knowledge. It remaynes for mee to giue account of the liuing, what is the effect of this encloſed letter of credence, and reference to the Tranſyluanian agent; who, from his maſter, doth relate, that the firſt collonell was choſen to take the command of the army, untill order from the princes whom it ſerueth, and that it ſhalbe prouided of all neceſſaryes: That Gabor is retyred to Leutſch, upon the riuer of Hewath, a cytty in the mounteynes, bordering upon Polonia; whither hee hath ſent for the princeſs, and will there winter: That hee hath lodged his army in the townes from thence to Cremnitz and Turocz, that of count Mansfelt, beginning there, toward the frontyres of Sileſia, in places of great ſtrength, proteſting hee hath no purpoſe of making peace or agreement with the emperor; but that the ſeaſon being uery cold, and enforcing to gariſon, that it was true, they had accepted truce to themſelues and their confœderates neceſſarye. Which when I did, as far as was requiſite, expoſtulate, as contrarye to the articles of the league, and that it might rayſe a iuſt jealouſy in the princes, and diſharten the Turkes, who were allready too far enclined to pacification, and would no way bee held but by neceſſitye, and make the emperor, as did his agent here, tryumph and braue, that they were not able to keepe the feild, but ſought for grace and peace, and ſuch other obiections as occurred; hee told mee, hee had order to anſwer mee, that this truce was not made by his maſter alone, but by a conſultation, wherat were preſent a commiſſioner of the kyng of Denmarke, duke John Erneſtus, count Mansfelt, and diuers deputyes of the prouinces of Morauia and Sileſia, and the generall conſent of the councell of warr, induced hereunto for theſe reaſons: firſt, Becauſe the baſſa of Buda was expreſſly commanded to retyre, who muſt obey; and letters written to himſelfe from the port, to promoue the peace; which it was fitt to ſeeme to obey, untill hee could better enforme the grand ſignor, and, if poſſible, to incline him to the warr. Secondly, Being to enter into conſideration, if the Turkes by no meanes would bee induced to continew their ayds, that tyme might bee gayned to acquaynt the confederates with their eſtate, and to conſult with them of meanes to proſecute the enemye with their owne forces; and to that purpoſe count Mansfelt tooke his uoyadge to Venice, and the prince had giuen inſtructions for the other, to him his reſident here. Laſtly, The neceſſitye of drawing to gariſon being a truce in effect, they thought it no preiudice to aduantage themſelues by one in woords: That upon the 8. day of December, the ambaſſador of the kyng of Denmarke returned fully ſatisfyed, and enformed of all their proceedings and councells. In which it was concluded, to reenforce their troopes in the ſpring, by the aſſiſtance of the barons of Morauia and Sileſia, whoſe deputyes were ſent purpoſly to enter into the confederacye, promiſing to ioyne their forces with them; and that, in June next, the prince ſhould drawe into the feild, and march directly into Auſtria, to make that prouince the ſeate of the warr; where it was promiſed that the kyng of Denmarke would meete him, and unite their armyes; by which meanes only they hoped to finiſh the miſeries of Chriſtendome. This is the ſumme of the credence, and reference to his agent; which hee did affirme with infinite proteſtations of ſinceritye, that his maſter had no thought of making peace, if hee were not of all ſydes abandoned: and in confirmation of this diſcourſe, hee ſhowed me the princes letter, by him interpreted, of ſeauen ſheetes of paper, all written propria manu. To the other part, intimated in his letter to mee, to procure the calling of Morteſa baſſa to the court, upon hope that hee wilbe able to ſatisfye this ſtate, and many

1626. inſtructions ſhowed mee, to uſe all meanes to continew the ayd of the grand ſignior, it was my turne to reply: firſt, That yt was new, that the prince now made it a matter of ſuch neceſſitye to bee ſuccored by the Turkes; wherin it was to no purpoſe to diſſemble, that himſelfe ſaw almoſt an impoſſibility, eccept they were enforced by ſuch arts, as the prince only could uſe. Secondly, I preſſed him to declare, if that could not bee obteyned, whither his maſter was not Sui juris, to performe his undertaking with the princes, who accepted him into the league as a freeman, and did no way depend upon others; and that it was the opinion of many wiſe men, that a warr with the Turkes would aduantage the emperor, the pope, and all catholicque princes, eſpetially of Germany, in that quarrell would aſſiſt him, that hee ſhould fynd mony, and keepe himſelfe armed at the publicque chardge. Laſtly, That his propoſition to call Morteſa baſſa to the port, was the ready way to ruine him, and all that the enemy could hope; becauſe hee was already blamed and cenſured, and the difficulty to diſplace him only reſted, how with a fayre colour to draw him from his army: that there were many pretenders to his gouerment; and if hee once came hither, hee would bee ſo farr from obteyning his deſignes, that I was aſſured hee ſhould neuer returne; but another fauorer of the peace, if not of the enemy, ſent to ſupply his chardge. When hee was at Buda, hee ſeemed a great man, and a baſſa; but in the preſence of the vizier hee would tremble, and haue worke enough to excuſe his life. That the remoue of a baſſa was impoſſible, to leaue the frontyre ſo long without a head; and that wee ſhould rather uſe all finenes to keepe him there, whom wee knew to bee a freind of a ſtirring nature, and the only fitt ſubiect by whome to nouriſh the troubles. To theſe hee anſwered, That the prince did thincke it requiſite, and of great uſe, to continew the Turkiſh aydes, for his owne reſpects, at leaſt to fynd an honeſt way to leaue them; but that hee was reſolued to proceed without them, and to fulfill his contract with his owne meanes; that it was true, the calling of Morteſa baſſa was utterly oppoſite to reaſon, and their owne ends; and that hee was amazed at the counſell, eſpetially to be concluded by the baſſaes owne conſent, who was therin blind to his owne deſtruction; but that hee was a ſeruant, and knew not how to bee wiſer then his maſter, and to auoyd the ſollicitation, which hee was ſure would bee at firſt accepted. In concluſion wee agreed to ſuſpend it, and to uſe meanes, that the agent of the baſſa here ſhould take upon him to alter that part; and that I ſhould write our reaſons, and attend his ſecond conſideration. Thus your lordſhip hath a breefe of a lardge conference, wherin I am only a relator, and his majeſtie the judge: yet I will preſume to offer my humble coniectures. Vpon the confident reports, that Gabor was retyred to Caſſouia, and had recalled his forces out of the Imperiall teritoryes; the truce, the inclination of the Turkes to peace, and ſome other circumſtances concurring, I began to doubt, that the diſaſters in Germany had changed the princes thoughts; and therfore, in my laſt letters of the 13. preſent, I wrote as I was then enformed. But fynding ſince, that theſe rumors were grounded only upon the returne of Morteſa to Buda, and ſpred by the vizier to quiet the murmur, and to conforme with his promiſes and deſires; and that, if I may beleeue any thing, I muſt beleeue this formall relation, (which in matters of fact were folly to diſſemble) that the prince doth winter, and hath quartered all his army, in Hungarye, as far as Turocz; and that I ſee no neceſſity enforcing him, nor any profitt (which is aboue all reſpects) that hee can make by peace; but that hee muſt rather ſurrender what hee hath poſſeſſed by this expedition; and that, laſtly, hee hath touched the earneſt of the contribution; I will thincke it no error to beleeue, that if the league continew to comfort him, that hee will performe his contract, and proſecute the warr, to which I know hee is able, and abundant in meanes. There reſts only one difficultye, to him, I confeſs, neceſſarye; which is the countenance of the Turkes, who, I am perſwaded, will by no meanes bee engaged to a breach, but for feare of worſe; wherin I haue propoſed a temper, that it is not fitt to ſtretch too farr the preſſure of the warr, leaſt it enforce them to the other extremetye, to precipitate the peace: but to procure the grand ſignor to ſuſpend all treaty, and to reſt in newtralitye; for then, if the emperor require, that Gabor alſo bee commanded to retyre, it may bee anſwered, that hee is a tributary, but ſo that hee depends on his tribute; which being payd, the grand ſignor cannot in other confederations, as a Chriſtian with Chriſtians, enforce him. This anſwer muſt bee taken eyther ill, or well: if well, hee hath a fayre way, by the grand ſignors conniuence, to make the warr; and is ſure the Turkes will aſſiſt him in neede, for care of themſelues; if hee proſper, hee hath no neede of them: if ill, and that the Imperialls will not bee content with a newtralitye, unleſs the prince bee reſtrayned, that may bring forth theſe effects, which are now agaynſt the ſtreame attempted, a neceſſitye of the warr; and, in the meane tyme, this treaty wilbe a diuerſion of any concluſion. To this opinion many aduices concurr; for I doe not fynd, that the emperor doth ſo earneſtly ſeeke this peace, as was ſuppoſed upon the firſt mouing of Gabor: his victoryes in Germany, and the ſlow progreſs of the attempts in Hungarye, haue encouraged him; and though hee bee in all extremetye of want, yet his councell hath reſolued, that the beſt cure is a warr with the Turkes, to draw by that ſpetious name great contributions. And I am well enformed from Vienna, that Walſtein was often preſſed uehemently to beginn, and inuade the grand ſigniors territoryes, and had oportunityes opened him of ſome aduantage; but hee delaying and deferring, fell into ſuch diſgrace, that it was conſulted to call him to the court. But that courſe being found doubtfull, knowing him to bee un poco bizzaro, and that hee might, in the face of the enemy, affront his maſter by an open diſobedience, it was concluded to uſe the colour of aduiſing with him, to withdraw him fayrely; to which this truce opened the way: and it is reported, hee is departed, and hath left his army under the command of Iſterhas, palatine of Hungarye, who doth winter in Presburgh, and hath quartered his troopes from thence to Tirnauia, as a wall before Vienna, which by ſicknes and the ſword are halfe conſumed, and the reſt upon dangerous tearmes of muteny. Walſtein remayning diſchardged of all command, to moue him by emulation, another baron of Hungarye, gouernor of Caſtell Nouo, and an old ſoldier, who for his meritt pretended the honor of generall, rayſed 3 or 4000 men; and by conſent of the emperor, is marched toward Alba Regalis, upon which towne hee hath ſome inteligence; and if hee fynd it unguarded, will end this diſpute, and breake the peace. But of his ſucceſs, as yet, wee heare nothing: ſo that it is euident, the emperor is ſo farr from ſolliciting a peace, that hee hopes to aduantage himſelfe by the fame of a Turkiſh warr; and it is this ſtate that will ſeeke to auoyd it. What reſolution is taken to proſecute the deſſigne of count Mansfelt, who, upon the diſmiſſion of the armyes in Italy, might haue found men in order, and a fitt deſcent in Dalmatia, I know not; but attend his majeſties commands to doe my ſeruice. In the meane tyme, I will endeuor to concurr with the miniſters of Gabor, and pray for happy ſucceſs. Your lordſhip bee pleaſed to abreuiate this diſcourſe to his majeſtie, and to my lord duke of Buckingham, and continew mee in your fauor.

Conſtantinople, 18. Jan.
1626.

To the Same.

My Lord,

WITH the inſtructions ſent from the prince of Tranſiluania to his agent, which I mentioned in my laſt, he gaue order to deliuer, with his letters, encloſed coppyes of thoſe reaſons which he addreſſed to the grand ſignor by the mediation of the vizier, to the capi-aga and caſlar-aga, the two principall officers within the court: whether miſtruſting any coldnes or auerſion in the great miniſter, or deſiring to fortefye himſelfe with more freinds, the ſucceſs hath taken good effect. Hereby the grand ſignor being fully enformed of the eſtate of the border, wherof perhaps ſome neceſſarye particulars were concealed, he ſent for the vizier; and ſhowing him thoſe papers, diſcourſed at lardge, and reſolued to giue a ſpeedy expedition and anſwer to Gabor. The next day, the vizier called for the Tranſiluanian interpreter, and chardged him, that he had dealt peruerſely with him, to deliuer the ſame writings by other wayes, as if his maſter doubted his fidelitye. Which when he denyed, and told the truth, That he had only giuen two ſealed purſes of letters to ſuch and ſuch, according to order, the vizier ſeemed to approue the councell; and ſhowing him the ſame coppyes, profeſſed, that the prince had dealt wiſely, and done him a fauor, to eaſe him of all the burthen; that he had hitherto proceeded ſlowly and fearefully, becauſe he had no aſſiſtant nor partaker in this buſines;

1626. nes; and in any euill ſucceſs the whole enuye would haue beene caſt upon him. But now the grand ſignor, hauing by other hands receiued and underſtood both the princes-reſolutions and arguments, he had concluded togither with him, not to make any peace with the emperor, and therfore not to remoue Morteſa-baſſa from Buda in this coniuncture, when the enemy had an army ready, and was offended; and that, ſeeing the ſoldierye did loue and depend upon him, it was not ſafe to diſcontent them by any ſuſpition, nor good for him to come hither to anſwer the clamor of the emperors faction. Concerning the warr, he told him, That firſt he was ordered to ſpeake with the ambaſſadors of thoſe princes that were intereſſed; and, with them, to reſolue what ſhould be expedient. To this purpoſe I had an intimation to goe to the vizier, who made me the propoſition of peace or warr. To which I replyed, by ſhowing him the true eſtate of the affayres of Chriſtendome, how it was diuided into two factions, how deepely both were engaged, and that it was neceſſarye, that one muſt preuayle upon the other. If the victorye ſhould encline to the houſe of Auſtria, this ſtate could expect nothing but a more dangerous neighbor; that then the offences of Gabor, and the incurſions lately made by the baſſa of Buda, would not be forgotten. Beſides, I did aſſure him, that they deceiued themſelues here, to thincke that the emperor would ſeeke a peace at that diſhonor, to ſend an ambaſſador to aske it. In Vienna there was no ſuch ſpeech, but rather how to ſurpriſe ſome townes of Hungarye, by the glory therof to engage the pope, and all their freinds, to turne the warr into theſe parts. Now was the time to keepe the enemy low. Wee did not deſire the grand ſignor to breake, nor to lend us an army: they beſt knew what was fitt, and what they were able to doe. Gabor had ſufficiently enformed them, and taken upon him, with that little aſſiſtance and countenance ſpared him, not only to ſecure their frontyre, but to recouer Hungarye, and to remoue their greateſt enemy further from them. That they had ſeene the effects of this ſummer, Walſtein retyring with continuall loſs. All that wee pretended was no more, then what, upon mature deliberation, had beene granted by the grand ſignor, ſignified by diuers letters to Gabor, that he ſhould haue leaue to unite himſelfe with the princes his friends; and that this ſtate would make no peace nor treaty with the emperor, but in generall, when he was content to depoſe armes, and to reſtore Germany to libertye. Upon the faith and confidence wherof, the princes had ſent up and engaged their army, under the conduct of count Manſfelt: Gabor had made a league, and ſworne it, that there was no retyring on our part: theſe troopes muſt liue. That inuitments were ſent to the kyngs of Denmarke and Sweden. Therfore I deſired a direct reſolution from the grand ſignor, what I ſhould write to his majeſtie in this poynt, that accordingly euery one might prouide for themſelues. To which he anſwered, That he had expreſs order from the grand ſignor to aſſure mee in his name, that he would not treate, nor accept of any peace; that the retiring of Morteſa baſſa for the winter was neceſſarye to quiet many murmurs, that they had drawne upon the ſtate improuidently a new warr. That the mufti, the late vizier, and almoſt all the great miniſters, were contrarye, becauſe they knew not the true eſtate of the border, and the weakenes of the enemy; and that therfore they muſt proceed wiſely, and not declare their reſolution. To which purpoſe it was concluded to continew Morteſa in his chardge, and to diſpatch the meſſenger of Gabor, with no other anſwer, then that his actions were here approued; and that he ſhould proceed upon his former directions for the publicque good: to the baſſa of Buda, That he ſhould be ready to aſſiſt the prince of Tranſiluania, and to joyne with him in any urgent occaſion. That the truce ſhould be continued, according to their diſcretion: and thus to leaue all matters, during this winter, in ſuſpence. When I ſhewed him that this coldnes was a degree of prohibition, and that great actions are not performed by conniuence; he replyed, Write in the grand ſignors name to his majeſtie, that he, and the princes his frends on their parts, may reſolue to proſecute the warr, and to ſend a generall and ſupplyes to their army; that the grand ſignor will make no peace: and that, though it be not fitt to command Morteſa baſſa to inuade the emperors dominion, and to make an open breach; yet when Gabor ſhall moue the next yeare into the feild, if, the laſt, he had 10000, he ſhall fynd them doubled, and no reſtraynt putt upon any to follow him. Wherupon I apprehended occaſion to aſſure him, That on our part there was no doubt of continuing the warr, if they, by an ill example, did not teach us to looſe oportunitye; and that for that end count Mansfelt had begunn his journy to Venice, to take up new ſupplyes, and to tranſport them by ſea to Dalmatia, and ſo through Boſna; to which end he had written me to aske the grand ſignors leaue, and to prouide him of commands requiſite; but being now preuented by death, I had not mentioned it untill new aduice: but that I deſired to know how ſuch a motion would be accepted, if neede required, becauſe through Germany they knew ſmall troopes could not paſſe and that wee had no other meanes to reenforce our army, and to aſſiſt Gabor. Which when he underſtood, he approued as a good way, and made no difficulty: with which for the tyme I was content. Then he deliuered me the grand ſignors lettre, now ſent his majeſtie in correſpondence of that formerly receiued, wherof I ſhall ſpeake in the concluſion, deſiring mee to excuſe it to his majeſtie, that this buſines of Hungarye and the warr was not mentioned therin; being an anſwer to particulars, and that matter neuer treated in writing; notwithſtanding, that his majeſtie ſhould giue as much creditt to this aſſurance, as the grand ſignor would to any meſſage I ſhould deliuer to him in his majeſties name. 1626.

As this reſolution of the grand ſignor and the vizier, ſo uehemently deliuered, hath beene aboue all our expectation, no man hauing, I thincke, any thought, but that they would make peace; ſo it hath cleared us of many doubts, eſpetially of the intentions of Gabor; whoſe ſuddeyne truce concurring with the retrayt of Morteſa, the affection of this ſtate, and the death of count Mansfelt, made me uncerteyne what to write; but it is now moſt euident, cleare and undiſputable, that the prince doth with all ſinceritye endeuor to continew the warr. His priuat negotiation with the capiaga and caſlaraga, not communicated to any, and the good effect it hath wrought, is a ſufficient teſtemony of his wayes here; and as I am enformed, upon the death of duke John Erneſtus, that army being in want, and almoſt in mutiny, he tooke them upon him, and gaue them two moneths pay, one in meale, butter, hony, cheeſe, barly, and other victuall, and the other in mony, aſſuring them, that they ſhould not want, untill both meanes and orders came from the princes. This Gabor hath written, and I muſt beleeue it, as a greater argument (becauſe chardgable) of his deſire to oblige them, which, if he ment peace, were caſt away. Concerning the proiect of count Mansfelt being now fallen with his life, I will not preſume in ſo great a matter to giue counſell: but ſeeing it is the deſire of Gabor, for the greater reputation, that ſome prince, or at leaſt a nobleman of eminency, ſhould be ſent to take the chardge of that army; perhaps there can be none found ſo ready and ſo fitt as the old count of Torne, who, upon the diſmiſſion of the Venetian troopes in the Valtaline, wilbe at leyſure. He wilbe able to take up the choyſeſt of the caſt regiments in order, is well known to this ſtate, and can ſuddenly tranſport thoſe ſupplyes which ſhalbe thought neceſſarye; and I dare undertake to procure the licence of his free paſſadge. When he ſhall ariue in Hungarye, he wilbe moſt acceptable to Gabor; and his name (now eſpetially that the recrewes of that army muſt depend upon Morauia and Sileſia) wilbe to thoſe prouinces moſt gratefull, and his reputation powerfull to rayſe more men then any ſtranger, hauing beene their generall in the laſt warr both beloued and obeyed; but, as this is only my diſcourſe, (a libertye which your lordſhip hath granted me) ſo yow will ouerſee my errors in it. Your lordſhip hath heard how Gabor hath proceeded here, and what promiſe and profeſſion the vizier hath made, and giuen me commiſſion to write to his majeſtie, in the name expreſly of the grand ſignor; which being contrarye to my owne hopes, (who haue ſtudied alway to diſcerne the truth) it wilbe neceſſarye, that ſeeing I alter my opinion, ſome degrees, of the reſolution of this ſtate, that I deliuer it, and giue reaſon therof. Since the death of the old chimacham, protector of Gabor and all his actions, the emperors freinds haue wrought upon the beſt patriotts, and ioyned their ſinceritye to faction; who, finding the ſtate entangled in the Aſyan warr, haue made that the foundation, not only to diſpute againſt any other, but to threaten the contradictors of their feares. Theſe for the moſt part are men popular, but utterly ignorant of the preſent condition and affayres of Hungarye: yet they ſo far preuayled, (quod in ſeditionibus accidit, unde plures erant, omnes fuere) that the vizier, to ſatisfye them, was enforced to command the retrayt of Morteſa. Theſe things happening in the inſtant, when they conſulted to diſpatch a new vizier, and to rayſe the ſoldierye to follow him, ther was no tyme to ſpeake of another enemy; and theſe 1626. wiſe men can doe but one thing at once. But this wonder and tumult is ouer paſt: and the grand ſignor being fully enformed by Gabors laſt letters, which threaten as much of the other ſyde, that if this oportunitye be loſt, and that the houſe of Auſtria ſhall poſſes Germany, or, at the beſt, the princes take the example, and make peace, they muſt expect a ſharp inuaſion and reuenge then when they ſhall haue no freinds, and their army in Aſya urdging the allyance of the kyng of Poland, the inſtigation of the pope, and whatſoeuer may begett a feare, that they ſhalbe encloſed with enemyes; this admonition hath taught them the wiſdome to be content to keepe their oppoſite excerciſed at anothers chardge; and though as yet they dare not, or will not, ſo openly declare as to pull the warr upon themſelues, yet they fynd it neceſſarye to be continued; and therefore they haue reſolued to temporiſe, and to auoyd a preſent extremetye by the colour of the truce; in the meane tyme to leaue Gabor at his libertye, and to obſerue how the princes proceed to maynteyne and ſupply their troopes: and therfore on all ſydes they encouradge us, and accordingly will ſtepp in, when they ſhall ſee our armyes in the feild. To this purpoſe, Morteſa ſhalbe eſtabliſhed in his gouernment, and the buſines ſo carried with him, that he ſhall make no ſhow of mouing, untill the tyme fitt to take horſe; and then he ſhall haue leaue and command to correſpond with Gabor, according to the occaſion. This is the ſence, if I err not much, of this ſtate, which will ſufficiently concur with this majeſties ends; for it was neuer required to inuade Chriſtendome, which would ſcandalize many freinds; but only by ſuſpending the prolongation of peace, now expired, to keepe the emperor in a neceſſitye of maynteyning an armye in Hungarye, and by the countenance of the grand ſignor to enable Gabor to proſecute his owne deſſignes. Of theſe, I preſume, his majeſtie may be confident, that the peace ſhall not be concluded; that the emperor ſhall rather be enforced to ſend ſuccours into Hungarye, then to draw any from thence; that if Gabor be ſupplyed, he will be early in the feild, and Morteſa baſſa cannot lye ſtill; and that the enemy next ſummer will haue little pleaſure or ſafety to hunt within ten miles of Vienna. To his majeſties wiſdome I ſubmitt my collections, (for here wee build not upon fayth) and conclude, that it is as neceſſarye to concurr with Gabor, and to reenforce that army ſent him, as it is euident that he ſtudieth and imployeth all his witt and power, to eſtabliſh and enforce the warr.

THE Tranſiluanian agent hath had ſome warme contraſt with the French ambaſſador, whoſe correſpondence with us in this buſines is not like the feruor of his beginnings: he deliuered him a round meſſage full of complaynt, but of this it concernes me not to comment. I ſend his majeſtie the tranſlate of the grand ſignors lettre aboue-mentioned, in anſwer of theſe complaynts, made of the cuſtomer and breach of our priuiledges; wherin I am promiſed redreſs, and haue obteyned a command, as an addition to our capitulations; which I will endeauor to maynteyne, though their neceſſitye is aboue all law. In this he hath made a ſtrange lament, beginning with old quarrells in the Red-ſea; to which I haue anſwered, That I know it is not his majeſties pleaſure, that any ſpoyles ſhould be done to the ſubiects of the grand ſignor; but that the ſea was free to reuenge our ſelues of the iniuryes done us by other Eaſterne princes. But the truth of the matter is rather feare of interrupting the trade, then any thing yet done by our nation: for though they mingle us with the Duch, yet the complaynt from Mocha is principally agaynſt them, from whom the laſt baſſa of Ayman did uniuſtly take 100000 dollars; and it ſeemes in reuenge they haue uiſited that coaſt, eyther with Engliſh colours, (which is a practice of theirs to diſcreditt us, and to robb under our flagg) or ſome of ours in their company, though not partakers of their actions. What the particulars are, I know not. But the vizier did urdge mee to giue a letter to be ſent to Mocha, to admoniſh his majeſties ſubiects of the peace, which for the reſpect of our trade I could not deny. The copy I haue encloſed to the Leuant company, and to them haue lardgly written, that they may enforme your lordſhip what concerneth me, and us here reſident. It is moſt neceſſarye to ſend ſome anſwer with all expedition, to preuent greater euills; for the neglect wilbe imputed to mee, and the innocent may ſuffer. If his majeſtie pleaſe to examine what hath beene lately done, which, I ſuppoſe, will prooue nothing, and to giue expreſs order to the Eaſt-Indya company, to be warye of engaging us in their quarells, and to write to the grand ſignor, that he hath taken the enformation into his care, and that he will command his ſubiects not to doe any act preiudiciall to the ſubiects of this empire, or the amety of their kyngdomes, and that he will puniſh ſeuerely the interrupters of the peace, I am perſwayded it will giue ſuch ſatisfaction, that I ſhall heare no more of this ſtorme. The principall poynt is, that the grand ſignor hath great cuſtomes at Aynam by the ſhips of Indya trading theſe coaſts; which being for any other quarrell diſturbed, though directly this ſtate is not iniured, yet it is endamaged; and they will not ſuffer the loſs, but repayre themſelues upon us; and a blow once gotten is irrecouerable. I beſeech your lordſhip take care of us, and prouide us reſpontionem mollem, quæ tollit excandeſcentiam. I haue preſumed to touch this buſines to his majeſtie, referring the ſollicitation to the intereſſed, fully inſtructed, and my ſelfe to your lordſhips relation of theſe things, which concerne his ſeruice; wherin I am confident to fynd your lordſhip a noble patrone, and a fauorable enterpreter, as I deſire to be found

Conſtantinople, Jan. 31.
old ſtile, 1626.

Your Lordſhips.

The SULTAN's LETTER to the KING.

Prince MORAD, euer ſuccesfull,

TO the mighty prince, renowned among the majeſties of the princes of the law of Jeſus, obeyed of the great potentates, followers of the Meſſiah, the only director of the important affayres of the Nazaren people, ſoueraygne of the limitts of power and honor, the moſt glorious Charls, kyng of Great Brittaine, to whoſe laſt dayes we wiſh all felicitye.

TO the ſublime and happy throne of our high port, the ſeat of the perpetuall vicariat, the which by the mercy of the diuine majeſtie of the mighty God, and by the grace of the Lord, was the ſeale of the prophets, upon whom be continuall bleſſing, and the refuge of the princes upon the face of earth, and the ſanctuary of the potentats of the world, your letter with accoſtumed ſinceritye is arriued, by the hands of your ambaſſador, the elect among the nation of Meſſiah, Sir Thomas Roe, reſident in our happy port; to whoſe end we wiſh bleſſednes. The which, according to the antient Ottoman cuſtome, and the uſuall imperiall forme, was by our ſupreame vizier, and glorious vicegerent, tranſlated and expounded; and being preſented before our ſtate, of moſt ample honor and felicitye, and ſeene by our imperiall eyes, and conſidered in our benigne ſight, from the beginning to the end, our noble underſtanding hath entyrely conceiued the inſerted buſines, and all particulars therof; and our diſcreete affection, from the leaſt to the greateſt, hath comprehended all your propoſed affayres, all which conduce to loue: the principall wherof is, (beſides that you haue fully mentioned and declared the ſtate of the amety, that betweene both dominions hath beene preſerued by your fathers and anceſtors) That now your Majeſtie, after your father of glorious memory, being by juſt inheritance aſcended to the regalitye of thoſe crownes, doth aduiſe us, that you alſo, more then your father, are ſtable and firme in the ſame way of frendſhip, and moſt conſtant towards us in preſeruation of the peace, and good correſpondence; and daily attentiue to endeauor the ſtrengthning of the peace and ametye with our port, and reſolued to accompliſh the ſame, and not to fayle in any part of louing correſpondence. From which your frendly aduice with moſt ſincere words expreſſed, and to us moſt gratefull, that you in a bleſſed hower, and a happy tyme, haue poſſeſſed and begunn to raygne in the kingdoms of your father, the ſecrett of our pureſt heart was greatly reioyced, and did conceiue abundance of contentment; and our imperiall majeſtie alſo hath therfore obteyned, and togither expreſſed, all manner of gladnes and loue toward your Majeſtie, in diuining you all happines.

YOU haue alſo aduiſed us, That your aboue-named ambaſſador, yet abiding in our bleſſed port, hauing formerly treated with thoſe of Tunes and Algier, and contracted concerning your merchants, and their free pratique and commerce in thoſe parts; and conformably with them agreed, concluded, and confirmed the peace; the which being uery profitable, and comodious to both our kyngdomes, that you haue alſo ratifyed, and in the whole condiſcended therunto; deſiring that on our behalfe alſo the ſame ſhould be obſerued; and to the end that for euer hereafter ther may be no deuiation from the ſame accord, and that the merchants, according to the ancient cuſtome, going and coming to thoſe parts to trafique and negotiate, 1626. contrarye to the imperiall capitulations, no iniurye may be by them done, that we ſhould ſend to our viceroyes with expreſs order our moſt efficacious and imperiall commandaments, and ſtrictly chardge them neuer to tranſgreſs the ſame contracted agreement; and that they take heed not to doe any wrong or violence to any of your merchants, (contrarye to our imperiall capitulations) trading and uſing thoſe parts:

AND furthermore, hauing ſignifyed unto us, That certeyne magiſtrats and cuſtomers of ſome ſcales of our well deffended empire, contrarye to the articles and couenants written in the imperiall capitulations, doe make diuers demands of greeuances and impoſitions of your merchants; and under the name of meſteria, and ſuch like, doe pretend and exact mony from them; and having payd their due cuſtome, and tranſporting their goods to other ſcales, you haue aduiſed us, that, contrarye to the imperiall capitulations, that they alſo demand of them a new cuſtome: Therfore it being in no wiſe our imperiall will, that in our proſperous dayes, and juſt and peacefull reigne, contrary to our imperiall capitulation, that wrong ſhould be done to any man, we haue giuen upon this particular our requiſite and ſufficient imperiall command; and ſtreightly commanded and ordeyned, that they ſhall neuer tranſgreſs our imperiall capitulation; and that the nation of your merchants, in what place or ſcale ſoeuer they ſhall goe, that the magiſtrates and cuſtomers doe all dilligence, that the ſayd merchants may liue quietly, contently and ſecurely, and hauing payed in one ſcale the cuſtome of any merchandiſe, which being not ſold, and that they ſhould tranſport it to any other ſcale, that they take great heed not to demand nor take of them any new cuſtome, nor neuer, contrary to the canon, to exact of them any new impoſition or other greeuance.

YOU haue alſo further aduiſed us, That the late Huſſreph baſſa, while he remayned in the chardge of vice-kyng of Algier, did uniuſtly take your conſull reſident in Algier, with the merchants which liued with him; and hauing impriſoned them, contrarye to the law, juſtice, and the frendſhip betweene us, did take from them certeyne thouſands of dollers, and had done to them great wrong and damage: Therfore, ſeeing it is more cleare then the ſunne-ſhine day, that it is not in any ſort by our conſent, that ſuch iniuſtice and inſolent actions ſhould be committed; and there being then preſent in our happy port ſome of the principall perſons of the gariſon of that place of Algier, who did know of the whole proceeding; and we hauing commanded they ſhould be examined of that buſines, they were preſently brought to juſtice; and being all of them uariouſly reprehended and affrighted, they did anſwere, confeſing and obliging themſelues, that all the mony taken they would repay from the reuenew of the cuſtome and fifts collected; and as ſoone as they ſhall arriue in Algier, they would take order, that the conſull and all the merchants ſhould be ſett free. In conformitye wherof we alſo haue written our moſt effectuall and noble command, reprehenſiue and threatening, directed to the vize-re of Algier; and commanded him, that in this buſines he uſe no negligence; but that without farther delay he ſett at liberty the ſayd conſull and merchants, and reſtore unto them intirely all their goods taken from them; and that he know, that hereafter no ſuch action ſhalbe pardoned; and that your conſull ſent into thoſe parts according to ancient cuſtome, ſhalbe enterteyned and honored; and that he doe punctually obſerue and execute the due tearmes of frendſhip. And in the concluſion, concerning all the included particulars of your letter in due forme, and befitting our majeſtie the founteyne of juſtice, and conformable to the tenor of our imperiall capitulations, there haue beene written diuers other noble commandaments, and conſigned to the hands of your ſayd ambaſſador. And for the tyme to come, in all things which ſhall lead to the increaſe of our frendſhip, and thoſe offices comodious and profitable to the merchants of both our dominions, our imperiall ſtudy and attention ſhall not be ſpared; and be you aſſured, that the tearmes of our ametye, and good correſpondence, which to this day hath been continued, ſhalbe of us with excellent endeauor maynteyned.

BUT being from our honourable gouernor, and wiſe councellor and vizer, Haydar baſſa, (whoſe ſplendor God preſerue) whom we haue aſſigned and ſent to the cuſtody of the boundles Ayman, that ther is come a petition with a repreſentation and atteſtation of the principall of the kyngdome, to our happy port, declaring that in tymes paſt, in the gouerment of our Fezeli baſſa, vizier, now dead, being that certeyn men of war apperteyning to yowr kyngdomes had, contrarye to the capitulations, aſſalted the merchants, which with their goods returned from Indya, and fought and taken their ſhips; and it being made knowne to the ſayd Fazeli baſſa, that our merchants had beene damaged, to the valew of 600000 dollers; which action, being it was contrarye to law, juſtice, and our imperiall capitulation, and that it was requiſite, that the ſpoylers ſhould be condemned; the ſayd Fazeli baſſa did collect from the maſters of the ſayd men of war, for the ſayd goods taken from our merchants, 100000 dollers, and did conſigne it to the true owners; and wheras ther was yet remayning to them 500000, the which to this day is not ſatisfyed; the ſayd men of war, not conteyning themſelues in due bounds, haue armed a-new ſeauen ſhips from your countrye, and haue come and aſſalted 14 ſhips of our merchants, which from Indya were ſayling to the ſcale of Ayman; and hauing taken the maſters priſoners, haue made ſpoyle and depredation of all their facultye; and that now the Duch nation, and your men of war, ryde at anchor in the port of Mucha, and doe pretend the returne of the 100000 dollers taken by Fazeli baſſa; which brute and ſcandalous wickednes in affront of our imperiall power, to dare to perſeuer, and to ſpoyle and ranſacke thoſe parts, being ſignifyed to the feet of our imperiall throne, the ocean of juſtice, and that thoſe robbed merchants are ſubiects of our well-defenced dominion; being in no manner our imperiall will, that ther ſhould be loſt one of the ſayd veſſells, nor any the leaſt part of their goods deteyned; and being that ſuch an action is uery ingratefull and oppugnat to the peace and frendſhip between us contracted; to the end that all the ſayd merchants may be ſett free, and that their goods and facultyes taken may be intyrely reſtored to the true owners; which your majeſtie cauſing to be done, you ſhall accompliſhe the requiſite tearmes of the ametye, and ſhall fullfill the offices of our ſincere correſpondence, and ſhall ſtrengthen the foundation of our good and mutuall fidelitye and league; we haue written you this our preſent letter full of all effectuall loue. At the arriuall wherof, it is conuenient, that in conformitye of the great, perfect and ſpottleſs ametye betweene your anceſtors and our happy port, and the imperiall houſe of eternall glorye, and the ancient good concord, vnion, and correſpondence; that alſo your Majeſtie ſhould be firme and ſtable in all wayes, with juſt proceedings to preſerue and maynteyne the meanes and orders of frendſhip deſcended from your fathers and anceſtors; and if your Majeſtie deſire, and will, that the tearmes of ametye, and our good correſpondence, ſhalbe perfectly obſerued and kept; you will then beſtow your good diligence and care, that the aboue-mentioned happened action, ſo diſcrepant from our imperiall mynd and will, that is, as is aboue-mentioned, that the 14 ſhips of our merchants, which came from Indya to our well defenced dominion, and ſcale of Ayman, and were taken and ſurpriſed by the Engliſh men of war, and the merchants, which were found in them all, made ſlaues, and all their goods and faccoltyes made priſe, that they may be all ſett free, and all the goods taken from the ſayd merchants may be intirely reſtored to the true owners; and ſo your Majeſtie ſhall haue conſerued our moſt happy mynd and affection, and protected our moſt honorable and noble deſires. The performing of which your frendly office undoubtedly will produce to your kyngdomes many beneficiall and profitable effects, and certeynly you ſhall fynd, that it will redound to the great honor and fame of your Majeſtie. And by the grace of God, after that this our happy and moſt louing lettre ſhall arriue, by ſome honorable perſon, and to you faythfull, be you pleaſed to ſend aduiſe to our excelſe port, of the manner of your uſed diligence and affection in this buſines, and of the effect of the liberty of our ſhips and merchants, and of the full reſtitution of all the goods taken to their right owners, and with what readines you haue expreſſed your ſinceritye and affection to our imperiall majeſtie: which buſines we haue alſo earneſtly recommended to your aboue-named ambaſſador; that when he ſhall more lardgely haue enformed you, that you be pleaſed to giue him creditt; and that in the tyme to come yow will attend to apprehend all thoſe meanes worthy to the conſeruance of our frendſhip, peace, and correſpondence.

WRITTEN in the 15. of the moone Gemaziell-euell, in the yeare of the departure of the prophett (upon whom be eternall glory) 1036. Giuen in our well-defenced cytty of Conſtantinople.

Which is the 20. January, 1626.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

IT hath been my care here to giue ſatisfaction unto ſigniore Cornitz, a Tranſiluanian, whom Gabor did ſend along with Mansfelt, to bring back word of the iſſue of ſuch negotiations as Mansfelt had undertaken ; and wheras Gabor did lend unto Mansfelt 1000 ducats, upon his obligation to be repayed here, I haue made his pretended heyrs repaye that monny in the firſt place ; that for the breaking of Mansfelts bond and obligation, Gabor might not take occaſion to guard with the publique, and to giue ouer the purſuite of the cauſe, into which he is entered. Secondly, concerning the publique, it hath been reſolued by the ambaſſadors of Denmarke, Holland, and my ſelfe, together with colonel Peblitz, that a letter ſhould be written immediately to Gabor, and ſent by Cornitz, in ſuch forme as that the affayres of Chriſtendom might be repreſented unto him as aduantagiouſly as the truth will beare : the care whereof being by all my fellowes referred unto mee, I did undertake that taske, and performe it in ſuch forme, as your lordſhip will ſee by the incloſed copye. The ambaſſadors of Denmarke, Holland, and Peblitz, haue written euery one of them apart, and referred him unto my letter, as written by generall conſent. Becauſe the French ambaſſador hath no commiſſion for any thing touching Germany, wee did not call him to councell ; but he hath aſſured Cornitz of the good will of the French king towards Gabor, and referred him for confirmation thereof to the French ambaſſador at Conſtantinople. I haue not aduentured to promiſe any thing, neither for France nor Venice, becauſe I haue no warrantable ground ; but I do aſſure my ſelfe, that your lordſhip will make good what I haue ſayde for our maſter, in regard that his maieſtie hath confirmed as much unto M^r. Quaad, the ambaſſador of that prince, and aſſigned 10000 pound to be payed him in the month of June. How farre that prince may be truſted, I know not ; but Peblitz doth aſſure us, that he is ſound ; and that the truce which he doth treate, is onely to get time, that he may appeare more ſtrongly the next ſummer in the cauſe. Wee haue all of us deſired him not to conclude any peace, without communication with our maſters ; and becauſe the month of Aprill, which he hath prefixed for the time, wherein he doth require to receaue aſſurance of aſſiſtance, doth ſeeme too ſhort, wee haue requeſted him to prolong it unto the month of June ; although he hath by this time already ſufficient aſſurance for the monny by him demanded, if France and Venice do really performe their parts ; for his majeſty, and the king of Denmarke, and the States of the Vnited Prouinces, haue cantioned him abundantly : but, in caſe he do continue to require more infantery, he muſt of neceſſity expect a longer time.

THE ambaſſador of Denmarke is departed from hence, well ſatisfyed in generall tearmes ; and hath left his commiſſions with mee to purſue further, as I ſhall ſee cauſe, and receaue newe inſtructions from his maſter. Notwithſtanding that the Venetians haue excluded the propoſition of the marquis of Baden, yet that diuerſion is ſtill likely to be proſecuted, he hauing written unto mee, that he will find others that ſhall paye as much as was deſired of the Venetians, in caſe that his maieſtie do not retire his word, which I had paſſed uppon condition of concurrencye from hence. This day I haue diſpatched unto him, and told him, that I will not diſpute uppon words or names, accounting it indifferent, who be the perſons that do concurre, ſo that the concurrencye be reall and effectuall ; ſo that I do hope wee ſhall reuiue that deſigne, which was like to haue aborted here. I will trouble your lordſhip no further at this preſent, but onely with the remembrance of my wifes and my owne affectionate ſeruice to you, and your noble lady ; reſting euer

Venice, 2. February,
1627. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to the Prince of TRANSYLVANIA.

Sereniſſime Principe,

PRÆCELLENTIS principis Mansfeldij ſummi uiri, & optimè de republica meriti, immatura mors gravitèr afflixit omnes qui libertati ſtudent, tum quod in illa protegenda ſtrenuè ſemper inſudauerit, tum quod illo prudentiſſimis C. V. conſilijs armato, et literis ad præcipuas Europæ monarchas munito, ſpes erat legationem illam tanti uiri claritate decoratam multum curæ publicæ profituram. Ad caſus tam acerbi grauem dolorem minuendum opportunè huc aduenit tribunus Peplitius, qui intimorum Mansfeldij conſiliorum particeps, rerum præſentium ſtatum ita nobis ob oculos poſuit, ut ſpem fecerit, in Mansfeldij urna libertatis publicæ patrocinium non ſepultum iri. Quæ C. V. heroica conſtantia, & inuicto animo, fideliter retulit, mirificè omnes erexerunt, tum ob copiarum multitudinem, quas ſemper ad manum habes, tum ob prudentiæ ſolertiam, quâ ita condiuntur omnes actiones tuæ, ut periculum non ſit libertatis orbem tanto Atlante ſuffultum nutare poſſe, nedum cadere. Mansfeldiani exercitus reliquias tuis copijs eſſe aggregatas, et Waimarij dynaſtæ cum ſuis cohortibus, ſub umbra alarum tuarum ab hoſtili omni impetu immune, eſſe, gratum omnibus, qui intellexerunt equeſtrium copiarum uolatilem uim pedeſtrium agminum robore neceſſario firmandam. Quod ut C. V. ex uoto fæliciter ſucceſſit, ita ſpes eſt, te cum hoc uirium augmento, & unanimi tantorum principum conſenſu, qui in eadem tecum palæſtra pro libertate publica deſudant, forti deinceps animo majora auſurum, nec unquam cauſæ deſuturum, quæ cadere ſine te non poteſt, tecum poteſt. Magna quidem meſſis, ſed nec operarij pauci. Confæderati principes, Gallus, Venetus, & Sabaudus adhuc pro Valletellina cum Hiſpano litigant; & licet inter Gallum & Hiſpanum quædam pactiones ſanctæ fuerint, (quarum fama ad aures tuas aduolauit) nondum tamen ita conuenit inter partes, ut de republica deſperandum ſit. Dandum aliquid calamitati publicæ, & quas leges neceſſitas temporum impoſuit, derimet prudentior cautela. Veneti & Sabaudus nondum in pacta illa nouiſſima conſenſerunt: quid ſit ſancitum, ſciunt & neſciunt: nam ſcire nolunt, quod ſcire diſplicet; nec dignitatis ſuæ ſunt ita immemores, ut ſuffragari uelint conſilijs, quibus nunquam interfuerunt. Vlceri illi obducta eſt cicatrix, at uulnus non ſanatum; et niſi medicam manum adhibeant tempeſtiuè confœderati principes, repullulabit inde uirus, quod uniuerſum corpus Italiæ immedicabile tabe conficiet. Rhæti (quorum potiſſimum intereſt) renuunt non tam pertinacitèr quam uirilitèr: Dei hominumque undiquáque implorant opem; &, quaſi debilitatis propriæ immemores, in cauſæ æquitate ita magnam ponunt fiduciam, ut ſi non frangantur, flecti non poſſint. Heluetij Euangelici confœderatis Rhætis non deſunt, nec uotis ſolum, ſed et uiribus eos adjuuabunt; & quamuis religionis larua obtendatur, cordatioribus tamen catholicis Heluetijs cordi non eſt, ut de libero uicinorum dominio ludatur, tamquam de re nihili. Inter Sabaudum, & Genuenſes, manent ueteris ueſtigia flammæ, quam iſti nouis injurijs nuperrimè adauxerunt, auro ſuo & patrocinio Hiſpanico freti; ſed qui patientiam principis tam bellicoſi læſerunt, ultricem ejus manum breui experientur. Quod ad Tranſalpinos principes attinet, non latet C. V. Hagæ comitis inita inter Anglum, Danum, confœderatos Belgiæ ordines, plurimoſque Germaniæ principes; qui omnes (quantum in illis eſt) magno animo, & conjunctis uiribus, ad publicam libertatem uindicandam, & Spannorum inſolentiam coercendam inſurgunt. Anglus bis claſſem inſtruxit contra Hiſpanniam magno auſu, non infælici ſucceſſu. Nam licet Gadium tentata expugnatio ſpem conceptam fefellerit, & altera mox claſſis cum uentis ſolum, non cum hoſtibus pugnauerit, utraque tamen expeditio Anglis glorioſa, quod inimicum in propriâ arenâ auſi ſint prouocare; magna militum & auſi jactura rebus ſuis conſulere coegerint, qui de infectandis alijs nimis erat ſolicitus. Interim aureus ille imber, quo Jupiter Hiſpanus libertatis publicæ, tanquam Danaes pudicitiam, corrumpere ubique ſolebat, exiguo rore terram nunc uix humectat, metuentibus Hiſpanis, ne claſſis Peruana incidat in Anglos, fiatque alter raptus Proſerpinæ. At nec totius oceani ambitu claudantur potentiſſimi regis Magnæ Britaniæ conatus; cœlum terramque mouet, gladiumque pro libertate deſtrinxit cum hac epigraphe, Donec pax reddita terris. Teſtem appello inuictiſſimum Daniæ regem, quem Magnæ Britaniæ rex auro onerat, & milite armato: confœderatos Belgiæ ordines, quorum ciuitates legionibus ſuis munit: Mansfeldiæ manes, qui in Pannoniam uſque aureis Anglorum alis aduolauit: & denique C. V. cui pro

alendo

1626. alendo exercitu menſtruum tributum pro rata exhibet, ſicut a domino Thoma Roe equite aurato, ejuſdem ad portum Ottomanicum oratore, C. V. conſtare debet. At nec tantarum impenſarum pondus ita depreſſit Britanniæ monarcham, ut cum nuperrime inirentur conſilia de diuertione in Alſatia facienda, non promiſerit quinquies mille pedites, & mille equites, quod C. V. notum eſſe percupio; & ſciat nihil ex illa parte deeſſe, quod ad cauſam publicam promouendam deſiderari poſſit. De potentiſſimo Daniæ rege non eſt quod dicam; pro illo loquuntur illius facta regia: ſudat, inſudat, inuigilat pro republica; &, ut eſt animæ magnæ prodigus, non ſuam ſolum, ſed et Chriſtiani principis filij ſui uitam ad aram libertatis paratam, ſe operibus, non uerbis teſtatur. Potentiſſimi confœderatarum prouinciarum ordines ſtant in excubijs, & Annibalem habent ad portas; attamen nihil omittunt, quod amicos juuare, aut inimicos lædere poſſit; & quid in ſpetie in uſum C. V. Conſtantinopoli per manus oratoris illorum conſignari fecerint, ab eodem proculdubio intellexit. Quid de chriſtianiſſimo Galliarum rege & ſereniſſimâ republicâ Venetâ ſperandum, ex tribuno Peplitio intelliges, cui illa prouincia demandata. Hæc ego illius rogatu, & plurimorum oratorum, hic de gentium conſenſu exoraui, ut ſciat C. V. ſalutem tuam regibus principibuſque noſtris curæ eſſe, nec de pace agere uelle, te præterito, modo ex tua parte illorum optimæ in te uoluntati reſpondeatur. Quod ad inducias, de quibus cum Cæſare acturum te innuit Peplitius, enixe roganda eſt C. V. primum, ne qua pax ſanciatur ſine conſenſu regum & principum ordinum confœderatorum; deinde, ut prorogetur induciarum tempus, quantum fieri poſſit, ad minimum uſque ad finem menſis Junij; cùm pro diſtantiâ locorum fieri non poſſit, ut, toto menſe Aprilis a te proſcripto, regum principumque tantis interuallis diſſitorum deliberationes C. V. poſſint communicari, nedum ut nouæ legiones tam breui temporis ſpatio in Pannoniam uſque deducantur. Deus O. M. diu eccleſiæ, reipublicæ, boniſque omnibus, C. V. incolumem ſoſpitet.

Celſitudinis veſtræ ſtudioſiſſimus.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

I HAUE receiued two of your lordſhips letters togither, 18. Nou. and 3. Dec. with all thoſe diſcourſes and coppies mentioned; wherby the ſunne hath riſen agayne to me from the other hemiſphere, hauing liued more then ſixe moneths in Cimmerian darknes: which enlardgment and demonſtration of your fauour hath brought with yt others, long expected, from the duke of Buckingham, and my lord Conwey; whoſe ſuppoſed loſs I haue long ſince mourned in England. But when I conſider how ſlow they haue beene in the conception, I may allow them a proportionall tyme of trauell, and reioyce that they are come at laſt. Ther needes no excuſe, that your lordſhip hath opened them: I haue the benefit: our buſines and his majeſties ſeruice is common and communicable, and freedome is one of the prerogatiues of frendſhip.

THE knowledge your lordſhip giues me, of a new league forming with the marques of Baden, as it ſhowes the ſpiritt of his majeſtie ſupra vires; ſo I will make the beſt uſe of yt, to encourage the prince of Tranſyluania, whoſe relapſe I lately feared: and though this may be a good cordiall to ſtrengthen nature, to cooperate with proper phiſicque; yet ther wilbe no ſound cure, but the performance of thoſe contributions promiſſed. A diuerſion will ſecure him, and facilitate his owne deſſignes; but the mouer, aqua ad molam, muſt be mony.

I AM glad your lordſhip giues me the occaſion to acquaynt you with all the paſſadges, and the preſent ſtate of that treaty, which depends much from hence, though the prince is able to gouerne yt, and from him muſt proceed the perfection; becauſe this ſtate will by neceſſitye follow his motions: and you haue taught me an eaſy way, and perhaps to your lordſhip of more ſatiſfaction, when you ſhall ſee all the degrees, changes, and negotiations, tramites & veſtigia, wherupon I haue often commented, and from whence (not to bind you to my judgement) your lordſhip may make your owne, and direct me in the future. To this purpoſe I ſend you the lateſt letters of Gabor, and count Mansfelt, the coppies of my anſweres, and my account giuen to my lord Conwey, ſince the firſt rumor of the truce. From all theſe your lordſhip will know as much as I, and diſpoſe it better; and though the proiect of count Mansfelt may ſeeme fallen with him, yet, if his majeſtie thincke, that the mayntenance of the warr in Hungarye conduceth to his ſeruice, it may eaſely be reuiued; and I beleeue it doth more concerne the emperor, then the recouery of the Palatinate, which wilbe a continuall thorne in his ſyde, and in tyme conſume him, a quarell of gratitude without profitt. And many are of opinion, grounded upon councells held in Vienna, that the beſt cure, and moſt honorable occaſion of diſengagement, and to giue peace to Chriſtendome, wilbe to breake with the Turkes, and under that ſpetious title, to ſeeme to be enforced by a more important and generall care; which diſpoſition by all meanes ſhould be nowriſhed, becauſe wee ſhall reape the fruict; and therfore there ought not be too much ſcruple to promoue that warr, which will giue us peace. To this end, ſeing we find this ſtate ſo backward, there is no remedy but to ſtrengthen and hearten Gabor, to prouoke the prepared inclination of the Imperialls; and after, while wee breath, to doe as the coniunctures require, and God ſhall direct. So that if the deſſigne be thought fitt to proſecute, ther is no way ſo ready and eaſy, as by takeing up ſome regiments armed, and in order, which is ſuppoſed wilbe caſt by the ſenate; and if they will graunt the deſcent in Dalmatia, I will not doubt to diſpoſe the grand ſignor to giue leaue for their paſſadge thorough Boſſna: for I am confident, that theſe will conſent to any thing to nowriſh the warr, and to weare out their great enemy, without their owne chardge or perill; and therfore I conclude, they will make no peace. That army in Hungarye, beeing without a head, wilbe ſubiect to wants and licence. Gabor pretendeth to feede them, vntill order from their maſters; and I hope they haue already taken care to ſupply that chardge; if not, knowing well the condition of that countrye, and that they muſt euer be furniſhed from Morauia and Sileſia, both of men, victualls, and all munition, and to auoyd any other emulation of nations, ther is no ſubiect ſo fitt, as the count of Torne, for that command. If the ſtate of Venice diſſolue their army, which wee here did beleeue, he wilbe at leyſure, and perhaps they will willingly lend him to the publicque ſeruice. He was generall of Morauia, beloued and followed of all the religion; and if ther be no new cauſe to auert the affection of thoſe prouinces, he is only the man likely to draw them to a generall reuolt; eſpecially Gabor aduiſing, that they are in a diſpoſition, and haue ſent commiſſioners to treate with him, and to enter into the league. If your lordſhip concurre in this opinion, and pleaſe to aduance yt, I am perſwaded, the ſucceſs will honor you.

I PERCEAUE the ſenate deales with your lordſhip ſuo modo, ſparingly in declaring their purpoſe toward Gabor; and that you hope they concurre ſecretly by this way, and that I can enlighten you therin: I wiſh I could tell your lordſhip, that I knew much, and I thincke I know all. Betweene the baylo and me hath euer paſſed as much inwardnes, as their nature, or his chardge, can comport; and I haue alway found him ready to joyne, to uſe his authoritye, and to doe all good offices to promoue the cauſe, and zealous in his owne affections. But when eyther the miniſters of Gabor, or I, did put him to the tryall, to the poynt, to partake in the contribution, he hath auoyded any declaration; and when the treaty began firſt here, he gaue generall anſwers, That he was ſure the ſenate would correſpond, and did approue the propoſitions; but that he had no power to bind, but only to aſſiſt and maturate; and that ſeeing the concluſion was referred to two ſo mighty kyngs, as his majeſtie and the French, whatſoeuer ſhould be by them embraced, would doubtleſs be communicated with their ambaſſadors; to whom there would be giuen order to expound the ſenſe of their ſtate, and authoritye to conclude with them for the generall good. So that I was reffered to England, from whence I haue no certeynty; and your lordſhip enquiring of mee, wee dance in an endleſs circle. Therfore I thincke you ſhall doe a ſingular office, when you ſhall haue well weighed the neceſſitye of fomenting the prince of Tranſiluania, to preſs the ſenate to ſome direct anſwere, and to giue no more ambiguous words, which will not paſs for heauy and cordiall gold. I am ſure, the baylo will ſend no aduice, contrarye to my laſt letter to my lord Conwey; and therfore ther wilbe good ſubiect of vrdging their neceſſary contribution.

THE noyſe of the truce, I know, will ſound harſhly in Venice, and in all other parts; but obſeruing his negotiations ſince in this court, it is reaſonable, that he 1626. hath no other purpoſe, then to winne tyme; and after the diſaſter of the kyng of Denmarke, to renew his aſſurance of the monyes promiſed him by the princes, to ground himſelfe well in their proceedings; the want wherof made him take this pauſe. He complayneth of a generall fayling with him, and I know he hath neuer touched any part, but 30000 dollers remitted hither, to the Duch ambaſſador, which came too late to keepe him in action. If his majeſtie and his allyes fynd him worth yt, they muſt take care euery two moneths to feed him here, or in Venice: the ſumme is little, and not much conſiderable. My lord Conwey, ſuppoſing I ſhould be preſſed, commanded me to referre my anſwere to the relation of his ambaſſador then in England; but I haue ſpunne that thredd to a fineneſ, that it will hold no more. They muſt deale really, and I haue offered my ſelfe (being a poore man) to furniſh what I ſhalbe ordered upon my creditt, which is ſtronger then my purſe, ſo that I might haue any good aſſignation to preſerue yt. The mony taken here, now our returnes are leane, wilbe cheaper at 40 dayes in England, then any remitted at two exchanges: but receiuing no anſwere, I ſuppoſe, they thincke me more forward then wiſe, and I am content to ſleepe ſecurely. If they doe not giue Gabor a good taſte, and ſettle the conſtant payment, he can make his peace eaſier then the warr, for nothing. It is true, he is hired to help himſelfe, and Hungarye is his ayme: but wee muſt not truſt to ſpeculations. If he be forſaken, he knowes his ambition muſt giue place to his abilitye.

THE French here doth not degenerate, nor, it ſeemes, they indeuor not to correct the judgement of antiquitye: Gens olim viris armiſq; mox memoriâ nominis clara. Since he could not gouerne all, he hath contemned the buſines; and though he make ſhow of doing good offices, yet wee gather but ill fruicts of them. In hope they may amend, I will make them no worſe, and we expect to better our ſelues by a ſodeyne change.

I THANCKE your lordſhip for your remembrance of my biſhop: he hath long ſince deputed the prince cardinalls confeſſor, to ſollicite his ſuite; and is a joyfull man, in hope to end his life quietly in his owne countrye, and to doe ſome ſeruice to our nation.

THE encloſed I recommended to your lordſhips conueyance, as my vnprofitable duty in his majeſties ſeruice: there are ſome letters, which I ſhould be ſorry to loſe, and I fynd the way dangerous; but under your lordſhips care, I eſteeme them ſafe.

I WILL not omitt to communicate with your lordſhip all paſſages of our buſines, or this empire; and ſhall eſteeme my ſelfe honored, and ſafe to take directions from you, wherin I may ſerue his majeſtie, or your lordſhip. And ſo I committ your lordſhip to the bleſſed keeping of our gratious God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$.
Febr. 1626.

To the Same.

My Lord,

SINCE the writing of my lettre to your lordſhip, I haue had ſome occaſion of conference with the baylo; eſpecially to diſcouer, if there were any other ſecrett concurrence of the ſenate with the prince of Tranſiluania, or to promoue yt by his mediation. To this purpoſe, I told him, That his majeſtie was reſolued to nouriſh and encouradge Gabor, and to maynteyne the army ſent to him, eſteeming the diuerſion of the enemy of ſingular conſequence; and therfore had commanded me, both to doe him all fitt ſeruices here, and to aſſure him of the good intentions to ſupply him, according to the paſt agreements; and that herein I ſhould apply, and vnite my ſelfe with his excellency, whoſe affections to the publicque cauſe were well knowne to his majeſtie, and to moue him to doe thoſe good offices, which were conformable to his wiſdome and authoritye. In correſpondence wherof, his majeſtie had likewiſe ordered your lordſhip to diſpoſe the fauour of the ſenate to the prince, and to the ſuſtentation of his armes; which hauing beene by you performed, was, in the generall, well receiued. But being the mayntenance of Gabor did only depend upon a contribution, as he beſt knew, mony was the ciment of that ſeruice; and that his majeſtie did ſo many wayes employ his treaſure, both by ſea and land, ſo, as ther was ſcarce any action or army, wherin he did not beare the greateſt part; that he would pleaſe to counſayle the ſenate, as a matter of much neceſſitye, to concurre in this chardge; the benefitt wherof they did eſpecially partake, by imploying, in ſo remote a place, the common enemye. I ſhowed him, that this office was fitteſt for him, becauſe the ſenate muſt from him ground themſelues, both what to judge of Gabor, and of his probabilitye to ſubſiſt, according to the countenance he ſhould haue from this empire. Therfore, that he hauing now ſeene the ſinceritye of his proceedings, by his ſecrett operations within the court, and the declaration made by the vizier to mee; ther was no ſcruple left of ſuſpition, and very good ſubiect to confirme the ſenate in their good intentions toward him; and to draw from them ſome comfort for his mayntenance. He anſwered me ingenuouſly, That at the beginning of the ouuertures of that prince, he had euer written warely, doubting his ſubtile and uarious nature: but after he ſaw, that really he offered himſelfe to his majeſtie and his allyes, and engaged ſo publicquely his honor, and had obſerued his wayes in this port; that he had, with all his witt and creditt, ſtriued to aduance his deſſignes here, and to procure their eſtimation of the ſenate; inſomuch as that he was now intereſſed for him, and that it did concerne his owne reputation, that Gabor ſhould maynteyne his word, and be maynteyned. And that therfor, as he had done all in his power to ſett him up, ſo now he did write to the ſenate, to aſſure them, that for as much as could be collected by all his practiſes in this court, ther did nothing appeare, but a conſtant reſolution to proſecute the warr. And to this effect, he ſhewed his preſent diſpatch; wherin he made the ſame relation of his ſecrett woorking by the capi-agha, and the good fruicts therof, the promiſe of the grand ſignor; not to make any peace, which I haue at lardge ſent my lord Conwey, alleadging me for his author, by whom it was negotiated. But, touching the contribution, he anſwered me, That he knew it had beene once moued to the ſenate by ſome ambaſſadors, who ſhowing their great chardge to maynteyne their army in the frontyre of the Valteline, which kept the enemy in neceſſitye to continew his troopes in thoſe parts, to the great eaſe of the affayres of Germanye, and that this burthen was ſingle, anſwered, that therfore they ought to be excuſed in the other: with which thoſe miniſters then ſeemed ſatisfyed; and that ſince he neuer underſtood of other motion. But as it was not fitt for him to draw the ſenate into a new expence, eſpecially ſeing the buſines of the Valteline did decline from the ſuppoſed peace, and that they ſhould be enforced to continew their army and chardge in the former ſtate: yet that he would doe ſuch offices as ſhould be poſſible or conuenient for the ſuſtentation of that prince, both by his letters now to the ſenate, and his endeauours in this port.

THUS your lordſhip hath diſcouered, that as yet they haue ſpent nothing upon him but breath; but the occaſion at preſent is more ſolide and proper, upon this declaration of the grand ſignor, and demonſtration of ſinceritye in Gabor, for your lordſhip to renew the ſollicitation of their reall concurrence for the mayntenance of that diuerſion, wherof the importance to them and the publicque cauſe is ſufficiently underſtood. Therfore, if it conforme with your lordſhips orders, it is requiſite, that all meanes be uſed, both to the ſenate, and all the princes intereſſed, to apprehend the oportunitye of this good coniuncture, and to nowriſh the diſpoſition of Gabor, which certeynly will proue of great efficacye and ſeruice. The wayes I remitt to your lordſhips wiſdome, and I beleeue, I muſt recant my propoſition for the count of Torne; for though I did not mention it to the baylo, yet your lordſhips letters, and his relation, haue inſtructed me, that the quarell of the Valteline is not like ſo ſoone to be appeaſed, as from former aduiſes we collected. Therfore your lordſhip may pleaſe to uſe or condemne it, as you ſee occaſion. And ſo I kyſs your lordſhips hands, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$. night, in February, 1626.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſimo Prencipe,

BY your highnes ambaſſador, Sr. Paul Keretetſy, I returned yow anſwere of your letter, and, as I hope, gaue yow full ſatiſfaction in thoſe aduertiſements, touching the contribution and ayds expected from his majeſtie, and his allyes. Since, I haue receiued by your meſſinger others of freſher date; referring me to your 1626. woorthy agent Thomas Burſos, who hath faythfully and fully inſtructed me with all matters requiſite to your highnes ſeruice. In the particular, of calling Morteſa baſſa to the court, vpon mature deliberation, and perfect intelligence of the councells of this ſtate, wee did fynd it to be very preiudiciall to your highnes and the generall cauſe; that it was the ready way to ruine him, and all that the enemy could hope; becauſe ther was a ſecret murmur agaynſt him, and many of great qualetye, as Huſſen-vizier, the laſt aga of the Janizaries, and others were pretenders to his gouerment; and if vpon any occaſion he were remoued, we were ſure, he ſhould neuer returne; but ſome other freind to the peace, if not to the enemy, ſent to ſupply his chardge. And, as I wrote formerly to your highnes, it is action only that keepes him in reputation; from which if he once decline, he is for euer loſt. And therfore it reſts in himſelfe to ſecure his owne fortune, by nouriſhing the war. Theſe, and many other reaſons, made us reſolue to omitt that ſuite, vntill a ſecond aduice from your highnes; but it being giuen in expreſs commiſſion to your ſeruant, he would not tranſgreſs his orders, but performed his dutye. I doubt not, he hath giuen yow lardge account, both of the good effect which your priuat letters haue wrought, to the capi-aga, and haſlar-aga, (which was a poynt of ſingular wiſedome) and of all the paſſadges of his negotiation: wherby the grand ſignor being truly and fully enformed, called for the chimacham, and reſolued to giue a ſpeedy expedition and anſwere to your highnes, and requiſite directions to the baſſa of Buda. Wherupon he deſired to conferr with me, to know the reſolution of his majeſtie and the princes colleagued. It wilbe tedious to repeate all circumſtances; but the ſumme is: The chimacham did proteſt, That though diuers great miniſters were utterly contrary to the warr, (which made him proceede warely) yet that he had euer faythfully endeauoured to preſerue the reputation of the grand ſignor in thoſe parts, which would be utterly wounded by an vnworthy and vnſafe peace; and that therfore he had order from the grand ſignor, expreſsly to giue me commiſſion to write to his majeſtie, to perſwade him and his freinds vigorouſly to proſecute the war; and though for this winter ther had beene made a truce, yet that they ſhould not be ſcandalized therat; for the grand ſignor would not conclude peace with the emperor: and to that purpoſe, that letters ſhould be now written to your highnes, to approue your actions, to encouradge yow, and to leaue yow to your full liberty; and commands to eſtabliſh Morteſa in his gouerment, as the fitteſt ſubiect to concurre with your highnes, and to oppoſe the enemy; being beloued of the ſoldier, and experienced in the border. And though it was not expedient at this inſtant, for ſome reaſons of ſtate, to me expreſſed, to command him to invade the emperors dominion, and to make an open breach; yet when your highnes ſhould, the next yeare, goe into the feild, (to uſe his owne words) if yow had, the laſt, 10000 Turkes, yow ſhould haue them doubled, and no reſtraynt put upon Morteſa, or any other, to follow yow: to whom, in the meane tyme, command ſhould be giuen, to enterteyne the truce, and to correſpond with yow, and to ſuccor yow in all occaſions, according to his former directions, and the councells held betweene yow. Being confident, that this declaration is ſincere, both for the authoritye, and for the reaſons whereon it is grounded, I doubt not, but your highnes hath, for that poynt, of the conſent and concurrence of this ſtate full ſatiſfaction.

CONCERNING the contribution, I haue receiued command from his majeſtie, to aſſure your highnes of his full reſolution to maynteyne the army ſent vnto yow, and to performe whatſoeuer hath beene promiſed: wherof part hath beene payd by the kyng of Denmarke, part by the Duch; and your ambaſſador, capteyne Quad, being then in England, ſhall fully ſatisfye your highnes of the conſtant courſe ſettled therin for the tyme to come; ſo as yow ſhall haue no cauſe to doubt or complayne.

HIS majeſtie alſo ordered his ambaſſador at Venice to doe a ſolemne office in his name to the ſenate, to promoue them really to concurre with your highnes, and to procure from them ſome proportion for the mayntenance of the war, the benefitt wherof was common to them. To which he receiued a comfortable and fayre anſwere; and the ſollicitation therof being to him referred, your highnes may expect ſingular fruicts from his induſtrye: of which I hope, by the next occaſion, to giue yow more certeyne knowledge.

IN the generall, his majeſtie hath commanded me to ſignifye to your highnes, that he will conſtantly perſiſt in the defence of the religion, the liberty of Germany, and the good cauſe; and uſe both all his owne meanes, and the power of his freinds and allyes, to enforce the common enemy to honeſt conditions of peace, without which he will neuer depoſe armes: wherof the preſent and immenſe chardge of his majeſtie is an aſſurance aboue all diffidence. Your highnes pleaſe to conſider, though many great names are intereſſed, the greateſt burthen doth reſt vpon my maſter. His majeſtie doth pay 6000 foote in Holland, for the aſſiſtance of the States; to the kyng of Denmarke 120000 crownes the moneth; to the army of count Mansfelt 80000; the rayſing and tranſporting of whoſe troopes haue already coſt him 720000 crownes; beſides the great expence of ſetting out two royall fleetes vpon the coaſt of Spayne: of which though the ſucceſs did not wholy anſwere expectation, yet they were of great vſe and ſeruice for the publicque, to diuert the forces of that kyng, and haue conſumed him infinite treaſure to prepare for his owne defence; which courſe, as moſt dammageable to the enemy, his majeſtie is conſtantly reſolued to continew; the mayntenance of diuers men of war in the riuer of Elb, to ſtop the tranſportation of munition into Spayne, and to keepe theſe channels open, to releeue the kyng of Denmarke; his fleetes in the narrow ſeaes, for the defence of trade, and his owne coaſts: all which, being put togither, doe amount to an infinite expence of 4 millions of gold yearely, and only in the warr. Notwithſtanding, to ſhow his feruency, and to approue to the world, that his majeſtie will no way ſpare himſelfe, (etſi ſupra vires) he hath made a new league with ſome princes of Germany and Italye, to rayſe a new army of 24000 foote, and 4000 horſe, to beare an entyre fourth part of all the chardge: wherof, I make no doubt, your highnes will heare particularly from the kyng of Denmarke; and that this freſh diuerſion will turne the ſcale, and the enemy haue no meanes to oppoſe them. Laſtly, The treaty of the Valteline is utterly broken: the Griſons, hauing in their dyett refuſed the conditions of peace propoſed by the French kyng, haue vnited themſelues with the Switzers, the ſtate of Venice, and the duke of Sauoye; and ſent their ambaſſadors ioyntly to his moſt chriſtian majeſtie to excuſe themſelues, and to remonſtrate the great injurye done vnto them, vnder the pretence of an vnſafe peace, to depriue them wholy of their antient ſouerayntye: ſo that in thoſe parts the war is likely to bee more ſharp then euer, and the enemy to bee well excerciſed. 1626.

FROM all theſe premiſes, your highnes will, in your wiſedome, diſcouer the prouidence of God in the happy coniuncture, and good concurrence, of ſo many princes and ſtates, for the publicque cauſe; and therfore, that yow will encouradge yourſelfe, and partake both of the glorye and benefitt, according to the renowne and generall opinion conceiued of your noble mynd.

THE death of count Mansfelt, and duke John Erneſtus, hath beene to me a ſad newes; but not doubting your highnes will take care of that army, vntill ſome order from their princes, and ſuppoſing that the proiect of tranſporting men thorough Boſna may be yet of uſe, I haue moued it to the chimacham, who approued the way, and I ſhalbe able to procure fitt commands in all occaſion. But I beleeue, the alterations in the Valteline (ſeeing the ſenate cannot diſmiſs any part of their army) will change that deſſigne; and that from Morauia and Sileſia, the princes, for their pay, may be as well ſerued and ſupplyed.

I REFER theſe matters to your highnes ſingular wiſedome, and the proſperitye of your affayres to the bleſſing of God; offering my ſelfe, with all my powers, to doe your highnes ſeruice.

Conſtantinople, 5. Feb.
1626.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE tranſlate of the grand ſignors lettre to his majeſtie, which I mentioned in my laſt, being not able to finiſh it, a work as harde as to expound the Alcoran, I haue now ſuplyed. The originall cannot be ſent but by ſhipping; for it may be meaſured by the yard, nec tum finitus Oreſtes. If his majeſtie pleaſe to excuſe the ſtile, which is, like the empire, unformed, uaſt, and fumye, obſeruing the uſuall 1626. repetitions of the ſame things, which ſauors of antiquitye, like the antient edicts of the kyngs of Perſia; and I haue followed it word by word, as neare as is poſſible, becauſe the raretye may perhaps delight his majeſtie to reade; otherwiſe it is as full of ciuilitye, as his language can expreſſe: ſome phraſes ſauor of the ſwolne pride of the Ottomans; but in generall, there are not many examples of ſo much curteſye and moderation. The effects of the former part haue beene performed, and a capitulation and commands giuen me, for the redreſs of all thoſe oppreſſions mentioned in his majeſties lettre; which are paper, and ſeldome obeyed by inferior miniſters in theſe hungrye tymes. But I will endeauor to keepe them in ſtrength, and to leaue my ſucceſſor in poſſeſſion. For the latter clauſe, complayning of ſpoyles done by our ſhipping; your lordſhip may be pleaſed to enforme his majeſtie, that foraſmuch as I can gather, the arreſt of thoſe 14 veſſells, and remand of 100000 dollers, concerneth only the Duch; for that mony was taken from one of their merchants by Faſali baſſa, and our old quarrel long ſince accomodated. But now the Hollanders ſeeking to recouer their loſs, perhaps under our colours, (which is a poynt uery conſiderable) or ſome Engliſh ſeene in thoſe ſeaes, theſe people confound both the nations and the buſines, and bring our old differences to haue affinitye with this, wherin, I ſuppoſe, wee haue no intereſt; and they will not, from me, otherwiſe underſtand it. Therfore, if his majeſtie will vouchſafe to examine the Eaſt-India companye, and to admoniſh them to be carefull of our engagement, and ſpeedelye to returne a curteous anſwer, and therin to diſtinguiſh, and cleare the error, that theſe Flemmings (which doe us infinite iniuries in thoſe parts) may beare their owne burthen, I hope it wilbe ſufficient. But if it be paſſed ouer without any replye, we ſhalbe inwrappd and entangled; and ſome great trouble, or raſh reuenge, will certeynly follow, to the ruine or interruption of this trade; the care whereof I referr to your lordſhips wiſdome.

I HAUE now receiued your lordſhips lettre of the 8. Sept. which hath beene fiue moneths in trauell; but it hath come fittly, to confirme me in what I had done, and to enſtruct me in the preſent negotiations for Gabor, which are come to their cryſis. But before I enter into that diſcourſe, I humbly aske your lordſhips pardon, if formerly I wrote with any paſſion, tranſported with the zeale of a good Engliſhman; hoping my recantation, upon the receipt of your firſt letters, and my gratitude, haue long ſince ſett me upright in your lordſhips fauor.

WEE expected to haue beene quiett from any Spaniſh practice; and wee know not yet our enemye; but the laſt weeke a foote poſt was ſent to the Venice ambaſſador, ſignifying the arriuall of one of the kyngs frigatts with a French gentleman, with ſeruants and pages, at Raguſa; that had beene bred in the emperors court, and of great praticque in ſtate affayres, called Rodolpho Kyllmye. He preſently preſented to that ſenate a paſport from the emperor, and letters from the vice-kyng of Naples, and a ſafe conduct from the late baſſa of Buda, declaring that he was to goe to Conſtantinople with expedition; and therfore required to be aſſiſted and prouided with horſes. Not uſing the name of the kyng of Spayne, the Raguſeans durſt not ſtay him, neyther doe I thinck they had any will. Within two dayes he was mounted and ſett forward, now 36 dayes paſt, with foure hired Turkes for his guard and guides. It ſeemes, he would not be ſurpriſed, as was his fellow the laſt ſpring. Vpon this new alarme the ambaſſadors reſident had priuat conference, and the French was uery hott inſtantly to goe to the vizier, and to renew the commands, and to ſend officers to arreſt him on the way. But the reſt were of a contrarye opinion: firſt, Becauſe it was likely, if wee did obteyne the commands, that he was neare, and would paſs diſguiſed; ſo that wee ſhould not fynd him, but make a noyſe without effect. Secondly, That comming in the emperors name, he could not be ſtayed; and that we did too much honor their proiects, to riſe ſo feruently agaynſt them; and that it was probable, the vizier would ſuſpect more in this meſſage then was, and be curious to heare this great ſecrett, that we were ſo ouer diligent to keep afarr off, and would ualew it according to the rate of our feruencye; and that it was beſt to ſee the uttmoſt, and to trye it out at the port, leaſt euery fiue moneths the ague ſhould returne, and wee be kept in feare, perhaps, of ſhadowes; and one ouerthrow here would end the buſines for euer. To this counſayle the French yeilded not, but to neceſſitye; pretending he had orders from his maſter to proteſt the imcompatibilitye of his and the Spaniſh ametye: and

1626

I haue obſerued much more warmth and care ouer this treaty, then the other with the emperor, to which, though he profeſs oppoſition, yet his actions reſpectiuely are cold or indifferent. But it was generally reſolued, that I ſhould doe the office to the vizier, to acquaynt him by occaſion of ſpeech, of ſuch a new Mercurye, and not making it a buſines to feele his diſpoſition. Which I performed, and hauing with much adoe firſt made him beleeue that there was any ſuch, he gaue mee a voluntarye oath, that when he arriued, if he pretended from Spayne, that he ſhould be refuſed audience, as an enemy; if from the emperor, that he ſhould be anſwered he came in at a wrong dore; that Buda was the port by which all the Imperiall miniſters had entrance, where the grand ſignor had a vizier inſtructed to conſider of the ſubſtance and fittnes of ſuch ouuertures as ſhould be ſent from Vienna; and that therfore, ſeeing he went ſo far aſtray as to Naples, it was ſuſpitious, that he had ſome councell mixed with their enemyes; and for that reſpect, could not be heard as the emperors ſeruant; both wayes, that he ſhould, with diſgrace, be diſmiſſed. 13. Jan. Hitherto we paſſed the laſt weeke: yeſterday we had aduice, that he was ariued at Ponte Grande, one dayes iourny hence: wherof the vizier being certefyed, and councelled not to refuſe him enterance; but to keepe him under guard, and to preuent him of any correſpondence with the emperors agent, as a ſuſpected perſon; he inſtantly gaue order to certeyne chiauſes to fynd him, and to wayt upon him, with comand that no man, without leaue, ſhould ſpeake with him. In the afternoon he was procured to ſend one of his ſeruants, to take all his papers and inſtructions, that he might penetrate the ſecrett of his ambaſſadge. What hath beene effected, I attend to know. Theſe haue beene done to affront him, which are ſymptomes of his bad enterteynement, and his proceedings ſhalbe diligently attended.

THE meſſinger of Gabor is diſpatched on the fiſt of this moneth with an anſwere, conformable to the promiſe made me by the vizier, mentioned in my laſt; in teſtemony wherof I haue ſent his majeſtie encloſed the coppy of his lettre: wherby it is euident, that the reſolution of proſecuting the warr is wholy in his owne power; and that he ſhall haue requiſite aſſiſtance, upon his declaration; and though it may ſeeme cold in reſpect of the reference to peace, yet it is as much as their preſent occaſions will permitt, and a full inſinuation of their ſecrett purpoſe and deſire, which upon the intimation from Gabor ſhalbe, as we hope, in playne tearmes expreſſed and ratefyed. By which poſt I anſwered the princes of the 4th December, and ſent a tranſcript therof to Sir Iſack Wake, deſiring him to encloſe it to your lordſhip, that you may ſee how I haue followed my inſtructions, for his ſatisfaction and encouradgement. Since, wee haue beene awaked by the arriuall of two * beghs ſent from Morteſa baſſa, firſt to Vienna, and ſince to this porte, to giue relation of the proceedings of that treaty, and the affections of the emperor; and to deliuer a true enformation of the borders, and the oportunitye of warr or peace. At their firſt comming it was and ſtill is noyſed, that the peace was concluded, and an ambaſſador named to ſett forward from Vienna, with the wonted preſents to confirme it. This rumor troubled me, eſpetially hauing aſſured his majeſtie ſo lately, from the grand ſignor, the contrarye. The ſame day I wrote ſharply to the Tranſyluanian agent, accuſing and lamenting, according to the occaſion; who aſſured, with as much earneſtnes, that it was wholy falſe; to uſe his owne woords, Imo his rumoribus omnia ſunt contraria. This ſatisfyed me not; but I ſent my ſecretarye to the vizier, putting him in mynd of the commiſſion he had giuen me, of the promiſe made, of the inuitements and ingagements to the other princes, by the grand ſignors letter, whoſe ambaſſadors would thincke it a ſtrange incounter, to meete here their oppoſite, concluding peace: That this buſines concerned my life, hauing beene made the inſtrument to abuſe his majeſtie; and that therfore I deſired him to deale truly, and to lett me know what I ought to beleeue of theſe new reports, and deputyes of Morteſa. He replyd, firſt, in generall, That it was true, two ſuch men were come, that had beene at Vienna, and that propoſitions of peace were intimated; but that there was nothing done, nor any purpoſe or poſſibilitye to conclude. And for my full ſatisfaction, he deſired that I ſhould ſpeake with him my ſelfe, and he would reueale to me the ſecrett of this negotiation. The next day I went unto him, and repeated my former meſſage, preſſed and coniured him to uſe reallitye. He began with a ſolemne proteſtation: It is true, wee differ in fayth; yet wee beleeue both in one God. And riſing on his knees, did ſweare, that he

* Theſe are thoſe deputies of Morteſa, mentioned in the viziers letter to Gabor, which were expected to bring the ſecrets of the oportunitye of the war.

1626. he would deliuer ingenuouſly the truth. He confeſſed, that theſe beghs had reported the beginning of a treatye, and had diuulged the aſſurance of peace; for ſo it was expedient: but that I muſt knowe the ground of their employment. The mufty, and many great men, had ſo long murmurred at the noyſe of a new war, in that ſeaſon when their affayres of Aſya were uncerteyne; and that therfore he had been enforced to write to Morteſa baſſa, to retyre his army, and to ſettle the frontyre in ſafety, which made him, much agaynſt his will, both looſe the occaſion, and conſent to the truce: the conditions wherof were, That it ſhould be firme untill March; and if that tyme were not ſufficient to conclude peace, that it ſhould be prolonged from two, to two moneths, if both parts agreed; or elſe, that eyther ſhould be at libertye. When this truce was new made, and the commiſſioners forming preparations of a farther treaty, the newes of the retrayt of the grand ſignors army from Babilon was written to the Imperialls; and the loſs made ſo great and deſperate, that theſe inſtantly retyred, and would proceed no farther, not ſo much as confirming what was already tranſacted. Wherupon Morteſa, fynding himſelfe betweene two rocks; that here he ſtood blamed for beginning a quarrell, and that he was deceiued in his wayes to end it, he feared he ſhould in this uncerteyntey be loſt; and therfore he choſe theiſe two beghs, newtrall men, ſuch as had creditt in the port, and were free from ſuſpition of his dependance; and ſent them to Vienna, to penetrate the reſolution of the emperor, and to know whither he inclined to accomodation or not. Who were there deteyned ten dayes without anſwere: after many councells, they were called, and told, That the emperor was content to accept of peace. In preparation wherunto, a place was aſſigned for new commiſſioners to meete upon the articles of the firſt truce, to be prorogued at pleaſure; and that, if there all differences could be accorded, that coppyes ſhould be ſent to both courts; and being mutually ratefyed, that the emperor ſhould ſend his ambaſſador to this port according to cuſtome. This was all that was done, and the cauſe of the preſent rumor, with which he deſired me to concurre, and to conceale the reſt, becauſe it did appeaſe all our aduerſaryes; and in this calme the ſoldiers might be drawne quietly out of Greece, and other the grand ſignors territories in Europe, to the Aſyan war, who would excuſe themſelues upon any pretence of a breach with the emperor. That I ſaw the neceſſitye of ſending a vizier to gather the troopes togither, and that they were enforced to diſſemble, with their owne, their reſolution: but that I ſhould not be ſcandalized at any report, but creditt him, and write agayne to his majeſtie, that it was true, they did endeauor to winne the ſpring, and to gett that tyme by a treatye; yet that the grand ſignor would not make peace, but had giuen order to Morteſa to appoynt commiſſioners to meete the Imperialls, and there to propoſe 4 articles: firſt, That the treaty ſhould haue no reference to that of Zitwar, but begin ex re integra. 2. That they ſhould require tribute for Hungarye. 3. To demand all the antient territorye apperteyning to Buda. Laſtly, That the emperor ſhould make peace with all the princes in ametye with the port, or elſe to make no concluſion. That hee knew theſe conditions would not be accepted; and that therfore both Gabor and Morteſa ſhould be commanded to draw their army to the frontyre at the end of March, and to treate with the ſword in their hand; and if the Imperialls ſhould take any exceptions, that they ſhould declare, that it was done for more caution; and to be ready to force that by armes, they could not obteyne by compoſition. He told me, That theſe men, who the laſt yeare had command in the army, did aſſure the grand ſignor, that if theſe letters of reſtriction had not beene written, wherby Morteſa was afrayd to make matters irreconcileable, that the whole Imperiall army was in their power, and that they were now ſorry by a miſunderſtanding to haue loſt the oportunitye. That Gabor had no purpoſe of peace, and that therfore I might eaſely reſolue, the grand ſignor would not deceiue all his freinds. In concluſion, he promiſed me faythfully, for my full content, that aſſoone as theſe commiſſions ſhould be finiſhed, to be ſent by theſe beghs to Morteſa baſſa, that I ſhould reade them, and beleeue my ſelfe.

WHAT to beleeue in a place where is no fayth, is a great perplexitye. I well foreſee, that this ſtate is content to weaken the enemye at the chardge of chriſtian princes; and it may be ſuſpected, that they hope to force, under that ſword, an aduantagious peace for themſelues; and to that purpoſe they driue the bargaine, and will turne it to their owne comoditye. Dum illis emolumentum redundaret, ſit diſcrimen penes me. But when I conſider, that this diſcourſe doth concur in ſubſtance with the letter ſent to Gabor, the ſumme wherof is, well to conſider with the confederates, whither peace or warr ſhalbe moſt expedient, and that iudgment referred to Gabor; and that I ſee no cauſe to doubt his integritye, neyther from his owne negotiations here, nor the ſpeculations of his profitt; and that our owne aduices from Vienna are uniforme in that poynt, that hee doth dally, and hath refuſed the articles to him propoſed; I may conclude, that there is no ſuch apparance of ſuddeyne peace (though the Turkes ſhould intend it, they may ouerdoe their owne ends); but that, at leaſt all the next ſummer, the emperor ſhalbe forced to keepe his army in Hungarye, to the great eaſe of the affayres of Germanye: and I hope Gabor will not looſe the opportunitye of his owne long continued proiect to ſettle himſelfe in greatnes, by an abiect and diſhonorable relapſe. All, in my opinion, depends upon him; and therfore I humbly refer it to his majeſties wiſdome, how to make uſe of his ſeruice, and to keepe him in heart this yeare, which will fully trye and diſcouer him: if I ſhall erre in the concluſion, I hope it ſhalbe interpreted rather error amoris, then amor erroris; and that, hauing made a good attempt, like a fayre archer, I haue miſſed narrowly.

THE vizier hath preuented the enterance of the ſuppoſed Spaniſh inſtrument, and ſeaſed all his papers. He hath beene twice before him, rather examined then enterteyned. He profeſſeth to be only ſent from the emperor, upon the firſt riſing of Gabor, to expoſtulate the cauſe of thoſe new armes, and to offer peace, if it might be obteyned; if not, to know the grand ſignors reſolution: and doubting he could haue no acceſſe through the gouerment of Morteſa, that he tooke the way of Venice and Naples. Which being obiected to him, that it was ſuſpicious, hauing ſhaped a courſe ſo far about, that he had conſulted with their enemyes, whoſe mixture concerning peace was unneceſſarye; and that if his meſſage had no other end, then as he pretended, the right gates of the grand ſignor were neuer ſhutt to his freinds; that at Buda was the vizier, who had the chardge of thoſe affayres; and that therfore he had much wandered, when he had made full proteſtation, that he had no reference to Spayne, but was a ſimple meſſinger of Cæſar, and had taken that long uoyadge to auoyd impediments. He had his libertye to returne to his lodging, under the eyes of his guardians. His paſport is ſigned by the emperor, written in Latin. The vizier opened his letter to the agent, which was Duch, but moſt in cyphar, ſubſcribed Ferdinand, which cannot yet be reade: the dates concurr with his relation, 4 moneths old. The reſt are ſealed with the emperors ſignet, without direction; and it is thought they are to the grand ſignor, and ſome miniſters fauoring their cauſe, or elſe to be ſuperſcribed according to occaſion. He was required to deciphar that which was open; which he proteſted to doe, if it were deliuered to him, faythfully; but the vizier would not truſt him, but hath giuen it to the Tranſyluanian interpreter, who hath no ſckill to picke ſuch lockes. In concluſion, it was reſolued this day, betweene the viziers, captain baſſa, and the caddeleſhars, not to doe him any perſonall affront, but to uſe him ciuilly, and to endeauor all wayes, without his helpe, to reade the inſtructions, and to diſcouer the ſecrett of his imployment; which if they cannot doe, to keepe all the papers (leaſt he make ill uſe of them to others, and ſtir a faction); and by the ſame Turkes that conducted him hither, to ſend him to Buda, to Morteſa baſſa; to whom the grand ſignor hauing referred all the affayres of the frontyre, he ſhall deliuer his ambaſſadge, and from him receiue his anſwere. This I know to be the determination, and what hath hitherto paſſed, being a principall party to the councells, and receiuing the aduice ſeuerally from all that were at the conſultation. Which uſadge is no great ſigne of peace, and confirmes us, that nothing ſhalbe hearkened to from Spayne, and that it will ſtill reſt in the power of Gabor to doe himſelfe honor. A ſword and veſt are deliuered, to be ſent to Morteſa, and his actions approued, and his commiſſion renewed, and referred to his old inſtructions. Hitherto matters goe well, and there reſts only the execution, to diſpatch this gentleman ſuddenly (who is a man of good parts, and great experience, which is promiſed to be done in two dayes); and that I may ſee the orders written to Morteſa, which I hope wilbe the ſubiect of my next letter, not doubting your lordſhip is weary of this; for, though I haue endeauored breuetye, change of matter would not giue me leaue to be manerly. Your lordſhip wilbe 1626. pleaſed to ſhow his majeſtie this diſpatch. Hauing only in my owne letter ſacrificed my duty, and referred to your lordſhips relation, I make now haſt to ſubſcribe, &c.

Conſt. the $\frac{17}{27}$. Feb. 1626.

To the Archbiſhop of CANTERBURY.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAVE long omitted to write to your grace, hoping to ſend ſome direct anſwere from the patriarck, or to procure from him a catalogue of ſuch manuſcripts as are in his librarye; but his continuall troubles haue ſpared him little leyſure to looke upon bookes, or to doe any thing, but diſentreague himſelfe of the dayly vexations of this faythleſs nation. I alſo expected ſome directions from doctor Goad, to whom I gaue account in February laſt, both of my endeauors and ignorance. To which I can add nor amend nothing, being yet poſſeſſed of no more raretyes, (at leaſt if they be ſuch) then of Iſack Syrus, and a peice of Oregen, gathered by Snt. Baſill and Gregorye Nazianſen, dedicated to Theodoret, biſhop of Tyana; the originall wherof, and, as they pretend, the hand of Gregorye, being kept in Monte Santo as a relicque, not to be obteyned, I was content to take a coppy, ſuppoſing it not to be in print, at leaſt not in Greeke. It conteynes 18 ſeuerall treateſyes, the titles wherof are curious ſubjects; and that is all I vnderſtand of them. In the end are his bookes agaynſt Celſus, faythfully tranſcribed, and teſtefyed by the moſt ingenuous Greeke in theſe parts. The patriarck alſo, this new yeares tyde, ſent mee the old Bible formerly preſented to his late majeſtie, which he now dedicatetd to the kyng, and will ſend with yt an epiſtle, as I thincke he hath ſignifyed to your grace, at leaſt I will preſume to mention it to his majeſtie. What eſtimation it may be of, is aboue my ſckill; but he valewes yt, as the greateſt antiquitye of the Greeke church. The lettre is very fayre, a character that I haue neuer ſeene. It is entyre, except the beginning of St. Matheiw. He doth teſtefye vnder his hand, that it was written by the virgin Tecla, daughter of a famous Greeke, called Stella matutina. Αβγιεριενος, who founded the moneſtarye in Egypt vpon Pharoas tower, a deuout and learned mayd, who was perſecuted in Aſya, and to whom Gregorye Nazianzen hath written many epiſteles. At the end wherof, vnder the ſame hand, are the epiſtles of Clement. She dyed not long after the councell of Nice. The booke is very great, and hath antiquitye enough at ſight. I doubt not his majeſtie will eſteeme it for the hand by whom it is preſented. Some other bookes I ſhall procure, though Mr. Petty by his learning and induſtrye preuenteth mee, and hath gotten many. The councells are yet in my hand, and I hope to keepe them, which are alone worth a librarye. What anſwere the patriarck hath giuen your grace to your propoſition of exchange, you will perceaue by his encloſed letter, which was ſent mee a moneth ſince; but hoping to ſee ſomwhat, I deferred the conueyance till this occaſion: for hauing inuited him to lye and recreate himſelfe at my houſe, I had tyme to diſcourſe lardgly with him; and the ſubſtance of his promiſe is, that he will not by way of bargayne make any exchange; but that, before I returne, I ſhall ſee what he hath, and take my choyce freely; which liberty he will vſe with mee in England, as his ſtudyes and vſe ſhall require. So as I make no doubt but to bring your grace ſomwhat that ſhall be worthy, and recompence my fruictleſs ſearch. Ther is another buſines intimated to mee from the patriarck, which I dare not mention, for his ſake, without a cyphar; which may bring a treaſure of bookes into the protection of his majeſtie, and which ſome other ſtates haue ſought, wherof I will fynd meanes to aduertiſe your grace by ſome ſafe way. I ſuppoſe he hath offered his ſeruice, and bleſſed his majeſtie in his letter; and your grace ſhall doe me a ſingular fauour to anſwere it before my returne, that he may be encouraged to be as liberall, as I thincke he is louing to me.———

Conſtantinople $\frac{17}{27}$.
Feb. 1626.

[The Remainder of this Letter is here omitted, the Contents of it being already inserted.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

IT is long ſince I heard, that your Grace had vouchſafed to write to me; the ſuppoſed loſs wherof I haue mourned here, and lamented in England: and when I thought that ſo much honor was envyed me, your letter at laſt arriued to my comfort, and hath ſtayed to my aduantage. The expreſſion of your graces fauour, and care of a poore man, without other meritt then a diſpoſition to doe yow ſeruice, as it is the propper effect of noble greatnes, ſo it worketh vpon me as the influence of the cœleſtiall vpon inferior bodyes, by ſuch power, that I cannot liue and be vngratefull. And though your grace ſhall neuer neede the fruicts, yet they are the fruicts of your owne bountye.

I AM not gladder of any thing, then the knowledge of his majeſties leaue for my returne. Ther was neuer ſo great a wanderer, but did looke joyfully homeward; where, howſoeuer your grace ſhall diſpoſe of me, to whom I haue ſurrendred my ſelfe, it ſhalbe to me both reward and contentment. If his majeſtie ſhall thincke me fitt for any ſeruice, I haue fayth and diligence to commend me; which, when they are looked downe vpon, proſper better then the eyes of ambition, that burne themſelues agaynſt the ſunne.

I AM ſorry I can yet giue your grace no better account of marbles, after a long and exquiſite ſearch; wherin Mr. Petty hath, by his perſonall ſckill and labour, preuented my dull inſtruments. My agent is returned after a 9 moneths voyadge to Athens, and the relicques of old Greece; and hath brought me little fruict to my contentment, but ſome heads and ſmall releuo's, antient and good worke, a feaſt of Jupiter, and a peice of a ſacrifice, and ſuch like. I had drawne them in paper to ſend to your grace, but defer it till a better harueſt. I haue bought two ſtatues at Zia: how they will proue, I muſt runne the hazard. Some others are collected for me in the iſlands; but not hauing ſeene them, I will not ſpoyle them with prayſes. My laſt hope is vpon another aduenture to Greece, whither, vpon a new enformation of the archbiſhop of Lacedemon, I haue ſent two moneths ſince a ſeruant of myne owne, that hath ſeene many collections in Italye, and pretends to know. I haue giuen him two rules, beautye and hard marble. I am made beleeue that he ſhall fynd braue matter, and haue furniſhed him with a command, the capten baſſaes letter, the patriarchs recommendation, and ſufficient creditt: and I doubt not but to bring your grace good ſatiſfaction. I haue two antient gates of hard white marble, wrought al' antiquo, fiue ſtones a piece, the ſides, head, and threſholds: they were gotten in the iſlands from an old temple, and are very fayre; and though they are not for your graces gallery, they wilbe rich and beawtifull in any building. This is the ill reckoning I can yet giue your grace of my induſtrye.——

[The Contents of the reſt of this Letter, being before inſerted, are therefore here omitted.]

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

BY the incloſed duplicate, your lordſhip will ſee the date of my laſt unto you: ſince which time, although nothing hath preſented itſelfe worthy the aduertiſing; yet, as I haue not omitted to ſalute you by euery ordinary ſince my arriual here, ſo hauing at this preſent ſome letters come to my hands to be ſent unto you, I cannot chuſe but accompany them with a fewe lines of my owne. The Carneuale here hath for many dayes ſilenced all buiſineſſe; and now wee ſhall ſee ſhortly, whither they will bee as ſeriouſly wiſe, as they haue been of late fooliſhly mad: for their ſports haue been brutall, full of diſorder, murthers, and aſſaſſinates, which haue cauſed much diſcontentment uniuerſally; wherein moſt of the publique miniſters haue had part, except the ambaſſador of the States and my ſelfe; who, by forbidding our ſeruants the uſe of prohibitted weapons, haue auoided the giuing of ſcandall, and the receauing of affronts.

THE execution of the treaty of Monſon doth proceede, and the popes trouppes are in part entered into the Valtelina, notwithſtanding that none of the partyes intereſſed in the cauſe haue giuen their conſent. When the forts are demoliſhed, the free

1626. free poſſeſſion of that prouince muſt be left unto the Valtelineſchi, who, for their treaſon and rebellion, ſhall receaue a crowne of ſouuerainty, that the ſubjects of other princes and ſtates may be incoraged by their example to caſt off all obedience due unto their naturall princes. The poore Griſons haue no armes to defend themſelfes, but preces & lachrymæ; and with thoſe they do pierce the heauens, where there is a God, that in his due time will do them right. In the mean time, all inferior princes, and weaker republiques, may, in this broken glaſſe of the Griſons, ſee the frailty of their owne condition: for by this act, the worlde hath a preſident, that France and Spayne do undertake to diſpoſe of the ſupremacye and liberty of ſuch as are no way ſubject unto them; and perhaps thoſe who do giue way unto this uiolence, may hereafter be inforced to drinck of the ſame cup. Of all others, the Venetians are moſt to blame; for they might haue hindered this proceeding: but their ſilence and conniuencye doth make them guilty of that crime, becauſe qui non vetat peccare, cumpoteſt, jubet; and queſtionleſſe they will be the firſt that will repent it moſt.

THE French ambaſſadors in Heluetia, Chaſteauneuf extraordinary, and Miron ordinary, haue layed as fayre colours uppon this foule monſter, as they could finde. And it is poſſible, that they may procure a tacite conſent of the catholique cantons: but the proteſtants did, in a late dyette at Soleuure, expreſſe publiquely their diſlike of theſe proceedings.

SO, with the remembrance of my wifes and my owne affectionate ſeruice to you, and your worthy lady, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 19. Feb.
1627. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

From the KING.

CHARLES R.

TRUSTIE and welbeloved, wee greete yow well. By your ſeverall letters vnto vs, and your relations addreſt vnto our ſecretarie Conway, wee haue obſerved with what wiſdome, zeale, and good ſucceſſe, yow haue employed your ſelfe for the publicke, and our ſervice, with honour and contentment to vs, and with eſtimation to your ſelfe, both from the other ambaſſadours there reſident, and from thoſe for and with whom yow haue had occaſion to negotiate in that port. And as your whole proceedings and negotiations haue beene acceptable vnto vs, ſoe haue they raiſed in vs an affection to keepe ſpeciall remembrance of your ſervices, and to wiſh your good; whereof, for your comfort and encouragement, wee haue thought good to giue yow this teſtimony and aſſurance vnder our owne royall hand: and withall to lett yow know, that although wee might haue beene mooved in this preſent conjuncture of affaires to haue continued yow longer there, as a fitt and neceſſarie inſtrument for our ſervice, yett wee haue ſuffered your reiterated earneſt ſutes vnto vs to prevaile for your revocation: touching which, and other affaires, yow ſhall be further informed from our ſaid ſecretarie, to whom wee referre yow. Given att our pallace of Weſtminſter, the nineteenth daie of Februarie, in the ſecond yeare of our raigne.

Superſcribed,

To our truſtie and welbeloved Sir THOMAS ROE, Knight, our Ambaſſadour reſident with the Grand Signior.

From the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

SINCE my laſt of the 28th of December, I haue received your lordſhipps of the 22th October, and 5. November, and repreſented them vnto his majeſtie; of whoſe gracious vouchſafing of them, and his royall favour towards yow, his owne letters will giue yow beſt aſſurance.

YOUR relations, and the advertiſements wee haue heretofore received from Germany, doe ſufficiently aſſure vs of blowes paſt betweene Bethlem Gabor and the Imperialiſts. And our advices informe vs alſo of a treatie of peace or truce in hand, 1626. or rather finiſhed betweene them; which, from * 234, by the relation of 39559975 51.9735268 to 424124.33316.357, wee vnderſtand ſhould be 997581 an 34697 127^{s} to 62.99716857, that he may 3997347 the 4.6499274 this 97861465.5.74, 1277 being 4.9697, and 473558147495677 to 3442.4 6 the 2997133647; 497 that he may 4732767 the 3877419495.2477 by 61, 224139946393.27162294 96458 and 4969758 to 949473667 66 3232946 106, according to the aſſurances ſoe often given, is the 74626178973.677 from ſoe many 59^{s}, and 599213 9962.96771972962362.99434 haue paſt before he did 7923271225.47577. The good cauſe 977741225: and he being now 3752.66771 into 77 with 21, and having in hope and contemplation of his mooving by your good offices, received ſoe many notable favours, 20 will in noe ſort 7963612241 42.9374268: the rather, for the confidence yow haue alwaies had thereof; and that hitherto there hath appeared 99717385292 in 225. Neverthelesſe, leaſt the 77362 of 5394.7756 and 6785.34, the burying in ſilence of his 9667466474 to 235, or any other accident, may 3.23927224 62962264, and 3364712251 6357197613.96947554 to the 724376396327 of 21^{s} and the 5.292 of 7795.34574129974 and 9493.77 72924, your lordſhipp ſhall doe well to take a fitt occaſion to 6.4267 to 130, to 4623.579 and 3.997245.7122.5 in the 77.773.6635519747945.3937 of 22419. 495.247717267442.99 now 78973677 and 475277 on, as 21 and 61 wilbe carefull to 9747.94571 6272417923275.79641 69225. Sir 243331 6.357, and the other 71 att 234, haue done their parts to 577971225.16942226, both by 64 696922.5, and 34464393.74 to 224 70^{r}, ſent with 5.3947756 to 3429212251 6947 what yſſue his intended negotiations ſhould haue. What hath paſt att 234, I aſſure my ſelfe your lordſhip will haue long ſince vnderſtood from Sir 243331 6357, who, in all occaſions, is not wanting to doe yow that right and honour yow deſerue. The reſt is referred to your wiſdome, to be handled as yow ſhall iudge it moſt convenient for his majeſties ſervice.

---

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

Venice, by the relation of colonel Peblitz to Sir Iſaake Wake, wee vnderſtand ſhou'd be onely an art of Bethlem Gabor to winne tyme, that he may appeare the ſtronger this next ſummer, he being ſound, and really reſolued to aſſiſt the good cauſe: for that he may receiue the aydes promiſed by the allies, his conſtancie vigorouſly and roundly to proſecute war agaynſt the houſe of Auſtria, according to the aſſurances ſoe often given, is the fruit expected from ſoe many treatys, and long continued negotiations, as haue paſt before he did engage himſelfe. The good cauſe needes him: and he being now admitted into confederacy with his majeſtie, and having in hope and contemplation of his mooving by your good offices, received ſoe many notable favours, the king of Great-Brittayny will in noe ſort doubt his ſinceritye: the rather, for the confidence yow haue alwaies had thereof; and that hitherto there hath appeared noe fayling in him. Neverthelesſe, leaſt the death of Mansfelt and Weymar, the burying in ſilence of his ouuertures to the ſtate of Venice, or any other accident, may change his thoughts, and cauſe him take new councells to the diſaduantage of his majeſties and the kyng of Denmarkes hopes and proceedings, your lordſhipp ſhall doe well to take a fitt occaſion to write to the prince of Tranſiluania, to quicken and confirme him in the effectuall performance of his promiſed diuerſion now expected and relied on, as his majeſtie and allies wilbe carefull to performe their engagements to him. Sir Iſaake Wake, and the other ambaſſadors att Venice, haue done their parts to keepe him vpright, both by letters vnto him, and aſſurances to his miniſters, ſent with Mansfelt to bring him word what yſſue his intended negotiations ſhould haue. What hath paſt att Venice, I aſſure my ſelfe your lordſhip will haue long ſince vnderſtood from Sir Iſaake Wake, who, in all occaſions, is not wanting to doe yow that right and honor yow deſerue. The reſt is referred to your wiſdome, to be handled as yow ſhall iudge it moſt convenient for his majeſties ſervice.

* THE affaires betweene 62361759247 and 140, as they may haue relation to that cauſe wherein his majeſtie and his friends are ingaged, are att the preſent, as your lordſhipp repreſents them, in ſuch ſtate, as beſt agrees with his majeſties ſervice. And, looking vpon all the circumſtances, of 473.64268 to 127 7347, to 153 7267 442.99 of the 38774 that might be 4796 to 101, and the ſetting att 5237468 the 154^{s} 46 for the 5.772674439, of all which there ſeemes to be probable hopes, his majeſtie approoues your providence and iudgement touching that affaire; and preſumes, that both 153 and 130 will thereby be encouraged; and the profeſſed conſtancie of their affections and readines to ſupport the 3.3647 of 475222.99, and the 395.599152.37468, in ſome ſort bettered. And therefore, as yow haue alreadie a ſetled correſpondence with 130, ſoe his majeſtie likes well, that yow alſo correſpond with 79369413.3537434364, the 153^{s} 71 att the 23227, and inlarge your ſelfe vnto him (being a diſcreete and well affected perſon) in all affaires and occurrences concerning the publicke, which may be any waies vſefull to that kings, and the publicke ſervice, and whereof the ſpeciall knowledge ought not in your iudgement to be reſerved to his majeſtie.

WEE are here rayſing 3500 men to be preſently ſent awaie for recreuts, to make the foure regiments in his majeſties pay in the Low-countries, now going to the king of Denmarke, compleate. His majeſtie alſo giues leaue for that king to raiſe 6000 men in Scotland, and furniſheth money for the leavie out of the contribution due to that king.

YOUR deſigned ſucceſſor, Sir Peter Wyche, is preparing to take his journey. And I remaine

23. February,
1626.

Your Lordſhipps aſſured friend to ſerue yow,

E. CONWAY.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

WHEN the eccleſiaſticall trouppes did lately enter into the Valtelina, to take poſſeſſion of that prouince, the Spanyards, to honor Torquato Conti, the popes general, did accompany him with foure hundred horſe: which number being to great for a compliment, and not to ſmall to do hurt, hath giuen occaſion to theſe ſeig^{ri}. to ſuſpect the worſt. The newe forts are already demoliſhed; and it is expected, that the popes forces ſhould retyre at the end of this month, and leaue that vally free vnto the Valtelineſchi. The inhabitants of the county of Bormio haue by letters to the Griſons, and by ambaſſadors to the marquis di Coeuures, declared, that they haue no purpoſe to change their maſters; and that they will not depart from the obedience they do owe vnto the Griſons, their naturall ſoueraines. It is thought, that thoſe of the county of Chiauenna will followe the example, and chuſe rather to liue vnder the gouernment of the Griſons, then to enjoy an anarchicall liberty vnder the protection of France and Spayne. If thoſe two countryes do adhere conſtantly to their true ſoueraines, it will be hard for the Valtelineſchi to ſubſiſt long of themſelfes: neither will it be long (after the French ſhall be all of them gone) ere ſome quarel do arriſe betwixt the Griſons and them; in which caſe, they muſt of neceſſity flye for protection vnto the gouernor of Milan, who is at the dore, and ſo by conſequence call the Spanyards into that vally, out of which they will not be driuen hereafter ſo eaſily, if once they can get poſſeſſion thereof againe. The Venetians do foreſee this ſtorme hanging ouer their heads, and do burne with jealouſye: but by hauing vſed conniuency to long, they haue made the diſeaſe incurable; and if they do truely repent their not hauing oppoſed this treaty in the beginning, their repentance is now to late: for they haue already licenſed allmoſt all their auxiliarij, which were ſtrangers; and as for thoſe of their owne militia, or trayned bands, they are of no conſideration: and therfore they muſt ſtand to the mercy and diſcretion of the Spanyards, vnto whom, of late, they do make extraordinary court.

---

* The above is decypher'd as follows:

The affaires betweene that empire and Poland, as they may haue relation to that cauſe wherein his majeſtie and his friends are ingaged, are att the preſent, as your lordſhipp repreſents them, in ſuch ſtate, as beſt agrees with his majeſties ſervice. And, looking vpon all the circumſtances, of ſecuritye to Bethlem Gabors eaſe, to the kyng of Swedens diuerſion of the aydes that might be giuen to the emperor, and the ſetting att liberty the grand ſignors gallies for the Medeterran, of all which there ſeemes to be probable hopes, his majeſtie approoues your providence and iudgement touching that affaire; and preſumes, that both the kyng of Sweden, and prince of Tranſiluania, will thereby be encouraged: and the profeſſed conſtancie of their affections and readines to ſupport the cauſe of religion, and the common liberty, in ſome ſort bettered. And therefore, as yow haue alreadie a ſetled correſpondence with Bethlem Gabor, ſoe his majeſtie likes well, that yow alſo correſpond with doctor Camarartus, the kyng of Swedens ambaſſador att the Haghe ———

THE Venetian ſecretary, reſident in Madrid, hath diſpatched an expreſſe currier hither, to aduertiſe the ſuſpenſion made by the king of Spayne of 14 millions aſſigned and due vnto the Genoeſi; the conſequence whereof being in probability to drawe an vniuerſall fallimento of the banchieri, the ſenate here doth now conſult vppon the ſuſpending likewiſe the payment of what they had aſſigned for this newe fayre of Piacenza, ſo that there is like to be a great confuſion; and perhaps the noiſe hereof, togither with vneuitable want, may cauſe ſome mutiny among their armyes in Germany, whither I haue cauſed all the Dutch and Flemiſh marchants of this towne, with whom I haue good intelligence, to diſperſe it by letters in all parts, and likewiſe into Bohemia and Hungary.

I HAUE not yet heard from your lordſhip ſince my arriual here, and yet I haue not omitted to ſalute you by euery ordinary. The laſt weeke a fregate arriued here with letters to all except mee; and this hath bred a jealouſe conceit in mee, that the bailo doth not play faire. By the next, I will ſend a note of all ſuch letters as I haue written, that wee may ſee whither there bee fraude or not. In the meane time, with my wifes and my owne affectionate loue and ſeruice to your noble lady and your ſelfe, I reſt

Venice, 2. March,
ſtilo nouo, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt aſſured frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE enterteynment of the gentleman ſent from the emperor hath been hitherto ſo harſh, that I cannot conceiue that his meſſage hath beene welcome. He is proued a Duch man in French diſguiſe. The vizier forced him to decyphar the letter to the agent, mentioned in my laſt, in his owne houſe, not truſting him with his owne. The ſubſtance wherof was uehement complaynt agaynſt the prince of Tranſyluania, accuſing him to be the author of all the troubles and diſcontents of the frontyre: that ſince his aduancement, it hath not beene poſſible to maynteyne the peace, nor that amety which hath beene contracted betweene their kyngdomes: intimating a deſire to haue him depoſed as a perturber of the world, expoſtulating the mouing of theſe new armes, and the preparations of the baſſa of Buda: in concluſion, inſinuating an offer of prolongation of the treaty of Zitwar, but in tearmes rather threatning then ſubmiſs. Theſe are inſtructions for the reſident. What is conteyned in the other letters to the grand ſignor, I cannot know, being anſwered by the vizier, that he will not ſuffer them to be deliuered; but continuing conſtant to ſend him backe to Buda, that he ſhall there deliuer his meſſage; and if it ſhall ſeeme fitt to Gabor and the baſſa, to treat peace, that then an ambaſſador from the emperor ſhalbe accepted, but no inferior perſon, nor querulous letters. Thus it hath reſted the laſt weeke. To day I ſent to the vizier to know a reſolution. He inſtantly gaue order to ſend for him, and the reſident, and promiſed to diſpatch him in 3 dayes. His ſecretarye ſent me word, that the agent ſhould be diſmiſſed with him, upon ſome diſpleaſure: but whither it be ſo, or to aſſiſt in the treatye, I cannot penetrate.

THERE is arriued from Tranſyluania another poſt, with letters to the vizier, uery ſharp, and almoſt menacing for the delay of the inueſtiture granted to the princeſs, who, in 4 dayes, was diſpeeded with a ſmoth and ſoft anſwere, promiſing preſently to diſpatch the capigi baſſa ordeyned for that office. This man brought no meſſage nor newes to any ambaſſador, nor did his letters mention any thing concerning the treaty, peace, or war, which gaue us all ſome ſuſpition. And deſiring to cleare my 1626. ſelfe, this day I receiued a letter from the Tranſyluanian reſident, aduiſing, that a place of meeting was deſſigned, and commiſſioners named on the behalfe of the emperor; and that others, on the part of Morteſa baſſa, were arriued at the princes court: but that his maſter had not yet made his election, nor declared himſelfe; protracting the tyme to receiue an anſwere from this port: which being ſent away the 5. February, he was aſſured, that the prince would not proceed at all. He did intimate to me a great ſecrett, which he could not committ to paper, hauing order to deliuer it viua voce. I did endeauor to draw it from him; but for a ſecond anſwere, he had an excuſe, that he could truſt none but himſelfe; yet gaue me this intimation; In tantis rerum viciſſitudinibus, nos decet omnia caute, et ad emolumentum principum chriſtianorum dirigere, quorum inimicitia poteſt iterum, Deo ita favente, in amicitiam redigere. Out of which ill Latin I could make a conſtruction, that there is ſome conceit of a generall peace in Germany, which the Turkes will not like; for the prince fynds him ſelfe ſo much too much neglected of theſe dull and proud miniſters, and their delayes ſo pernitious, and their anſwers ſo ambiguous, that they will enforce him to ſhake off all dependance. Where he will faſten him ſelfe, in ſuch a change, is aboue my ſearch. Certeynlye he is retyred from Leutch into Tranſyluania, with the beſt of his army, forced, as they affirme, by a great contagion of the plague, which they gott of the enemy, and hath proued worſe then their ſword. It is reported, that the palatine of Hungarye, and Scirin-Ogli generall of the Croatians, are dead of the infection. But I doe not warrant it for truth, though it be diuerſly brought hither.

I MAKE no queſtion your lordſhip hath, by a ſhorter way, better intelligence of the proceedings of Gabor, and how he is like to diſpoſe himſelfe in the ſpring: for if he relapſe, I ſhalbe the laſt to know it, hauing no way to diſcouer him but by his owne miniſters; no correſpondence with his court, but from himſelfe, who will not be the firſt to tell me, that he is untrue to all his profeſſions. Yet I will write your lordſhip all I know, and all circumſtances wherby yow may confirme your owne knowledge and judgment, and not relye upon my aduices, that am enforced to take them upon truſt, and come too far about to giue tymely notice of what I can collect. So I will not doubt him too much, knowing he loues himſelfe, untill I ſee he hath aduantage by it, and cauſe to change ſydes. I conclude your lordſhips trouble, reſting, as your fauours haue bound me,

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$.
March, 1626.

Your Lordſhips.

My Lord,

THE patriarch of Conſtantinople ſent me a letter to my lord of Arundell, an anſwere, as I ſuppoſe, of a recommendation giuen of a gentleman imployed by his lordſhip to ſeeke antiquityes. I haue giuen it a couer, and written ſome newes of his ſeruant, and vpon the ſame theame. I thought it my duty to aske your lordſhips leaue, that it may be deliuered.

From Mr. WILKINSON.

My very good Lord,

THE pope, to vnite himſelfe more ſtrictly with Spayne, and to gayne the aſſiſtance of that king for the recouery of the Valtelina, hath lately encreſed the number of his ſouldiers, rayſed for that effect. And whereas his foote were but in all 6000, he hath now made an addition vnto them of 2000 more; and his horſe being but before 400, he hath now doubled their number, being reſolued, with the Spanyards and Leopold, to aſſault thoſe paſſages which France and Venice haue already taken and fortifyed. Angelo Badoaro, the pops miniſter reſident in Paris, doth erneſtly endeuor to diſpoſe that king to leaue the Venetians alone in the Valtelina, and to retyre his owne forces from thence into his owne country, to ſuppreſſe the rebellions of the proteſtants. This his counſell cannot but ſeeme good and plauſable to the French king; but aymes at no other end but the pops benefit and aduantage, who would be able with leſſe dificulty to regayne that part of the Valtelina which he hath loſt, when the forces of France and Venice are diſunited.

I ACKNOWLEDGE my ſelfe infinitely beholding vnto your lordſhip, for the honor you haue beene pleaſed to afford me, both by your lordſhips frequent writing vnto me, and taking notice of thoſe letters I write vnto your lordſhip. The laſt letter I receaued from your lordſhip was dated January 2. for which, and many others, I returne moſt humble thankes, and will allwayes endeauor to approue my ſelfe 1626.

Venice, March 4.
ſtilo nouo, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble, and moſt obedient ſeruant,

JOHN WILKINSON.

To the LORDS of his Majeſties Priuy-Counſell.

Right Honorable, my very good Lords,

IN Nouember now 16 moneths paſt, I preſumed to trouble your lordſhips with a long enformation of ſome differences fallen betweene our nation and the Venetians in Aleppo, concerning the dutyes of conſolage, for ſtrangers goods laden vpon our ſhipping, and the wearing of the colours of England. I hoped to haue giuen your lordſhips full euidence of our vndoubted right, both in equity and practice, in theſe parts, all other nations exacting it of his majeſties ſubiects. Wherin hauing firſt annulled and reuoked the falſe ſentence of the judge of the cyttye agaynſt us, I was able to haue recouered our creditt and damages vpon them. But for other reſpects, hauing acquainted the ſenate, attending juſtice from them, I vnderſtood that they had referred the cauſe to his majeſties declaration, and their conſull: in the meane tyme, depoſited mony to ſtand to his royall ſentence; which made me not dare to prevayle vpon my freinds, and the law of this ſtate, but to expect his majeſties and your lordſhips order in this buſines. The which, though it appeare at the firſt ſight but ſmall, and a controuerſy of merchants, yet is of great conſequence to the trade; and wilbe the utter ruine, if it be ſo ouerpaſt, of the Leuant company, now one of the moſt profitable to the kyngdome, venting yearly, of comodityes of our owne growth, cloth, tynne, lead, and furrs, beſides the export of ſpices, neare 250000 pounds, and returning good quantetyes of gold. It wilbe ſuperfluous to repeate the reaſons how we ſhalbe eaten out by our owne ſhipping, it being a great matter to ſpare in conſolage and aſſurance 10 in the 100, payd by us, and ſaued by them; which, like odds in betting, will beate the beſt gamſter. Yet I thincke it my duty to enforme your lordſhips of the uſe the ſenate doth make of our remiſsnes or delay to protect the rights of merchants. Firſt, obſeruing that in a whole yeare ther was nothing done, nor anſwere returned, they preſumed we had giuen ouer our cauſe, and called for their mony depoſited in Aleppo, which in deſpayre was reſtored: and then, to build their title for euer, their ſauii della mercantia made an order, that no Venetian ſubiect ſhould lade vpon a ſtranger, vnleſs they firſt gaue ſecuritye not to pay conſolage, nor any duty in reſpect therof: not that they would prohibite the freightment, for they cannot ſpare our ſhipping; but knowing that the owners and maſters, for their owne reſpects, to gett imployment, will eaſely make the condition, and bynd themſelues, they ſaue their ſubiects that chardge; which, if after it ſhalbe taken from them, they will recouer vpon the ſhip by vertue of their couenant: and thus euery way the ſubiect of England receiues the loſs. And this is a great wiſedome, by inſenſible degrees, to ſteale away our profitt, and to preuayle by our owne armes. Not content herewith, they haue added, that no ſtranger ſhall lade in their dominion for their ſubiects, vnleſs he conſent to weare the flagg of St. Marke. And this is another ſtepp to fortefy themſelues; though their owne ſhips, when they feare, aduance St. George. What diſhonor this wilbe to our nation, and what prejudice to the nauigation, I referr to your lordſhips wiſedome; eſpecially ſeing it will occaſion many quarrells with thoſe of Tunes and Algier, who as boldly aſſayle the Venetian colours, as a lyon doth a tame lambe. Of this I haue had a late experience: An Engliſh ſhip being here in port, the Venetians deſired to freight her; and the owners and merchants were agreed, only the conſolage was the difference. Whervpon I ſent to the baylo to know, whither this prohibition was made by the ſenate, or what was the reaſon of this innouation; who freely declared, that it was commanded by publicque edict ſent him, and regiſtred in all the cancellerias of the Leuant, vrging that they eſteemed the queſtion decided, and that we were ſatisfyed in our clayme, hauing no ſentence, nor anſwere giuen of the reference made to his majeſtie: and that therfore they had proceeded to 1626. eſtabliſh both the aboue-mentioned decrees. Vpon this declaration I would not rayſe a precedent agaynſt our ſelues, but prohibited the lading at all, to the great loſs of the owners.

CONTENTIONS betweene two nations in matter of trade, are like the reſtleſs ſtrife betweene the ſea and land. Whatſoeuer the one gets, the other looſeth; and this would be well obſerued: for euery decay and diſaduantage in traficque is a conſumption to the ſtate. When any ſtate makes a new decree in gouerment of trade, certeynly they ſeeke their owne profitt by the loſs of ſome other: and therfore thoſe decrees would be weighd, in what poynt they ayme at new gayne, and it will ſhow where, by another, that is loſt; and a contrary edict will preſently ſtop the breach, before it grow to a cuſtome. The ſenate of Venice is moſt practicque and ſollicitous of their trades, as the founteynes of their reuenew; and therfore conſtitute magiſtrats purpoſely to care for and ſtudy their aduantages; and ſpare not to trye new concluſions, by lawes to alter the courſe of trades, and to draw to themſelues the profitt: if it take, they enioy it; if not, ther is nothing loſt by the attempt. Thus their * cinque ſauij haue lately promulged diuers new decrees, in ſhow pretending to eaſe the merchant ſtranger, and to abate their cuſtomes, which is the more for this kyndnes to be ſuſpected; for they meane nothing leſs, but by looſing in the ſcore to gett in the hundreth. All thoſe new ſtatutes principally reguard the Engliſh, whom they thincke ſo inamored with plumporredge, cakes, and pies, as they will with currents ſwallow any thing. Therfore they haue declared, that no ſtranger ſhall lade that comoditye at Zant or Cephalonia, vnleſs they bring certificate, that they haue diſchardged, at Venice, at leaſt two thirds lading of other goods, which is impoſſible; if not, they muſt pay a new impoſt of 5 dollers the thouſand for licence. So that really, communibus annis, the impoſition is greater then the firſt valew of the comoditye. Their ayme in this edict is, if poſſible, to draw, for the loue of currents, the ſtaple of diuers merchandiſe to that cytty, which, now during the war, are carried to Ligorne; but their priuiledges are not equall, and they will fayle of that end, becauſe a ſmall abatement of cuſtome will not entice merchants to change their deſſignes, nor to alter their knowne trades: and all the world knowes, that the ſenate can worke vpon the plenty of goods in the price, to their owne gayne. But yet they will fynd this aduantage, that they are ſure ſome will, to ſaue the new impoſt, bring comoditye to their cytty in greater abundance then at preſent; and that they who will not, ſhall pay for it. And thus they will rayſe the reuenew of thoſe iſlands 50000 dollers vpon our trade, that yeild nothing but plumms, and would ſterue, if our nation ſhould forbeare them two yeares; who carry ready mony thither euery yeare betweene 3 and 400000 realls, to the great loſs of the kyngdome. I haue propoſed theſe conſiderations to your lordſhips prudence, to whom the remedyes will appeare eaſy and neceſſarye. Neyther can any obiection, that to publiſh counter-edicts will decay the nauigation, preuayle. Your lordſhips pleaſe, in this particular, to creditt me; their neede is more vrdgent then ours; and if they ſaw they were oppoſed, they would retyre without any noyſe; and if they be not, they wilbe maſters both of our ſhipping, and in few yeares of all the trade in the Leuant, only by our ſhipping. Humbly crauing your lordſhips pardon for this boldnes, I ſubmitt my contemplations to your great wiſedomes, and my ſelfe to your honorable fauour, as

* In Pregadi a di, 25. Aug. 1626. printed Sept. laſt.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{17}{27}$.
March, 1626.

Your Lordſhips moſt deuoted ſeruant.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

[The former Part of this Letter, being included in the next, is therefore here omitted.]

—THE accompt your lordſhip doth deſire of the 3 reſidents here, is thus: The French did not at firſt meddle for aboue a yeare; but whither by order, or from his owne uanitye, he ſuddenly engaged himſelfe, wrote, ſent, and called a gentleman of Tranſyluania hither, profeſſing he had mony in depoſito for his maſters quota, if the other ambaſſadors had the like; and braued, as if he only were the man that had creditt and authoritye, and with this ſmoake filled Gabor: but as ſuddenly he fell off, eyther hauing receiued a checke, or ſeeing all did not depend upon him, he retyred from all correſpondence with the prince or us; ieſting, that he was not to be truſted, and rather doing ill offices then good, which haue deeply wounded the generall reputation of the princes with Gabor; of which he hath complayned with much bitternes to me and the Duch ambaſſador, and made it the foundation of his retrayt; concluding, Chriſtianus a chriſtiano ſemel poteſt decipi. Of his coldnes I aduiſed my lord Conwey 7 moneths paſt, and neuer beleeued his greateſt feruency, when I remembred his dearenes with the Jeſuites. Lately, when he ſaw the buſines begin to be ualued, he ſeemed deſirous to returne to partake with us; but as we neuer refuſed him, ſo wee were not fond of his helpe. But upon this newes of peace, he magnifyes his owne wiſdome, that he foreſaw the unprofitable iſſue. Breefly, he is not worth a good feather, nor hath any creditt with Turkes, Jewes, nor Chriſtians.

THE baylo hath alway, in his affections and actions, ſhowed a great deſire to engage Gabor in the war; but hath forborne to declare him ſelfe to him by letters or promiſe, proceeding warely. He is a wiſe man, bred in a good ſchoole, and knowes of what uſe he may be; which I thincke he preferrs to the ſenate, auoyding to undertake for any contribution, or reall encouradgement, referring that to the treatyes in Chriſtendome, where that ſtate had miniſters.

THE Duch is moſt feruent, and makes this buſines his capitall, the ground of his meritt to his maſters. He will doe any thing; Acheronta movebit, mingle heauen and hell. He knowes he can be no blacker with the houſe of Auſtria. The order for 30000 dollars, remitted from the kyng of Denmarke, paſſed his hands, and he hath payd it. Vpon the ſubiect I ſaw a letter from Gabor to him, full of diſcontent, complayning that he expected more, that he was neglected and deſerted, and enforced to accept of that poore ſumme, for infinite expence and hazard. He hath liued long in Turky, and is ſo corrupted with their maners, that he is the ſhame of ambaſſadors. I will ſay no more of him, leaſt your lordſhip thincke this ayre as infectious for the mind, as for the body: and if neceſſitye of buſines, wherin he hath not much authoritye, did not hold us togither, for my part I would not conuerſe with him. When I had written thus far, and was concluding, I receiued your lordſhips letter of the 2d February, with the coppy of that written to the prince of Tranſyluania, which I wiſh may moue him to conſider his honor; and the fayth made to yow by collonell Peblitz, giues me ſome hope, that he had rather deceiue old enemies then new freinds. But it is ſeconded here, that Gabor hath confirmed the articles, and that peace on his part is eſtabliſhed. Wherupon I ſent to the vizier, and acquaynted him with all the proceeding, with the diſhonor of the conditions, and the renuntiation of all other his allyes; and whatſoeuer elſe might moue him: who continueth the ſame proteſtation, that hee knew nothing; but, calling for the agent of Morteſa, demanded if he had ſuch aduice; who confeſſed that he heard ſo much. The reſident of Gabor doth not deny it categorically, but lamenteth the cauſe, imputing it to the French, and the miniſters of this ſtate, who, he ſayes, will haue peace, and nothing but peace, good or bad; ſo they may deferr their trouble: but that from his maſter he hath nothing, and therfore will not ſeeme to beleeue, that ther is any meaning but to gett tyme, and to uſe arts of aduantage. For my owne part, I am confounded, and reſolue to ſend to the prince, and to doe all that I am able, and referr the diſpoſition to him that directeth all our propoſitions to his ſecrett will and glorye.

THE new baylo Venieri is this day expected; the old, and his merchants, gone out to meete him. And ſo I committ your lordſhip to the holy keeping of our bleſſed God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{19}{29}$.
March, 1626.

1626.

To my Lord CONWAY: With GABOR's Treaty.

My Lord,

I HAUE receiued the duplicates of your lordſhips letters of the 25. Octob. and 6. Decemb. without any ſubſcription: the originalls euer miſcarring, doth aſſure me, that they are watched upon the way, and the hand or ſeale knowne. I take them for ſufficient warrant, for more then I able to doe; and hauing from Sir Iſake Wake beene enformed of the ſame ſubſtance and effects of the negotiation of captain Quaad, I did preuent tyme, preſuming rather upon pardon for too much diligence, then a warines to care for my ſelfe; and haue written to the prince of Tranſyluania, to all thoſe purpoſes now inſtructed me, as effectually as my witt will beare; as your lordſhip will perceaue by the coppyes of my letters ſent you, of the 13. Jan. and 5. Feb. diſpatched by his owne ſeruants.

SINCE, I am confounded in the change of counſayles, or vncerteynty of rumors; for I am tyed to the reports of the enemye, the credulitye of ignorant Turkes, or to beleeue the agents of Gabor, who may artificially be the firſt deceiued: yet, though I am confident your lordſhip hath long ſince as much as I can write, I will neyther hide ſhame nor ſorrow, becauſe perhaps ſome circumſtances may be of ſeruice.

IT is aduiſed from Vienna, and diuulged confidently by the emperors reſident, That Gabor hath concluded peace. 13 articles are ſpread in this cytty, ſo diſaduantagious and diſhonorable for him, that it tempteth me to giue them little creditt: for beſides renouncing all correſpondence with the grand ſignor, whom he muſt obey, there is promiſed reparation of all damages done to the Imperiall ſubiects ſince 1619, more then he is worth; reſtitution of ſome pieces in the Turkes poſſeſſion; impoſſible redemption of ſlaues ab inferno, and diuers other ceſſions and loſſes to the prince, in reſpect of his former treatyes. So that, by this new mouing, he hath weakened both his meanes and reputation; except all theſe conditions are formall, and inſerted by the emperor for his greater honor, without purpoſe to expect an exact performance of that which cannot be done; or els Gabor hath gabard us all, and, with little care of his fayth, left all care of his ſafety and profitt. What to beleeue, doth torment me. With the vizier I could not ſpeake, being ſicke in his bed; but ſending my ſecretarye to enforme him of theſe falſe proceedings, he did earneſtly ſweare, he knew nothing; but called for the agent of Morteza, and demanding of him, if he heard any ſuch thing, he confeſſed, that it was ſo reported from Buda: at which he ſeemed diſpleaſed, proteſting, if a generall peace were not made, with the ſatisfaction of all the allyes of Gabor, whatſoeuer was done leſs, was without order, or warrant from hence. Vpon the firſt report of this pacification, I ſent for the Tranſyluanian reſident, and the Duch ambaſſador, to my houſe, in whoſe preſence I arraigned him. He conſtantly profeſſed, he had no knowledge therof, and in that denyall doth yet perſiſt; but by way of preuention to be accuſed, lamented uehemently agaynſt the French kyng, and his reſident here. When I ſhowed him the articles, he altered; which rayſed as many colours in his face, whither of guiltines or indignation, as I found preuarications in his anſwers: and though deepely ſwearing, he was ignorant of any thing tranſacted, yet he confeſſed, that his maſter was returned into Tranſyluania; and that ther was an opinion of a generall peace, if from Chriſtendome ſome better life were not ſupplied: that if commiſſioners were deputed, and had agreed, that eyther the prince had not ſigned, or would neuer hold ſo vnworthy conditions. I demanded to know the ſecrett, which he had intimated, and I mentioned in my laſt to your lordſhip; which was, that Gabor had written that ther was a peace treated in Germany by the conſent of the emperor, and the kyng of Denmarke, the perfection wherof was in his power: and therfore he thought, that this rumor might haſten him to haue an accomodation for him ſelfe in his owne hands, being ſo much offended with the proceeding of the miniſters of this empire, eſpecially for the delay of the inueſtiture of the princeſs, that he had written and giuen him commiſſion to declare, that ſeeing that theſe did not obſerue the capitulations, and ſo much neglect his other ſeruices, that he would prouide for his owne and his peoples libertye; which meſſage he had deliuered: and that the vizier had giuen him a gentle and pacifying anſwere, and promiſed to diſpatch theſe ceremonyes ; but that, as he doubted their falſhood, 1626. ſo the prince and ſtate were highly enraged : intimating as if ther were ſome purpoſe to ſhake off the dependance of this port ; which is but a paſſion : for I know well, that Gabor cannot ſo decline to the emperor, nor truſt him, without apparent ruine ; and that theſe will not ſo far exaſperate him, as to thruſt him into neceſſitye, neyther his ſtates be content to be ſhutt up betweene two potent offended princes. To this diſcourſe I replyed, after generall reprobation of the leuitye, That his majeſtie, the king of Denmarke, nor the States, had not wanted in the performance of any promiſe : That if his maſter had depended more upon the French, then ther was grownd, the error was his owne ; being ſufficiently enformed, that it was the league in the Lowe-countries, wherin he was to truſt : That if the French, Venetian, or Sauoy could be engaged, it was ſo much aduantage ; but if he had his demands accompliſhed from the league, it would be a pitifull anſwere, to excuſe himſelfe upon others, who had promiſed nothing : That his majeſtie had rather preuented payment, then fayled ; becauſe it could not be expected, vntill the prince had affirmed the agreement, and ſent it to the Haghe, which arriued not untill September laſt ; from whence his ambaſſador tranſported him ſelfe into England, with letters of creditt, where all things were concluded and eſtabliſhed, according to his owne propoſitions ; before which, mony was not uſually disborſed ; and therfore his maſter was before-hand in that poynt. Further, hauing ſent count Mansfelt to Venice, to treate new aydes, it was ſtrange impatience and haſt, neyther to attend an anſwere from Quaad, nor the effects of the others negotiation ; but in the coniuncture of their ſeuerall treatyes with mighty princes, to conclude an abortiue peace, without any communication, or reſpect of honor or freinds. Then I acquaynted him, how thoſe treatyes had proceeded, and were perfected ; and that though one ambaſſador was dead, the ambaſſage was liuing, and proſecuted by Sir Iſake Wake. And to all theſe receiuing nothing but ſtiffe and ſterile denyall, we reſolued to write the ſame ſubſtance to Gabor, to complayne to this ſtate, to doe all our endeauor, and leaue the diſpoſition to him, that directeth all the propoſitions of man to his owne unreuealed will and glorye.

MY owne opinion is gouerned by my feares, and experience of that princes nature, that he hath proceeded too far, diſcouraged by the mutabilitye of the Turkes, uncerteyne aſſignation from Chriſtendome, and the rumor of this German treaty, which is too much noyſed here : but yet I am perſwaded, when captain Quaad ſhall returne to him with ſatisfaction, and other aſſurances bee giuen him from the ambaſſadors reſident in Venice, that he is not inconuertible ; for he cannot refuſe mony, nor euer ſafely truſt them whom he hath ſo often offended, and he is up and downe in a moneths warning : neyther is it any wonder in theſe parts to make peace, and breake it 3 or 4 tymes, in as many yeares. But underſtanding that he hath demanded an addition of ten thouſand foote to the army of Mansfelt, it is a counſayle taken betweene themſelues ; and I can blame neyther, if they could obteyne yt. His majeſtie may ſo pay deare to aſſiſt him to conquer Hungary ; but my aymes were to ſet him up in his owne nature and element, by his light horſe to ſpoyle the emperors territoryes, macerare inimicum, to fly up and downe like a fiery meteor, and to uſe him as the Tartars upon Poland: and in that kind he would be of moſt ſeruice. Therfore, if he may be held in action for his owne hopes, and for fourty thouſand dollers a moneth, reckoning 10 to the yeare, as he once agreed, which is leſs then your lordſhip mentioneth ; and for the mayntenance of thoſe troopes, already ſent him entyre, or to be employed in Sileſia, and to be cared for in any peace, I would yet wiſh, that he were maynteyned : for I well know the terror of his armes ſo diſpoſed, and the fires that follow them ; and the name of the Turks, and his neighborhood to Auſtria, will ſooner humble the Imperialls, and reduce them to tearmes of reaſon, then a much greater force, employed in a formall warr, in newtrall countryes. Somewhat I ſhall doe here, upon this little iealouſy and diſcontent begun betweene him and this ſtate : from whence may emerge a feare to loſe him, or a greater feruencye to oblige and aſſure him ; which I will ſhow is no way ſafely to be done, but by nouriſhing him agaynſt the emperor, or at leaſt diſtruſt and diſſention betweene them. Vpon the knowledge of 30000 dollers remitted hither from the States, I ſaw a lettre from Gabor, complayning that he was promiſed more, and full of diſcontent, as if he were neglected and deſerted ;

1627. that he was enforced to accept of that poore ſumme for infinite expence and hazard; but caſting all the burthen upon France, and their miniſters; concluding, Chriſtianus a chriſtianò ſemel poteſt decipi. I will omitt nothing I am able to doe, nor, till I ſee it deſperate, giue ouer my hopes to doe his majeſtie ſeruice; and if he neuer doe more, wee are no looſers by him: for his laſt riſing drew Walſtein out of Germany, and hath quite conſumed his army; the relicques wherof, appearing rather ghoſts then men, are carried in carts to garriſon; which if it had remayned below in ſtrength, at the diſaſter of the braue kyng of Denmarke, it may be doubted, that he had not ſo eaſely riſen, if not enforced wholy to retyre. The treaty with the marqueſs of Baden I haue made uſe of to Gabor in generall, though I thought it not fitt to name him.

I VNDERSTAND his majeſties pleaſure, for my ſucceſſor: it is content enough to me to retyre at home, to be thanckfull to your lordſhip, and to liue in the elyſium and ſhades of his majeſties grace, whoſe feete I humbly kyſs, and reſt

Conſtantinople, 20.
March, 1626.

Your Lordſhips.

I BESEECH your lordſhip to giue my lord duke of Buckingham an abſtract of this cataſtrophe of my buſines, ſuppoſing I ſhall be ſilent, when my theame is worne out of heart.

ARTICULI Pacis inter Cæſarem & Tranſyluaniæ Principem, concluſi Menſe Decemb. 1626.

1. IN fide chriſtiani promittit princeps Tranſyluaniæ, nunquam arma mouere, vel vlla hoſtilitate vti, contra Cæſaream majeſtatem, et domum Auſtriacam, aut eorum ſucceſſores; multo minus gentem armatam in ditiones eorum introducere: inimicis S. majeſtatis non auxiliari, neque cum illis mutuam intelligentiam tenere: contra Hungariæ regnum, aliaſve regiones chriſtianas non machinari; nec Turcas, Tartaros, vel alios regni invaſores prouocare: conſilia pernicioſa contra S. majeſtatem non inire, neque opem ferre, nec aures præſtare precibus et deſiderijs inimicorum eius: ſed potius omnes eorum coniurationes, et ſecreta, quæ ſibi nota fuerint, reuelare: et omni modo ſincerum animum, verè pacis ſtudioſum, et boni publici ſollicitum, demonſtrare et præbere.

2. PRINCEPS inſtanter è ditionibus et ciuitatibus Cæſaris, cum toto exercitu ſuo, exeat. Omnia bona tam fiſcalia, quam ad fideles S. majeſtatis ſubditos ſpectantia, reſtituat.

3. REBELLEM Mansfeldium, et ſimul omnes ſectatores eius, prouinciarum Cæſaris invaſores, a ſe amoueat. Iis nullum auxilium adminiſtret, neque extraneis qualibuſcunque, qui cum Mansfeldio in terras S. majeſtatis ad inſtantiam principis intrauerant; quibus literæ publicæ fidei, vt per viginti, vel triginta ſimul, redire poſſint, concedentur: cum eâ conditione, vt nullo in loco cum inimicis S. Cæſareæ majeſtatis in retroitu ſuo ſe coniungant.

4. CUM neceſſarium pro ſtabilimento pacis ſit, vt incolæ comitatuum et ciuitatum principi, ex conſenſu Cæſaris, durante vitâ, obedientium, fidelitatem S. majeſtati præſtent; ij incolæ homagium faciant (ſaluo corporali ſacramento principi dato) hos articulos inviolabiliter obſeruare; et ſufficientem fidejuſſionem exhibeant, cum literis plenæpotentiæ a principe conceſſis, in primis eorum comitijs vel comitatibus.

5. IN eodem tempore homagij et ſacramenti tranſactionis, præter iuramentum ante vltimum bellum, faciant et hoc ſacramentum ſuper pacta inter comiſſarios Cæſaris et principem.

6. PROCURABIT princeps, vt omnia loca limitanea, a Turcis in hoc ultimo bello occupata, reſtituantur.

7. CAPTIUI ex utraque parte liberabuntur; et qui in captiuitate Turcica manent, eorum libertatem procurabit princeps.

8. OMNES ſubditi S. majeſtatis poſtremò ad ſeruitium principis allecti, aut redacti, ab eorum ſacramento illi dato erunt liberati; et literæ eorum reuerſales, ſi quæ in manibus principis ſint, reddentur.

9. HIS conditionibus a principe confirmatis, omnia alia prius tractata, in primo vigore & ſtatu maneant.

10. Si qua aliqua difficultas exurget, omnia bona fide, et cum quiete a commiſſarijs vtriuſque partis tractabuntur.

11. Omnes qui ante hanc vltimam commotionem principi inſeruierant, abſoluentur, ſecundum pactum et modernam Viennæ tractationem.

12. Omnes comitatuum et ciuitatum incolæ abſoluentur, qui principi inſeruierunt; illis ſolummodo exceptis, qui arma ſpontanea non coactè contra Cæſaream majeſtatem tulerunt: pro quibus tamen poſſit prædictus princeps intercedere apud Cæſaream majeſtatem, excluſis ab illâ interceſſione priuatis illis, qui damna alijs priuatis fecerunt; ſcilicet vt hi poſſint ſecundum leges & ſtatuta regni actionem petere reſtitutionis.

13. Reliqui articuli pacis, tam Nichilsburgi, quam Viennæ concluſi, in priſtino vigore permaneant, quorum nulla hic fit ſpecifica mentio: exceptis ex parte S. majeſtatis triginta mille talerorum ſolutione, et confiniorum curâ, principi conceſſis. Reſtituantur omnia bona fidelium S. majeſtatis a principe Gabriele occupata ab anno 1619. vſque ad hodiernum diem, præter abbatias Replanæ ad ſeminarium Strigonij pertinentes; propter quas princeps quingentos florenos quotannis enumerabit.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

I HAUE neyther will to write, nor matter to mention, of the prince of Tranſyluania: from him hath come no aduice, with his owne agent he hath forborne all correſpondence. That he hath made a peace, I thincke it out of queſtion; but how he will keepe it, or what his meaning hath beene to proceed ſo far, I cannot decyphar, without his owne key, kept in his boſome. Yet I haue not ſate ſtill, but acquaynted the principall miniſters of this empire with the inequalitye of the conditions, the breach of the fayth with us; and, what more nearely concernes them, that this ſodeyne conuerſion and change doth aſmuch threaten them, as diſapoynt his allyes: but they will not underſtand that which they feare to know. But hauing ſhowed them rem ſcriptam, they haue examined his reſident and interpreter, who conſtantly deny all; and I am perſwaded, they know, directly from Gabor, nothing: yet this effect it hath wrought, that though I beleeue, and all theſe ſpeake one language, that they would driue the concluſion to a peace; but, as they profeſs, upon conditions for us, which they cannot obteyne, notwithſtanding they haue begun to be ſencible of the loſs of the freindſhip and dependance of Tranſyluania, and doe utterly diſlike the ſubſtance of the treaty, which they ſay cannot be ratifyed by Gabor, without open defection and treaſon; and therfore haue diſpatched the inueſtiture and ceremonies for confirmation of the princeſs, the delay wherof hath bred this diſcontent and retyring: and as ſoone as that ſhalbe arriued and ſetled, his purpoſes wilbe no longer diſguiſed; but we ſhall know to what party he will encline; and there is left me ſolatium miſeris, ſome glimce of hope, that ſeing he muſt deceiue, the enemye is the fitteſt obiect. Vpon this jealouſy diſtilled into this ſtate, there are new orders written to Morteza baſſa of Buda, and officers ſent to rayſe the frontyre army to march to the defence of the border; ſuſpecting, that ſeeing they are left out in the treatye, that the emperor may take aduantage of Gabors neutralitye: and there is likewiſe ſent an expoſtulatorye letter to him, both agaynſt his haſt, and ſome articles of his concluded peace, which are reproued. It is out of doubt, theſe miniſters generally would ſecure, by a good accord, their confines; and therfore they will ſeeme to treate armed: but if Gabor be faythfull, he may make uſe of the occaſion, to enlardge the breach as wide as he pleaſe. What theſe letters and orders will effect, I cannot judge; but if he proue falſe, your lordſhip may be aſſured, that I will not hide my head for his ſhame. There is another way, by troubling him, and nouriſhing ſuſpition (which is juſt) of him in this ſtate, to force both to returne to their former counſayles: for it is true, theſe can neuer truſt Gabor but as an enemy to the emperor; which hauing beene the foundation of his creditt, muſt be the preſeruation therof. I doubt not to mudd the waters, and to draw ab edente edulium, that Gabor ſhall not ſleepe quiet in his ſubrepted ſecuritye. I will not promiſe much, but my genius doth inſinuate ſomwhat, that the peace of the enemy ſhall not be ſo ſafe, as they deſire to make the world beleeue. This is all I can write, and more then I would, vntill I ſhall heare from him after the returne of captain Quaad, 1627. which wee expect in 20 dayes: and then I ſhalbe free of this womaniſh payne of doubt. If he proue better in effect, then his preſent fame, which your lordſhip ſhall doubtleſs know firſt from himſelfe, yow wilbe pleaſed to remember, non arma ſine ſtipendijs, and the firſt of June, that he may fynd no more ſtarting holes; and ſo, humbly kyſſing your lordſhips hands, I reſt

Conſtantinople, $\frac{5}{15}$.
Aprill, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt obliged humble ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With one to Lord CONWAY, and an Abſtract from Hamburgh.

My Lord,

VPPON the firſt of Aprill, ſtilo novo, I did receaue your lordſhips pacquet of the $\frac{3}{13}$. of February, with many incloſed papers and pacquets; the titles of which I ſhall not neede to repeate, becauſe all did come well conditioned. Your lordſhips pacquets, addreſſed at that time to my lord Conway, Sir Frances Netherſol, and Mr. de Queſtor, were by mee ſent away uppon the 2. of Aprill, ſtilo novo. My lord Conwayes pacquet went with mine, under my couer to his lordſhip: the other two I ſent to Mr. de Queſtor, under my couer to him; Sir Frances Netherſol being in London, and hauing giuen mee order to ſend thither, unto him, any thing that ſhould come for my hands, either for the queen of Bohemia, or himſelfe; alleaging that the waye of London was more ſafe, and altogither as ſpeedy as the direct waye of the Haghe.

Stilo nou. VPPON the 10. of Aprill, I receaued a ſecond pacquet from your lordſhip, dated the $\frac{17}{27}$. of Feb. wherein there were duplicats of your former letters to mee, many papers concerning the prince of Tranſiluania, an open copye or abſtract of part of your lordſhips diſpatch to my lord Conway, and many priuate pacquets to my lord of Canterbury, to my lord viſcount Grandeſon, to the Leuantine company, to Mr. Robert Brainthwayte, and to Mr. de Queſtor, whoſe letter was open without ſeale or couer, but all the reſt well conditioned: ſo that I intend, God willing, to make all theſe up in one couer, and ſend them to Mr. de Queſtor; and to ſend my lord Conwayes, with my pacquet to his lordſhip, the ſame day likewiſe. Your letter, addreſſed to the queen of Bohemia, I muſt be inforced to ſend to Sir Frances Netherſol to London, according to his order aboue ſpecifyed; and it ſhall be accompanyed with a copye of the paper, which your lordſhip doth deſire ſhould be ſent unto hir majeſtie, which is the abſtract of your letter to my lord Conwaye; wherein is contayned a relation of the newe broker ſent to treate a peace for Spayne, and the ouerthrowe of that deſigne by your lordſhips dexterity.

I WAS glad to ſee, that the French ambaſſador did kindle uppon that occaſion; but I feare it will proue un feu de paille, and that he will ſoone returne to his former coldnes. From that nation we muſt expect no good; for the fountaine is corrupt, and therfore the ſtreames muſt neceſſarily be polluted. If they do no hurt, it is as much as may bee expected of them in this age: and perhaps hereafter, when they ſee their error, and wiſer men do enter uppon the adminiſtration of their affayres, they may deceaue the worlde in doing well, which in this conjuncture no body doth expect from them.

HOW I haue proceeded with this ſtate, ſince the receipt of your lordſhips firſt pacquet, of the $\frac{3}{13}$. of February, you will ſee by the abſtract of my diſpatch unto my lord Conway: unto whom I do now giue account of what I haue donne, of the manner of my proceeding, and of the anſwer that I haue receaued. Their noble and worthy bailo hath confirmed unto them all that your lorſhip did write unto mee, for ſo much as doth concerne matter of relation; but whither he hath adjoyned thoſe good offices, which he did promiſe your lordſhip to moue his maſters here, to contribute unto the prince of Tranſiluania, is a doubt that I cannot reſolue. If he did write to that purpoſe, he hath proued vox clamantis in deſerto; for I can aſſure your lordſhip, that here they will not heare of that eare, and do ſtop their eares againſt the uoice of the charmer, charme he neuer ſo wiſely. I did long ſince forſee, that qui deliberant, deſciverunt; and for the diſcharge of my duty and conſcience, I did in January laſt, by an expreſſe ſeruant of mine, write freely, unto my lord Conway, my ſence of their deſertion, and my opinion how they were to be proceeded withall; as your lordſhip will ſee by a copye of that diſpatch, which I ſend likewiſe here incloſed : but, God be thancked, I haue not to this hower had any anſwer ; England being unto mee a paralel with China, for any thing that I can heare from the court : from whence if two diſpatches do come in three yeares, wee may make account, that they do deale uery liberally with us. I did write at the ſame time concerning the count de la Tour, and was an humble ſuitor for a letter from his majeſtie to this ſtate, to lend him for a time unto his majeſtie. This buiſineſſe was, in my opinion, of ſo greate importance, that in truth it was the principall motiue of my ſending an expreſſe at that time. Hauing no anſwer out of England, I am now reſolued to undertake the buiſineſſe, without warrant from my maſter, being required by the king of Denmarke ſo to do ; and as I haue already ſent to call the count hither to mee, ſo, as ſoone as he ſhall arriue, I will goe into the college, and require him of this ſtate without further ceremony : for if I do expect any thing out of England to that purpoſe, the ſeaſon of the yeare will be paſt, and it will proue medicina poſt mortem. I do intend to accompany him with ſome choice perſons, whom I haue debauched, the moſt able men for command that were in all this army, both for foote and horſe ; and theſe hauing agreed with mee underhand, haue already made their owne waye.

CONCERNING the marquis of Baden, I know not what to write to your lordſhip ; in regarde that I haue not hearde, neither from him, nor from my ſecretary there, ſince the 5. of March, two pacquets of theirs hauing miſcarryed ; after which I am now in chace, to recouer them, if it be poſſible. What I haue out of Germany, your lordſhip ſhall ſee by the papers here incloſed ; and this is as much as I can ſay concerning the publique at this preſent.

I DO heare, that Sir Peeter Wytche is uppon the point of ſetting forth, to relieue your lordſhip ; and becauſe I hope that I may haue the honor to ſerue you here, in your returne, I will by way of anticipation, in the name of my wife and my ſelfe, inuite your lordſhip and your noble lady to a poore lodging, which you ſhall finde prouided for you. So, with both our moſt affectionate loue and ſeruice to you both, I reſt Venice, 14. Apr. 1627.

ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

A COPY of Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to my Lord CONWAY.

VPPON the 7. of Aprill, ſtilo nouo, I went into the college to giue vnto this prince le buone feſte di paſqua, according to the ſtile of this place ; which ducty I had beene inforced to omitt at Chriſtmas, by reaſon of my indiſpoſition at that tyme. After I had made an excuſe for my former omiſſion, complyed with the prince, and giuen him an account of the health and proſperity of his majeſtie, and of the queen, I did paſſe an office with him, in fauor of the prince of Tranſiluania, being ſo required by Sir Thomas Roe. My propoſition was of this tenor : Firſt, I did make an ample and true relation vnto him, of the preſent ſtate of affayres in Hungarye, of the conſtancy of Gabor, and the reſolution of the grand ſignor not to proceede in the treaty of peace with the emperor, but rather to aſſiſt Gabor in his diuerſion. The particularityes your lordſhip will find in Sir Thomas Roes diſpatch ; from whom I had my beſt inſtruction for what I had to ſaye in that argument.

SECONDLY, I told this prince, That whereas immediately after my returne out of Piedmont and Heluetia, I had moued this ſtate to concurre with his majeſtie and his friends, in contributing towards the aſſiſtance of the prince of Tranſiluania ; in ſteede of receauing a ſatiſfactory anſwer, which I had long expected, I had now vnderſtood, that they had written from hence vnto ſome of their miniſters abroade, that an ambaſſador (not naming any man) had moued them to contribute vnto the prince of Tranſiluania ; and that they had returned him an anſwer, wherein he did reſt ſatisfyed : That I was the ambaſſador who had made the propoſition, but not the man who did reſt ſatisfyed with their anſwer ; becauſe it was generical, and did conclude nothing : That if they had drawen a falſe concluſion of my conſent out of my ſilence, I would not diſabuſe them by replying againe in that argument ; and giue them ſome reaſons for my hauing forborne this recharge ſo long : firſt, By the 1627. generality of their anſwer, which did not exclude my propoſition, I had reaſon to thinke, that they did rather deſire really to aſſiſt that prince vnderhand, then to publiſh their intention vnto mee, or any other here; and I, who would not be thought to be curious in aliena republica, did take for granted that which I did know they had reaſon to do. Secondly, That at that tyme the ſinceritye of Gabors proceedings was not ſo euedent as hath ſince appeared, both by his actions in Hungary, and negotiations at the Porta, which haue now cancelled all doubts or ſuſpitions, that formerly might haue beene conceaued of his cautelous diſpoſition: and therfore, that knowing now for certaine, that this ſtate hath not hitherto contributed any thing vnto him, nor as yet giuen order to their bailo at Conſtantinople, to ingage them by promiſe; and that they were now well aſſured of the reall intentions and direct proceedings of that prince; they muſt pardon mee, if at this preſent I did vrge this point vppon them with greater ſtrength then formerly I had donne, in regard that his majeſtie, the king of Denmarke, and the States of the Vnited Prouinces, had furniſhed their ſeuerall quote, vppon a preſuppoſition of the concurrency of this ſtate: That none did better know then this ſenate, the important conſequence of that diuerſion: That the contribution required was ſmall, and of no conſideration, in regard of the greatneſſe of this ſtate: That all their former allegations of charge and expence were fallen to the ground, by the peace in the Valtelina, their withdrawing their trouppes from thence, and licenſing their army in Lombardy: and therfore, if they did refuſe now to concurre with his majeſtie and his friends, their backwardneſſe would be interpreted a deſertion of the cauſe, and perhaps produce dangerous effects, both to the publicque, and to their ſtate in particular, which is ſurrounded with a potent enemy, who will queſtionleſſe call them to an account in Italye, as ſoone as he ſhall haue gotten any aduantage in Germany, either by force of armes, or by a treaty of peace. This was the ſubſtance of my propoſition, vnto which I did deſyre to receaue a ſpeedy and categoricall anſwer.

VPPON the 12. of Aprill, I was ſent for to the college, where the ſecretary, according to the cuſtome, did reade vnto mee an anſwer dictated by the ſenate, the copye whereof I ſend your lordſhip here incloſed, in their owne words and language; that you may ſee that theſe ſigniori do as much exceed in ceremonyes, as they come ſhort in ſubſtance. They cannot now alleage, that I am ſatisfyed with their anſwer; becauſe I haue declared the contrary, and told them plainely, That his majeſtie and his friends could not take this monny for payment; and that, if they did not reſolue to contribute their quota, they muſt expect to be importuned againe, as ſoone as I ſhould heare from his majeſtie, or the king of Denmarke, or from the prince of Tranſiluania. In the meane tyme, quod dant accipimus; I know no remedye but patience, and do ſee very little diſpoſition in this ſtate to contribute any thing to the publique, more then faire words and ceremoniall compliments. The prince did inlarge himſelfe in expreſſing his deſire of an accommodation of our differences with France, which did giue mee occaſion to tell him, That as his majeſtie had already yeelded vnto Monſieur de Baſſompierre more then could haue beene expected; ſo, if he ſhould receaue that ſatisfaction from the French king, which was due vnto his ſubjects, who had beene ſtrangely outraged in France, he would not be wanting to correſpond with him, as with a neighbour friend and brother; but if the French did thincke to ſtrapazzare our nation, as they had donne the Griſons, they ſhould find his majeſtie able, with the helpe of God, to protect his ſubjects from forein violence.

ABSTRACT of a Letter from Hambourgh.

I BROUGHT letters from his majeſtie, togither with freſh commiſſions for the leauy of more men, unto Gent Rantzow his majeſties ſtadthalder or lieutenant in the land of Holſtein. The king inſtantly after my diſpatch tooke his journy for Copenhagen, with a purpoſe to returne againe into theſe parts, with as much expedition as is poſſible, after he ſhall giue order for the tranſporting of certaine horſe, and other ſpeciall prouiſions from thence. Wee do expect, his majeſtie will be neare vs againe by the 6. or 7. of Maye, old ſtile. Admitting that the kinges of Denmarke and Sweden ſhould not ſtrech further then 4000 a-piece; yet will there be rayſed a braue armye: for beſides our kings 6 or 7000, the elector of Brandenborgh will furniſh for his quota 2000 at the leaſt (which he promiſed the king of Denmarke at their laſt priuate meeting at Cyelnie); and the reſt of the princes of this Nether Sachſiſh circle haue vndertaken for 6000 for their ſhare; and, laſtly, this French ambaſſador hath promiſed, in the behalfe of his maſter, fiue hundred thouſand pound ſtarling, to be forthwith ſent to the king of Denmarke, for that kings contribution, and furtherance of this action. But of all theſe there are not yet on foote aboue 12 thowſand, and thoſe leauyed only by the king of Denmarke, and at his charge, though he will looke for retribution of what is more then his quota. 1627.

Hambourgh.

Abſtract of a Letter from Sir ISAAC WAKE.

—THIS morning I went into the college, and preſented a petition unto this prince from the count de la Tour, who doth complaine of want of health, and deſire leaue to tranſport himſelfe unto ſome bathes in Germany. This petition is a kind of cifre, which I did open by declaring, That my maſter, togither with the kings of Denmarke and Bohemia, did deſire to ſerue themſelfes of the count for a tyme; and that I had cauſed the petition to be drawen in that forme to auoide all oppoſition, in regarde that his ſerenity ſhall not neede to take notice whither the count is to goe, nor anſwer for any thing that he may do; but onely giue him leaue to abſent himſelfe for a time, and in ſo doing he ſhall oblige three kings, who will bee ready to requite this fauor. How I do ſpeede, you ſhall know by the next, God willing.

THE marquis of Baden doth remayne conſtant, and is gone in perſon to joyne with the king of Denmarke, ſo that I doubt no more of that diuerſion; and my next ſhall tell your lordſhip the ſecreat of that caball. Out of England no letters haue appeared this weeke; and therfore here I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 17. Aprill, 1627. ſtil. nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To the Lords of COUNCIL, with a Declaration of Rights of CONSULAGE.

Right Honorable, my very good Lords,

AFTER ſixe yeares ſeruice, I am very vnwilling to loſe the Leuant company any ground or priuiledge, wherof I found them in poſſeſſion. The bread and ſalt I eate would corrupt, if I did prævaricate, and not take to heart their affayres. But aboue all other reſpects, the honor of our nation, not to be wrought vpon, and rooted inſenſibly vp, enforceth me to continew your lordſhips trouble; whoſe enformation to his maieſtie is only able to redintegrate and reſtore them to that equalitye of trade which hath hitherto beene maynteyned. The queſtion began at Aleppo, of which I gaue your lordſhips ample relation; which being referred to his majeſtie, beſides that loſs, which was about 800 pounds, and in a yeare no anſwere giuen, the ſenate, enterpreting the ſilence to be a ſentence on their part, tooke the aduantage to eſtabliſh it by a decree, to conclude the companye for euer. This is ſent and regiſtred in all the cancellerias in Greece, Syria, and Egipt. To which the French adhæring, (becauſe thoſe nations neede our ſhipping, to preuent us and the Duch, and to driue their trades ſecurely, vnder our protection, at better rates then his majeſties or the States owne ſubiects, who pay the conſolage) they are vnited to pay none; and the controuerſye hath coſt, anew, 15000 dollers in Turkiſh juſtice; which thoſe willingly ſpend, rather to giue it to corrupt judges, then to their friends, that muſt fight for them. Here I haue now diſcouered both the inconvenience and the ſnares of this new law: for, as I enformed your lordſhips in my laſt, certeyne Venetian merchants treated to freight an Engliſh ſhip in this port, and concluded all but the poynt of conſolage. To accomodate the ſubiects on both parts, and to continew good correſpondence, I was content, vpon ſome recompence of freight, which was yeilded vnto, to ouerſee the preſent occaſion; and becauſe the difference yet depended before his majeſtie, to make no demand, ſo as they 1627. would ſeeke no excluſion, that, on neyther part, this example might not be drawne into conſequence, in prejudice of the ſentence and deciſion expected. But when the owners had altered their firſt deſſignes for them, and attended 15 dayes to lade their goods, the baylo would not ſuffer them to proceed, profeſſing his hands were tyed, and ſhowing the decree and prohibition of the pregadi, vnleſs eyther in his office, or ſome other worſe way, the Engliſh would become bound not to pretend any conſolage, nor other acknowledgment; and that ſhe ſhould ſerue as a Venice ſhip; the merchants hauing firſt ſubtilly inſerted into the charter party, vnder the ſhaddow of the bleſſing of their ſayncts, certeyne words of their gonfalone, their flagge, wherby, at diſchardge, the maſter might haue beene troubled for wearing his owne. But not inſiſting vpon this ceremonye, when they ſaw it was diſcouered, yet they remayned obſtinate, not only not to pay at this tyme, for the reſpects mentioned; but that ſome act muſt be done in wrighting, to renounce our right. Whervpon the owners were forced, to their great hinderance, both in tyme, and by the alteration of their voyadge, to make a proteſt of damages, and to ſend their ſhip emptye. The Venetians hoped to compell us by neceſſitye; but I would not ſuffer yt, though the merchants looſe, and know not in what competent court to proſecute their proteſtation, becauſe the baylo is captiuated, and bound to maynteyne their owne lawes. But conſidering that this difference may grow to farther trouble, and that too many precedents will ouerrule, ſeing the ſenate had made other edicts to draw our ſhipping to Venice, and knowing that the owners would be apt to fall into this ſnare, and to bynd themſelues to obteyne employment, eyther for this cytty or Syria, where wee ſhould fall into new diſputes before incompetent judges, I thought my dutye to doe ſomwhat, as much as was in my power, to ſtop the courſe of this diſaduantage, vntill his majeſtie might be fully enformed, and vouchſafe to giue ſentence in the behalfe of his ſubiects, and to ſtrengthen them by his royall authoritye to take their right; eſpecially when all reaſon will, that if ſtrangers ſerue themſelues by us, and enter into our ſhipping, that they be content with the conditions to which the Engliſh are ſubiected. And therfore I haue preſumed, for preuention, to make a contrarye declaration to the Venetian edict, which I haue ſent to Sir Iſake Wake, only to admoniſh the ſubiects of his majeſtie to beware how they entangle themſelues by any contract, to preiudice the right of the Leuant companye; and to juſtifye, that the demand is lawfull, payd, and taken by all nations, vntill thoſe began to remitt the chalendge, when they had no ſhipping of their owne, wherby to prevayle by continuing it. This I will cauſe to be regiſtred in all the ſcales where wee haue conſulls reſident, and humbly beſeech your lordſhips, that it may be veriſyed by your authoritye. I will doe all my endeauour to preſerue our right entyre; and am able, if the contention were equall, par cum pari: but if your lordſhips doe not countenance my proceedings, and his majeſtie avow them, the aduerſarye will haue too much odds, who hath the help and ſupport of their prince and ſtate; and therfore dare doe more, and are able to ſpend more, then I or the companye.

THER will neede no diſpute with his majeſties good allyes, nor can any exception lye, to giue lawes to his owne ſubiects: at one word, all wilbe ſettled, if his majeſtie only pleaſe to declare, That ſtrangers, if they wilbe ſerued by the companyes ſhips within their priuiledges, muſt ſubmitt to their lawes; which if they miſlike, no man enforceeth, nor beggeth their freight: and then to make an act to command all owners and maſters, only to obey the magiſtrates of his majeſtie, and their orders, here, and the rules of their ſocietye, by whom, and at whoſe chardge, they enjoy the liberty and protection of the grand ſignors ports. It is the conſolage that ſupplyeth all expence, which if the company ſhall loſe, both ſtrangers will trade cheaper than they, and ther wilbe no meanes to maynteyne the ambaſſador, conſulls, and dayly preſents; neyther will they be able to leuye it, if his majeſtie be not pleaſed to lay a chardge vpon the maſters of ſhips, that they ſhall not contract, but vpon condition to conforme to the orders of the companye, nor diſchardge the goods of ſtrangers, vntill their miniſters be ſatiſfyed. In the other decrees of the ſenate concerning Zant and Cephalonia, as being extra provinciam meam, I will not preſume to trouble your lordſhips; they are printed, and the intereſſed, I doubt not, will take care of themſelues: but as they are very diſaduantagious to the ſubiect, ſo I conclude, if they be not preuented, the Venetians will draw from vs ten conſolages vnder other titles, and their trade riſe by our fall. To your lordſhips protection I humbly preſent a generall cauſe, and my ſelfe

Conſtantinople, $\frac{19}{29}$.
Aprill, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt obedient ſeruant.

A Declaration made by the Engliſh Ambaſſador, reſident in Conſtantinople; concerning the Right of Conſolage vpon the Goods of Strangers, laden in Engliſh Ships, to be tranſported to or from any Port in the Grand Signors Dominion.

WHERAS certeyne Venetian merchants reſiding in Galata, nere Conſtantinople, did, by their brokar, ſeeke and deſire to freight the good ſhip the Neptune, of London, now riding in the ſame port, for Venice; wherin they did agree with the owners of the ſayd ſhip in all particulars, excepting only the conſolage due to the ambaſſador of his majeſtie of great Brittanye, both by priuiledge, and antient and continued cuſtome; in which poynt the Engliſh owners did offer the ſaid Venetians, according to their firſt agreement, wittneſſed by the ſaid broker, to take vpon them the ſatisfaction of any demand, and to pay whatſoeuer ſhould be required for them, and to ſaue them from all impediment or loſs, at their perill, vpon a valuable conſideration in freight, betweene themſelues, referred to a third perſon; and thervpon, vnderſtanding the contract to be in the ſubſtance compleate, did with the conſent, and for the account, of the ſayd Venice merchants, relinquiſh a former intended voyadge, and bring their ſhip to the vſuall key of lading, attending there to their great loſs and damage, 14 dayes, to receiue their goods according to the true meaning of their agreement: but then, the laders exacting a new article, that the ſaid Engliſh owners ſhould come and appeare in the cancelleria of his excellence the Venice baylo, and there, vpon record, giue ſecuritye, that no ſuch right of conſolage ſhould be demanded, in effect to rayſe a precedent to extinguiſh and renownce the ſayd right, which was not at the firſt mentioned, but only to be therof ſaued harmeleſs by eſpeciall accord; which thing being a mere innouation neuer done nor required in former tymes, and wholy out of the power of the ſaid owners, and in itſelfe vnconformeable to all reaſon, that a ſubiect ſhould be drawne to preiudice the rights and ordinances of his prince, or that a ſtranger hauing neede, and making benefitt of our ſhipping, that they alſo ſhould giue lawes to the owners, ſubiects to his majeſtie, other then according to the cuſtome of freightment: whervpon the Engliſh ſecretarye beeing ſent to his excellencie the baylo, to know the cauſe and ground of this noueltye and cauill, and to deſire, that our merchants might be cleared in the poynt, and eyther the ſhip to be laded according to the firſt propoſitions, to be diſchardged for this tyme, or being diſappoynted, that ſuch reaſonable coſts and damages might be adiudged to them, as, in ſuch caſe, the juſtice of their cauſe did require; his excellencie the baylo did ſhow vnto him a playne and poſitiue decree of the illuſtriſſimi cinque ſauij della mercantia, dated in Venice in September, 1626, expreſly ordering, That no ſhip ſtranger ſhould be laden or freighted by any ſubiect of the ſenate, unleſs, as aforeſayd, the owners and maſters of ſuch ſhips ſhould putt in pledge, eyther in Venice, or in the office of their magiſtrates reſiding in the Leuant, or ſcales of the grand ſignor, where the freightment ſhallbe made; that no duty of conſolage ſhallbe demanded or pretended, as an vniuſt and vndue exaction, which was an implicite prohibition, wherby the agreement was made vtterly voyd, and diſſolued on their parts. In conſideration wherof, and of the great preiudice to the Leuant company, who haue from the firſt incorporation of that ſocietye, enioyed by the grace of his majeſtie, and his royall anceſters, the power and priuiledge to take and leauye conſolage vpon all goods that ſhall enter into the dominion of his majeſtie to be tranſported by the ſhips of the ſayd company; and that ſuch caution nor exception hath neuer beene made or taken in former tymes, nor his majeſties ſubiects beene bound to appear in any other chancerye or office, but of their owne ambaſſadors and protectors within the Leuant ſeas, where any ſuch magiſtrate did reſyde; and for diuers other weighty and important conſiderations, I Sir Thomas Roe, knight, his majeſties ambaſſador reſident at the Ottoman port, hauing receiued full authority to gouern and direct all the affayres of the ſaid companye, and to protect and watch ouer all their rights and 1627. antient priuiledges, haue thought fitt, by this our wrighting, to declare to all his majeſties ſubiects, both merchants, owners and maſters, and to all other who ſhall contract with them, eyther in Venice or in any other port within the Leuant ſea, to freight or hire out their ſhips, to lade or diſchardge in any ſcale of the dominion of the grand ſignor, eyther in Greece, Thrace, Natolia, Syria, Egipt, Barbarye, the iſlands of Cyprus, Rhodes, or the Archepelago, or other port whatſoeuer within the priuiledges of the ſaid companye, that no act, couenant, nor contract, made eyther in Venice, Marcelles, or any other ſcale, to exempt the goods of ſtrangers ſo laden from the duty of conſolage, ſhall be valid, or of any force; but that the goods which ſhall be ſo tranſported in Engliſh ſhips, ſhall pay att all the foreſayd ſcales where they ſhall eyther lade or diſchardge within the aboue deſcribed limitts, all ſuch conſolage, and other antient dutyes, as ſhallbe by his majeſties ambaſſador, or his conſuls, according to vſanſe impoſed vpon them; notwithſtanding any fraudulent, clandeſtine, or open contract made with any to the contrarye. Wee haue alſo further thought fitt, for auoyding of controuerſyes, to admoniſh and comand all ſuch maſters and owners, his majeſties ſubiects, as ſhall trade vnder the protection of the ſaid companye, or in the dominions of the grand ſignor, to refuſe to accept of any lading vpon ſuch diſaduantagious conditions; eſpecially to weare any flagg, banner, or coulors of any nation whatſoeuer, other then St. George, or St. Andrew, as they will anſwere the contrarye, vpon ſuch penaltye as ſhallbe impoſed by his majeſties ambaſſador for ſuch contempt and diſobedience. Laſtly, Wee declare to all to whom this writing ſhallbe ſeene, as well ſtrangers, as ſubiects to his royall majeſtie, that this demand of conſolage is vndoubtedly due, right, and juſt, as beeing taken of all nations mutually, as appeares by diuers ſedes on record; and that whoſoeuer will preuayle vpon the protection of our ſhipping, ſhall exactly pay the dutyes of our owne ſubiects, or it ſhall be leuied or deſtreyned vpon their goods, before they ſhall be at any port diſcharged.

Dated in Conſtantinople, $\frac{4}{14}$.
day of Aprill, anno 1627.

THE coppy of this declaration ſent to the lords, is in Italian, being the ſame ſent to Venice; becauſe I would giue exact account to their lordſhips what I haue done. You may pleaſe to giue them this tranſlation. I haue aduentured, for your ſakes, to preuent the growing euill, which the Venetians would bynd ſafe by a law before his majeſties ſentence. The very Jewes doe now, by the example, refuſe to pay conſolage; and being the grand ſignors ſubiects, plead as much priuiledge as others, eſpecially traders into Venice. You muſt oppoſe ſtrongly. Ther needes no more to be done, but to procure his majeſties letter to Sir Iſake Wake, to vereſye this declaration, and an act of the lords, to authoriſe yow agaynſt the owners and maſters, to bee ſent to the Trinitye-houſe, and there publiſhed.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

WHEN I read the relation of the office done by the Venetian ambaſſador in England to his majeſtie in the name of the ſenate, concerning Caſſein-baſſa, ſent to the gouerment of Tunes, I did expect it would haue concluded in a complaynt agaynſt me, that I did not unite with the other reſidents here, to oppoſe his employment in that chardge: but finding rather an implicite intimation of my retyring, I haue wondered, what ſhould be the end of ſo much ſolemnitye to tythe mynt and comin, and to trouble his majeſtie with tryfles, when there was matter of other concurrences omitted, more profitable for the publicque. Yet, ſeing that thoſe ſignori doe eſteeme that of more importance, (which I thought, with the grand ſignors deniall, had beene ſilenced) and that his majeſtie doth require an account of me, I will preſume to begin from the firſt motion, and accuſe myſelfe, that I did not ioyne with them, and ſubmitt my reaſons to his majeſties gratious judgment. Caſſin baſſa was formerly baſſa of Tunes, in the height of the dominion of the piratts in theſe ſeas; and I thincke then, like all other Turkes, made uſe of his tyme to aduance his eſtate by them; not only conniuing, but employing his owne gallyes in courſe; who did ſome ſpoyle upon the Venetian ſubiects landing in Dalmatia, and taking away both ſlaues and bootye : and it is out of doubt, that he offended all other nations, who had particular greeuances agaynſt him. Vpon his remoue, at the expiration of his regiment, the ſenate complayned here, and procured commands to the new baſſa, and officers to be ſent, expreſly ordering the reſtitution of priſoners, which tooke uery little effect ; and the ſecond proued worſe then the firſt. And ſo this buſines reſted untill the end of the laſt ſummer; when a new captayne baſſa being made, much eſteemed and fauored, a man of extraordinarye power within the court, and yet likely to riſe to the higheſt degree of preferment, he did recommend Caſſein to that chardge, as his antient friend, brought up togither ; and the grand ſignor did inſtantly giue him the gouerment, and paſſed it, before any ſpeech abroad. The Duch ambaſſador was the firſt that roſe agaynſt him, and held a conſultation with the French, and both with the baylo, to oppoſe him ; and ſo they reſolued togither, to uſe all their power to hinder his eſtabliſhment.

THEN they communicated the counſayle with me, and deſired my aſſiſtance. To whom I anſwered, That I would in nothing retyre from good conformitye with them ; but wiſhed them well to aduiſe, whither wee were able to preuayle ; and whither it were diſcretion, to declare an oppoſition agaynſt the captain baſſa, an officer, who, for his authoritye in the ſea, wee might dayly neede, and, for his power with the emperor, wee ſhould be wary to offend, eſpetially hauing relyed upon his fauour agaynſt the Spaniſh treaty, and knowing his reuengfull nature ; and if wee ſhould make the attempt, and fayle, beſides being ſure to haue gotten two enemyes, one in the court, another at Tunes, whither wee did not make too great an aduenture to diſcouer that arcanum, which yet kept us in ſome outward reputation, that ambaſſadors united could doe much ; and too eaſely engage the honor of our princes, who could not be denyed without blemiſh : and then, if we were foyled in ſo ſmall a matter, we had loſt our ſhete anchor, which prouidence ſhould preſerue unwett, for the laſt refuge ; concluding, that it was my opinion abſolutely, that wee ſhould not preuayle. To all which reaſons when they had replyed with confidence, eſpecially the Duch, (for the baylo, a wiſe and wary man, though moſt intereſſed, was only content to make one, and not to refuſe the hazard of other mens creditts, in his quarrell) I did not deny to keepe good company, as I thought, in a weeke cauſe. When wee came to ſpeake of the manner how to addreſs our complaynt and ſuite, they moued, That wee ſhould ioyntly make a petition, to which, for reſpects of ſigning, I refuſed ; but withall propoſed, that euery one ſhould write his owne apart, to expreſs his owne ſenſe and greeuances, and deliuer them togither, which I ſuppoſed, as of greateſt ſhow, would be of moſt force: but the French, ſtill ſeeking aduantage, (which hee can neuer gett) preuayled ſo far, that without farther conſulting me, the Duch, his inſtrument, brought me the petition ready made, and under written by him, in the higheſt place, offering it to me for ſubſcription. Which I tooke in uery ill part, and told him playnly, That his maſters would not preſume to preiudice his maieſtie ; and that this office was full of ingratitude and indiſcretion. I will not trouble your lordſhip with what he is, nor how it hath beene neceſſarye to holde him to fitt tearmes and reſpects ; but I roundly tooke this occaſion to leaue them, and I thincke I ſaued honor, and gott ground of them by it, for our caſes and intereſts were uery different. In few dayes they gaue their petition, and tryed all their ſtrength, and were refuſed peremptorilye. Some of the great miniſters taxed them with a preſumption, to intermedle in the diſpoſition of officers of that qualitye, eſpecially after the grand ſignors declaration, who anſwered, That he could not in honor recall his grant, but that Caſſein ſhould be admoniſhed to carry himſelfe juſtly to all the freinds of the port ; wherin if he fayled, upon complaynt, ſuch remedy ſhould be giuen as was requiſite. For this action they loſt the captain baſſa, who did affront the French and Duch, not uouchſafing to riſe to them, when they uiſited him upon his gallye, their firſt audience ; and ſeuerely perſecuted the baylo, and his ſubiects : ſo that ſome moneths paſſed, before they could returne to any ciuill tearmes or reconciliation with him, which yet is but formall ; and Caſſein baſſa tryumphed ouer them, and departed enraged, and reſolued to doe them all deſpight. Theſe ſtormes I not only auoyded, but being fully aſſured by the cadde-leskar, a great friend to me, that this oppoſition would be offenſiue, and not preuayle, and councelled not to be a partaker, The chief juſtice.

1627. the abſtinence turned euery way to my aduantage. Firſt, the grand ſignor tooke notice of my omiſſion with content and grace. The captain baſſa made inſtantly a friendſhip with me, and acknowledged it, as a reſpect to him, and Caſſein returned me all ſhowes of gratitude. Vpon this occaſion I reſolued pacatis dæmonibus frui, to negotiate warmly, and feruently to ſettle our owne peace at Tunes, eſpecially to procure letters of licence for all our fleetes or men of warr, to come freely into that port, to take water, to buy refreſhing and prouiſions, and to be ſupplyed, for mony, of all ſuch wants as did accompany long voyadges, and that thoſe coaſts did afford. Which were all granted, and to that effect I deliuered the baſſa the grand ſignors commands; and the capten baſſa, in my preſence, gaue him ſtrict order for the due obſeruance; and to the ſame purpoſe wrote to the day of Tunes; and himſelfe, after many curteſyes, preſents, and interuiſits betweene us, did ſweare, and, as I ſuppoſe, cordially, that he would ſhow his gratitude to our nation, who ſhould not only receiue no wrong, but freely diſpoſe of all his power in their fauor. Vpon theſe tearmes he parted with me, in September laſt; and ſince, I haue not heard of his arriuall. What his majeſtie ſhall pleaſe to doe in good correſpondence with his freinds, I ſubmitt unto. I will not giue my word for any Turke; I know they are all falſe: but if wee can expect fayth from any, wee cannot hope to fynd it by exchange; for this baſſa is now rich, hath braue houſes in the citty, and upon the Boſphorus, and being ſo bayted before his departure, wilbe wary how he giue occaſion to be called in queſtion, eſpecially by me, with whom all this citty tooke notice that he made profeſſion of gratefull freindſhip. It is true, that the reſidents declared agaynſt him were touched with a little ſhame, if not with enuye; that leauing me out for a ceremonye, I was afterward the inſtrument of their peace; and ſpeaking with the baylo, this weeke, to know what was the ſenſe of the ſenate in this remonſtrance, whither they yet reſolued to proſecute his reuocation, that I might not diſſent, nor perſwade his majeſtie from any concurrence, which in his wiſedome he embraced, I could diſcouer nothing, but that the ambaſſadors had formerly agreed to giue account to their princes what had paſt, referring it to them to proceed or withdraw. But I fynd ſecrettly, that this purſuit now is not ſo much agaynſt his perſon, whoſe tyme wilbe neare expired, (few during two yeares) before they can arme, and putt their new forces in order agaynſt him; but only to recouer the wound of their owne creditt, and to make up the breach into the publicque reputation, that ambaſſadors ioyned could doe any thing: which opinion and awe I haue deſired to preſerue entyre, but not to trye; and is hereby much diminiſhed: and if they can by generall letters repayre it, I ſhalbe glad to partake the glorye with them: and ſo I referr that conſideration of honor to his majeſties prudence, only ready to obey.

I AM thanckefull to the ſenate and their miniſters, for euerye good office they doe me, and will requite it in effects: of priuat curteſyes I am full; I wiſh they would really correſpond with his majeſtie and the publicque. In communicating aduiſes, I doubt not they wilbe free; but I fynd they are in awe of the French, by the ceremonies of the new baylo here arriued, which he affoords unwillingly; for their hearts burne within them, and yet they ſeeme not to dare to diſcontent that nation: their friendſhip is ſincere for their owne reſpects and benefitt. Your lordſhip pardon me this playnes, I haue no diſcontent, but rather cauſe, in my particular, to aduance the beſt opinion, and ſhalbe glad to nouriſh all good intelligence: but they ſtill ſacrifiſe to themſelues in all their actions, and their ſtate hath that marke deliuered ab antiquo. The contribution to Gabor, for their part, is a trifle, not an enterteynment of a duke of Mantua at Venice, not two good banquetts: yet I could neuer procure any hope therof, anſwered with ſtate reaſons, and warines of future conſequences, and their charge in the Valtoline; but now they are eaſed of that burthen, (though not of the feare) there is ſome hope, if that prince maynteyne his fayth and honor, that they may be drawne to giue, with his majeſtie, a priuate proportion. I haue earneſtly ſollicited this poynt with the old baylo, who being ready to depart, will lardgly enforme the ſenate; and being well affected, though he can promiſe nothing, yet I collect ſome intimation, that his good office may preuayle. I will aduiſe Sir Iſake Wake, with whom I keepe a conſtant and ample correſpondence to my profitt, and acknowledge his fauors, and that I am his ſeruant.

I HAUE

1627.

I HAUE much endeauored to cleare myſelfe concerning Gabor, and haue dealt uery roundly both with the vizier, and his agent, and I fynd beſides their feruent negatiue, by euident demonſtrations, that neyther they, nor Morteſa baſſa of Buda, doe eyther know or beleeue, that he hath concluded a peace; which if he hath done, I ſhall trouble him; for this ſtate doth underſtand it is a playne defection. From him, directly, is come no aduiſe; but a poſt from Morteſa, complayning uehemently, that the Duch gentleman, ſent by the way of Raguſa, mentioned in my letters of the 17. Feb. and 3. March, had any enterteynment here, or was admitted to any audience; that if the grand ſignor had with confidence referred the concluſion of peace or war to Gabor and himſelfe, all other treaty was impertinent and hurtfull, and might produce uncerteynty or contrariety in the reſolution; deſiring that he might be diſmiſſed inſtantly, and ſent to him; becauſe one of the Imperiall commiſſioners, being arriued at Komoran, had aduertiſed that they could not enter into conference untill the returne of this meſſinger. Wherupon the vizier diſpeeded him without any anſwere to the emperor, or other treatyes, admiſſion, audience, or deliuery of his letters; only a ſede for his diſchardge, that he brought, and preſented them; but coming from the countrye of an enemye, they were not accepted. Hee is ſent to Morteſa by a chiaus, and with him an anſwere to the baſſa, which is all his diſpatch; the contents wherof I ſend your lordſhip apart, as I collected them. By the ſame poſt ſignor Tholdolarye, commiſſioner for Gabor, a man well knowne to me, honeſt and ſincere, did write to the Tranſyluanian agent here, only in conformitye of that letter of the baſſa of Buda to the vizier, ſignifying, that he was ſent by the prince to reſide there, to attend and aſſiſt in thoſe treatyes. Theſe letters my ſecretary hath read, and therin is no fraud; by which wee collect aſſuredly, that if Gabor hath made this peace, (which wee receiue confirmed from Vienna) he doth deceiue, and conceale it from this ſtate, and his owne reſident, by theſe arts. Certeyne it is, that he doth aſſiſt in a treaty betweene the emperor and the Turke, but to what end is an abiſſus; whither to promoue, or ſubtilly to breake it, there are forceable reaſons both wayes; and, not to deceiue our ſelues, if this ſtate be not deceiued by him, they doe ſeeke and ayme at peace, though formally they reſtrayne the commiſſion to a reſpect of the grand ſignors friends, of which Gabor may make his aduantage, if he mean fayth conſtantly; for I pronounce firmely, the concluſion doth reſt in his power and breaſt. Wee haue reſolued to putt him to a full tryall, and I haue made him know that I haue letters of aduice, though no bills nor abſolute order, for a great ſumme in June; which doth much affect his miniſters, and though the generall uoyce proclayme peace, (whither it be made or no) many doe beleeue, and I hope, that Gabor hath other purpoſes, and will ſhow the Germans un tiro del ſuo arco. To this end I haue appoynted a meeting the next day after this diſpatch with his agent; purpoſing to ſend away a currier to preuent theſe letters, and the arriuall of the Duch gentleman; from whoſe expedition nothing can be collected, but that theſe know nothing of peace, but continew conſtant to referr all to the prince and Morteſa; promiſing to aſſiſt them, if they chooſe war, but rather counſelling a ſafe peace, as the incloſed minuts of thoſe letters will faythfully wittnes. I confeſs this kynd of proceeding of Gabor is as dangerous and ſuſpitious to friends as enemyes; but no man can alter nature, and the beſt artiſt muſt woorke according to the propertye of his inſtrument. If he bee true, and maynteyned, he is worth the price agreed for. Therfore, if his majeſtie reſolue to giue mee order for the mony, that the want be no new cauſe of breach or diſcontent, I will diſpoſe it at diſcretion, as I ſee he doth actually proceed. There can be no loſs in letters of creditt, and with this hope there is hope to feede and preſerue him.

A FEW dayes paſt, arriued a poſt from the baſſa of Cayro, ſignifying of the reuolt of Gemen in Arabia, under a pretending prince, whom they call an ayman, or prieſt: that he hath ouerrunne the countrye, and beſeeged the baſſa in the principle cytty. To whoſe releefe the baſſa of Cayro hath ſent by Suachin in the Red-ſea 3000 ſoldiers; but aduiſeth, that if more ſuccors be not ſupplyed, that the holy countrye wilbe loſt. This hath cauſed frequent councells, and doth much trouble the ſtate; eſpetially for Mecca, Medina, and the deuotion to their prophett. Particulars wee know none, but that he is maſter of the feild, and rayſed by the kyng of Perſia, who makes great preparation to renew the war. The great vizier is arriued at 1627. Aleppo, but complaynes for men, munition, and mony. To rayſe the firſt, the viziers are ſent abroad, one to Greece, another to Natolia, a third to Tartarye, others to other places, and this citty is left deſolate: munition is aduentered by ſea to Scanderone, and mony extorted per fas et nefas, or drawne from rich ſubiects precario, to concurre to aſſiſt in the publicque want. This yeare the fortune of this empire wilbe tryed and diſcouered, which now labours under infinite neceſſityes. The ſoldiers make ſhow to goe cheerfully, but many doubt the euent of ſo manifold troubles. This is the ſubſtance of our occurrents, which ſerue not well to other coniunctures.

I THANCKE your lordſhip for your fauour to my returne. His majeſtie will fynd in his ſeruice no want of me: his election of my ſucceſſor will encouradg and enable him, and I muſt thincke his ſufficiencye only hath preferred him before others of great and approued meritt. Expecting that bleſſed hower, I committ your lordſhip to the wholy keeping of our gratious God, humbly reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, 21. Aprill,
old ſtile, 1627.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

I HAUE no cauſe to ſuſpect any diſcurteſye in the baylo, who hath ſeemed uery willing to concurr, as in opinion, ſo in all offices to aduance the publike ſeruice: and my letters to your lordſhip, ſince I had knowledge of your returne, being recommended, and, as he profeſſeth, encloſed in the ſenates packett, cannot without them miſcarry. What I haue in thoſe written concerning Gabor, hath beene upon conference, and conformitye with him, ſo that wee muſt ſeeke at the office of deliuerye for ſuch impediment as ſhall be diſcouered. This enquirye will cleare the doubt. Before your lordſhips arriuall I did ſeldome fayle yow any diſpatch, which is certeyne euery 14 dayes; but Mr. Wilkinſon, I thincke, neuer. To him my laſt was the 3. January, with one encloſed to count Mansfelt, which I ſuſpect is loſt, hauing tyme enough. I began a conſtant courſe with your lordſhip the 17. January, ſince when I haue neuer omitted; and yow ſhould haue thoſe in the margen, and their duplicates; with which I ſent diuers coppyes of letters, and anſweres from the prince of Tranſyluania and others, and whatſoeuer elſe I thought might contribute any light, eyther to the eſtate of the affayres of Hungarye, or of our proceedings. Though late, I hope they are arriued; obſeruing, that this winter hath kept your lordſhips from Venice commonly 50 dayes. I haue beene long attentiue upon the concluſion of the treatye for the Valteline, and now your lordſhips hath reſolued mee: I was afrayd to gueſs at it. France hath forgott the great error of Lewis the twelfth, to looſe the Swiſſe, whom he was forced to redeeme with double mony. God knowes his owne purpoſe in the change of ſtates; but, in all humane underſtanding, this uſurped power ouer the right of the Griſons wilbe the ſeede of a greater war betweene thoſe crownes: for it is probable, that the Spaniard hath wholy aymed to ſeminate a hatred betweene the French and thoſe people, (that loue, aboue their liues, their liberty) and when it is growne ripe, to uſe it agaynſt them. Cavendum imprimis, ne magna injuria fias fortibus et miſeris: tollas licet omne quod uſque eſt, auri et argenti, ſcutum gladiumque relinques.

17. Jan.
3. Feb.
17. Feb.
3. Mar.
19. Mar.
5. Apr.
old ſtile.

Receiued from your lordſhip.
18 Nou.
3. Dec.
22. Dec.
13 Jan.
2. Feb.
19. Feb.
2. Mar.
new ſtile.

THE new baylo hath had his audience, the old ready for his returne. His firſt ceremonyes are receiued. I fynd him a diſcreet gentleman, but awed by ſome reſpects to the French. Theſe ſig^{ri}. alway ſacrifiſe to themſelues, and doe not correſpond in their complements, but I know not how to mend my ſelfe, loth to diſturbe the publicque. Wherin they concurre, I will not ſee: they flatter him whom they hate.

THE poore arch biſhop of Smyrna is in deſperation, hauing heard nothing of his ſuite, but that his letters are deliuered to the prince cardenall, and that he is departed Rome. Your lordſhip ſhall doe me a ſingular reputation to renew and procure the grant, or at leaſt to enforme me what is or may be done. The baylo fauours him: but the French, who profeſſeth himſelfe the popes nuntio, and would engroſe all authoritye, malitiouſly perſecuteth him. He hath ſent fedes, and is for his life irreproueable. ——

[The intermediate Matter of this Letter is omitted, being already inſerted.]

IF Gabor proue better then his fame, I doubt not but the ſenate will now contribute priuatly with his majeſtie toward the chardge; for they haue no more excuſe (but their future feares) of the Valteline; and their miniſters ſeeme much to affect the diuerſion of Gabor, for it will buſy both their enemyes, Auſtria and Turkye. To this purpoſe I haue ſeriouſly negotiated with both bayloes, and the old hath giuen me much hope, that he will doe effectuall offices with the ſenate. Of this generall your lordſhip may freely challenge him, though he would neuer be engaged in the expreſs promiſe of mony. He is a ſtiffe and firme man in his opinions, but uery ſolid in judgement, and hath paſſed frendly with me, which I deſire your lordſhip to acknowledge; and I doubt not he will confeſs, I haue done him and the ſenate particular ſeruice.

NOTWITHSTANDING all good concurrence and friendſhip, my duty in my chardge, and the protection of my merchants, and their antient priuiledges, is aboue all priuat reſpects; and therin I am enforced to complayne both of the ſenate and the baylo; who, not content to breake into our rights at Aleppo, (and that particular referred to his majeſtie, whoſe multitude of buſines hath not permitted his deſcent to ſo low matters) hauing taken aduantage of the ſilence, and interpreted it as a ſentence on their part, haue made a decree to conclude the company for euer, and perhaps themſelues, from the comoditye of our ſhipping; for they ſtrike at the roote of our trade; eſpecially diſcouering, that they hope to draw our ſhipping to Venice by feigned curteſyes, or by a rodd, that wee ſhall not lade at Zant nor Zephalonia, unles wee diſchardge at their citty, or pay a new impoſt of 5 dollers in the 1000 for currents; ſo that the dacio of the ſenate is more then the comoditye. Thus they ſeeke to ouer-reach us, and eate us out of trade. But I haue largely enformed the lords, and referred it to their wiſedome: for euery diſaduantage to the ſubiect in trade is a conſumption of the ſtate. In the meane tyme, to preuent more unkynd diſputes before infidelis, and to defend ourſelues, hauing fallen upon a new contraſt here about the lading an Engliſh ſhip; wherin I was willing to conniue, to accomodate the ſubiects mutually, ſo that no act might be donne, nor conſequence drawne to preiudice our right, or his majeſties ſentence. But when I ſaw that the ſenate had ordered, or prohibited their ſubiects, unleſs the ſtranger did giue pledge to demand no conſolage, not to lade, and therby ſought to eſtabliſh their act by our owne conſent; as the baylo would not permitt the one, I forbad the other: and ſo the merchants, both loſers, proteſt one agaynſt the other, and I haue thought it tyme to make ſome fayre oppoſition, by the encloſed declaration; of which I haue giuen account to the lords of his majeſties councell, and humbly beſought their uerification. And knowing your lordſhips fauour to me, whoſe creditt is engaged; and your propenſneſs to defend your countrimen; I preſume to recommend it to yow for the warning of all Engliſh, that perhaps may enſnare themſelues by a contract in our preiudice, and to make ſuch other uſe therof for the aduantage of the Leuant companye, as ſhall ſeeme fitt to your wiſedome, in opoſition of the decree of the pregadi, untill his majeſtie ſhall uouchſafe his deciſion of this controuerſye. The whole matter, and my ſcope and purpoſe, will beſt appeare to your lordſhip by the coppy of my letters to the lords, the declaration itſelfe, and the proteſt of our factors damnifyed, to which I referr yow. I am ſorry to giue your lordſhip this trouble; but if it were not more, I would make the generall loſs to the trade of England appeare euidently, and the interruption of the good correſpondence, and mutuall helpes, which ſhould be continued betweene both ſtates, and to which I will alway, to my power, aſſiſt. ——

I MUST not omitt to acknowledge your lordſhips fauour expreſſed to me by my lord Conwey: and if any thing aboue your owne vertues could oblige me farther, I would ſtriue to expreſs my ſelfe aboue abilitye to be, &c.

Conſtantinople, 21. Aprill,
old ſtile, 1627.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

MY laſt unto your lordſhip were of the 14th and 17th of Aprill, ſtilo nouo, which did part both at once, although they were ſent at ſeuerall dayes to the officio della bolla. The firſt wanted his date, but the error was corrected in the ſecond. A fregate hath departed ſince that time, whereof I had no knowledge, by reaſon of my abſence from this towne, I hauing made a uoyage to Padoua, under 1627. the pretence of meeting with Mr. Walter Montagu, who had no intention to come thither, but did deſire mee to couer an other uoyage of his with that cloke. Three letters I haue receaued from your lordſhip ſince I did laſt write unto you, and they are dated the $\frac{3}{13}$. $\frac{19}{29}$. of March, and $\frac{5}{15}$. of Aprill, of which the laſt did come to my hands this day.

I HAUE had much adoe to ſet the count de la Tour at liberty, who was kept in ſeruitude here with a noble title of generale delle arme della republica, and tyed with a golden chayne of 6000 crowns penſion per annum. The ſtate did refuſe him unto mee at the firſt, alleaging, that they could not permit him to ſerue any other prince, as long as he had the character of being their generall: whereuppon I was inforced to deſpoyle him of his character, and to renownce his penſion, and to take uiolently that which they would not giue mee courteouſly. Vppon theſe tearmes he departed from Breſcia uppon the 6th of May, ſtilo novo, accompanyed with many good words from the ſtate, and preſented with 3000 ducats. By this time I hope he is at Geneua, and I pray God ſend him a good uoyage.

THE marquis of Baden is with the king of Denmarke already, or not farre from him; and I hope that ſhortly wee ſhall heare ſome good newes of him. I am now going to meete with the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, brother-in-lawe unto the king of Denmarke, and, as I thinck, vncle unto the princeſſe of Tranſiluania; for I am ſure he was brother unto the deceaſed marquis of Seckendorf, and unto the late elector of Brandebourg. This prince hath his addreſſe unto mee, and I am to ſend him firſt to the prince of Tranſiluania; and from thence he is to goe into Sileſia to haue the command of that army, which is ſayde to conſiſt of 20000 men. He was formerly lieutenant general unto the king of Denmarke: and hauing now deſired to be general of this other army, in the place of the duke of Waimar, deceaſed, the king hath gratifyed him therewithall; the rather, (as he doth write unto me) becauſe he doth ſuppoſe, that ſo neare a kinſman will be moſt welcome unto the prince of Tranſiluania; uppon whoſe ſincerity that king doth ſo much relye, that I do yet hope well of him, notwithſtanding that your lordſhips two laſt letters haue uery much diſcredited him. Colonel Morgan hath the charge which this prince had in the army of the king, and doth command all the infantery. Hee did arriue with 2440 men onely, but they were braue men; and 4000 more of our nation are imbarqued to fill up his number. 9000 Scots are dayly expected in three regiments under the command of the earle of Nidiſdal, alias lord Maxwell, a kinſman of my lord of Buckingham. The army of the king, three weekes ſince, did conſiſt of 16000 foote and 9000 horſe: beſides the Engliſh and Scots, which are already leauyed for his ſeruice, he doth expect 3000 French conducted by the count de la Val, and 2000 more of that nation brought by the earle of Montgommery. Yeſterday I preſented my ſelfe in the college as ambaſſador for that king, who hath ſent mee credentiall letters, which were then read and admitted. Our miſunderſtandings with France do increaſe, and a rupture will inſue uery ſpeedily, if the blowe be not giuen already. All your pacquets for England and the Haghe haue had due ricapito: and here incloſed, your lordſhip ſhall receaue one out of England, which did come to my hands yeſterday. This is all I can remember, at this preſent, worthy your lordſhips knowledge; and therfore I will here take leaue, and euer reſt

Venice, 22. May,
1627, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate frend, and humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

ALL intentions being wholy bent upon the prouiſions of the war of Aſya, and nothing come from Morteſa baſſa, nor the prince of Tranſyluania, ſince my laſt letters, I rather contineẃ cuſtome and the oblation of dutye, then matter fitt for your lordſhips trouble. By this uacancye and calmenes of ſpiritt, miſled by no rumor, I haue had the leaſure to contemplate upon many circumſtances; and doe miſtruſt more out of Gabors ſilence, and retiring from any correſpondence, not only with friends, but with this ſtate, and his owne agent, then any report which arriſeth from the enemy. The vizier remayneth conſtant, that there is nothing tranſacted, nor that any peace ſhalbe concluded without the comprehenſion of the princes allyes, and the liberty of Germany. But I ſee a generall inclination to the contrarye, 1627. though yt doth abſolutely reſt in the will of Gabor, to whom the reſolution is ſo referred, that he is able both to ſatisfye the coldeſt of theſe miniſters of a neceſſity or conueniency aboue their judgment, and to continew the war at his owne pleaſure: wherin if he fayle, he is left without any excuſe. I haue done all in my power, untill wee heare directly from him: and if all others, that made ſhow of the ſame affections, had proceeded ſquarely, I am perſwaded, wee had not now beene tortured with doubt. Whither by order from France, or rather out of dependance of the pope, or the counſell of the cardinalls, with whom the French ambaſſador holds as ſtrickt intelligence, as with his owne maſter, as by them maynteyned in this chardge, wee haue diſcouered, that he hath done ill offices; and not only deceiued and diſcontented Gabor, who in all his letters proteſts agaynſt him, and fynds that his beſt refuge; but that he hath laboured the renewing peace with the emperor, with the miniſters of this ſtate, working eaſely upon their preſent weakneſs. For lately upon an occaſion of his iealouſyes in his Romiſh affayres, wherof he takes protection as nuncio, building new monarchyes of ſtraw and ſtubble, hauing proceeded ſo far, as to attempt to bring in a ſuffraganeo apoſtolico to reſyde here, to create new biſhops in euery corner, and to oppreſs the Greeke church; and ſuppoſing that I oppoſed him in all, he brake into paſſion with the vizier, that he knew the baylo and I hated and croſſed him, only becauſe he had done good ſeruice to the grand ſignor, by endeauoring to reconcile the emperour, and to preſerue peace, moſt neceſſary for this ſtate, during the troubles of Aſya. This raſh and inuidious accuſation hath made us know, that he hath proceeded doubly in the buſines, if not with his owne prince. This aduice is ſo much a ſecrett, that your lordſhip wilbe pleaſed to make ſuch uſe of it, that it returne not agayne hither, which will diſſolue my court intelligence; and if his majeſtie thincke fitt to take notice of it, he may eaſely deriue it from the miniſters of the ſenate, both the old and new reſident, and the patriarch, being ſufficient wittneſſes. Wee expect dayly a meſſinger from Gabor, which will giue me better occaſion to enterrupt your lordſhip, for which I now craue pardon, and reſt

Conſtantinople, $\frac{5}{15}$.
May, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

IN your lordſhips letter of the 23. February, I receiued a jewell, the comfort of his majeſties gratious fauour. Princes, by accepting ſmall ſeruices, reward them; and the beſt ſubiects are but like flyes, they liue benummed, unleſs the ſunne ſhine upon them. This honor I acknowledge (without diminiſhing his majeſties bountye) to your lordſhips good offices done me your unworthy ſeruant: for mediation betweene high and low things detract not from the glory of the one, nor the gratitude of the other; and I humbly beſeech yow to accept me, ſuch as I am, your lordſhips moſt thanckefull ſeruant.

FROM the prince of Tranſyluania wee haue not heard in 3 moneths, and then nothing but complaynts agaynſt this ſtate of neglect of him, as my former letters haue mentioned. The cauſe of this retyring, wee know to be diſdayne of the delay of his ladyes inueſtiture; which being promiſed the laſt yeare, was long attended to be receiued with ceremony on the frontyre: which not appearing, he tooke himſelfe ſcorned. But now, 20 dayes ſince, it is ſent away with uſuall ſolemnitye, and a poſt diſpatched before, to pacifye and prepare him; ſo that wee hope he will recouer this ſullen fitt, and that wee ſhall ſuddenly know his purpoſes. His agent was with me on Whitſunday, ſtill proteſting that he did not beleeue the haſt, or that ſuch conditions of peace diuulged, could not be kept. He told me, he had written the prince playnly how his honor was here queſtioned; and that I, who had beene, and was yet his friend, would not conteyne what they know I know, and would be dangerous for this ſtate to know of him, if he made ſo unſeaſonable an agreement, as was by the Imperialls reported; wherby he had broken his fayth with his majeſtie, the kyng of Denmarke, and all his allyes, and gotten no creditt, nor aſſurance of fayth from any other: for the emperors agent, (to what end is not hard to penetrate) in the publiſhing of this treaty, (which, if it were ſincere on their part, he ought to nouriſh) doth on the contrarye cunningly accuſe Gabor to theſe miniſters, that he hath

1627. hath bound himſelfe to be friend to the friends, and enemy to the enemyes of the houſe of Auſtria. This is taken ill on all parts. The vizier complaynes of it as a rebellion; and the Tranſyluanian agent, that it is malitiouſly ſpread, and without truth, to ſowe diſſention and ſuſpition, and to ſeperate his maſter from the protection of the port. The matter hath beene ſharply expoſtulated betweene both reſidents; and this of Gabor hath enformed the prince, who, we hope, may from theſe offices collect the malignitye of his new friends, that ſeeke his deſtruction by cloſe practices, which they cannot obteyne by armes. Hee hath alſo aduiſed him of an intimation of mony expected here from his majeſtie in June next, which is the radicall motiue: and I was willing to make uſe of that inſtigation without a direct engagement. And now receiuing your lordſhips order by letter, to confirme and excite him to the obſeruance of his promiſes, I ſhall not without bluſhing repeate the ſame things, when I hoped to haue graced all with the aſſurance of ſome aſſignation; and though there be doubt of his wayes, yet in letters of creditt there had beene no loſs: I would not haue parted with mony without good effects; and in the delay, if he require payment, there may be as much danger as his friendſhip is worth. I haue not ſpared ſuch coyne as I haue, letters, reaſons, arguments of honor, profitt and neceſſitye, ſeruices, promiſes, threats, all I can doe; but if there follow no realls, I ſhall loſe my creditt with my breath. With princes of nearer allyance, and more mixed intereſt, it would be difficult to ſpinne them out with ſpetious titles. Gabor uſeth the name of liberty, as it hath reference to the ætas aurea: hee muſt be payd, like a Swizze or Janizary, euery two moneths, or hee will mutine, and beleeue no man, nor other rhetoricque, but his ſenſe of feeling. Duty to his majeſtie enforceth me to this playnes: fayre words will not paſs current with him; but if he touch mony, there is no doubt he will breake with the emperor to morrow, if he made peace with him yeſterday. Sir Iſake Wake heapes upon me obligations, enformes and inſtructs me of all occurrences and negotiations for his majeſties ſeruice, or myne owne benefitt. I underſtand how cauteloully the ſenate fences, and will doe nothing till their owne neceſſitye enforceth them, which is alway a courſe of diſaduantage: they take no care of oltramontani; Italy is their miſtris, whoſe peace only they court, and thincke it gayne to putt off and deferre. *Sig*r. Juſtiniano, late baylo, newly departed, hauing in himſelfe good affections, hath promiſed me to doe correſpondent offices; and hee knowes the eſtate of affayres, and neceſſity of Gabors diuerſion, and they may truſt their owne miniſter: yet I cannot meaſure the latitude of his engagement; for all theſe ſeanators ſeeme to haue one ſenſe, as if one ſoule did moue them; and giue generalityes ſo handſomly, that they muſt paſs; particulars they decline, eſpetially any ſpeech of mony; and doe alway penatibus immolare. I haue uſed my beſt oratorye to the new reſident, and pleaded eaſe and neceſſitye of this contribution; who, appearing a round and ſincere man, doth promiſe his voto in their reſerued ſtile. But his majeſtie may preuayle by one word from his owne mouth to their ambaſſadors in England, his preſence and authoritye being powrefull aboue all ſubordinate practices, which they eſteeme officious rather then efficacious. A ſound declaration would awaken them to thincke of future tymes, and to apply the condition of other eſtates to their owne. Hodie mihi, cras tibi; and it were profittable rather to know the worſt, then by deferring to be ſure to draw it upon us. I know I am ſtrayed out of my region; but your lordſhips fauour, and myne owne conſcience, doth aſſure me.

I DARE not coniecture at Gabor, hauing no intelligence: but a Spahee from Buda doth report, that duke Weymor in Sileſia hath ioyned his forces with the remaynes of Mansfelts army, and giuen ſome blowes to the Emperialls; that the prince doth arme, and will ſuddenly ioyne with him: and with theſe rumors and hopes wee, like cameleons, feede ourſelues.

I ATTEND earneſtly to know ſomwhat from the founteyne, and will renew my exhortations to the prince to reguard his owne honor, and apprehend all occaſions, while I expect my releefe to ſerue his majeſtie. And ſo I conclude your lordſhips trouble, deſiring yow to keepe me in your protection, as Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$.

May, 1627.

Your Lordſhips ſincerely deuoted ſeruant.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

AFTER a long and almoſt diſpayrefull ſearch of marbles, hidden in the ground, I haue fallen vpon a courſe, which, I hope, will fullfill your graces expectation, and pleade my humble affections and induſtrye to doe you ſome ſeruice. About 4 moneths ſince, as I then aduiſed, I ſent a ſeruant well furniſhed with meanes and authoritye to trauell Morea; who hath found, as he enformes mee, ſome rare peices: one whole ſtatue, 8 foote high, not much defaced; another wanting the head, in the old famous Corynth; and theſe embarked for Zant, to be there laden for England. He hath digged to two more, then vpon price, and I doubt not to haue them. A braue head, ſuppoſed of Lucius Mummius. I wiſh they may anſwere his prayſes: at leaſt, the place will giue them ſome eſtimation. From thence he went to Athens; where whatſoeuer is to be had aboue or vnder ground, willbe procured for him. From Zea, an iſland in the Arches, I heard laſt from him, arriued there to ſhip away two ſtatues, long ſince bought by mee, wanting the heads; one wherof is ſent to my lord of Arundell. There are more to be gotten, if any art can take them downe. He is now returning to Corynth, to fetch thoſe that were at his departure buried, and a great vrne of braue releuo, if poſſible to carry yt, and a pillar with a garland, inſcribed Pallade; and many other raretyes. He proceedes to Lacedemon, to the antient Sparta, where I heare of ſeauen more, and hope to poſſeſs them. From Andros I haue receiued, at Scio, a great releuo of Bacchus; which, vpon report, hath coſt mee deare, being obteyned by fauour of the bey of that iſland, and mined for vnder an old foundation; but the face is battered, the feete and one hand broken off: the reſt is fayre and ſtatelye. From many other places, and ſundrye agents, I expect diuers others things, which yet I haue not ſeene; and muſt be contented to take bad with good, from thoſe that, hauing no skill, yet ſpend my mony to employ themſelues. I am this day ſending a drogaman, and Janitzarie, with an Italian to Bruſſia, the antient metropolis of Bythinia, where, I am enformed, are many marbles; and I attend a returne from Sinope on the Black-ſea, in Amaſia. Thus your grace will approue my dilligence, and accept the ſucceſs according to your owne benignitye. The difficultye of carriage, and engines, and expence, is great, and the danger among theſe remote habitations greater, ſome ſtones weighing aboue 20 hundred, and brought by hand to the water: yet your grace ſhall haue no cauſe to repent the charge; for I hope to make you a noble collection.

IF you pleaſe to continew this ſearch, there willbe found dayly many rare matters, the poore people being ſett on worke, in hope of gayne, and all theſe parts full of the enquirye made by me and Mr. Petty: all aboue ground being gone to Venice, wee muſt truſt, like miners, to chance; but I fynd, that the old chriſtians, to preuent the enuye of the Turkes, did in all Greece, and the iſlands, burye theire antiquityes, which tyme and dilligence will diſcouer. Your grace willbe pleaſed to ſend me herein your farther directions, and to accept my poore man, who hath vndergone infinite paynes and perill, and is now well practiſed both in the countrye and with the inhabitants, and hath ſufficient language, and indefatigable induſtrye, for this employment, not eaſely matched. His hopes are, that ſeeing I cannot reward him, that your grace, which is his ambition, will take him for your ſeruant; which I ſhall humbly acknowledge as an high fauour, that I haue beene able to doe one man good.

BY his maieſties grace, I expect ſpeedely my ſucceſſor, whom I will leaue in purſuite of this buſines, according to your graces order; for it is a worke of patience and tyme, and I am now in the right way. The affayres of Hungarye are aſleepe, or in their wane: wee hope better then we can judge of Gabor. Your grace will vouchſafe to receiue thoſe relations of my lord Conwey; and being comforted and aſſured that your grace hath taken mee, as one of yours, I ſhall returne the moſt joyfull man liuing, to be employed as, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$.
May, 1627.

1627.

To Sir MAURICE BERKELEY.

SIR,

I HAUE receiued from yow ſome letters, the laſt yeare, of very old dates: but being a new maried man, yow haue an excuſe for all things. I wiſh yow joye and hapines, and to your ladye all the contentments ſhe can propoſe to her owne heart.

I LOOKE ſo narrowly for my returne, that I expect not to heare from yow, nor to write againe: yet I feare a flight in winter, though his majeſtie hath promiſed my preſent reuocation.

NEWES I haue none, that concernes yow, either in profitt or pleaſure, my buſines only being the effects of my loue towards yow, which makes me not able to containe to tell yow, that I heare yow are like to be one of the contumacious. I well know, that your thoughts are honeſtly grounded with reſpect of right, and the auntient lawes of the kingdome, to giue by parliament. But yet take councell of me, nouriſh not a ſpiritt of contradiction, but rather curbe it. Wee are by nature prone enough to liberty, and euery ſuggeſtion of that ſhould be ſuſpected to vs. I concurre with yow, that new courſes ſhould not be taken: but when wee ſee, that the old, by ſome ill genius, or darnell, and tares ſowed by the enemye, hath not taken wiſhed and neceſſarye effects, wee muſt not too ſtrictly bynd ourſelues to rules, but obey occaſion, and vſe the preſent with moderation. Dauid tooke the ſhew bread in extreametye; the law giues leaue to build a fort vpon my ground in caſe of publicque danger, and to pull downe my houſe in a generall fire. Such, beleeue me, is the neceſſitye of the ſtate: it muſt not want, nor be expoſed to perill, becauſe either a parliament cannot haue their will of their king, or the king of them. Truſt me, I know the wounds of diſreputation by want, and the miſcarriage of all our deſignes by ſlownes, and mean prouiſions, the fruits of the ſcarcitye of monye. I know what it is not fitt to ſpeak, much leſſe to write. I doe not herein concurre, as a courtier, for any ends but truth. Yow cannot ſee all, that only looke upon our owne lawes, which in neceſſitie giue place, by the ſame reaſon that lawes are builded on. Take heed in your youth of getting a marke and name of opoſition, and to ſell your iudgment for popularitie: theſe are fumes, and I haue gotten aboue them into a clearer ayre; and yet I know my ſelfe as honeſt to the common-wealth, as all the hott braynes that court her peruerſly, and to her defamation. I conclude, the whole muſt be mainteyned ſound abroad, and the members are made for the bodye. There is a meane, which is the ſoule of wiſdome, not to digg downe the foundation, which are the lawes, nor to breake downe the walls to lett in the enemye to doe it, for want of fitt ſupplyes. Nam ſæpe honeſtas rerum cauſas, ni judicium adhibeas, pernicioſi exitus conſequuntur. It were better to giue in parlament: but if wee are bound to beare a ſtorme too much, or too litle rayne, with patience, and yett to husband our corne the beſt wee can; ſo wee muſt the diſtempers of ſtate, and truſt in God, and his majeſtie, that the concluſion ſhalbe good, rather then in the common enemy, which will bring in both confuſion of lawes and religion. And ſo I wiſh yow as my ſelfe, and will euer reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, 26.
May, 1627.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

A DEAD ſilence hath poſſeſt all things: as yet wee haue not heard immediatly from the prince of Tranſyluania, how hee proceeds, nor what hee purpoſes. Wee only know, that tripartite commiſſioners are mett neare Komoran, and treate; and I fynd the enclination of this ſtate wholy bent to peace. I haue preſſed to the vizier his word giuen me, and in the name of the grand ſignor, with order to write to his majeſtie. Formerly he was uſed to deny, but now he ſeekes to excuſe himſelfe vpon the mufti, whoſe feares the Imperialls haue made the ground of their negotiation; and though he doth not catigorically confeſs a concluſion, yet in effect hee doth not contradict it, tempering it with a reſeruation of the comprehenſion of the friends of the port. But when I ſhow him, that thoſe incluſions are formall, and will deceiue him, if hee expect in them any reallitye, hee can giue no anſwer; but that he hopes the tymes will change, to be able to giue a better. Wee haue no other anchor left, but the laſt tryall of Gabor; who, by creditt of his freſheſt letters to me, and inſtructions to his ambaſſador, did profeſs, that hee would treate, becauſe there was no other way to unblind this ſtate; which ſo much affected the aſſurance of the border, that they would not beleeue any arguments, as ſauoring of other intereſts: but that hee would att the conuention rayſe ſo many difficultyes and impoſſibilityes, that the breach of the conference ſhould be the beginning of the warr, and a bond of neceſſitye in the Turkes to partake in it. Here is arriued another meſſinger from the emperor, with letters, whoſe admittance is now eaſye: the ſubſtance of them are a complaynt agaynſt Gabor and Morteſa, as the diſturbers of the antient truce; and an expreſſion of his feruent deſire to maynteyne a good peace with this empire: which can neuer be ſecured, vnleſs the grand ſignor place ſuch miniſters on the frontyre gouernments, as are louers of the publicque quiett; for the eſtabliſhing wherof he hath ſent his deputyes to meete thoſe of this Port, who hauing agreed upon articles, and reconciled all the differences, that hee would ſend a great ambaſſador hither, to confirme whatſoeuer ſhould there be concluded. Being obiected to the bearer by the vizier, that the emperor made a peace apart with Gabor, and that therfore he had obteyned his ends, without the communication with the grand ſignor, which gaue much ſuſpition of ſiniſter purpoſes; hee did not deny, that there was ſome ſuch thing done; but that his maſter did not truſt in it, nor could euer reſt ſecure in the word of that prince, vnleſs the authority of this ſtate did ſtrengthen it. I conclude, that if my fayth were not ſtronger then my judgement, I ſhould deſpayre. It is a great fayling in Gabor, but the flaſhes, fumes, and falſe fires of the French ambaſſador, and the wary coldnes of the Venetians, hath diſcouraged him, and taught him to meaſure all others conſtancy and magnanimitye by their ſcantling. 1627.

THE captain baſſa is gone up to the Euxine ſea with a gallant fleete, for flaggs and ſtreamers, reſolute to attempt the ſhutting in of the Coſſackes, by building two forts on the outletts of the Boriſtines: they prepare to reſiſt him, and are entrenched neare his expected deſcent. The Poles make ſome braues, that they will aſſiſt them, and maynteyne their frontyre, as lords of that ground; but I doe not beleeue they will hazard their peace with the grand ſignor, by fighting with his generall, but rather conniue till hee ſhalbe returned, and then ouerthrow what was rayſed, and excuſe it upon their outlawes. This enterpriſe will coſt knocks; but as matters now ſtand, the Turkes are not in ſtate to make any great progreſs, and the kyng of Sweden will fynd theſe diuerſions for his aduantage: for howſoeuer the Poles reſolue in this particular, they muſt keepe an army a foote, leaſt they tempt the enemye to uſe the occaſion. While all the ſea-forces were employed in this deſſigne, the Arches are left vnguarded; and ſixe gallyes, as wee ſuppoſe, of the great duke, haue come to the mouth of the Helleſpont, and taken one gallion, and many leſſer ſhips of the Cayro fleete: the particulars wee yet know not; but the report of the bootye is in millions. This ſodeyne alarme cauſed the grand ſignor to ſend into the Blacke-ſea, and inſtantly from the armado 12 gallyes were ſpared, and diſpatched to ſeeke the Chriſtians; who, I doubt not, are departed with their riches. There is arriued a Perſian ambaſſador at Aleppo, with ouertures of peace: the great vizier hath putt guards upon him, neyther accepting nor refuſing his meſſage, and hath hither ſent a poſt to declare, that this ſtate muſt eyther furniſh him with a million and halfe of gold, and ſtore of munition, or elſe grant him a commiſſion to enterteyne this oportunitye and motion of treatye: for with leſſe ſupplyes he cannot proceed. The firſt is impoſſible, and the latter much agaynſt ſtomach; but a freſher aduice bringing the report of a great ambaſſador following the former, with rich preſents, and fayre offers, many doe beleeue a happy concluſion; which in my judgment wilbe uery difficult, vnleſs Babilon be ſurrendered.

IF peace were on that ſyde ſettled, there is ſpleene enough in this ſtate to reuenge the braues they haue endured from the Imperialls, who though they ſeeke a truce, proſecute it inſolently, threatning fire and ſword, if they obteyne not their deſires. My turne wilbe runne out before I ſee the iſſue, and my ſucceſſor ſhall come to freſh occaſions; and I ſhall returne the joyfulleſt man liuing, to ſerue his majeſtie at home, and to be effectually approued, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{2}{12}$.
June, 1627.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

MY laſt to your lordſhip were dated the 22. of May, ſtilo novo: ſince that time I haue this day receaued one from you, dated the $\frac{5}{15}$. of May, wherein you do make mention of a former pacquet, ſent uppon the 21. of Aprill, ſtilo veteri. A duplicate whereof I do finde here incloſed in this laſt, togither with the copyes of two letters, written by your lordſhip to the lords of the councell; and your proteſt made againſt the uſurpations of the Venetian ſtate uppon the priuileges of our nation trading into the Leuant. The originall of this letter of your lordſhips, dated the 21. of Aprill, is loſt, the currier hauing been ſualligiato per ſtrada, as theſe ſigniori did ſignifye unto mee by a ſecretary ten dayes ſince, when I did deſire to know what newes they had from Conſtantinople. The duplicats are arriued uery opportunely, to informe and inſtruct mee in the true ſtate of the controuerſye; becauſe wee do dayly expect in this port ſeauen Engliſh ſhips, (which is a fleete of ſome conſideration) and moſt of the factors reſiding in Zante, unto whom I will not fayle, God willing, to communicate your lordſhips proteſt, and giue a copye to the maſter of euery ſhip, which ſhall be accompanyed with an expreſſe commandement of mine, under my hand and ſeale; requiring them ſtrictly to conforme themſelfes unto that act of your lordſhips, untill his majeſtie ſhall declare his further pleaſure, either to your lordſhip or mee, by ſome warrant from the lords of the councell, unto whom the deciſion of the controuerſy hath been referred.

YOUR letters, directed to Sir Francis Netherſol and Mr. de Queſtor, which did come in your laſt pacquet, dated the $\frac{5}{15}$. of May, I did ſend away this day; and withall I did write to my lord Conway, for warrant and order to appeare in your buiſineſſe here, as farre as he ſhould finde by your letters, that it ſhould be fitting; but if in your former pacquet of the 21. of Aprill, ſtilo vet. there were any letters for England, they are loſt.

CONCERNING the archbiſhop of Smyrna, I can at the preſent ſaye onely this, That the cardinal of Sauoye did really eſpouſe his cauſe, when he was at Rome; and if his abſence may ſeeme to prejudice the archbiſhop, I dare undertake, that at his returne to Rome (which is likely to bee ſhortly) he ſhall redeeme the time that hath been loſt. To-morrow I will write, God willing, to Turin, to refreſh his memory, and procure order from him to the count Lodouico d'Aglie, who is his ſubſtitute in Rome, and ambaſſador for the duke of Sauoye, to fauor the cauſe in ſuch ſort as the cardinal ſhall direct.

AS for Gabor, notwithſtanding your jealouſyes, (for which you haue but too much ground) I do ſtill entertayne a charitable conceite of his integrity; and I ſee no reaſon why I ſhould diſtruſt him, finding that the king of Denmarke doth in his weekely letters aſſure mee of his conſtancye. Beſides, our army in Sileſia and Morauia doth dayly increaſe in number, and get ground, which they could not do without the aſſiſtance of Gabor; but I do ſuppoſe, he doth diſſemble his intentions at the Porta, becauſe he would be woed to do that which he hath a minde to do of himſelfe. Howſoeuer I will promiſe nothing for him, becauſe I ſee your lordſhip is diffident; and the letters of Vienna do alwayes ſpeake of his peace. If he do deceaue the worlde, and proue better then his fame, yet I am ſure this ſtate will not concurre directly nor indirectly that way, nor in any matter of expence, nor any way diſpleaſe the howſe of Auſtria, or the crowne of Spayne: for ſince the French haue played this falſe bound, this ſtate is ſo creſt-fallen, that they do idolatriſe the pope, and the Auſtrian, and caſt themſelfes into their armes.

THAT which your lordſhip doth write concerning the French ambaſſador, doth not ſeeme ſtrange unto mee; for ſince the cardinall Richelieu hath made himſelfe deſpotikyrios, his maſters maſter, all the miniſters of that crowne in all places do cary themſelfes more like nontij then ambaſſadors. When Sr. Giuſtiniano doth arriue, he will bee as uery ſtranger unto mee, as if he were ſtill at Conſtantinople: for the reſeruednes of this ſtate hath made all ambaſſadors impratticable with any of the nobility.

OUT of England wee haue had no letters theſe fiue weekes togither: my laſt were dated uppon the 14. of Aprill. Our ports are ſhut up: my lord duke is going to ſea with a fleete againſt the French. This is all I can thinck of at this preſent;

and therefore I will trouble you no further, but with the renewed offer of my affectionate ſeruice, and a reiterated aſſurance, that I will euer reſt

Padoua, $\frac{9}{19}$.
June, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

IT is the office of a faythfull ſeruant, to deale ſincerely, according to his capacitye, though he accuſe himſelſe; and of the charge I now execute, tanquam explorator, to write the bad with the good, and to leaue the diſpoſition to the God of heauen, and the judgement to his images on earth. By this compaſs I haue ſayled in this ocean of vncerteyntye: for ther is nothing more like the ſea, without botome or dimenſion, then the treatye with Gabor. The beſt pilot is diſcharged by his art: accidents cannot diſcreditt him, and in caſe of extreame danger, to caſt ouer priuat goods, to ſaue the ſhip. This is my rule, and, I hope, wilbe my defence. I know warye wiſer men proceed not thus; yet pulchrum eſt pro patria pati: ſo I may ſerue his majeſtie, I conſider not my ſelfe.

GABOR hath ſent his ambaſſage, if I miſtake not, to ſaue his reputation, and to caſt the fayling vpon us: for he knowes our weakenes, the want of mony, for which he called at his day, the 3. of June. Your lordſhip will find by the encloſed tenor of the negotiation, that he ſought a quarrell. I then thought it my dutye, if I could really do no other good, to avoyd a ſcandall, and to invert the blow. His extraordinarye ambaſſador brought letters to this ſtate, but pretended that his buſines was principally directed to me, and the Duch; to whom he made, by vertue of his credentiall letters, diuers inſipide propoſitions. Firſt, That his maſter had not concluded a final peace, but temporarye, by the conſent of the kyng of Denmarke; and that he was yet ready to performe the league, vpon condition that we would pay him here 120000 dollers, for 3 moneths behind of the laſt yeare, before the confœderacy was ratefyed. Secondly, That we ſhould procure the diſſolution of the Turkiſh treaty; at leaſt to draw it in length. Laſtly, to tell downe the 40000 dollers, promiſed by his majeſtie, in this moneth, and to vndertake the future ſtipend; or els we did conclude our ſelues to haue fayled on our parts. For their ground they deliuered me the coppies of the treatyes: one apart, made with the commiſſioners of the kyng of Denmarke, in the camp at Bars in Nouember laſt; vpon which they would excuſe the truce with the emperor; and 3 other with his maſter, that kyng, and the States, conſummated in February; his majeſties and the duke of Buckinghams letters, and all theſe to putt me to a tryall for mony, or to diſcharge themſelues.

WHEN I had confuted all theſe fallacies, and ſhowed them, that the firſt demand was a meere cauill: The ſecond, for the treaty with the Turkes, we were bound to doe therin our beſt offices to aſſiſt them; but that it was not eſſential to the confœderacy by the prince required, who was thervnto admitted as a prince Dei gratiâ, abſolute for his dominions in Hungarye, vndependent vpon the grand ſignor, and only in that nature thought worthy to be aſſociated; and therfore the reſolution of this ſtate could not bynd, exclude, or excuſe him: and that this motion was a palpable deluſion, when they knew the treaty was far aduanced, and the Turkes reſolued to peace, to thruſt vs vpon impoſſibilityes, either to batter a rocke with our heads, or els that the want of a breach muſt lye vpon us: and that to defer vntill the next yeare, if actually the prince did not performe his contract this ſummer, would obteyne little creditt: For the third, the payment de futuro, that I was ready abſolutely to accompliſh the treaty, according to the articles: They had not now much to anſwere, but by argument of the juſtice of their demand for the pretended debt; without which the prince was not able to take the feild. When I conſidered their manner of negotiation, and judged, that they only ſought a backe-dore; I told them playnly, I had no authoritye to treate with them new matters; but to putt in execution what had beene tranſacted betweene our princes. Therfore I deſired they would deliuer me in writing their ambaſſage, from which they would not ſtart; and that I would giue them an anſwere in ſcriptis, which ſhould alway judge betweene us.

1627. WITH much vnwillingnes they conſented, and ſent me the encloſed paper; wherin your lordſhip may obſerue, that they durſt not, vnder their hand, vndertake any thing: which nouriſhed my ſuſpition, that all the reſt was inſerted to grace the aucourſe, and to prolong my hope with ayre; the ſubſtance being a demand of an imaginary debt, and a genericall promiſe of nothing; their deſſigne, eyther to gett poſſeſſion of the 40000 dollers expected, and then to put it to the old account; or if they could handle no mony, to impute the breach to our vnperformance.

TO their writing (which needed no letter of creditt, to quarrell for mony) I reſolued to giue an Engliſh anſwere: not to offend the prince, nor to take vpon my maſter the paſt debt; not to make them deſperate of the recouerye, wher it was due; but to maynteyne the ſinceritye of the princes, to fullfill the league on their part, and to putt theſe miniſters to a declaration, what was the ſecrett of their ambaſſage, or the more ſecrett purpoſes of their maſter; and being come to the climatericall poynt, I thought it requiſite, to open and ſearch this abiſſus, and to let them ſee I could not be coſened. This reſolution I communicated with my colleague the Duch, who would not agree to it; reſolued not to proceed clearely, he thought fitt not to ſee the fraud, and willingly would haue made no replye. But when I ſhewed him, that it was perhaps all Gabor deſired, to be able to ſay, the ambaſſadors, from whom mony was expected, had retyred from all correſpondence; he was content to play with the hooke, and ſent me another of his owne drawing, iuſt like their propoſitions, and moſt vnfitt for mee to partake, both for the preſumptuous titles attributed to his maſters, and forbearing to declare categorically, that the States would, de futuro, performe their quota, fearing to be pledge for his owne lords; but that he would pay what they ſhould conſigne him, and ſo would Yorke carrier; in breefe, a writing rather to weaken then confirme them, or vindicate truth. From this way I could not perſwade him, pretending want of a particular warrant; but indeed, loth to ſee truth, that might diſſolue his practices, but I thought it vnbecomming me: and therfore haue anſwered apart, befitting the qualety of a kyngs ſeruant, whoſe honor is aboue all other reſpects.

NOTWITHSTANDING, in one poynt we agreed (for my part without hope); but that no aſperſion of fayling ſhould be caſt vpon us, we reſolued to doe the office required, to the miniſters of this ſtate; to prolong the treatye, or to free Gabor from any incluſion therin. This we joyntly and effectually haue performed. In the anſwere of the vizier and principall officers, we haue found ſuch conformitye and conſent, as was betweene Simeon and Leui, bretheren in iniquitye. They profeſſed, that they could not beleeue Gabor had made any peace apart; but when I made it euident, they renounced, that he had from hence any ſuch commiſſion: yet confeſſed they had lately ordered a treaty now in hand, which ſhould not be conſummated without our approbation: that the articles ſhould firſt be ſent hither, and that wee ſhould be called to conſultation, and nothing ratefyed, but with the comprehenſion of the friends of the port. I ſhowed them, that ſuch generall incluſions were formall, and could not bynd the emperor; that the league was reſolued to proſecute the war; that Gabor had tyed himſelfe, and ſworne it by their licence; that they had promiſed att all not to make peace, at leaſt to leaue him at libertye. I urged the iniurye done us, to draw our army, vpon their word, far from ſuccors; and in confidence therof, that the princes confœderate had reenforced it, and ſent a duke of Brandeburgh to command it: that they ſtill depended upon their fayth. How many practices the enemy had uſed to diſſolue thoſe troopes, by mony, compoſition, or enterteynment of the kyng of Poland; how neceſſarye it was to their owne ſafety to keepe that army in ſtrength, and all other arguments of reaſon and juſtice; concluding with a requeſt, that they would deale truly, whether they reſolued peace, and to bynd the hands of the prince of Tranſyluania, as their ſubiect, or not.

TO which they replyed ambiguouſly; but the true extraction is, that they muſt haue peace, though they blanch yt with deceiptfull colours; and that they could not be ſecure of this peace, vnleſs Gabor were reſtreyned. I anſwered, That he was not a ſubiect in that capacitye, by which he had treated with the princes, being dominus partium regni Hungariæ, which depended not upon the Port; that he had not contracted to warr with Tranſiluanians, but with Hungars; that it was lawfull for him to ſerue any prince for pay; that it was no breach of peace, to ſuffer a baſſa to ſerue the Muſcouite agaynſt Poland, hauing peace with both; and that in that condition we required performance of couenants. Theſe arguments ſomwhat moued them, ſo far as to promiſe to draw it to a new conſultation; being willing, if they durſt without their owne perill, to keepe the emperor in alarme. They confeſſed, that Gabor had perſwaded them by theſe letters, to draw the buſines in length, and did repent him of what he had done (which for the matter was true, but lookes like an high ſtreyne of diſſimulation); and that he would ſecure the border for this yeare: which he may boldly promiſe, where he ſees a reſolution to conclude peace.

1627.

THEY inſinuated, that there might difficultyes ariſe in the treaty, to diſſolue it: that within ten dayes they ſhould know what was done: in the meane tyme they could giue no directer anſwere: yet howſoeuer reſpect ſhould be had to the friends of the grand ſignor. But I hope nothing, and beleeue leſs from them, the treaty being begunn, and order ſent to finiſh it vpon any conditions. If Gabor, as he yet profeſſeth, will ſhow his art, to vncharme this diſpoſition to peace; he doth in that poynt conuert an infidell.

An. 1623.

HAUING done as much as we were able, yeſterday we called the Tranſyluanian miniſters, and acquaynted them, that the vizier had diſavowed their maſters ſeperate peace; and they juſtefyed his conſent. Then I preſſed the league: I vrged that from the firſt ouerture, I demanded of Sir Paul Keretetſye, their ambaſſador, in the preſence of the count of Torne, in what qualetye his maſter did offer himſelfe to a confœderacy with abſolute princes; how he valewed himſelfe? If as a ſubiect of this port, the motion was incompatible; for he was not ſui juris: if as a free prince, dependant only for tribute in Tranſyluania; in the reſt, peace and war at liberty; or as elect kyng of Hungarye, or free lord of ſome principall parts, I would propound for him; otherwiſe not. To which he anſwered, That his prince was abſolute, and lord of his owne countryes; and acknowledged none in ſome reſpects, but God: therfore in that qualetye he was admitted into the league; and in that capacitye we expected from him chriſtian fayth. I charged the reſident, that by vertue of his credence, he had giuen me authoritye to write to his majeſtie the laſt yeare; that though it were of great moment to procure the countenance of the Turkes, yet if they could not be drawne, that the prince would maynteyne his word and confœderation without them: which he now denyed not. I ſhowed him, what I had propounded to the vizier; that he might ſerue the princes allyed for their mony, and to ſaue his honor. In concluſion, I forced a new propoſition from them; whether cordiall or feigned, tyme only can diſcouer. They profeſſed the prince was ready to reſume armes; but if the Turkes made peace, and included him, he could not ſafely diſpute his condition with them; becauſe he muſt ſeeme to obey all their lawes, and therfore could not ſecurely, this ſummer, in perſon march agaynſt the emperor; but that, if he remoued with his guards to Caſſouia, and ſent his generall with 15000 Hungars, according to the treaty, to joyne with the army in Sileſia, whither wee were ready to pay the monethly ſubſidye, promiſed in the articles. They preſſed me to anſwere categorically to this poynt, and whither I had order for the 40000 dollers, or not.

NOW I was ſtrictly beſeeged; but I conſidered, I had tyme to uſe, and aduantage: I anſwered, His majeſtie would really and royally performe whatſoeuer he had couenanted, if the prince did inſtantly take armes, and fullfill his promiſe: That we ſtood not vpon his perſon, ſo the numbers were ſupplied: That I had power from his majeſtie for that firſt payment, and was able to diſburſe yt; but ſeeing I knew the prince had made a formall peace, and was retyred, I was not bound to giue my maſters mony vpon old reckonings: That I looked only forward, to the execution of the treatye, which I was readye to effectuate, if the prince on his part would open that dore to the war, which he pretended was in his power, and de facto joyne 15000 ſoldiers with the princes army, and invade the enemies dominion. When it did appeare to me, that his troopes had ſerued an entire moneth, I engaged my word to make true payment of that promiſed ſumme without delay; and if neyther the princes ſeales, nor my poore creditt, would ſatisfye them, that I would depoſite yt preſently in the hands of the Venice baylo; and for the future, make ſuch prouiſion, that for euery moneth the army ſhould be continued in the war, the mony contracted ſhould be ready, according to the obligation of the princes, eſpetially for his majeſties part; and that I would ſollicite the care of the kyng of Denmarke:

1627. the Duch being preſent to make his owne caution, who would haue withdrawne himſelfe from any engagement, other then to pay what he ſhould receiue; which not paſſing current, I vrged him, at leaſt in generall tearmes, to be ſuretye that his maſters ſhould performe their ſealed couenants, for as much as they had vndertaken. Thus we haue alſo agreed to write to the prince, and to diſmiſs this extraordinarye within two dayes. They ſeeme to giue us grounded hope; but I am a Didimus to any thing, for want of the ſight of mony, and becauſe I haue found Gabor and his miniſters, in this laſt act, like reprobate ſinners, firſt to attempt to caſt the fault vpon others; then to ſaue themſelues by excuſes; and at laſt, to ſay any thing to defer the day of judgement.

INDEED ther were no hope, if it were not Gabor, that had thrice broken with the emperor; and if it were poſſible, I would engage him; and ther ſeemes ſomwhat not impoſſible: if not, I thought it wiſedome to putt him to tryall, and to turne the poynt inward. My lord, I haue carried this ſo confidently, that I haue confounded them, and am now deepely entangled: if I had done leſs, all had beene deſperate. I know, I haue tyme: it wilbe 3 moneths before the mony can be chalenged of me: if they performe, they meritt yt: if not, ther is no loſs by giuing me creditt; and I haue thus kept the vpper ground. Since the firſt aduice that his majeſtie had promiſed in June to remitt 10000 pounds, I neuer heard more of yt. I doubt not, the rumor of Gabors treatyes hath occaſioned this omiſſion; but I would not haue changed gold for good words. My hopes are very weake; yet the emperors agent appeares much troubled at our conferences, hath complayned to the vizier, and openly profeſſed, that he hath not ſo much confidence in all the contracts of Gabor to keepe peace, as in the hopes that we will fayle to ſupply him with mony, which is only able to ouerrule him.

MY lord, I know the danger to proceed ſo farr without warrant; that diſcrimen penes me eſt, emolumentum, ſi erit, reipublicæ. I haue but concurred with his majeſties word, and outfaced them in their owne fraud: ſimple zeale hath tranſported me: if it take effect, I fly to his majeſties grace and goodnes, to preſerue my creditt; if not, to pardon me. Ther is a little life by the going vp of the adminiſtrator of Magdebourgh, which hath much moued the vizier, and theſe Tranſiluanian miniſters; and his preſence may worke great alterations. Gabor did doubt, the army of count Mansfelt, after his death, would be deſerted, and it was miſerably poore; and his ambaſſador Quadt did diſcouer in England great difficultyes in mony: feare of certeyne expence for a debt made him ſeeke all ſubterfuges; but ther is ſome ſpiritt left, to be reuiued with omnipotent aurum potabile; at leaſt, no loſs to trye the vertue. It is true, Gabor hath abuſed his fayth; but I wiſh our owne ſlacknes had not beene acceſſorye.

I WOULD not conceale the encloſed diſcourſe of a Turke, with whom I haue kept ſtrict intelligence: he ſpeakes as he beleeues; and ther is too much truth in yt. Yet his feruour, who is exaſperated by the peace, agaynſt which he had laboured 6 yeares, may perhaps vrge him to preſs many things to the worſt ſence: the prince may deceiue him the better way; and the neceſſitye of that army engaged, requires to trye the laſt caſt; for his malice to the emperor, nor his ambition, is not extinct.

THIS exttaordinarye had credentiall letters to the French ambaſſador, with order to deteyne or giue them, as he ſhould from me be directed. I perſwaded earneſtly the deliuerye, and ſhowed him the utilitye of keeping good correſpondence, and obſeruing due reſpect to ſo great a prince; and that I had receiued freſh aduice, that the kyng had good enclinations to protect, and to contribute to the princes occaſions, and left him in a reſolution to follow this counſell. But now they tell us, they neyther haue, nor will viſitt him, nor deliuer their letters: for hauing communicated with the vizier, he had diſſwaded them to take any notice; becauſe (as he ſayd) the ambaſſador was an Imperialiſt, and ill affected to the generall cauſe.

A PERSIAN ambaſſador is arriued with little hope to buy peace at a cheaper rate, then the ſurrender of Babilon. The gallies of the grand ſignor, ſent in purſuit of the Florentines, by great diligence ouertooke them in a port of Morea, and haue recouered all the priſes: ſo their great wealth was like a dreame; when they awaked, it vaniſhed. This day they entered in tryvmph, towing in all the ſhips. The great eaſely retaken booty made the one not deſire to fight, and feare the other, to eſcape away.

I BESEECH your lordſhip to preſerue your ſeruant euery way: for now I haue neede of yt, as the cauſe had of this remedye. So I humbly take my leaue. 1627.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{16}{20}$.
June, 1627.

Li 17 Giunio, 1627. in Pera di Conſtantinopoli.

DISCORSO del Signiore JUSSUPH AGHA (à ſua Eccellenza) ultimamente tornato dal Prencipe BETHLEM, al quale li meſi paſſati era, dal Gran Signiore Mandato.

E VERO, mio ſigniore, che io per il' paſſato li ho ſempre laudato il' P. Bethlem, hauendo gran conffidenza nella ſua ſincerita, et affettione moſtraua alli confederati prencipi, et loro cauſa; & il bon affetto anco pareua portare à queſta Porta. Ma in queſto mio ultimo à lui fatto uiaggio, ho ſcoperto anzi euidente uiſto non eſſere in lui honeſtà niſſuna uerità, hauendo egli ſolo la mira al ſuo intereſſo priuato, et al denaro; nè hauere li prencipi confederati, ò alla cauſa nota affettione, ne inteſe mai di giouarli. Hà ultimamente, contra la fede datta, concluſo con il' Imperatore abſoluta et perpetua pace, et unitoſi con lui affato, facendo tutti li ſigniori ſtati di Hungaria et Tranſiluania, à lui ſugetti, giurarla, et confermarla con le loro ſotto ſcrittione, et ſuggilli (ſenza il che li imperiali non uoleuano fidarſi alla ſua parola) ſi che guardateui non piu fidarſe in lui, nè alle ſue promeſſe, altramente certo uertere da lui ingannati, et traditi.

V. S. illuſtriſſima ſaperà, che quando il' ſignor conte Mansfeld arriuo in quelli confini di Hungaria, in quel tempo ſcopri io la ſua mala intentione. Primo, per la poca corteſia moſtratali, eſſendo che trouandoſe quelli al' hora manco di prouigione, uitto, et denaro, non uolſe ſouenirlo di niente; et ſe non foſſe che il' ſigniore Morteſa, baſſà di Buda, li haueua mandato ſubito piu barche di uario uittouaglie, et anco dattoli un poco di denaro, hauerebbe molto patito in quelli primi giorni, e ben uero che doppo la morte del ditto conte diede a quella ſua militia qual che denaro et viueti. Secondo, eſſendo unite le forze di tutta tre, et potendo facilmente al' hora ſuperare âfato le forze del nimico, li haueua diſſuaſo et differito l'incontro, et perſo la opportunita, ſi che per ſola cauſa di lui il' negotio hebbe coſi cattiuo evito, et pegior fine di tale diſauantaggioſa pace. Doue alcuni giorni doppo ſe era ſaputo eſſer il cio proceduto, & hauerli alcuni ſigniori Hunghri (però Imperialiſti) ſcritto, et eſortaſolo non uoler dannificare li ſtati del Imperatore, et introdure in quelli li Turchi; minaciandolo che lui ſolo ſè ne pentira; et che ſe ſi pacificara, che lo aſſicurauano che il Imperatore lo rimunerara, eſtimara, et accarezzara.

PASSATO queſto, et uiſto il baſſà di Buda non hauer reuſcitò à quello ſperaua, un giorno, con il detto Bethlem, et ſigniore conte Mansfeld, non eſſendo niſſuna altra perſona che io ſeruendoli per interprete, ſi ritirorno in un campo, et iui il detto baſſà lo diſſe, ſigniore prencipe, lei ſa molto bene che il' mio deſiderio è ſtato di uenire alli mani con li noſtri nemici, et fare la guerra, hauendo gran ſperanza di reuſcirne con honore; ma poiche la opportunita è omeſſa, et l'inuerno ſopra fatto, finalmente mi biſogna comunicarle, che ſe bene dal gran ſigniore, in li ſue commandati, ne dal ſigniore Caimecam, nelle ſue lettere mandatemi, no fu mai comandato fare la pace con il' Imperatore, con tutto cio, ſempre me hanno ordinato procedere cautamente di non pericolare niente, ma fare quello che trouerebbe tendere in benefitio del ſtato et ſuo honore, et in tutto conformarme al uoſtro parere: con tutto cio ecco qui più lettere che giornalmente uado riceuendo dalli primati del ſeraglio, et altr magiſtrati della Porta, minaciandomi tutti grandemente, non cauſare la guerra con l'Imperatore, ante per ogni modo procurare la pace; perche ſtante li ſiniſtri auenimenti in Babilonia il ſtato del gran ſigniore ricereaua la pace, et che la ſua mente et volonta era tale, pò conſiderate quello che ſi ha di fare. Il che inteſo dal Bethlem (ben uero quaſi lacrimaua) diſſe; Io ben antiuedeuo che biſogna trattare, et anco che un gran uituperio caſchera ſopra me in perpetuo, hauendo io gia mandato li mie ambaſſciatore con lettere, et giurato in quelle, et ſtabilito confederatione con li prencipi colleghati, et adeſſo mi conuiene mancare di fede et fare la pace. Ma porche ne biſogna far la, per l'amor d'Iddio tenete in ſegreto la aduerſita di Babilonia (qual particolare il giorno ſequente publicamente ſi proclamaua nel campo delli Imperiali, brauando et gloriandoſi) per che ſe li Imperiali uenerono in notitia di queſto, ſi inſuperbirano in ſi fatta maniera, che riffudarano la trattatione con uoi. Però eſſendo 1627. che quelli adeſſo preghano à me, laſciate donque che io trattaro prima per me, et poi ſaro mediatore per il gran ſigniore, et ſecondo le propoſitioni loro che uederemo al hora ſi riſolueremo: et in queſto modo eſſo Bethlem ſi meſſe à trattare, et in pochi giorni doppo, partito il conte Mansfeld, la concluſe ſolo, naſcondendo però le conditioni, dicendo hauer fatto una tregua legiera, et coſi uene à ingannare il baſſa di Buda. Inanzi qual ſua concluſionè ſe bene che li ſigniori Hungari et Tranſiluani, ſuoi dependenti, la deſiderauano molto, ſi per la bramata quiete, come per liberarſe dalle gran contributione datte al' detto Bethlem per queſta guerra, quale realmente ha ſuchiato il ſangue di quelli poueri popoli; con tutto cio conoſcendo quelli la ſua inconſtanza, per non tirarſi altro peggior male adoſſo, andarono et li diſſero; Signiore, uedemo che lei uoli concludere la pace con il'Imperatore, la quale et noi deſideramo; ma eſſendo che il'Imperatore uole che ſià giurata et affermata da tutti noi, la preghiamo dirne ſetia la ſua ferma intentione di mantenerla per ſempre, per hauerſi lei confederato con li prencipi della parte contraria; altramente noi trouaremo qualche ſcuſa di non affermarla. Quale li riſpoſe, che era reſolutiſſimo di oſſeruarla, et percio li preghaua et uoleua che la giuraſſero et ratificaſſero. Percio tutti li ſigniori di Hungaria, et Tranſiluania, della ſua parte, conuocati in una dieta, non ſolo ſolenemente la giurarono, ma anco diedero una ſcrittura, affermata da tutti loro, di oſſeruarla inuiolabilmente: prometendo piu altre conditioni, le quali tiene ſegreto, tra le quali una, detto Bethlem promeſſe mai pui nel auenire fare la guerra, ò niſſun atto di oſtilita nè al'Imperatore, ò ſuoi ſtati, ante ſeruirlo nelle ſue occaſioni, eſſer unito con lui et comportarſi nel, auenire come uno delli ſuoi. Si che, mio ſigniore, ſiate ouertito, et ſe dal detto Bethlem, ò delli ſuoi, ui ueniſſe fatto qualche noua offerta ò propoſitione, non lo credete, ma guardateui, et non li date piu fede, perche li giuro nel' nome d'Iddio, et mia fede, che è una perſona falſa, et la ſua intentione non è altro che ingannarui. Io ſo che adeſſo ui manda a dire che, ſe hauera il denaro promeſſoli, che mantenerà la confederatione, et uſcira in campagna, et che tiene la ſua militia pronta; il che è falſo, et lo dice ſolo perche aparace il denaro; per che ſe anco lo voleſſe fare, non è piu à tempo, et non lo puo fare, perche quelli ſtati di Tranſiluania et Hungaria nè li lo permeterano, nè lo ſequitarano, ò li darano un denaro, nè huomo, perche dalle ſue eſſattioni ſono ſtrachi et conſumati; pero non habbiate piu niſſuna ſperanza in lui, ni date fede alle ſue parole.

Nel inſtante che era di concludere la pace, li arriuorno tre gentil'huomini, mandati dal re di Dania, con qualche denaro alla gente di Mansfeld, et lo ſcriueua che ſi intendeua che era trattando con l'Imperatore: però lo eſortaua che ſi arricordaſſe della fede data, et che per niſſun modo non faceſſe tal' attione, auiſandolo che con la Iddio gratia per tutto giunio con 50000 ſoldati ſperaua trouarſi ſotto Pragha; però che faceſſe et lui ogno ſuo sforzo, et andaſſe ad incontrarlo ſui: à quali gentilehuomini con giuramento promeſſe et aſſicuro, et anco ſcriſſe à quel re, che lui non era di fare la pace per modo ò conditione niſſuna, et che fara ogni ſua diligenza di incontrarlo nel preditto luoco, con 25000 delli ſuoi. Per cio un giorno iò li diſſi, Come ha uolſuto fare tale promeſſa à quel re, hauendo gia di fare in breue il' contrario, et pacificarſi con il Imperatore? mi reſpoſe, Che fino à giunio trauenirano molti accidenti, et à me al' hora non mancarano ſcuſe et preteſti, et che biſognaua nutrirli, et non ſpergere à fatto le loro ſperanze.

De piu, quando li uenne l'auiſo che, nelli mani del ſigniore ambaſciatore di Fiandra, era uenuto una ſumma di denaro per lui, fece gran diligenza et preſſa per farlo uenire nelli mani, et ſcritte al' ſuo agente che non ometteſſe niente fino che lo riceueſſe, et quando eppe che ſi haueua riceuuto, io le diſſe, Signiore, come lei riceue queſto denaro, hauendo gia fatto la pace et oblighattoſſi al' Imperatore non mai piu opponerli? Mi diſſe, Queſto denaro io lo riceuo per conto et debito vechio. In ſomma, ſigniore ambaſſadore, tocante queſto negotio non habbiat, piu niſſuna ſperanza ne in lui, ne dà li Turchi quà, perche queſti ſono tanto ſterniti et perſi con la guerra di Perſia che non uogliono ſentire ad altro che alla pace, et di lui lo vedete bene, che inganno et uoi et noi, che ſi è fatto Imperiale, et done ben poteua mantenere la guerra, non ſolo fece il contrario et manco da uoi altri, mà anco è cauſa che noſtro, per hauerſi umeſſo in tutto al' ſuo guiditio, pigliando eſempio da lui, uenero impauriti, et affretano la pace: ègli è un huomo ſenza fede et conſcienza, chi adora ſolo il denaro, et per quello uendereſſe ſe medeſimo, pero guardanſi non fidarſi nelle ſue parole. Nella mia partenza mi diſſe, che diceſſe à uoſtra eccellenza purcheli 1627. daſſe il denaro promeſſoli, che lui ſubito uſcira di nouo con le arme in campagna: mà io li riſpoſi che li ſuoi agenti poteuano fare meglio queſta ambaſciata. Di piu mi diſſe, che diceſſe al' baſſa qui, che chiamaſſe uoſtra eccellenza, et il ſigniore ambaſciatore di Fiandra, et che lui ui diceſſe che queſta d'adeſſo fatta pace è legiera, et ſeruira ſolo per un paro di anni, fino che la guerra di Perſia ſia terminatà, pero che ſcriueſſero alli loro prencipi, che quelli anco per queſta uolta ſe pacificauero per detto termine, et che paſſate dui anni tutti unitamente fare po la guerra con maggior forza et poſſibilita. Io le diſſe, Signiore, hauendo li detti ambaſciatori, ſi come lei bene ſa, ſcritto tante uolte, et in'animito li loco ſigniori al contrario per la ſperanza che haueuano in lei, comè adeſſo ardirano ſcriuere di fare pace; oltre che piu pare che queſto negotio poterebbe riuſcire a danno del gran ſigniore, perche facendo quelli prencipi pace con il'Imperatore, inanzi del gran ſigniore, facilmente li Imperiali, trouandoſi in campagna con tante forze, le uoltera alli danni noſtri. Mi riſpoſe, Che non è dubio, mà che ſe il'Imperatore ſi accomodaſſe con quelli prencipi, certo caſcharebbe in quelle parte. Percio V. S. illuſtriſſima fara prudentemente auiſare di tutto queſto la ſua majeſta, ſuo ſigniore, et lo dica, che con le loro forze ſi prouedano et fauano il loro corpoſſibile da quelle parte.

Et che non habbian niſſuna ſperanza piu dal Bethlem, nè ſi fidano di lui, perche lui tradira il tutto al' Imperatore; perche certo tutto il ſuo diſſegno et induſtria adeſſo non è altro che chiaparui il denaro. Tutto queſto che io li rifferſi li guiro nel' nome del' omnipotente Iddio che è uero, di mia propria veduta, udita, et conoſcenza, ſi chè ſapiatelo di certo, che il Bethlem nè uole nè puo unirſi piu con uoi.

Sono adeſſo parechi anni che io lo ho ſeruito, et piu uolte meſſo la uita per ſuo ſeruitio; ma adeſſo uiſto la ſua falſſita, et conditione, hò giurato mai piu andare dà lui, ne ingermi nelli ſuoi negotij, acio che non mi ueniſſe coſtare la uitria, per qualche ſua mala attione, la quale io molto dubito. Et per cio mi uoglio a poco poco totalmente ritirare.

Adesso che io ero di uenire qui da uoſtra eccellenzza, andai primo dalli ſuoi agenti, et li diſſe; Signiori, eſſendo che io adeſſo ſono per andare dal ſigniore ambaſciatore d'Inghilterra, deſidero ſapere di loro, in che forma hauete con lui raggionato, per ſapere et io gouernarmi, et non diſcrepare. Mi preghorno, che faceſe fede della affettione del prencipe uerſo li prencipi confederati, et della intentione ſua di uſcire di nouo in campagna, pure che habbia il denaro, come fu partuito: et che perſuadeſſe a uoſtra eccellenzza di continuare alla pratica. Alli quali io diſſe; Signiori, io ſono perſona vechia, religioſo, et ſempre fatto profeſſione di dire la verita: io non diro tali bugie al Signiore ambaſciatore, ſapendo il contrario ma le diro la verita di tutto quello che mi demandara.

Et per fine, illuſtriſſimo ſignore, giuro di nouo à ſua eccellenza nel' nome d' Iddio, hauerui narrato la pura uerita, la natura et conditione di quel prencipe, et ſua intentione, perche nè puo, nè uol aguitarui. Io ho da trouarmi con il ſigniore Caimecam, per il' quale ho una lettera di credenzza dal ſignior baſſa di Buda, et conſegniandolila, indubitamente dimandandomi, li narrero il tutto, come faro anco ad altri miniſtri primati, et nel' auenire non mancaro fare conſapeuole uoſtra eccellenza d' ogni altro occorente tocante queſti negotij: reſtandoli il medeſimo ſeruitore ſi come ſempre li ſono ſtato.

To Captain QUADT.

M^{to.} illuſtre ſignore, amico obſeruantiſſimo,

I HAUE receiued your letter by ſignor Sigiſmundus Miches, amply vnderſtanding therby the admittance of the prince of Tranſyluania into the league of his majeſtie and his allyes; and that, vpon your returne, his highnes had ratifyed yt, on his part; and therfore I will not doubt, that any circumſtance or collaterall reſpect ſhalbe able to withdraw him from the due care of his fayth and honor. Yet knowing that he hath made a peace, to the great ſcandall of the princes his friends, and the encouragement of the enemy, not attending eyther the ſucceſs of the ambaſſage of count Mansfelt, nor your employment at the ſame tyme, treating the league; and that the meſſage of this gentleman appeares rather to ſeeke occaſions, then to 1627. putt the treatye in execution; that ſome words in your owne letter ſeeme to reſtreyne the power of the prince to the licence of the Port, as if without their participation he was not ſui juris, to accompliſh his promiſes; theſe haue much troubled my mynd, and enforced me to deale roundly and playnly with his highnes miniſters. The propoſitions made to me, and the Duch ambaſſador, conſiſted on 3 poynts: firſt, A demand of an arrearedge, pretended to be due from the king of Denmarke. Secondly, That we ſhould procure the diſſolution or prolongation of the preſent treaty of peace with the grand ſignor. Laſtly, To aduance the 40000 dollers, promiſed by his majeſtie in this cytty, or els that his highnes was vnable to reſume armes. Sir, yow haue beene practiſed in negotiations with wiſe princes, and yow cannot but judge, that theſe motions did ſeeme ſtrange to me; who, as the ſeruant of my owne maſter, can haue no authoritye, but only to looke forward vpon the effectuation of the articles, and to take care for the performance of what is in them conteyned. To theſe demands ther needed no letter of creditt from the prince, which when I read, I expected ſome matter of efficacye and moment, and not a querulous tergiuerſation. This made me aske the tenor of their inſtructions in writing, which I ſend yow with my anſwere here incloſed, that yow may know the ingenuitye of my proceeding; wherin I deſire yow to obſerue, they haue mentioned nothing, but the pretended debt: to which they haue annexed a promiſe ſo drye and inſipide, that it neyther includes nor excludes any thing. To that poynt I can giue no other reply, then thus: His majeſtie of Denmarke will doubtleſſly fullfill all his royall promiſes; but that I haue neyther knowledge nor facultye to meddle in yt; neyther can a reaſon therof be expected from me, another mans ſeruant. To the ſecond, concerning the treaty of the Turkes; though yow muſt needes know, that yow thruſt us vpon a rock, and that the peace is ſo far aduanced, if not concluded, and ſuch the reſolution of this ſtate, that the motion muſt be ineffectuall; yet not to be defectiue in any thing, we haue done your office (for my part without hope) to the great miniſters; who vniformely denye, that euer they gaue conſent to his highnes to entertayne any ouuerture of peace apart: yet they confeſs, that now they haue commanded a treatye, and we know they affect a happy iſſue. Howſoeuer they conſtantly promiſe, it ſhall not be conſummated by commiſſioners; but only maturated, and brought as neare agreement as is poſſible, and formed into heads; and then the articles ſhalbe ſent hither, and that we ſhalbe called to conſultation, and nothing ratefyed without our conſent, or the comprehenſion of our princes, which will ſpend 6 moneths tyme. This, I beleeue, they will performe; and ſo his highnes hath his libertye, this ſummer, to uſe the oportunitye of an vncerteyne treatye to employ his armes.

BUT this is not the poynt: yow may pleaſe to caſt your eyes vpon the confœderacy, which muſt judge betweene us; and ther is no better wittnes then your ſelfe, that the peace or war of the Turkes is not eſſentiall to the league. For my part, I neuer treated with any of his highnes miniſters, but in the qualetye of a free prince. So he ſtiles himſelfe in all his authenticque writings, Gabriel Dei gratia: in that nature only their majeſties haue aſſociated him; neyther would they euer deſcend to colleague with a ſubiect, abſolutly depending vpon the will of another. It is true, we were bound, and haue done all good offices, to hinder the Turkes from any concluſion; but the princes example hath drawne them into feares, and it is now too late. I haue often written clearely to his highnes, that their conſtancy depended vpon his; and that our perſwaſions were ſuſpected of intereſt and partialitye. Therfore it hath an ambiguous taſt, to returne this duty vpon us, as neceſſarye to the fullfilling of the treatye. I deſire yow to beleeue, that I foreſee more then is yet fitt to write; and that yow will conſider the princes honor is engaged, as an abſolute prince, at leaſt partium regni Hungariæ dominus: in that capacitye he hath bound himſelfe, exercitum ad minimum 15000 ſelectorum Hungarorum militum formare, et vel ſejunctim, vel cum confœderatorum copijs, prout commodius et magis è re viſum fuerit, ipſas hoſtium ditiones invadere. This is a categoricall obligation, and hath no limitation or reference to the will of the grand ſignor; which will neuer proue a fayre and ſafe retrayct. This I haue propounded to the chimacham; and he cannot deny, but that it is iuſt his highnes ſhould fullfill that promiſe; which may be done without any exceptions, or breach of the Turkiſh peace: and his highnes well knowes, though he begin the war apart, he ſhall neuer be abandoned in any ſiniſter accident of this ſtate; and that this is the ſure way to engage them, and to obteyne his ends. In this kynd, their majeſties doe confidently expect, and build vpon yt, that the prince will maynteyne both his word and himſelfe in the qualetye of a free prince; eſpecially hauing ſent the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh to command their army in Sileſia, vpon aſſurance that the preſence of ſo high-borne a prince, and ſo neare allyed by marriage to his highnes, would confirme him, that all other promiſes ſhould be kept, and that army not be deſerted.

TO the laſt poynt, (which was only materiall in this ambaſſage) for the future payment of the monethly ſtipend; though it may ſeeme impertinent and diſcourteous to doubt, where his highnes hath receiued ſo ample caution by the letters patents of kyngs and ſtates, that haue neuer fayled, nor violated their fayth with any; yet for a ſuperfluous ſatisfaction, I haue, and doe cleerely profeſs, that his majeſtie had ordered the 40000 dollers for this cytty, according to his couenant; and that on our part wee are ready to performe punctually, and without delay, whatſoeuer was contracted on the behalfe of their majeſties, conformeable to the treaty; Pro ſingulis menſibus, quibus militabit princeps; a die quo dictus princeps, et cetera. And this, I conſtantly affirme, ſhalbe ſincerely fullfilled. But, Sir, doe yow thincke, that a ſeruant can deliuer his maſters mony, after the knowledge of ſo great a change and defection in the treaty? the foundation wherof was layd vpon the article, that none of the confœderats could treate without generall communication and conſent. Hinc illæ lachrimæ.

I HAUE, as it is my publicque dutye, as his majeſties true ſeruant, and my priuat, of an honeſt man, written to yow candidely and freely. Their majeſties will performe really what is conteyned in the league, and doe expect a reciprocall fayth on the princes part, and cannot of him otherwiſe beleeue. Your ſelfe haue beene the inſtrument to perfect the treatye: it concernes yow in reputation to endeauour, that it may not proue an inſtrument to abuſe the benignitye, and to deceiue the majeſties, of kyngs of ſo eminent degree in the chriſtian world; and though yow may excuſe your ſelfe vpon your maſter, yet ſome ſtayne will reflect euen vpon innocent, when vnfortunate, miniſters; and I know your profeſſion of a ſoldier, aboue all things, doth reſpect your honor.

THOUGH my hopes were once ſmothered, yet his highnes reſident, and ſignor Sigiſmundus, vpon my motion to the chimacham, that it was lawfull to unite with the league with a Hungar army, vndependent vpon the port, haue giuen ſome new breathing, by intimation, that his highneſs may remoue in perſon to Caſſouia, to reſt there in the border, to watch ouer the publicque ſafety, and ſend his generall with the numbers contracted to joyne with the princes army: which if it be performed this ſummer, wilbe acknowledged an execution of the confœderacy, and may iuſtly call for due performance on the other part. But if it be deferred, while the princes beare the ſole burthen of the warr, now at the ſharpeſt, vpon delayes and pretences of another yeare, (I ſpeake my priuat opinion, and without authoritye) I beleeue, ther wilbe little creditt giuen to new motions.

CONCERNING an agent to reſyde in the court of the prince, I haue heard nothing; and I beleeue, the report of your counter treatyes hath cauſed many omiſſions: but if his highnes reſume armes, that ther be occaſion of ſuch a miniſter, I will putt my lord Conwey in remembrance, and vndertake vpon my ſelfe to ſupply all neceſſaryes or payments for that function.

YOW wilbe pleaſed to excuſe my freenes the exigent of the buſines hath required. And ſo, wiſhing yow all happines, I reſt

Conſtantinople, $\frac{18}{28}$.
June, 1627.

Your obſeruant friend, and humble ſeruant.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

I DARE not write to his majeſtie one word; neyther what I aduenture to your lordſhip, can I deliuer vpon any ſuch ground of certeyntye, as to perſwade yow to relye vpon yt. I haue diſpatched the extraordinary of Gabor, with the encloſed anſwers: wherin I judged it requiſite to proceed playnly and roundly; 1627. all diſſimulation and future conniuing, to prolong our hopes, being only to our ſelues hurtfull; and that it was to no purpoſe to preſerue an opinion, that he, which had this yeare ſhamefully broken his fayth, would patch it vp the next, the preſent being only uſefull for the allyes, and the cauſe. This may proue a remedye, more ſound, I am ſure, then lingring, which is paynfull and mortall, becauſe his miniſters haue propounded the ſending of the numbers vnder a generall; and the comming of a prince of Brandeburgh, vnckle to his lady, (who hath abſolute ſoueraintye ouer his affections) to command in Sileſia, will worke ſtrongly vpon the conſiderations of his honor; and it is certeyne, he hath a-new moued this ſtate to diſſolue the treaty with the emperor, as forced only to gayne tyme, to deceiue them in better opportunitye. The vizier doth conſtantly profeſs, that he neuer did conſent to that which is done apart by Gabor; but continewed to refer all reſolution to him: yet it was true, he durſt not refuſe a treaty offered by the Imperialls; becauſe the mufty did ſo preſs the grand ſignor, and ſo affright all the officers within the court, with the danger of a double warr, that he was not able to beare the envye and burthen alone: but both he, and diuers others of the greateſt authoritye, doe vniformely proteſt and declare, that the commiſſion of the treatye is limited to the comprehenſion of the princes their friends; and that nothing ſhalbe ratefyed without our conſents here in the port; and that they doe fraudem fraudi opponere, enterteyne the tyme for ſome aduantage; and that they will draw it on by delayes, ſo that it ſhall not come to a concluſion this yeare. In the meane while, Gabor is at liberty, if he will apprehend the occaſion: for he cannot pretend he is bound by the Turkes, when themſelues are loſe. This they promiſe, and it concurreth with their nature, and preſent condition. Euery day we expect aduice from Buda of the proceedings; and many are of opinion, that the meeting will diſſolue vpon the difficultyes propoſed on both parts.

SOMWHAT I can ſay for Gabor, reuealed to me by the wiſeſt man of this empire, ſub ſigillo ſecreti. Firſt, That he had good reaſon to make a ſodeyne prouiſion for himſelfe, when he found all his letters and negotiations hither written, and all the conſultations of the viziers vpon them, ſent to Vienna: of which the emperor making aduantage, and returning them agayne to Gabor, demanded what truſt he could repoſe in ſuch a ſtate, that thus betrayed him. Secondly, That he was ſo diſcontent at the delay of the inveſtiture, that he playnly threatened defection, and vpbrayded the Turkes with opprobrious tearmes of folly and infidelitye: inſomuch as the wiſer men ſaw the imminent danger of looſing him by the dullnes of the preſent miniſters, and had therfore reſolued to recouer him; which they thought was no way to be ſoundly done, but by nouriſhing his ambitions vpon Hungarye: and that therfore he was confident, that the peace which he had made, being the effects of feare and diſdeyne, (vpon ſatisfaction giue him in the one, that the grand ſignor was betrayed by the chiaus baſſa, who ſince dyed by a fall; and the ſolemne performance of the other, long ſince diſpatched) would not laſt; but that Gabor would fynd an eaſye occaſion to breake out; at which this ſtate would be well contented, ſo as therby they might not be preſently engaged.

THESE circumſtances I write your lordſhip, with little confidence, that ſo deſperate a relapſe can be recouered: yet it is ſtill Gabor, who hath thrice broken with the emperor, and can neuer conteyne his deſires to repoſſeſs Hungarye. I confeſs, that this leuitye makes him ſeeme vnworthy of any creditt: but euery inſtrument muſt be vſed in his owne nature; and if he be aſſured of ſupport and mony, he wilbe conſtant to his owne ends. Therfore, ſeeing ther is yet ſome apparance, that he will returne to armes, and ſome ſhow of excuſe for what is paſt, and that I haue vndertaken to pay him the 40000 dollers, when he hath beene a moneth in the feild, and that to giue me creditt is no loſs; if he be thus reuiued, I humbly beſeech his majeſtie, that I may be prouided to performe my engagement. We know the Imperialls doe not truſt him in any concluſion: yet we ſee they are content to take euery breathing, to gett 3 or 4 monethes tyme, by accepting a peace with him, which they know he will not keepe; and this ſhould teach us to be as ready to enterteyne him as often as he will riſe, when we can be no loſers to giue him ſtipendium diurnum et promeritum. I haue done whatſoeuer hath beene in my power or witt: if all fall to the ground, I may yet ſay, I am a true, though vnprofitable ſeruant: and ſo I committ your lordſhip to the bleſſed keeping of our moſt gratious God, reſting Conſtantinople, 30. June.

old ſtile, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt deuoted to ſerue yow.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

I AM glad to ſee by your lordſhips laſt of the $\frac{18}{28}$. of May, that three of mine, dated the 14. 17. and 23. of Aprill, are ſafely come to your hands; for the miſcarying of yours of the 21. of Aprill, (which is loſt, although the duplicate be arriued) did make mee feare, that ſome of mine had runne the ſame fortune. Of Gabor I do yet holde a charitable conceite, finding by weekely letters from the king of Denmarke, that he doth truſt him; and in caſe he ſhould wauer a little, to ſeeke aduantages, I ſuppoſe, that the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg (whom I do expect dayly) will confirme him in his conſtancy toward thoſe frends, whom he cannot betray without looſing himſelfe. It is ſayde of ſome, that they are too dull to be couſened. Stupidiores ſunt Theſſali, quam ut decipi poſſint: and therfore I ſhall much wonder, if Gabor, who hath ſo much wit, ſhould ſell himſelfe for nothing unto thoſe, who do account him no purchaſe (as pretending de jure unto all that he hath); and forſake his protection of the Porta, and the apoggio that now he hath gotten of the league of the Haghe. If he do play ſuch a falſe bound, he will ſurely ſmart for it; and for my part, jubeo miſerum eſſe lubenter. That which doth moſt affright me is, that wiſe men, ſuch as he is, do ſeldome committ errors; but when they do miſtake, they do precipitate farre more dangerouſly then weaker perſons. But I do ſuppoſe, that this Janus doth ſhewe one face towards Turkey, and another toward Chriſtendom: for queſtionleſſe he hath uaſt deſignes, and perhaps ſome intelligence that he may haue in Polonia, doth make him temporiſe the longer: for he is like a French faulkener, that doth flye at all; and if any ſuch innouation ſhould arriue in Poland, as is threatened, he may haue as fayre a game as any other.

OUT of England no letters haue appeared in this piazza, ſince the 14. of Aprill; and from the court I haue had but one letter theſe 15 months. Our miſunderſtandings with France do continue and increaſe, ſo that all commerce is not onely interrupted, but directly forbidden; as your lordſhip will ſee, by a printed placard here incloſed. Dr. Hector was wont to ſay of our London dames, That he could not make them well, untill he had firſt made them ſick; becauſe they were ſtill calling for phyſique without cauſe: ſo it is with thoſe two crowns, betwixt which a good and ſolide peace cannot be eſtabliſhed without a precedent warre: for the French are ſo inſolent, that they do contemne their frends; and when they are ſet uppon in good earneſt, they do quickly feare any enemyes. Perhaps they will be ſo wiſe as to remember what the Engliſh haue donne heretofore in France, and not inforce us to renewe the halfe-forgotten memory of the uictoryes of our predeceſſors againſt more warlike kings, then he who doth rayne there at this preſent.

IN Germany all things do goe hitherto uery well, the king of Denmarke hauing recouered moſt of the places, which the enemy had ſurpriſed in the marquiſate of Brandebourg; and ſo blocked up the Weſer and the Elbe, that if he will forbeare to fight, the enemy muſt retire out of that circle, or ſtarue. The olde marquis of Baden is ſafely arriued with the king of Denmarke, and the count de la Tour is not farre of.

I DO reſt infinitely comforted with the hope of ſeing your lordſhip here; and will deſire your lordſhip to beleeue, that you haue no frend nor ſeruant in the worlde, who will more truly and unfainedly rejoyce in the honor and happines of ſeruing you; whoſe abilityes, worth, and uirtues, accompanyed with a true zeale to the glory of God, and the good of our ſtate, haue ſo farre captiuated mee, that with your lordſhips fauour I will both take, and euer retayne, the title of

Venice, 30. June,
1627, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull and humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord;

SUCH as I haue, I ſend your lordſhip, unwilling to ſmother any ſparke, ſince from leſs great fyres haue beene kyndled.

TEN dayes ſince arriued a poſt from Buda, with aduice of the meeting of the commiſſioners at Komoran, who had agreed upon certeyne articles: what they were, I could not learn; but it ſeems they conteyned accounts and reſtitutions; for being ſent to the baſſa, (as he writes) he reiected them, anſwering, The grand ſignor did not treate with merchants; which had like to haue diſſolued all in confuſion; but they entered into new conference, and concluded, in the generall, a reſolution to peace; but that both parts ſhould haue tyme to ſend to their maſters for ſuch freſh inſtructions in particulars, as ſhould content them. Wherupon this meſſinger was diſpatched hither, to underſtand the ſenſe, and to receiue abſolute directions from the port. By him Gabor did write a ſharpe letter, confeſſing playnly, (ſeeing hee could no longer deny it) that he had made peace for himſelfe; but accuſed the lachete of theſe miniſters, as the cauſe therof. Firſt, that they would neuer conſtantly truſt his aduices of the oportunitye of the war, but their muſty, and booke men, who were fitter to preach upon the Alchoran, then to iudge of the ſword, and matters of ſtate: That he would be true to the grand ſignor, but yet not neglect himſelfe, when he ſaw how little care or creditt was giuen to him: That the letters written to him from the vizier were ambiguous and irreſolute; but that diuers others had openly threatned him, and warned him not to be the occaſion of a warr. And therfore, to proue himſelfe faythfull and true to his owne firſt councells, hee offered, that if the grand ſignor would breake off the treaty, and reſolue to uſe the tyme, that he was ready to march in 6 dayes. Hee amplyfyed the proſperitye of the army in Sileſia, the occaſion, and all other fitt arguments to moue them to a change of thoſe degenerate counſells of peace. Thus much the vizier himſelfe did enforme me, laying all the blame upon the lawyers, as men ignorant, by whome he had beene ouer borne: and that hee neuer conſented to peace or treaty in his owne judgment, but had proceeded ſincerely, according to his engagement to mee, as far as hee durſt; and ſo much his continual letters wittnes for him: promiſing, that hee would cauſe a conſultation, to anſwere theſe aduiſes; and that hee would not agree to any concluſion without the ſatisfaction of the princes, friends to the port, and the reſtitution of the oppreſſed liberty of Germany; which hath beene ſolemnly done, and the orders diſpatched away as the finall reſolution of this ſtate. The ſubſtance wherof I ſend your lordſhip encloſed, as I receiued it from the agent of Tranſyluania: the teſtemonye of the writer and interpreters, and for the truth de facto, that ſuch order is gone, I am aſſured therin. What effects it will worke, I dare not promiſe; but ſeeing it hath riſen principally from the letters of Gabor, whom I thought loſt, hee cannot more groſſly abuſe himſelfe, then to procure that libertye which hee will not uſe. Hee is now ſtripped naked of all defence, and will appeare uncouered in his ſhame, and none to helpe him. And ſuch ſeemes the inclination of all thoſe, by whome this treaty is handled, that there is great hope, that at leaſt the emperor ſhall not enioy his expected ſecuritye in thoſe borders, nor be able to draw downe all his forces into Germanye; eſpetially ſeeing the ouertures of peace, which the Perſian made by his ambaſſador heere arriued, hath rayſed up the ſpiritt of this empire; and it is probable, that they hearken to ſome accomodation in thoſe parts.

THERE is but one doubt, which I haue but lately conſidered, that Gabors ends are not deferring, nor a generall peace, which hee can (for the fruicts) giue himſelfe; and that therfore this letter will not ſerue his purpoſes, which are, that the grand ſignor ſhould make a war openly upon the emperor, that he may ſwallow Hungarye, or elſe hee is as well as hee can bee already; and neyther for mony alone, nor no reſpect of others, will hazard his owne. This I gather from his laſt letters, which ayme at the oportunitye of catching ſomwhat. Yet hee may be better then I looke for; for there is nothing that I may not equally hope and deſpayre of him. His uſuall motto is, If I thought my ſhirt knew my counſells, I would teare it off. I refer your lordſhip to the text, being better ſenſe, then Latin; which if it begett alterations, the diſſolution of the treaty, and any breach, etſi leves velitationes et incurſiones, they wilbe more uiolent and incureable then euer; and therfore I wiſh I had that noble oyle ready to maynteyne Gabor, if hee deſerue it. I did not expect this new occaſion: but quo inopinatior, eo acceptior. I reſolued, like men parting out of this world, to haue finiſhed my tyme, and uaniſhed away in ſilence and prayers, ſeeing I could doe no more ſeruice; but I am unable to giue ouer this chace, while there is any ſent.

THE tragedy and ſpightfull execution of a Venetian, I doubt not, wilbe famous among yow, who was ſtaked before the great church in Galata, in ſcorne of chriſtians; where wee all ſuffered iniurye or deſpight, and muſt beare it with thanckeſullneſs. There are come two ordinaries from Venice, without any letters from England, ſo that I borrow of the baylo (a worthy man) all I know of my owne countrye. I hope the cauſe is greater then buſines at Conſtantinople. From your lordſhip I haue not heard ſince May, ſuppoſing yow are not in Venice. My laſt to your lordſhip were of the $\frac{2}{12}$. and $\frac{16}{26}$. June, with originall of the encloſed duplicates, with many coppyes of the negotiation of Gabors laſt ambaſſador, and letters to and from the prince and captain Quad, and my anſweres, which I hope are arriued; wherof ſome I haue now renewed, and ſent open to your lordſhip, deſiring yow to giue them a couer according to their directions to my lord Conwey. And ſo, wiſhing your lordſhip the true reward of your uertues and labours, I committ yow to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{14}{24}$.
July, 1627.

To Doctor GOAD.

SIR,

IT being now 15 moneths ſince I wrote yow the encloſed, in anſwere of one of yours receiued, and not hearing from yow, and beleeuing that your loue to me, and affection to further my endeauor to gett bookes, would not haue ſuffered yow to omitt to giue me thoſe inſtructions deſired, which might haue better enabled mee, I doe conclude, that both originalls and duplicates haue miſcarried by ſome enuious hand in Venice; where my letters haue often found takers up in the Bola, that had no intereſt in them. I haue herin complayned to the ſenate, and found ſome apparance of care, but not equall to that of the enemy, who hath watched ouer mee, more then his labour and diligence was worth. Therfore for my diſcharge, both of duty to his grace, and of my reſpect to yow, I haue renewed part of them, not as coppies now of uſe, but as wittneſſes at leaſt of my ciuilitye. The mentioned tranſlation of the 37th article of the Nicen counſell, I doe not ſend, being that I hope to bring the booke, which yet reſts in my hands. Now I ſhall trye the patriarch, who ſeeming to thincke it unworthy to bargayne, hath promiſed, at my departure, that hee will lett mee chooſe in his ſtore. Inter pares, he hath many uertues to commend him; but a Cretan by birth, and long bred among theſe degenerate Greekes, and tirannous infidells, that it were more then humane force to reſiſt the infection and corruption of dayly conuerſation and example. Therfore how I ſhall come off, I know not: ſure I am, I haue meritted much, and many wayes, of him, and not liked all his courſes; and that perhaps will hinder mee. Obſequium amicos, veritas odium parit. But wee remayne good friends, and he profeſſeth that I ſhall ſee the reall fruicts. Here is arriued a coloyre, that hath beene long in England, called Mataxa, of Cephalonia, who pretends to haue beene acceptable to his grace, and well knowne to yow, from whom he hath brought me welcome remembrances. As yet I know him little, but hee ſpeakes gratefully of our nation, and ingenuouſly of his enterteynment. His comming hither is principally to bring the Greeke ſtamp, and two Duchmen to order it, and to teach the uſe, which are aboord an Engliſh ſhip, and wilbe difficult to land without diſcouery, and dangerous to be knowne to theſe haters of knowledge. What the deſſigne may be, I cannot yet penetrate; it may hinder the patriarchs purpoſes to furniſh mee, which were grounded upon a deſire (as he pretended) to cauſe many unknowne authors to be printed, and to take the light from under the buſhell of ignorance and obſcuritye. If he can ſafely print, I will not enuye them; but I 1627. know their coppyes will neuer haue creditt, nor, I doubt, truth. Himſelfe cannot ouerſee all, and few other are able, or fitt to be truſted. And my opinion is, that it may hinder mee for a tyme, and looſe the oportunitye which I haue opened; but neuer take effect, but lye bye for a curioſitye, like the great clocke ſent the grand ſignor, which neuer went 24 howers, but ſtands up for a monument. I will obſerue them as well as I can, and uſe them for my beſt aduantage. This Greeke tells me of a Jew convertite that came into England, and bringing a ſede from me, abuſed it and himſelfe; and conſequently ſome aſperſion of leuitye could not eſcape me. It is true, I gaue him a certificate, at the requeſt of the patriarch, who was his teſtemony to me, as I can ſhow. I denyed him twice, and told him how ſuch uagabonds did diſcreditt his church, and had cloſed almoſt all the liberall hands of charety toward the true poore and oppreſſed, that might come to ſeeke releefe, all men being ſcandaliſed at the name of wandring Greekes; but at his too great inſtance, and the example of all the reſidents, I gaue, I hope, that which hee ſhowed; which if it had beene obſerued, was ſo cold and relatiue, ſimplex teſtimonium, like Sir Walter Raleighs buck warrants, neuer denyed, and neuer ſerued, that I thought euery magiſtrate might perceiue it was extorted from me. I haue refuſed hundreds, and well knowne their condition, and how much too eaſely the patriarch grants ſuch begging licences, to be rid of turbulent knaues; and, if hee will take warning, hee knowes enough. If therfore eyther his grace, or any other of my friends, haue taken ſcandall at my hand, I deſire yow to giue them this ſatisfaction, and truth from mee; that I did it at the patriarchs earneſt recommendation, and in good company, agaynſt my owne judgment and cuſtome; though de facto it was true, a Jew become a chriſtian, and therfore perſecuted by the Jewes: what his heart was, man cannot ſearch; but to make amends, I ſuppoſe I haue preuented 20 more from troubling Paules, by aſſuring them they would be whipped for counterfayts, with the patriarchs and my paſs pinned on their foreheads.

To his grace I now preſume not to write, becauſe my matter is not ſufficient to warrant his trouble, nothing I can aduiſe from hence being ſo good now, as poetrye, aut prodeſſe, aut delectare. The warrs of Aſya, which takes up this ſtate, are too remote to concerne us, and are yet but in preparation. My laſt to his grace were of the 17. Feb. encloſing one from the patriarch, which being arriued, will giue ſatisfaction for ſome tyme paſt, and diſcharge me of omiſſion. Be yow then pleaſed to be my excuſe and pleadge; and ſo I committ yow to the bleſſed keeping of our gratious God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{7}{1}$.
July, 1627.

My loue and ſeruice to Sir Rob. Hatton, and doctor Fetly; yow ſhall alſo doe me a fauor to tell doctor Donne, That of the ſame dates of the 8. and 22. Aprill, I wrote him at large in the ſame ſubiect, which haue runne one fortune. Many other letters written to his grace I haue not heard of; one, wherin I ſent the inſtructions of cardinall Bandini to a Greeke, to negotiate with the patriarch, and another of the 12. Feb. 1625.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

MY laſt to your lordſhip were of the 30th of June, ſtilo novo; whereof you ſhall receaue a duplicate here incloſed. This day I haue receaued your lordſhips, dated the ^{2}. of June; by which I ſee, that you haue more faith to hope, then ground to judge, that Gabor will hold good. If he do fayle us, he will deceaue a greate many; for the king of Denmarke doth builde uppon him, and hath, at his inſtance, ſent the adminiſtrator of Magdebourgh to command the army in Sileſia. He arriued at Padoua uppon the 8. of July, where I did meete him, and bring him from thence to my howſe at Venice, where he is lodged at this preſent, intending, within four dayes, to goe towards Spalatro, uppon a gally which this ſtate is prouiding for him. He doth paſſe here incognito; but I going into the college uppon the 12th, to make his quality knowen vnto the ſtate, they did admit him priuately (according to his deſire) into the college uppon the 14th, where he was receaued punctually, according to the eminency of his dignity. By the copye of a letter written from the Denmarke ambaſſador in Paris unto Gabor, you will 1627.

ſee how things ſtand in that court; but becauſe he doth ſeeme a little to taxe our gratious maſter, I do intend to ſend by this prince an antidote againſt that poyſon. One of our nation hauing begunne a treaty with a Venetian merchant, I called all the nation to my howſe yeſterday, and there publiſhed your lordſhips act, in ſuch forme as you may ſee here incloſed. I haue no letters out of England ſince the 14th of Aprill: four of my diſpatches were intercepted at once by the gouernor of Calis; in which loſſe your lordſhip hath your part, for ſo many of your pacquets as went vnder my couer. As ſoone as the prince is departed from hence, your lordſhip ſhall heare from mee, God willing, more at large: in the meane time, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 17. July, 1627, ſti.o nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE prince of Tranſyluania hath ſent another expreſs poſt hither, principally to me, yet hauing ſome letters for the viziers, perſwading conſtantly and feruently the diſſolution, or at leaſt the protraction, of the treatye with the emperor. The cauſe of which his earneſt change your lordſhip will diſcouer in the encloſed paper, ariſing from an obligation to aſſiſt his brother the elector of Brandeburgh; which he cannot ſafely doe, if included in the Turkiſh peace; and to ſatisfye this ſtate, that whatſoeuer he had concluded apart, was with reſeruation of all iuſt occaſions, to be futurely giuen by the Imperialls, and the conſent and approbation of the grand ſignor: and to this end, he ſent the coppy of his treaty, which differed in no word from that which I receiued, and ſhowed theſe miniſters long ſince; only ſome exceptions inſerted in parentheſis, the ſence remayning whole, and one article at the end, referring to the ratification of the port, all which might be putt in, left out, and added at pleaſure; and being they deſtroy all that was done, in my opinion, would neuer haue beene accepted of by the emperor, though the excuſe paſs well here. His buſines to me was to demande the 40000 dollers; which if I had not ready, to make a proteſt, (for ſo I underſtand it) that the fayling of the couenants hath not beene on his part. Letter of credence I haue none: only his agent came to my houſe, and deſired the Duch ambaſſador might be preſent; where he read his maſters inſtructions, part in Hungar, which he enterpreted, and part in Latine, written with the princes owne hand, that ſomuch as concerned the mony, and the proteſt, might be ſhowed us authentically. I did not a little wonder at this roundnes; and being unprouided of coyne, was unfurniſhed of my moſt matteriall anſwere: but conſidering that the prince had laboured ſincerely the ſuſpenſion of the Turkiſh treaty, and that I collected by this writing, that hee was engaged to the Brandeburgh, and would for his ſake doe ſomewhat, I was ſorry I had not meanes to giue him preſent ſatiſfaction; for the agent required at laſt only depoſition and aſſurance. My anſweres conſiſted on theſe parts: That the peace made with the emperor was the firſt breach; and that therfore the prince could not expect payment, untill his majeſtie were reconfirmed in his ſinceritye by publicque action, and according to the articles, pro ſingulis menſibus, quibus militavit. Secondly, That it would appeare ſtrange, that his maſter had more conſcience of his confœderacy and allyance with the elector, then of that made with their majeſties; and that though the cauſe might ſeeme one, yet if hee tooke armes only for his brothers ſake, without reſpect of his league with the other princes and ſtates, hee might thincke us uery raw not to ſee the practice; and too eaſy to pay him for a ſeruice done to others, to which he was tyed by a ſeperate obligation. Notwithſtanding I declared firmely, That their majeſties would not ſearch too narrowly into his heart, but judge him by his actions: that if hee really did joyne 15000 men with the troopes in Sileſia, and inuaded the enemies dominion, it ſhould breed no controuerſye from what affection a juſt worke were done: it might be applyed to the good cauſe, and hee ſhould be truly ſatisfyed here in this citty, whatſoeuer had beene on the part of his majeſtie contracted; for others I had no commiſſion to bynd my ſelfe. To the demand of 1627. depoſition, I replyed, That there was no iuſt cauſe of ſo playne miſtruſt, and that I was not able to doe it without expreſs order; for the bills being come as far as Venice, (ſo that his maieſtie had performed) the rumor of his peace was ſo powrefull, that it had ſtaggered all counſells and reſolutions; and it might be thought ill huſbandry to looſe the farther exchange hither, ſeing there was expected no uſe of the monye; and that I did therfore conceiue, the ambaſſador at Venice, or ſome other, that had the direction of that buſines, had in wiſedome made a ſtopp and pawſe, untill they might receiue his maieſties farther pleaſure declared; and therfore the want of caſh proceeding from their owne inconſtancye and countertreatyes, his proteſt would returne, at leaſt take little place in the judgement of the world. I was forced to uſe this fraud of excuſe, to bring him as neare beleife as I could, that the mony was on the way; which ſomuch pleaſed him, that hee preſſed mee to know if it were poſſible to ſend an expreſs to Venice for the bills; and that then hee doubted not to ſatisfye and aſſure the prince: which I undertooke to doe, but could not promiſe, that they might not be returned, or otherwiſe diſpoſed; yet, that in the generall, I would ſtill ſtand engaged to pay the 40000 dollers, when his maſter had ſerued an entire moneth, according to the confœderation. I deſired a coppy of the princes letter, at leaſt of ſo much as was in Latine; which was written, that I might ſee the originall; which the agent promiſed, but ſince hath repented and refuſed, as hauing no other commiſſion then to read it to me: ſo requiring to heare it the ſecond tyme, my ſecretary tooke the breefe encloſed, which is the ſubſtance of the whole. With this anſwere from mee, and with a confirmation, and renewing of the viziers laſt orders to deferre the concluſion of peace, and to tranſact nothing without the confœderate princes, the currier is diſpatched the 22. preſent; and Iſuph agha, a ſeruant of the grand ſignor, is ſent with him to the baſſa of Buda, to draw into the feild in the frontyre, and to conforme to the counſells of Gabor, which, what they will bring forth, I will nomore auſpicate. Yet yow may pleaſe to obſerue, what I haue alway written, that the reſolution of this ſtate did depend upon Gabor; and that he could engage them as he pleaſed, by reaſons or pretended neceſſitye, which is maniſeſt in this change, ariſing from his perſwations and intereſt; and it is uery probable, eyther by the emperor, who will not endure this delay, or for the cauſe of the elector, or the ſenſe of his owne expoſed honor, he may be beaten up into armes; and that if the mony were ready, (without which he may perhaps be enforced) hee would without delay leade the dance, and confirme the Germans in their opinion of him, that he is not to be truſted by them ſleeping. I hope his maieſtie will giue order to preſerue my creditt, which though I haue entangled without expreſs order, yet not without ground and intimation, and for the neceſſity of holding up the cauſe; and I am ſtill perſwaded, his high prudence will not thincke that ſumme caſt away, to ſee that prince once more engaged: for if hee ſhould continew but one moneth in action, Germany would yet fynd 6 moneths eaſe by him. I write all I know, ſo it is my duty; and leaue the uſe to his maieſties and your lordſhipps wiſedomes, and my ſelfe to your honorable patronage.

Conſtantinople, 26.
July, 1627.

ONE circumſtance of importance I haue omitted: Gabor did order this laſt poſt to returne by Buda, becauſe hee ſhould fynd him in Caſſouia; whither hee doth not remoue without a deſſigne, and wilbe held a cloud ouer Hungarye.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

BY three ordinarie diſpatches from Venice, I haue not heard from England, nor from your lordſhip, except by this laſt, which brought me a letter recommending the cauſe of one Mr. Hyde, made priſoner by a Turke in Dalmatia or Boſna, dated in Padua, the 19. paſt. As I receiue it for a fauour to be commanded any thing by your lordſhip, ſo it ſhall bee a happines to mee, if in effects I can ſhow my affection to doe you ſeruice: but I feare, in this caſe, I ſhall only diſcouer the baſe gouerment of this empire, and the weakenes of juſtice. The buſines was long ſince repreſented to me by the conſull of Patras, who wrote me, that the oppreſſor was departed for this cyttye, and directed me where to fynd, at leaſt to ſeeke him. I 1627.

am not ſleeply in the protection of my countrymen, but preſently went to the vizier, and complayned as the cauſe required; who being uerry ſorry for the iniury, gaue me an eſpetiall warrant for his apprehenſion, which I deliuered to a merchant that ſollicited for him, and appoynted him a drogerman to follow it. Wee haue found that hee is a Janizzarye, cuſtomer of the ſcale of Baſtia. Such is the miſerie Spachee.
of this ſtate, that the ſoldiers farme all things under the name of beneſitts, and pay the grand ſignor what they pleaſe. This fellow is much indebted to the ſtate, and wee hoped to haue taken him hanging about the treaſurers to renew his charge; but hee hath not appeared: mony hath beene ſpent to fynd him, and wee were firſt told hee lodged in the villages, and came to the cytty in the night; ſince, that hee is married in the way, and will ſhortly come hither, where I will uſe all my power to puniſh him; but doubt that no mony can be recouered from him. Firſt, Becauſe he owes to the ſtate, which wilbe firſt ſerued; and that I fynd many Greekes, and ſome Turkes, in our caſe, attending for him, who alſo ſhall haue precedence. Laſtly, His creditors begin to feare, that hee will not come at all; and then wee are all deſperate where to ſeeke him, or how to deale with him. There is but one common way, when wee know where hee ſettles, to ſend a command to bring him to ſatisfaction or juſtice; which muſt be done by a meſſinger of the court, at the charge of at leaſt 200 dollers: and I haue found them ſo corrupt for chriſtians, as for 20 more they will lett any man goe, and returne us, Non eſt inventus, or Non ſolvendo. If I can take him in this citty, I will perſecute him, and recouer what I can; though being a brother of that order, the kyng can haue little right of him. Thus much I will certefye his brother in ſatisfaction, and declaration of your lordſhips power ouer mee.

THE preſent buſines, and new trickes of Gabor, I haue choſen to ſend yow in a coppy of my preſent diſpatch to my lord Conwey, where yow ſhall fynd him no Phœnix, yet as rare a bird, nigro ſimillima cygno. I can meddle no more with him: hee is incomprehenſible, and moſt men would beleeue by his negotiations here, that he hath new purpoſes. I ſend yow the coppy of his letter or proteſt, his laſt ſcene played with me, and my anſwere. If I had had the mony, I had taken him: now I pray God I bee not taken my ſelfe; for I uenture to helpe him up, without any remembrance from England, where, perhaps, I am forgotten. Now your lordſhips letters wilbe ſubſidies to me; for in 4 moneths I haue not heard any thing. It may be, this uacancye is a comoditye. Better to know nothing, then too much. So I wiſh your lordſhip all happines: kyſſing your noble ladyes hands, I reſt

Conſtantinople, 26. July,
old ſtile, 1627.

Your Lordſhips.

YOUR lordſhip will not be offended, that I haue uſed your name to an honeſt purpoſe in my anſwere to the agent. I haue not done it categorically, but as a ſuppoſition: beleeue me, I knew not what to ſay.

Eſtrattione della Lettera ſcritta dal' PRENCIPE di Tranſiluania, al' ſuo Agente THOMASO BURSOS, Reſidente in Conſtantinopoli, viſta li $\frac{16}{26}$. Lulio, 1627.

NE è uenuto il' ſigniore Theodorico eroſin, nobile Morauo, da parte del' figlio del' re di Dania, quale con 15000 ſoldati è arriuato in Sileſia, et iui congiontoſi con le rimaſti 14000 del' quondam conte Mansfelt. Deſiderando la unione ſeco delle forze noſtre, per procedere conforme le diſſegniate intentioni: il' che noi non potemo fare, per non eſſerne datto il' denaro promeſſo dal' re della Gran Brettagna, et dal' re di Dania. Però raccomandiamo alla fedelta uoſtra, che dobbiate proteſtare li ſigniori ambaſciatori coſta, chè ſe noi non uerremo paghati del' denaro promeſſone, ne è impoſſibile procedere oltre. Et ſe noi non andaromo a congiongerſi con li detti eſſerciti, ò mandarli alcun noſtro auxilio, è per mancamento del' paghamento, non per neſſuna noſtra colpa; come anco li admonirete, che doueuano hauer procurato con li miniſtri della Porta, a differirſi la trattatione della pace con l'Imperatore; perche in queſti dua ponti conſiſte il' tutto.

SE il' esborſſo ne uerra fatto, noi con le noſtre forze procederemo ſubito, perche hauemo giuſta cauſa et raggione contra il' Imperatore: et ſenza leſione della conſcienza 1627. enza noſtra potemo andarli contra, per hauer egli offeſo li noſtri parenti et loro ſtati, leuandoli li loro beni; quali noi ſemo oblighati di diffendere et aſſiſtere. Lò che gia con expreſſo noſtro, hauemo intimato a eſſo Imperatore, che ſè non fara reſtituire il' ducato preſo dal Valſteyn in Sileſia, et il' illi, es nella Marchia, il' ducato di Croſne (nel' qual' ducato detto quondam conte Mansfelt haueua formato quella ſua militia) ambidua appartenenti al' parente noſtro Brandemburgh, per l' affinita noſtra con lui ſemo oblighati di agiutarlo a recuperare il' ſuo. Si che hauendo noi hora queſta opportunita et giuſte raggioni, ſè la aſſegniatione ne uerra adeſto data, fidelmente et conſtantemente, ſubito procederemo, et eſſequitemo queſto ſi è contrato. Ma ſenza quella non potemo fare niente.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt to your lordſhip of the 17th of July, ſtilo novo, I haue receaued your lordſhips of the $\frac{16}{26}$. of June, with many duplicates, copyes, and memorialls incloſed, and a pacquet for the queen of Bohemia, and an other for Mr. Queſtor, which I ſent away yeſterday; the one by the way of Amſterdam, the other by the way of Antwerp. Since the 14. of Aprill, wee receaued no letters out of England vntill this weeke, and now they are come all togither; and your lordſhip ſhall haue your part of the glutt.

HAUING diligently peruſed all the papers which do concerne Gabor, I do fynd my ſelfe au bout du mon latin: and ſeeing your lordſhip hath deſcended ſo lowe, as to require my poore aduiſe, I will not excuſe my ſelfe with a compliment, but like an honeſt man tell you ingeniouſly what I thinke both of the proceeding of his miniſters with you, and your proceeding with them. Your lordſhip hauing the power and commiſſion to disburſe the 10000 l. promiſed by his majeſtie, you muſt needs be more cautelous, and more ſubject to ſuſpect falſe play, then I, who do know nothing but what is communicated vnto mee by way of information. In their propoſition I do fynd pretentions of an olde debt, expoſtulations grounded therevppon, excuſationes non petitas, evaſiones & tergiverſationes, ſo that I conceaue they were ſent rather to ſound the forde, then to conclude any thing. Your lordſhips anſwer is round, ſincere, categoricall; and your offering to depoſitate the monny in the hands of the baylo, doth cut the roote of ambiguities. The relation of your Turkiſh intelligencer doth not affright mee; for I am of opinion, that Gabor cannot ſerue our maſters well, if he do not firſt coſen the Turkes; for he did ſee them inclining to a peace, and therfore, to breake their deſigne, (which was to haue the emperor ſell him vnto them) it was neceſſary for him to preuent them, and to make them feare that he would ſell them to the emperor. He cannot be ignorant of what hath paſſed at Colmar, concerning the repatriating of the king of Bohemia with the emperor, and of a dyette to be held this month at Milhuſen in Torringia, whither the king our maſter, the king of Denmarke, the king of Sweden, ſend ambaſſadors to treate of an vniuerſall peace in Germany; and therfore, if he do fall from vs, and truſt to the broken reede of Egypt, wee make him and the Turke both ſmart for their deſertion. In ſumme, my opinion ſuper totam materiam is, that if he hath not loſt his witts, wee cannot looſe him; and it cannot enter into my head, that he ſhould be ſo baſe as to ſeeke to cheate vs of 10000 l. after he had quitted the party: for if I were in your lordſhips place, I would looſe the monny, vppon condition that wee might come out of this laberinth, and know what to truſt vnto. Sæpe, premente Deo, fert Deus alter opem. If wee were ſure to haue loſt him, wee would tack about, and ſteere another way: and therfore I will be bolde to counſell your lordſhip to braue him and his agents, and to let them know, that they haue had honor enough to be admitted into the league of the Haghe, with princes of faith and honor; and that if he will leaue true friends to truſt to falſe enemyes, the ſooner he will declare his pleaſure, the more he ſhall oblidge vs: for when it ſhall appeare, that he hath betrayed vs, and wee not forſaken him, wee will proceede in ſuch ſort, that perhaps he may be the firſt who ſhall repent it; and I am ſure that wee ſhall gayne by the bargayne.

THE adminiſtrator of Magdebourg departed from hence vppon the 30th of July, ſtilo novo; and if he do fynd any humidum radicale left in the body of that prince, I do ſuppoſe, that he will reuiue him. I am afrayd, that I haue troubled your lordſhip to much with ſo free a diſcourſe; and therfore with my owne and my wifes affectionate loue and ſeruice to your lordſhip and your noble lady, I will here leaue you to the protection of the Almighty, and reſt

Venice, 7th Aug. 1627. ſtilo nouo. Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

AS yet we reſt without any knowledge of England. From your lordſhip I haue receiued two letters, one in recommendation of a Venice merchant, to whom I haue offered whatſoeuer ſhalbe in my power, to aſſiſt him; and expreſſed, as heartely as I could, my gladnes to enterteyne your commands. The other, of a later date, the 9. June, by ſea; which being all the refreſhing I haue had in three moneths, and that I haue no matter of my owne, I will trouble your lordſhip at this tyme with a bare anſwere, in ſome poynts, perhaps, not unneceſſarye.

IN my owne, and in the name of that ſocietye for whom I ſerue, I thancke your lordſhip that you haue giuen countenance to thoſe declarations and complaynts ſent you, of the uſurpation of the Venice edicts upon our antient priuiledges. Wherin if ſomewhat be not done by authoritye to regulate us, unpleaſing diſputes of worſe conſequence will arriſe betweene us.

AT this preſent wee haue a ſhip in port, deſirous to lade for Venice, to gayne the 5 dollers impoſed newly upon the currents at Zant; ſo that wee muſt ſerue them upon baſe conditions, to haue leaue to bring mony to trade in their drye dominions. The Venetians haue made as much ſhow to deſire, and I know they neede this ſhip; and by ſundry motions haue enterteyned her in hopes neare 20 dayes; and wee too unworthely hang after them, and they as highly worke upon our greedines. The delay hath ſeemed to depend upon the old controuerſye of conſolage, and to fynd out a temper; which, for this tyme, hath beene agreed betweene the baylo and me, who is a man of ſingular uertue and good nature. The tearmes are, That my merchants, nor maſter, nor any for them, ſhall enter into no bond, nor promiſe, nor appeare in noe cancellaria, to preiudice my right or demand of conſolage; but the ſhip ſhalbe freighted ſimply betweene merchants: and I am content to ouerſee who are the laders, and to take my conſolage of the maſter, which the Venetians are agreed to allow him in another name: and this is done betweene the ambaſſadors for the preſent, with mutuall promiſe to make no aduantage of any act of freindſhip to accomodate the neceſſityes of both our nations: though I ſuppoſe I haue gotten much both in forme and ſubſtance. Firſt, By enterrupting that order, the foundation of all this diſorder, to be bound in their cancellaria. And next, That really I haue my dues payd; and the Venetians know it comes out of their purſe ſub alio nomine, and that I take it in the name of conſolage. And if thus the maſters at Venice will prouide for themſelues, that they may aduance in freight, or otherwiſe, to giue us our right, we doe not deſire to contraſt with the ſtranger; and if we haue our conſolage, and that they in effect pay it, we will not contend by what name, nor by whoſe hands we receiue yt: though thus much alſo I would not yeild, if I had any hope of equiualent protection from my ſuperiors: wherin the bailo and I am agreed, to preſs a ſentence and deciſion, to auoyd many unkynd ſucceeding litigations. In the meane tyme, the companye is pleaſed with the ſubſtance, which is monye. Now your lordſhip will thincke, as I did, that wee were accorded; and ſo for that poynt we were: but theſe Adriaticque merchants agayne play the pedlers with us; and being come to drawing of charter party, will not bynd themſelues to more than halfe lading the ſhip, (wherby ours ſhall loſe their hoped priuiledge at Zant, and aduance nothing) nor ſuffer any ſubiect of the grand ſignor to putt one bale upon her, which is a meere tyrannye. I deſired, I confeſs, at firſt not to permitt the Venetians att all to uſe our ſhipping, unleſs they did come to my gate to ſeeke my leaue, and to tender my conſolage; and could haue found this ſhip freight of Chriſtians, Perotts, and Jewes, that are free to trade in Venice: but thoſe did threaten them with proteſts, ſo as none durſt conclude with me. When I complayned to the baylo, he ſeemed to diſauow ſuch courſes as uniuſt, and promiſed to 1627. prohibite no man: but that being only a priuation, was uneffectuall; for unleſs all would come in under Venetian titles, they menaced to be forbidden landing at Venice; and when, to fullfill our lading, theſe ſubiects were content to doe ſo, then the Venetians would not permitt any company in their trading. To theſe ſeruile rules they tye us to ſerue them; and our neceſſitye enforceth the merchant to giue way. And what the concluſion wilbe, more than our loſs euery way, I cannot foreſee; but doe reſolue, if they breake with us now, that they ſhall neuer be ſerued here by Engliſh during my reſidence, and as long after, as my ſucceſſor will preuayle upon my inſtructions.

THE archbiſhop of Smirna is perſecuted by the French ambaſſador by many ſcandalls and calumnies, and the baylo hath undertaken his defence at Rome. Upon the beſtowing of that chayre at Scio, many great matters doe depend; eſpecially the ſettling or utter defeate of the new ſufraganeo apoſtolico; who, ſeeing I reſiſted his acceptance here, hath ſought that ſeate, and would anchor there. If we preuayle for our biſhop, we cutt off the French and Jeſuites ſtrength and hopes: if not, we muſt uſe more ſharpe remedyes, rather then to ſuffer the tyranny of their faction, that doth oppreſs euen all the honeſt and moderate Romaniſts. And therfore your lordſhip ſhall meritt of the publicque, to perfect what for my ſake you haue pleaſed to undertake.

OF Gabor I heare no more, and ignorance is the beſt knowledge of him. What aſſurance he hath giuen the kyng of Denmarke, is out of my reach: but I am well grounded, that he hath made peace, as I haue enformed your lordſhip by many letters, coppyes, and his owne negotiations; and that his haſt did precipitate the Turkes. And though now agayne he hath laboured to prolong the concluſion here, yet I cannot ſettle any judgement upon him. The quarrell of Brandeburgh may moue him, and he appeares agayne in his frontyre; but proteſts he will not march without mony, and I haue none, nor order, nor intimation how to proceed with him. Sir Henry Wotton baptized him long ſince filius occaſionis, and I will add of him, pater mutationis: and ſo I wiſh I had neuer knowne him, but as the Jeſuitts deſcribe him.

THE laſt weeke I receiued a letter from the great vezier marching toward Perſia, which I ſend your lordſhip for the curioſitye: wherin you will fynd him promiſe victories, which wee beleeue not. It is out of doubt, the braue old man will fight; but the crafty Perſian doth ſcorne their multitudes, ſua mole perituras. Thus, returning your lordſhip infinite thanckes, and the deuotions of an honeſt man to ſerue you, kyſſing your ladyes hands for my ſelfe and my companion, I reſt

Conſtantinople, 14/24.
Aug. 1627.

Your Lordſhips.

To the Same.

My Lord,

RATHER to giue your lordſhip account, that upon the inſtant of this diſpatch, arriued * two of your letters, then that I can add any thing to my formers; from England I haue none, being here tortured with uarious rumors.

* 30. Jun.
17. July.

WHAT the preſence of the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh, and the cauſe of the elector, may worke upon Gabor, I will not by deſpayre preiudice. Your lordſhip wilbe ſatisfyed, before this come to your hands, by his owne and his miniſters negotiations with me, that I had reaſon to thincke worſe then euer I did write; for my deſires to keepe him up did nouriſh euery ſparke of hope or apparance, that he might rather chooſe to deceiue his enemyes then friends. Errare erit mihi lucro: perhaps he ſaw a neceſſitye, that he muſt take armes for another quarell; and therfore preſſed to gett poſſeſſion of the monye: but yett he hath ſo ouerdone his part on this ſyde, by which I can only judge him, that I muſt beleeue, without mony he will doe little: and in that poynt your lordſhip writes me nothing, what your opinion is, of the firſt aduice of 10000 pounds, ſtipulated to be here payd in June paſt. The ſhame is more then the loſs, to want ſo miſerable ſummes for ſo great ſeruices. I haue ſpent of my owne, not hauing one penny of the ſtate, aboue 3000 dollo; and would haue uentured all, if I had not with it uentured my diſcretion. I conclude Gabor is a ſubtill prince, and not to be taken with the oratorye and prædications of the Denmarke ambaſſador, unleſs they be double guilt. He writes playnly, Non arma ſine ſine ſtipendijs haberi queunt. His wiſdome, I thincke, is not to be relyed upon. Feede his hopes in Hungarye, and help him to gett ſomwhat by troubles, and he will proue a paralell to the c^{nt}. S^{nt}. Paul, till he fall like him. I am uery ſorry for the miſcarriage of letters, and for my part therin; eſpecially, becauſe I know not the dates, and to ſupply them wilbe too late. By my calculation, myne of Aprill, and the beginning of May, haue beene loſt with their duplicates; by which I wrote to the lords concerning our controuerſyes with the Venetians, and to the company to inſtruct them how to proſecute their cauſe. If there were in them any buſines for his majeſties ſeruice, I wrote the ſubſtance to your lordſhip, and hope that from thence you haue ſupplyed it with your owne. You ſhall doe me a fauour, if you can aduiſe me what dates of myne were in thoſe packetts, hauing ſent bills of exchange, and ordered ſome things in my owne priuat, the fift of May.

MY returne by Venice is diuerted by the troubles of France; but the expreſſion of your lordſhips fauour to me, is as far aboue my meritt as requitall; only my affection to ſerue you is equall to yt. Whatſoeuer you create me, I know you will mayn-teyne in me. I dare not ſtriue with your lordſhip. Hoc ipſum amantis eſt, non onerare eum laudibus: and therfore I will only ſay, et nihil poſſum ardentius dicere, I loue and honor your lordſhip heartely, ſincerely, as late, 1627.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{11}{21}$. Aug.

Your Lordſhips.

From Lord CARLETON: With Advices to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

IT is a hard matter well to excuſe my ſilence, ſince my reuocation from hence; and better confeſſe a fault, with demaund of pardon: but the truth is, being much, and for the moſt part, in motion abroad, and neuer leſſe quiet, then when I thought to be quiet at home, I could neuer finde my ſelf in fit humor to entertaine my wonted correſpondencies. Now being here againe, in my wonted ſtation, all which hath paſt my hands at home and abroad, with great multiplicitie and varietie of accidents, both priuat and publique, (which I take no pleaſure to raccount) ſeems to me like a dreame: but I am awakened on the one ſide with the goode ſucceſſes of his majeſties armie in the skirts of France, and this here in theſe frontiers; and on the other, with Tillies paſſing the Elb; which is a dead blowe to the king of Denmarke. For the particularities of theſe accidents, I haue deſired Sir Iſaac Wake to tranſmit to you ſuch aduertiſments I ſend to him at large; and becauſe I perceaue by your letters to the queen of Bohemia, of the $\frac{17}{27}$. of June, your returne is like to be protracted till Chriſtmas, you are like to heare from me out of theſe parts more then once. And as long as there is any hope of Gabors ſtirring, I wiſh not that you may ſtirre; but when that fayles, and there is no more then owr marchants affaires to handle, I ſhall be glad we may meete and make merrie (as much as theſe ſad times will ſuffer) at home; where I hope to be before the time you aſſigne for your returne: yet, here, I haue many buſineſſes, and this is no place of quick diſpatch. But I muſt confeſſe, I preferre negotiation with ſure men, though ſlowe, before dealing with ſuch as are prompt and haſtie, but variable and inconſtant, if not falſe, from the beguinning. Of theſe I haue had experience more then once, ſince I left theſe parts; and I finde your lordſhip hath your part with your Tranſiluanian, who will ſmart in time for it, as others will; but I wiſh we had more comfort then that comes to. Meane while this we may take, that we haue done the parts of honeſt men; and I aſſure your lordſhip, your diligent and diſcreete indeauours haue theyr deſerued interpretation and acceptance, both at home, by the king owr gratious maſter, and his deare ſiſter here. It will be ſome further contentment to you, to know what true and tender affection is conſtantly continued betwixt this royal brother and ſiſter; and that my laſt letters owt of England ſay, there is goode hope of ſeeing ſome of thoſe fruicts of the loue well ſettled, ſince the remoue of ſtrangers owt of owr court, betwixt owr king and queene, as here we haue plentie of this queen, which growe to great ripenes. His majeſty hath ſhortned his progreſſe to be neerer affaires; and there is much ſpeach at home of parlement, which ſucceeding well, may rectifie all owr domeſtique diſorders. We trauellers can contribute nothing but owr prayers; and it is a buſineſſe

1627. buſineſſe I had rather trauayle far, then be at; though my vote goeth to haue one, and that quickly. Thus I wiſh your lordſhip, with your noble lady, all happines, and when your time comes, a ſafe returne home; euer reſting

Hagh, this $\frac{13}{23}$. of
Aug. 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

D. CARLETON.

Aduices from my Lord CARLETON to Sir ISAKE WAKE.

THE taking of Grole is as ſhamſull to the Spanyards, as honorable to the States, and prince of Orange, in regard count Henry Vandenburgh, vnto whom the conduct of the army was committed, hauing vowed the reliefe of the towne, and ſent the prince word by a trumpett, he would looſe his gray head, but he would effect it, being ſtronger in number both of horſe and ſoot, and renforced out of Germany with all ſuch troupes as could be ſpared out of the Palatinate, and from other places, hath ſerued for an eye-wittnes of the loſſe of the towne, hauing layen a fortnight within two howers march of the prince of Oranges army; which he found ſo ſtrongly intrenched, that he knew not which way to beginne his vowed releife. And finally, on Sunday night, the 15th preſent, hauing failed of an enterprice he had vppon a certaine worke of count Erneſts quarter, by taking whereof he had thought to haue ſent 600 harquebuſiers à rouer, with bags of powder at their backes, into the towne, (at which worke the Scottiſh, hauing the garde, gaue a braue repulſe) the towne (it ſeemes) grew into deſpaire; and in Tueſday night following loſt their falſe bray, which was firſt entred by the Engliſh, the next morning they were ſummoned by Haulterine, the French colonell, and gaue for anſwere, They muſt firſt ſend to count Henry Vandeberg, before they could reſolue: whereuppon ſhooting being renewed furiouſly on both ſides for about three howres, the admirall of Holland, monſ. William of Naſſau, ſonne to the late prince of Orange, was ſhott dead with a muſquett, (a loſſe much lamented, in regard of the worth and great hopefullnes of his perſon, as likewiſe the command he bare in the army, being of a whole quarter) and with him Sir William Louelace. Afterwards Haulterine ſummoned them a ſecond tyme; whereat they deſyred to vnderſtand, if they were ſummoned with knowledge of the prince of Orange? Which, he told them, was ſo; and thereuppon they ſent out two captaines, one of horſe, another of foote, who brought many extrauagant conditions vnto his excellencie; which being rejected, they returned to the towne that night with a project of agreement giuen them by the prince, with promiſe to bring them anſwer the next morning; which accordingly they did, ſubmitting themſelfes to the ſame, onely requiring, ouer and aboue, to march out with two field pieces, and to haue free exportation of their baggage; which being granted, his excellencie had the towne deliuered the next morning, being Friday laſt. The wants of the towne were of men and powder, being otherwiſe in ſtate to haue held out a longer terme, hauing an able and vigilant gouernor, one Dulken, an old ſouldier and ſeruant to the king of Spayne. The fault obſerued in the Spanyard in looſing this place, is the ſame the States committed when they loſt Breda, allowing to much tyme to fortify the quarters, and comming afterwards to late to the reliefe; whereas a ſurer courſe, if not to haue preuented the loſſe, yet to haue repared it, would haue beene to haue gon by diuerſion, and beſieged ſome other place. I cannot foretell vnto your lordſhip, what further effects may be expected of this ſommers warre; which is likely to be no other then the two armyes waiting vppon one another, to preuent each other from doing more hurt.

WEE heare of a journy of the archducheſſe, and the marquis Spinola, into Flanders; which giues occaſion of conjecture, there may be ſome things intended by way of ſurprize againſt Sluyce, it being giuen out, that certaine troopes, Neopolitan and Spanyards, (conſiſting of about 3500 foote, and two companyes of horſe, with certaine peeces of ordinance) which haue about three weekes layed intrenched at Sant-Vliet, betwixt Lillo and Bergen-opzoom; as was thought, at firſt, to haue built a fort there vppon the Skeld, though hitherto they haue done nothing, were, in the beginning of this weeke, to haue marched backe ouer the bridge by Antwerpe. But my opinion is, they rather go to Dunkerke, there to meete with the ſhips expected out of Spayne, with men, mony, and other refreſhments; for intercepting whereof, the States haue renforced their fleete in the narrow ſeas, and on the coaſts of Flaunders, conſiſting of 30 men of warre, and 10 other fregats and pinnaſſes, with all ſuch ſhips of ſeruice as were to be found here in the hauens. But it ſeemes the Dunkerke ſhipps haue taken a fright at my lord of Buckinghams fleete, and are either returned into Biſcay (whence they came) with the alarm, or elſe haue taken their courſe by Ireland, and the north of Scotland, to fall vppon the herring fiſhers of theſe countreyes in their way homeward.

THESE men haue had great returns of late out of the Indyes, both Eaſt and Weſt, to the valew of one million of florins, taken from the Portugais in the bay of Todos los Santos, in a very bold entrepriſe of a fleete of this Weſt-Indian company, in deſpight of the cannon of the forts, which played furiouſly vppon them; which is no ſmall encouragement to that company, which by former bad ſucceſſe was brought low; and of fiue millions to the Eaſt-Indian company, in foure ſhips newly come home, very well in order, with newſe of fiue more vppon the way. The States are in hand with the ſatisfaction demanded of them by his majeſtie, for the bloody fact of Amboyna, committed by the miniſters of the latter of theſe two companyes vppon the liues of his ſubjects, of whom there are eight returned hither, and are to be judged, for their proceeding, by ſeauen ſelected judges for this purpoſe.

HERE are paſſed this way two ambaſſadors of the king of Denmarkes, to his majeſtie, to propoſe wayes of reconciliation with the French king, with whom monſ. Sobels, that kings ambaſſador in France, hath allready began the like offices; which theſe are to ſecond, by goeing thither, after they ſhall haue heard his majeſties anſwere. The States, at my firſt arriuall, made ouertures to mee of the ſame kind, and wrote letters both into England and France, with charge to their ambaſſadors to that purpoſe, propoſing withall, that the treaty might be in this place, being neutrall, where they might haue the aſſiſtance of the miniſters of other neutrall ſtates; meaning, of the Venetian ambaſſador, and the abbot di Schaglia (whom I found there at my comming) although hitherto he hath deliuered no credence, nor taken any quality of a publique perſon vppon him: but as yet they haue receaued no anſwer from either.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

ALL that I can enforme your lordſhip concerning the prince of Tranſiluania, is the preſſure of monye, and my anſwers, conteyned in the two encloſed papers. The weakenes of his agents plea being grounded upon rumor, and no open declaration of war made on the behalfe of Gabor, during the Turkiſh treaty, and the ſupplyes (if any ſuch) pretended to be ſent into Sileſia, not fullfilling the ſtipulated number, though I can eaſely putt of; yet, to the poynt of aſſurance of mony, I am forced to ſhift: and notwithſtanding the confidence of the kyng of Denmarke, and that I heare from diuers wayes, that Gabor hath licenſed ſome troopes to joyne with the old army, and that his other engagements of alliance may moue him to make ſome ſhow; yet that he will effectually proceede, and hazard his owne forces and peace without mony, I cannot firmely beleeue. My opinion is, that during the treaty neare Komoran, he will not declare, the iſſue of that being uncerteyne; and yet, in the meane tyme, that he hath ſuffered ſome regiments, under the conduct of Stephano Croato, (for ſo it is here reported) in apparance as if by him diſmiſſed, but ſecretly depending on him, to march to the ayd of the confederates, thereby to enterteyne the good opinion of the princes, untill he ſee the concluſion of the treatye, and a ſettled courſe and order for his mony. Some hope ther is, that the emperor wilbe diſdeyned at his double dealing, and breake with him: but this is far off.

CONCERNING the iſſue of the treatye betweene the emperor and this ſtate, the laſt aduice was; That the commiſſioners being mett, the Imperialls inſiſted upon high tearmes, demanding a ratification of the old peace of Zituar, now expired, without addition or diminution, and by uertue therof reſtitution of Vatz, ſtolen during that tyme, declaring, that they had no authoritye to proceed to any new 1627. negotiation. To which the Turkes replyed, That ſo much ceremony needed not, to appoint a ſolemne conuention to confirme that which two letters only from their princes might haue done. That that truce being runne out, was no longer in vigor, nor in being: if they would treate a peace, that they were ready; but to expect any reſtitution, or reuiuing of the old, it was in uayne, and their meeting fruictleſs. The Germans as ſtiffly preſſing their owne propoſitions, the conference for a while was interrupted, and great hope that it would haue beene diſolued. But Morteza baſſa, diſcouering by diſcourſe, that the Imperialls ſtood upon ſo peremptory poynts, as ſuppoſing that all the forces of Greece were drawne into Aſya, and that the grand ſignor could not ſhow an army on that ſyde, ſuddenly gaue order to all his troopes, that were in readines at Buda, to paſs ouer to Peſt, and to ſhow themſelues in the field. Wherupon the Germans began to ſoften, and were content to renew the treatye. And this is as much as yet is aduiſed to this ſtate, dayly expecting the concluſion, of which I can giue no judgement, ſince I haue beene aduertiſed, that Morteza baſſa hath taſted the emperors bounty, and receiued 6000 dollers, with promiſe of a greater reward; and that he hath undertaken, both to diſcouer the deſignes of Gabor, and to croſs him in this court, which I will endeauor, by telling the firſt tale, to preuent. The baſſa might haue taken his tyme to breake the treaty, if his old affections had gouerned him.

The baſſa of Boſna aduiſed from France. Vide Duch ambaſſadors letter Aug. 1627. error.

I HAUE written earneſtly into England, that they would not beleeue in exhortations, nor poynts of honor: if they thincke Gabor worth the price contracted, they muſt pay it. This is one of the caſes wherin too much thrift and caution is loſs, ubi pernicioſius eſt nummos tenere, quam perdere; becauſe the dependance of the aduenture is infinitely greater, then if ſuch a ſumme were caſt into the ſea. My engagement was to keepe him from a deſperate leape, and though I did only verba dare, yet I did not purpoſe to deceiue, becauſe I expected before Auguſt, that which was ordeyned in June; but I hope my remoue ſhall eaſe me of thoſe intricacyes, and your lordſhip of the trouble of my contemplations.

FROM Aſya wee heare that the grand vezier haſtened, and was gone as high as Diarbeker, much decayed in health; and doubting the too great burthen of his age and labor, had named a ſucceſſor, one Muſtaffa baſſa, unknowne to us, and reccommended him to the grand ſignor. The Perſian hath forteſyed and victualled Babilon, and the undertaking wilbe difficult. Wiſhing your lordſhip and your lady all happines, I moſt willingly ſubſcribe Conſtantinople, 25. Aug.

old ſtile, 1627.

Your Lordſhips humble and deuoted ſeruant.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With his Propoſal to the Senate of Venice, and their Anſwer.

My Lord,

VPPON the 7th of Auguſt, ſtilo novo, I did write unto your lordſhip at large; and a duplicate of that letter I ſent you vppon the 21ſt of Auguſt, ſtilo novo. All your letters, papers and memorialls, are ſafely arriued; and your laſt, which do beare date the $\frac{12}{24}$. of July, do goe away at this inſtant to the queen of Bohemia, my lord Conway, now viſcount Killultagh, and Mr. de Queſtor. It is a uery buſy time with mee, and therfore I ſhall craue leaue to be ſhort.

THE letter of the Tranſiluanian agent to your lordſhip and the Dutch ambaſſador, I do holde as neceſſary to be publiſhed in theſe parts, as he did thinck it fit that it ſhould be concealed there; for if he do not ſerue us really, yet will wee ſerue our ſelfes of that appearance of his, to incorage our frends, who haue neede of comfort. If he be falſe, let us haue our reuenge uppon him in publiſhing his obliquity; and if he be true, before the publication of this newes can do him harme, he muſt appeare opere & non verbo: for all is at the ſtake. From Prague and Vienna I haue newes; that doth not onely perfectly confront with what your lordſhip hath ſent mee, but hath further this addition, that he and the Turkes do make incurſions in Hungary, which haue produced this effect, that Maradas doth reſt with an army uppon that confine, and that Valleſtein is to be recalled. I am perſwaded, that the adminiſtrator of Magdeburg will finde him in the feilde, and that your lordſhip will receaue immortall honor for hauing managed that buiſineſſe with ſuch admirable zeale, wiſdome and dexterity. He could not haue ſerued our turne well, if he 1627.

had not firſt terrifyed the Turkes with his fained peace; and now that he hath ſtimulated them a newe, and drawen ſo noble a declaration from the publique Diuano, he cannot retire.

OUT of England wee haue no letters this weeke, whereof I am ſorry for your lordſhips ſake. The prince of Orenge hath taken Groll, which was rendered unto him uppon the 20th of Auguſt. The king of Sweden is maſter of Danzwick, yeelded unto him uppon treatye. Of our miſunderſtandings with France I will write nothing, becauſe I ſuppoſe your lordſhip will take as little pleaſure in reading my lines, as I in writing in that ſubject: yet to open my breſt to ſo noble and faithfull a frend, I will communicate unto your lordſhip the abſtract of a propoſition I lately made in college in that argument, as likewiſe of the anſwer I receaued this weeke. I will trouble your lordſhip no further at this preſent; but euer reſt

Venice, 3. September,
1627. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

The Abſtract of my Propoſition made in the College.

MY theme being to exaggerate the indirect and perfideous proceedings of the miniſters in France, I did amplify and illuſtrate it by theſe inſueing particularities.

1. FIRST, How they had betrayed our cauſe three yeares ſince, when count Mansfelt ſhould haue paſſed with an army through France into Alſatia; which army of ours M^r. de Shonberg did ſell vnto the States of the Vnited Prouinces for 40000 crownes, to our infinite damage and prejudice, in regard that by their refuſing vs the paſſage through France, which they had ſolemnly promiſed, wee were not onely defrauded of the contribution of the ſtate of Venice, which was to beginne when Mansfelt ſhould arriue in Alſatia; but by keeping our men ſo long on ſhipbord, and ſending them in an vnſeaſonable tyme into Holland, the whole army was in a manner quite loſt.

2. SECONDLY, How they had abuſed the loue of his maieſtie in the matter of the ſhippes lent by his maieſtie for the vſe of the league, which inſteede of beeing employed in the aſſiſtance of his aſſociates, as was intended, were ſent againſt Rochell; from whence they could not be retyred, vntill all was loſt there in Italy: and that wee were inforced to threaten them with another fleete.

3. THIRDLY, That whereas at their inſtance and intreaty, his maieſtie ſent ambaſſadors to Paris, to mediate a peace with thoſe of the religion, vppon promiſe that when the French king ſhould bee quiet at home, he would really and vigorouſly continue and purſue the diuerſion in Italy, inſteed of maintayning this promiſe, they did, at the ſame inſtant, while his maieſties ambaſſadors were yet there, conclude and ratify the peace with Spayne, abuſing therein the Venetians and the duke of Sauoye, ſelling the poore Griſons, and quite abandoning and betraying the common cauſe.

4. FOURTHLY, That notwithſtanding M^r. de Baſſompierre, in the buſineſſe concerning the queens ſeruants, had receaued more ſatiſfaction from his maieſtie, then he had order from his maſter to deſyre; yet at his returne to Paris, all his negotiation was diſauowed by the cardinall de Richelieu; ſo that, inſteed of procuring for our nation the main leuee, which had beene promiſed, all our fleete within the riuer of Bordeaux was arreſted; whereby it doth appeare, that the more his maieſtie doth ſeeke to oblige the French king, the more do his miniſters abuſe the loue and goodneſſe of his maieſtie.

5. THAT concerning Spaniſh goods taken in French ſhipps, wee proceeded no otherwiſe with them then with all other nations beſides, who had warning two monthes aforehand by a publique proclamation; and whatſoeuer was found to belong to any friend or neutrall, was reſtored; but the French betraying their guiltineſſe by throwing away their bills of lading, were juſtly condemned in the court of ammiralty. This was the firſt lapis ſcandali, and the beginning of their picking of quarrels with vs; for, contrary vnto the artikles of commerce betwixt the two nations, they did, vppon a falſe pre-ſuppoſition of wrong, de facto, ſeaze 1627. vppon the perſons and goods of all of our nation in France: which inderect and vnjuſtifiable proceeding did inforce his maieſtie to giue his ſubiects leaue to right themſelfes by way of repriſall; holding himſelfe bound in conſcience to protect them from foreine violence.

6. SIXTLY, That when the Spanyards did the laſt yeare threaten an inuaſion vppon England or Ireland, the French miniſters were ſo farre from oppoſing that deſigne, as that they did contribut therevnto as much as poſſibly they could; giuing them harbor in their ports, and furniſhing them with victualls, ammunition, and all things neceſſary.

7. SEUENTHLY and laſtly, That his majeſtie was well informed, that the cardinall de Richelieu had paſſed his word vnto the cardinall Spada, not only to extirpate the proteſtants in France, but to procure the French king to joyne with the pope, the emperor, and the king of Spayne, in doing the like to all the proteſtants in Europ; and that, for the effecting therof, he had taken to himſelfe the gouernment of all the maritime townes in France, and made prouiſion of ſhipping in Holland; and that he was vppon the point of attempting the vſurpation of our juriſdiction in that ocean, if the wiſdome and courage of my lord duke of Buckingham had not preuented his malice.

ALL theſe points I did amplify with ſuch circumſtances as did beſt ſute with euery one of them, deſyring theſe ſigniori to judge ingenuoſly, whither his majeſtie had not reaſon to ſecure himſelfe and his friends from ſuch malicious practices; adding withall, That his majeſtie did require but two things to ſecure himſelfe of the amity of the French king; the one, that he would ſubſcribe vnto the league of the Haghe, defenſiue and offenſiue, as he had often promiſed to do; and ſo cooperate jointly with his majeſtie and his friends, towards the vindicating of the common liberty; the other, that he obſerue punctually the peace accorded vnto thoſe of the religion in France, procured at his inſtance by the mediation of his majeſtie, for which he is caution: concluding, that if the French wauer in any of theſe two points, it will turne vs better to account to haue them for open enemyes, then falſe friends.

Riſpoſta del SENATO, data alli 30. Agoſto, all' Eſpoſitione fatta, ſulli 23. detto, per le coſe di Francia.

CARISSIMA e ſtata la communicatione & la confidenza dell vltimo officio, alla particolare ſtima affettione et oſſeruanza che portiamo a S. M. & le ne rendemo molte grazie: nel negotio aſſai rieſce caro ſcuoprir il re non hauer minore mira a conſeguir la gloria & l'augmento del ſuo nome, & il bene dell gli affari ſuoi con le armi che con la pace con Francia: noi ch' il medeſſimo conoſcimento, & deſiderio renemo della publica quiete volontieri concurremo con gli animi, con l'euitamento & con la confidenza, habbia S. M. amollite le occaſioni dello ſdegno, nelle conſiderationi & refleſſi decenti alla ſua maggior grandezza & ſeruitio, & con le parti della ſua prouidenza, virtu, & zelo al ben commune, a temperare gli affetti & le diſcordie, & conſolare i ſuoi regni & amici con attioni di pace & di reciproca vtilita: coſi a conſolatione & vnione di due ſi gran re, ſi contribuerorno da noi tutti gli officij & rimoſtranze che ſi giudicheronno 'opportune con reale & ſinceriſſimo oggetto di particolarmente piegarli per il ſeruitio & ſodisfattione di S. M.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

TO continew my obſeruance to your lordſhip, without matter, I trouble you with theſe lines. From Hungarye there is no newes; the commiſſioners there mett treate alla longa, and the iſſue is vncerteyne; but that commonly they which parlee, eaſelye agree. In fiue moneths I haue not ſeene one letter, nor heard of England; and now wee expect that our joyes may be as full as our thoughts haue beene. The next poſt I looke for another complaynt from the grand ſignor to his majeſtie; for I haue beene ſharply called to account for the pretended actions of our nation in the Perſian gulphe; and this ſtate is ſome tyme ſlower of lament then reuenge. But this buſines more nearely concerning the Leuant and the Eaſt Indya companies, (whoſe emulations in trades, if they be not well tempered and gouerned, will turne them both to repentance) I haue at lardge enformed them; who, I doubt not, will, for their owne intereſts, flye to your lordſhips help and fauour; that ſome courſe may be taken for the preuention of great miſcheeſe, which will fall upon this trade for the errors of others. I will ſay no more in yt, but this: the grand ſignor will not beare the ſpoyle of his ſubiects in thoſe parts, nor the enterrupting of his trades; and though the preſent condition of theſe tymes temper the naturall furye of theſe miniſters; yet they may change in a day, and the whole ſtate is diſcontent. I refer the conſideration to your lordſhips wiſdome; and, humbly deuouted, preſume to continew to my ſelfe the honor and title of Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$.

Sept. 1627.

Your Lordſhips true ſeruant.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

THE corruption accuſed upon Morteſa baſſa, is turned truly upon the baſſa of Boſna; who is diſcharged of his place, and the new admoniſhed by his example. This makes me hope better of the treatye, though from Hungary ther is no newes; and therfore I can ſend your lordſhip nothing, but my obſeruance. Our ſhip, that was here freighting for Venice by publicque conſent, not a third laden, is proteſted by two hulkes with great bellyes, and no hands to defend them, newly here arriued: a ſtrange ſubiection! that after contract, the lawes of Venice ſhould reach to our ſhipping, and to the goods of thoſe that are not their ſubiects. What will become of the diſpute, I know not; but relye on the bailos wiſdome and juſtice. If they hinder us, I will pay our ſelues the freight, and let them once goe ſue in England; that they may know the diſaduantage of fauourable lawes, or rather ſnares, to catch ſtrangers.

WE heare that the Perſian, to diuert the great vezier, is marched toward Ahiska, neare Arzerum, which doth neceſſarily enforce the Turkes to turne that way; ſo that much, but facing one another, is not expected this ſummer. In fiue moneths I haue not yet ſeene one line, nor ſcarce heard of England: our patience is almoſt runne out, and my prayer now is, that that which ſtayes ſo long, may be like the beſt fruicts, late ripe, and ſound. We heare rumors, which, becauſe they are beyond the ſearch and reach of my brayne, I rather admire then beleeue: but want of new matter ſhall not make me comment; and therfore I will haſten to that wherin I take pleaſure and honor, to uow my ſelfe

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$.
Sept. 1627.

Your Lordſhips.

From the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable,

I HAUE not lately written vnto yow, and it is ſoe long ſince, that by yours I vnderſtand my laſt hath beene received. The reaſons of this ſlackenes are: firſt, The hazard of the conveyances, whereof I haue had proofe by the loſſe of ſome of mine, and divers from Sir Iſaac Wake, and ſome from your ſelfe; whereof I haue receiued the duplicats, but never ſaw the originalls. Secondly, The vncertainety of the maine buſines yow haue ſoe long negotiated; concerning which, for a long time, I haue received nothing but doubts of Gabors conſtancie: touching which the advertiſements that came from Germany gaue ſoe little hope, as wee long ſince held him to be abſolutely fallen awaie; and your laſt letters ſeeme now to cleare it totally. For the number of your letters received, yow ſhall receiue the account in the end of his; and for the ſubſtance, his majeſtie is ſoe well ſatisfied with your relations, and the arguments yow giue, as he approoues all what yow haue done; but eſteemes it too late to thinke of the ſending of money to be depoſited there: ſince, vpon the iudgement long ſince made of Gabors proceedings, it was reſolved for certaine, that he would not proceed roundly. And the occaſions here for money were ſuch, as it was not thought fitt to take from them ſo much vpon a buſines, whereof there was noe hope; and your wiſdome was confidently relied on, that 1627. if there were hopes there, or aſſurances more then did appeare here, yow would not ſuffer them to be loſt, whereof yow haue in the laſt occaſion given ſufficient proofe. And yow may reſt aſſured, that his majeſtie doth not onely vouchſafe your proceedings, and your cautious warines; but if the action ſhould haue ſucceeded, and yow thereupon fallen vpon any engagement, he would haue taken order for your full ſatisfaction. Thoſe letters of yours, which I received for his majeſtie, I preſented vnto him; and thoſe to my lord duke, I haue ſent vnto him: concerning whoſe proceedings in the iſle of Rhé yow will haue heard (I aſſure my ſelfe) from many hands, ſoe as I will forbeare repetitions; and will onely informe yow, that there is moſt apparant probabillity, that the fort, which is held ſtraightly beſeeged both by land and ſea, wilbe forced to yeeld in a ſhort time. The reaſons of this his majeſties vndertaking, I preſume, yow will ſufficiently collect out of former letters, the principall ſcope being by this action to aſſure the ſafetie of the proteſtants, eſpecially Rochell, according to the edicts of pacification; for the maintenance of the laſt of which, his majeſties word and honour were ingaged, with the knowledge of the French king, vpon the making of the peace; which was done att his majeſties mediation, vpon the requeſt of that king. And vpon the aſſurance they had of his majeſtie, the Rochellers accepted of harder conditions, then otherwiſe they would haue done; and yett even of this treatie there was noe obſervacion, but many complaints of infractions, and his majeſtie long ſollicited, and noe hope of preuayling by mediacion, before his majeſtie entered vpon this publicke vndertaking: and nothing but neceſſitie of ſtopping the violent courſes held towards them, and his majeſties owne ſubiects, could haue mooved him thereunto. For aydes and ſeconds to my lord duke, two thouſand Iriſh are divers weekes ſince gone towards him; 2000 Engliſh are to be att Plimmouth the 10. of the preſent, where all things wilbe in readines for their tranſportation; and the earle of Morton is alſo rayſing 2000 Scots for the ſame ſervice. There is nothing more of moment. Your ſucceſſor pretends to haue all this ſummer ſtayed for ſhipping, but will this moneth ſett forward. I will forbeare ceremony towards yow, becauſe really I am

St. Martins-Lane, 8.
September, 1627.

Your Lordſhipps aſſured friend to ſerue yow,

CONWEY.

PARDON mee, I pray yow, that I haue not lately named to yow Camerarius, certaine of whoſe letters being intercepted, addreſſed to the king and chancellor of Sweden, ſome paſſages in them haue given his majeſtie iuſt cauſe of offence againſt, and to complaine to that king of him. Soe that the condition of his reſpect with his majeſtie being altered, yow may be pleaſed to forbeare correſpondence with him.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

BY your lordſhips laſt of the 26. of July, I underſtand that you had receaued no letters from mee by three ordinaryes, ſauing one written in fauor of Mr. Hide. Your lordſhip may reſt aſſured, that I haue not omitted any opportunity; and at the ſame time when I made bold to recommend Mr. Hide unto your protection, I did likewiſe write concerning the publique, and conſigne my pacquet unto Mr. Symmes. Your letters to the queen of Bohemia, my lord Conway, now viſcount Killultagh, and Mr. Queſtor, were ſent away yeſterday; and here incloſed, you ſhall find one from my lord Carleton, accompanyed with an abſtract of his letter to me; and ſundry other papers. My laſt, of the 3. of September, as you will ſee by the incloſed duplicate, did cary an abſtract of an office paſſed by mee in college, in the juſtification of my maſters proceedings with France; a ſecond copye whereof I do forbeare to ſend you, in hope that the firſt will arriue ſafely. I do not quite deſpayre of Gabor, although his often winding doth make him ſuſpitious: ſure I am, that he would not haue taken a worſe pretext of breaking with the emperor, then the inuaſion of the marquiſate of Brandebourg; for that elector hath wholy giuen himſelfe unto the emperor, and did call the Imperiall forces into this ſtate. I could wiſh you had the monny, to put him to tryall; for I am perſwaded, that ſuch a cordiall would reuiue him. If he do chance to ſend unto mee, as I ſuppoſe he will do ſhortly, I will hold the ſame language with him, which you haue donne there; 1627. and make him beleeue, that the bill of exchange did arriue here, but was ſent back againe uppon the newes of his apoſtacye, and the ſight of the articles agreed uppon betwixt the emperor and him; and ſo returne him back to your lordſhip, with aſſurance that you will pay him that ſumme, when you ſhall finde that he hath ſerued a month in the feilde. Out of England wee haue had no letters theſe three weekes togither, which is a ſigne that our ports are ſhut againe; but I hope, that ſhortly I ſhall receaue ſomething from my lord viſcount Killultagh for your lordſhip: ſo, with harty thancks unto your lordſhip, for your readines to fauor Mr. Hide for my ſake, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 18. September,
1627, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

From the ADMINISTRATOR of Magdeburgh.

CHRISTIANUS GUILHELMUS, Dei Gratia, Poſtulatus Adminiſtrator Magdeburgenſis et Halberſtadienſis, Marchio Brandenburgenſis, Boruſſiæ Dux, &c.

Illuſtris ac generoſe, nobis benevole,

NULLUM omnino nobis eſt dubium, quin dominationi veſtræ ſatis ſuperque intimatum ſit, qua de cauſſa potiſſimum in haſce regiones longo, difficili, ac periculoſo itinere appulerimus, nimirum ut exercitui ſereniſſimi Daniæ regis in Sileſia exiſtenti tanquam capitaneus generalis præeſſemus, nulli omninò labori ac moleſtiæ ſuperſedentes, ut præfato ſereniſſimi regis deſiderio quantocyus (quantum quidem ob itineris longinquitatem, et adverſam valetudinem fieri potuit) ſatisfacere, ac rei communi pro viribus inſervire valeremus. Celare tamen eam non poſſumus, nos ſtatim ſub ipſum adventus noſtri momentum à ſereniſſimo Tranſylvaniæ principe magno cum animi noſtri dolore intellexiſſe, exercitum illum, ſive ob ducis defectum, ſive ob inteſtinas officialium inter ſeſe diſſenſiones, ſive quod de pactis ſuppetijs dubitarent, (Sapienti ſatis) penitus diſſipatum eſſe, et equitatum quidem ad regiam majeſtatem, peditatum autem ob pulveris tormentarij inopiam magna ex parte in hoſtium poteſtatem veniſſe. Etſi autem de conſtantiâ ſereniſſimi Tranſylvaniæ principis nihil omnino ambigebamus, ſpe firmâ freti, eum in initâ cum ſereniſſimis regibus confœderatione conſtanter perſeveraturum, ac cauſſam communem pro conſueto hactenus vigore et generoſitate fortiter propugnaturum fore; attamen non ſine ſumma animi perturbatione intelleximus, eum præter ſpem atque opinionem ſereniſſimorum regum, ac reliquorum confœderatorum, pacem cum imperatore perpetuam ſanciviſſe. Cauſſas ejus rei adducit quamplurimas, inter alias quoque denegatam ab eâ ſtipendij Conſtantinopoli depoſiti perſolutionem, de quarum tamen pondere ac ſoliditate hic diſquirere parum attinet, cum quod factum eſt infectum fieri nequeat, judicium ac cenſuram ſuper ijs ſereniſſimis regibus, ac quorum intereſt, confœderatis merito relinquentes. Ac licet idem ſereniſſimus princeps præclaram adhuc de ſe ſpem faciat, ac de non unitato erga cauſſam communem priſtino affectu multa (pace illa non obſtante) nobis cotidie polliceatur; attamen quid in tam ſubitâ et inexpectatâ voluntatis ſuæ converſione ulterius ab eo ſperare aut polliceri nobis debeamus, vix liquet. Vnde dominatio veſtra pro ſolita ſua prudentia conjicere facile poteſt, quantum hæc inſperata pax rebus ac conſilijs ſereniſſimorum regum obſtaculum et remoram injectura ſit, quantiſque in malis, et quaſi inter ſacrum et ſaxum nos conſtituti ſimus, utpote qui non tantum longiſſimo ac difficillimo itinere cum ſummo perſonæ noſtræ periculo, et valetudinis jactura, huc contenderimus, ſed et per idem re infecta reverti, hoſtium ac fortunæ telis nos denuo exponere, et ad ſereniſſimum Daniæ regem, tanquam ad unicum poſt Deum aſylum noſtrum, recta pergere cogamur. Utut ſit, nos tamen, uti pro religione ac libertate hactenus omnia noſtra, quæ quidem in mundo habuimus, bona, provincias ac ditiones noſtras, conjugem, ac filiam dilectiſſimas reliquimus, ita et ea, quæ reſidua ſunt, vitam, honorem, ac ſanguinem pro bono publico inſumere ac profundere minime dubitamus. Interea vero eam benigne hortamur, et peramanter requirimus, ut una cum illuſtriſſimorum Belgij ordinum oratore pacem inter duos imperatores concluſam, ſed nondum confirmatam, quantum quidem in ipſis eſt, impedire, et ne de duabus litigioſis conditionibus, 1627. bus, nimirum reſtitutione Warij, et de pagis dedititijs invicem conveniant, utque copiæ Turcicæ à finibus Cæſarianis non plane removeantur, mature providere ſatagant. Id enim ſi non fieret, facile pro innatâ ſagacitate intelligat dominatio veſtra etiam tertium imperatoris exercitum ſub Don-Balthaſaris et Schlichij ductu cum duobus reliquis conjunctum, ac totam bellj molem ſereniſſimi Daniæ regis humeris injectam iri. Quod ut ne fiat, remis equiſque præpediendum eſt. Præterea, ſi quæ ſpes induciarum inter Turcas et Perſas ineundarum vobis affulget, eas modis omnibus promovere non intermittetis, ut eo facilius auxilium quoddam à Porta Ottomanica impetrare poſſimus. Quo fine, ut nimirum pacem priorem impediat, poſteriorem autem promoveat, ſereniſſimus Tranſylvaniæ princeps ſupremum ſuum cubicularium, generoſum dominum Micoferenz, ad Portam Ottomanicam (uti nobis adfirmat) legatum hoc ipſo mittit; de cujus expeditionibus quid expectandum ſit, tempus aperiet, et vobis quamprimum innoteſcet. Nos apud ſereniſſimum Daniæ regem nihil, quod quidem ad promovenda ea omnia proficuum et neceſſarium erit, intermittemus; cumque, ut in heroico ſuo in defendenda Germaniæ libertate propoſito animoſe pergat, ac exorſam belli telam invicto animi ſui impetu maſcule, cum bono publico, pertexat, peramice atque officioſe exorabimus. De cætero dominationem veſtram peramanter rogamus, ut nos apud ſereniſſimum Magnæ Britanniæ regem omni meliori modo commodare velit, quo ea ſubſidia pecuniaria, quæ antehac illuſtriſſimo domino marchioni Durlacenti (quandoquidem is apud regiam Daniæ majeſtatem ſtipendia jam meret) benevole deſtinaverat, nobis ad novam diverſionem erga inſtans vernum tempus inſtituendam benigne perſolvere ac impertiri, necnon eam pecuniam, quæ Conſtantinopoli à ſereniſſimis regibus depoſita eſt, nobis pro parte ſua ſubſidio dare clementer dignetur. Conſtabunt in eam viciſſim omnia humanitatis ac benevolentiæ noſtræ ſtudia quocunque loco ac tempore paratiſſima. Plura ad hunc ſcopum pertinentia per eccellentiſſimum dominum Wake Venetijs ei perſcribenda curabimus, dominationi veſtræ omnimodam incolumitatem, ac proſperos rerum ſuarum ſucceſſus ex animo comprecantes, ac quid ſpei iſthinc nobis reliquum ſit, ex literis ejus intellecturi. Dabantur Albæ Juliæ, xviii. Septemb. Anno 1627.

Dilectionis veſtræ benevolus amicus,
CHRISTIANUS GUILHELMUS, M.P.

Superſcribed,

Illuſtriſſimo, ac generoſo, nobis benevolo, Domino Thomæ Roe, ſereniſſimi Magnæ Britanniæ, Regis apud Portam Ottomannicam Oratori, Conſtantinopoli.

To the Lord CONWAY: With Relations.

My Lord,

IT is confidently affirmed by the emperors agent, that the peace or truce betweene his maſter and the grand ſignor is concluded for 25 yeares; and that an internuntio, on their part, is on the way with the articles. He ſhowes letters to this effect, to the French ambaſſador, who hath done his beſt to promoue yt, though eyther way his creditt is of little weight; and to the vizier, written to him from the Imperiall commiſſioners. But the like aduice being not ſent from Morteſa baſſa, we ſuſpend too eager beliefe, ſupoſing that all matters are not fully perfected. Howſoeuer, in my opinion, I eſteeme it done; obſeruing the affections of much joy in all the miniſters of this ſtate at the report, and the concurrence of ſo ill ſucceſs in Aſya, the relation wherof I ſend your lordſhip encloſed; that I doubt not, if already abſolute commiſſion were not giuen, that they haue now diſpatched freſh orders to ſecure that frontire from inuaſion upon any conditions. From Gabor I heare nothing, nor doe I know what to beleeue; I hope, he doth giue account of himſelfe. It is ſixe moneths, ſince I receiued any mention of England; and therfore hauing only leyſure to pray for his majeſtie, and nothing more, wherewith to trouble your lordſhip, I committ yow to the bleſſed keeping of our moſt gracious God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, 22. Sept.
old ſtile, 1627.

RELATION of the Proceeding of the Army in Aſya.

HALILL baſſa, great vizier, being arriued at Diarbeker, reſolued to enter Perſia, and gaue order to certeyne beghler beghs to make another inuaſion by Van; and did endeauor to draw Abaſa baſſa with his forces, joyned with the Georgians, to doe the like on his frontyre, who gaue good wordes, and hopes of due obedience. While theſe deſſignes were in preparation, the Perſian, by his generall, beſeeged Achiska, a cytty of great importance, neare Arzerum; wherupon Hallil ſent Diſlenck baſſa of Natolia, with ſixe other baſſas, to Abaſa, to perſwade him preſently to performe his word, and to riſe and unite his ſtrength with them. With theſe he ſent 3000 Janitzaries under 12 capteynes, with his owne letters; who being arriued neare the cytty, he ordered them to encamp; and ſent them prouiſion for a day or two, untill he could putt his affayres, for his departure, in order. Theſe reſting ſecure, in the night he ſett upon them, and cutt them in peices, ſome few eſcaping hither. Diſlenk, and another Muchemett baſſa, were ſlayne: the capteynes that he tooke aliue, or came to him to treate, he ſent to the Perſian; wherby Ahiſcka, being in great diſſtreſs and unſuccored, is, as is reported, ſurrendered to the enemy. This newes arriued to the great vizier, the next morning he roſe with his whole army, laying aſyde all deſſigne againſt Perſia, and marched right to Arzerum, uowing to puniſh this rebell, or there to end his life. Abaſa is ſtrong, and confident of ſuccors; and though I beleeue not in prophecies, there are ſome ill foretellings of the end of this enterpriſe.

From BETHLEM GABOR.

GABRIEL, Dei Gratia, Sacri Romani Imperij et Tranſilvaniæ Princeps, Partium Regni Hungariæ Dominus, Siculorum Comes, ac Oppoliæ, Ratiboriæque Dux,&c.

Illuſtris et magnifice, nobis benevole,

LITERAS ejus Conſtantinopoli, die 29. Junij, ſtylo nouo, ad nos ſcriptas accepimus, eáque omnia, quæ cum oratore noſtro ibidem reſidente pluribus egit, ex reſponſo ejus, in ſcriptis exhibito, abunde intelleximus. Et quoniam illa majoris conſiderationis momentique nobis viſa ſunt, facere non potuimus, quin hiſce ad ea pluribus reſponderemus, voluntatiſque noſtræ et æquitatis (cui ſemper omnes actiones innixas habuimus) inſtitutum palam redderemus.

FATERI equidem neceſſario cogimur, lectis literis ejus, et præſertim ſcripto oratori noſtro exhibito, primùm nos admiratione, deinde rei etiam indignitate non parùm commotos fuiſſe. Illâ, cum perſonam noſtram, quæ hactenus omnium, etiam infenſiſſimorum hoſtium judicio, ſecundâ ſatis famâ floruit, adeo atroci judicio ejus perſtringi videremur; hac, quod indigniſſimis etiam modis tractari ab eo, à quo et perſonæ noſtræ ratione, quam voluntas divina liberi, nulliuſque arbitrio ſubjecti principis jure decoravit, et cauſæ æquitate, minimè decebat, cernebamus. Cùm autem ab initio illud ſapientiſſimi omnes excelſique judicij principes in primis obſervârint, ut rerum earum, quæ variantis fortunæ caſibus obnoxiæ ſunt, jacturam minimi, famæ autem et exiſtimationis maximi ſemper ducerent, ad ea præcipuè capita reſpondebimus, quæ nominis noſtri decus ſatis præcipiti ejus judicio, neque matura conſideratione perſtringere viſa fuere.

TRIA igitur ante omnia nobis objici ex ejus ſcripto agnoſcimus: Primum, Nos a pactis et confœderatione eâ, quæ nobis cum ſereniſſimis regibus, principibus, et ſtatibus interceſſit, nullâ evidenti ratione motos receſſiſſe, pacemque cum Cæſareâ majeſtate, inſcijs ijs, concluſiſſe. Alterum, Non jure, neque ex debito pecuniam eam, de qua mentionem per oratorem internuntiumque noſtrum extraordinarium feceramus, repetere. Tertium, Nos et lege confœderationis, et voluntate decretoque aulæ Ottomanicæ eo, ut bellum continuaremus, de facto teneri. Quod autem ad primum; Omnibus ſani judicij conſiderandum relinquimus, ab initio motus hujus, qui univerſum pene orbem Chriſtianum, cum atroci miſerabilis populi clade, horrendâque regnorum et prouinciarum vaſtitate pervaſit, quid nos in communi cauſſa præſtiterimus? quas vires hoſtium aut averterimus, aut detinuerimus? quos exercitus magnique nominis duces eorum fuderimus deleverimuſque? Denique, quo 1627. animo, quâve voluntate deſerti ab omnibus ſola virium noſtrarum ſumptuſque immenſi jacturâ bellum graviſſimum ſuſtinuerimus? Adeo ut ponderata ea, quæ a nobis præſtita ſunt, ſi æquâ iudicij lance cum aliorum factis conferentur, rerum a nobis geſtarum magnitudo longe illa ſuperatura erit; ubi præcipue tot ſumptus expenſæque incredibiles fruſtra per alios factæ, inſtructiſſimi exercitus cum apparatu bellico munitionibuſque incomparabilis precij funeſtis cladibus perditi, maximorum belli ducum exitus calamitoſi conſiderabuntur. Quæ res manifeſtius jam declaravere, quid inde damni partibus, vel quæ emolumenta acceſſere, cum ad hoc etiam tempus nullum malorum funeſtique belli finem in imperio Romano cernamus, quæ forſan aliâ longe ratione præcaveri potuiſſent, ſi in tempore rebus noſtris ab ijs, quibus incumbebat, proviſum ſuccurſumque fuiſſet; cum illud liquido conſtet, nos ſolâ inſtituti noſtri conſtantiâ, abſque evidenti aliquâ copiarum noſtrarum clade, omnem belli molem ſuſtinuiſſe, neque quiſquam conqueri poſſit, a nobis ſumptus, ab aliis ſuppeditatos, fruſtra conſumptos, exercituſque amiſſos fuiſſe; cum nullis alijs, præterquam ſolis ipſis et ſumptus belli maximi, et pericula rerum, ſolerti conſilio averſa conſtiterint. Quæ omnia, cùm nullo reſpectu alio, quàm ſolâ confœderatorum principum cauſſâ egerimus, apertè ea euentus rerum veriſſima demonſtrauit. Sollicitati enim (ut alia omittamus) promiſſiſque ingentibus inducti, cùm bellum apertum communi hoſti indixiſſemus, copiaſque in Moraviam uſque, obſeſſo ad Gedingum pluribus diebus hoſtili exercitu, promouiſſemus, tantum abfuit, ut aliqua ſumptus, aut vero militum auxilia acciperemus, ut ne rumore etiam ullo alicujus auxiliaris exercitus famam audiremus, ſolum bonæ recordationis principem Halberſtatenſem, amiſſo exercitu, fuſum fugatumque victoriam hoſti reliquiſſe acciperemus. Quâ de cauſſâ, protracto in longum tractatu, cùm nihil planè ſpei in ijs, qui ſe præſto futuros nobis polliciti fuerant, cerneremus, pacem cum hoſte, maximâ cum rerum noſtrarum jacturâ, facere coacti ſumus. Quæ autem medio hoc tempore acta ſunt, cùm illa pluribus hic referre neceſſarium non arbitremur, ſolâ ejus conſcientia contenti, liberè ad eam negocium omne rejicimus, dummodo rerum earum, quo pacto inter ſereniſſimos reges ſtatuſque, et nos ipſos actæ eæ ſunt, omnem progreſſum uberius intelligat, cùm eidem nequaquam eo modo, uti penitus res ipſæ agitatæ ſunt, eas conſtare ex ſenſu diſcurſus ejus agnoſcamus; præcipue autem quid, quove modo de ſumptibus expenſiſque belli nobiſcum conventum? quid de exercitu repræſentando promiſſum ſit? Cùm autem ſumptus nequaquam præſtiti toto hoc ultimo bello ſint, noſque omnes eos ſuſtinere debuerimus, qualis quantuſque exercitus ille nobiſcum conjunctus fuerit, facile omnes, qui oculis videre, judicabunt. Cùm enim vix dimidia promiſſi ejus pars ad nos adducta ſit, eáque fame et incommodis enecta debilitataque nulli plane uſui eſſe potuerit, pravâque ducum etiam diſſenſione, à nobis ſæpius ij ſolicitati, in tempore occaſioni defuerint, graviſſimumque bellum et omnis prope hoſtilis exercitus moles in nos incubuerit; quid aliud facere, quàm neceſſarijs, quæ nos urgebant, de cauſis inducias cum hoſte paciſci, debebamus? Expectato interim legato noſtro Groſſo Matthia Quado, quem ad ſereniſſimos reges et ſtatus principio veris anni 1626. proficiſci volueramus, cùm is etiam importuniſſimâ ratione, damnoſóque conſilio diutius fruſtra detentus, ſupervacaneam moram pati coactus fuiſſet, neque ullum plane rumorem de ejus reditu actiſque, novem menſium integrorum ſpacio, accepiſſemus, ita ut tredecim menſes à diſceſſu ejus uſque ad reditum interceſſerint; et ex aliâ parte inanes expenſas, periculaque urgentia, neque præſtita ea, quæ promiſſa erant, auxilia cerneremus; illaque quæ in promptu erant, omnibus ſumptuum aliarumque rerum difficultatibus afflicta, exitiabili ducum inter ſe odio, denique unius diſceſſu, alteriuſque importunâ morte ſubſequente conſternata, à nobis diſceſſerint; crebrius etiam ab aulâ Turcicâ eâ de re ſolicitati, pacem facere debuimus, cum et rerum noſtrarum ſtatus, voluntaſque aulæ Ottomanicæ, et eæ quæ in promptu erant rationes, illud maxime à nobis requirerent.

QUO pacto igitur nos à fœdere receſſiſſe argui ab aliquibus poſſumus, cùm ipſi jure merito æquiſſimas, quæ jam enumeratæ ſunt, conquerendi rationes, ab omnibus palam viſas, in promptu habeamus, deſtitutique promiſſis auxilijs et ſumptibus, atque hoſti ſoli objecti importunâ eorum cunctatione, à quibus legatus noſter tot menſium ſpacio fruſtra detentus fuerat, aliqua eo tempore, cùm paci conſentire cogeremur, pacta adhuc ex parte noſtra inita fuiſſe ignoraremus? An verò ij magis in culpâ eſſe cenſendi ſunt, qui à longè tantùm ocioſi rerum ſpectatores, neque maturo conſilio, neque generoſo aliquo auſu, in tempore neceſſitati ſubvenerunt, cùm eum imperitum planè rerum noſtrarum eſſe neceſſe ſit, qui locorum intervalla, occaſioneſque temporum judicio metiri nequeat? Eò magis ergo indigniſſimum nobis videtur, adeo contemptim et acerbe exiſtimationem noſtram ab eâ perſtringi lædique, et ita nos tractari, quòd neutiquam principes ab ullo prudentis judicij homine pati deberent; videlicet nos bonam cauſam et honorem proprium læſiſſe et ſauciâſſe dicendo, ſæpiuſque alibi perſonæ noſtræ exiſtimationem indigniſſimè traducendo; quæ cùm nobis objici à privato grave ſit, neque ab ineunte ætate quicquam magis, quàm famæ honoriſque exiſtimationem ſpectaverimus, illud in poſterum etiam acturi erimus, ut vitâ quoque ipſâ famæ jacturam ſemper chariorem habuiſſe palam demonſtremus.

ÆQUUM igitur eſt, tanti regis oratorem parciùs prudentiúſque nobiſcum agere, neque præcipiti aliquo conſilio affectuque nimis præproperò inniti; cùm præſertim illud conſiderabit, eos minimam laudem mereri, qui maledicendi ſtudio acti principibus materiam odij, alienæque alicujus inter eos voluntatis præbere intendunt.

QUANTUM vero ad ſecundum: Cùm jam ſatis ſuperque per oratorem noſtrum de eo actum ſit, noſque hoc pacto tractatum omnem pacis Turcicæ cum Cæſare, à quâ noſtra etiam tota dependet, ad hoc tempus direxerimus, ut in ſuſpenſo adhuc omnia exiſtant, neque, quis ejus exitus futurus ſit, à quoquam intelligatur; etſi jure merito pecuniam eam repeteremus, quam cauſâ confœderatorum principum in ſumptus militis a nobis conſcripti, et belli geſti expenſam ſciebamus; tamen illud nobis ſummè æquum videbatur, ut, cùm promptiſſimum voluntatis noſtræ inſtitutum hoc etiam tempore illud fuerit, ut pro viribus cauſa communis promoveretur, promiſſi quoque ſumptus ad hoc quàm primùm ſuppeditarentur, quibus idoneæ præparationes inſtitui, mileſque in tempore conſcribi poſſet. Quam rem eas per ſe etiam promoturas putabamus, in eâ importunas dilationes in medium allatas eſſe, ſaluberrimumque totius negocij conſilium interverſum cùm cernamus, ſatis mirari merito cogimur, omniumque arbitrio relinquimus, an nos à pactis receſſerimus, vel verò ij, per quos conatus noſtri deſtituti ſunt? Communi rei damnum ingens, exercituſque in Sileſiâ conſtituti et exiſtenti funeſtam cladem accerſiverint; cùm præcipuè ſumptus noſtros jam antea ſæpiùs fruſtra factos, pericula et labores cum ingenti curâ exantlatos, copias principis Vinarienſis et Mansfeldij noviſſimo bello, in ultimâ earum neceſſitate per nos ſuſtentatas, ij conſiderabunt. Quæ verò cauſſa eas ad hoc impulerit, ut adeò proficuum totius negotij ſtatum deſtituerint, cùm illud nobis nullâ ex parte conſtet, ipſiſmet rerum earum rationes cum tempore ijs, quibus id incumbit, reddere neceſſe eſt.

QUOD autem tertium negocij punctum concernit: Cum allegatæ de eo ab ijs rationes nobis ab hoc ſtatu planè aliena videantur, exactiùs ponderatis rerum cauſis, nimis ambiguum locumtenentis vezirij de pace cum majeſtate Cæſareâ concludendâ, reſponſum fuiſſe arbitramur. Cùm enim is pluribus ad nos ſcriptis literis, ut omni ſtudio pacem quantocyus procurandam vellemus, exhortatus fuerit, et hoc tempore exhortetur; oratori autem noſtro, præſentibus ijs, nolle imperatorem Ottomanicum pacem, excluſis principibus confœderatis, cum Cæſare concludere, diſertis verbis retulerit; neque tamen quicquam de eo ad nos, neque ad Budenſem vezirium in eam ſententiam perſcripſerit; ex eo ubi voluntas ejus et conſilia verſentur, cùm aulæ illius mores eidem ſatis conſtent, facile judicabit, omnemque hujus rei invidiam à nobis (uti æquum eſt) removebit. Quod ut certiùs agnoſcat, literas Budenſis vezirij de hac re ad nos perſcriptas, ejuſdemque vezirij locumtenentis in manus oratoris noſtri tranſmittimus: ex quibus certiùs clariúſque ea omnia intellectura erit, adeo ut pluribus de ijs perſcribere neceſſarium eſſe haud putemus.

QUOD igitur reliquum eſt, nos, ſicuti ab initio conſtanti voluntate indefeſſoque ſtudio communem cauſſam promovendam ſuſcepimus; ita in poſterum quoque dabimus operam, ut quavis occaſione, non aliud quàm ſynceri affectus noſtri argumenta ſereniſſimis regibus, principibus, et ſtatibus demonſtremus, dummodo reciproco voluntatis affectu tractari, dignitatique noſtræ conſuli ab ijs nos quoque cernamus. Eandem etiam hæc æqui bonique conſulturam non dubitamus, cum prudenti judicio neceſſitatem cauſæ, perſonæque et dignitatis noſtræ rationem a vobis habitam eſſe conſiderabit. Reliqua à præſentium exhibitore magnifico Franciſco Miko de Hiduege conſiliario et ſupremo cubiculario, et capitaneo ſedium Siculicalium, Czyk, Gyrgio et Kaſzon, atque hoc tempore ad aulam Ottomanicam ſummo legato noſtro fideli, nobis ſyncerè dilecto, eadem uberius intelliget; cujus verbis, ut quicquid nomine noſtro retulerit, indubiam fidem adhibendam velit, eandem benigne requirimus; et de

cætero

1627. cætero eidem omnem incolumitatem et felices rerum ſucceſſus comprecamur. Datum in civitate noſtra Alba Julia, die 25. Septembris, 1627.

Dominationis veſtræ, illuſtris et magnifice, benevolus,

GABRIEL.

Superſcribed,

Illuſtri et magnifico THOMÆ ROE, Equiti aurato, ac ſereniſſimi Magnæ Britanniæ Regis in Aulâ Ottomanicâ Oratori continuo, &c. Amico noſtro benevolo.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

TO ſatisfye your lordſhip concerning my opinion of the prince of Tranſiluania, I will here repeate ſome things which I haue formerly written to your lordſhip more then once. Although you know well, that our maſter did promiſe him 10000 l. ſterling, payable in the month of June laſt paſt; yet conſidering that you haue not receaued any bills of exchange to that purpoſe, and that he had formerly concluded a peace with the emperor, contrary to his promiſe, your lordſhip hath donne uery well to pay him with his owne coyne, which is faire words, that he may know wee are not ſo dull, but that wee can ſee and obſerue the obliquity of his proceedings. As for the depoſito, which he doth require to be made in the hands of the bailo, it doth ſute more with the ſuſpitiouſnes of his falſe hart, then with the greatnes and ſincerity of our maſter: and therfore you haue donne nobly to reject that ouuerture with ſcorne; and you cannot ſufficiently exaggerate the baſenes of ſuch a merchant-like proceeding. If he will haue monny depoſitated for his uſe, let him depoſitate likewiſe ſomething equiualent, which may aſſure us of his ſincerity; but neither he, nor all his tribe, is able to do ſo; and if he could find ſo much credit among Turkes, Jewes, or Tartares, yet would it not ſtand with the honor and greatnes of our maſter to goe uppon ſuch euen tearmes with ten times a better perſon then he.

BY his ſtimulating the gran ſignor to breake with the emperor, it may be thought that he doth repent him of what he hath donne: and in caſe your lordſhip do underſtand that he doth really goe into the feilde, I ſuppoſe you will make no difficulty to ſend him his majeſties quota, pro menſibus quibus militavit; for if he do actually appeare in the cauſe, under whatſoeuer pretext, your diſcretion cannot be queſtioned for diſburſing that monny; but your zeale to his majeſties ſeruice will deſerue commendation, and you cannot doubt of reimburſement, becauſe you know it was promiſed vppon the condition of his taking armes. I feare he will not putt you to that triall; for the laſt paper which his extraordinary brought unto you, conſiſting partly of auuiſi, and partly of a proteſt, hath not one true word in it. There is no ſuch thing as a ſonne of the king of Denmarke in thoſe parts with 15000 men: it is a pure inuention of his owne forging, to what end I know not. That army which was in Sileſia, is really diſſolued; of which ſome haue taken quarter with the emperor, ſome are retired by Gubelunga into Hungary; and colonel Baudis, with ſome horſe, hath forced his paſſage through Polonia, and is arriued with the king of Denmarke; ſo that this is a meere impoſture. As for the elector of Brandebourg, whoſe quarell he doth pretend to eſpouſe, your lordſhip may take notice, that it is he who did induce the elector to accommodate with the emperor; and that the Imperiall forces were by the elector admitted and called into the marquiſate, after that Gabor had firſt made his peace.

IF the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg do arriue in a time when Gabor may yet be doubtfull what to do, I am perſwaded he will do his beſt to make him franchir le ſault; and untill I do heare from that prince, I will retayne a little hope in the midſt of much diſpayre. The ſooner that wee can fadome the bottom of that pozzo di St. Patricio, it will be the better; for when it ſhall conſtare, that he hath betrayed our cauſe, wee may haue our reuenge by reuealing his ſecreats to the vizir, and by excluding him whenſoeuer wee make a peace; which it is thought may be concluded ſhortly at Milhuzen.

HERE incloſed, your lordſhip ſhall receaue a pacquet out of England, which did 1627. come the laſt weeke. This ordinary hath brought nothing from thence. My ſeruice remembred to your ſelfe and your noble lady, I will euer reſt

Venice, 1. October, 1627, ſtilo nouo. Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull and humble frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

From the Same.

My Lord,

MY laſt to your lordſhip were of the 18th of September, ſtilo novo, as you may ſee by the incloſed duplicate, which will likewiſe tell you, that I did giue preſent ricapito unto ſuch pacquets of yours as came under my couer, at that time, addreſſed ſome to the Haghe, to the queen of Bohemia; and other to England, to my lord viſcount Killultagh, and Mr. Queſtor.

I HAUE this day receaued one from your lordſhip, dated $\frac{11}{21}$. of Auguſt, with an incloſed directed to Mr. Queſtor, which ſhall be ſent away, God willing, carefully, by the firſt opportunity. It will be hard for mee to ſatisfye your lordſhip in that particular which you deſire to know, concerning your pacquets ſent from hence into England, which of them haue miſcaryed; but for any thing I know to the contrary, you may comfort your ſelfe with a hope, that they are all ſafely arriued: for Mr. Queſtor hath lately, in one letter, accuſed the receipt of ſeuen of mine, which did come to his hands all at one time: and therfore, ſeeing mine did find the way, (although late enough) I ſee no reaſon why any of your lordſhips going under my couer ſhould be ſuppoſed to haue miſcaryed.

THE acceptance which your lordſhip is pleaſed to expreſſe of my conforming my ſelfe unto ſuch inſtructions as I receaued from you, touching the diſputes betwixt our nation and the Venetians, ſhall incorage mee hereafter not onely to ſecond any other act of yours, but to ſerue you faithfully in whatſoeuer you ſhall command, either for the publique, or your owne priuate ſeruice; and I will beſeech you to beleeue without ceremony, that though I haue not the honor to be knowen unto you, yet you haue no frend in the world, that doth more truly honor your wel knowen uirtues and merit. I pray God that you finde, at your returne, ſuch a reward as your care, paynes, and diligence, hath deſerued: whereunto if I could contribute any thing but my good wiſhes, you ſhould as ſoone ſee the effects, as heare of the offer. I am at this preſent imbroyled here with diſputes of the ſame kind, and haue preſented to this prince memorialls of greauances, for which I do require ſatisfaction in the name of his majeſtie. If they do not do us right, wee ſhall be inforced to right ourſelfes; for in truth the tiranye of their miniſters is inſupportable, and although wee haue ſo many irons in the fire at this time, that it may ſeeme wiſdom to temporiſe a while, yet will not onely keepe them from preſcribing any thing which our conniuence may ſeeme to grant, but ſtartle them likewiſe with formall proteſts, and not leaue any of their chaces unmarked. They are uery aduantagious people, and do craftily ſeeke to drawe all the water to their owne mill; wherein they haue hitherto proſpered, in regard that marchants and maſters of ſhips, corrupted with their owne priuate intereſts, haue yeelded and donne many things which haue prejudiced our nation in generall, and no ambaſſador would hitherto intermeddle with any thing which did concerne trade or marchants. But now that I haue expreſſe order from his majeſtie to aſſiſt and protect our marchants, I will faithfully execute the commandement of my maſter, and take uppon mee to be their ouerſeer here; neither ſhall the Venetians get any more ground uppon us as long as I am in this place. Three of our ſhips departed from hence yeſterday to goe for Allexandria, captain Bredcake, Browne, and Treuiſe. Before their departure, I called for the charter partyes, to ſee whither the Venetians who haue fraighted them, had not cautelouſly inſerted ſome article prejudiciall to our nation; and finding nothing but what might well paſſe, I did diſmiſſe them, with expreſſe charge not to beare any colours but St. George, nor to acknowledge any conſul but the Engliſh, if they ſhould come into any place where there was an Engliſh conſull.

I HAUE for many yeares of late ſeriouſly applyed my thoughts and ſtudy towards the driuing of a trade at Villa Franca and Nizza; the former being a good port, and 1627. the other a citty thereunto adjoyning, both belonging to the duke of Sauoye. Many croſſe incounters, eſpecially of warres, haue hitherto diuerted and interrupted the execution of that deſigne: but hauing, at my laſt being at Turin, ſtipulated with the duke of Sauoye all that I could conceaue to be neceſſary, both for the franchigia of the port, and the facilitating of the trade, and ſo cleared all doubts, I haue propounded it to all of our nation in thoſe parts, who haue willingly entertained the motion; and uppon my perſwaſion, moſt of our marchants, which were at Marſeilles, haue tranſported themſelfes to Nizza, where they do now beginne to ſet up their howſes. Here incloſed your lordſhip ſhall receaue a copye of the duke of Sauoyes declaration, and of all ſuch acts as do concerne this buiſines: and if after the peruſall of them you ſhall approue thereof, your approbation will be a greate incoragement to mee to proceede. My purpoſe is to breake the ſcale of Ligorne as farre as poſſibly I may, conceauing that it will turne us better to account (cæteris paribus) to benefit the duke of Sauoye, who doth concurre with his majeſtie, then to fauor the duke of Florence, who doth aſſiſt the emperor. If this deſigne do proue as ſucceſful as it is hopefull, it will giue a greate check unto the Venetians, and weaken this piazza exceedingly, as your lordſhip out of your wiſdom can better conceaue, then I am able to expreſſe. And if I do not receaue good ſatisfaction for the releife of our marchants in their greauances, I am reſolued to moue his majeſtie for the prohibiting the importation of currents of Zante or Ceſalonia; which may ſafely be donne without prejudice to our country, or without diminiſhing that part of his majeſties reuenue, which the impoſt doth bring in.

I HAUE troubled your lordſhip to long with a tedious diſcourſe of things, which being not of my element, I may well miſtake; and therfore I ſhall deſire to be illuminated and directed by your lordſhip, whoſe inſtructions I will not fayle punctually to follow, when I ſhall haue the honor to receaue them. Of the publique I will write nothing in this paper; but if I meete with any thing worthy your knowledge before the departure of the fregate, I will make bolde to trouble you with a word or two. So, wiſhing you and your noble lady all happines, I kiſſe both your hands, and reſt euer

Venice, 1. October,
ſtilo nouo, 1627.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

AFTER 46 dayes contumacia ſome where, I receiued togither your lordſhips two letters of the 7. and 21. Auguſt, glad that all myne to the 30. June are ſafely arriued, and ſent on their way; for which trouble I haue no other excuſe but your owne command, and the returne of my humble thancks.

WITH all obſeruance I acknowledge your lordſhips freedome with me, in judging the proceedings of Gabor, and uouchſafing me your counſell, which I had much rather obey then controuerte. But fynding your lordſhip hath miſtaken me, ſuppoſing I haue the power and commiſſion to disburſe the monye, which perhaps you collect out of my anſwers to his miniſters; wherin I only ſett on the beſt face to braue them, and to keepe our owne creditt entyre: but in my letters to your lordſhip I did write playnly, that ſince the firſt aduice from my lord Killultagh, now almoſt a yeare ſince, that his majeſtie had contracted to pay 10000 pound in June here in this cytty, I neuer heard more of yt, nor of his lordſhip, untill Gabor, ſending the articles, demanded the payment, though I continually, and without intermiſſion of one poſt, haue ſollicited ſome order; intimating an offer of my owne creditt, and all other becomming and modeſt prouocations. What the cauſe is, will hurt me to ſearch into yt. It may be, writing the truth of his defection, and the degrees of yt, as I diſcouered yt, (which fayth and duty exacted) that might hinder the care; but could not meritt no anſwere, when I deſired but directions and creditt, promiſing to pay nothing but upon ſure grounds, at my owne perill; and therfore I refuged to your lordſhips enformation and counſell, whither you know any thing of the change of purpoſes, of the monye, of bills, or how I might uenture to disburſe my owne, to uphold the cauſe and our ſtipulation, if I ſaw all did depend ſuper hunc cardinem.

cardinem. Now I thincke your lordſhip would not wiſh me, but rather is glad for me, that I haue done no more then outface them; and Gabor will better cheape unmaske himſelfe to us, then by my loſs and undoing: for ſo I muſt feare it would haue beene, if I had payd it. It were too much to looſe to proue a man falſe, when truth is ſcarce ſo well rewarded. I muſt boaſt, that I may be as ſoone undone, and with as little grudging for my countrye, as any man: but when my zeale may be called folly, my portion may be ſcorne inſteede of pittye. And if for my feruencye it be lawfull to judge my ſelfe with the buſines neglected, (which now makes me more warye, though not leſs affectionat) this troubles me, that the Duch ambaſſador, who neuer had creditt but under me, nor would neuer engage his creditt for any thing that was not in eſſe, hath this weeke receiued bills of exchange for 15000 dollers, without aduice; but expecting more, and directions to pay it to Gabor. This he ſmiles at, and makes aduantage of to the miniſters of that prince, who will no longer looke upon me. If this mony be my maſters, I was worthy at leaſt to be joyned: if the kyng of Denmarkes, his majeſties ambaſſador is nearer a kynne to his ſeruice then the Duch: and their mony it is not; for their miniſter doth profeſs that they can pay none. But now I wander in umbraculo. I haue done my endeauor by all wayes to keepe that prince ſteddy, and haue uſed that laſt remedye of brauing councelled by your lordſhip, as by ſome paſſages in the letters ſent you, you may collect. But to ſpeake truth, I haue had no fayth in him theſe 8 moneths, though I was afrayd and unwilling to judge and diſcreditt him, moſt willing to err in better hopes. Your lordſhips cenſure is right, that the propoſitions of the laſt ambaſſador was to ſound the forde; but I thincke their deſire was to fynd no mony, but an eſcape; and were ſorry to haue found me ſo honeſt and reſolute: for they durſt not accept of my offer to depoſite the mony, upon condition, on their part, to declare that their maſter would breake with the emperor, and to bynd themſelues for him, to reſume armes before the end of July.

THE Turkiſh intelligence had too much truth in yt; and by your lordſhips fauour, Gabor firſt forſooke actually Morteſa baſſa, and was tempering of a peace before euer this ſtate declined, who till February referred all to him: and at laſt, by their owne affayres of Aſya, and his example, awakened, were moſt glad to make peace. Notwithſtanding I knew all this, yet he did ſo mudd the waters with new propoſitions, and proteſtations, and negotiations, that I did ſtill hope out of no other reaſon, but becauſe it was Gabor. What now to ſay of him I know not, nor what the Duch will doe with his monye. I will only relate to your lordſhip res geſtas. Abſolutly the peace is concluded with the aſſiſtance of his ambaſſadors for 25 yeares. The emperors internuntio, with the articles, is on this ſyde Buda with preſents, euery where receiued with joy, and expected to enter in ten dayes with 50 in his trayne. An extraordinary of Gabor hath out-gone him, and wilbe here before him, with new practices, I doubt not, his pocketts ſtuffed with commiſſions like Gundomar, equall in falſhood, in witt to uſe it only differing. And I ſhall now only act a paſſiue part, heare all, and anſwere nothing; for without mony I ſhall bluſh to promiſe it, or to beleeue them, or to truſt them, if I had it. In concluſion of this poynt, without order I dare doe nothing, but pray for the proſperity of Jeruſalem.

THE treaty your lordſhip doth mention at Milhuſen, makes me hope for a peace, and to neede none of theſe broken reedes. Of all help or countenance from this part I deſpayre. Your lordſhip ſhall haue done me a fauour, if in that you haue ſince enlarged, which you did but only touch; and I am utterly ignorant of all the actions of Chriſtendome, but that they baptize and burye; for of the intimation I will make uſe to this ſtate, that it is alſo in our power to make peace, and that our princes reſolue to doe yt, taught by their falſhood to prouide for themſelues; and then the emperor being armed, it may be likely he will uſe the aduantage upon them, when he hath no more oppoſition; it being only our armes that haue giuen them this truce, which I hope may be alſo in our power to take from them.

THE capten baſſa is returned from the Black-ſea, where, inſteede of ſhutting up the Caſſakes, (which he durſt not attempt; but, to ſeeme to doe ſomewhat, hath built an uſeleſs fort neare Oſu) he hath made a peace with them, and renewed it with the Poles, in which both ſydes ſeeme confident and ſatisfyed. This alſo may turne to the diſpleaſure of our friends.

1627. SINCE the open defection of Abaſa baſſa, (ſent your lordſhip in my laſt) the inuaſion of Perſia is diuerted, and the great vizier and the army gone directly to beſeege Arzerum: but the baſſa is ſtrong, fortefyed, uictualled, prouided and reſolute, the approaching winter in his fauour; and ſhall not want the recompence of his ſeruice to the Perſian by their ſuccours, for hauing eaſed them of the war drawne upon himſelfe, and therby giuen them oportunity to take Achiska (a frontyre of great importance) and Moſull, as is freſhly reported. The feare hath extended to Trabiſond, which is now in contemplation, and garriſons haſtening thither to preuent the danger. The Tartars are in contumacia, if not enemies. Cantemir emirze, a diſcontent prince of that bloud, is priuatly come hither, offering to diſplace the chan Muchemett Geray, and his brother Shachin, if he may obteyne ſome countenance and leaue. Many dayly conſultations, but what they reſolue is yet unknowne, danger appearing both wayes.

THE reuolt of Maan Ogli, emir of Sydon, is murmured and feared. All things upon the precipice of ruyne. The remaynes of hope reſt upon the braue old man Halill baſſa, who will fight, and bring the deciſion to the ſword: but he cannot long laſt, that at ſeauenty doth act the part of a young man both in dangers and trauells.

THIS is the epitome of our affayres. To my lord Kilulltagh I write not much, only the aſſurance of the peace with the emperor. All that I can write were better unknowne. The pleaſure of my diligence is ouerpaſt, nor will I trouble your lordſhip any further, but with a ſuite to preſent my wiues ſeruice to your honorable ladye, whoſe hands I kyſs, and faythfully reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{5}{15}$.
Octob. 1627.

From my Lord GRANDESON.

My verie good Lord,

THE confidence I had of your ſpeedie returne hether, ioyned with my deſire to ſee yow, hath made mee the more remiſſe in writing vnto yow. The ſhipps that were prepared by the Turkey merchants, (wherein Sir Peeter Wiche ſhould haue gone) were once ſtayed, then releaſed againe, which made mee more hopefull: and now it is determined that Sir Peeter Wiche ſhall goe on with the ſhipps, and your ſtay prolonged for a tyme by a commiſſion to bee an extraordinarie ambaſſador for the finiſhing of the great affaire yow haue in hand. And thus much concerning your imployment.

FOR the reſt, I can aſſure yow, yow ſtand highly in his majeſties good opinion, and of the lords, and your ſeruices well valued by them; and I doubt not but yow will finde a readie diſpoſition in them for your aduancement att your returne, if the way happilie bee traced out; concerning which, though it bee among my chiefe deſires, yet I can write nothing to yow thereof, by reaſon of the abſence of my lord duke, vpon whom all theſe thinges depend.

THAT great lord lyes ſtill before the fort att Rais, and wee expect dailie to heare from him, that he hath tooke it, notwithſtanding his majeſtie is now ſending great ſupplies vnto him, which onely tarrie for the winde. In the meane tyme wee proſper att ſea, taking euerie day ſomething, and looſing nothing: inſomuch as, this very day, captain Penington brought in aboue 40 ſayle of French ſhipps, as they came laden from the banke fiſhing: and the laſt weeke, Sir Sackuille Treauor brought away, from out the Texell, a great ſhipp of 700 tunns, built for the king of France, with 42 great ordinance, beſides other ordinance in the holde, and armes for att leaſt 2000 land ſoldiers. And ſoe for this tyme I committ yow to God, and remayne

11 Octob. 1627.
Batterſey.

Your affectionate kinſman to ſerue yow,

GRANDISONE.

Superſcribed,

To the Right Honorable my verie loueing Nephew Sir THOMAS ROE, Knight, his Majeſties Ambaſſador att
Conſtantinople.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſime Princeps,

CUM tamdiu a ſerenitate veſtra non audiui, neque belli vel pacis inſtitutum veſtrum intelligere non ſum capax; quid ſcribere et quomodo ſilere valdè ſolicitor. Poſt promiſſum in nomine magni imperatoris Turcici a chimachamo mihi datum, et celſitudinis veſtræ cum regibus ſtipulationem et fidem pactam, a partibus earum maieſtatum nihil defuit; ut toto mundo manifeſtare res erit facillima. Si ab alijs qualibuſcunque cauſa bona inimicis publicis venditur, pretium deſtitutionis ſolum Deus præuidit et prouidebit. Certè et nos pacem inire poſſumus, et inde rerum ſtatum, et ſedem belli mutare; ita vt qui nunc loricam ſegniter exuunt, reſumere ſerâ cum penitentiâ cogi poſſint. Maturè cogitet ſerenitas veſtra eſſe priuatis molitionibus progreſſum et regreſſum, et, prout velint, plus minuſve ſumi ex fortunâ; imperium cogitantibus, nihil medium inter ſumma et præcipitia. Vim armorum tuorum cum ignominiâ et metu ſæpe experti ſunt Auſtriaci; nec vnquam ſatis fida potentia, vbi nimia habetur. Denique potentiorum eſt regula, occaſione invitati eos vltum ineunt, qui per occaſionem temporum ipſis nocuerunt. Amplius ſcribendi materia non præbetur, cum his generoſus prudens certe, et negotiorum et mundi gnarus in omnibus eſt inſtructiſſimus. Serenitatem veſtram Deo propitio ſummo animi affectu commendo; et, vt in eius gloriam feliciter viuat, precor.

Conſtantinopoli, $\frac{12}{22}$.
Octob. 1627.

Celſitudinis veſtræ ſervus paratiſſimus,

T. R.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With a Copy of the King's Letter to the United Provinces, and Lord CARLETON's Propoſal to the States.

My uery good Lord,

YOUR lordſhips laſt of the 25th of Auguſt, ſtilo vet. arriued here ſo opportunely, that I had the happines to ſerue your lordſhip the ſame day, in ſending your pacquet to Mr. Queſtor, and the copyes of your letter written to mee, and other papers incloſed therein for mee, unto my lord Carleton, whom I haue deſired to communicate all unto their majeſties of Bohemia. My laſt unto you were dated the 1. of October, ſtilo novo; and the duplicates of them you ſhall receaue here incloſed.

MY lord Carleton hath ſent mee ſome papers, which he doth command mee to ſend to your lordſhip. I haue already ſent you ſome others to the ſame purpoſe; but becauſe I will not be wanting to obey the commandements of his lordſhip, I will incloſe his herein againe. Out of England I haue likewiſe receaued a pacquet for your lordſhip, which I ſend here incloſed. I hope you will not make a winter uoyage by ſea; and therfore I will promiſe my ſelfe the comfort of hearing from your lordſhip often before your departure, or ſeeing you here quickly.

THE prince of Tranſiluania hath ſent hither a groome of his chamber, who doth ſaye, That there is a more qualifyed perſon directed from him unto mee. If any ſuch do come, I ſhall perhaps receaue ſo much light as may inable mee to gueſſe at his proceedings, which I do much ſuſpect are not ſincere: for this groome (whoſe commiſſion I haue ſeen) hath order to tranſport into Tranſiluania, phyſitians, apothecaryes, maſters of muſique, fidlers, plaſterers, makers of cabinets, and to buy many curioſityes and toyes; which do argue that he hath rather ſet up his reſt uppon the giuing himſelfe buon tempo with his young lady, then retayned any thought of going into the feilde. I haue ſeen likewiſe by a letter written to a confident of his in this towne, that he hath nominated an ambaſſador to goe to the Haghe, not to treate, but to expoſtulate, and to bring away a nephew of his from Leyden, which I do take for an euident argument of deſertion; yet will I not paſſe my prejudicate ſentence, untill I heare or ſee more. My wife and I do preſent our beſt ſeruices and reſpects to your lordſhip and your lady; and I will euer reſt

Venice, 16 Octob.
1627. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

1627.

A Copy of the KING's Letter to the STATES of the Vnited Prouinces.

Hauts & Puiſſants Seigneurs, nos bons Amis & Alliéz,

NOUS auons receu uos lettres des mains de uoſtre ambaſſadeur, ſecondées de motifs pleins de jugement & dexterité, dont il a accouſtumé ſe ſeruir pour rendre uos requeſtes enuers nous dautant plus agreables, leſquelles nous auons tousjours reciies comme uenentes de nos bien aimez alliéz. Et pour reſponce à ycelles nous comencerons par vous dire, que ſil uous plaiſt de vous repreſenter nos actions par le paſſé, vous pouuéz par lá juger, que l'affection & deſir que nous auons eu d'arreſter le courſe des uictoires du roy d'Eſpagne en Alemagne, a tousjours uiſé au reſtabliſſement d'une bonne paix, & pour la ſeureté de toute la Chreſtienté. Et vous (ayants un ambaſſadeur en France, & qui jettéz l'œil, & arreſtez le jugement ſur les actions des princes chreſtiens) ne pouuéz que n'ayéz eſté informéz, & que n'ayéz remarqué, que nous auons eſté conſtraint, & forcé à une rupture auec la France, choſe bien contraire à nos bons deſirs & ſouhaits. Et nous vous prions de conſiderer combien ce nous ſeroit choſe prejudiciable, ſi nous admettions les deſſeings qu' auoit projettéz noſtre frere le roy treſcheſtien de ſe preualoir des nauires, & preparations de mer, pour s'en rendre maiſtre à noſtre prejudice, ſupprimer ſes bons & fidels ſubjets de la religion reformée, pour la defenſe deſquels nous ſommes appellé, & meſme obligé par noſtre dit frere. Or eſt il que l'inobſeruation des premeſſes, tant à nous quà eux, & le ſouddain traitté qu'il a faict ſous main auec l'Eſpagnol, auec quelques articles ſecrets, eſt digne de uoſtre conſideration, pour vous faire juger ſi une guerre tentante à une reformation, & diuerſion des ſiennes intentions, n'eſt pas plus aduantageuſe pour la cauſe commune, que d'endurer qu'il faict reuſſir ſes deſſeings, conduicts, & dirigéz par un conſeil tel que vous ſcauéz, par le quel il s'eſt laiſſe gouuerner.

TOUCHANTS les priſes, & arreſts de nauires appertenantes aux ſubjets de noſtre dit frere; il eſt aſſéz manifeſte, que nous y auons eſté pouſſé & incité par le ſubjet qu'il nous a donné, ſur l'arreſt qu'il a faict des noſtres, contraire à la liberté du commerce, à la foy publique, & aux traittéz ſolenement faicts entre ces courronnes, confirméz par ſon pere, & ſi fraiſchement par noſtre dit frere, que meſme pendant que les actes ſe fayſoyent, & apres y auons conſenty, & conclu de part & d'autre, l'on fit des ruptures & actes d'hoſtilité ſans aucun ſubjet, & hors de toute raiſon.

QUE ſi (ſur ce que nous auons eſté conſtraints pour maintenir noſtre reputation, & pour proteger nos ſubjets, de prendre, & nous ſaiſir par uoye des repriſailles des nauires & biens des Francois) il s'eſt trouue quelques biens des uos ſubjets meſléz parmy ceux des Francois, ou que uos biens ayent eſté pris dans des nauires Francois, & qu'en ſuitte d'une deüe examination ilz ayent eſté adjugez ſelon le droit: Nous vous prions de ne point interpreter ceſte procedure pour un traittement d'ennemy, puiſque vous ne pouuéz ignorer, que par raiſon d'eſtat, & noſtre mutuelle conſeruation, & plus eſtroittement par la ligue offenſiue & defenſiue, qui eſt entres nous, nous demeurons juſtifiez & affranchis de la jalouſie, que vous auéz conceüe ſur ce point. Car bien que vous uueilléz comparer les interruptions, & moindres prejudice auec les pires effects de le guerre; ſi eſt ce que vous vous pouuéz reſiouuenir d'en auoir ſuby des plus grands par la guerre, & que vous en pouuez preuoir des plus grands & de pires, ſil vous la faut ſouſtenir. Mais ne uoulants pas ballancer d'auantage cet affaire, nous nous arreſterons ſeulement à vous aſſeurer, que nous ne penſons à rien moins qu' à porter le moyndre prejudice à uoſtre eſtat, ni à nuire, ou à aggrauer uos ſubjets, ni permettre qu'il leur en ſoit faict; ains taſcherons par tous moyens de l'euiter, & en cas qu'il aduiene quelque diſordre par nos ſubjets, de le redreſſer, auec la ſeuerité & juſtice requiſe.

QUANT à ce qu'il vous a pleu nous propoſer, que vous trouuez bon qu'il fuſt un accommodement des differents, qu'il y a entre nous & noſtre frere le roy treſchreſtien, & que pour le mieux effectuer, il vous plaiſt de nous faire offre de uoſtre entremiſe; nous vous prions de uouloir au premier lieu conſiderer tout ce qui pourra eſtre plus aduantageuſe pour le bien de uoſtre eſtat, & pour la cauſe commune. Mais d'autant que nous fuſmes le premier offencéz, nous ne ſcaurons auec honneur faire aucune propoſition, ni receuoir ouuerture ou acheminement par des propoſitions procedantes de uous, qui nous eſtéz ſi eſtroittement alliéz. Mais ſi noſtre dit frere nous

faict

1627.

faict uoir ſon intention d'accomodement par vous, ou quelque autre, auec temps & lieu, nous ſerons touſjours preſts d'entendre les raiſons, & de teſmoigner combien nous ſommes portéz à faire tout ce que pourra eſtre aduantagenſe pour le bien publique, & pour la ſeureté d'Alemagne, & en ſuitte vous rendre des preuues de l'eſtime que nous faiſons de uoſtre mediation, & combien elle a eu de pouuoir de preualoir aupres de nous. Sur ce nous demeurons, &c.

Dome Palais de Woodſtocke, ce
5me d'Aouſt, 1627.

Propoſ. du Baron CARLETON D'IMBERCOURT, Ambaſſadeur extraordinaire de ſa Majeſté de la Grande Brettagne à Meſſieurs les Eſtats Generaux, faicte en leur Aſſemblée, le 15me de Septembre, 1627. ſtilo novo.

Meſſieurs,

BIENTOST apres mon arriueé icy, il vous a pleu de me teſmoigner par uos deputez la triſteſſe que vous auez eüe de l' interruption de la bonne correſpondence entre le roy mon maiſtre & le roy treſchreſtien, tant au regard du commun intereſt, comme du uoſtre en particuleur, vous preſentants comme mediateurs pour reſtablir la bonne concorde, amitié, & correſpondence entre les deux roys; & à cet effect auez eſcrit une lettre à ſa majeſté ſoubs le date de 1me. de Juillett, laquelle j'ay faict tenir fidellement à uoſtre ambaſſadeur monſieur Joachimi, pour eſtre preſentée à ſa majeſté, l'accompagnant des raiſons & arguments qui ont paſſez en diſcours entre voz deputez & moy, tendants au meſme fin. A cauſe de l'eſloignement de ſa majeſté de Londres durant ſon progrez, (qui a faict que uoſtre ambaſſadeur n'a point ſceu auoir audience ſi toſt) & le defaut d'un meſſager, (qui a failly au dernier retour de uoſtre nauire commandé du capitaine Emmekens) la reſponce eſt tarde. Mais, finalement, je l'ay icy pour vous la preſenter, à laquelle quand vous aurez donné lecture, j'adjouſteray ce que j'ay de ſurplus en charge.

LA lettre eſtant leüe, l'ambaſſadeur a pourſuiuy de dire, Meſſieurs, vous auez entendu par la lettre du roy mon maiſtre, comme ſa majeſté a eue pour agreable l'office que vous auez faict tant par uos lettres, comme par ce que uoſtre ambaſſadeur, ſelon ſa prudence, & dexterité accouſtumeé, y a adjoinct; comme apres auoir allegué les raiſons des preſents differents, ſa majeſté vous aſſeure de ſon ſoing d'empeſcher qu'ilz ne tourneront de ſon coſté au prejudice de uoſtre eſtat; & que, ſi quelque mal arriue par defaute de ſes gens, le remede y ſera promptement appliqué. Finalement, comme ſa majeſté, eſtant toute porteé à faire tout ce qui pourra eſtre aduantageux au bien publique, & en ſuitte de uous rendre des eſpreuues de l'eſtime qu'elle faict de uoſtre mediation, ne ſcait pas (l'honneur ſauué) faire aucune propoſition ny en ſon propre nom, ni par vous, ſeignieurs, qui lui ſont ſi eſtroictement alliéz, eſtant le premier offencé: mais de l'autre coſté, ſi le roy treſchreſtien lui fera uoir ſon intention d'accomodement par uous, ou quelque autre, en temps & lieu, qu'il ſera touſjours preſt d' y entendre.

VOICY donques l'eſtat de l'affaire: le roy mon maiſtre, eſtant le premier offencé, ne peut pas parler le premier; de l'autre coſté, il paſſé en prouerbe Italien, Chi offende, non pardona: quiconque donne l'offence, eſt touſjours le plus eſloigné de l'accomodement, de ſorte qu'il faut prendre les affaires en l'eſtat qu'ilz ſont, non comme on les ſouhaitte, ſans s'amuſer touſjours ſur les cauſes & raiſons des maux, juſques à ce que l'effects nous accablent en une totale ruine.

TOUTTESFOIS, ſi nous uoulons recherchir les uraies cauſes qui portent les deux courronnes à ceſte extremité, nous uerrons au clair, que, du coſté de la France, toutte eſt allé par deſſeing pourpenſé; d'Angleterre, par accident, ſelon qu'elle a eſté porteé par neceſſité. Le deſſeing de la France ayant eſté, (ſelon qu'elle a eſté tranſportée par conſeilz appaſſionnez) tantoſt par force, tantoſt par artefice, d'extirper totalement la religion reformeé; & à ceſte fin ayant donné une playe bien ſanglante à icelle par les nauires d'Angleterre, & de ces Prouinces Conjoincts, apres la reuocation de nos nauires, elle s'a cherche à pourſuiure ſon point par d'autres uoyes, ſe ſaiſſiſants d'une flotte entiere de plus de 100 uoiles Angloiſes, dans la riuiere de Bourdeaux, & faiſant dans uos ports des equippages par mer, pour acheuer la beſongne deſja commencée, & ſi auant aduancée, par les nauires des nos 2 nations; adjouſtant à ceſte heure, de ſurplus une aide qu'elle recherche des Eſpagnols, auec leſquels elle traitte.

1627. CECY eſtant le preſent eſtat de l'affaire, j'ay commandement du roy mon maiſtre de uous ramenteuoir trois points.

LA premier eſt, Que ſa majeſté eſtant informeé qu'un traiƌté ſe maine entre la France & ces Prouinces Unies, ſus le pied du dernier de Compeigne, qui eſt de tout expiré, ſcachant que le deſſeing du dit traitté de la part des Francois n'eſt autre que d'auoir laide des uos nauires d'un coſté pour ſe fortifier contre ſa majeſté, & de l'autre pour ſeconder le ſiege qui ſe faiƌt maintenant à la Rochelle, uous prie de peſer la difference entre un prince qui eſt desja declaré uoſtre confœderé tant en uoſtre guerre offenſiue que defenſiue, & un autre, qui ne cherche uotre amitié, que pour luy faire du mal, & pareillement de n'oublier pas comme uos derniers nauires, obtenus premierement de cet eſtat, pour faire la guerre contre les ennemis de l'eſtat, ont eſté employé contre monſ. de Soubize comme deſobeiſſant à la France, & finalement contre ceux de la religion ſoubs le tiltre des rebelles. Or d'immaginer de pouuoir pour uſnir ſemblable engagement par cautions & conditions d'un traitté, eſt une tromperie uolontaire; & celuy qui faiƌt deux fois naufrage ſur le meſme eſcueil, fruſtra Neptunum accuſat.

2. LE 2^{me}. Que ſa majeſté prennant notice d'un armement qui ſe faiƌt icy en ces Prouinces par mer aux d'eſpens du roy treſchreſtien, par la fabrique d'aucuns nauires auec un grand preparatif d'artillerie de bronze, & la chapt & loüage d'autres, & ſcachant que tout cet æquippage ſe faiƌt contre ſa majeſté & la ville de la Rochelle, uous prie de bien penſer & conſiderer, que c'eſt un treſinique recompenſe de faire ſeruir ces Prouinces comme d'un arſenal des nauires & d'artillerie, pour faire la guerre contre ſa majeſté, tandis que l'Angleterre embarquée a toute outrance, en une cauſe uous fournir des touttes choſes neceſſaires que ce pais la produit, & particulierement d'une continuelle prouiſion d'artillierie de fer pour uoſtre ſeruice: & quant à la Rochelle, cette uille lá ayant eſté du tout temps une nourrice de la religion reformée, en ce pais icy merite mieux que d'auoir cet eſtat pour maraſtre.

3. LE 3^{me}. Que ſa majeſté eſtant treſaſſeurée (comme uous ne pouuez pas ignorer) que la France inuite maintenant la Spagne à une aſſociation, par laquelle cherche d'introduire par la benefice des ports du royaume de France des flottes Eſpagnolles auec ſeurté en nos mers; ſa majeſté uous ſomme en uertu de la confœderation entre elle & vous, ſeignieurs, de tenir uos nauires pour conjoindre auec ſiens, à fin d' obuier au malheur qui menace eſgalement ſes royaumes & uos prouinces.

VOICY (meſſieurs) en bref ce que j'ay en charge: ſur quoy je ne me ueus poinƌt eſlarger en arguments & perſuaſions pour vous induire à prendre à cœur ce que ſa majeſté uous raccomandée: uous remetant à l'expoſition que je uous fis dernierement icy en uoſtre aſſemblée ſur le meſme ſubjet, & me confiant en uoſtre affeƌtion & prudence.

Exhibée par eſcrit l'16^{me}. & ſignée.

D. CARLETON.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

MY laſt letters were dated the 19. of May: wherin I encloſed the forme of ſome peices of marble drawne in paper: and if that be arriued to your grace, you will haue found the firſt fruiƌts of my ſeruants employment into Greece, who is not yet returned, but I haue often heard from him. Foure ſtatues he hath ſent from Corynth: what they will proue, I dare not ſpoyle by prayſes and expeƌtations; but I am enformed, that they are ſuch (though defaced) as in Rome (where images are gods) would be highly eſteemed. He is ſome monethes paſt gone to Achaya, Argos, Lacedemon, and Napoli di Romania, and ſo to the iſlands Cyclades: and I do expeƌt him ſhortly, after hauing uiſited all the places likely to yeild your graces contentment. Many other peices he hath gotten, of which, when he ſhall returne, I will ſend your grace a catalogue, as a modell of the ſucceſs of my zealous endeauours to doe you humble ſeruice.

Pruſa AT Burſia I loſt my labour and expence, not hauing found one head nor foote. And from Sinope and Amaſia, ther is nothing come but aduice of a tombe, which, if it could be gotten, is too heauy for any engine to carry to the ſea. What I cannot performe in my owne tyme, (which now with much wearines I ſpinne out) I will ſett in ſuch order, that whatſoeuer is found (and our ſearch hath begotten a diligence and care in all the inhabitants of the Arches and Morea) ſhalbe preſerued for your grace; who I know doth eſteeme it as much greatnes to accept of ſmall ſeruices of poore men, as to command the mighty; and therfore I will take that comfort in your graces noblenes, that I cannot fynd in my owne meritt.

THE double proceedings of theſe parts I haue continued to write to my lord Killultagh, to whom, by the laſt and this poſt, I haue ſent the concluſion of our treatyes ended in a falſe peace: and while your grace was abroad in action, (from whence I hope this will congratulate your ſafe and honorable returne) though I did not preſume to enterrupt you, yet I now cannot neglect my ſelfe to implore your gratious patronage; and that you will ſo ſeaſon my ſeruices to his majeſtie, that they may be accepted, as they were in the roote, in me; and not ſubiect (as all humane actions and purpoſes are) to externall changes and miſcarriage. In this fayth and joy I expect my ſucceſſor, in all things to exceede me, but in feruent deuotion to be approued

Conſtantinople, $\frac{18}{28}$.
Octob. 1627.

Your Graces moſt humble ſeruant.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

THER is come another ordinarye from Venice, which hath not brought one letter for the Engliſh, all other nations being full: and with the reports of enemies, or worſe friends, we and our cauſe are ſo decryed, that if ſtomach kept me not in countenance, I ſhould be deiected. I am perſwaded, no publicque miniſter here is more diligent then I; but fynding, by Æſops fable, that ſome may be too ſedulous, I haue not written this poſt to the ſtate, only ſent duplicates of my laſt. Our expectation is now drawne out, upon the arriuall of the emperors and Gabors ambaſſadors, this laſt being ſayd to be neare; from whoſe reſident here I haue receiued a letter, playnly now confeſſing the peace made betweene theſe empires, and the feaſting of the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh in Alba Julia; but of our buſines nothing, but that I ſhall haue ample anſwers from the prince, by the extraordinarye now on the way. They tell us, the kyng of Denmarke is retyred, upon the defenſiue, into his owne teretoryes, that all Germany is brought under the Auſtrian yoke, that the troopes in Sileſia are broken or diſſolued; and they may ſay what els they will of France and Spayne, and I can but hope they lye. All I haue now to doe is to exclayme; and when this German nuntio ſhall arriue with the articles, to chalenge the promiſe of the grand ſignor and all his miniſters, that they ſhall not be ratefyed without the conſent or comprehenſion of the friends of the port. With this I may make ſome noyſe; but I judge, without effect: it wilbe as much as I can hope for, if I can exclude the Spaniards, who doubtleſs will ſeeke to haue an enterance to their peace at this doore.

THE encloſed letter to Gabor I wrote by the occaſion of a Tranſyluanian gentlemans departure, who would not goe without a few lines from me. I know not what to write, nor to what end, or to which purpoſe to bend my intention; and therfore tooke your lordſhips laſt counſell to threaten him, and to intimate, that he might be leſs ſecure in his peace with falſe friends, then in warr with true. The emperor will euer eſteeme him a rebell. Diſuſe hath diſabled me from a facilitye in Latin: therin your lordſhip will pardon me; for when I ſend you my coppies, I know before whom I ſtand, Rhetor ducturus ad aram. If you thincke any part of theſe cogitations fitt to ſend to my lord Kyllultagh, that he may know yet how I ſtruggle, your lordſhip may uſe the authoritye you haue ouer me.

FROM this ſtate I can write you nothing, but a confirmation, that the great vizier is gone upon Arzerum; and that in the laſt mentioned ouerthrow, though it were concealed, that ther fell 18000. What ſince is done wee know nothing. There are ill rumors ſpread, which I beleue not. God Almightye giue us the fruicts of a juſt warr; and ſo I leaue your lordſhip to quieter thoughts then myne, and reſt

Conſtantinople, $\frac{20}{30}$.
Octob. 1627.

Your, &c.

1627. I HAUE found, that the Tranſyluanian agent hath opened all my letters formerly; whither by order from the prince, or els to ſend and condemne what pleaſed or diſpleaſed him, I cannot tell; but feare the latter: and therfore I haue aduiſed his maſter, and ſent him a catalogue. This is the 3d in my tyme of 3 ſeueral religions, a Papiſt, a Caluiniſt, and an Arian, all three knaues.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

I HAUE underſtood this morning, that my greate pacquet, which I conſigned unto the Bolla uppon the 16th of this month, ſtilo novo, is not yet departed, in regard that the ill weather hindered the fregate from putting to ſea. Whereuppon I haue thought fit to ſuccenturiate unto what I had formerly written, a copye of a diſpatch that I am to ſend away this night into England; by which your lordſhip will underſtand the arriuall of Cornitz here from Tranſiluania, and what hath paſſed betwixt mee and him. The uſe of this I do leaue unto the wiſdome of your lordſhip; for my purpoſe was to make good what you had ſayde, and not to intrude uppon your dioces. If I be not deceaued, deſeruit cauſam: yet will I expect to heare from the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, before I paſſe my prejudicate ſentence. Your lordſhips letters and inſtructions ſhall be my tramontara, by which I will ſayle that waye; and you may beleeue, that I will obſerue punctually whatſoeuer you ſhall preſcribe. If in England, and at the Haghe, they do not ſpeake in our language, wee may both of us paſſe for cingani: our comfort muſt bee, that wee meane well; and if wee do ill, it is becauſe wee know not what they would haue donne, whom it doth concerne to command. So in haſt, I reſt

Venice, 22. October,
ſtilo nouo, 1627.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

YOUR lordſhips cifer will ſerue to open what is in my letter to my lord Conway.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE, to my Lord CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

SINCE my laſt vnto your lordſhip of the $\frac{5}{15}$. of October, here is arriued ſignior Cornitz, a captaine of a company of horſe ſent from $\overset{g}{20}.\overset{a}{5}.\overset{b}{7}.\overset{o}{40}.\overset{r}{45}.\overset{o}{70}.\overset{o}{64}$, with a conuoy or carauana of oxen, kine, horſes, and other beaſts, of which ſome are to be preſented here to Daniel Nys, and the reſt to be ſold, and the monny to be employed in the paying for ſuch commodityes, and the tranſportation of ſuch perſons, as the groome, of whom I writ to your lordſhip the laſt weeke, hath order and commiſſion to buy and conduct thither. Cornitz hath complyed with mee very ceremoniouſly in the name of his maſter; and he doth affirme, that he had receaued a letter from his maſter to mee, and that it was taken from him againe the day before his departure, vppon occaſion of newſe brought to the court of the approach of the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh, (who was to arriue the day following) with whom that prince did deſyre to ſpeake and conferre, before he did write vnto mee. When I was ſure, that he had no letter for mee, nor order to treate any thing with mee, I tolde him, that I could not chuſe but wonder to ſee that his maſter did ſo much neglect both the publique cauſe, and his owne priuate intereſt, conſidering that for the ſpace of diuers months, 40000 crownes had beene remitted hither for his vſe, by [a] 51.a. and hitherto no man had appeared to aſke it, nor brought any aſſurance of his conſtancy, which might haue confuted thoſe rumors that haue runne a long tyme, of his diſertion, and of his hauing conclud $\overset{o}{65}.\overset{o}{84}.\overset{p}{41}.\overset{e}{12}.\overset{a}{1}.\overset{c}{8}.\overset{e}{15}.\overset{o}{70}$ with [b] 91.a. that he could not be ignorant thereof, in regard that Sir Thomas Roe had long ſince ſignifyed ſo much to his [c] 54.e. when they did require that [d] 81.c. of him; and that now I did not know what to do, but onely to ſend the [e] 81.c. back againe into

[a] His majeſtie. [b] The emperor. [c] Ambaſſadors. [d] Monye. [e] Monye.

[f] 60.a. Cornitz was very much ſtartled, when he heard of this [g] 81.c. and ſayd that his maſter had beene abuſed by his [h] 54.c. who had concealed the truth from him; and he did then beginne to proteſt and ſweare, nothing was concluded with [i] 91.a. and that his maſter was reſolued to ſerue [k] 51.a. vnto whom he was now ſending [l] 53.c. deſyring mee not to ſend backe the [m] 81.c. becauſe it would be as ſure in my hands as in his maſters; and that ſhortly I ſhould be ſure to heare from him to my contentment. When I did fynd, that he did byte ſo eagerly at the bayte of [n] 81.c. I thought it good to keepe him betwixt hope and doubt, without deſpayre; and told him, that I would keepe it in my hands as long as I could, and vntill I ſhould receaue order to diſpoſe otherwiſe thereof, which I might expect to haue ſhortly, in regard that the long delayes of his maſter, accompanied with his indirect proceedings, and clandeſtine treatyes, had giuen juſt cauſe to [o] 51.a. to ſuſpect his ſincerity, and to giue ouer the thought of him; and that he muſt not expect to receaue any thing, vntill he had waſhed away thoſe ſpots, and donne ſomething which might deſerue it. Vppon thoſe tearmes wee parted yeſterday: and if any [p] 53.c. do come from him into [q] 60.a. I ſhall humbly deſyre, that what I haue ſayd here may be juſtifyed, in regard that what I haue donne was intended onely to juſtify Sir Thomas Roe, who had formerly very dexterouſly qualifyed the heate and importunity of his [r] 54.c. there, by referring them for further elucidation vnto mee. If it doth appeare, that he doth really and ſincerely eſpouſe our cauſe, dignus erit operarius mercede ſua, and Sir Thomas Roe will make good what hath beene promiſed; but if he do juggle, wee ſhall haue tyme to diſcouer his obliquity, and he ſhall haue no juſt cauſe to complayne of vs.

BY the copye of Mr. Mountagus letter, it will appeare what he hath required of mee; and if your lordſhip will be pleaſed to peruſe my anſwer, and a copye of a letter of my ſeruant reſiding in Heluetia, you will ſee, that I haue already donne by way of anticipation, as much as Mr. Mountagu doth deſyre. His letter was accompanyed with French inſtructions drawen by himſelfe, and other papers and letters written in French, which I do forbeare to ſend, becauſe in his French inſtructions he doth ſay, that he will ſend them to his majeſtie by Mr. Wood. If Mr. Mountagu ſhall haue written concerning the mouing of the proteſtant cantons for a ſecourſe either of men or monny, I ſhall deſyre your lordſhip, as you do tender the honor of his majeſtie, not to ingage him therein, becauſe I am ſure the buſineſſe is vnfaiſable, and I would be loth his majeſtie ſhould receaue a denyall. Dr. Mayerne baron d'Aubone can informe his majeſtie and your lordſhip of the diſpoſition of thoſe people better then any man in England; and as I would be glad, that he were conſulted withall uppon that point, ſo I ſhall humbly deſyre, that my not following therein the fancyes of Mr. Mountagus correſpondent in Geneua, may not be imputed to faintnes in his majeſties ſeruice.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

I COULD neuer fynd where your lordſhips letters reſted on the way, hauing no cauſe to miſtruſt the baylo, whoſe friendſhip is my only comfort here; and I thinke Venice hath not many ſuos pares. I acknowledge your lordſhips abundant fauour, receiuing now togither a whole ſumme, 4 of your letters, the 3d and 18. September, and two of the 1. October; the former, as I ſuppoſe, hauing ſlept at Catara, from whence I expect redreſs. For all the encloſed papers, my debt and my thankefullnes are both encreaſed. Of the finall ſucceſs of our army on Saint Martyns, and of the kyng of Denmarke, the principall obiects of my thoughts, the reports are uarious; but hearing nothing from your authoritye, I know not what to beleeue or anſwere.

IN our affayres here, I can ſend you no amendment, neyther can any thing be publiſhed ſufficient to the ſhame of Gabor. When I looke backe, and view all his negotiations, offers, engagements, and changes at one proſpect, (the parts wherof eaſely ſlip out of memorye, being moſt intent upon the preſent, and 1627. captiuated with zeale to our owne deſires) I wonder at my ſelfe, that I could haue any fayth in ſuch Protean varietyes; which perhaps in tyme may make a good fable, and a good morall to the world, to take heede of thoſe that haue built their owne greatnes upon wicked and falſe foundations: Nemo unquam imperium flagitio quæſitum bonis artibus exercuit. His ambaſſador extraordinarye is arriued, and ſixe dayes after the internuntio of the emperor, with his branch of oliues. The firſt I ſent to ſalute and congratulate, who returned me the like office; wherin I obſerued the preface of his meſſengers formall oration: That the prince hauing lately entered into league with his majeſtie, and many mutuall relations of frendſhip paſt betweene them, the ambaſſador had order, after his audience, to come and uiſitt mee, and to communicate the requiſite affayres. Letter he mentioned none, nor euer ſince haue I heard from him, yet expect dayly; becauſe the hope of the kyng of Denmarkes mony, come to the Duch ambaſſador, 27000 dollers, will draw him out of his grauetye, in cunning to fingar any part of yt; and to the Duch, to my ſcorne and ſhame, is all the court made: corvus ad cadaver. With the laſt bills, the laſt poſt, came a letter from that kyng to Gabor, which is ſent away; but ſince, I heare the payment is ſuſpended untill new order; yet we thinke good, while anſwere from Tranſiluania is expected, which doubtleſs will bring acquittance and warrant to receiue yt, to diſcouer nothing, and to entertayne their hope, to draw them to conference and opennes with that golden bayte. Ther is a German gentleman in the ambaſſadors trayne, who hath diuers letters for me; but will not, or dares not, deliuer them till the publicque day. All I can learne is, that the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh is returned to Venice fruictleſs, whoſe arriuall will cleare all doubts, if ther be yet any, that the other may be honeſt; for I haue diſcouered, that the reſident, when he made his former demand of the mony, with a kynd of proteſt for not payment, had a larger commiſſion to proceede to cleare tearmes, and to declare the reaſons of his maſters retrayct and change; imputing the cauſe in harſh wordes to the French ambaſſador, and mannerly to the fayling of promiſes on our parts. But this old foxe, finding in my confidence an expectation of bills, and order to pay him, did forbeare to publiſh the cloſe of his inſtructions, hoping to lay hold on ſomewhat, and ſo not to be falſe too good cheape. The coppy I am promiſed, and will ſend it your lordſhip.

---

[f] England. [g] Mony. [h] Ambaſſadors. [i] The emperor. [k] His majeſtie. [l] An ambaſſador. [m] Mony. [n] Mony. [o] His majeſtie. [p] Ambaſſador. [q] England. [r] Ambaſſadors.

THE gentleman by whom I addreſſed my laſt letter to that prince, (as I thought, departed) the coppy whereof I ſent you, and this agent hath taken another, when he opened yt, ſtaying for his expedition, was on Sunday laſt murthered in his lodging, his goods rifled, and his body carried away, and found in a uoyd place by the cytty walls. From whence this blow came, I will not yet coniecture; but I know he was hated of the reſident, as one that had made too good obſeruation of the falſityes of his proceedings. They would now caſt the iniquitye upon the vizier, as if this man had beene a ſpye for the Perſian; from whoſe campe and court he lately came, and had trauelled 8 yeares thorough all Aſya; a perſon of great valew and underſtanding, ſuch as would haue beene a wonder in Hungarye, unfortunately returned to be by a miſerable deſteny here betrayed; of whom I will write you more, when I haue ſearched the ſincke of this villanye. From hence I hope to imprime a foule chace; and what they are, in this glaſs, your lordſhip may ſee them.

It is diſcouered, that this gentleman was putt to death by the vizier at the falſe inſtigation of the agent, as a Perſian ſpye.

THE plague hath beene furious in the veziers houſe, out of which aboue 80 are lately dead, moſt of his neareſt ſeruants; and many, eſcaped, walke with their ſoares, and auoyd none for good manners. This hath made me forbeare to take fruictleſs harme; but now it is no tyme to be longer wary, when publicque buſines calls me. On Munday I purpoſe to declare and proteſt againſt this peace, to appeale all the great miniſters, and to uſe my beſt force to interrupt or delay; at leaſt to preuent the beginning of a treatye for Spayne; for which I am enformed a ledger at Raguſa is ſtollen in, under this Imperiall trayne. Perhaps before the departure of this poſt (now deferred) I ſhall giue you ſome account of what I can hope, or whither I haue any part in that character, ferendæ in alios invidiæ artifex.

THE protection undertaken by your lordſhip of merchants, (a care, I confeſs, alway below the ſublime ſpeculation of ambaſſadors, though not many things more neceſſarye to the ſtate, then their mayntenance, who are the liuer in the bodye, that maynteyne the blood) I haue publiſhed often in London; and as theſe companies ſhall firſt taſt the effects of our fauour, ſo I hope they will not prooue themſelues unworthy by ingratitude. It is a great comfort to them only to be taken into his majeſties conſideration, and you will find much good matter wherin to excerciſe your authoritye, wiſedome and virtue. That ſtate which eates us out in trade inſencibly, dryes up humidum radicale, and begetts a conſumption. And I am glad to fynd your lordſhip ſo antiently engaged in your contemplations, to ſearch out new wayes of ſafety and vent, the life of all commerce. The deſſigne you haue pleaſed to communicate with me, I doe heartely and joyfully approue, as grounded upon two excellent foundations, to ſeeke the inward benefitt of our owne ſtate, and to confer the outward benefitt upon our friends. Venice hath practiſed to force us; which way is unnaturall. Merchandice fynds his owne channell thorough vallyes and wyndings, as the riuer doth the ſea. Ligorne wee ſeeke for neceſſitye, and feede our enemy; for I know, moſt of the great quantety of lead ſhipped out of England the laſt yeare, was landed there, and tranſported to Spayne. Merchants will ſeeke their owne gayne; and therefore, as they ought to be countenanced, ſo they muſt be gouerned. I doe eſteeme it a moſt meritorious worke, to leade them into profitable publicque wayes; and I know no prince in Chriſtendome ſo worthy of our correſpondence as the duke of Sauoy. If then the effects may anſwere the deſſigne, as for many induſtryes and counſells you are, ſo for none you ſhalbe more glorious. And ſeeing your lordſhip hath impoſed upon me the preſumption, I will take the fault to deliuer ſome of my meditations and opinion. I haue read the whole curſorilye, and doe fully ualew it. Some particulars of no great moment I haue noted, which, upon ſecond and riper cogitation, I will preſent you in my next, that may ſomwhat enlighten and encourage ſtrangers. Now I will only propound conſiderations generall, to be all well aſſured, before merchants wilbe engaged. In trades, nothing is more eſſentiall then the vent; and euery diuerſion of an antient courſe is dangerous. Optime rebus mortalium conſuluit natura, quæ ſua ora fluminibus, ſuos curſus, atque originem, ita fines dedit. Merchants, like carriers, are hardly drawen out of beaten pathes. I confeſs this is a lazye error; but we haue ſeene great loſſes ariſe out of excellent proiects: as that of Sir William Cockaine ouerthrew the white cloth, and forced the Duch to the manifacture; which wound is not yet heald. The ſhifting of the reſidence from Middle-burgh to Delfe, and formerly from Hamburgh to Stoad, haue proued full of detriment. When ſuch a remoue is neceſſary, as well the comoditye, and affections of the buyers, the ſecuritye of wayes without, the oportunitye of diſperſing to populated countries, the riches of the ſtate of the firſt import, the poſſibilitye of exchanges, and the counter practices of other princes, as well as the priuiledges granted, ought with great inſpection to be well weighted. In this laſt, much more cannot be offered, and the fayth of that prince is a great encouragement; and I doubt not, the ſcale for ſhipping wilbe commodious, if the vent may maynteyne it. You muſt expect the enuye of Marſeilles, Venice, Florence, and Geneua, and what they can doe to croſs yt. If the trade be ſhut up within the limitts of Sauoy and Piemont, it will not anſwere the aduenture: therfore the paſſage into other ſtates muſt be accomodated and opened, leaſt the great cuſtomes, at the entrance of their dominions, purpoſely impoſed to oppoſe this, doe quarre up the current of commerce. Another feare will ariſe from the little reputation of merchandiſe among the ſubiects of Sauoy, and the want of able men for great exchanges or engroſments; which in ſome part is ſupplyed by the bancke of the prince, which is the only life of the buſines; and if it be ſincerely gouerned, and franckly uſed at the firſt, it will draw the courſe like a leuell, and giue great reputation; which once begunn, wilbe as difficult to returne, and alter. Therfore the prince muſt expect to beare ſome burthen, and to worke his owne deſignes with tyme and patience: of which uertue the merchant is not capeable; for now the trade driues them, and few are able to attend a long markett. I propoſe theſe, not as obiections, but with an earneſt affection to promoue the worke, and to ſeale the creditt of this profeſſion. If I may heare from your lordſhip, that I may fynd any ſafe paſſage by land, I will endeauour with my friends, if poſſible, to bring a ſhip laden to the port, to giue an example, and to lead the way, at my owne perill, which, I doubt not, will affect many with hopes of ſecrett gayne. Thus you haue forced me to ſhow my impotence, and I will 1627. conclude, that in euery thing which doth contribute to your honor, I doe paſſionatly and effectually partake.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$.
9ber, 1627.

Your Lordſhips deuoted, faythfull, and humble ſeruant,
TR.

ARZERUM is beſeeged, the vizier ſharply receiued; they hope to take it by corruption of the followers of Abaſa, who doe begin to ſhake. My wife commends her ſeruice to your lordſhip and my ladye, whoſe hands I kyſs.

To the ADMINISTRATOR of Magdebourgh, Marquis of Brandeburgh, Duke of Pruſſia, &c.

Celſiſſime et Excellentiſſime Princeps,

DIE decimo quarto poſt aduentum legati ſereniſſimi Tranſiluaniæ principis, (a quo præter primum congratulationis officium nihil audiui) cum generoſum quendum Germanum ex ejus comitatu literas aliquas ad me ſpectantes habuiſſe intellexerim, eas accipere ſum conatus. Sed inveni eum vel prohibitione, vel metu impeditum, ita ut ſui juris non erat, ad ædes meas ſe transferre. Qua de cauſâ priuatis recuperandi eas modis uti reſolutus, miſi ad eum, admonens litererarum tranſportationem eſſe fiduciam ſub cuſtodiâ fidei publicæ, atque illas detinere injuria eſſet non mihi ſolum, ſed etiam illi qui eas concrederat; et ſi prohiberetur, rogaui, ut mihi veritatem diceret, vt majori authoritate illas recuperarem. Generoſus vir dolens quidem, quod tam diu retentæ fuerant, nolens autem aliquem alium accuſare, literas celſitudinis veſtræ mihi ſecretò * miſit. Ex quibus collegi fuiſſe alias propter oratorem Belgicum, quas eodem modo etiam obtinui; aliter, credo, uſque ad hunc diem eas non habuiſſet. Hoc frontiſpicio poſſit ea conjecturam facere, qualem correſpondentiam ab his miniſtris expectare poſſumus, qui dum nobis colloquium habere promiſerunt, innectunt moras et cunctantur, donec (vti dubitamus) inter hunc ſtatum, et nuncium Cæſareum, (qui huc ante paucos dies cum articulis pacis appulit) et ipſos, omnia clandeſtinò concludantur. Jam diu intellexi celſitudinis veſtræ periculoſiſſimum iter, necnon proſpexi ſine fructu ſperato futurum eſſe; vt qui bene noui, quod princeps Tranſiluaniæ jam decem elapſis menſibus pro parte ſuâ pacem concluſiſſet, contra confæderationem, et fidem pactam; quæ quidem præcipitatio inductio ſola erat Turcis inducias faciendi ſuo exemplo. Cujus rei veritatem liberè ſignificaui ſacræ majeſtati regis mei, (uti fas erat) et omnibus ejus miniſtris publicis, quorum intererat cognitio ejus. Præcipuè quod excercitus in Sileſia per defectionem principis ad extremam neceſſitatem et deſperationem redactus foret: quod ad detrimentum publicum, et noſtrum ingentem dolorem iam ſucceſſit. De importuna voluntatis ejus mutatione, optime dixit excellentia veſtra, Quod factum eſt, infectum fieri nequit: ſed qui propriam leuitatem excuſare in me conatur, (juſtæ defenſionis neceſſitatem clementer ea ignoſcat) quod ſtipendium promiſſum, et in hâc ciuitate depoſitum, ei denegatum a me fuit, nunquam probabit aſſertionem ſuam. Bene notum eſt omnibus miniſtris amicis publicis in hac Porta, cum miſit ad petendum, nondum meritum ſubſidium, poſt pacem ab eo factam; et cum defectionem ſuam præuideremus, me nihilominus agenti ſuo obtuliſſe primariam penſionem deponere, et me ipſum obligare pro ſolutione totius ſtipendij pro ſingulis menſibus quibus militauit, ſecundum tenorem et expreſſa verba articulorum; et omnia alia, quæcunque ex parte majeſtatis ſacræ ſtipulata exactè, et ſine morâ perſoluere; quod quidem illi nimium orat, et ſuperflua mea curatio, qui tam ſuſpectos habuit reges, qui fidem ſuam nunquam fefellerunt, et quorum confœderatione honorem obtinuit, et ſecuritatem. Sed cauillam illo tempore, non pecuniam quæſiuit, aut pecuniam ex priſtinis prætextis, quam fæderis vigore non meruerat. De quibus omnibus ſacræ majeſtati domini mei dudum rationem reddidi, et excellentiſſimo domino Iſaco Wake, quibus mea integritas probè innoteſcit. Et reſponſio mea data ſuo oratori extraordinario Sigiſmundo Miches in ſcriptis decimo die Junij, et literæ meæ ad ipſum principem, et capitaneum Mattheum Quadtum, 19. die ejuſdem menſis præſentis anni, quibus omnia prædicta pollicitus ſum, abunde teſtificantur, ita vt hæc inſipida accuſatio coram prudentibus euaneſcat. Fugio recriminationem propter reuerentiam nominis principis; ſed copioſe ad dominum Wake de tota ſerie et progreſſu hujus negotij ſcripſi, ex quo recipiet (uti ſpero) celſitudo veſtra rectam et plenam ſatisfactionem.

* Die 3°. Nou.

OCCASIONEM, quam meminit ea, ex duobus articulis indeciſis (licet parua ſpe) arripiam, 1627. proteſtandi contra hanc falſam pacem, et omnem mouebo lapidem uſque ad periculum furoris Turcici. Adhuc vero hic ſtatus fide publicâ mihi adſtrictus eſt, me inconſulto non habere ratam hanc tractationem. Sed fides eſt Punica, cui tuto credere vix poſſum : quamvis materia mihi ſuppetit (ſi modo publicæ rei ſuæ, vel honori conſulere volunt) differendi ſaltem, ſi non deturbandi conſummationem ejus. Nuncius Cæſareus adhuc non fuit admiſſus : et hoc die vnà cum oratore Belgico omnia obſtacula et impedimenta, quæ poſſumus ei objicere, incipiam. Ante expeditionem hujus tabellarij, non permittit tempus rationem excellentiæ veſtræ ſucceſſus aut ſpei noſtræ reddere : ſed mittam poſtea ad dominum Wake plenam relationem, et tandem judicium faciam, et ita fortaſſis euademus ex iſta tenebrarum et falſitatis nebula. Juſte poſſit ea ſuſpicari iſtum legatum nullum mandatum habere, quale præ ſe fertur : talia nobis obtrudere ordinarium eſt, et non amplius valent. Si autem ejuſmodi inſtructionem habeat, dubium eſt, ne colorem præteritis actionibus injiciat, ut ſpes noſtras prolonget, et interea pecuniæ partem captet. Ille enim bene nouit, jam tarde eſſe, cum in ſuâ poteſtate erat conventionem loco ipſo diſſoluere, (ſicut probare poſſum) ſi talem ſincerum animum, et affectionem habuit. Præterea, ſi ita fuit, mirum, ſaltem inſuetum eſt, miniſtros ſuos tam diu deferre conſultationem noſtram. Mentio etiam jnduciarum cum Perſis fucus eſt, et inanis vmbra, nulla exiſtente opportunitate nec anſa ejus rei aperturam faciendi in ardore belli. Ex his celſitudo veſtra judicium ſuum formare poſſit. Sed præjudicando non faciam deteriorem cauſam ejus, cum ipſe princeps bonis verbis eam tractet. Videam tamen, et potius probabo, an hi miniſtri nobis in hoc munere ſeſe conjungent. Nec quiduis aliud omittam, quo poſſim officium et debitum meum præſtare ſuæ majeſtati, ſeruitium ſereniſſimo Daniæ regi, et excellentiæ veſtræ, et fidelem erga bonam cauſam publicam animi affectum.

MANDATUM veſtrum promouendi majeſtati ſuæ domino meo tranſmutationem iſtarum contributionum, perficiam libenter, et quantum decebit humili meæ conditioni. Concluſionem totius negotij, et ex hoc labyrintho eruptionem, ſpero me miſſurum per proximam literarum expeditionem ; cum qua rogabo illuſtriſſimum dominum Wake exemplum ejus ad ſereniſſimum Daniæ regem, et ad eam mittere, cui plenam fidem adhibere dignabitur. Pro fælicitate celſitudinis veſtræ, et ſummo honoris incremento, ſecundum heroicum animum, et immenſa merita ſua, omnipotentem Deum precabor.

Conſtantinoploi, $\frac{4}{14}$.
Nou. 1627.

Celſiſſimæ Excellentiæ veſtræ humillimus ſervus.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE : With Negotiations.

My Lord,

UPON the cloſing of my former letter, I receiued the encloſed from the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh, and borowed a day of the baylo to doe ſomewhat to afford me matter to anſwer it. I had but one to negotiate and to write ; therfore your lordſhip will excuſe me, if I put you to collect out of ſeuerall papers what I ſhould ſend you entirely. You will finde how the prince of Tranſyluania hath caſt his owne defection upon me ; but there is nothing ſo bold and braue as inocency. I haue juſtefied my ſelfe, not as I could, but as I thought ſufficient, with ciuilitye, in reſpect of the name of a prince, and allied to the marqueſs. If I haue beene too ſharpe, or too playne, it wilbe ſome defence to me, that I was accuſed ; and nothing is ſo tender as honor, or an aſpertion of diſloyaltye. What I haue done ſince, and what is my opinion, though I deſire not it ſhould bind, I haue declared ; and this day the enterteynment of the emperors meſſenger, in all reſpects, like a great ambaſſador, doth confirme me ; and the delay of Gabors extraordinarye, till theſe ceremonies were paſſed, as a pledge and engagement of the future conſummation of the peace, makes me conclude, that they are not ſincere : and though the vizier haue juſtified his negotiations to concurr with myne, yet, being made apart, I conceiue that they are but formall, and to continue the ſame language heretofore uſed ; which was to diſwade the peace, leaſt any change ſhould diſcouer his double diſſimulation : not that I beleeue Gabor doth truſt in the emperor ; but rather, that he doth diſtruſt others, and feare his proſperitye. To him I ſhall write 1627. freely, and put him in remembrance, that he hath aymed wyde, and needed any colour when he ſhott at me. Yet I will heare his miniſters patiently; and if from Samaria any good may be hoped, I will embrace and concurre with it, and draw medicyne out of poyſon.

THE encloſed coppy of my laſt office was principally made for the adminiſtrator; but had no tyme to turne it into Latine, which to me is a hard taske; and I thinke, it falls out better to ſend it to your lordſhip, becauſe you will beſt judge how far and what is fit to be communicated, leaſt I ſmother all hopes in that prince. You may pleaſe then to expunge what you finde inconuenient, and giue him as much or as little as is requiſite; and if you find it fitt to ſend a coppy to the kyng of Denmarke, (for ſo much he required in the Dutch ambaſſadors letter, being only a reference to me) your lordſhip hath full diſpoſition of all. I haue not beene uſed to correſpond with perſons of that qualitye, and ſo may erre in my titles, eſpecially to an eccleſiaſtique; but I had rather erre in abundance, then defect. Therin your lordſhip ſhall doe me a fauour to inſtruct me, and to protect me, from your knowledge of my proceedings, from euery ſlander: in confidence wherof I will euer reſt.

I WOULD not anſwere the adminiſtrator, That I had no mony depoſited; but ouer paſſed that accuſation in a generall replye, willing rather, that the fault ſhould be ſuppoſed in me, as it ſeemes he doth, then impoſed upon the fayling from England, in which poynt your lordſhip may make bold with me.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{6}{16}$.
Nouemb. 1626.

A BRIEFE of my Negotiation with the Vizier, 5. of Nou. 1627. at the Requiſition of the Adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh.

I HAUE this day, accompanied with the Duch ambaſſador, done the office with the vizier, and preſſed the grand ſignors promiſe giuen me, not to conclude peace with the emperor without the comprehenſion of the kyngs and princes friends of the port, and the liberty of Germany, with as much feruor and proteſtation, as the cauſe doth require.

TO which he anſwered, That ther was a clauſe in the treatye, including in generall tearmes amicos omnes, and that therin we were as much reſpected as the prince of Tranſiluania, whoſe name in particular was not inſerted.

WE replyed, That was an artifice of the Imperialls, and to no effect; for thoſe generall wordes did not bynd in the ſtile of treatyes in Chriſtendome, but were by them admitted pro formâ, without rigor; wherin the deceit and æquivocation of the Cæſarians was manifeſt, to be free to be reuenged by implicite excluſion of that prince, when their affayres were fitt for yt.

I DEMANDED the ſight of the articles, that I might diſcouer to him the frauds and diſaduantages; and ſhowed him the diſhonor of the grand ſignior, if (as it was reported) that the laſt* treaty of Zitwar were renewed, eſpetially couenanting reſtitution of places ſurpriſed, and conſequently of Vatz; and in the 4. article, by the incluſion of the kyng of Spayne, who might make war vpon this ſtate without breach of the Imperiall peace; but the grand ſignor could not doe ſo vpon him, being particularly and expreſſly cautioned.

* Made 1606. for 20 years.

HE anſwered, That as yet they had only ſeene the articles in their owne ſenſe, brought by the muſty of Buda, and other their commiſſioners, but had not read thoſe ſent by the emperor: That the next day the nuncio was to haue audience, and to deliuer his letters and capitulations, which ſhould after be diſcuſſed; and that then I ſhould ſee them, and aduiſe with him vpon them: That the treatye of Zitwar, and all branches thereof, were utterly aboliſhed and annihilated, and a new peace formed ex re integrâ; wherin ther was not, nor ſhould be, any mention of the kyng of Spayne. And concerning Vatz, ther was no difficultye, that poynt being remitted to be determined here, and to be procured from the grace of the grand ſignor; which, if it could not be obteyned, ſhould, notwithſtanding, be no impediment to that which was concluded, nor to the peace; but that it ſhould reſt vndecided as formerly.

I SHOWED him, That herein they were abuſed, and inſteed of a ſecure peace had left the emperor a back-dore open to begin the war at his pleaſure; and that it was neceſſarye to determine the difference, and cleare all ſuſpition. But to thoſe who haue no ſenſe, or that little they haue captiuated with feare of their Aſyan affayres, all arguments and reaſons are rather faſtidious troubles, then wholeſom admonitions.

SPES protracta ægrum efficit animum. In concluſion, we were deferred vntill a fitter tyme, and anſwered with generalityes, from which (notwithſtanding they ſeeme to promiſe ſome care) I can conclude nothing; for the caſes of both empires are ſo alike, that neceſſitye driueth them to gett tyme one vpon the other, though neyther doth beleeue or truſt in the feyned frindſhip of a reconciled enemye. Yet my opinion is, that nothing can hinder the conſummation of that, which both, with a like feruency, for diuers ends, deſire.

I WILL not omitt to appeale all the great miniſters of this empire, and to enforce all wayes, referring the ſucceſs to the diuine diſpoſer of all humane counſells; preſuming, if I can only interpoſe any difficultye or doubt, that may require an explanation and anſwere from Vienna, I haue done much, and more then I doe expect; for if ther were not a reſolution to accept of any conditions, and howeuer, to ſhutt vp all, this meſſenger, a bare meſſenger, contrarye to the ſtile of this court, ſhould not be receiued, flattered, banquetted, and admitted to the grand ſignors preſence as an ambaſſador; but neede preuayles vpon all other conſiderations of honor or ſafetye in future tymes.

AT this audience we mett with the Tranſyluanian ambaſſador, who excuſed his long delay of meeting us ſuper ardua negotia. To whom I replyed, If his buſines were different from ours, I did accept yt; but if, as I had intimation, his inſtructions had common ends with his maſters beſt friends, it ſeemed ſtrange, while the wolfe was at the dore, to uſe ſo much vnaccuſtomed tardines. Whervnto he anſwered, That matters were not yet ripe, nor ſo forward as I feared; that within two dayes he would come to me, and giue me ſatisfaction. He reported of a battell wonne by the kyng of Denmarke, wherin prince Walſteim was ſlayne, and auerred to receiue it by poſt from his prince; but I haue heard from Tranſyluania too many fables.

I DESIRED the vizier to deale clearely with me, what was the ſenſe of Gabor vpon this new peace, and the ſcope of his miniſters preſent negotiation. He ſware deepely, it was the ſame with mine, and that he did concurre with our motions, perſwading the grand ſignor neuer to truſt the emperor. But that they did in particular labour agaynſt the preſent concluſion, I could draw no collection. What to beleeue of this coulor, whither it will hold or vade, is aboue my judgement. The Sibilla's oracles are an eaſier taſke. By the next poſt I ſhall diſperſe all theſe miſts, thorough which I ſuppoſe I ſee, and giue a finall ſentence.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

SINCE my two laſt to your lordſhip, written the 16. and 22. of October, I haue receaued letters from the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, written in Alba Julia, the 17. of September, ſtilo veteri. By him I underſtand, that it is to true, that the prince of Tranſiluania hath made his peace with the emperor, without any reſpect or regard of thoſe princes who had taken him into their protection, by including him in the league of the Haghe; and unto whom he had promiſed, and ſworne reciprocall confederation. He doth faintly and baſely excuſe himſelfe, uppon the want of monny promiſed; and he doth as falſely and craftily alleage, that his treaty with the emperor is ſo full of gaps and holes, that he can elude it when he liſts; promiſing that when he ſhall ſee the conjuncture proper, he will breake out againe, and do wonders for the common cauſe.

FURTHER, Whereas the like treaty of peace betwixt the emperor and the grand ſignor is likewiſe concluded at Buda, but not yet ratifyed at the Porta, he doth promiſe and undertake the interruption thereof; and to that purpoſe (if he may be beleeued) he hath diſpatched the firſt gentleman of his chamber, called ſignior Mico-frentz.

THOSE who will beleeue any longer in that prince, ſhall deſerue to be deceaued. I, for my part, haue now expunged him out of all the articles of my fayth; where he ſhall haue no further place hereafter, but ſuch as Pilate hath in the creede. Beſides his 1627. owne crafty and ſubtill nature, which doth incline him wholy to his owne aduantages, the French ambaſſador there hath helped towards the debauching of him at this preſent, and made him to precipitate this reſolution ; which act of that ambaſſador wee máy adde unto the liſt of many other ſuch like charityes, which the miniſters of that crowne haue afforded unto our cauſe.

THE adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, finding that all was loſt in thoſe parts before his arriuall, and that his future ſejourne there would be no uſe, hath reſolued to retire and returne back the ſame way by which he went ; hauing deſired mee to get him excuſed from making of contumacia, and to procure for him a gally to reconduct him from Spalato hither.

MY lord Carleton doth ſalute your lordſhip in euery letter ; and according to his deſire, I ſend you the copyes of ſuch papers, as I haue receaued from him. God hath ſent the queen of Bohemia another ſonne, which is ſome comfort in ſo much affliction. Vnto his bleſſed protection I do recommend your lordſhip, and your noble lady ; and will euer reſt

Venice, 6th Novemb.
1627. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

YOUR lordſhips laſt, of the $\frac{8}{18}$. of September, arriued ſafely uppon the 30th of October, ſtilo novo, and the incloſed haue had due ricapito. Herewith you ſhall haue one, which came the laſt weeke out of England. This laſt ordinary hath brought nothing from thence.

PROPOSITION du Baron CARLETON D'IMBERCOURT, Ambaſſadeur Extraordinaire de ſa Majeſté dela Grande Bretagne, en l'Aſſemblée des Meſſieurs les Eſtats Generaux, le 6. de Octobre, 1627. ſtilo novo.

Meſſieurs,

BIEN que le terme de 4 mois, qui expire auec le ſepmaine qui court, me ſemble un peu long, ſans pouuoir, apres pluſieurs audiences, conferences et memoires, tirer un ſeul mot de reſponce, ou de reſolution à un ſeul point de mes negotiations touttesfois pour les affaires du principale importance ; je me ſuis patienté ſur ce que m'a eſté dit dernierement par le preſident de uoſtre aſſemblée. Que vous auiez appellé icy monſeigneur le prince d'Orange pour eſtre aſſiſtéz de ſon conſeil, juſques à ce que l'urgente neceſſité d'icelles, et le reiteré comandement du roy mon maiſtre, receu par courrier expres hier au ſeoir m'a preſſé de uenir encore, une fois pour touttes, en uoſtre aſſemblée ſans attendre le delay du retour de ſa excellencie.

LA charge (meſſieurs) que j'ay, c'eſt de vous ramenteuoir de 3 points que j'ay vous ay desja propoſez du roy mon maiſtre, le 15me du mois paſſé ; leſquels eſtants pour allors du grand pois et moment, ſelon que vous pouuez juger des affaires, maintenant que la certitude ne laiſſe aucun lieu de doubte de la conjunction de la France auec l'Eſpagne, ilz ne peuuent plus demeurer en incertitude.

1. PREMIEREMENT, Touchant une nouuelle alliance ſignée par uoſtre ambaſſadeur reſident en France, & quelques miniſtres de ceſte couronne lá, laquelle eſt mandée icy pour eſtre aduouée & ratifiée par vous, ſeignieurs ; quoy faiſants ſa majeſté ne l' a puit pas entendre autrement, que comme une manifeſte rupture du traitté de Southampton, d'autant que par lá en vous alliants aux Francois vos vous conjoignéz aux Eſp^{x}.

2. SECONDEMENT, En ce qui concerne les equippages du mer, qui ſe font icy en uos ports, ouuertement et declarement contre ſa majeſté, elle le prend pour une manifeſte partialité, comme ce qui concurre nullement auec la neutralité dont vous faictez profeſſion.

3. TIERCEMENT, Al'endroict du preparatifs maritimes que les Eſpagnols font maintenant tant aux ports de Flandres, comme en ceux d'Eſpagne, en ſuitte de l'alliance faicte entre la France & Eſpagne, qui rendent leurs forces & ports communs, l'Eſpagne eſtant enemy commun tant de ſa majeſté, comme de vous, ſeignieures ; ſa ligue offenſiue & defenſiue auec elles requiert une prompte & uigoreuſe conjunction des forces.

CES ſont les 3 points, (meſſieurs) aux quels j'ay charge de demander de vous, ſeignieurs, une claire & cathegorique reſponce : & bien qu'il n'y a point de beſſoing m'en exteindre en plus long diſcours ou arguments, pour mis perſuadit ce à quoy vous diues eſtre de vous meſmes diſpoſéz ; touttesfois, par uoſtre permiſſion, je vous communiqueray les conſiderations ſur chaſque d'iceux portées en la deſpeſche que je viens de receuoir, & preſentées icy ſur le champ. 1627.

LA nouuelle alliance qui vous eſt preſentée, (meſſieurs) n'eſt autre qu'une promeſſe pecuniere, dont une partie eſt fournie par uoie d'arres, comme le prix de uos affections,non plus ne moins, que c'eſt faict ordinairement en France, pour desbaucher l'affection d'un gouuerneur de quelque bonne place ; & les effects de la promeſſe d'ulterieure payement ne vous ſont plus certains que le precedants. Car coment pouuez vous demeurer plus aſſeurez de l'accompliſſement de la promeſſe faicte par les miniſtres de ſa majeſté treſchreſtién à uoſtre ambaſſadeur ordinaire, que de l'alliance traittée, conclüe, & arreſtée entre ſa majeſté meſme auec meſſieurs de un conſeil à Compeigne, & uos ambaſſadeurs extraordinaires, que je uois preſents icy en ceſte aſſemblée? Et quand le tout vous ſera punctualement fourny ſelon les conditions de ceſte nouuelle alliance, mettez en balance la priſe & dommage que ceſt eſtat receurá par l'interruption du commerce libre, (lequel par la benignité de ſa majeſté eſt franchement permis à tous uos ſubjets en France, non obſtant la preſente rupture) & vous trouuerez qu'il icy aura pas grand gain ; & à ceſt'interruption ſa majeſté ſera portée par une neceſſité ineuitable contre ſon gré, ueu que la concatenation des ces nouuelles alliances, de France & d'Eſpagne, & de ces prouinces auec la France, directement contraire à uoſtre alliance offenſiue & defenſiue auec ſa majeſté, en laquelle la foy publique eſt desja engagée comme recherchée & conclüe par uos ambaſſadeurs expreſſement employés, & ratifiée par tous les prouinces. Il eſt queſtion doncques, ueu que les deux ne peuuent ſubſiſter enſemble, ſi vous uoulez quitter le certain pour l'incertain, & ce qui vous eſt neceſſaire & utile, & desja confirmé par un contract mutuel & ſolennel, pourque ce il ne vous eſt arreſté encores, &, quand il vous ſerá arreſté, qui vous ſceut eſchapper à toutt'heure : à quoy je me rapporte à la fraiſche experience qu'en auez eüe ; l'accompliſſement de dernier traitté en Compeigne n'ayant pas eſté effectué, & le renouuellement d'iceluy refuſé juſques à une conjuncture du temps que l'acceptation vous ſera plus dommageable que le refus. J'a ou, au contraire, du coſté d'Angleterre, l'experience tant ancienne que moderne, depuis le commencement de ceſt eſtat, juſques à cet'heure que je vous parle, vous monſtre a quoy vous vous pouuez fier, ſans mutabilité quelconque, ſi ce n'eſt de degré en degré tousjours à plus haut d'amitié & confederation ; celle que vous auez maintenant auec le roy mon maiſtre eſtant plus abſolue, que (nonobſtant toutte la recherche de vos predeceſſeurs) a ſceu jammais eſtre procurée d'aucuns des deuanciers de ſa majeſté ; & vous l'auez pour beaucoup d'années à l'aduenir, meſmes à l'æternité vous vous comportants ſelon le merite d'une telle alliance ; les royaumes de ſa majeſté eſtants conjoincts à ces prouinces par un comun intereſt, qui eſt le plus fort, & le plus ſeur, pour bien qui peut eſtre entre les eſtats & ſa majeſté, cheriſſant & embraſſant uoſtre amitié de cœur & d'affection ; & juſques à ce que Dieu lui aura donné des autres heritiers, vous auez icy entre vous les plus proches à ſa couronne ; ſa treſchere ſœur auec beaucoup des enfants, & en uoyla le 5^{me}. qui eſt né icy entre vous ; de ſorte que ſi l'imbecilité des hommes, qui faict negliger ce qui eſt preſent & aſſeuré, aux prix de l'incertain & doubteux, ne vous porte point à une reſolution, ou pluſtoſt irreſolu, contraire à uoſtre bien, je ne me defie nullement de uoſtre procedure en ceſt endroit.

LES equippages qui ſe font maintenant en uos ports contre le roy mon maiſtre, manifeſtement & ouuertement (au, commencement) mais à ceſt'heure ouuertement contre la Rochelle, ne conſiſte tant ſeulement en nauires, & cannon, & de toutte ſorte de munition de guerre, & de touche, mais au contraire de ce que m'a eſté dit icy en uoſtre aſſemblée, en hommes ſubjets naturels de ce pais ; un tiers de la compagnié de chaſque nauire conſiſtant en Holandois, particulierement des officiers, comme les maiſtres, canoniers, pilotes, & autres juſques aux trombettes.

SUR ce ſubjet je contemple (meſſieurs) ; c'eſt eſtat comme le fruit d'une longue & dure guerre, dont la racine a deux branches, la religion & la liberté, (leſquelles ſont de faict le cauſes fondamentelles de la ditte guerre) ; l'une tirant ſon origine de la France, l'autre eſtant naturel & natif de ces prouinces ; l'un & l'autre perpetuel-1627. lement cultiuée & cherie par les Anglois, & aduancée & reculée par les Francois, ſelon les paſſions & affections des principaux miniſtres de ceſte courronne lá, qui ont eu quant & quant dependance ſur les autres puiſſances. Or la benediction diuine operant, comme elle faict tousjours, par les moyens humains, ayant reduict ceſt eſtat de ſes petits & bas fondements & commencements à tel degré de richeſſe & opulence, qu'il n'eſtpas ſeulement muni de materiaux militaires pour ſa propre defence; mais auſſy de ſuperabondant pour faire ſentir les effects d'amitié ou d'inimitié aux autres, ſelon leurs obligations reſpectiues; ſi maintenant la religion, qui court riſque auec la Rochelle, qui n'eſt ſecouru d'autre que d'Angleterre, ſe trouue aſſailli par les nauires ſortants des uos ports, come d'un arſenal; ceſte ſentence tirée de l'hiſtoire eccleſiaſtique peut eſtre proprement mis en leurs banniers; Religio peperit divitias, & filia devoravit matrem. Mais abſit omen! Nous uoyons comme un roy, qui eſt ennemi juré de uoſtre religion, s'eſt porté par des inſtruments appaſſionéz dependants d'Eſpagne & de Rome, à la conjunction auec un autre, qui eſt l'oppreſſeur implacable de uoſtre liberté; & Dieu nous a auſſy faict uois la faute que nous auons faicte en donnant aſſiſtance de nauires, qui a eſté abuſée contre les Rochellois. Aniſy le roy mon maiſtre ſe mettant en debuoir (ſelon qu'il eſt obligé) de reſtituer aux Rochellois ce que tout droict leur appartient, comment pouuéz vous proceder en bonne conſcience, pour faire que uoſtre peuple peut eſtre eſmu de ſe heuter deſrechef à ceſte meſme pierre, & retomber au mal, dont la memoire eſt ſi fraiſche? De dire que cela ſe faict ſans uoſtre ordre, cela ſe pouuoit auparauant, quant à l'action qui vous eſtoit de tout incognüe; mais à ceſt'heure que le deſſeing eſt cogneu, & les preparatifs pour l'executer ſont encor en uos ports; vous qui eſtéz les conducteurs du regime de ceſt eſtat, ſeréz reſponceable à Dieu, & au monde; ſi vous permettez ces nauires, principalement eſtants conduicts par uos gens, ſortir en guerre à la preſent occaſion.

AU 3me point, Touchant le commun debuoir de nous oppoſer à l'ennemi commun, qui faict maintenant de preparatifs treſgrands par mer, tant aux ports d'Eſpagne que de Flandres, (dont je vous ay fort ſouuent admoneſſez, mais j'ay eſte tousjours rebutté par uoſtre incredulité) il ne faut que regarder les conditions de noſtre alliance pour nous faire uoir à quoy nous ſommes mutuellement obligez. Mais, ſi le traitté demeure ſerré en uos cabinetts ſans le conſiderer, & ſans entrer en conſideration, comment nous mettre à l'oppoſite de la force qui nous menace, indubitablement, nous ſerons ſurpris. Auſſy au plus forte raiſon ſommes nous obligé de le faire plus à ceſt'heure, que jammais d'autant que l'Eſpagnol ayant eu par cy deuant un grand corps comme inutile par faute de correſpondence des membres d'iceluy, maintenant que par la pacification auec la France, il gaigne la paſſage libre de la Valteline pour ſes trouppes, & par ceſte nouuelle conjunction la meſme liberté des ports en France pour ſes flottes. Ce nouuelle aduantage, tant par mer que par terre, lui s'eſt comme le ſang qui a la courſe libre par les ueines de ce corps, grand & puiſſant ſans obſtructions, ou retention quiconque, les rendant plus fort, & plus robuſte, que jammais. Et maintenant il ne cele pas nullement ſon deſſeing; mais ſans couuerte ou diſſimulation aucune publie ſes intentions par une propoſition imprimée à Bruxelles, ce mois de 7bre paſſé, à touttes les prouinces delá, ſubiectés à ſa domination, de ſe joindre auec les autres royaumes & prouinces pour le bien commun de ſa monarchie, & pour dompter ſes ennemis communs (qui eſt le ſtile de la ditte declaration) mettant en auant de former, à l'example des legions Romains, (ſelon la quotte de diuers royaumes & prouinces) armees diuerſes, en pluſieurs lieux, le tout montant en nombre du 140000 hommes, prencant pour argument l'union qui ſe faict en ces prouinces auec ſes confederéz. En ma derniere audience du 29me du paſſé je vous communiquois un aduis du 18me du Bruxelles, rendu pour raiſon pour quoy on ne pouuoit paſſer auant auec un pretendu traitté de pacification, ce parque la uenüe de D. Diego Mexia (ainſi dit la letere) nous a eſclaircy du concert du roy d'Eſpagne & de France pour la defence de leurs royaumes.

MAINTENANT par la ditte propoſition, en ſuitte de cet aduis, vous uoyez aſſez au clair ce qui s'entend par le tiltre, de la defence de leurs royaumes; auſſy n'eſt il point difficile à qui ilz ueulent ſoubs le nom des confederéz de ces prouinces. C'eſt, meſſieurs, le roy mon maiſtre, lequel ayant eſté rechercher de pacifier apart, & ſe tenant fort & ferme à uoſtre conſideration, (laquelle a eſté la ſeule conſideration & difficulté pour lui) ſe trouue maintenant par ceſte nouuelle mixture des alliances en danger d'eſtre laiſſé ſeul en jeu, ſans que vous reſſouuenants de ce qu'eſt 1627.

de la foy publique, de ce qu'eſt de l'obligation ancienne & moderne, & de ce qui eſt de l'intereſt commun tant de la religion que d'eſtat. Vous ueüillez ceſſer de fauoriſer les ennemis de ſa majeſté, donnant une prompte & pleniere ſatisfaction en ces 3 points, leſquelles par ſes reiterez commandements je uous ay propoſes. Et ſur l'affaire en general, l'un des dits points ayant dependance de l'autre, ne croyez pas (meſſieurs) que ſa majeſté puiſſe prendre en payement un deſaducu comme d'un affaire faict ſans uoſtre ordre; que nos freres de la religion en France ſe contenteront des excuſes de uoſtre bourſe, ni uoſtre authorité n'y ait eſté employé, ains que tout à eſté faict au deſpens des autres, ſans que vous y auiez mis la main; ou que vos peuples demeureront ſatisfaicts, quand ilz uerront par effect, qu'au lieu d'appliquer le ſoing que conuient au bien & ſalut des amis & alliez de cet eſtat, marchands riches maiſtres de uos equippages, & uos gens le plus ſeruiceable, & experimentés en mer, de contribuer aucuns leur credit, autres leur peines & trauaille, & pluſieurs leur perſonnes, à la ruine des uns & des autres; finalement, que Dieu aura pour agreable uoſtre telle conniuence ou nonchalance, quand il s'agit de ſa cauſe.

MAIS il y a encore remede pour tout, pourueu que vous ne perdez pas le temps par deliberation, qui eſt requis à une prompte & reſolue action; laquelle je recommande à uos pietez & prudences.

MEMOIRE de l'Ambaſſadeur de ſa Majeſté de la Grande Bretagne à Meſſieurs les Eſtats Generaux, le 8me, *d'*Octobre, 1627. ſtilo novo.

LES ſeignieurs Randuick de Geldres, Pawe d'Holande, Vosberghend de Zelande, les deputez des meſſieurs les Eſtats Generaux, trouuants l'ambaſſadeur de ſa majeſté de la Grande Bretagne, l'apres diſnée de ſon audience du matin Mercredi le 6me d'8bre, & luy faiſants ſcauoir le train, auquel meſſieurs les Eſtats auoyent mis touts les points de ſa negotiation, requirants en fin ſon entremiſe en une affaire particuliere pour la retaſche de trois nauires appartenants à la compagnie des Indes Orientales de ce pais icy, arreſtéez en Angleterre par commandement de ſa majeſté; l'ambaſſadeur leur ayant dit ce qu'il eſtimoit neceſſaire pour la finale deſpeſche de tous les points de ſa charge, & leur monſtrant en particuliere les moyens de uenir au bout de leur deſir, touchant la relaſche des dits nauires, lequels il remette à leur rapport, ne peut laiſſer pour ſa deſcharge de mettre par eſcrit, & preſenter à l'aſſemblée des meſſieurs les Eſtats, quant & quant auec ſa propoſition du matin, ſa replique touchant les 3 points, contenus en ſa ditte propoſition. Aſcauoire, De uouloir excuſer 1.
l'acceptation de la nouuelle alliance preſentée à ceſt eſtat par la France. Par apres, Arreſter & empeſcher le ſortie des nauires armés en ce pais icy contre le roy de la 2.
Grande Bretagne, auec inhibition de nouuelle equipage de pareille nature. Et finalement, De conjoindre leur flotte auec celle de ſa majeſté contre tous, & quelconque 3.
nauires des Eſpagnols, queique part qui ſoyent trouuéz, en execution de l'alliance contractée à Southampton entre ſa majeſté & ceſt eſtat. Pour reſponce aux quels points les dits deputéz ont dit, Que meſſieurs les Eſtats attendoyent le retour de ſa eccellencie pour eſtre aſſiſtéz de ſon conceil. L'ambaſſadeur a remis le premier de ces 3 points pour le temps de leur diſcretion, bien que, pour le faict, il a perſiſté en ſa declaration, (en conformité de ſa charge expreſſe, qu'il a du roy ſon maiſtre) Que tandis que la France eſtoit en rupture auec l'Angleterre, & l'Eſpagne conjoincte à la France, la ditte alliance ne pouuoit jammais eſtre faicte, ſans rompre la ditte confederation offenſiue & defenſiue entre ſa majeſté & ceſt, eſtat; & quant aux deux autres, Que l'un & l'autre ne pouuoit pas permettre aucun delay, le principal des nauires Francois baſti à Enchuſen eſtant, par l'aide & induſtrie de ceux d'Enchuſen, paſſé leur port, & auuancè uers le Texell; & ce nauire là, auec les autres baſtis en ces prouinces, d'autant qu'ilz eſtoyent conduicts par leurs gens qui furent les principaux officiers, & firent le tiers du nombre des mariniers de chaſque nauire, ne pouuoit pas eſtre mis en mer ſans rompre la neutralité, dont ceſt eſtat ſe dit faire profeſſion.
C'eſt pourquoy l'ambaſſadeur proteſtoit contre la permiſſion de la ſortie des dits nauires, comme action contraire, & rupture de la ditte neutralité; & finalement, ſommoit les dits ſeignieurs Eſtats à une prompte & claire reſponce, tant au ce point lá, comme au dernier, touchant la conjunction de leur flotte auec celle de ſa majeſté

1627. contre les Eſpagnols; d'autant que tant aux ports d'Eſpagne que de Flandres, les aduis ſont d'heure a autre confirméz de grand preparatifs de nauires Eſpagnols, qui ſe mettent maintenant en mer, (ſ'ilz n'y ſont deſja) pour endommager l'Angleterre, ceſt eſtat, & les egliſes de France, dont il faut croire qu'ilz ont conjuré l'extirpation; au quel deſſeing nulle conniuence ny aſſiſtance de ceux qui ſont profeſſion contraire ne les doibt fauoriſer.

De ces 3 points l'ambaſſadeur, bien qu'il ne ſe deſfie point du fidel rapport des meſſieurs les deputéz, n'a ſceu ommettre de ramenteuoir meſſieurs les Eſtats par eſcrit, qui ſeruira touſjours pour teſmoignage, (quoy qu'il en auienne) qu'il n'a failli à ſon debuoir, en obeiſſance du commandement expres du roy ſon maiſtre, la majeſté du quel ne ſcauroit receuoir aucune excuſe de leur part, ſy nonobſtant ces aduertences & inſtances on laiſſe armer & ſortir des nauires des ports de ceſt eſtat contre ſa majeſté, & contre les egliſes de France, puis qu'ileſt maintenant en leur pouuoir des les arreſter; & qu'il aura raiſon de croire, que c'eſt de leur conſentement & ordre, qu'ils ſe ſeront mis en mer, ſ'ils ne l'empeſchent; & que le malheur, qui en arriuerá au public, & à la religion, redonderá à leur blaſme, dont ſa majeſté demeurerá deſchargé enuers Dieu & le monde.

To the Lord CONWAY: With Negotiations.

My Lord,

IT is tyme for me to returne, hauing ſeene all hope of future publicque ſeruice extinguiſhed. Of our laſt ſcene, I haue ſent your lordſhip coppies; wherein you will fynd, to what paſs all our endeauours are brought: a true glaſs of the worlds falſhood!

WHEN the ambaſſador of Gabor came to uiſitt me, he deliuered me a letter from his maſter, full of brauing, and ſharp agaynſt me in particular, for preſuming to cenſure his actions, and to obiect his fayling of promiſes, in my negotiation with his miniſters: what I haue done, your lordſhip hath ſeene, and I can juſtefye. The diſcourſe is ſo long, that I cannot now ſend a coppy, being an hiſtorye of ſixe yeares paſt, and an apologye for this laſt, to my three obiections: that he had forſaken without cauſe the league, in making peace with the emperor; that he would make it no iuſt cauſe, that we did waue the payments of old debts, which of me he could not de jure chalenge; and that he was free, by licence from this port, to maynteyne his fayth, and to unite with the princes confœderats. I am not aſhamed of his reprehenſions, which will proue my glory; and I will anſwere him with due reſpect of his qualetye, ſo as I thincke he wilbe loth to haue the controuerſy printed: which when I haue done, I will ſend both to his majeſtie; and if I may haue farther leaue, I will proue all that I haue charged publicquelye.

CAPTEN Quadt, his ambaſſador into England, Germany and Holland, the beſt wittneſs of what he had commiſſion to doe, ſent me a priuat ſalutation and excuſe, that he durſt not anſwere my letter; wherin I urged his owne knowledge of the paſſages of the league: and ignorance of what was by him done, is now pleaded, as kept 13 moneths without reſolution. He ſhall now be no more produced: for fiue dayes after the departure of this ambaſſador ſent hither, he dyed of a malignant feuer.

THE concluſion of the peace cannot be hindered, though ſome tyme may be ſpent in rectefying the borders. This nuntio ſhall haue preſent expedition, with generall letters of acceptance; and the ſolemnitye of confirmation is deferred, to be performed by mutuall ambaſſadors in the ſpring. If good newes happen from Aſya, wee ſhall change ſydes. Vnder this ſhadow, Gabor doth now moſt prouidently ſhelter, tanquam ſub Ajacis clypeo; not aſhamed to profeſs a neceſſarye dependence on this empire, which he takes on, and ſhakes off, as his humors fitt, or may turne him to comoditye. God ſend his cauſe better friends.

WE are dayly tortured with newes, ſpread by the Imperialls; who ſhow letters, and boaſt, and publiſh loſſes upon loſſes, which doth much diſaduantage us; and I know not what to anſwere, but that I hope their cauſe doth neede lyes.

I BESEECH your lordſhip to ſhow his majeſtie all my papers: for now I ſhall neede defence, ſince he that did the wrong doth quarell. In his gratious benignitye I truſt, and am ſafe; and though my labours haue not ſucceeded, yet that they haue not fayled in me, I know his wiſdome will diſcouer. For whoſe felicitye I will pray, and that I may ſerue him with more profitt; and ſo I committ your lordſhip to the infinite mercies of God, reſting, &c. 1627.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{17}{27}$
Novemb. 1627.

The NEGOTIATION of Signor FRANCESCO MICOFERENZ, Extraordinary Ambaſſador from the Prince of Tranſyluania, 7. November, 1627.

AFTER ſome ceremony, he deliuered me the princes letter, and gaue me tyme to reade yt; which finiſhed, I began roundly to maynteyne what I had formerly written, and to returne him good coyne for his counterfait, being very ſenſible of his maſters ſharp caſtigations, wherein he enterrupted me, ſaying, The prince had not ſent that letter to moue or diſcontent me; but being, as he thought, touched in his honor, to juſtefye himſelfe in thoſe poynts, wherin he conceiued I was not well enformed. And ſo he began his negotiarion, which conſiſted vpon a larger amplification in the ſame order of the written apologye, making a long diſcourſe of his maſters paſt meritts, and of the fayling of all promiſes giuen him; of the teadious detention of his ambaſſador Quadt, by which he was ignorant of his acceptance into the league; of the implacable contention betweene the two generalls duke Weymar and count Mansfelt, and of the miſerye of their army; which, at his coſt, of 20000 dollers, he was forced to ſupply with meate; of the deſertion of the Turkes, and their preſſing him to conclude a peace, for which he brought in wittnes the viziers letters; and laſtly, his owne treaſure exhauſted. Theſe he produced, as his reaſons to haue conſtreyned him to prouide tymely for his owne ſafety: and yet notwithſtanding, when juſt occaſion ſhould be offered, he profeſſed that his prince had the ſame affections, and would continew to his power to expreſs them in their majeſties ſeruice, vpon ſuch conditions as might concurre with his owne ſecuritye.

TO all which particulers when I had replyed according to the truth, I told him, we were content to let matters paſt recouery lye aſleepe; and ſeeing he had order to excuſe, I hoped he had the like to amend errors; eſpecially, his concluſion intimating a deſire in the prince to continew in the league. To which purpoſe the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh had written me, that his maſter had giuen him inſtructions to vnite with us in two poynts, to hinder the conſummation of this peace, and to promoue another for accommodation with Perſia. And though for this laſt ther was no preſent oportunitye, yet for the firſt I hoped he came well armed, and that he would concurre with us ſincerely; which office I had begunn with the vizier, enforced to proceed alone, becauſe of his long delay to communicate with us.

HE anſwered, That it was true, the prince did not like the concluſion, and did deſire at leaſt the deferring therof, and had in generall tearmes giuen him order to perſwade the grand ſignor not to truſt the emperor; but particularlye to negotiate agaynſt that which was reſolued, he had no commiſſion, nor knew any thing of the promiſe made to the adminiſtrator. He inſiſted vpon the improbabilitye of any good ſucceſs, and playnly told me, ther was a day præfixed for the ratification: yet knowing that ſuch an office would be acceptable to his maſter, and ſeing I had ſuch aduice, and had already entered the foord, that he would not omitt to doe as much as was fitt for him, or as his inſtructions would beare.

I THEN preſſed him to ſome particular conſultation, which way to proſecute this our generall deſire, and the common good; not that I thought it poſſible abſolutly to diſſolue the treatye, but to diſtemper yt; to attempt if we could find in the articles any ſubtilty or cunning of the Imperialls, which being diſcouered, might in this ſtate beget ſome doubt or ſuſpenſion, vntill an explanation ſhould be procured from Vienna: that euery difficultye enterpoſed would winne 2 or 3 moneths tyme, eſpecially winter ſecuring all parts from hoſtile attempts; wherby at leaſt the ſodeyne newes of the confirmation of the peace might not diſaduantage our friends, but the delay amuſe the enemye; and that in that tyme many changes, accidents, and ouuertures might happen, eyther from Perſia or Germany, and both ſydes ſhould more aduiſedly conſider of their affares, and new matter would bring forth new counſells. To this end I deſired him to communicate with me the articles, that we might ſtudy on them, and ſearch out ſome ſubiect of diſtraction.

HAUING

1627. HAUING conſulted with the old and new agent in his owne language, he replyed, That the motion was acceptable: that he had a coppy of the treaty, and would ſend it me the next day, vnder ſecuritye of good fayth, that it might be ſecrett. He confeſſed, that ther was groſe matter enough in them, to rayſe new diſputation; and that after I had read them, we ſhould meete agayne, and reſolue where and how to aduance our workes.

WHEN theſe diſcourſes were brought to a head, I asked him, If he had any commiſſion from his prince, to accuſe me in particular of deteyning the contribution depoſited, or denying the payment therof.

HE anſwered, He had no ſuch order, nor euer heard the prince take any perſonall exception; but that, in generall, he was not payd.

THEN I produced the intimation out of the adminiſtrators letter, and told him the oportunitye, place, and company required, that I ſhould therin juſtefye myſelfe; and therfore appealed the agent to declare the truth of my proceeding, which was, that I only, and no man els, offered to pay the 40000 dollers ſtipulated, if the prince did reſume armes; and to bynd myſelfe here for the monthly ſatisfaction of the whole, according to the treaty: which he averred to be true, and that he had alway ſo written, and aſſured the prince; in which poynt he neuer conceiued any imputation caſt vpon me.

EXPECTING two dayes the performance of this promiſe of the coppy of the articles, and hearing nothing, I wrote a few lines to the ambaſſador, to putt him in remembrance of the loſs of tyme, and how neceſſarye it was to preuent the earneſt proſecution of the emperors nuntio for the conſummation. To which I receiued the encloſed taſtleſs and contradictorye excuſe: as if they, who were intereſſed and preſent at the treaty, had not a tranſcript, or did borrow it of others; or that papers of that conſequence could be redeliuered in his abſence, or left with his porter. By this ſcantling, all their falſhood may be meaſured; and his future promiſed friendſhip is like that of water, which drownes a liue man, and when he is dead, teacheth and helpeth him to ſwimme.

My Negotiation with the Vizier, 10. Novemb. 1627.

FYNDING my ſelfe mocked by theſe Tranſiluanians, I went to the vizier, and had a full patient 3 houres audience,

I PRESSED him to remember his fayth giuen; at leaſt not to præcipitate a concluſion, which they might repent. I profeſſed, that I was not ſo ignorant, as to hope to change their full reſolution of peace; but as a true friend, deſired to help them, and to protect them from groſs abuſe: and therfore I perſwaded only, that they would enterteyne this meſſenger one moneth. In that tyme they were like to heare good newes from the vizier on the one ſyde, who had beſeeged Arzerum; which place if it were taken, and Abaſſa baſſa brought into ſubiection, the Perſian would be humbled: on the other, that we expected the like from Germany; being told by Gabors ambaſſador, that the kyng of Denmarke had ouerthrowne Tilly in a full battell; which if it were confirmed, the emperor would be in ſo great diſtreſs, that the grand ſignor might much aduantage his conditions: and that I had heard the nuncio had receiued a ſecrett poſt, commanding him to haſten the concluſion, which did implye ſome vrgent neceſſitye: and that therfore, if they did only inſiſt ſtiffly vpon the vndecided differences, and make ſhow of retyrednes, they ſhould worke out what end they pleaſed, being the Imperialls were ready to grant all things, only to winne tyme: that this did appeare in their eaſines to leaue in ſuſpence the reſtitution of Vatz; which was the more to be ſuſpected, it being a rule, that they who yeild too much, are moſt to be doubted of good fayth; and when the worſt ſhould happen, they had the peace, in theſe conditions, in their owne power.

THE vizier, ſomwhat affected with this diſcourſe, told me, That two dayes before, ther was held a generall conſultation, and the articles read; which were for the moſt part accepted, and a determination taken to diſpatch the nuncio: yet that ther were ſome poynts, concerning the border, vndecided, which muſt be juſted by mutuall commiſſioners; and that ther would conſequently be tyme, before all were ratifyed:
and

and therfore he deſired me to enforme him what were my doubts, and wherin I ſuſpected deceit. 1627.

I ANSWERED, Vnleſs I ſaw the articles, I could not ſo well decerne where the frauds lay hid; but by no meanes I was able to procure them; excuſing it at preſent, that they were new writing, but referred me to another tyme: ſo that I was forced to obiect generalityes. Firſt, I wiſhed him to aske the nuntio, Who it was that made this peace? If he ſayd, The emperor Ferdinand, I deſired him to aske, In what capacitye, as emperor, or kyng of Hungarye? For that I knew, as emperor, he was ſworne a perpetuall enemye to the Ottomans, and could not doe yt: if he did it as kyng of Hungarye, as I was ſure he did; then, as emperor, and kyng of Bohemia, he might make war at his pleaſure.

SECONDLY, I obſerued to him, That all this truly was made and ſigned by the name of Ferdinand; but the war was in and for Hungarye; and conſequently the peace ought to be firmed by the kyng of Hungarye: but it was notorious, that the emperor had lately called a parlament, and crowned his eldeſt ſonne kyng in Preſburgh; to whome the ſoueraigne power of peace and war was transferred legally, and he inveſted with the kyngly authoritye, and ſo accepted and acknowledged by all the nobilitye, cyttys, and people; and therfore this peace of Hungarye being not ratefyed by the kyng, he might diſavow his fathers acts, and renew the breach freely, his ſubſcription being eſſentiall to the ſecuritye of the expected peace.

THIRDLY, Admitting the ſignature of the emperor to be ſufficient, as implying his ſonne; yet it were requiſite, that it ſhould be explaned, that the articles were confirmed by Ferdinand, as emperor and kyng of Hungarye: for a king poſſeſt of diuers crownes independent, though his perſon were indeuideable, yet his acts had diuers reſpects: for his treatyes and lawes, as emperor, did not bind Bohemia, nor thoſe of Bohemia Hungarye, which kyngdomes were founded vpon their owne principles and priuiledges. That it was euident this nuncio had the qualetye only of an Hungarian, and was ſent as a member of that ſtate, and not of the empire; and therfore it was neceſſarye, that att leaſt the ſonne, that had the title of kyng, ſhould ratefye what was done by his father.

WHEREVPON the vizier called for the chancellor, and the emperors letter, and ſhowed it me: it was written in Latin, and ſubſcribed, Ferdinand. I found it to be very drye. The ſubſtance, after titles and ceremonies, was, That vrgent and weighty cauſes, eſpecially the caſe of the poore ſubiect ſpoyled and ruined by the diſorders of the frontyre, had cauſed him to conſent to the meeting of mutuall commiſſioners for the pacification therof; who had agreed vpon the old concluſions (antiquas concluſiones) of peace, and had ſubſcribed and confirmed them. Therfore he had ſent his internuncio (   ) to ſignifye to the grand ſignor his purpoſe and good affection; and to procure the inſtituting of deputyes, for the finall deciding of ſome differences conteyned in the 4th article; whom he deſired to heare and receiue benignly, and to diſpatch him with all expedition convenient, not giuing him any other credence to treate or negotiate. Hauing read this letter, and tranſlated it to them word by word, I tooke theſe exceptions: To omitt the coldnes of the ſtile, and ſome harſhnes in the titles, I ſhowed playnly, that the whole treaty was a bare confirmation and renewing of ſome old peace, and had no ſillable that mentioned or intimated any new conditions; which was contrarye to that, which he the vizier had proteſted 5 dayes before, contrarye to the orders of the grand ſignor, and full of fraud. Firſt, If it had reference to an old peace, it ought to be expreſſed which it was; becauſe ther haue beene many: if to that of Zitwar, it ſhould haue beene explaned to which of them; for the emperor preſented one by the baron Arbeſtein, made 1606. not accepted by the grand ſignor; and the grand ſignor returned another 1608. refuſed by the emperor; and vntill the comming of Cernin, anno 1615. it was vncerteyne to the wiſeſt in this empire, which was the true peace; and then the controuerſy was ſhut vp in generalityes, by reaſon of the firſt Perſian war: ſo that this 20 yeares the war was open vnder the ſhadow of a peace. If now they intended ed couertly that of the emperor, then Vatz muſt be reſtored, the Spaniards included, and many other loſſes repayred: if that of the grand ſignor, it was requiſite to be declared; for that I knew, the emperor would not accept it: and ſo this was a peace as long as the Imperialls liked it, and that it turned them to comoditye, and 6127. none when their fitter occaſions ſerued : and thus this empire ſhould remayne in the former æquiuocation and vncerteyntye.

THESE doubts, in generall, I deſired him to weigh; and to propound theſe queſtions to the nuncio, to proue how far he was able to anſwere, or giue any ſatisfaction, or to declare his owne qualetye : to all which I ſuppoſed he would be ſilent, hauing no authoritye, nor credence giuen him, but only to deliuer papers, and to demand their anſwers.

I CONCLUDED with an earneſt admonition not to proceede haſtelye, and vnſatisfyed both in honor and ſecuritye.

THE vizier to the firſt poynt confeſſed, That they were deceiued, and that the palatine of Hungary, the cheefe Imperiall commiſſioner, had written him, that they treated a new peace, all the old being cancelled; and that ſuch was the grand ſignors direction. He and the chancelor gaue me many thankes, and profeſſed, That I ſpake like a good friend, and that they would conſider of my aduiſes, and preſently putt them in practice, hauing ſent for the emperors nuncio, to diſcourſe with him vpon the differences in the 4th article mentioned; which, as he ſayd, were concerning diuers forts newly built by the Imperialls, contrarye to the laſt treatye, in the frontyres of Kaniſa and Agria, which ought to be raſed; and the ſettling of the tribute of the deditious villages, which could not be ended, but vpon the place, by commiſſioners praticque in the border.

I WAS very well heard, and accepted in the whole; and I left theſe miniſters in a little confuſion, the emperors nuntio attending without for a preſent audience: but that any wind can moue a rocke, I haue neyther fayth nor hope. I am in practice to gett the articles, which I fynd, the vizier, the Imperialls and Tranſiluanians are agreed togither, to keepe them ſecrett, vntill it be too late to trouble them; and perhaps ſome are loth, that in their examination I ſhould diſcouer the weakenes of the one, and the frauds of the other. If I preuayle, I will neuer giue ouer moleſting them, in the meane tyme I will ſpread theſe obiections among all the great miniſters of this port.

ON the 14. Novemb. 1627.

I WENT with the Duch ambaſſador to the cadde leskar of Greece, a wiſe man, and of great authoritye in this ſtate; where we performed the like office, vrging all the former obiections.

HE anſwered, That ther muſt be another conſultation before any concluſion; and that as he had alway aduiſed, he would perſwade, that the friends of the Port might not be left diſcontented.

WHEN we preſſed ſome categoricall replye, he ingenuouſly told us, That ſome delay might be rayſed from theſe queſtions; but that all men were reſolued of peace: that they knew well the diſhonor and diſaduantage of the treatye, but neceſſitye ſtopped all mouthes vntill a better oportunitye; yet that he would endeauor to avoyd too much præcipitation, and to procure us ſome ſatisfaction.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With an Abſtract of his to Lord CONWAY, and Propoſition to the Senate.

My very good Lord,

MY laſt to your lordſhip were dated the 6. of November, ſtilo novo, at which tyme I ſent you ſome papers, which my lord Carleton did deſire ſhould be communicated vnto you. I haue ſince receaued two other papers from the ſame lord my maſter, which you ſhall find here incloſed; and that you may ſee how carefull I am to imitate a good maſter, I ſend you coppyes of ſuch papers as I did preſent here in this college, vppon the 11. of November, ſtilo novo, which are a narration of what hath paſſed betwixt the two crownes of England and France : inſtructions which I do pretend to haue beene ſent vnto mee out of England, and my propoſition grounded vppon both thoſe papers. By the extract of my diſpatch, ſent yeſterday to my lord Conway, you will ſee how the Tranſiluanian doth proceede. I am ſorry for your domeſtique affliction, wherin I haue much conformity with you : 1627.

God comfort vs both, and I ſhall deſyre your lordſhip to beleeue, that I am really Venice, 20. Novemb.

ſtilo nouo, 1627.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate and faithfull ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

YOUR lordſhips laſt, of the 22. of September, arriued yeſterday ; and the incloſed pacquets were immediately ſent towards England.

An ABSTRACT of Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to the Lord Viſcount CONWAY, $\frac{9}{19}$. November, 1627.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

SINCE my laſt to your lordſhip of the $\frac{2}{12}$. of 9ber, here is arriued ſignior Scultetus, the deputed commiſſary of the Sileſian army ; whom the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg hath diſpatched towards the king of Denmarke, to informe him of the diſſipation of that army, of the apoſtacye of Gabor, and of the little hope of future good from thoſe parts. Although the deſertion of that prince be in itſelfe very fowle, yet he doth not onely labour to juſtify it, but ſeeme likewiſe to deſyre very earneſtly to be continued in the good opinion of his majeſtie and other princes his confederates ; hauing to that purpoſe intruſted the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, and this ſignior Scultetus, with newe ouuertures and propoſitions of his owne, which haue ſome appearance of feaſeablenes, and may ſeeme not altogither vnworthy to be harkened vnto ; if his often breach of faith and promiſe haue not rendered him to obnoxius vnto ſuſpition of fraud and deceite.

HIS firſt project is, to hinder the ratification of the peace, concluded betwixt the emperor and the grand ſignor, wherein he doth promiſe to trauaile ſtrongly : and queſtionleſſe, if his hart be vpright, he may therein do a good piece of ſeruice ; but I ſhall ſuſpect his ſincerity, vnleſſe Sir Thomas Roe (who is vppon the place where the intentions of that prince may beſt be diſcouered, by the actions and proceedings of his miniſters) do beget in mee newe faith.

HIS ſecond deſigne is to mediate a peace or truce betwixt the kings of Sweden and Poland, vndertaking of himſelfe to diſpoſe this later, in caſe that his majeſtie with his friends will paſſe the like offices with the former ; that ſo the king of Sweden being free from the incumbrances of that warre, may attend vnto the affaires of Germany : and Gabor doth promiſe, that when the king of Sweden ſhall arriue in Sileſia with an army, he will joyne with him, breake with the emperor, and goe into the feilde vppon his owne charge, without requiring any contribution from his majeſtie, or from any of his allyes. This propoſition is plauſable, if that prince might be truſted : but as it may juſtly be preſumed, that the emperor will get as much aduantage by the king of Poland, (who will queſtionles appeare in his fauor, when he ſhall be at liberty) as we ſhall receaue by the aſſiſtance of the king of Sweden ; ſo it way as well be doubted, that Gabor, who hath already ſolde and betrayed the king of Denmarke, may haue an intention to do as much vnto the king of Sweden : Fides, ut anima, unde exit nunquam regreditur ; and he that hath played one falſe bound will play two. Signior Scultetus, who receaued theſe inſtructions by word of mouth from Gabor, hath repreſented them vnto mee in this forme ; but as I do not find, that he hath any faith in that prince, ſo will not I incharge my ſelfe further, then to repreſent faithfully, (as I haue donne) what Scultetus hath expoſed vnto mee, remitting the totall propoſition vnto the conſideration of his majeſties wiſdome.

PROPOSITION in Collegio del Signore Ambaſciatore Wake, 11. Novemb. 1627. ſtilo nuovo.

Sereniſſime Principe, Illuſtriſſimi ed Eccellentiſſimi Signori,

DALLA narratione e inſtruttioni lette la ſerenitá veſtra ſara ſtato coſi pienamente informata della ſinceritá del ré mio ſignore, e della malitia delli miniſtri Franceſi, che non haura d'aſpetare da me l'amplificatione dell'una, ò l'eſſaggeratione del l'altra, perche douele fatti parlono, le parole ſono ſuperflue.

1627. HAUREBBE ben deſiderato ſua majeſtá ch'il Chriſtianiſſimo haueſſe corriſpoſto alla ſua ottima uolontá, e al deſiderio ch'ha d'intendere ben con il ſuo caro cognato; ma uedendo che quanto pui cercaua d'incontrare li guſti del Chriſtianiſſimo, tanto piu li miniſtri Franceſi allontauano quel ré dal contracambio reciproco d'affetto, e che le pratiche del cardinale di Richelieu erano uenute a tal colmo, che con l'unione di Francia con la Spagna erano per dar l'aſſalto generale alla liberta publica da per tutto, giudicaua conuenire alla ragione del buon gouerno di preuenire quelli chi cercauano la ruina ſua, e di tutti prencipi liberi inſieme. Il cardinale Richelieu ſe n'eſt ben ſeruito di quella maſſima degli conſiglieri del ré di Perſia; Non ſumus inventuri contra iſtos occaſionem ullam, niſi inveniamus de lege ipſorum; e per ció cuoprendo la ſua malitia con quella maſchera hormai fruſtra, che ſa majeſtá s'intereſſe nella protettione di quelli della'Religione; che il Chriſtianiſſimo rompi quel trattato, con uiolare la fede publica: che li Rochelleſi, e li altri, ſiano neceſſitati di ricorrere a ſua majeſtá per ſoccorſu promeſſo, acció ſia data qualche apparenza all'unione delle forze Franceſe e Spagniole, chi, ſotto preteſto della religione, ſi ne fanno un ponte di paſſare alla ruina della libertá d'Europa. Per queſta porta li Spagnioli entrorono nella Valtolina, e con gl'iſteſſi arti il cardinale Richelieu gli ha confirmato il poſſeſſo di quel poſto tanto importante. Ma queſti artificij ſono gia conoſciuti, e non ſi puo abaſtanza ammirare la ſfacciataggine del cardinale, chi cerca di dar ad intendere al mondo, che tutti i Proteſtanti ſiano uniti con ſua majeſtá contra la religione Catolica; quando gli Proteſtanti a gran pena poſſono difenderſi nelle iſole, e parti ſettentrionale, dalla uiolenza delli Auſtriaci chi, ſotto proteſto della religione gli, leuano la libertá. Caſa degna da eſſer preſa in conſideratione di tutti principi liberi, percio che l'unione di quelle 2 corone e formidabile; e concorrendo li miniſtri Franceſi apertamente alla grandezzá d'i Spagnioli con il decorſo del tempo, ualerá puoco l'eſſere Catolico a chi uoul eſſer libero, e occorrerá andare a Madrid per le indulgenze, non piu a Roma.

TUTTAUIA, in una dichiaratione, ſtampata ſotto il nome del ré Chriſtianiſſimo, trouuo una narratiua della cura che ſempre ha hauuto del ben della Chriſtianitá, di ambaſciate mandate da per tutto, per ſopire diſcordie, e di ajuti preſtati a chi correua riſigo d'oppreſſione. In riſpoſta diró, che piaccia a Dio che ſua majeſtá Chriſtianiſſima faccia per l'auenire quel che pretende di hauer fatto per lo paſſato; uoglio credere che il ſuo animo ſia ottimo uerſo il publico; ma non uedo che, dopo la ſua aſſumptione a quella corona, li ſuoi miniſtri habbiano operati coſa alcuna ni auantaggio della libertá publica. L'ambaſciata mandata in Allemagna, nell' anno 1620, non partorí altro effetto ſaluo che con il trattato fatto in Vlma, ſi apriua la ſtrada alla gente Allemanna ch'andauono al Bauaro; e guadagnata che fu quel punto in fauore delli Auſtriaci, e del Bauaro, la Francia non é piu comparſa ſopra quella ſcena. Queſto fu il principio della ruina d'Allemagna, e ne habbiamo l'obligo al duca d'Angoleſma. Il ſignore di Choiſi, ambaſciatore di ſua majeſtá Chriſtianiſſima in Conſtantinopoli, ſi ne uanta publicamente di eſſer ſtato l'unico autore della pace fatta adeſſo fra ſua majeſtá Chriſtianiſſima, e'l principe di Tranſiluania, e queſto da l'ultimo crollo alle ſperanze publice: ſe queſte ſiano operationi inrizzete in fauore della libertá publica dica lo chi l'intende.

QUI ui e comparſo par il marcheſe di Cœuures, per far ripatriare li Gieſuiti, perturbatori della quiete publica, e queſto fu il prologo alla tragedia ſequita poi nella Valtolina; e dopo lui uenne il ſignore di Chaſteauneuf, per far trouar buono alla republica ſereniſſima il trattato di Monzon, che zappa li fondamenti della libertá di queſta prouincia, ruina la Rhætia, e fa periclitar l'Heluetia, e queſto ſerua per epilogo di quella fauola. Quanto a ſoccorſi a principi, ouero ſtati oppreſſi, hanno ſempre operati effetti contrarij a quello che ſua majeſtá profeſſa eſſer ſtato la ſua mente. Il ſereniſſimo di Sauoia ne puo far fede troppo autentica di queſto; e gli ſignori Grigioni piangano con lagrime di ſangue la caritá peloſa delli miniſtri Franceſi.

NON è poi di marauigliarſi punto s'in quel regno le coſe uadino a rouerſcio di quella che ſua majeſtá Chriſtianiſſima dichiara eſſer la ſua mente; perche quel ré é oſſeruantiſſimo della ſua madre; la madre partialiſſima delli Auſtriaci, il cardinale Richelieu tranſportato delli ſuoi interſſi particolari, Schomberg, e il guarda-ſigillo piu Spagnioli che non é il conte d'Oliuarez, e li Gieſuiti, omnipotenti in tutti queſti, chi non penſanó ad altro che ad aggrandire quella natione della quale deriuano l'origine.

IL ré mio ſigniore opera molto differentemente, non hauendo altra mira che di giouare alla cauſa commune; e quando la peruerſitá delli miniſtri Franceſi non l'haueſſe ſturbata, in un tempo puoco opportuno, s'Allemagna haurebbe reſpirata prima ch'adeſſo. Il giuditio ſopra queſto paralello ſi rimette alla prudenza della ſerenitá veſtra, e dell' eccellentiſſimo ſenato. 1627.

ADVICES from Hamburgh. Dated Nov. 24. and Dec. 1, 1727.

HAMBURGH, 24. Novemb. ſtilo loci.

AT Milhouſen onely, electors of Mentz and Saxe were in perſon; the reſt had their ambaſſadors. There hath beene much treated, and earneſtly, for a peace, and a good armie to bee keept on foot upon all occations for the defence of the empire; and to induce the emperor to a peace, the electors doe offer, That if there bee a parliament or richſtage publiſhed within a moneth, two, or three, that then there ſhall bee ſufficient order taken for the payment of the emperors armie; and therſore the electors doe deſire to haue the armie aſſigned unto them for payment: ſoe they will by this means haue the diſpoſing and quartering of it, that the countrie ſhall not bee ſoe cruelly ſpoiled euerie where; and by a generall contribution of all the princes, and eſtats of the empire, a maſſe of moony ſhall bee gathered for the payment of the armie. This ſeems to bee a faire courſe to induce a peace; but it is not verie likly, that the emperor or jeſuiſticall counſell will approue it; but will think, that hauing ſoe great a victorie, and ſoe many ſeverall armys, they ought not to quit the opportunitie of making the empire hereditarie to the houſe of Auſtria; and next, to bring the church lands to the ſea of Romes deuotion, and conſequently a generall reformation. Yet, if this bee really intended, and propounded of the electors, and refuſed of the emperor, it may worke a rubb in his way, in chooſing his ſoone to bee king of the Romans: for Leopald and Bauaria will bee able to make a partie.

THE king of Denmarke is at a meeting with his nobilitie, in the countrie of Sealand: what they reſolue of, tyme will trye. I ſee not any good to bee doone by them or their councells alone. Now doth the marquis of Brandenburg, duks of Brunſwike and Lunenburg, Holſten and biſhop of Bremen, find the fruits of quiting that partie they had once choſen; for they are exceſſiuely exhauſted: et ſic eveniat omnibus neutraliſtis.

THE townes doe priuately pay: monſieur Durant commands in Lukſtat, and thoſe parts about hath good hoops, if in anie reaſonable tyme there com ſom moony. Generall Morgan is dayly in action, the enemie purſuing Stode with vehemency; and defended with like valor: if Tilly doe carry it, it will bee with the loſſe of manie braue men on both ſids. There are of Engliſh neere 3500, of Scoch 800, ſom few Duch, prouiſion ſufficient within it; but want of moony, ſhoos and ſtockings, for the ſoldiers.

NIEMBERG did, after the death of coronell Limbake, render upon good conditions. In Wolfenbutell the kings garriſons doe carry themſelfes moſt valiently, are well prouided of all neceſſaries, only want moony.

THE Imperialiſts doe propound greate conditions to the Hanz-townes, and wold gladly haue a joynt league made, which will take a tyme of deliberation.

MONDAY laſt the enemie made a furiouſe onſett upon ſom out-workes before Stode, but were repulſed; where Sir Thomas Conway, lieutenant coronell to my lord generalls owne regiment, did valiently behaue himſelfe, and was ſhot in the thigh, but will not bee much the worſe.

HAMBURGH, Decemb. 1. ſtilo loci.

STODE is blocked up, but they within are well prouided; and there are ſoe greate inundations all alongſt the Elfe, that there are manie of Tillys men drowned, that lay in the mariſh grownds about it: Stode, Lukſtat, Gremp, and Wolfenbutell, doe all hold good yet. The king of Denmark, and his nobilitie and commons, are on good termes; and I doe write this on purpoſe to ſtop the foule mouths that might abuſe your lordſhips eares, in ſaying the contrarie; and joyntly they are 1627. thinking upon ways and means to defend their owne, which with ſom foot might bee doone, eſpetially hauing greate ſtore of ſhipping, and in readineſſe.

FROM Holland there muſt com prouiſions, to maintaine thoſe places upon the riuer. The count of Thorne, going ſom 6 weekes or two months agone by ſea for Denmarke, was mett with ſuch cruell ſtormes, that after hee had beene toſſed long up and downe, by greate grace of God was put into North-Holland; and intends to venter yet for Denmark with the firſt wind. It is thought, there will bee a peace in Germanie, in regard the electors doe offer to pay the emperors armie: if it bee refuſed, which I thinke is likly, it may be geſt what he intends. They aime at the Sound and the Baltique ſea, and to goe and fall upon Holland à toutte force; which they thinke will be eaſie, hauing ſoe greate poſſibilitie of prouiding ſhips from thoſe parts; and certainly the ſtate of Venice will not bee forgot, for what was due about Gradiſca. Their forces doe ſpread themſelues from the confine of furtheſt Hungarie, Morauia, Bohemia, Auſtria, Sileſia, through the Marh Brandenburgh, euen to Pomerland, and to the maine ſea; ſoe that in the whole empire, not one to reſiſt them, ſaue thoſe places aboue mentioned. Sed dabit Deus meliora.

To BETHLEM GABOR.

Sereniſſime Princeps,

RESPONSIO mollis auertit excandeſcentiam; verbum autem moleſtum excitat iram. Propter hanc animaduerſionem, quamvis literæ celſitudinis veſtræ nimis acerbæ fuerint, et reprehenſionibus immeritò extortis plenæ; tamen nullam replicationem eam vltra commouere, ſolummodo quod expedit ad tutamentum veritatis, quæ etiam in manibus invalidis eſt validiſſima, remittam.

PRIMUM ad generale: Nequam eſt et liuidus, qui à præteritorum celſitudinis veſtræ actuum ſtrenuiſſimorum gloriâ ſcienter detraheret. Et nemo eſt, qui eos me magis ſonorè pleniuſve cantauit; cujus rei infinita manent ſcripta mea teſtes, in remotiſſimis Europæ plagis: neque opus eſſet, quam illis ipſis, alio præcone, dum eis alios accumulare placuiſſet.

NON contemptim erat de Hannibale (ſummo duce) dictum, Vincere ſciſſe, vti victoriâ omiſiſſe. Haut ego nec famam celſitudinis veſtræ traduxi, nec modeſtiæ oras libenter, vel cenſurâ vel acerbitate, tranſilui; cùm poſtulatis et objectionibus ſuorum miniſtrorum ſolùm juxta veritatem et juſtitiam reſponderim. Placeat celſitudini veſtræ præponderare, actiones eſſe offenſæ baſes, non verba: vbi illæ inveniuntur, hæc excuſantur: et non modo mihi licere, ſed debere honorem ſacræ majeſtatis regis mei promiſſorum defendere, et fœderum effectum exigere. Voluntario celſitudinem veſtram exaſperare nollem, neque obſeruantiam qualitati principum liberorum debitam tranſgredi; qualem ea ſibi vendicat, et cuncti attribuunt, quam voluntas divina liberi, nulliuſque arbitrio ſubjecti, principis jure decorauit: neque ullam diminutionem qualitatis meæ pati poſſim, dum ſacratæ majeſtatis repræſentationis honore fungar. Idcirco celſitudo veſtra non rectè accepit, quâ in capacitate miniſtris ſuis reſponſabam; non quidem vt priuatus, ſed vti perſona publica, primi regis Chriſtiani legatus: quo ornatus munere, ſine minimâ arrogantiâ, cauſam et jus domini mei, coram principibus ſummè de ſeſe exiſtimantibus, exponere licet. Et ſi priuatum me ea reputauerat; quid opus eſſet priuato juſtificationem fieri, cum quibus principes non verſantur? Sed fuſim video, vel ſtilum legati Magnæ Britanniæ ignotum, vel ex induſtria omiſſum eſſe. Verba quæ indignanter ſublimitas veſtra, et in pejorem partem intellexit, vtinam cauſa publica, et exercitus in ſupplementum ſuum expoſiti exitium, triſti exemplo, ex vna parte, et pax cum Cæſare concluſa, ex altera, non probarent. Si illa manus militum propter ſubſidij et fauoris ab ea ſperati defectum peribat, et in deſperationem redacta erat; impermiſſum eſt publicæ perſonæ, cujus intereſt, conqueri, et promiſſa exſoluta lamentari? Quippe certò, cùm confœderati illum exercitum mitterent, confiſi erant, et ab eâ dependebant, tanquam à principe abſoluto, ei ſuccurrere potente, cum eo adunare reſoluto, et inceptis heroicis conſtanti. Et quidem mihi tantum fas eſt pactæ fidei obſeruationem requirere, quantum alteri cuicunque (ſolo excepto ſereniſſimo rege meo) meam prudentiam, aut actiones publicas cenſurâ perſtringere; de quibus nemini rationem reddere teneor, niſi ſecundum regulam, Proprio domino quiſque perſtat aut cadit: cui me criminari janua eſt aperta.

1627.

Sed celſitudinem veſtram perciere fugiam, et ad tres clauſulas à me explanatas, quibus ea reſpondere dignatur, ſubmiſsè pauca dicam.

Ad primam: A pactis et confœderatione, nullâ euidente ratione, eam receſſiſſe, pacemque cum Cæſare inſcijs principibus concluſiſſe, (ſcio celſitudinem veſtram veritatis amicum et propugnatorem eſſe, et ideo ſcandalum et offenſam non accepturam) loquatur ipſum fœdus, teſtentur effecta, et ego obmuteſcam. Si fuit aliqua cauſa euidens ex parte ſuæ majeſtatis, ſicut intimatur, apertâ luce declaretur. Nam ego partem contributionis ſuam perſoluere, ſecundum verum fœderis mutuum tenorem, ſæpiſſimè obtuli: vt orator continuus legato ſuo illuſtri, alijſque præſentibus, palam confeſſus eſt. Quam rem expoſtulare cogebar, cùm admonerer aſperſione pecuniæ detentæ, et negatæ, me inquinatum fuiſſe. Si celſitudo veſtra pacta fœderis, cùm pacem iniret, ignorabat; quis culparetur? Legatus ſuus, dominus Mattheus Quadt, frequentem ſui muneris rationem reddere debuit; præſertim de ſtipulatione in Anglia menſe * Nouembris anni præteriti tranſactâ, quamvis redire impediebatur. Sed altiùs reſpiciendum eſt: ille præſens fuit Hagæ Comitis † prioris anni Decembri, cùm celſitudo veſtra per cautelam et prouiſionem corpori fœderis admiſſa eſſet, et propoſitarum conditionum ſubſtantiam iſthinc ei reportauit; ita vt ſecunda ejus delegatio, de mutuâ ſecuritate diplomata dare et habere, verſabatur. In cujus rei effectionem, cùm ea illi literas credentiales, plenamque potentiam ſuo nomine ſtipulandi jam dediſſet, in toto inſciam fuiſſe dici non poſſit, vel ſaltem non obligatam ab omnibus alijs tractationibus abſtinere, donec de effectu primæ commiſſionis certior facta fuiſſet. Et ille poſt reditum teſtatus eſt, celſitudinem veſtram pacta ex parte ſuâ accepiſſe, et rata habuiſſe. Quorum tenorem, et omnes gradus et progreſſus, optimè intelligo, vtpote qui primum ea modulatus ſim, et totam tractationem inceperim.

*30 Nou. 1626.

† 1625.

In quo ſtatu ducis Weimarienſis et comitis Mansfeltij excercitus ad celſitudinem veſtram appulit, mihi quidem ignotum eſt: ſed numerum ejus fuiſſe completum, quamvis pars media ſolùm ei adjunxerit, cùm altera vtiliſſimum diuerticulum in Sileſia egerit, primus et ſecundus fœderis articulus aſſerunt: quippe qui interpretari bonâ fide ex integro debent. Vt celſitudini veſtræ liberum erat, vel ſejunctim, vel cum confœderatorum copijs, prout commodius, et magis è re viſum fuerit, bellum proſequi, ita eâdem libertate eos frui ratio petit. In primo horum militum aduentu, arma et ordinem eorum ea ipſa collaudauit, vti ex proprijs ſcriptis intellexi. Et ille eorum glorioſus tranſitus, per totius ditionis inimicorum viſcera, in conſpectu et deſpectu plurimarum legionum, futuris temporibus laudibus ad ſydera efferetur, vtcunque jam obſcuritate et infortunio verus honor latet.

Ad ſecundam: Non jure neque ex debito pecuniam eam, de qua mentionem fecit per oratorem internunciumque, repeti; celſitudine veſtrâ rectè verba mea intelligente, cum limitatione expreſsâ et ſubſequente, nempe de jure à me alieno ſeruo expectari non potuiſſe; neque de jure juſtam rationem fœdus deſtituendi eſſe, quod ſine relatione temporibus vel actis præteritis et particularibus, pactum et ſancitum erat; ſpero aliâ replicatione non opus erit.

Ad tertiam: Celſitudinem veſtram lege confœderationis, et voluntate decretoque aulæ Ottomanicæ, eò ut bellum continuaret, de facto teneri: proteſtationes chimachami, ſæpiſſime iteratas, præteribo: ſed cùm talia ſcripſi, ſcilicet eam liberam fuiſſe, illuſtri domino Quadto probationes meas allegaui; et adjunxi, ex imperatoris hujus ad eam exaratis literis, menſe Martij anni MDCXXIIII. Auguſti MDCXXVI. et Februarij præſentis anni datis, quas in ipſis autographis vidi, alias ſumptibus noſtris acquiſitas, alias à miniſtris ſuis acceptas, et quarum exempla omnia tranſcripta, et in acta relata habeo; verba ipſa non repetam, cùm celſitudini veſtræ optimè nota ſint. Ita vt aſſertio mea veriſſima erat: et ſi iſti vizieri clandeſtinò contraria ſcripſerunt, ea eos bene nouit, et eorum vacillatio pro legitimâ excuſatione erga principes non admittetur, cum quibus fœdus iniuit nomine principis liberi, et nullius arbitrio ſubiecti. Vltra, penes eam fuit alterutram eligere, et cui libuit credere. Nam vidimus celſitudinem veſtram tali libertate frui et vti, bellum his inconſultis incipere et finire.

Has rationes, quibus, vti ſpero, celſitudini veſtræ ſatisfeci, et de juſto meo, ſaltem miniſtris veſtris reſpondendi, titulo, et de ipſius cauſæ meritis, æqui bonique conſulere non grauabitur: et me eam obſequio et debito honore aſſequi, et promptiſſimum eſſe ſeruitia mea humillima ei præſtare, exiſtimare dignabitur: cùm eam offendere, vel exiſtimationi inclytæ detrahere, ſponte nunquam molitus ſim.

In præſente pacis concluſione in hac Porta, illuſtriſſimus celſitudinis veſtræ legatus optimè eſt inſtructus; qui ſeorſum res ſuas tractauit, quas et ignorare decet: et 1627. quamvis excelſiſſimus princeps adminiſtrator Magdeburgenſis mihi ſignificauerit, celſitudinem veſtram ei promiſiſſe, illum inſtructionibus munire, nobiſcum ſeſe duobus in punctis conjungere; hanc nimirum pacem impedire, et aliam cum Perſis promouere, de quibus amplè cum illo contuli; tamen cùm ex reſponſione ejus colligerem, nullam de eâ re notitiam nec mandatum habuiſſe, ſolummodo verbis generalibus primam non approbare; neque auxilij ejus effectus ſimiles aliquos invenirem (licet ſerijs et ſolidis objectionibus hujus imperij miniſtros conturbauerim); concludere cogor, eum impoſſibilitatem, vel aliud myſticum impedimentum prævidere. Sed quod neceſſitati ex vtrâque parte accomodatur, occaſione temporis mutari erit facile. Et acute dictum erat, Eſſe dolum, quia credidit hoſtis. Certò inimici, monarchiæ impeditæ, anteactarum molitionum, inveterati odij, Hungariæ ſubactæ raptæque, et expertæ ejus potentiæ, memores erunt. Deus omen avertat: cui ex corde ſupplico, vt eandem gratiam ab eis celſitudo veſtra non attendat, quàm Vliſſi obtulit Polyphemus.

PROFESSIONEM et oblationem boni animi affectus erga principes, et communem cauſam, fideliter ſacræ ſuæ majeſtati referam, quæ (quatenus ſcio) celſitudinem ſuam bonum amicum et confœderatum reputat; et dubitare nullo modo poſſit, pro principe abſoluto eam geſſuram, et nouos titulos dudum acquiſitæ gloriæ addere curaturam fore. Cujus exaltationis, et ſummi honoris, nemo me lætior erit, qui pro feruente erga celſitudinem veſtram affectu et deuotione aliam mercedem mereri putaui, quàm ſeueras caſtigationes; quas etiam ab eâ non grauatim patior. Omnipotentem Deum celſitudini veſtræ vota, et vitam fœliciſſimam concedere humiliter et obnixè precor.

Conſtantinopoli, 30. Nou.
ſtilo vetrei, 1627.

Celſitudinis veſtræ humillimus ad ſeruiendum paratus,

R.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

THE emperors inter-nuncio hath his diſpatch, and is this day to depart, accompanied with a * mutafar-aga of the grand ſignor, in qualetye of a little ambaſſador, as theſe diſtinguiſh them: who carrieth a letter of acceptation of the treatye; but what it is, I cannot learne, their counſells being ſo priuatly managed, as if they were aſhamed of all. The articles I could neuer ſee, and this letter was, for the ſeacreſye, firmed by the chimacham, contrarye to cuſtome, and guilt in his preſence, that no officer might caſt his eye vpon the contents. And all this I take to be the counſeil of Gabors ambaſſador, ſent, as was pretended, to joyne with us: whom I haue now too fully diſcouered for a Janus, from his owne houſe; that when I ſent for the coppye of the treatye, according to his promiſe, he anſwered openly, That he muſt invent ſome fable to excuſe him. And being vrged not to deale ſo with me, he replyed, That I muſt not trouble the waters with my comment vpon them. If this vnactiuenes were all, it might pretend ſome honeſtye. But when ther was found juſt cauſe to alter ſome clauſes in the treatye, and that it was new written by the viziers, and preſented to the nuntio, the mutations being, that the grand ſignor deſired Gabor ſhould be comprehended expreſſly and by name; to which the nuncio anſwered, That if they would bynd the emperor from moleſting him vpon the breach of peace, they alſo ſhould be tyed to the ſame conditions. Which propoſition bred a ſuſpition of intelligence betweene the Imperialls and Gabor, as if they ſought for him an implicite manumiſſion. Secondly, That the difference of Vatz might be ſettled. And, laſtly, That the new forts ſhould be demoliſhed de facto, before the peace ſhould be in vigor. To which the nuncio replyed peremptorilye, That they muſt accept the treatye as it was written, and by him preſented, or none; that he could not alter one ſillable, and ſo much the emperors letter ſignifyed, requiring the ratification verbum ad verbum. This inſolence of the nuncio diſcontented all the viziers; who found that the Imperialls did ſtrayne, and ſeeke to neceſſitate them vpon aduantage: ſo that the concluſion was ſuſpended; purpoſing to write in thoſe poynts to the emperor, only accepting the generall of peace, and not to perfect any thing at this tyme; and vpon theſe tearmes, the viziers and nuncio parted, vnagreed, on Saturday at night late, the 25. Nouember. But the next day, the ambaſſador and the two agents of Gabor went to the chimacham, pretending a letter from

* Penſioners exempt attending the perſon of the emperor their maſter, vnder the ſeale of ſeacreſye, of freſh aduice, that the kyng of Denmarke was utterly broken and fled into certayne iſlands, all his countrye and Germanye proſtrate at the mercy of the emperor (which newes the Imperialls had formerly ſpread); counſelling him to make an end, and to diſpatch and accept of any conditions, and to ſend the internuncio away with ſpeed and content; leaſt the Auſtrians, puffed vp with theſe victoryes, ſhould take the aduantage of their delay, and preſent them worſe tearmes, or refuſe the peace. Wherupon theſe miniſters reſolued and changed the firſt letter, and made this haſty concluſion. He added further, That the princes of Germanye treated a pacification, which was like alſo to take effect: and eyther way, that the emperor would be at libertye to make war vpon them. Whither he feigned the firſt part, to accelerate the ratification; or feared the later, and that his maſter ſhould therin deſeruedly be left out, I cannot judge; but he only by this office (which this ſtate did beleeue was ſincere) hath merited of the emperor the conſummation of what is done; which, when their jealouſy doth grow cold, I ſhall particularly know. In the meane tyme we may reſolue, that Gabor is as falſe as malice can make him, if it ſpake the worſt. The next day, this ambaſſador ſent to me his ſecretarye with reguagli, that the treaty was diſturbed, and the relation of the Imperialls falſe in reporting the utter ouerthrow of the kyng of Denmarke: only it was true, that he had fought; and not able to front the enemyes forces joyned, that he was retyred into Holſatia, and had fortefyed himſelfe on the other ſyde of the Elb: that Tilly was wounded, Walſtein ſlayne, and ſuch other inventions only to blind me, that I might noi ſuſpect him of the treaſon. Since, I haue viſited him to diſcouer his countenance, which he kept with great grauetye, feigning he had beene ſicke, and not able to goe abroad in many dayes, juſtefying the newes he had imparted to me. When I told him, in a third perſon, that ſome, by a treacherous office on the Sunday before, had deſtroyed all our labour with falſe reports, he tooke no other notice, but pleaded ignorance of all the proceedings: ſo I leaue them for mounteyneers. The anſwere I purpoſe to ſend the prince, I haue encloſed, with his letter to me; wherin I haue ſtudied truth and modeſtye. I ſhall add ſomwhat as theſe diſcoueries ſhall inſtruct me.

1627.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With the SENATE's Anſwer, and Abſtract of Lord CONWAY's to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

MY two laſt unto you were dated the 6th and 20th of November, ſtilo nouo; and they were accompanyed with many incloſed papers, of the receipt of which I ſhall long to heare. Yeſterday I receaued your lordſhips of the $\frac{5}{15}$. of October, and did immediately ſend away your letters to the queen of Bohemia, my lord viſcount Conway, and Mr. de Queſtor, from whom I haue receaued a pacquet for your lordſhip, which doth goe here incloſed.

THE adminiſtrator of Magdebourg is arriued here out of Tranſiluania; but he doth not bring any thing mote then the confirmation of what I haue altead aduertiſed your lordſhip, namely the total diſſipation of the army in Sileſia, the finall apoſtacye of Gabor, and the little hope of future good to be expected from thoſe parts. Onely this I haue learned of the baron Zaratin, that Gabor hath been the ſole cauſe of that diſaſter: for he doth aſſure mee, that the army was able to haue ſubſiſted and maintayned itſelfe againſt Valleſtein; and that it wanted nothing but powder and ammunition of warre, which he dayly promiſed, and neuer ſent, although he tooke their monny for it. So that he did directly betray and ſel them to the emperor.

I AM glad your lordſhip is come of from him, bagues ſauves; for it would haue been to much to looſe our frend, and looſe our monny to. The not ſending unto you the monny promiſed him was (as it hath fallen out) ſo happy a fault, that wee may ſay of him, whoſoeuer was the cauſe of that omiſſion, ſi non erraſſet, fecerat ille minus. Now I do preſume, you will be troubled no more with him; for although he will endeauor to colour his defection with apparant reaſons, and perhaps promiſe to make amends for this fault; yet I ſuppoſe you will not truſt him hereafter, but poſt factum. Yet ſhall I be glad to be informed of the negotiation of Micoferentz, whom he hath diſpatcht to the Porta; for although he would make mee beleeue, that he hath ſent him to hinder the ratification of the peace concluded 1627. betwixt the emperor and the gran ſignior; yet I do ſuſpect, that he doth rather procure the confirmation thereof. Here incloſed your lordſhip ſhall receaue a copy of the anſwer which this ſenate returned to my laſt propoſition, as alſo a pacquet from de Queſtor, which came to my hands yeſterday. The French do publiſh, that they haue recouered the iſle of Rée, and forced my lord of Buckingham to retire with loſſe; but I do not beleeue, that the diuill is ſo black as they do paint him: my next will tell your lordſhip the certainty. In Germany all things goe alla peggio. The king of Denmark hath loſt almoſt all Holſatia. The emperor is uictorious euery where. Our frends fall of: neutralls incline to the uictorious party. The aſſembly of Milhuzen is diſſolued, and I heare nothing of the reſultate of their deliberations there. No accommodation will be hearkened unto, while the enemy hath ſo much aduantage. Wee haue to many irons in the fire, and yet none doth heate to any purpoſe. There is ſpeach of a parlament in England; perhaps that may produce ſome good effect. God Almighty bleſſe your lordſhip, as euer prayeth, on your behalfe, Venice, 4. December, 1627. ſtilo nouo. Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

The Anſwer of the SENATE to Sir ISAAC WAKE*'s Propoſition.*

RIMANGONO ſempre accompagnati gli vfficij di V. S. con affetto coſi amoreuole, & da noi coſi ben conoſciuto, che percio quanto piu noi rieſcono cari, tanto piu anche godemo di ringratiarla affettuoſamente della piena eſpreſſione del ſuo buon animo & deſiderio della noſtra proſperita; con aſſicurarla inſieme, che altremente ci ſiamo conſolati per la ſua ricuperata ſanita, & che non poteſſe eſſerſi rappreſentata coſa di magior guſto che l'auuiſo dell'ottima ſalute di ſua majeſtà, della proſperita di lei, & delli affari di quel ampliſſimo regno, della reciproca amoreuole correſpondenza d'affetto con la majeſtà della regina, & del vantaggio nel quale ſi trouano le ſperanze d'vn intiero accommodamento con la majeſtà del re Chriſtianiſſimo, onde habbino a viuere quelle 2 corone in perpetua vnione fra di eſſe, con quella corriſpondenza amoreuole che ben richiede la congiontione ſtretta ch'hanno inſieme, & riguardo delli intereſſe del commune ſeruitio per il publico bene, al quale deue riuſcir di ſummo rilieuo cio in ogni tempo, al preſente piu che mai lo richiedono le congiunture & lo ſtato delle coſe correnti; onde ſi come lo deſideriamo per ogni riſpetto, con affetto molto ſincero, coſi preghiamo V. S. di rapreſentare il guſto grande che ſiamo per riceuere con officio proprio della noſtra obſeruanza, verſo la majeſtà ſereniſſima, che ſia ſempre felice.

NELLI particolari poi del negozio del Bethlem Gabor, ſi come nelli noſtri auuiſi da Coſtantinopoli, non vedemo diſcrepanza nelle coſe eſſentiali, da quello che V. S. ci ha rappreſentato, onde alli effetti ſi deue rimettere il giudicio ſicuro & de penſieri di Turchi, & di quelli dell' iſteſſo Gabor, coſi nel reſto conuenimo conſiderare ſinceramente a V. S. dello ſtato delle coſe noſtre, benche di Valle ſiano vſcite le genti, & ſcemate in qualche altra parte le noſtre militie, rimaner la republica in ogni modo notabilmente aggrauata, coſi per gli ecceſſiui diſpendij longo tempo ſoſtenuti, come per quelli che al preſente pur conuenimo ſoſtenere, ritrouarſi tuttauia la pendenza de gli affari in molta ambiguita, ſenza che ſi poſſa tenere ſicurezza della piega che ſia per prendere, onde nella profitura de noſtri ſtati, che da tutte le parte ſono circondati da confini di principi coſi grandi e potenti, come ogni vno conoſce, ben vede la prudentia di V. S. con quale riſguardo, & con quale continuatione di graui intereſſi, ſi oblighi a rimanere il giuſto termine di buon gouerno, ſi come ella mediata al pari d'ogni altri puo conſiderare che nel profluvio d'oro, & nelle ſpeſe grauiſſime per coſi lungo tempo ſoſtenute, con hauere di molto ſuperati anche noi ſteſſi, & il proprio ordinario potere, ſi ſiamo notabilmente intereſſati, eſſendo ſtato incredibile il conſumo delle rendite, dell'erario, delle munitioni d'ogni ſorte, de noſtri arſenali, & tutte le coſe onde quanto grande ſomme ſi biſognano di dinaro per preuedere alle coſe noſtre, ella medeſſima puo ben comprenderla; & ſiamo anche certi che, lo rappreſentera in buona maniera, con l'iſteſſa ſua prudentia & affetto, pari ambidue, che rendono la ſua perſona ſommamente grata.

Riſpoſta

Riſpoſta del SENATO.

NOI potemo aſſeuerantemente affirmare, non eſſer chi ci ſuperi nella diſplicenza delle turbulenze arriuati fra S. M. & il Chriſtianiſſimo, perche la ſincera oſſeruanza che loro profeſſiamo, & la cognitione in noi del molto che può ſempre al publico commodo la buono corriſpondenza loro, portano a queſto ſentimento in gran modo li noſtri animi: la parte però che ci ha dato ultimamente S. V. corriſponde non ſolo al termine di confidenza, del cui le ne rendemo molte gratie, ma a quel deſiderio che viue ardente nella republica di veder riunite le volontá, ſi come ſono tanto ſtrettamente congionti li ſangui, & gli intereſſi di due ſi grand re, conſtituiti di Dio nelle congionture correnti del Chriſtianeſimo per contrapeſare le forze altrui, non per diſſipare fra ſe ſteſſo le proprie: in cio la ſpeculatione delli huomini non puo giongere che da altro deriuino per il vero ſimili moleſti ſucceſſi ſe non dalla ſola ſciagura de tempi, mentre per il reſto ogniuno vede che non potrebbono tanto auanzarſi l'armi dell' una ſopra l'altra corona, quanto ambedue vengano alla giornata a perdere all' ingroſſo nelli ben graui intereſſi reciprochi di gia pur troppo patenti in Germania, & altroue apparendone l'eſperienza; coſi l'impiego dell'oro & dell'armate di quelle due regie potenze, rottopoſto fra ſe all'incertezza delli euenti, ſi rendono certi acquiſti di altri, coſi quelli chi attendeuano di cauare del buon concerto del patrocinio de quelle M. li accenti della maggior gloria & grandezza di eſſi ſi vede che conuengono, nel mezzo delle armi, cedere al deſtino, & coſi tutti gli altri reſtano ſpettatori doggglioſi d'una ſi gran commune calamitá: il zelo noſtro cordiale verſo il deſiato repiego di queſti diſtorbi, che ſi ha portati nella preſente riſpoſta al ſuccinto di queſti gran punti altrettanto deſideriamo che vagli a comprobatione del noſtro ottimo animo, il quale in ogni altra piu eſpreſſa maniera, quando l'apertura ſi preſentaſſe impiegareſſimo di buon cuore etiandio: deſiderando noi in tanto ſoura modo, che queſte noſtre voci fatte portare per la reunione di quelle due corone piu volte in ambe le corti, qual radice di ſinceriſſimo affetto, rapportino alcun frutto di utilitá nella buona diſpoſitione, & nella mente rettiſſima delle majeſtá loro.

Abſtract of a Letter from my Lord CONWAY to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Right Honnorable,

CONCERNING Bethlem Gabor, and Mr. Montague's negotiation: for the firſt, wee haue no opinion here of any thing to bee expected from him; but do rather beleeue, that hee complies with the emperor, there hauing bin tranſmitted hither out of Germany ſome printed articles of aggreement betweene them; and aduertiſements, that there is likelyhood of a peace to bee concluded betweene the emperor and the grand ſignor. If there bee any thing moued farther from him, you may aſſure the performance on his majeſties part, whenſoeuer Gabor ſhall giue the occaſion by his undertaking according to the contract with him. Wee haue here nothing of any ambaſſadors from him hither; but you may be aſſured, that vppon the comming of ambaſſadors, and all other occaſions, Sir Thomas Roe and you ſhalbe juſtified in all that you haue done in that buſines; which hath bin juſtly commended, as hauing bin guided with great judgment, ſtrong affections, and good caution.

CONCERNING Mr. Montagu, wee conceiue the affaires hee negociates to bee at an end, and not further to be relyed uppon; and letters of reuocation are already ſent unto him; but whither vpon my lord dukes comming to court that will ſtand, or be countermanded, I know not. Your aduice concerning ſecours to bee demanded from the Proteſtants cantons, is well receiued; and doctor Mayerne beeing aduiſed with in it, is of the ſame opinion. Hee wilbe ſtill conſulted with, in whatſoeuer ſhall concerne thoſe parts; and his majeſtie wilbe wary how hee ingageth himſelfe in any ſuch demand, but vpon good grounds. The offices you haue cauſed to bee paſſed, are approoued as the worke of a uigilant and judicious miniſter.

MY laſt gaue you the ſtate of our affaires in the iſle of Rhe, as wee then underſtood them. But our ſuccours from hence meeting with ſo many and ſo long delayes, the duke was enforced, after as much as man could do for the contrary, to 1627. reſolue on a retraite. The French had landed men in the iland under the little fort de la Pre; and yet neuertheles the duke made an aſſault upon the citadel, being inuited and aduiſed thereunto by Mr. Soubize: but that aſſault failed in the ſucceſſe, and the next day after, the French, beeing 5000 foote and 500 horſe, charged our men. Our horſe, beeing fewe and weake, were forced backe; and they, in ſome diſorder in their retraite, ruſhed in amongſt our foote, and ſo made an open waie for the ennemie; which gaue beginning to a dangerous confuſion: but the noble generall haſted to that part, and by his owne preſence and ualour cauſed a ſtand, and regained his men into order, and gaue repulſe to the enemie; and 500 of the French, beeing gotten into our workes, that were made for the benefit of our mens retraite, were beaten backe againe, and ſo our men retraited in order to their ſhips. The duke ſeemed not to thinke of any danger, but was careful to put himſelfe where there was moſt neede of his preſence; and being urged to prouide for the ſafety of his perſon, hee anſwered, That thoſe men were committed to him, and that hee would either bring them off, or dye with them. In this encounter wee loſt ſome principall comanders, diuers officers, ſome coulours, one feild peice, and between 3 or 400 men. The duke is come to Plymouth, and hath brought home all the fleete ſafe. The firſt report gaue both my ſonnes ſlaine; but, I thanke God, they are both returned ſafe; and I hope the like of many others, that yet are held to bee loſt. The duke is yet at Plymouth, giuing order in all things there. Vpon his coming to court wee ſhall fall upon new reſolutions. My lord of Holland was at ſea with 2000 men, and other ſupplies; and hearing of our retraite, came backe to Plymouth; and 1500 Scottiſh ſouldiers under the comand of the earle Moreton, lying at Portſmouth waiting for a wind, were upon this accident landed and billited in the iſle of Wight. The duke ſtaid 10 daies before the iland after his men were ſhipped, and endured there the extremitie of foule weather, but without loſſe. His grace could not ſay to his marriners, as Cæſar did to his in a ſtorme, That they had Cæſar and his fortunes: for it might haue bin anſwered, That the duke had with him Soubize and his miſfortunes. His grace put 800 men into Rochell, and deputies are come with him from thence, to treate and conclude upon conditions here.

THE Venetian ambaſſador hath bin ſtill making motions of a peace; but hee euer denied to mee, that hee had any commiſſion. Now I heare hee profeſſeth the hauing a comiſſion; and I do not find but this late accident hath made the king more auerſe from it then before.

THE abbot de la Schaglio continueth his ſollicitations, and preſſeth them the more openly, out of a jealouſy that a peace is making with him; and therefore hee urgeth, that nothing be done, but that his majeſtie may bee included, and his mediation uſed.

YOUR lordſhip will herewith receiue a letter from his majeſtie to your ſelf, and one to that duke, and a copie of it, together with ſeuerall peices containing complaints and greeuances of our marchants, for wrongs and hard uſage from that ſtate; the redreſſe whereof is recommended to your carefull ſollicitation: but where his majeſtie giues the direction immediately from his owne royall hand, there is no neede of adding any thing to moue your care. I will pray, &c.

Whitehall, 17. Nouemb.
1627.

Your Lordſhips, &c.

E. C.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With the Copy of Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER's of November 3. to him, and an Abſtract of his to Lord CONWAY.

My uery good Lord,

THIS day ſeuenight I did write unto your lordſhip, and ſend you an abſtract of that weekes diſpatch to my lord Conway, and a pacquet receaued for you out of England. Ill weather hath happily ſtayed the fregate untill now, ſo that I haue the opportunity by the ſame poſt to aduertiſe your lordſhip of the receipt of your laſt, dated the $\frac{20}{30}$. of October, which came to my hands two dayes ſince, and uery opportunely for the ſending away of your letter to the queen of Bohemia, and of your pacquet to Mr. Queſtor, vnto both which I did giue ricapito yeſterday. I am ſorry to heare, that my letters to your lordſhip do linger ſo long uppon the way; but I hope, that in the end they will arriue as ſafely as they do goe ſlowly. Your lordſhip may be pleaſed to beleeue, that I haue not omitted the writing unto you by euery opportunity; and of late I haue ſent you many papers of my lord Carleton, and of my owne, which I ſhould be ſorry ſhould miſcary; and therfore ſhall long to heare, that they are arriued a buon porto. Here incloſed I ſend your lordſhip an abſtract of my yeſterdayes diſpatch to my lord Conway, and the copye of a letter from Sir Robert Amſtruther; by which you will ſee the ſtate of the affayres of Germany. I ſhall long to heare of the arriual of the Tranſiluanian, againſt whoſe charmes your lordſhip is well prepared. Your lordſhips letter to the prince of Tranſiluania doth neede no apologye, neither for the ſtile nor matter. Diſuſe cannot weaken a habit once contracted; and your lordſhip hath in that peice, as in all things elſe that paſſe your pen, approued your ſelfe a perfect maſter of our art. I haue ſent both that copye, and yout letter written unto mee, to my lord Conway; who, I am ſure, will thanck mee for the conueighance, and applaude your dexterity.

THE French do make us beleeue, that wee haue loſt our footing in the iſle of Ree; but I do not beleeue halfe of what they do publiſh; for my letters from Paris of the 14th of Nouember, do ſpeake an other language, as your lordſhip may ſee by the incloſed copye.

SO, with my beſt wiſhes to your lordſhip, wherein I deſire that your noble lady may know ſhee hath hir part; and that my wife and I do jointly kiſſe both your hands, I take leaue, and reſt

Venice, 11 December,
1627. ſtilo loci.

Your Lordſhips faithfull and deuoted frend and ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

FROM my lord Carleton I haue not heard this month. His laſt were dated 25th October, ſtilo novo: either he is ſick, or letters do miſcary. When I do heare from him, your lordſhip ſhall haue part of whatſoeuer he doth ſend mee.

The Copy of Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER's Letter to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

THE Imperialiſts are victoriouſe, and commaund through out all Holſten an Jutland; and hauing left their garriſons euerie where, the duke of Walleſtein paſſed by this laſt week; and after conference with generall Tyllie, who is in Lowenbourgh, is now gon directly to Frankfort ſuper Oderam, and is to ſtay ſom few days there, and giue order for the winter quarter to his officers in all theſe confines; and ſoe hee is for his owne countrie and principalitie in Bohemia: withall hee doth carrie three regiments of horſe with him; and it is thought hee doth verie aduiſedly in it, not knowing what may bee layd to his charge; for the emperor is indebted much unto him, and it will bee hard to content him. The electors doe mightilie ſtorme at him: for that commaund and titles of honour which hee hath, as they ſay, doth properlie belong to one of the electors.

FOR certaine, the catholique nobilitie of Bohemia haue made humble ſuite to the emperor, not to prejudice them that neuer did offend, and are readie to giue their voyces in electing his ſoone king of Bohemia, but not to make it hereditarie. What the duke of Walleſteins part will bee in this perticular, tyme will try; and the eſtats of the kingdom haue ſent unto him to mediate with the emperor for their auncient libertie, that allthough ſom haue offended, and haue ſuffered for their offence, yet they neuer offended. The king of Denmarke is ſtill in Fionia, an iſland adjacent to Jutland, but the ſea betwixt them. There hee hath one thouſand Engliſh, one thouſand Scots, the two regiments of the Ringraue, and baron of Slauata of horſe, the marquis of Baden and his ſoone, duke Barnardo of Weimar; and now the count of Thorne is gon by ſea thither. In Stoad, generall Morgan hath 25 hundred Engliſh, and one thouſand Scotts. In Luſtat, monſieur Durant hath a thouſand Scots, 7 hundred French, 4 hundred Duch, and of the countrie companie four hundred men. In Welfenbutel 600 horſe, 2000 foot. The gouernor of Nienbourg, that famuſe coronell Limback, is dead; and the garriſon of that towne is treating for a ſafe paſſage and good conditions to quitt the place: if thoſe men doe come ſafe 1627. off, they will make twelue hundred men. The king hath neere in the biſhoprike of Bremen, and neere to Stoda, 3000 horſe yet; and ſhortly it will appeare, whether they ſhall enjoy the winter quarter peaceablie or not; for if their aduerſaries bee once ſetled in their winter quarters, they will not eaſilie remooue again before the ſpring.

THERE hath aduertiſment beene ſent from hence to the Eſtats and the prince of Orange, in what eſtate all matters are heere; and there is one ſent expreſly from thence hither, who is to take an exact information of all that is requiſite; and for certaine, there are prouiſions to com from thence for ſupplying of all neceſſaries for thoſe places ſituated upon the Elſe: interea temporis, either there will bee a peace treated, or ſom braue reſolution taken for a warr. As yet the Engliſh and Daniſh ambaſſadors cannot obtaine a ſafe conduct to goe for Milhouſen; yet they haue ſought it of the elector and of the generalls, but ſtill remitted to the emperor. For a ſafe conduct, I doe not thinke his Imperiall majeſtie will graunt it; for it is moſt certaine, it doth not pleaſe the emperor, that the electors doe meete at Milhouſen; and it is thought, the electors will haue the conſtitutions and preueledges of the empire confirmed, before they will harken to chuſe a king of the Romans; and if the emperor doe miſlike of the propoſitions for that particular, as allſoe for a generall peace, which they ſoe much deſire, there is a Leopald, or a Bauarian, of whom they will make uſe for the king of the Romans. There is noe greate liklihood of peace yet betwixt Poland and Swedland; yet the Polian nobilitie doe not greatly accept of the Auſtrian helpe, fearing the conſequence. The emperors ambaſſador, the count of Swartzburg, is in Lubeck, and is to treate with the Hanze townes. What the iſſue will bee, tyme will trye.

Ex loco ſolito, 3. Nouembris, ſtilo veteri, 1627.

The Copie of Sir ISAAC WAKE his Letter to the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my ſingular good Lord,

I SHOLD not haue troubled your lordſhip at this preſent, were it not that Sir Thomas Roe hath written unto mee in ſuch a faſhion, as doth oblige mee to ſend unto your lordſhip the copies of ſuch letters as I haue receiued this weeke from him. His letter to the prince of Tranſyluania is in as good forme as can bee dictated, habita ratione temporis; but it is loſt labour to expect any good from that prince, who hath ſoe ſhamfully betrayed our cauſe. Proprium eſt odiſſe quem læſeris. Hee muſt hate us, becauſe hee hath wronged us; and his owne conſcience will neuer permitt him to truſt thoſe whom hee hath ſoe farr offended, that hee cannot but know, that they can neuer truſt him heereafter. Perhaps wee may haue our reuenge, and the ſooner wee doe thinke upon it, it will bee the better. If it may bee left free to Sir Thomas Roe and to mee, to proceed with him as wee doe know hee hath deſerued, wee will ſoe unmaske him by diſcouering to the emperor, and the Turke, his clandeſtine ouuertures and propoſitions ſett on foot ſince the peace concluded at Vienna, that wee will undoe him, and reape the benefitt of reuenge at leaſt, if nothing elſe. It is hee who did diſpoſe the marquis of Brandebourg to fall off from the king of Denmarke, and to adheare to the emperor; and through his hands the moony did paſſe, which the emperor ſent to corrupt the count of Swarsbourg, who was then the fauourite of the elector of Brandebourg. Hee not ſparing to attempt the corrupting of the adminiſtrator of Magdebourge, unto whom hee did offer indifferent conditions from the emperor; but finding that hee was not malliable, hee did chaung diſcourſe, and promiſe to do miracles heereafter for our cauſe, in caſe the king of Sweden might bee diſpoſed to com with an army towards Sileſia. But this is une fineſſe conſüe de fil blanc; and it is apparent, his intentions are to oblige the emperor more unto him by betraying the king of Sweden, as hee hath allready doon the king of Denmarke.

Venice, 10. December,
ſtilo nouo, 1627.

To the QUEEN of BOHEMIA.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

THE ſhame of other mens proceedings hath made me retyre from your Majeſties preſence by my letters, not doubting but my lord Carleton hath acquaynted yow with the laſt ſceane of our play, which hath ended all in falſhood. I haue deſired Sir Iſake Wake to ſend the coppies of diuers papers of 3 poſts, for your Majeſties ſeruice: in which, then he, no man is more zealous. We haue conſonantly done all in our power to keepe vp a prince that renounceth himſelfe; and I ſhall not neede farther to deſcribe him. The adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh, I ſuppoſe, wilbe a concluding wittnes, with whom he hath practiced his beloued art, as well as with meaner men. I heare he purpoſeth, or hath ſent an ambaſſador into Holland; who, if he come to expoſtulate, may be ſilenced by my relations: if to complayne, I haue anſwered him already: if to excuſe, he muſt firſt proue good fayth and ſinceritye: if to pretend new ouuertures, all he is worth is not ſufficient to make amends for his paſt deſertions. He hath quarreled with me firſt, which is a cunning to aſſume integritye; but a playne glaſs of his owne making I haue returned, wherin to veiw himſelfe; modeſty and the reſpect of his qualetye reſtreyning me from other replye, then juſtification of truth, in which poore men are equally intereſſed. I leaue him, and the cenſure of his actions, to your Majeſties, agaynſt whom on earth he hath ſinned; and am extreamely ſorry to haue beene mingled with his affayres: for I conclude, no foreſeene fayling on our parts, nor neceſſitye from hence, forced him to that, which he can neuer deny was by him tranſacted with the emperor, before he had patience to trye eyther.

I EXPECT dayly my ſucceſſor to returne to giue his majeſtie an account of ſixe yeares to me loſt; and I cannot ſatisfye my ſelfe, vntill I ſhall haue the honor to ſee your Majeſtie, that I may ſpeake many things impoſſible to cleare, and vnfitt to truſt thorough the caſualtye of enemyes. A fauour done in ſeaſon is like the morning dewe vpon the withered hearbes: therfore I will preſume to remember your Majeſtie, that a mention of me in your letters to my maſter, agaynſt that tyme, will grace me, and enable me to doe yow better ſeruice. Wherin, though the preſent haruaſt hath beene blaſted, the ſeede is incorruptible in my heart, and may liue to ſhow the fruicts of the humble vowes of Conſtantinople, $\frac{17}{27}$.

Dec. 1627.

Your Majeſties.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

I HAUE receiued two letters from your lordſhip togither, of the 16. and 22. October, with diuers encloſed papers, at the juſt end of two monethes; and for my owne ſake I may be glad, ſeeing the falſhood of Gabor, that yow haue had ſome tryall of the impudence of his groomes and capteynes of cowes, that vpon the name of mony, made no ſcruple to ſweare, that their maſter had tranſacted nothing with the emperor, when the articles are publiſhed, and in the preface mention of Michael Toldolagy, aſſiſtant for that prince at the concluſion: all which, notwithſtanding the ſeacreſye here, we haue receiued from Vienna; and though the coppy be ſuch as the Imperialls giue out, and that the conditions are moſt baſe for this empire, and no mention in them of any friend in the world, as if only theſe were glad to ſaue themſelues; yet I ſuppoſe in the ſubſtance they are true, becauſe the nuncio would not conſent to alter one ſillable. Farther euidence ther needeth none: yet for ſuperabundance of teſtemonye, I haue aduice from the emperors court, that vpon the diſpatch of the nuncio hither, Gabor ſent another groome (for they are all no better) to him, to aſſure him of his fayth and obſeruance, and that he would ſend purpoſely an ambaſſage hither to aſſiſt in the ratification; which he hath performed. My opinion is, that this braue prince is wholy at the emperors deuotion vntill a new face of the world; which this ſtate may repent, if their affayres in Aſya find not ſome ſpeedy amendment. For I perſwade my ſelfe, that Gabor doth now rather hope of ſome emolument by the declination of the Turkes, and meritt of their enemies, then from the reſtoring of his old friends: and the matter is not improbable;

1627. for the great vizier is riſen from before Arzerum, and retyred toward Aleppo or Diarbeker *, and the army ſeparated to winter according as euery man pleaſeth, without licence. Abaſſa baſſa did ſett open his gates, and made many ſallyes, ſhowing himſelfe ſecure and careleſs; and it is doubted, that he will keepe that countrye to himſelfe, if the grand ſignor in perſon moue not, which is the laſt and a deſperate tryall.

Meſopotamia.

* To Tocatt; wher he winters.

YOUR lordſhips letters doe not comfort me concerning the kyng of Denmarke, who is decryed here as vndone: and this makes me aduenture to communicate a bragg of the Imperiall agent, which I heard 3 moneths ſince, but for the folly I durſt neuer aduiſe yt; that in Vienna, in a cabinet councell, it was decreed to publiſh a bando agaynſt that kyng, and to conferr upon a ſecond ſonne of the emperor his crowne and eſtates. From England, I haue neyther direction nor participation, only one priuat letter from a friend; ſo that I haue no heart to intrude vnwelcomely, and therfore haue not written this poſt to the ſtate; but as a concluſion alſo of my part, ſent coppies of my laſt; among which the encloſed letter, and my anſwere open, that your lordſhip may reade them, if the firſt miſcarried; which I deſire yow to ſend to my lord Killultagh and my lord Carleton, that they may meete Gabors ambaſſador eyther in England or Holland: and if from me any other thing be worth the aduiſing, from your lordſhips authoritye it wilbe better accepted, and obteyne more creditt: for I haue ſpent my ſpiritts and my purſe, and loſt ſixe yeares. My only conſolation is, I am ſo much nearer heauen.

PERHAPS your lordſhip will thincke, that I haue beene too playne and round with a prince in my reply; but I hope I am very tame and temperate, beſeeching yow to conſider how I was intereſſed both in honor and affection; how he hath vpbrayded us, and trampled vpon the dead; ſcornfully obiecting, that inſteed of ſuccour, he had no newes of us but loſſes, and of the ouerthrow and flight of the duke of Brunſwike; how he ſlights his majeſties army, and many other ſuch vanetyes. Theſe I haue modeſtly ouerſeene, and only anſwered to his matter with euident truth, in juſtification of the 3 poynts which concearne my maſters league and honor.

IF he had performed on his part, I muſt haue borne the ſhame, if I had fayled him; and it wilbe now hard meaſure to beare the blame of his changing: for he that would except agaynſt me, will not omitt to complayne firſt: and though I know, to be defendant, is alway diſaduantageous, yet I haue therfore forborne to write one word in my defence to his majeſtie, becauſe I would not uſe the poore ſhift of preuention.

I CAN add nothing of contentment to your lordſhip, nor expect any for my ſelfe but my remoue; wherin, if I could find ſafetye beyond Venice, I would come thither, only to enrolle my ſelfe among your ſeruants, profeſſing honeſtly, and deſiring your lordſhip to beleeue, there is no man liuing doth mor loue and honor yow then I, who haue no other but this barren beaten way to expreſs yt. And ſo I committ your lordſhip, and your noble lady, to the heauenly protection, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{18}{28}$.
Dec. 1627.

To the Same.

My very good Lord,

I HOPE the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh doth neuer expect to ſee any coniuncture, wherin Gabor will conſtantly fixe for our good (all the good we ſhall receiue from him, is to know, that it is unſafe to truſt to him); eſpecially when he ſhall find my letters teſtefying the honeſt offices of his Micoferenz (a man well choſen for ſuch an ambaſſage, that doth not beleeue in Chriſt, and yet is no Jew). To which freindly effects he hath lately added by new letters from his prince, (who, it ſeemes, fearing that his former aduices would not long laſt current, and that the ratification of the treatye might be interrupted, which he had undertaken to patronage, and therby to meritt of the emperor) that the peace of Germany was concluded, and therfore it was tyme to apprehend the oportunitye here. And though this meſſage came too late, yet it confirmed his creditt on both parts. It is not vnlikelye, that Gabor will make ſome new motions in Chriſtendome to ſalue his honor: for upon the receipt of theſe laſt letters, his old reſident [a] fell into a paſſion, and priuatly let fall ſome words of diſpleaſure, to this ſence: What haue we now to doe, when all is ſettled and finiſhed, with new tricks and inuentions? And the ambaſſador inſtantly demanded a priuat audience of the grand ſignor, after hauing taken his leaue, contrary to the ſtile of this court, of which the vizier was jealous. Yet not to deſpayre them, whom they doubt are already changed, he hath obteyned it; and all I can learne is, [b] that as a ſeale of his maſters fayth, he told him a long fable, how the emperor, the French and Spaniſh kyngs, had offered to make him generall of their united armye agaynſt this ſtate, and to giue him a great ſhare in the conqueſt, as Boſna and Valachia in heritage, and to erect them into a kyngdome; but that his prince had refuſed them, and would remayne a true and conſtant ſubiect. What the lenvoy or conſequence was, I cannot yet penetrate. I beleeue it had no farther reach then to lull theſe aſleepe, and to preuent me, whom he feared would tell other truthes; and if he had ſuch ſuſpition, he knowes he hath deſerued it of me, and did not much erre; for I haue opened to the vizier all his proceedings, and acquaynted him with his ſeuerall ambaſſages at this tyme to the emperor and Spayne, urging him to enforme the grand ſignor, leaſt they both were abuſed by too great truſt in a man, that looking upon their troubles in Aſya, and accordingly reſolued to proceed with them, did in the meane tyme prouide himſelfe of new friends. In ſumme, I haue ſo far rayſed iealous eyes upon him, and diſcredited all his practiſes, (except only where he diſcreditts the emperors peace) that I thinke he will not dare to doe more then diſſemble with both. Ther is great ſuſpition of ſome purpoſe in him to reuolt, eſpecially hauing written a quarrelling letter to the vizier about the death of the gentleman formerly aduiſed, and betrayed by his owne reſident; and that at the ſame tyme Morteſa baſſa of Buda had begun ſecrettly to enrolle ſegmeni, ſoldiers depending upon him ſelfe, which is alway a forerunner of rebellion. But he was diſcouered and preuented by the Spachies of that frontyre, and taken and put into guard untill order from the grand ſignor, who, as I am enformed, hath commanded that he ſhall come hither and anſwere; and I beleeue this will proue a checke to Gabor.

the 1627.

This accuſation is appeaſed.

THE French ambaſſador in this peace hath had no hand, neyther with Gabor, nor his miniſters: not that he wants malice, but creditt, there hauing paſt no correſpondence betweene them in 16 moneths; and now his ambaſſador, offering to uiſit him, receiued a ſcornfull refuſall, and Gabor neuer ſpares to lend him all the ill language that he can uſe with any modeſtye, nor the other to repay it. With the Imperialls I know he hath concurred, and would fayne be thought to haue helped them with the vizier; but not one word he ſpeakes is truſted, the opinion of him being ſo low, that in 8 moneths he hath ſcarce beene ſeene abroad, or but once with the vizier; who mentions him alway to me with ſo much ſcorne, that I am ſorry he is an ambaſſador, in which qualetye, for common reſpects, I ſome tyme fauour him; but for his particular, I am reſolued to keepe him downe. And though from this ſtate I fynd no reall help, yet I ſee an affection to us, and the contrary to all his majeſties enemyes, wherin the French haue now a large ſhare; and I take euery occaſion, eſpetially the new edict of prohibition of all trade, to make them more deſpiſed.

I HAUE receiued, with your lordſhips of the 9. Nouember, one from my lord viſcount Killultagh, wherin he hath giuen me an acquitance for my paſt negotiations with Gabor, which his majeſtie hath gratiouſly accepted, and ſett me at libertye from farther engagement; ſo that I ſhall leaue all correſpondence with him, or his miniſters, other then ſuch as ſhall from them ſelues ariſe. I would anſwere his lordſhip, but theſe feaſts doe warrant me to play; and I haue ſett up an unrulely kyng, who hath proclaymed libertye, and will ſcarce ſuffer me to finiſh this: ſo that if your lordſhip thinke any thing herein wilbe of ſeruice, you may pleaſe to ſend a coppy.

this intelligence I had from his owne
[a] 49.21.23.47.64.24.34.50.12.30.31.25.19.13.34.8.15.26.21.2.10.17.45.36.32.70.22.27.48.40.56.34.12.
ſecretarye
66.47.13.9.46.12.49.3.48.60.15.

this from vizier
[b] 50.22.24.48.18.46.38.33. the 52.26.62.23.13.45, and it were fitt to be knowne to the whole houſe of Auſtria, 94.a. and your lordſhip knowes how to make uſe of yt.

1627. THUS, wiſhing your lordſhip and your honorable lady, from my wiſe and my ſelfe your true ſeruant, a happy and many happy new yeares, I committ you to the gratious keeping of our moſt bleſſed God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, 30. December,
old ſtile, 1627.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With the Copy of a Letter to my Lord CONWAY.

My uery good Lord,

MY two laſt to your lordſhip were dated the 4. and 11th of December, ſtilo loci; and I ſuppoſe that they will come both togither to your hands, in regard that ill weather did ſtay the fregate many dayes after my firſt pacquet had been conſigned to the Bolla. Yeſterday I receaued your lordſhips pacquet, dated the $\frac{3}{13}$. and $\frac{6}{16}$. of Nouember, and did immediately ſend away thoſe which were addreſſed to my lord Conway, my lord Carleton, and Mr. Queſtor. Your letter, directed to the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, muſt lye by mee, untill I can heare where he is; for it is but ten dayes ſince he went from hence, and he did not know then what way to take, nor how to beſtowe himſelfe. For the many papers incloſed in your laſt, with which you haue been pleaſed to fauor me, I can returne your lordſhip nothing but harty thancks; with this addition, that as I am a witnes of your painfull and wiſe dexterity, ſo I will be a faithfull herald to blaze your worth and meritts in all places where I haue any credit. You will ſee by the incloſed papers ſent mee out of England, what a taske the marchants haue layed uppon mee; and when wee doe any thing here in that buiſines, your lordſhip ſhall be acquainted with all that doth paſſe. The Venetians do dayly incroach uppon us; and if wee do not preuent them, they will beate us in time out of the Mediterranean. Such other papers concerning Villa Franca, as are come ſince to my hands, I ſend here incloſed; and this euening, God willing, I will write to Turin, and let the duke of Sauoye know of your noble reſolution to honor and fauor that part.

MY lord Conwayes laſt letter unto mee hath ſome things in it which do reflect uppon your lordſhip; and therfore I dare not keepe a copy of it from you, and it ſhall be wayted uppon with a copye of my yeſterdayes diſpatch unto his lordſhip. What I haue receaued for you out of England, ſhall likewiſe be ſent with theſe. And here I will end your trouble, wiſhing unto your lordſhip and noble lady a happy newe yeare,

Venice, 1. January,
1628. ſtilo loci.

Your Lordſhips faithfull and humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

A Copy of Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to my Lord CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

VPPON Sunday the 26th of December, by this account, Don Vincentio Gonzaga duke of Mantoua dyed, hauing gouerned that ſtate the ſpace of nine monthes onely; during which tyme his cariage and demeanure was ſuch, that his ſubjects and neighbours do all lament the loſſe of ſo hopefull a prince. He had an ill conſtitution of body; and after hauing beene taken with an apoplexy ſome months ſince, the malignant humor did fall downe into his leg, where there did appeare at the firſt nothing but an eriſipilla; which degenerating after into a cancer, did end in a gangrene, and caryed him to his graue. His death, prognoſticated by his phyſitians, was euidently foreſeene both by himſelfe and his counſell; who deſirous to preuent innouations, and to ſettle the ſucceſſion vppon thoſe vnto whom it doth appartayne de jure, did diſpatch a currier to Rome to informe of his danger, and to deſyre a diſpenſation for a mariage to be contracted betwixt the duke of Retolois, ſonne and heire to monſieur de Niuers, and the principeſſa Maria, daughter of duke Franceſco of Mantoua, and the infanta Margarita of Sauoye. He had the happineſſe to receaue this contentment before his death; for the diſpenſation arriued from Rome vppon Sunday at two howers in the night: at fowre howers the princeſſe was taken out of the monaſtery, and brought into the chamber of Don Vincentio, where by his bedſide ſide ſhee was maried by his chaplaine vnto the duke of Retelois. The two young maryed partyes immediately were put into a bed to conſummate the mariage; and as ſoone as the duke Don Vincentio vnderſtood that it was finiſhed, he himſelfe dyed at eight howers in the night. Don Ferrante Gonzaga, marquis of Guaſtalla, had a mind to exclude the duke of Niuers, and to haue entred in his place per ſaltum, hauing to that purpoſe corrupted Federigo Gonzaga, gouernor of the citty of Mantoua, and generale delle armi dello ſtato: but his practiſes being diſcouered during the indiſpoſition of duke Vincentio, the foreſayde marquis Federigo was impriſoned, and all his vaſt deſignes vaniſhed. The day after the death of duke Vincentio, the count Cerbellone came towards Mantoua, accompanyed with a hundred cuorazze, pretending to come as ambaſſador from the gouernour of Milan; but he found the gates ſhut vppon him, and it was told him, ſi ut legati, nimis multi; ſi ut hoſtes, nimis pauci. Now curriers do flye vp and downe as if fortunæ Græciæ did conſiſt in the ſetling of the ſtate of Mantoua; and the Venetians (who are afrayde of their ſhadowe) haue ſent thoſe miſerable trouppes that they haue, towards their confines, as if there were Anibal ad portas: but really there is no great feare of innouation; for if the Spanyards haue no ſecreat intelligence in Caſal, they may well ſhew their teethe, but they will not be able to bite. Herein Gods prouidence hath ſurpaſſed humane wiſdom: for monſieur de Niuers could not foreſee this ſuddaine accident. Duke Vincentio did hope to liue, and vntill leſſe then a fortnight before his death, he did ſtrongly and violently purſue in Rome his ſuite for a diuorſe from his wife, hoping to marry his neipce himſelfe: but now monſieur de Niuers hath beene ſo fortunate, as to be declared duke of Mantoua; and his ſonne, to marry at the ſame inſtant the heire of Monferrate; which mariage doth reunite the two lines of Federigo and Ludouico Gondaga togither, with this aduantage, that the young lady now bride hath the reputation of being one of the moſt faire and ſweet creatures in Italy. Such bewty, accompanied with an inheritance of 300000 crowns reuenue, (which is hir portion alone) cannot chuſe but make hir very acceptable to hir husband. And now, perhaps, all differences may be eaſily accommodated betwixt the two howſes of Sauoye and Mantoua, conſidering that Retelois, the heire of the dutchy of Mantoua, hath maryed the granchilde of the duke of Sauoy, heire of the marquiſate of Monferrate: and who can tell, whither monſieur de Niuers himſelfe may not now likewiſe marry the infanta Margarita of Sauoye, mother of the principeſſa Maria, whom his ſonne hath maryed?

THE cloſe of this yeare in Venice hath beene vnfortinate, if not prodigious; for this laſt night, at fiue howers, ſignior Renier Zen, a principall ſenator, and one of the counſell of ten, comming from his throne of juſtice, with an intention to goe to his houſe, was, in the palazzo or court, aſſaſſinated by three hired to kill him with hatchets, juſt as he was goeing to take water, and to mount in his gondola at the court gate. Two blowes the murtherers did giue him, the one on the temple of his head on the right ſide, and the other on the neck behind. This morning the ſonne of ſignior Zen, accompanied with his fathers ſeruants, did bring into the place of St. Marke his gowne all ſtayned with bloud, two of his fingers cut of in defending his head from the blowe, and one of the hatchets which the aſſaſſini had let fall. Signior Renier Zen is not yet dead; and ſome are of opinion, that he may eſcape; but the accident is ſtrange, and without example ſince the firſt foundation of this ſtate.

Venice, December 31.
ſtilo novo, 1627.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

IN your lordſhips letter of the 8. September, I perceaue ſome of myne haue miſcarried; yet that his majeſtie was ſufficiently enformed of the inconſtancy of Gabor, and therfore did forbeare to ſend any mony for his uſe: neyther did I deſire other then power or creditt to putt him to a full tryall; which hauing done out of my owne preſumption, I humbly and thanckfully acknowledge his gratious acceptance. That prince doth ſeeke to impute the breach vpon the fayling on our parts, as I now more amply vnderſtand, hauing gotten the coppy of his inſtructions, mentioned 1627. tioned in my letter of the 6. Nouember, ſent to his reſident in May, and dated by him in this cytty in June, ſubſcribed and ſealed, as an apologye for his prince, in his owne name, but written by his maſter; wherin he repeates all the good ſeruices by him done to the generall cauſe, and then demands 3 moneths contribution; which if not de facto deliuered him, he renounceth the league, and juſtefyeth his maſter vpon our not performance, and the ill ſupplye of the army. But, as it ſeemes, then finding what he expected not, my confidence to pay him, he changed his purpoſe, eyther hoping to catch ſome mony, or not to bynd his prince by accepting of the condition: he forbare to deliuer it, and drew on his wonted diſſimulation. It conteynes 6 ſheetes of paper, too big for my preſent diſpatch; and the ſubſtance is abbreuiated in the princes letter to me, which I ſent your lordſhip with my anſwere the 1. Decemb. From all circumſtances I may ſafely conclude, that Gabor was falſe from the tyme of his treaty with the Imperialls the yeare before, at the ſame inſtant that his ambaſſador was in England.

BUT now we haue found, that he is not only loſt to us, but gotten and vnited to the enemye, at leaſt, if they dare truſt him; which I beleeue they will ſo far doe, as to make ſome uſe of him, though to his owne ruyne; for he hath offered himſelfe to ſerue the emperor, and ſent into Spayne, to what purpoſe, is not yet manifeſt. In the meane tyme, he entertaynes this ſtate with aduiſes inſinuating his fidelitye, to lull them aſleepe, or to diſcharge himſelfe in all euents. His ambaſſador (hauing, after his leaue taken, receiued a poſt from his maſter) required a priuat audience of the grand ſignor, contrarye to the ſtile of this court; which did rayſe a jealouſye in the vizier: but he pretending great ſecretts, and theſe vnwilling to offend a man almoſt loſt, it was finally granted him; and there he deliuered a letter without coppy, written in Turkiſh, that no enterpreter, nor perhaps all his owne miniſters, might know the full contents. This did much amuſe many men; but I haue diſcouered from the vizier and capten-baſſa, (with whom I hold confident intelligence) that the ſubſtance was, that the emperor, pope, Spayne, and France, had made league agaynſt this ſtate, and ſought to draw him into their party, offering to make him generall of their army, and to ſhare a great part in the conqueſt; but that he, as a faythfull ſeruant, had refuſed them, and now, according to his duty, had reuealed yt. Notwithſtanding, that hauing often irritated the houſe of Auſtria, now growne powerfull and victorious, if they did moue their armes toward theſe parts, the affayres of this empire conſidered, and he being not able to oppoſe them, that he muſt giue place, et majori cedere; and therfore, if he were enforced to ſaue himſelfe by ſubmitting to the ſtronger, at leaſt in apparance, that he might be excuſed of breach of fayth by this admonition. This letter, and another to the vizier, were mingled with bravure and threats, about the death of a gentleman, his ſubiect, lately murthered here, but betrayed by his owne miniſters. But all this is diſſimulation; for though ſome would hope, that from hence he would prouoke this ſtate to a new breach with the houſe of Auſtria, and ſo that he hath a deſire to looke backe vpon his old friends, they haue too flegmaticque and large a fayth; for certeynly he hath giuen himſelfe, for the tyme, to the emperor; and hath more hope, eyther to meritt of him, and ſo to expiate his paſt offences, or by him to catch ſomewhat vpon the Turkes, in their diſtraction and loſſes in Aſya, agaynſt which they are vnable to reſiſt, then by repayring of thoſe, who in his eyes ſeeme utterly broken. This I well know, and therof this ſtate is not ignorant, being from the nobilitye of Tranſyluania aduiſed of all his practiſes, who will not change partyes, nor venter their liberty, which they enjoy vnder the grand ſignor for a tribute not conſiderable. Yet I haue counſelled to diſſemble it for a tyme, vntill wee ſee ſome reſultance of theſe treatyes; and then, I am of opinion, any change in thoſe borders will embroyle the Imperialls, and draw them into a quarrell, which howſoeuer will turne to the aduantage of our cauſe. In the meane tyme, I haue thought fitt to aduiſe Sir Iſake Wake, that he may fynd ſome meanes, by the ſenate, to diſcouer in Spayne and Vienna, this laſt tricke of his priuat letter, at leaſt ſo much as his ſeeming to reveale a conſpiracye, and to prouoke this empire to new jealouſyes; that we may help to nouriſh diffidence, and to diſſolue his new creditt, if he haue any with them; which I haue cauſe to feare, from many practiſes with the king of Poland, and *Shakin Ghiray, concurring all agaynſt this ſtate. So vnquiett a ſpiritt liues in him, that he cannot reſt but in a ſtorme.

* Brother to the Tartar han

A FINALL concluſiue anſwere I receiued from his ambaſſador the day before his departure, hauing to that tyme continued praticque with me, and promiſed to come to me, and to explane his maſters credence, and to reueale to me ſome new matter; but then he ſent the old agent with his excuſe. The ſumme was, after many gradations, as loth to come to the poynt, that notwithſtanding his maſters good affection to maynteyne his league, yet for this tyme, rebus ſic ſtantibus, playnly he could not; but in any better coniuncture, that he ſtill reteyned his firſt deſires, and had now layd ſome foundation to reuiue them. I anſwered briefely, that hereafter he muſt at a deare rate purchaſe his loſt creditt.

THE French ambaſſador here hath juſtly prouoked me in generall, by his ſeeking to erect a jeſuiticall tirannye ouer all theſe poore chriſtians, but particularly by a late ſcandalous and impertinent action, wherin he thought to affront me, by procuring the aſſaulting of the houſe of one Mataxa of Cephalonia, ſubiect to the ſenate, who brought the Greeke ſtamp from England, for the benefitt of his church and nation; which being envyed by him and his jeſuites, they rayſed a falſe accuſation agaynſt him to take his life, and by the minesterye of a buffone, prouoked the vizier raſhly to ſacke and take all his goods, to a very great loſs: but I receiued him into my houſe, and protected him from farther violence; and haue ſince appeaſed all, and turned the ſhame vpon the authors, therby redeeming the patriarch from a great danger, who was principally aymed at, being then printing a booke, by him dedicated to his majeſtie, which was one of the cauſes of this their inſurrection agaynſt him. But I am not here with content: ſeeing they haue begunn to caſt ſtones, I am reſolued to joyne with the baylo, to baniſh that viperous brood from all this dominion, which I am able to doe; for they are dangerouſly crept in almoſt to euery corner, within 7 yeares, not without ſome great and treacherous deſſigne. For this vndertaking I will render his majeſtie good account, that it is a neceſſarye, and will proue a profitable ſeruice.

I RECEIUED a letter from his majeſtie to the grand ſignor, in anſwere of the complaynt of the baſſa of Ayman, which I haue deliuered, and is very acceptable: but hauing no coppy ſent me, the vizier firſt opened, and gaue it me to tranſlate; and finding it to be all complacence, and that at this tyme I had neede of ſome complaynt on our part; in the concluſion, where it referreth a credence to me, I haue preſumed to add a few words, eſpecially requiring juſtice in a particular caſe of a great injurye done to the conſull in Smyrna. This boldnes being neceſſarye for the merchants, and confeſſed, I humbly aſke his majeſties gratious pardon; for therby I am like to recouer 4000 dollers taken from them, without diſaduantage in any other reſpect.

THE vizier, as I aduiſed, riſen from the ſiege of Arzrum, retyring, Abaſſa baſſa followed him 7 dayes, and cutt off all his reare, and tooke his treaſure, cannon and baggage, to the great diſencouragement of this ſtate. The army, ſince, is in mutinye, and they haue ſought to ſtone him. He hath written to the grand ſignor, that ther is no more hope of obedience, vnleſs the reuerence of his owne preſence reuiue it. Yet he doth reſt at Tocat; but we ſee the ſoldiers returne naked, as from an ouerthrow; and it is reported, thoſe that ſtay with him will bring him hither per force; ſo that this ſpring this cytty muſt expect trouble, if not deſolation. I hope my ſucceſſor will haue deliuered me, being comforted by your lordſhips letter of his readines to depart: for (my obedience to his majeſtie reſerued) I had rather liue in a priſon two yeares, then two moneths longer in this place, of which I am ſo wearye, that I ſcarce enjoy one hower of content. I beſeech your lordſhip to ſhow this letter to his majeſtie, and to mediate his grace for him that is, and will euer be,

Conſtantinople, $\frac{12}{22}$.
Jan. 1627.

Your Lordſhips.

YOUR lordſhips caution vpon Camerarius, I will obſerue; and no more take notice of him.

1627. From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With two Letters to him from Sir Robert Anſtruther; and three to Lord Conway, Jan. 6. 7. 14.

My uery good Lord,

MY laſt to your lordſhip were of the firſt of this month and yeare; ſince which time I haue ſafely receaued your pacquet of the $\frac{17}{27}$. of 9ber; and I ſent to my lord viſcount Conway, and Mr. Queſtor, thoſe which were addreſſed unto them; and to the Haghe, your pacquet for my lord Carleton, accompanyed with thoſe papers which you did deſire ſhould be communicated unto him, after I had peruſed them. Vnto him I haue likewiſe ſent two letters of yours addreſſed unto the adminiſtrator of Magdebourg, and one written (as I ſuppoſe) by the Dutch ambaſſador; all which, I hope, will finde good ricapito, in regarde the adminiſtrator doth bend directly towards the Haghe.

FROM my lord Carleton I haue had nothing this fortnight; but the abſtracts of two letters, which I haue receaued from Sir Robert Amſtruther, will tell you how affayres do ſtand in thoſe northerne parts; unto which I haue added a paper of auviſi ſecreti, which doth diſcouer the uaſt deſignes of the Auſtriaci, of which I do aſſure my ſelfe you will make good uſe.

HAUING made a recapitulation of all that hath paſſed through my hands the laſt yeare, I will make bolde to ſend your lordſhip a copye thereof, becauſe you are mentioned in it more then once. And that your lordſhip may ſee what wee do, and how wee ſtand here at the beginning of the yeare, I ſend you likewiſe abſtracts of my three laſt diſpatches to my lord Conway. I do hartily thanck your lordſhip for your animaduerſions uppon thoſe writings which do concerne Villa Franca, and the trade begun there; and I haue ſent them to my ſecretary to Turin, to ſerue for his inſtruction and direction. Mr. Wilſon is ſafely arriued here, and doth purge in the Lazaretto, the ſinne of this ſtates curioſity. I haue ſent thither to uiſit and refreſh him; and when he ſhall be free from that contumacia, he ſhall know what power your lordſhip hath ouer mee, and finde mee ready to ſerue him in whatſoeuer he ſhall command. Out of England I heare, that Sir Peeter Wyche is imbarqued for Conſtantinople, and that he doth cary a commiſſion for your lordſhip, to remayne there as extraordinary, untill his majeſtie command the contrary. The company is to defray you both; but whither there be any addition unto your lordſhips allowance, I know not. I will trouble your lordſhip no further at this preſent; but here craue leaue to kiſſe the fayre hands of your noble lady, and euer reſt

Venice, 15. Jan.
ſtil nou. 1628.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

An Abſtract of Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER's Letter from Hamburgh.

SINCE my laſt of this day ſevennight there is nothing hapned of moment, ſaue onely that the greate wind and raine hath brought in much water into the Elfe, which hath doone greate harme upon the fortifications of Lukſtat, and hindring generall Tyllie his intentions of medling with force againſt Stode. There are good ſtore of his men drowned, that lay quartred in the mariſh grounds. By water and land, Stode is ſoe blocked up, that nothing can bee brought out or into it: yet I haue ſeene letters com from generall Morgan, making mention that all is in indifferent good ſtate there, and proviſions within for aboue 6 monethes: ſoe that it will coſt deare before hee bee beaten out, or ſurrender the towne, and ayde is expected earlie in the ſpring. Withall, if there com a hard froſt, hee hoopes to doe greate good upon the enemie; for as yet hee feares them not: and generall Tylly is in perſon within foure leagus of it, in Buxſtohude, where his men, what with greate dutie, and cold nights, doe ſuffer much, and doubtleſſe will bring greate ſickneſſe amongſt them, lying and ſtanding in the mariſh grounds.

THE emperors ambaſſador continueth in Lubeck, working that projected league with the emperor, Spaine, and the Hans Townes: there are ſom of the maritim townes, that doe meete in January next at Lubeck; and I beleeue little will bee doone to any purpoſe there, it onely beeing a preparatife for a generall meeting of the Hans Townes after that. If the townes bee not too much wronged by the Engliſh, they will bee loath to fall fowle with England, Denmark, Sweden, and Holland. I doubt not but England is oft aduertiſed, and prayed, to moderate their proceedings againſt thoſe townes; and ſom hoopes they will conſider well of all matters.

Hamburgh, December 8.
ſtilo loci.

From the Same.

My very good Lord,

FOURTEENE dayes ſince I ventured, ouer land, a large anſwere, and ſuch other papers as I thought requiſite for your lordſhips full enformation of what I had done, and whereon I grounded my ſelfe to hope of a good end betweene his majeſtie and the king of Denmarke; or at leaſt to abate the opinion of the iuſtice of their cauſe, which I thought the right way. If they miſcarry, I am ſhamed; but ſeeing no hope of a paſſage by ſea, for Ser. M. Borthwicke, and that the delay had as much preiudice as the aduenture, I tooke all the care and caution poſſible for their ſecuritye. Since which, about 5 dayes after, Mr. Borthwicke departed in company of an Engliſh merchant by land; but neyther would they willingly carrye, nor was it thought fitt to ſend by them, but by the ordinarye poſt; and I hope they will togither arriue ſafely. To thoſe, and to your owne wiſedome, to vſe them as you pleaſe, I referr you; and becauſe letters are not ſo full in all circumſtances as conference, I haue communicated and explayned my ſelfe to him as well as I am able.

THE day of his ſetting out, I receiued your lordſhips packett with the propoſitions and anſwers encloſed; for which I humbly thanke you, and am ſorry that your negotiations were not more effectuall, and that thoſe miniſters in whome the error is, are ſo coſtiue of vnderſtanding reaſon: but I ſuppoſe the true cauſe to be, not ſo much the hope of monye, as that to renounce it is to acknowledge, that neither the carriage, nor their deſſigne in the war, did deſerue it; and in a buſines of this nature, which ſo much concernes his majeſties ſeruice, I doubt not your ingenuitye will giue me leaue to write freely my ſence of the whole buſines, and to make ſome obſeruations of the proceeding in it. I had inſtructions to infuſe into that king and ſtate another opinion of the treatyes then they made to themſelues, and to declare in ciuill tearmes, that they could looke for no mony; but ſo to temper it, as that the king might not thinke himſelfe forſaken, and caſt off; but rather ſtill expect, in another way, the beneuolence, loue, and ayd of his majeſtie: but I found that was done, and they ſo enraged at our ſtate, that they would ſcarce looke at me. Therefore I thought it not fitt for the tyme, to begin in my firſt propoſitions with a flatt refuſall to pay the mony; but to inſinuate, that we did not vnderſtand any right of the debts and aſſignations pretended: but that if the king made his demands, and ſhowed his reaſons, paratum eſſe; for thoſe are the words, talem reſponſionem reddere, quæ veritati ſimul et honori conſentanea ſit, quæque plenè, uti ſpero, majeſtati veſtræ ſatisfaciat. This I did to draw them to make their demands; intimating, that I vnderſtood them not; and to take the defenſiue part vpon me. But when I receiued the kings anſwere to that poynt, I found it in generall thus: Majeſtas ipſius exiſtimat dominum legatum prolixâ informatione opus non habere: non enim dubitat, quin ſatis ipſi conſtet, et quantum ex mutuo, et quantum ex promiſſo ſubſidio menſtruo in uſum belli rex Magnæ Britanniæ debeat, quorum ratio facillime iniri poſſit: quod ſi jam domino legato media proferre placuerit, quo modo ipſius majeſtati ſatisfieri queat, experietur nihil ipſi magis curæ et cordi eſſe, quàm ut mutua cum Magnæ Britanniæ rege conjunctio et amicitia conſervetur, et indies incrementum capiat. This anſwere being a chalenge to mony lent, and mony promiſed, as a debt, and in the reſt generall; and an intimation, that if I had power, the king would expreſs his deſire of good accomodation; I made it the ground of all my arguments with the commiſſioners. Firſt, I acknowledged the mony lent, and aſſured them his majeſtie would repay it, as ſoone as his occaſions would permitt: the other I abſolutly renounced playnly, categorically, and freely, that the councell of England did not ſo vnderſtand it as an obligation, but a friendly ayd; nor that they could expect monye 1627. in that right: but I did it not barely with, Non eſt, quia non eſt; but I inſiſted, and proued, that the treatye of the Haghe was not compleate on their part, and therefore not binding. I ſpared not to ſhow how the war was carried to particular ends; and laſtly, that we had our complaynts equall, and ſought to driue it to this end, to ſett one againſt another, and not to come to accounts; which would aggrauate and renew the vnkindnes, but no way eaſe it. This I did freely and fully, ſundry tymes, to the chancelor, Ranzow, and Gontier, as they cannott denye: and if in any thing I exceeded my commiſſion, it was in that boldnes; for if your lordſhip weigh well what I had to anſwere, it was little againſt their arguments of ſeuerall treatyes, and many letters, and your lordſhips plenepotence. And to denye the mony, and ſay nothing, I thought was too drye, and vnbecomming my maſters honour: therefore being putt rather to my witts then to my armes, I tooke hold of the account of the ſoldiers, and thought to haue ſheltered their honour, and to abate their pretences, by ſetting others as iuſt againſt them. And I am ſtill perſwaded, at that tyme, if I had had power to haue taken them off, that in the heate I might haue done more. On the other ſide, they alway as ſtiffly inſiſted on their right, and would abate nothing, vnleſſe I had authoritye to doe ſomewhat, and to make a finall end. On this they inculcated, If you ſhow a commiſſion to treate in that poynt, the king was ready; if not, they had nothing to diſpute nor anſwere me. Which I vndertooke to certefye into England, and did not doubt of ſuch an anſwere as ſhould ſatisfye the king; which muſt be enterpreted by me, and not by them: and therefore I wrote to my lord of Dorcheſter my conceipt; That if I had leaue to valew the ſoldiers pretences and commiſſion, I did hope for ſuch a ſumme as would take them all off, and content the king of Denmarke; which would appeare great, but with this addition, if it came accompanied with an aſſurance, tyme, and meanes to pay the lent mony, which, for ought I ſaw, they as little expected. Therefore I am ſorrye, that your lordſhip had order to make the offer in mony; which was not my entention, as yow will perceiue, both by the whole proceſſe of my iournall, and coppies of letters ſent your lordſhip. And to the particular, I haue well weighed your lordſhips propoſitions, which are of an excellent temper, and, I doubt not, conformable to your orders: but I doe not thinke it the way to preuayle with them, to hope to perſwade them out of an imaginarye Indyes precariò; but to ſhew them the works in the way: for certeynly, though the king of Denmarke be a moſt braue prince, yet the war was not guided to his majeſties ends: his commiſſaryes abuſed both him and his armyes; they liued on the countrye, and were not paid at all. Were it then reaſon, that our maſter ſhould repay that monye, which was neuer disburſed by any? The contribution giuen in monye and ayds, and the ſurcharge of the trade in the Sont, and the contracts due to his majeſties ſubiects, will make as great and as iuſt a ſhow as the treatyes, as they were executed: for the words of a treatye are but the bodyes or payntings; the ſenſe, vſe, and execution, are the ſoules, which giue them life and vigour. If in this way I erre, and that it be his majeſties pleaſure not to diſpute with his vncle, then my plott is marred; and I hope your lordſhip may in a ſecond tryall haue better ſucceſſe, but neuer by 10000 l. in monye, which I thought had beene otherwiſe vnderſtood in my letters, and was otherwiſe directed to me, that the mony limitted ſhould be aſſigned, and I meant not to enter into particulars. I beſeech your lordſhip, make the beſt conſtruction of my zeale to his majeſties ſeruice; and I am confident, thoſe miniſters can make none ill of any thing betweene us, and they cannott deny, that in my laſt ſpeech with the king, and laſt concluſion with them, I playnly profeſſed, that though I would endeauour for a commiſſion to treate with them, yet on this condition, that I aſſured them, his majeſtie would giue none, to treate vpon any ground of a debt by vertue of the Haghe treatye, but in the way of loue and good accomodation. And this I will iuſtefye to them, when God deliueres me out of this priſon, face to face; and would haue left it them in writing, but they would not receiue it.

I AM here ſhutt vp with weather neither ice nor thaue, ſo that there is no paſſage ouer the Wiſſell. In the meane tyme, the chancelor of Suede doth enioy himſelfe, and the treatye with this towne is at a ſtand. He will not meet them, vnleſs they ſeeke him at his dore, and they cannot be perſwaded to ſo much ſeruitude; nor am I able to iudge of the ſucceſs, becauſe I cannot penetrate his ends. The Poles will vnwillingly breake, though they be tempted far; becauſe they diſcouer another 1627. ſtorme from Turky, from whence they muſt expect a war on that ſyde, their Coſſacks hauing this yeare ſpoiled and burned all the coaſt of the Euxine ſea, taken two gallyes of the grand ſignors, and brought the feare to the cittye of Conſtantinople, where now a reuenge is meditated: and I doubt this will make the Suede high, to exact any thing of the oppreſſed cittye. From Stockholme we can heare nothing but of the furious plague, and that the king is at Vpſale. The new leuies are ſtayd, but not recalled; but new order to renew the ſtanding regiments. His miniſters doe profeſs, and all his commanders make account, to march into Pomerland. His horſe are ſtrong, and kept together in Pruſſia: yet with all this it is reported, that the emperor, or Walſtein, hath ſent a fore-runner to the king, to taſt if there may be a way opened to peace; ſo that, in ſo much contrarietye, I will auerre nothing, vntill I can meete the chancelor, that I may finiſh this buſines in hand, and by the light of that make farther iudgment on the other. In the meane tyme, wiſhing your lordſhip an happye new yeare, I will euer reſt Danſicke, $\frac{8}{18}$ Jan. 1629. Your Lordſhips moſt humble and faythfull ſeruant.

Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

AS for the commandiments which I haue receaued from his majeſtie concerning the Leuantine company, moſt of them haue been already executed; for in the month of Auguſt I did preſent vnto this prince a memoriall of all theire greeuances (which is the ſame now againe ſent mee out of England). I did procure for them as much ſatisfaction as they did require at that time: for the ſenate, at my requeſt, did take the buſineſſe out of the hands of the proueditori of Zante and Cefalonia, and referre it to the vinti ſavij (as was deſyred in the petition): a ſalvo condotto was granted to thoſe who had been baniſhed from thoſe places by the proueditori, to returne and trade, vntill the caſe were adjudged. The monny which the foreſaid proueditori had cauſed to be depoſitated in thoſe iſlands, is commanded to be ſent to the exchequer here, to preuent all danger of extortion or concuſſion; and as now the vinti ſavij are examining that proceſſe, ſo their ſentence muſt be expected before wee proceed further; and if the marchants do then find themſelſes aggreeued, I will, God willing, appeare againe for them, preſent their memorialls, and ſpend the name of his majeſtie to autenticate and authoriſe my offices.

I DID likewiſe, long ſince, by a ſolemne act of myne confirme here the declation which Sir Tho. Roe had formerly made at Conſtantinople; and ſince the receite of his majeſties letter, I haue againe aſſembled the nation, and publiſhed his royall pleaſure, and ſent copyes of his act to Zante, Cefalonia, Liuorne and Villa Franca. In the matter of ſhifting the ſtanderds, none hath tranſgreſſed, that I know of, but Nathaniel Goodlad: for ſince my returne hither from Piedmont and Heluetia, I haue not ſuffered any Engliſh ſhip to make any contract with a Venetian, vntill I was acquainted with the charter party; and the ſame ſtyle I do intend to hold ſtill.

IT ſhould ſeeme, that Sir Tho. Roe, and the Venetian bailo, are agreed vppon the point of conſulage; for at this inſtant here is arriued in this port an Engliſh ſhip, come from Conſtantinople, fraighted by Venetians; which Sir Tho. Roe would neuer haue permitted, if they had not payed him his due. But that diſpute is likely now to be at an end; for the ſenate here did publiſh an act the laſt weeke, which doth forbid any Venetian, hereafter, to hire or fraight any forein ſhip, allowing them the terme of one yeare to prouide themſelſes of ſuch ſhipping as ſhall be neceſſary; towards which charge the publique doth offer to contribute, by way of lone, a good part, as may be ſeene by the printed act. There doth remayne then nothing but the priuate buiſines of Mr. William Garroway, wherein perhaps then hath been ſome miſunderſtanding; for as he doth ſuppoſe, that they haue donne him wrong, in condemning him to pay 500 ducats, ſo they, on the contrary, do pretend, that at my requeſt, and in contemplation of mee, they did forgiue him the confiſcation of his ſhip and goods, and take onely that ſmall fine, to deterre others from following his example. In rigor of lawe, all was forfeited; and I know not how 1627. it will ſtand with the honor of his majeſtie, to beg ſo poore a thing as 500 ducats: howſoeuer, I will do as I am commanded, and preſent any memoriall that his agent here ſhall bring vnto mee, accompanying it with my beſt offices.

I MUST in all humility beg leaue to formalize a little, either vppon the marchants in England, or their correſpondents here; for, as I do ſee that they haue not been wanting to themſelfes in exhibiting their juſt greeuances, ſo I do find, that they haue been wanting towards his majeſties miniſter, in not taking any the leaſt notice of what he hath donne from tyme to tyme for them. Whenſoeuer I haue been required to aſſiſt them, I haue readily appeared vppon all occaſions; and it would haue ſtood well with gratefull diſpoſitions, to haue taken notice, in few wordes, vnto his majeſtie, and the lords, of what I had donne already, when they did preſent their greuances, which I had already mittigated; but inſteed of any ſuch thankefull acknowledgement, the tinne company hath now affronted mee here, by commanding their factor, Randall Symmes, to forbeare furniſhing mee hereafter with any monny; ſo that I muſt be inforced to haue recourſe vnto others, and to beg almes at the dores of ſtrangers. I will leaue the conſideration of this proceeding to the wiſdom of your lordſhip, and not aggrauate it ſo farre as it doth deſerue.

Venice, 6th Jan.
ſtil. nou. 1628.

From the Same, to the Lord CONWAY. Dated Jan. 7. 1627.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

WEE haue had here, this laſt weeke, Mr. de Sanneterre, gouernor of the count of Soiſſons: he did bring letters from the count to this ſtate, and was admitted into the college by the ſecreat way, ſo priuately, that no notice hath been taken of his being here. His commiſſion was, firſt, in generall tearmes, to offer the ſeruice of the count vnto this ſtate. Secondly, He did promiſe to furniſh this ſtate with as many men as they ſhould neede, in caſe they would ſupply him with monny. Laſtly, He did indirectly intimate a deſyre he had to be choſen generall of this ſtate, in the place of count de la Tour. The anſwer that he receaued was genericall, verball, and merely complimentall; ſo that, in ſumme, Sanneterre is returned to Turin with nothing at all but good wordes. If theſe ſigniori do reſolue vppon any Frenchman, either for the charge of generall, or to make leauyes, it is likely they will preferre the duke of Candales before any of that nation; for as they do much eſteeme his perſon, ſo do they reflect much vppon a letter which Mr. d'Eſpernon hath written hither to his ſonne, commanding him to aſſure this ſtate, that if they do neede any men, he will ſend hither to his ſonne as many as they ſhall require.

THE affaires of Mantoua are not yet ſo well ſetled, but that a ſtorme is threatened; for although the duke of Retelois, now called prince of Mantoua, hath taken of the nobility and ſubjects the oathe of alleageance, in the name of his father, and reunited Monferrat by marying the princeſſe Maria, yet it is a queſtion how the Spaniards and the duke of Sauoye will take this precipitation. It is certaine, that Cerbellone, who had audience of the young prince the day after the death of duke Vincentio, did command him in the name of the king of Spayne, not to take the inueſtiture of that dutchy, nor to marry the princeſſe, vntill the further pleaſure of the king of Spayne were knowen. And the ſame day the biſhop of Mondeni did proteſt againſt that marriage, and deſyre a ſuſpenſion therein, vntill the duke of Sauoy might be acquainted therewithall. If the duke of Sauoye and the Spanyards ſhould chance to joyne in this quarrel, it would be hard for the duke of Niuers, who is yet in France, to get to Mantoua; for they haue all the paſſages in their hands: but as long as Caſal doth hold good, there is no great danger; for they may rauage the plat pais of Monferrat; but the fortreſſes, and body of the ſtate, will be preſerued entire. The young duke of Mantoua hath this weeke written a very ſubmiſſiue letter vnto this ſtate, recommending his father and himſelfe vnto their protection, and ſtiling theſe ſenators Padri, and himſelfe Figliuolo di San Marco. The pope is wholy for Niuers; but it is thought, the emperor will be againſt him, and that he will pretend that dutchy to be deuolued to the empire. If he do bend his forces this way, to repoſſeſſe himſelfe of ſuch feuda as the Italian princes do withhold from him, it will mend the game of the king of Denmarke very well, and perhaps eſtabliſh a good peace in Germany.

MONSIEUR d'Auò, the new French ambaſſador, arriued here fiue dayes ſince, and had his firſt publique audience vppon the 5th of this month, ſtilo novo. He doth already formalize vppon two points of ceremony, in which he doth thinke that he hath been neglected; the one, that he was incountred onely with 20 ſenators, whereas I had 35; the other, that he was not preſented, at his firſt arriuall, with rinfreſcamenti, as I was at my firſt coming. Of theſe two omiſſions he hath cauſed his ſecretary to complayne; but in this publique oration he did not make ſhew of any diſguſt; but did comply with them very ceremoniouſly, according to the ſtyle of the place. The duke was not preſent at that audience, hauing kept his bed theſe eight dayes, euer ſince the aſſaſſinating of Renier Zen, of which parricide Georgio Cornaro, ſonne vnto the duke, is found guilty. He is fled to Naples, whither he did remit aforehand 40000 crownes; but he will be followed with furious proclamations; for the ſtate doth take that inſolence exceedingly to hart, as a blow giuen to the republique, and not to a priuate ſenator. This accident is like to breake the hart of the good old duke; for he is inflicted both with the exceſſe committed by his ſonne, and with the feare of the ruine that may come vppon his houſe; of which there hath already appeared one prognoſtic, which is ominous; namely, that the proclamation which did ſummon his ſonne to appeare within the ſpace of 24 howers, did not run in the name of duke, (as all publique acts vſe to do) but in the name of the councel of ten; and this is a dangerous ſtep towards the degrading of the duke. Zen doth liue yet, although he receaued nine wounds; and it is hoped, that he may eſcape: if he do, it may paſſe for a better miracle, then hath been ſeen in Rome.

From the Same, to the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

THIS ſtate hath returned an anſwer vnto the letter ſent from the duke of Retelois, wherein they haue ſtyled him prince, and his father duke of Mantoua; but vnto the requeſt he made for protection and aſſiſtance, they haue anſwered ſo coldly, that it may bee interpreted a flat denyall; for they haue onely in generall tearmes promiſed to do that which ſhall become a friend, a neighbour, and louer of liberty; but that they do preſume and hope, that all thinges may be quietly ſetled without any innouation, and that therevnto they will not be wanting to contribute their beſt offices.

VNTO Monſ. d'Auò, the newe French ambaſſador, who did this weeke vrge this ſtate ſtrongly, in the name of his maſter, to declare themſelues in the aſſiſtance of Niuers, now duke of Mantoua, they did returne a more round anſwer, telling him, That if there be any danger of innouation in theſe parts, it would be imputed vnto the French king, who, by abbandoning his beſt friends, had giuen way vnto incrochments of the Spanyards, and imboldened them to attempt any thing in any place: That as the original of all theſe inconueniences did proceed from him, ſo the worlde would expect, that the redreſſe of theſe diſorders ſhould likewiſe proceede firſt from him; which would ſoone be donne, when he would be pleaſed to rejoyne againe with his beſt and trueſt friends, and oppoſe the common enemy: That he muſt not thinke hereafter dacauare le granchie con le mani altrui, as hitherto he hath donne; becauſe the memory of his late abandoning his friends was yet to freſh; and therfore it will be expected, that he ſhould appeare himſelfe firſt, before he do require others to declare. Laſtly, They did expreſſe their earneſt deſyre of a reconciliation with England, and ſatisfaction to be giuen to the duke of Sauoye for many vnkindneſſes; which he had taken at the leaſt, if the French had not giuen. The ambaſſador, who is newe in his place, was a little ſtartled with a wellcome of this nature; and made no reply, but vnto the point concerning the duke of Sauoye, whom he did pronounce as abſolutely loſt for France, and gayned (as he did doubt) by the Spanyards. For proofe of the firſt, the ambaſſador did alleage, That at his late paſſing by Turin, the duke did ſeriouſly, and without paſſion, vſe this language vnto him: J'ay tousjours eu le cœur Francois, & l'ay encor; mais l'on me l'a tellement ulceré, que je ſeray contraint de quitter la partie. For confirmation 1627. of the ſecond, he ſayd, That he was credibly informed, that padre Gaetano, a Theatin of Turin, had been fewe dayes ſince at Milan; where he did ſecreatly negotiate with Don Gonzales di Cordoua, and inſtantly returne to the duke of Sauoye. Perhaps the ambaſſador, who doth know in his conſcience, how ill the French haue deſerued of that prince, doth make this prognoſtic out of the forealleaged reaſons and ſuſpitions: but hitherto non conſtat, that he hath paſſed ſo farre; and perhaps his intention is onely to intimidate the French, and to ſee if by that meanes they may be brought to know themſelfes, and to reſpect their friends.

HEREVNTO ſome other ſuſpitions may be added, as namely, That a currier being diſpatched from Mantoua towards Spayne, to giue an account of the death of duke Vincentio, and of the aſſumption of Niuers, the duke of Sauoye did ſtay that poſt at Turin, vntill the currier of Milan did arriue, and outgoe the other one day. Secondly, That as the gouernor of Milan doth dayly ſend forces towards the confines of Mantoua and Monferrat, and hath caſt a bridge ouer the Po at Baſignana; ſo the duke of Sauoye doth likewiſe ſend all his trouppes that way, intending himſelfe to goe to Aſti, and the prince of Piedmont to Vercelli: but theſe are onely ſuſpitions, which do not conclude a direct complicity; and as it is thought, that Gonzales will not innouate any thing de facto, vntill his currier do returne out of Spayne; ſo it may be preſumed, that the duke of Sauoye will onely ſtand vppon his guarde, and expect to take his beſt aduantage.

Venice, Jan. 14th,
ſtilo nouo, 1628.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With his Letter to Lord CONWAY, January 21. and an Abſtract of Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER's of January 5.

My uery good Lord,

VPPON the 15th of this month I did ſend your lordſhip ſuch a worlde of papers, that I might uery well haue forborne to haue troubled you againe ſo ſoone; but hauing receaued yeſterday a letter for you out of England, I could not let it goe under my couer, without renewing unto you the aſſurance you haue already of my affectionate deuotion to your ſeruice. By the incloſed duplicate of my yeſterdayes diſpatch to my lord Conway, your lordſhip will ſee what hath paſſed here ſince the writing of my laſt; and I ſend you likewiſe the abſtract of a letter I receaued yeſterday from Sir Robert Amſtruther, that you may ſee how things do paſſe in Germany. Out of England I heare, that my lord of Carliſle is going extraordinary to the Haghe, Bruxelles, Lorrain, and Turin; from whence he doth intend to make a ſtep to Venice. So, wiſhing your lordſhip all happines, I take leaue, and reſt Venice, 22. January, 1628. ſtilo loci.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to Lord CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

THE duke of Niuers hath paſſed through the Valtelina with eight poſts, and is ſafely arriued at Mantoua, where he hath taken poſſeſſion of that ſtate; ſo that very ſhortly wee ſhall ſee whither any innouation may be expected from theſe parts. Don Gonzales di Cordoua, gouernour of Milan, hath refuſed to admit vnto audience one of qualety, whom the prince of Mantoua did ſend vnto him, ſending him word, That he ſhould be admitted, if he did come from the duke of Retelois, but not from the prince of Mantoua. By this it doth appeare, that the Spanyards will not yet approue that ſucceſſion; and it is thought, that Don Gonzales doth expect an anſwer out of Spayne, and the pleaſure of the emperor. Monſieur d'Auò, the French ambaſſador, hath againe this weeke preſſed theſe ſigniori very hard to declare themſelfes in fauor of Niuers, now duke of Mantoua; and monſignior Aguuia, the popes nuntio, hath ſeconded him very ſtrongly: but the ſenate is reſolued to ſtand neutrall, and will not make any declaration, vntill they ſhall ſee greater princes leade the way. Hauing obſerued that the Spanyards haue ſent ſome conſiderable forces into the Cremoneſe, (which prouince doth diuide the Mantouani from Montferrat) they haue likewiſe ſent towards their confine, that waye, thoſe poore and miſerable trouppes which do aduance of their auxiliaryes; and with this they do thinke to haue payed the pope and the French king; alleaging, that it is donne in contemplation of them, to countenance Niuers; but really it is intended for the defence of their owne frontier, which cannot but be expoſed to rauage, if any innouation do arriue: and indeede they are trouppes of no conſideration; and if the Spanyards and the emperor dare to looke this waye, there is not at this preſent in this ſtate any reſiſtance to be made; and the drawing in of auxiliaryes in tyme of neede will be very hard, conſidering the infinite diſguſt that they haue lately giuen to all oltramontani, and eſpecially to thoſe of our religion. If it be true, that the patriarch of Aquileia hath (beſides 80 yeares of age) a double tertian feauer, it will proue morbus complicatus: for that vacancy will be of no leſſe importance, then the death of the duke of Mantoua.

IN the Valtelina and Rhœtia, the French and Spaniſh miniſters do oppoſe dayly one the other, ex diametro; but this difference is obſerued, that the French ambaſſador doth proteſt and ſpeake more freely, and yet the gouernor of Milan doth without brauing do and make to be donne what he liſt. Yet for all this diſcordance in thoſe parts, I do find, that there is a ſtrong vnion of thoſe two crownes: for as in Rome the cardinall Magallotti hath expoſtulated with ſignior Anzolo Contarini, the Venetian ambaſſador, who was in England with ſignior Correro, the protection giuen in this citty vnto Madame de Rohan, a rebell (as he doth ſtyle hir) of the French king; ſo the count d'Oliuarez hath paſſed an office of the ſame nature with ſignior Mocenigo, the Venetian ambaſſador reſident in Madrid, with this addition, that this ſtate did foment heretiques and rebells of the two crownes, naming the ſtates of the Vnited Prouinces and Madame de Rohan. In Spayne a partito is contracted with the Genoeſi, for 800000 crownes; of which 300000 are aſſigned for the ſtate of Milan. By this it may be imagined, that they do intend ſome innouation in Italy; and if it do proue ſo, it will turne vs well to account: but I am aduertiſed, that at Liſbone, Cales, St. Lucar, Malaca, and Cartagena, there are great prouiſions making of ſhipping, in which the Hambourghers haue a great parte; and it is ſuſpected, that Spinola is ſent for into Spayne to command that fleete, and that England is aymed at.

ABSTRACT of Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER*'s Letter to Sir* ISAAC WAKE.

BY letters from Denmarke to mee, I underſtand, that that braue king is in good health, and in hart againe; and the nobilitie of the countrie doe behaue themſelues dutifully; and all officers that com doe receiue two monthes pay horſe and foot, and aſſurance for the reſt under the kings hand and ſeale.

THERE hath beene greate worke, and many fayre promiſes made, for the drawing of the king of Sweden to the emperors deuotion: but all is vaine; for hee is really linked with the king of Denmarke, and communi conſilio they doe labour to haue a greate fleet at ſea, and a ſufficient armie for the defence of the countrie. Neither doe I ſee, that the contra-partie can bee able to gett any ſtore of ſhipping to purſue Denmark; and in Holſtein, Makleburgh, Luneburgh, Bremen, biſhoprike of Magdeburgh, Brunſwick, and Brandenburgh, cannot afford them prouiſion for the next yeare: and if it proue true, which I haue receiued out of Poland, there will com noe graine from thence the next yeare; and ſoe the greate townes Lubeck, Bremen, and Hamburgh, will bee forced to barr all exportation of graine out of their townes; and in theſe places aboue-mentioned, there is little or no tillage, the owners hauing loſt all their horſe and beſtiall; and certainly this towne doth begin to miſtruſt, and intends to ſtand upon its owne defence.

THE Imperialliſts haue quartred manie regiments in Pomerland; and from thence they thinke to paſſe into ſome parts of the Baltique ſea.

IN Stode, God bee prayſed, all is well; and my lord generall Morgan, with 3000 Engliſh, 700 Scoch, 500 Duch, all ſound men, wiſh for a froſt; and then they hoope to open the paſſage, which now is ſhutt.

TILLY hath loſt many men in that mariſh country, and is like to looſe more yet. Count Anhalt hath entred Eſtfrezland, with 5000 men, and count Erneſt of Naſſau is in perſon in Embden, where the Eſtats haue a ſtrong garriſon.

1627. ALTHOUGH that Walleſtein went toward Bohemia with greate triumph and victorie, yet hee hath not beene at court with the emperor; which giueth occation to ſuſpect ſom jealouſie.

THE count of Slike, mareſhall of the emperors armie, is wearied, and doth earneſtly deſire to bee diſmiſſed, and for that cauſe was going to Prague; but by the way hee receiued gratiouſe letters from the emperor, where hee is commaunded to take the commaund of 30 thouſand men, and himſelfe abſolutely to haue the commaund of them againſt the ſtate of Venice. The count of Slike hath entreated a baron of my familiar acquaintance to accept one regiment of foot, and 1000 horſe, in that ymployment. I doe keepe him heere yet, hooping the king of Denmark ſhall haue ſom good ymployment for him: for hee hath behaued himſelfe valiantly and honeſtly ſince the beginning of his warrs, and is but lately com from the king; and in regard they eſteemed him to bee in league with the count Slike, they haue lett him paſſe free hither.

THERE is no hoope of peace: they are blinded with pride, and will at once ſubdue all; and then, I truſt, God will ſtirr up ſom unexpected means.

THE emperors ambaſſador, and the king of Spains, doe labour ſtill at Lubeck; and I hoope, to ſmall purpoſe.

Hamburgh, January 5.
ſtilo loci, 1628.

THE emperor hath required of the towne of Hamburgh, to cauſe the Engliſh ambaſſador retire from thence, who hath aduertiſed ſo much into England. Your lordſhip doth decypher Gabor aright: yet the two laſt poynts muſt not bee neglected betwixt the emperor and the Turke concerning the peace; and that other motion of that with Sweden muſt not bee rejected.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

THE French ambaſſador pretending to haue receiued aduice from his maſters owne hand of a victorye gotten vpon the Engliſh, and their expulſion out of the iſle of Rees; hauing two ſhips in port, he cauſed them at high noone to hale off into the channell, and to putt out their waſt-clothes, ancients, flaggs and ſtreamers, as fine as the cytty foiſt; and made on the water a fooliſh vayne glorious tryvmph, ſhooting off all their gunns twice or thrice; which made a great rumor among the Turkes, euery man running to aske what newes: to whom his ſeruants and dependants (diſperſed to that purpoſe in places of moſt concourſe) reported ſuch wonders, that when our anceſtors conquered Paris, their boaſtings were far inferior. I cannot beleeue all they ſay, and ſhow in ſtamp, is true; but admitting it, wiſe men thincke it no great glorye to repell a few Engliſh with the whole force of France, from their owne doores; and to them only it ſeemes ſomewhat, who remember how ſeldome they haue beene able to doe yt; and therfore court it, as a rare example. But this worthy miniſter omitteth nothing of deſpight, and euer comes off with loſs and ſhame; for I inſtantly ſent and complayned to the ſtate of this inſolence, (which was ill taken by the vizier and capten baſſa, before my meſſage arriued; ſo much difference ther is betweene their reſpects of us) who then clapt in cold irons the maſters and gunners; whom their ambaſſador could not gett releaſed, vntill he was enforced to goe in perſon to aske their pardon, where he receiued a ſharpe checke and ſcorne for his vanetye; and though I can doe little other ſeruice, yet I will keepe him vnder during my reſidence. He hath now tryed all his force, and made knowne his weake creditt: and I haue kept my word; for his good Jeſuites are taken in their houſe, and carried to priſon, with their librarye, except his chapleyne, and one hid: where ſome of their bookes haue beene examined, and found dangerous to their liues; but therin their ſuppoſed enemies helped them to avoyd ſcandall, when their protector could not. After much French ſtorme, and threatening to reuenge and kill, this vertuous order is by the mufty and law ſentenced to be baniſhed for euer; and theſe to be ſent vpon a barke with their bookes to Scio, to be deliuered to the caſtellano priſoners, to be ſhipt on the firſt French that departs for Chriſtendome, neuer to returne on perill of forewarned death; and commande-

I told the vizier, that they ſhott not for any victorye, but for joy of a league newe made with the Spaniards their enemies as well as ours.

They were at the water-ſyde to ſhip, and deliuered to two chiauſes, and there ſtayed and carried back to priſon.

ments will preſently follow to all places, to diſpatch their fellowes the ſame way. In this action I haue not beene alone, nor entered into yt without great reaſon; which, by the next poſt, I will at large render his majeſtie; they hauing machinated the death or depoſition of the patriarch, and the ſubuerſion of the Greeke church, and the placing in all the ſees their owne proſelites, bred at Rome. This practice hath beene long contriuing, and now lately eſtabliſhed in a conſiſtorye; the coppy wherof I haue, concurring juſt with their attempt and calumniation: and eyther doubting they could not bring their purpoſe to paſs, in reſpect of my fauour to that oppreſſed church, or for other envye of the French ambaſſador, they reſolued to inuolue me in the buſines; and tooke the occaſion of the Greeke ſtamp brought from England, to lay vpon yt ſuch accuſations, that if my creditt had not beene aboue any ſcandall, I might haue incurred the hazard of the ſoldiers furye, and a ſacke of my houſe, or ſome other worſe concluſion. In this proiect, neyther our nation, nor his majeſties name, were ſpared. But God hath aſſiſted me: Alijs fodiebant puteum; but they are fallen. This baniſhment, long determined, them ſelues haue haſtened and pulled vpon them; and it may proue an occaſion of ſo much diſcontent to our enemies of the houſe of Auſtria, where they are omnipotent, being expreſſly comprehended in one article of their antient treatye, that from thence may ariſe, in the ratification of the peace by the expected ambaſſador, that difficultye which from nothing els we can hope: and therfore his majeſtie wilbe pleaſed to accept, or at leaſt to ſuſpend his cenſure of, this neceſſarye vndertaking.

Made by Gaſpar Gratiano, vayuod of Walachia *, 1617.

*Bugdania.

A BARON of Tranſiluania, left behind the ambaſſador, and a meſſenger of the grand ſignor, are lately diſpatched with ſuch ſharp letters, as were requiſite to withdraw Gabor from his apparent declinations. To whom, notwithſtanding that I beleeue no good of him; yet ſeeing he is proiecting new matter, and that ſome, to find themſelues imployment, would ſeeme to hope, I ſent him this meſſage; that if he had beene enforced to change his wayes by the fault of others, and had not changed his affections, but had a conſtant mynd and deſire to returne to his old friends, that he ſhould write to me freely and reſolutlye into England; where I would be readye to be his faythfull ſollicitor, and ſo to negotiate in his behalfe, that all things paſt ſhould be putt vpon the account of neceſſitye, which is aboue the will of princes. This I thought fitt to doe, not to appeare wholy to reiect, and make him deſperate; but to leaue open a port and poſſibilitye of reconciliation for my ſucceſſor, if perhaps by repentance he may ſeeke to be reſtored to the ſtate of grace.

THE Duch ambaſſador made me a ſtrange propoſition; but becauſe it ariſeth from their agent in Venice, and no other ground, I haue therin applyed my ſelfe to the conſultation of Sir Iſake Wake; who, if that notion haue any foundation, will giue his majeſtie and your lordſhip both account: for he wilbe able to judge, and therin to inſtruct me, whoſe orders I will follow. And though the preſent tymes doe admitt ſcarce a poſſibilitye; ſo I hope, we are not reduced to the neceſſitye of ſeeking yt, which only can warrant yt, vnleſs the example of the moſt chriſtian France, catholicque Aragon, and la ſantiſſima Roma, be more authenticque. Yet certeynly, my lord, it is tyme to oppoſe all witt and ſtrength agaynſt a bitter cupp mingling for us. I know, you are aduiſed from better and nearer hands; yet at this great diſtance I am able to judge, that the enemye mineth vniuerſally at the roote both of our kyngdome and religion, as by many relations from Rome and Spayne it is too apparent; but eſpecially by that vnion propoſed by the marquiſs of Legannes, which hath a deeper ſence then the common pretended defence of the catholicque cauſe: and becauſe all our friends may be entangled in their owne affayres, and that ther is no good catholicque but they who adore the temporall head of Spayne, as well as the vicar of St. Peter, ther is alſo meditated a quarrell agaynſt the ſenate, to reſtore the patriarch of Aquilea to his ancient poſſeſſion in Friuli, as a prince of the empire. Theſe matters may ſeeme farr off; but they all proue a generall reſolution now to purſue the monarchy of Europe.

YOUR lordſhip will pardon me, that I trouble yow with theſe extrauagant diſcourſes, the vices contracted of being long idle abroad. When I ſhall returne to my countrye, my Engliſh brayne will returne to me; and your lordſhip ſhall fynd me a poore, honeſt, playne man, vowed and deuoted to liue and dye

Your Lordſhips.

Conſtantinople, 26. January,
old ſtile, 1627.

To

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

AS I haue ſent your lordſhip the coppy of my letter to my lord Conwey, wherby you will know our occurrents, and what is neceſſarye for your enformation from this place; ſo I haue preſumed to refer him to the cenſure of a new propoſition, made me by the Duch ambaſſador: of which particularly I would be inſtructed from you, and therfore I make it the ſubiect of my diſcourſe.

HE ſhowed me a letter from their ſecretary, reſiding in Venice, which concurred with your lordſhips relation of the treacherye of Gabor, collected from the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh, and ſignior Scultetus: but from them he pretends a counſell to moue the ambaſſador here to make a tryall of the poſſibilitye of reconciling this ſtate with the Perſian; which impediment remoued, to feele whither the grand ſignor might be induced to accept from the confœderates the contribution entended to Gabor, to rayſe his Hungarian frontyre, to make a war and diuerſion upon the emperor. He deſires a preſent anſwere, as if ther were ſome ground for the motion; and therfore the Duch came to me to conſult, and to procure me to aſſiſt him.

FIRST, I demanded, whither he thought the States were acquaynted and would avow the negotiation to be made by the conſent of their allyes. To which he anſwered, That he knew not, but did beleeue, that the prince had ſome inſtruction and ground; and therupon was very earneſt for my concurrence.

I ASKED him, If he ſaw any poſſibilitye of the firſt, conſidering the preſent ſtate of affayres, and the diſgrace receiued before Arzerum: which alſo if it were not accomodated, the other was deſperate. He replyed, That their owne neceſſitye would incline them to hearken to peace; and that we might propound to diſſemble for a tyme, and to leaue Babilon to the ſonne of the kyng of Perſia, as a begh of the grand ſignor, for tribute; and procure the pardon of Abaſa.

WHEN I had heard all his reaſons, I ſhowed him my opinion of the impoſſibility, and our diſgrace to make an ouuerture ſo often refuſed and ſcorned. For eyther the grand ſignor muſt recouer his honor, as well as his land, or endanger to looſe more; and we ſaw the preparations of a new army, and a demonſtration that the young king would goe in perſon. And therfore I deſired him to ualew us rightly, as vnable to make ſo great a change, when we could not uphold what was already on foote; eſpecially when theſe miniſters would eaſely ſent, that we treated our owne intereſt, to draw them out of one warr to plunge them into another. And I conclude, as I did with him, That ther is no other probabilitye nor fruict of negotiation, but to weaken our creditt and confidence with this ſtate.

TO the ſecond part, of offering mony: I preſented to his conſideration, Whither he thought the grand ſignor would accept ſuch a ſumme, as our princes could ſpare, to begin a quarrell, that muſt be maynteyned with 40000 ſoldiers. Secondly, If the couetouſneſs of mony ſhould worke ſo far upon them as to hearken to yt, whither he beleeued they would truſt us without impreſt of a great part; or that we might ſafely truſt them for performance. Laſtly, If they ſhould make a ſhow to begin, how far he preſumed to engage himſelfe, that they would be conſtant for our ſakes.

TO theſe obiections he made little materiall replye, but that ther was no loſs in tryall, which I agreed unto; ſo that he would be the man, who might as well taſt their diſpoſition alone, as in my companye; eſpecially I hauing no warrant to undertake a matter againſt my owne judgement: but that ther was tyme enough to play my part, when he found any diſpoſition to the firſt peace; and that then I would joyne with him, as I ſaw the occaſion encourage me. I beleeue he hath beene practiſing with one man, who euer giues good wordes, upon which it is not ſafe to build. And your lordſhip may pleaſe to ſearch from the ſecretarye, from what ground this propoſition did ſpring, and what anſwere the ambaſſador hath giuen him, which he hath not communicated. Eyther being refuſed, or nouriſhing his owne imaginations, will haue the honor, that I enuye not, alone.

TO the matter it ſelfe, I will deliuer my opinion, That I ſuſpect the Duch himſelfe is the author; hauing often formerly touched that ſtring, to haue an intereſt of the diſpoſition of the mony among theſe miniſters, who without queſtion would be corrupted to take it, promiſe much, and coſen us; and he would be no looſer, wher there can be no account. Beſides, I doubt whither himſelfe beleeues any thing therin; but only to keepe up employment, to write great matters to his maſters; wherby he feedes his creditt, and they are often abuſed: of which I haue modeſtly warned him to take heede, by proiecting vayne hopes, that we did not diſtract and diuert ſafer and ſolider remedies. Thus much, I know, he hath long ſince motioned to the States, to allot 100000 dollers, of the 4 promiſed Gabor to be ſpent here, and therby to haue enforced him. While ther was life, it mought haue done ſomwhat, but no great matter; for the whole empire cryed out for peace, and now to reuiue dead aſhes, wilbe more difficult. And at this tyme I hold it impoſſible ſo ſuddenly to change the ſtreame, as may ſerue our turnes; but if your lordſhip find the neceſſitye of our affayres to want ſuch a nauſeous remedye, to which I feare in the end Germany may be enforced, and that this fancy hath a better foundation then I conceiue, upon your aduice (for it wilbe too late to attend anſwere from England) I will attempt another more probable way; at leaſt, if the murmure be true that we heare, that the ſoldier will not ſtirr, nor follow their emperor into Aſya, wher the bread is deſtroyed, and all prouiſion waſted, and they returned poore, beaten and tyred. Ther is no remedye; they muſt be employed ſome way, or we ſhall ſuffer here: from whence may ariſe a better occaſion of peace, then from our motions. Or, if the war proceede, if it ſo fall out that Arzerum only were taken in, and that rebell vanquiſhed, then their ſpiritt would returne, and the Perſian capitulate; and their hatred and mony would caſt them headlong to reuenge the ſhame of their treatye. The confirmation wherof depends upon the comming of an ambaſſador from the emperor, now upon the way; and if in that any difficulty could be enterpoſed, and that they feared a neceſſitye, this golden offer would facilitate their reſolution; without one of which, it wilbe both diſhonor, and loſs of tyme, to be refuſed. But I will obey ſuch directions as your lordſhip ſhall lay upon me; and I humbly deſire you to giue relation, and your judgement, into England, and to my lord Carleton: for I dare not meddle in it, that comes ſo nakedly recommended.

WE heare, with ſome wonder, that the duke of Sauoy at Turin, and his ambaſſador at Rome, did make joy, and concurre in the French tryumph; and as if fate were agaynſt us, the Duch ambaſſador here, the day of the publication, unſeaſonably celebrated his byrth-night, by a generall feaſt to his nation and Greekes; which I fynd not in the kalender, nor euer formerly by him uſed, when wiſdome would haue loſt that coſt, to auoyd the ſcandall of his friends.

YOUR lordſhip hath not of long tyme remembered my biſhop, whom if I could place in Scio, we ſhould be ſtrong agaynſt the 66e. I doubt the prince cardinall doth not thinke of flyes, unleſs they buzze in his eares, and he hath no ſollicitor. If it may be done without your lordſhips too great engagement, it will content many, and fortefye our partye: if not, I deſire not to make it your trouble.

I HAUE receiued all your mentioned former and later letters, with the encloſed from my lord Carleton; to whom I write not, for uncerteyntye of his reſidence. The laſt are dated 20. Nouemb. 4 and 11 December; for all which, and infinite other undeſerued fauours, I will for euer reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, 26. January,
old ſtile, 1627.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

THE Duch ambaſſador hath not ſpoken to me at all of his laſt motion; but hauing great confidence with the vizier, and a fitt occaſion of ſpeech of Gabor, and the mony promiſed him from the league, (which once himſelfe had wiſhed to haue beene giuen to the grand ſignor) I asked him, whither he thought it would haue preuayled to haue maynteyned the war againſt the emperor; ſhowing him the great encreaſe of the power of the enemye by the danger of the kyng of Denmarke, and the certeyntye of a quarrell for Hungarye, whenſoeuer the houſe of Auſtria eyther had peace or victorye ouer thoſe that now alone oppoſed them, by whoſe armes only this ſtate enioyed a temporall and rotten peace; but, joyned with them, might preuent euery feare and perill. He anſwered me with great ingenuitye, That he could 1627. not ſay nor reſolue any thing, as the minds of men were then enclined, and the affaires of Aſya had preſſed them: that they were not aſſured of the conſtancye of thoſe princes, whoſe names only were brought vnto them: and that the deceipts of Gabor had more ſhaken their reſolution, by motions that neuer tooke effect, then if ther had beene no intimation of them; eſpecially, that he had promiſed in the names of the kings of Denmarke and Suedeland, the comming of ambaſſadors from them to the port, to enter league with the grand ſignor, and to bynd themſelues to proſecute the war: to which end letters and ſafe conducts were written to them; of which receiuing no anſwere, nor ſeing any realitye, they doubted that they might be deceiued, and left alone; and therfore had haſtened to prouide firſt for themſelues. In concluſion he told me, That they were aduiſed, how the emperor, puffed vp with proſperitye, did ſtand highly vpon ſome vndecided difference in the treatye; and that his ambaſſador, now on the way, had order to make new and inſolent demands; which if it were true, the grand ſignor was not in that neceſſitye to ſupport all things; but would rather hazard a warr then his honor; and then ther would be fitt tyme to ſpeake of this matter. In the meane while, that he did attend a ſpeedy anſwere from the meſſenger ſent to Gabor, (mentioned in my letter to my lord Conwey) who was inſtructed to explore that prince, and the enclination of his people: and that according to the occaſions we might hereafter confer; which if they ſo fell out, that they had juſt cauſe of breach, if then any ouuerture or concurrence were propounded from thoſe partes, that might be well grounded, he doubted not it would be willingly heard and embraced: but (rebus ſic ſtantibus) I found him deafe to any charme; and my opinion is, they will enterteyne euery ſpeech; but vntill ſome amendment in Aſya, upon which all their intentions are bent, they will not aduenture any trouble on the other ſyde, vnleſs they be enforced: of which alſo there is ſome murmure, that Morteſa baſſa of Buda is no better than a rebell; which if it proue true, certeynly he doth depend and is debauched by the emperor and Gabor; and from thence may ariſe an occaſion, which will ſett all on fire. But theſe coniectures are too chimical, and ſo far off, that it is a diſaduantage to enterteyne thought or hope of them. Vpon God, our good cauſe, and our owne courage, it is both more ſafe and noble to depend; for I haue no fayth in any thing ab Oriente, wher we expect thoſe mutations, the contagion wherof wilbe dangerous, the grand ſignor hauing ſowed a diuiſion betweene the Janitzaries and Spachies, that may breake out into a ſtorme within the cytty; and many are of opinion, that at the beſt the ſoldiers will not this ſummer goe to the war.

HOW it paſſeth with the Jeſuites, your lordſhip will ſee by the encloſed. They are burrs hardly to be pulled off; but for the ſtiffnes of the contention, to me they are the more ſuſpected. I hope they ſhall little trouble the poore Greeke church hereafter, who hath ſpent, and is endepted by their practices 120000 dollers; beſides this laſt inſurrection againſt the ſtamp, the life of the patriarch, and my honor.

FARTHER I haue not to trouble your lordſhip; but heartely wiſhing yow all true happines, I reſt deuotedly

Conſtantinople, 1.
Feb. 1627.

Your Lordſhips.

To the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

CONCERNING the motion made me by the Duch ambaſſador, mentioned in my laſt, I will preſume to refer your lordſhip, as I then did, to Sir Iſake Wake; who, I doubt not, will rightly cenſure it. All occaſion of negotiation is relapſed with Gabor, untill the comming of the emperors ambaſſador, expected at Eaſter; ſo that I haue little matter wherwith to trouble his majeſtie, or your lordſhip.

ONLY I will defile a little paper with the relation of the Jeſuites, being yet under the ſentence of baniſhment, who were brought to the water ſyde to be ſhipt away; but there by the craft of a falſe cuſtomer ſtayd, and returned to priſon. The French ambaſſador hath uſed all meanes to haue them reſtored to their church; wherin as yet he hath beene reiected. To ſaue his honor, (which he will needes prodigally intereſt with them) he was offered to take them into his owne power, 1627. upon condition to ſend them away: but his pride and ſtomacke keepes the poore men in cold weather, in collars of iron, expoſing them to a danger, quod nec inimici viderentur optaſſe; and tranſported with his rage, hath, as I ſuppoſe, too far engaged his maſters name: for hoping by brauados to ouercome theſe miniſters, (who at this tyme would unwillingly loſe any friends) he hath ſhowed the mufti and chimacham letters, as he pretends, from the kyng, written by propheſye, or for preuention, that if at any tyme any iniurye were done to the Jeſuites, or they baniſhed the countrye, that he alſo ſhould take his leaue, and depart with them, which he was ready to doe. Being asked for what cauſe or occaſion the kyng ſuſpected or foreſaw that they might be called in queſtion; he anſwered, That he knew the Engliſh ambaſſador and the baylo were their enemies, and might rayſe ſome accuſations for enuye, or other reſpects of contrarietye. When many juſt reaſons were ſhowed him mildely, of the reſolution taken to ſend away men that apparently diſturbed the quiett of the cittye, were offenſiue to the people, and ſuſpected of worſe; and that nothing would content him, but their re-eſtabliſhment in their monaſterie; or els that he would, according to his order, be gone with them; it was replyed, That the grand ſignor did eſteeme the French kyng an ancient and a good friend, and could not beleeue that his ametye depended upon the neceſſitye of protecting traytors here by force, and agaynſt the rule of buon governo; and that therfore he ſhould better aduiſe himſelfe: if he would ſtay, and comport himſelfe like an ambaſſador, as became him, he ſhould be welcome, and haue all fitt reſpects borne him; but if he pretended right to maynteyne ſuppoſed enemies, and that his kyngs friendſhip did hang upon ſo ſlender a thread, the ports were open, and he might depart ſafe when he pleaſed; and that they would write to his maſter the true eſtate of the buſines, not doubting both to giue and receiue ſatisfaction.

THE ambaſſador, mentis inops with this unexpected anſwere, hath ſealed his merchants warehouſes, and interdicted trade; making all ſhow, that he wilbe the Jeſuites martyr, and ſacrifice to them the peace and commerce of his country: but wiſe men thinke, that he hath entangled himſelfe in his owne netts; and that hauing exceeded his commiſſion, out of blind zeale, that he hath now no other hope to auoyd his owne ſhame, but that this ſtate will relent, rather then ſuffer his departure; and ther are ſome enclined to beare with his peruerſnes, which in the end may preuayle. He troubles all ports: ſome, weary of his importunitye, rather wiſh, then aſſiſt in an accomodation; and whither his facing, or their conſtancye, will gett the victorye, I cannot judge; but reaſon induceth me to thincke, that euery man wilbe maſter in his owne houſe. Howſoeuer it proue, he hath put all to hazard; and doth repent him to haue begunn a quarrell, that hath drawne him to deſperate defences, and a narrow ſtreight: ſo that eyther he muſt goe away, (which is not like to be warranted) or ſitt downe in diſgrace, and acknowledge his fumo. It were uery ſtrange, if ſuch care were taken of 5 brouillons, to leaue an ancient profitable traficque: but we are confident, that his impudence is deriued and nouriſhed from Rome; from whence, by ſuch like actions, he hath upheld his broken creditt agaynſt his maſters honor, and all reaſon of ſtate, if France were gouerned by their owne old true maximes. And when he ſhall offer to goe, he will find himſelfe clogged with 120000 dollers debt; halfe to our poore nation, owing ſeauen yeares, to the undoing of two good merchants, and the hinderance of many others: of which he hath no more ſence, then they that teach, Defraudare hæreticos pia eſt fraus. The account I promiſed to ſend his majeſtie of this contention, I defer untill I ſee the concluſion; and though they haue beene well chaſtiſed, yet unleſs they are extinct, they will not be leſs noyſome and dangerous.

A FLEMISH ſhip, under the protection of the Duch ambaſſador, and by priuat contract made with the Genoueſes, is ſtayd at Milo, an iſland in the Arches: the goods and merchants are of Genoa, but he pretends them to be Hollanders. It is an ill ſeruice, ſecrettly to fauor and deffend theſe, ſo neare allyed to ours and his enemies, and to bring them in to a trade to lade corne; which was forbidden by me to the Engliſh, at the inſtance of the Venice bailo, two yeares ſince, as prejudiciall to the publicque. His end is only to gett a little conſolage for himſelfe, and I ſuppoſe his maſters would neither approue nor permitt it. They were diſcouered by a mutinye. Hauing murthered the maſter, and the merchant a Genoeſe, and ſome 1627. others; they were forced into harbor, wher being ſuſpected for enemies, they were areſted; and the newes arriued to the French ambaſſador, he reuealed and entitled the grand ſignor to the lading, as of rebells to his maſter; hoping by that bitt to buy a friend, which hath enraged the Duch: but the matter being ſuch, openly he dares not take notice. But for this accident, the trade had proceeded: what now it will doe, I know not.

Euery day I looke out for my releefe, that I may kyſs his majeſties feete, for whoſe happines I will pray: wherin I haue as great a right, as they that are moſt ſucceſsfull to doe him profitable ſeruice. To his gratious benignitye I ſubmitt what I haue done; and my ſelfe to your honorable and undeſerued patronage, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{19}$.
Feb. 1627.

From Sir Isaac Wake: With Abſtracts of three to Lord Carleton, Jan. 28. 31. and Feb. 4. Mr. Hales's from Turin, Feb. 2. Lord Carleton's, Jan. 10. 14. 28. (with Propoſitions incloſed) and Febr. 7. and Advices from Paris, January 21.

My very good Lord,

My two laſt to your lordſhip (which went togither) were dated the 15. and 22. of January, ſtilo novo. The firſt was fraighted with many papers, as you ſee by the duplicate here incloſed. The ſecond did accuſe the receipt of your lordſhips, dated the $\frac{1}{11}$. of December. Since that time, I haue had nothing from your lordſhip, nor for you; ſo that I might well haue forborne to haue troubled you at this preſent, if my duty did not bind me to preſent my ſeruice unto you by euery ordinary. The abſtracts of my two laſt diſpatches to my lord Conway will tell you what hath paſſed here ſince my laſt. Yeſterday I did not write, becauſe I was to goe into the college, where I haue diſcharged my ſelfe of ſuch commiſſions as his majeſtie had layed uppon mee. Sir Robert Amſtruthers letter will ſhew you, how things ſtand in Germany; my lord Carletons, what they do at the Haghe; and Cheſtermans, what hath paſſed in England: unto which I will adde one from Mr. Hales, concerning the affaires of Sauoye; and a paper of priuate auuiſi, touching the ſtate of Mantoua. Here incloſed you will finde one from hir majeſtie of Bohemia; and I will reſt

Venice, 12. February,
ſtilo nouo, 1628.

Your Lordſhips faithfull frend and ſeruant to command,

I. Wake.

At this inſtant I receaue one from your lordſhip of the $\frac{18}{28}$. of December, of which I haue ſeen nothing but the date; being ſurpriſed with a uiſit of the newe Holland ambaſſador. By the next, God willing, your lordſhip ſhall heare more at large from mee; and I will be carefull to ſend away your incloſed, according to their directions.

ABSTRACT of Sir Isaac Wake's Letter to my Lord Viſcount Conway.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

Since my laſt to your lordſhip of the $\frac{11}{21}$. of this month, theſe parts haue afforded little worthy the troubling your lordſhip withall. The duke of Niuers arriued at Mantoua (as was formerly aduertiſed) vppon the 16. of January, ſtilo novo. Vppon the 17. he went to the domo, or cathedrall church; where, after the ſinging of Te Deum laudamus, he receaued the oath of alleageance of his ſubjects there preſent; and he doth now attend to fortify the towne, to reinforce his guards, and to make a deſcription of all his ſubjects capable to beare armes. He did paſſe through this ſtate incognito, and did refuſe to receaue any incounter or regalo; although it was offered him in ſundry places, eſpecially at Breſcia: onely he did accept a coach to cary him vnto his owne ſtate, and a conuoy of ſome caualieri, who did accompany him thither, to ſecure his perſon. Although his right to that ſucceſſion be helde to be vnqueſtionable, yet hath Don Ferrante Gonzaga, marquis of Guaſtalla, interpoſed a proteſt; wherein he doth pretend, that Niuers is to be excluded for two reaſons: firſt, as not being borne in Italy, and, ſecondly, as borne of a mother deſcended from hereticall parents. His deſyre is, that theſe two poynts may be decided by the Imperiall counſell or chamber; and that, lite pendente, that ſtate may reſt depoſitated either in his hands, as being the Imperiall commiſſary in Italy, or in the hands of the king of Spayne. What will be the iſſue, time will ſhew vs; and vntill the currier do returne out of Spayne, queſtionleſſe, here will be no innouation: for although Don Gonzales do dayly ſend troupes towards that confine, and fortify the bridge that he hath caſt ouer the Po; yet hath he not yet attempted any act of hoſtility.

THE heate of the duke of Savoye is much rellented, vppon the ſudaine ſince the returne of the biſhop of Mondoni from Mantoua, and the arriuall of ſignior Gaſſine; whom the young prince and princeſſe ſent to Turin, to preſent their humble duty and ſeruice to the duke of Sauoye, and to the infanta Margarita. Now it is generally thought, that another mariage will inſue betwixt the newe duke of Mantoua and the infanta Margarita, daughter of Sauoye, and ducheſſe dowager of Mantoua, mother to the princeſſe Maria, whom the prince of Mantoua hath maried; for although the duke of Sauoye did ſeeme at firſt to be angry, yet when he may by ſuch a match accommodate all his differences with the howſe of Mantoua, it is not to be thought that he will refuſe it. If thoſe two howſes do joyne after that manner, then wee are not like to ſee any innouation in Italy, for that occaſion; but wee muſt expect to ſee what will become of the patriarch of Aquileia, who receaued the oglio ſanto two dayes ſince, and doth now laborare in extremis.

THE pope hath at this preſent put a compliment vppon this ſtate, not vnworthy the relating: When Giorgio Cornaro did lately fly for the aſſaſſinament attempted vppon the caualier Zen, he went directly to Ferrara; where the cardinal Sacchetti, legate of that prouince, did receaue him with extraordinary accueil; ſending out coaches to meete him, trouppes of horſe to conuoye him, lodging him in the pallace, giuing him guards to ſecure his perſon, and permitting him and his followers the vſe of any forbidden weapons, declaring him verbo & opere to be bene merito della chieſa, for hauing killed (as was then ſuppoſed) an enimy of eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction, and one that did preſume to reforme ſpirituall perſons: but when the newes came to Rome, that Zen was not dead, and that the ſtate did take this inſolency to hart, the pope, who did deſyre to haue this ſtate concurre with him in the protection of the newe duke of Mantoua, did write a breuet to Ferrara, and to all his miniſters, to baniſh Giorgio Cornaro out of his dominions, and not to giue him any countenance, protection, or aſſiſtance; ſo that he was inforced to ſteale out of Ferrara by night, and where he is now, is not yet knowen. Yeſterday a marble ſtone was affixed vnto the wall of the pallace in the place where Zen was aſſalted, with an inſcription, relating all the circumſtances of that aſſaſſinate; which is ſuch a a mortification to the good olde duke, that he doth not dare to ſtirre out of his chamber, for feare of meeting with ſuch trophes of his ſonnes obliquityes.

THE patriarch of Aquileia is now dead in good earneſt; and wee ſhall ſhortly ſee how the pope will cary himſelfe in that buſineſſe. I will not prognoſticate, but aduertiſe as I ſhall be informed. It is a matter of as great importance, as that of Mantoua; and doth proue morbus complicatus for Italye.

Venice, 28. January,
ſtilo nouo, 1628.

Duplicate of Sir ISAAC WAKE's LETTER to my Lord CONWAY.

Right Honnorable, my uery good Lord,

BY three former diſpatches of this date, and the papers adjoyned unto them, your lordſhip will haue ſeene how much hath bin ſaid here to litle purpoſe; and that, notwithſtanding all the preſſing arguments that haue bin uſed, it hath not bin poſſible to draw any categoricall anſwer from this ſtate, who, by circuler winding in a laborinth of cerimoniall compliments, haue really rejected the propoſition of the marquis di Baden, tacitely excluded the faire offers and reaſonable demandes of the 1627. king of Denmarke, and ſilently buried the ouuertures made concerneing Gabor. Notwithſtanding that the miniſters originally employed in theſe negotiations from the aboue-named princes, do flatter themſelues with a conceit, that ſomething may be hoped for hereafter from this ſtate ; I, for my part, haue not ſuch a latitude of faith, as to beleeue much, or promiſe any thing ; for, as they are uery ſtreight handled in matter of money, ſo I do find, that they haue long ſince reſolued not to intereſt themſelues uiſibly in the affaires of Germany. This did appeare firſt to my lord duke of Buckingham his grace, when he was at the Haghe ; where this ſtate, being inuited to enter into that confederation, did, by their ambaſſador, come as neere to the point in wordes as could be; but, in effect, concluded nothing. Secondly, I did find it the laſt yeare at Turin, where by order from your lordſhip I did renew the motion to their ambaſſador, and to the duke of Sauoye ; but the reſolution being fairely by them poſted of to Paris, there it was fowlly buried in the tombe of a ſhamefull peace concluded concerning the Valteline. And, laſtly, it is euidently confirmed here by their giuing no anſwer to the king of Denmark, who hath made ſo noble an offer of allyance ; and not drawne one word from this ſtate, tending to that purpoſe. All that can be ſaid, is this ; that as they are wary and cautelous, ſo they are prudent and wiſe ; and therefore they cannot but foreſee, that if the emperor do get the vpper hand in Germany, either by force of armes, or by a treaty of peace, they will here haue neede of good and potent frends to diuert the ſtorme, which will aſſuredly fall uppon them in the firſt place. In which regard it is certaine, that they do really and cordially wiſh all proſperous ſucceſſe unto the armes of his majeſtie, and of his frends ; but flattering themſelues with an imagination, that the rupture betwixt England and Spaine cannot be ſodered in haſt, and that they may liue at their eaſe, and looke on as long as our warres do laſt, they do reſolue to ſpare their purſe for a better occaſion, and to remaine ſpectators untill neceſſity ſhould draw them to be actors. Your onely way left to ſound them to the bottom, is to let them know roundly, and in the language of our fathers, that his majeſtie did expect for himſelfe, and promiſe unto his frends, better ſatisfaction than hee hath hitherto receiued from the league in generall, or this ſtate in this particular, in regard that as they did all concurre in perſwading his majeſtie to breake with Spaine, ſo they haue ſince all of them falne off, and caſt the whole waight uppon his majeſtie and his frends, without making good the diuerſions promiſed to be continued here in Italy, or contributing any thing towardes the aſſiſtance of thoſe in Germany, who haue undertaken the protection of the common liberty. That their alleguation of hauing diuerted the forces of the emperor, by drawing a great army into the ſtate of Millan, which they haue counterbalanced by maintaining a potent army on the confines of their ſtate, is not ſo well grounded as they do pretend ; in regard that all this was done before his majeſtie and the king of Denmark were declared : and that they haue ſhamefully abuſed the diuerſions of his majeſtie towards Spaine, and of the king of Denmark in Germany, by accomodating with the common enemy ; but no way hitherto aduantaged our cauſe, which they do plainely and directly betray, by untimely diſarming here, where they haue already diſmiſſed and licenſed all the oltramontani, (wherof three thouſand are caſt this weeke) and by that meanes left the Spaniard free, and at liberty to ſend into Germany what forces hee liſt ; there being really here no oppoſition at all. Laſtly, That ſeeing there is no hope of continuing any diuerſion in Italy, in regard that the Valteline is uppon the point to be ſurrendered, and that this ſtate doth daily diſarme, his majeſtie cannot but expect ſome reall aſſiſtance for the king of Denmarke, or the marquiſs of Baden, in regard the armies cannot be paid with faire words, and good wiſhes ; and if hee ſhall ſee the common cauſe abandoned by thoſe who haue as much intereſt therein as hee, hee ſhalbe enforced to prouide for himſelfe and his frends, and may perhaps make a better peace then they here haue done for themſelues. If this language be uſed to their ambaſſador there, in ſuch ſort that they may know, that his majeſtie is well enformed of all their proceedings, and that hee doth mark all their chaſes, perhaps I may hereafter (if I receiue any order to ſpeake here to the ſame purpoſe) draw from them ſome better declaration, then hitherto they haue made ; and this wilbe gained thereby, that wee ſhall the ſooner knowe what to truſt unto. Before my departure from Turin, the duke of Sauoye did tempt mee diuerſe times, to know whither his majeſtie would be pleaſed to giue eare unto faire ouuertures of peace with Spaine ;

and hee doth ſtill continue to preſſe that point; which being contrary to his genious, 1627. doth make mee beleeue, that he doth know there is no good to be expected for the common cauſe from the league. His opinion is, that if his majeſtie would treate in time, Spaine would come to reaſon; and France would not be ſo inſolent, as they do ſhew themſelues daily. This ſtate doth ſpeake a language very different; for they ſtill applaude the generous reſolution of his majeſtie, and his frends and allies, and encouradge them to continue and proceede: but by their hauing cooperated nothing, it may be ſuſpected, that they do care onely for themſelues; wheras, on the contrary, the duke was the firſt that did begin a diuerſion with the Genoeſi, and is ſtill ready to continue, if he had meanes; and therefore it may be thought, that hee doth ſpeake as a true frend. So, &c.

Venice, $\frac{21}{31}$. January, 1627.

ABSTRACT of Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to the Lord Viſcount CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

THE affaires of Italy are yet ſo vncertaine, that it is hard to ſaye, whither they are likely to ſettle or to be imbroyled. The courier ſent vnto Spayne is not yet returned, and vntill he do arriue, nothing will be innouated. Hitherto the Mantouani do ſing, Beati poſſidentes; but if the Spanyards ſhall reſolue to queſtion that ſucceſſion, and vndertake the protection of the howſe of Guaſtalla, as things ſtand in Italy at this preſent, they will be able to do what they liſt, before any oppoſition be made: for none is armed to any purpoſe but they, and they do dayly renforce their army vnder a pretence of ſending it into Germany; but what their true intention is, none doth yet knowe. Now this ſtate doth ſee and acknowledge, that they committed an error the laſt yeare, in diſarming ſo haſtily; for if they ſhould chance to haue neede of auxiliaryes, they will coſt deare, and hardly be found.

MONSIGNIEUR Grimani, patriarch of Aquileia, dyed in this towne vppon the 28. of Jan. the day that my laſt diſpatch was dated; and now they are here very buſy in eſtabliſhing that ſucceſſion, wherein already ſome difficultyes do appeare, which will not eaſyly be ſurmounted. Grimani did, during his life, with the conſent of the ſenate, name monſignieur Gradenigo, biſhop of Feltre, for his coadjutor, according vnto the vſuall ſtyle, ſede vacante. The ſenate ſhould name and preſent vnto the pope the coadjutor and three others, and vſually the pope is to confirme the coadjutor; but now he hath very cunningly taken his aduantage, and aſſaſſinated the ſenate with a ſhew of courteſye: for the day after the death of Grimani, the nontio, going into the college, did declare, That although the pope had hitherto refuſed to publiſh his confirmation of Gradenigo for feare of diſpleaſing the emperor, who had importuned him to confirme a Dutchman, named by him in vertue of his pretentions; yet he had ſent hither his bulles in fauor of Grandenigo, euer ſince March laſt paſt, with order that they ſhould not be publiſhed vntill after the death of Grimani. As ſoone as he came out of the college, he ſent for Gradenigo, and tolde him, That the pope had beene pleaſed to confirme him in that ſeate, and that he had diſpatched his bulles in March laſt, which he did preſent and exhibit vnto Gradenigo. This exceſſe of courteſye did breede a little ſuſpition in Gradenigo, who did deſyre leaue to goe firſt into the college, and know the pleaſure of the prince, before he did receaue the bulles; but the nuntio telling him, That it was needleſſe, in regard that he had that morning acquainted the prince with this act of the popes, and receaued from him not onely approbation, but thankes, Gradenigo accepted of the bulles, and departed. The ſenate, ſending immediately for thoſe bulles, did find, that vnder a ſhew of frendſhip the pope had betrayed them: for they are not conceaued ſtilo Veneto, but ſtilo Romanæ curiæ; and inſteede of confirmiamo, he doth write eleggiamo, making it an act of his owne, without any imaginall reference to the ſtate. Now all the ſtipendiated theologues, and conſultori di ſtato, are ſet in worke, to ſeeke a way how to come out of this labyrinth; and they do find it a hard taske: for if the ſtate do reject thoſe bulles, as not running in forma debita, it is to be feared, that the pope, to reuenge himſelfe vppon them, may confirme the Dutchman named by the emperor; and if they do accept of them in this forme, 1627. they do looſe their jus patronatus for euer; and when Gradenigo ſhall dye, the pope may name whom he liſt, whither he be Venetian, or not.

THEY write from Rome, that a treaty of mariage betwixt the cardinal of Sauoye and the infanta of Spayne is ſo farre aduanced, that it is vppon the point of being concluded. It doth appeare, that he hath taken his leaue of Rome, in that he hath reſigned his pallace vnto the ſigniori Vrſini, and recalled all his ſeruants, whom he had left behind; but Mr. Hales, my ſecretary at Turin, doth write nothing of this mariage, although of late he hath ſtill aduertiſed, that the duke did apparently incline towards Spayne, and that the miniſters of France did ſtrongly ſuſpect him.

SIR Robert Anſtruther doth write vnto mee this weeke from Hambourg, that the emperor doth intend ere long to ſend colonel Slicke to viſit the Venetians with 30000 men. If it do proue true, theſe ſigniori may perhaps repent their not hauing aſſiſted their friends in due tyme; and if the emperor had a purpoſe before the death of the patriarch of Aquileia, it may very well be, that when he ſhall heare of this vacancye, he will do it in good earneſt: for he doth ſtrongly pretend vnto the jus patronatus of that patriarchat, in regard that a greate part of the reuenue and juriſdiction is within his dominions.

Venice, February 4.
ſtilo nouo, 1628.

COPIE of ANTONY HALES his Diſpatche unto my Lord CONWAY, in Turin.

Right Honorable, my uery ſinguler good Lord,

IN the yeare 1624. the duke of Sauoy hauing diſpatcht the count Paſero (at that time ſecretary unto the prince of Piemont, and now at preſent one of our ſecretaryes of ſtate) unto Mantoua, to accommodate the differences betwixt his highneſs and the duke, he brought from thence a ſtipulation of theſe enſuing articles: firſt, That the duke of Mantoua (Ferdinand then rayning) was content to disburſe 300000 dollers, for the dowry of Donna Bianca. 2. To make good other 300000 dollers of gould, for the dowry of the infanta Margarita, (daughter unto the duke of Sauoy) 3. 200000 dollers he did offer to giue in dowry with the princeſſe Maria of Mantoua, (now maried unto the duke de Rhethelois) and to offer hir to be maried unto the prince Philibert of Sauoy, at that time vice-king of Sicilia. 4. For ſecuring of this ſumme of 800000 dollers, he did bind and oblige the Genoueſe, the cittie and territory of Alba, and the towne of San Damion, places confyning with Piemont. 5. That as long as this ſumme ſhould remayne unpayed, he was to paye $2\frac{1}{2}$. in the hundred for intereſt; and, as ſatisfaction, the aboue places to be ſurrendred. 6. That as prince Philibert ſhould marry the princeſſe Maria, ſo one of thoſe infante here (daughters unto the duke of Sauoy) ſhould be giuen for wife, either unto Don Vincenzo, (the duke of Mantoua, lately deceaſed) if in caſe they could procure a diuorce betwixt him and the princeſſe of Buozzolo, or with whome Ferdinand ſhould declare to be lawfull heire of that dutchye, after the death of himſelfe and brother, if they ſhould dye without heyres males. The French ambaſſador, monſieur de Sanchemont, imagining that the reuiuing of the abouesayd treaty might induce the duke of Sauoy unto an accommodation, did from Mantoua diſpatch hither monſieur Saberan (a French gentleman, and one that had ſerued this prince as colonel in the laſt warre) with commiſſion to take upp againe the thread and theame of that negotiation. In conformity of which, (at his arriuall here uppon the $\frac{13}{23}$. of January laſt paſt, uppon which day, in company with ſignior Marini the French ambaſſador reſyding in this court, he had audience) hauing by his beſt and powerfulleſt offices diſpoſed the duke of Sauoy to giue eare unto this renewed treaty, his highneſs was pleaſed, contrary to their expectations, to giue them a plaine negatiue, ſaying, That he would neuer haue abated ſo muche of the two dowres of Donna Bianca and the infanta Margarita, if he had not hoped to eaſe himſelfe, by taking the princeſſe Maria of Mantoua into his houſe; and therefore, ſeeing they haue both fayled in the principall point of prince Philibert, and would not conſent to place that treaty uppon the head of the prince cardinal of Sauoy, and that all the cheiſe articles are in a manner cleane altered, he did deſire to be pardoned, if he did not giue his eare unto that ouuerture, proteſting 1627.

unto the ſayde French ambaſſador and Saberan, that if monſieur di Niuers did not addreſſe himſelfe ſpeedily to giue ſatisfaction unto that which was juſtly required, he would not, nor could not, anie longer haue patience, but would adhere unto that party, from whence he did not doubt to recouer all manner of content.

I HAUE obſerued, that in all the diſcourſes which the duke of Sauoy doth hould at Mantoua, when he meeteth with the new duke, he onely calleth him Mr. di Niuers; and if it be true, that his highneſs would not vnderſtand Mr. de Saberan, when he named the duke of Mantoua; but would ſaye, I meane Mr. di Niuers, as it is true that he will not admit audience unto ſignior Gazin, a gentleman diſpatcht from Mantoua, as ambaſſador to this court; and who hath been theſe 20 dayes and better at Caſal in Montferrat, expecting this princes pleaſure (which wee beleeue his highneſs will not declare, untill it ſhall be better decided who ſhall be duke of Mantoua); and that his highneſs further ſayeth, that the French are in election to repent them of their haſty declaration; it may uery well be concluded, that he is extremely ſtung with their affronts; and not being able to promiſe himſelfe anie ſatisfaction from the French, who thinking that they haue the law in their owne hands, will not therefore (carryed uiolently awaye with the paſſion of their animoſity) giue him anie content, his highneſs will be forced to addreſſe himſelfe to make ſome bitter reſcentiments; which, as he was pleaſed to tell me in confidence, he would preſently do, if the deuotion which he beareth unto his majeſtie of Greate Brittaine did not hould his hands, nor ſuffer him to moue, untill he might be informed how it may ſtand with his majeſties pleaſure, of which his highneſs hopeth to haue the honor to be inſtructed at the appearing here of the count of Carliſle, his majeſties extraordinary ambaſſador, whom he doth expect with much impatiencye. Howſoeuer, as yet I cannot ſee anie preparation for action, wee ſtill continuing to follow our treaty and balls. Trew it is, that uppon the complaintes of our caualleric, they do beginne to take them into conſideration, and to prouide payes to remount manie of them; and this (being our principall ſtrength and nerue) will bee, at all times, within one months warning, in readines, and with the disborſing onely of 60000 dollers his higneſs will be able to bring into the feild 3000 good horſe: for our foot, although at preſent we haue but a few trouppes in a readines, yet our officers will be able, at anie ſhort ſummons, to fill up their regiments.

MR. DE ST. MEICHAEL on the $\frac{15}{25}$. of January departed from hence towards Paris; where hauing diſcharged himſelfe of certaine riche preſents, which the princeſſe of Piemont ſendeth unto the French queene hir mother, hee is to paſſe from thence into England, with the like preſents from his highneſs unto the queene of England, his ſiſter. This gentleman is of Languedock: his father is, or hath beene, gouernor of Macon; himſelfe a cadet, and hath ſerued for page vnto madame, both whileſt ſhe liued in the French court, and ſince hir comming hither; and being made eſquire for his good ſeruice, he is now honored with this meſſage. Indeed madame is ſomwhat partially affected unto him, in regard ſhe purpoſeth to marry him unto a Dutche woman, (a little dwarfe) whom ſhe infinitely careſſeth; and unto which motion the gentleman is content, in regard madame hath promiſed to make hir ritche; and uppon this ground ſtandeth his fortune.

VPPON the $\frac{10}{20}$. of the laſt month of Januarye, the duke of Sauoy, as he is entering into the 67. yeare of his age, had two naturall ſonns borne unto him at one birthe, by the marcheſa di Riua, his miſtris; and it is the more remarkable, becauſe that whilſt that lady trauailed with that burthen, the moone likewiſe trauailed in hir fearefull eclipſe.

VPPON the $\frac{16}{26}$. of January, here arriued the popes nontio, monſignior Gallo, biſhop of Ancona: he was mett out of towne by the marquis di Zani, (a prince of this bloud) the dukes guard, and honorably conducted unto his new howſe, prouided for him at the coſt and charges of this prince; and on the $\frac{19}{29}$. he had his firſt audience, accompanied with his highneſſes coaches in good equipage and ſplendor. So, &c.

Turin, the { 23. January, 1627.
{ 2. February, 1628.

From Sir DUDLEY CARLETON to Sir ISAAC WAKE: With the French Ambaſſador's Propoſition at the Haghe, 1627.

My very good Lord,

I HAUE receaued your lordſhips letters of the 17th of December, by which I perceaue one of mine had founde way to your lordſhip, and I hope others haue followed; allthough I cannot boaſt, that I haue equalled your diligence of weekely writing, from which I haue bin hindered by many diuerſions which occurre in this place daily, though there be no great matter of importance; whereof (yf any had bin) I would notwithſtanding haue found time to aduertiſe your lordſhip.

I SEND your lordſhip herewith the copie of a propoſition of the French ambaſſador to the States, which hath turned the truce, that he and I were in, againe into action; and giues me juſt occaſion to inueigh againſt a certain treaty, ſigned by Languerac, the States ambaſſador in France: for ratification whereof he preſſeth in ſuch high language, as you will ſee. But I cannot diſcerne, that he is like to profit any thing with the States and prince of Orange; who not onely perſiſt in their reſolution of diſavowing Languerac, and ſending their ambaſſadors; but are mainely offended at this French propoſition, which they take as a great ſcorne offered unto them.

THE contrary winde detaineth the ambaſſadors appointed for England and France ſtill here, who otherwiſe had bin gon ſix weekes ſince; and the like continuance and opiniaſtreté of tempeſtuous weather and contrary winde hath not bin knowne here, neuer ſince the time that the troopes went for Venice with counte John, who lay windebound in Texel about three monthes.

THE emperor hath lodged certaine of his troopes, being part of Tillies army, in the countie of Eaſt-friſeland, and more are expected, being commanded by the baron of Anhoit, and the counte of Fuſtenbourg; which hath giuen the towne of Emden ſuch alarme, that they preſently ſent unto the States, deſiring them to take the more care of their ſafety, and aſſurance of their towne; who accordingly haue renforced their garriſon in Emden with 5 companies, and ſent the counte Erneſt thither, accompanyed with one of their aſſembly, to ſettle the beſt order poſſible in thoſe affaires. What further meaning the Imperialiſts ſhould haue, beſides quartering for this winter in thoſe parts, doth not yet appeare; but it is conceaued, that what by the great inundations, (the dykes being broken downe by tempeſt and high waters in that prouince) what by the good order that is taken by the States to hinder the tranſportation of victualls thither, and by the ſcarcety hath bin allwayes there, ſince counte Mansfelds being there with his army (the countrey haueing bin uery poorely cultiuated ſince that time); theſe troopes will finde ſo much incommodity, that it will not be poſſible for them to continew long in thoſe parts.

THERE haue bin fiue Spaniſh men of warre, belonging to Dunkerk and Oſtend, caſt away with the late tempeſts, then which greater haue not bin knowne in theſe parts; the artillerie and men of thoſe ſhips ſaued notwithſtanding; this accident haueing happened under the fort of Mardyke, where they were thought to lye out of danger. The States men of warre haue likewiſe ſuffered much, but we do not heare of any that are loſt; but what is befallen his majeſties fleete at Plimmouth, is a loſſe that I cannot valew ſufficiently: the particularities whereof I will not take uppon me to relate, as haueing receaued the news onely by priuate letters, on which I do not build a certain beleefe; but I dowbte not, but your lordſhip will be well aduertiſed hereof out of England: from whence I haue receaued no publick diſpatch ſince the returne of my lord duke of Buckingham.

YOUR lordſhip will receaue herewith a letter of the queen of Bohemia to Sir Thomas Roe, which is commended to your addreſſe; whereunto I beſeeche your lordſhip, when you write unto him, to adde the aſſurance of my ſeruice; which I would do my ſelf, but that I am doubtfull how my letters ſhould finde him; being, as I conceaue, either gon or uppon departure from Conſtantinople; and beſides, I know, I ſhould write nothing more then he hath from your lordſhip, ſo that my aduertiſements would be but ſuperfluities. Thus I commend your lordſhip to Gods holy protection, and reſt Haghe, this 10. of Jan.

1628, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionatly to doe you ſeruice,

D. CARLETON.

The French Ambaſſador's PROPOSITION at the Haghe, 1627.

Meſſieurs,

J'AY receu de la part du roy mon maiſtre, ce primier part de l'an, une lettre ſuivie de ſon dapp^{ta}. qui teſmoigne combien le contenu luy en eſt en cœur; par icelle ſa majeſté m'enjoinct de repreſenter a vos ſeigneuries, qu'eſtant bien aduerty de voſtre conduicte, et de ce que ſe paſſe en voſtre aſſemblée, e que par l'induction des Anglois on faict naiſtre de la difficulté & oppoſition du dernier traitté, faict auecque le ſeigneur de Langeracque, & que les choſes ſe portent juſques à ce poinct, que de mettre en deliberation de reuoquer le dit ambaſſadeur pour l'auoir negotié. Je vous face entendre en ſon nom, que ſa ditte majeſté trouue ce procedé fort eſtrange, appreſtant de preuues particulieres que vos ſeigneuries ont receues de ſa bonne volonté, meſme en ſuite de ſucces aduantagieux que Dieu a donné à ſes armes ſur ſes ennemis; et de vous declarer, que ſa majeſté ne pourra veoir de bonœil vos ambaſſadeurs extraordinaires, ſi auant touttes choſes ils n'apportent à ſa majeſté ſatisfaction ſur les juſtes ſubjects, que vos ſeigneuries ſcauent bien que mon ſouuerain ſeigneur a de s'en plaindre, et ne ſouffrirá que ils luy facent aucunnes nouuelles propoſitions contraires au dit traitté.

OR, meſſieurs, vous ſcauez entr' autres, quels offices j'ay faict depuis peu, et en vain, tant pour empeſcher l'accedant arriué au nauire de monſigneur de Toyras, que pour vous porter à en faire la raiſon au roy, & au vous meſmes, ayant tousjours craint pour vos ſeigneuries, que par de conniuances indignes, et qui equipollent à un adveu, non ſeulement vos ennemis, mais vos meillieurs amis, n'en eiuſent ſubject de dire, & touts les ſeicles avenir de vous reprocher, que voſtre republique, ayant l'empire de la mer, les nauires fabriquez en voſtre pais pour le premier roy de la chreſtienté, et à qui vous deuez la plupart de ce que vous etez, n'ayent non plus trouué de ſeureté dans vos ports, vos ſeigneuries eſtant competamment aduerties du deſſeing de les y ſurprendre, que la fimille de ſon ambaſſadeur par trois jours conſecutifs, non ſeulement dans la ſale de voſtre gouuerneur, ou eſtoient tant de perſonnes de qualité, pour honnorer les rejouiſſances de ſa maiſon, mais auſſy chez voſtre preſidant du conſeil d'eſtat, et ce que poſſe tout, à la veüe de corps de garde de la court d'Hollande, & de feneſtres de voſtre aſſemblée, allant traitter des affaires publique de ſon prince, & de ſa nation. La dernier reſponſe que j'ay receue de ceſte compagnie, et non encores veue au conſeil du roy mon maiſtre lorſque ce dernier du ſeigneur de Baſſe m'a eſté enuoyée, ne donnerá que trop de meſcontentement en France; et vous entendes bien les chefs, ſans que je les deſduiſe tous, dont la ſatisfaction doibt eſtre preallable à l'enuoy de vos ambaſſadeurs, ſi tantoſt que vous les ayez deſtines, comme il eſt à croire, pour rendre au roy mon maiſtre ce qu'il doibt attendre de vos ſeigneuries, et non pour faire effect contraire. Mais affin de ne rendre ce commencement de l'année aigre par multiplicité des plainctes, bien que forcées & neceſſaires, je me retraindray, vous pryant que je puyſſe auoir reſponce, au pluſtoſt pour aduertir le roy mon maiſtre, ainſi que ſa majeſté m'ordonne; et fineray, vous aſſeurant que je ſouhaite ceſte an proſpere aux Prouinces Vnies.

Extract of a Letter from the Lord CARLETON to the Lord CONWAY, of January 14, ſtilo veteri, 1627.

WHILST the Stats extraordinarie ambaſſadors are heere continually ſtayed by contrarietie of winds, Langrac, their reſident in France, hath written hither earneſtly for ratification of his treatie, giuing hoopes of more moony upon the firſt news therof; and this French ambaſſador doth purſue the ſame with threats, hauing beene thrice at audience with the Stats Generall in the ſpace of one weeke, and allways to the ſame purpoſe of his firſt propoſition, whereof I ſend your lordſhip the coppie: and though the Stats anſwere were ſuch as gaue him ſmall comfort, and mee noe diſlike of their intentions in the treaty itſelfe; yet finding a principall part of the effect of that treatie (the furniſhing the French with ſhipping and artillerie in theſe prouinces) to bee ſtill in uſe, as ſoone as a day of deuotion was ouer, (which was held generally through this ſtate on Wedneſday laſt, to thanke for the good ſucceſſe of their

1627. their warrs this laſt yeare, and pray for preſeruation againſt imminent daungers of this new yeare, now entred) I demaunded audience, in which I uſed ſuch ſpeech as your lordſhip will find in the coppie I deliuered the States (as they deſired mee) in writing. Whereunto they made me preſently an anſwere by the mouth of their preſident (Voſberghen, one of their ambaſſadors deſſigned for France); That tuching Langrac's treatie, they wold not ratefie it, nor doe any thing in France prejudiciall to their allyance with his majeſtie; and for ſuch prouiſion of ſhipping as is heere making by the French in their ports, they had the conſideration of the inconuenience before their eys, and the remedy euen then in conſultation, ſoe as they wold ſee to what concernes their owne ſafetie, and bee carfull to doe nothing againſt which his majeſtie ſhold juſtly except, as ſwaruing from their neutralitye. This occationed further diſcourſe of ſhips bought by the French in their townes of North-Holland; which were noe ſooner lanced out, but they immediatly lay in wayte in their hauens, not onely for Engliſh ſhipps, but for Duch which conuayed Engliſh mens goods; of which ſom there were then riding in the Texell, in the Maere, and at Goregſgat, which I told them of; with further information I had of moonys remitted hither out of France, and perſons expreſly ymployed to make new equippages, and to hire as well ſhipps of burthen as others, the French hauing gott by their agents the liſts of all the ſtore of theſe parts, euen to a pinke or a ſhallop; and now moony enough (if all bee true wee heare out of France, of many millions the church, with the popes allowance, doth contribute to the French kings warrs) to purchaſe and carry away all their ſhipping and mariners; to which the ſtate promiſed to looke more narrowly then they haue hitherto doone, and to take order accordingly. For concluſion, they renued unto mee their inſtance tuching his majeſties ſupplying the Engliſh troopes at Stode with moonys and prouiſions, according as this ſtate did the two townes on the other ſide the Elbe, Lukſtat and Grempe; and to prouide (as they heere will doe to their uttermoſt) for the ſecuritie of the riuers and paſſages of thoſe parts, as a matter of ſpetiall moment; wherin his majeſties kingdoms, as well as theſe prouinces, were equally intereſſed. Heerin, I told them, I doubted not, tuching the payment of the Engliſh troopes in Stode, but that good care was taken (howſoeuer heere com daylie complaints from Hamburgh to the contrarie); and for that riuer and the reſt, I was well aſſured, the ymportance of them was ſufficiently apprehended by his majeſtie and the lords of the counſell, as their ambaſſadors would find; who might promiſe themſelfes the better contentment in that part of their negotiation, in caſe theſe parts were not ſtill made as magaſines for his majeſties ennemys: otherways his majeſties ayding to free thoſe riuers for the better paſſage of materialls for ſhipping (which are the cheife commoditys that com that way) ſhold in effect make war upon himſelfe.

THE French agent for ſhipping, Cuſtoſju, a knight of Malta, (who hath long lyen in North-Holland, and at Amſterdam) beeing retorned into France, one Lopus, a Spaniſh Jew of Granada, (who lay a yeare and halfe in the Baſtille, in Vienuille's time, for a Spaniſh ſpie) is heere ymployed in his place; who finds greate fault with the two greate ſhipps, (le Roy, et la Reyne) as beeing of that burthen, that noe port in France is capable of them, but in Britanie onely; and the coſt of them wold haue well built and furniſhed a douzen ſaile fitt for ſeruice: wherby may bee ſeene what the purpoſe of this man is.

THE pulpetts of this towne in the late bidday ſounded loud, as well fornown as afternoone, againſt neglecting the auncient allyance of England, with particular mention of queene Elizabeth, and treating with princes of contrary religion. Aerſſeno, the day before, going betwixt his houſe and the councell chamber, had his heeles carryed up into the ayre with his head to the ground, by too Engliſh grayhounds, tyed together in a leaſe: of which fall he receiued ſo greate hurt, that his journey is ſtayed for 8 or 10 days; and it is much talked of, as an ill omen to his ambaſſage.

Extract of a Letter from the Lord CARLETON to the Lord CONWAY, of January 18. ſtilo veteri, 1627.

HEERE are letters com from Real, (who was ſent to the king of Denmarke) ymporting noe good intelligence betwixt the king and his rix baedt; and as little thankes for the offer made of ayd from hence for the preſeruation of the Sondt, which the king tooke ill, as a reproach of his weakneſſe; whereas hee thinkes himſelfe ſtrong enough in that place for all the world; though by the marques of Badens report, (who lay there 5 weekes a ſhipbord, attending his paſſage hither) and others who know the place well, it is not defenſible againſt any conſiderable force.

IT ſeemes, the king doth ſtill entertaine auncient jealouſies of this ſtate, and perticularly of Amſterdam; of which towne Real beeing an inhabitant, it is thought, hee hath had the worſe welcom in that reſpect; and all the king recommended to him was, that the Stats wold take care on the one ſide of the riuer of Elbe, and recommend the other ſide to his majeſtie; and that betwixt both a fleete ſhold bee there keept, to bridle Hamburgh. Tilly hath written hither to the Stats a complementall letter, importing, that the emperor hauing commaunded him to lodge part of his troopes in Eaſt Freezland, where hee underſtands the Stats hold certaine garriſons, and draw contributions out of the country; hee deſires them to withdraw their men, as a thing which will bee agreeable to the emperor, and to him verie acceptable, in regard of the lodging his ſoldiers with the more commoditie; and the baron of Anhalt, hauing writt too ſeuerall letters to the towne of Embden, to bee furniſhed with victualls and other neceſſaries from thence, by exemple of other townes, (naming Hamburgh, Lubeck and Bremen) which haue beene anſwered ſtill with excuſes, hath ſent the Embdenners a 3d peremptory ſummons upon paine of the emperors high diſpleaſure. Theſe are heere taken but as preparatories or approaches to a further deſigne of making warr upon theſe prouinces, of which heere is greate ſtudy to auoyd any juſt occation; and therfore there is a ciuill and reſpectiue anſwere framing to Tylly, but with that care of the maine buſineſſe, that there is no more daunger ſoe good a towne as Embden ſhold yeld to his complement, then to Anhalts threatnings.

I PRESUME your lordſhip hath continuall letters from Sir Robert Anſtruther, with aduertiſement of the ſtate of our Engliſh troops at Stode; which place, Sir Charles Morgan writes, is ſufficiently prouided of victualls till the end of March; onely hee complaines of want of moony, for encouragment of his ſoldiers, and contentment of the burghers, out of whoſe ſtors the victualls are chiefly furniſhed.

From my Lord CARLETON.

My very goode Lord,

SINCE I ſaluted your lordſhip from hence, ſoone after my arriual, the ſcene of owr action being in a remote iſland, (none of the fortunate) and little more here then common occurrents, ſuch as they were, I ſent from time to time to Sir Iſ. Wake, and through his hands to your lordſhip; who, in exchange, gaue me knowledge continually of your negotiation concerning Gabor; the concluſion wherof (yf it ſo end) I haue theſe two laſt weekes from yourſelf by your letters of the $\frac{6}{16}$. and $\frac{18}{28}$. of 9ber. As farre as I can diſcerne with the beſt of my weake judgment, (wheron you muſt the leſſe relie, becauſe it may be blinded with affection) you haue committed nothing to be blamed, nor omitted any thing to be required in that buſineſſe; and the expoſtulation of thoſe you dealt with, will turne to your aduantage; for where we are to render an account, I ſuppoſe I tolde you in what goode terms you ſtoode, for the eſteeme was had of your indeauours, when I came from thence. And here, in the ſecond place, (for ſo I muſt account it, as long as the next perſon to the king owr gratious maſter makes it happie in her miſfortune) you haue as great a reward as can depend on goode and gratious acceptance; which yf the queen her ſelf did not make knowne enough vnto you in a letter I recommended, three weekes ſince, to Sir Iſ. Wakes conuayance, I will, by one particular, proceeding from her deſire, that after your 13 yeares heathen employments you

1627. may ſpend ſome yeares here, where are all religions. I know not how owr auntient friend, Sir Rob. Killegrew continues affected this way; who, when I left home, was growne ſomewhat colde; and yf he giue it ouer, and you like well of it, I will doe you the very beſt ſeruice I can, as well for my loue to your ſelf, as this queens ſatiſfaction; who of her ſelf, vppon the reading of theſe your laſt letters, ſpake to me of it twice very ſeriouſly and ſadly, aduiſing of the meanes how to effect it. Yf you take this way home, ſhe will ſay as much to you; but whether you will finde me here or in England, I knowe not; for I am not haſtely called home, and I ſee no great vſe of my longer abode here; and therfore haue ſent my nephew expreſly to ſue for my reuocation. He went on Saturday laſt, in companie of the States ambaſſadors, who hauing bin ſtayde theſe ten weekes by contrarietie of windes, and diuers croſſe accidents, meant now to force a paſſage; and yf they are at ſea, (for which they had onely winde enough) they will be ſurely caried into Norway, by tempeſt in theyr very teeth; ſo as we ſee it is not Gods will they ſhould goe on. Meane while, the chiefe ſubject of theyr going (the pacification betwixt the two crownes) ſtands at a ſtay, and the common ennemy doth maruilouſly aduance his greatnes by this breach, which will appeare too euidently to your lordſhip to neede much diſcourſe. How Diogenes like I tumble my tub here, whilſt others manadge the great actions of the world, your lordſhip will ſee by ſuch papers I deſire Sir Iſ. Wake to tranſmit vnto you; from whom I haue receaued all the copies you committed, with your laſt letters, to his conuayance, as likewiſe your letters to the adminiſtrator of Magdeburgh; whoſe comming hether we ſhall now exſpect dayly. Here we haue allready the old marquis of Baden, with one of his ſonnes; and the old count de la Torre (who ſtill entertaines great hopes of Gabor) liues in Freeſeland, nether of theſe hauing giuen or receaued much contentment in Denmarke, where all things are at the loweſt ebbe of deſpaire; but beguin to riſe againe by the neighbourly and princely frendſhip of the king of Swede. When I ſhall tell your lordſhip, I haue not had one line of publique letters out of England, ſince my lord dukes returne, you will not marnayle, I write you nothing from thence. So wiſhing you, with yours, a ſafe returne, I reſt Hagh, this 7th of Feb.

162⅞. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

D. CARLETON.

From the Same, to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My uery good Lord,

I DOE ſtill receaue the fauour from you of weekely letters; which I ſhould more punctually requite, yf here were ſubject for it: but ſo it is, that though this place doth miniſter frequent matter of negotiation for vs who are neighbours, it affordes little of aduertiſment, ſpecially in this winter ſeaſon, which hath bin ſo windie and tempeſtuous, that as nothing at all hath bin done at land, ſo very little hath hapned at ſea, ſaue wracks and ruptures into bankes and dikes, of which theſe parts haue very much ſuffred; and euen now we heare, that the admiral Real, (who was ſent to the king of Denmarke with frendly offers from this ſtate towards the preſeruation of the Sondt) in his returne, was driuen with his ſhip, by the current, in a calme, vppon Schagen (the point of North-jutland); and there ſodainly being taken with a tempeſt, loſt both ſhip and artillerie, and with much difficultie ſaued himſelf and his men from the furie of Walleſtins ſoldiers, quartered therabowts; amongſt which he deuided a chaine, preſented him by the king of Denmarke, wherby he appeaſed them for the preſent, and freede his mariners, which were 80 in number; but himſelf, and ſuch others he had with him, remaine as yet priſoners where he was taken.

THESE tempeſts, being followed by a froſt which ſhut vp owr riuers, haue hetherto hindered the departure of the ambaſſadors deſſigned to the two crownes; and theyr ſtay hath made worke for the French ambaſſador and my ſelf, as by a copie of one of the propoſitions, which accompanied my laſt, you will haue ſeene in part; and by ſuch of mine which goe with theſe, will further appeare to your lordſhip. He purſued his touching the ratification of Langracks treatie with two others, to the ſame effect, but much more minatorie; and here being a general day of faſt and prayer, I made that the eue of my audience, which did not onely ſerue to ſtrengthen the States in theyr reſolution of diſauowing that treatie, but likewiſe cauſed them to looke better then before, into the ſtate of theyr ſhipping and mariners, which permits not the libertie of buying and hyring they haue hetherto giuen; and theruppon they haue taken as goode order as they can, withowt offence to theyr owne ſubjects, whoſe condition will not ſuffer a total reſtraint.

YOUR lordſhip will finde I haue handled an other buſineſſe ſince, concerning owr Eſt-Indian companie, which ſuffers much by the violence of the companie of this countrey in thoſe parts, and ſmall reparation in theſe; to which when I ſhall receaue anſweare, I will aduertiſe your lordſhip.

I HEARE nothing of your ſeruant, of whom you make mention in your letter of the 7th of the laſt; and yf he paſſe not this way, I know not well where he can take paſſage.

IN that letter you excuſe the vſing an other hand; hanc veniam petimuſque damuſque viciſſim; for we ſhall kill owr ſelfs by too much ſitting and writing: and I muſt confeſſe vnto you, were it not that I deſired to correſponde with you, vſing no other hand but my owne, you had heard oftener from me.

THE bando of G. Cornaro was left out of your laſt packet of the 14th; but all other letters and copies came ſafe; and, for want of better ſtuff, I will deſire you to ſend theſe propoſitions to Sir Tho. Roe, in exchange of his conferences and letters.

I AM much more glad of the eſcape of my auntient acquaintance Renier Zen, then I find here Zoranzo to be, who is none of his frends. He lies in of the goute, and for his further affliction, I haue ſent him an extract of a letter from Sir Rob. Amſtrudder; wherby he aduertiſeth, that the count of Slicke, marſhal of the emperors armie, is gone to Prage, to haue the commaund of 30000 men againſt the Venetians; and though I giue ſmall credit therunto, (becauſe the emperor will not beguin new worke, till he haue fully finiſhed what he hath in hand in Denmarke) yet I would not but a little trouble the repoſe of minde, in which I haue obſerued this man to reſt, whilſt the French ambaſſador and my ſelf haue tormented each other. Three of owr ambaſſadors (2 for England, and 1 for France, the other lying lame of a fall) are gon from hence once more, to ſeeke paſſage; but they haue the winde violently contrarie; ſo as there is ſure ſome fatalitie in theyr ſtay. I ſend you herewith a letter from my lord Vere, which you ſhould haue had laſt weeke, yf I could haue written. I pray you, lett monſieur de Candale know, I wiſh his preferment before all his nation. So reſt

Hagh, this 7th of February,
1628, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionatly to ſerue you,

D. CARLETON.

ABSTRACT of a Letter from the Hagh.

THE Stats, for the preſent, ſtudy nothing more then accommodation betweene us and France, it beeing too, too obuiouſe to euery mans underſtanding, how much their and our growing enemy is aduantaged by the breach; and they, in their particular, perplexed how to carry themſelues euenly in a ſtate of nutrality. Their ambaſſadors (for mediation, as is conceiued) haue beene long in readineſſe, Paw and Randwick for England, Fuſtergen and Arſones for France, the deſire of the Stats beeing, that they ſhold arriue at the ſame inſtant; but after two monethes ſtay upon the weather, about a fornight ſince the wind beeing faire, they were croſſed by this miſchance, which occaſioned the loſſe of that opportunitie. Monſ. Arſones, walking in the ſtreete, had his heeles ſtrooke up by two of my lord Crauens doggs coopled togither; and receiuing a verie greate fall, hurt one of his leggs. The other ambaſſador ſtaying 2 or 3 days, in hoope of his recouerie, the Maze was ſoe full of ice, that they cold not gett ouer to the Brill, where their ſhiping lyeth.

MONS. ARSONS is yet verie ill of his legg, and the ambaſſadors for England, going laſt weeke to embarke, are now keept by a contrary wind. The Stats are verie much troubled at theſe croſſe accidents, and the more, becauſe they haue diſcouered in monſ. Arſons au auerſneſſe to the journey, hauing diuerſe tymes offred excuſes which cold not be receiued.

1627. FROM France wee haue, that the king begins to deſpaire of his preuailling uppon Rochell, his worke, called the Stockadoe, to choake up the riuer, being fallen downe. The marquis Spinola is here ſaid to haue beene there, and to haue deliuered his opinion to the queene-mother at Paris, and to the king upon the place it ſelfe, that it is ſoe difficult and tough a worke, as promiſeth noe ſucceſſe. The count de Suſe, and count de Roſſi, both of the relligion, (the latter, as I take it, hath marryed a ſiſter of the duke of Bouillons) are ſaid to bee priſoners in the baſtile.

THE emperor hath lodged a good part of his forces in the lands of Oldenburgh and Embden; and though their bee noe declared hoſtilitie betwixt this ſtate and them, yet are the Stats verie jealouſe of that neighbourhood. They haue reenforced their garriſons at Embden, and the count Erneſt is in thoſe parts, to watch ouer their proceedings: neuertheleſſe, wee are content ſoe farr to temporiſe with them, as to lett them lodg within leſſe then canon ſhott of one of our forts. The count hath ſhott ouer them, to lett them ſee they bee within the mercy of his canon, and hooped hee ſhold haue had commiſſion to force them to diſlodge.

THIS ſtate ſent diuerſe ſhipps into the Sound, but the king of Denmarke is ſaid not to haue receiued them, conceiuing himſelfe ſtrong enough for the guard of that place: but certaine it is, that the admiral, commaunded by one Reall, is caſt away, and hee taken priſoner by Tyllys people; and whether they will underſtand him to bee an enemy in regard of that ymployment of his into the Sound, is doubtfull.

FROM Sir Charles Morgan, who is blocked up in Stoadt, heere is of late noe news; and from thoſe parts the beſt is, that there is a good underſtanding betwixt the king of Denmarke and his ſubjects, and betwixt him and the king of Swede. Wee haue heere the old marquis of Baden, and a yonger ſoone of his, together with a duke of Weimer. The marquis ſaith, that the emperor had laſt yeare 200000 fighting men in the feild, and makes account, this yeare, to haue 250000, being now upon raiſing 50000 men. The marquis is verie cheerfull, and diſcouers ſom hopes of ſomthing to bee doone this ſommer.

Hagh, Febr. 7.
ſtilo nouo.

AVISES de Paris, du 21me Januier, 1628.

LE marquis Spinola arriua Mardi au ſoir, 10me Januier, au logis de l'ambaſſadeur ordinaire d'Eſpagne. Pendant ſon ſejour, il a uiſité les reines, princeſſes & grandes de la court: la reine mere l'a fort careſſé, le peuple de Paris a rempliſt ſon logis par le ueoir. Les Eſpagneux furent eſtonnés de uoir ceſte affluence des bourgeois. Il partiſt la nuict du Vendredi ou Sabmedi, 15me de dit mois. L'on croit qu'il uerra le roy ſur ſon chemin: autres diſoyent, qu'il iroit juſques au camp; mais il ſemble, que ce ſeroit donner trop d'auuantage aux gens qui n'ont beaucoup de bonne uolonté pour la France, ſi non pour s'en accomoder. De Rome l'on deſire fort la ligue catholique; l'on s'efforce de la perſuader aux Francois; mais il y gaigneroit le moins.

HIER on aſſeura, que monſ. Arſones, ambaſſadeur extraordinaire de meſſieurs les Eſtats, eſtoyt à St. Denis. Il y ſera mieux receu qu'il n'euſt eſté il y a ſix ſettemaines; car de la court on eſcrit, que le ſiege ſera long à cauſe de l'obſtination des aſſiegés, de peu de moyen qu'il y a de les preſſer, la mer ayant rompüe partée de la digue commencée. Ilz reçoyent des reſfraiſhements par terre. Il y eſt depuis peu entré de la caualerie au nombre de 50 ou 60 cheuaules. Le bruit a couru, que c'eſtoit monſ. le conte de Lauel; mais depuis il s'eſt recognu, que c'eſt ne pas lui. Ilz ſortent & prennent ſouuent des priſonniers, les maladies & incommodités, trauuaillent fort l'armée de ſorte que les ſoldats, au hazard de la corde s'eſchapent s'ilz peuuent; neantmoins la patience du roy ſert d'exemple à ſupporter tout. Monſ. de Fiat eſtoit comme guery, mais il eſt retombé: il y a enuirons huit ou dix jours, que l'on a tiré de la baſtile monſ. de la Milletiere, & mené à la cour. L'on croit que c'eſt pour ſe ſeruir de luy enuers les Rochelois. Montaigu eſt touſjours à la baſtile. Il y ſont commiſſaires meſſieurs de Bullion & Fouquet: mais il ne ueut reſpondre, ſur ce qu'on luy demande, ains fait des reſponces gaillardes. Monſ. de Cheureuſes eſt de retour, apres auoir arreſté, en apparence le meſcontentement de monſ. de Lorraine, lequel l'on aſſeure auoir deſarmé. Monſ. de Guiſe n'eſtoit pais encores arriué à la rade de St. Martin de Rhé, comme l'on auoit dit : madame ſa mere l'aſſeurá auſſy hier. Il court le bruit, que monſieur le duc de Rohan s'eſt ſaiſy de Vauluert à la ueu de monſieur le prince.

MADAME DE ST. LUC eſté decedée, & madamoiſelle L'Hermitaige, que l'on eſtre la plus belle femme de la France.

L'ON a dit, que l'on donnoit le gouuernement d'Angouleſme à monſieur de Thoiraz, auec 200000 eſcus pour lui aider à payer ſes debtes, & à monſieur de Schomberg le gouuernement de Brettagne.

To the KING: With Narration of JESUITS Practices.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

WHILE I attended your Majeſties gratious order, and the comming of my ſucceſſor to releeue me, being able here doe no profitable ſeruice, and hoping to depart, and leaue this employment peaceably, and without the juſt offence of any; the enuious of the honor of your Majeſties name, and the enemies of that true fayth which you defend, ſett upon me unneceſſarilye, and, I thancke God, unfruictfully. I doubt not but the rumor will flye to your Majeſties eares by ſome other way: for the Jeſuites haue ſo many friends in euery angle of the world, that they will find many aduocates, many fauorable reporters of their cauſe. Therfore I haue thought it a dutye owing to my ſelfe, for preſeruation of my poore creditt with your Majeſtie, (which I eſteeme aboue all worldly reſpects) to preſent you with the truth of ſixe yeares practices, of much patience, and of our juſt and neceſſarye defence in this laſt attempt of theſe bouillons, protected and encouraged by the French ambaſſador, who uaynely publiſhed ſhameleſs untruthes concerning the retrayte at Rhees, and made triumphs of ſtraw; for which I requited him, as his malice and leuitye merited. Certeyne preambles I haue formerly ſent my lord Conwey, which he will haue ſhewed your Majeſtie; and this diſcourſe being a branch of hiſtorye, and ſomewhat long, I will not preſume to deſire you to reade yt: it ſufficeth me, if you are pleaſed to approue what I haue done, in uindication of the publicque honor, and my owne ſafetye. What ſince hath followed, how the French is diſgraced, how his Jeſuites reſt impriſoned, and ſentenced to perpetuall baniſhment, attending an occaſion to ſend them home, to the joy of all chriſtians, and to ſome comoditye in your Majeſties ſeruices, (for they were the only oppoſers of all things thereunto concurring, and the fautors and ſollicitors of the Imperiall and Spaniſh deſſignes) I leaue to the report of the world, eſteeming it a poore office to publiſh or to reioyce in others miſerye.

FROM Gabor, I expect no manner of good; yet he hath beene practiſing to enrolle and ſtipendiat 6000 Coſſacks. He cannot be quiet; but muſt by new troubles defer his puniſhment, or ruine. The *chimacham doth looke for anſwere of a meſſenger purpoſely ſent to explore him. And we attend the comming of the emperors ambaſſador about Eaſter, to ratefye the peace: in which is foreſeene ſome difficultye. And Morteſa baſſa of Buda hath ſtayed the other, ſent from the grand ſignor, upon a punto of honor, that the Imperialls are not reciprocally arriued there, according to conuention. It is reported, that they doe bring new demands; which may hinder the concluſion. But I am of opinion, this ſtate will kyſs the hands they cannot bind, (their affayres in Aſia declining to extreametye of danger) and yeeld to all things, rather then embrace another warr: and therfore, though I will omitt no tryall at the tyme, to diſturbe the expected ſecuretye; yet I humbly wiſh your Majeſtie to retract all thoughts of theſe parts, from whence can proceede no ſtable good; but ſo mingled with doubtfulneſs of fayth, that the perill of truſting to broken reedes wilbe greater, then the profitt hoped by their inconſtant armes. God, and your Majeſties courage and wiſdome, are ſufficient for his cauſe.

* Deputy vezier.

I HAUE nothing more wherewith to trouble your Majeſtie, nor to beg, but your benigne acceptance of my true deuotions, and pardon of imperfections; that your grace may the more abound, where my meritt is defectiue. So Almightye God multiplye upon your Majeſtie the fruictes of your owne vowes and his bountye, for the glory of England, and the protection of his perſecuted church. Amen.

Conſtantinople, 22. Feb.
old ſtile, 1627.

RELATION of the Practiſes of the Jeſuites agaynſt CYRILLUS, Patriarch of Conſtantinople; and the Cauſe of their Baniſhment.

IN February 1622. ther was a practice of the Jeſuites protected by the French ambaſſador diſcouered, to depoſe Cyrillus patriarch of Conſtantinople, and to place another of their faction in his chayre, who had ſubmitted to the pope, and promiſed to render new obedience to the church of Rome: wherupon Cyrillus came to me, and conſulted how to avoyd their envye. He reſolued to proceede with mildnes and charitye, and firſt to deale with the ſeduced biſhop, as of his owne flocke; and the Sunday following, he preached and publiſhed the counſells held agaynſt him and the quiett of his church, not naming the Jeſuites otherwiſe, then by admonition to beware of certeyne fierye organs and inſtruments; agaynſt whom he ſhould be enforced to proceede with more ſeueritye, if they deſiſted not: and then being aſſiſted with 4 archbiſhops, and the cleargy preſent, he excommunicated that Greeke, ioyned with the enemies of the publicque peace; hoping by this gentle exhortation to the one, and example on the other, to obteyne that bleſſing which Chriſt had left to his church; Pacem meam do vobis.

Letter to my lord of Canterbury, 8. March 1622.

THE quarrell and diſdeyne taken agaynſt the patriarch was, that he kept company with Lutherans and hereticques; and therfore muſt needs ſauour of the ſame leauen.

1623.

BUT theſe weapons, eccleſiaſticall and temperate proceeding, being not proper to be oppoſed to the teeth of wolues, they grew the more enraged; and hauing a vizier fit for their turne in Aprill following, they accuſed the patriarch of a practice to betray an iſland in the Arches to the Florentines (ſufficit eſſe reum); and by the promiſe of 20000 dollers for the eſtabliſhment of their excommunicate fellow, they preuayled to haue him apprehended, depoſed, and confined to Rhodes, (where he ſuffered many outrages) and their proſelyte to be placed in his ſeate. But the Greeke church, though they durſt not reſiſt a tyrant, yet they would neyther acknowledge paſtorem qui non intravit per portam, nor reſort to the cathedrall, nor contribute any elimoſina according to cuſtome, to pay the new fine, vpon which the French ambaſſador and his Jeſuites relyed: for though they had intimation from Rome of ſo much mony, it was not yet leuied. Wherby they finding themſelues in a ſtreight, and that their ſchiſme would not long endure, the mony being vnpayd; they made meanes to a ſilly archbiſhop of Adrianople, who was rich, to take the chayre, the other willingly ſurrendering to him; who accepting the offer, aduanced part of the ſimonye, and leuied the reſt, by force of Turkiſh commands, vpon the poore chriſtians, and ſo was in apparance effectually ſeated.

THEIR purpoſe was, not long to ſuffer this man to continew, but only to hold the ſee full, vntill another ſhould be called from Rome; and then to depoſe him, and place their owne: for they found him not wholy moulded for their will, or rather not made priuye to their ſecrett; which was to acknowledge the ſupremacye, and to giue no biſhopricke, but to ſuch as being bred in the Greeke college there, ſhould be recommended from the pope; and thus they hoped to corrupt this church, and to ſubiect it to the papacye, and conſequently to add infinite numbers of ſubiects to the catholicque cauſe and Spayne. This practiſe I aduiſed into England, both the matter and conſequences, deſiring leaue of his majeſtie to aſſiſt Cyrillus, and to oppoſe the Jeſuiticall deſſignes: to which I receiued anſwere, That he was well pleaſed I ſhould ſo doe.

Letter to my lord of Canterbury, 2. and to Doctor Donne, the 17. of May, 1623.

DURING theſe changes the patriarchate was robbed of moſt of the antient manuſcripts, and other jewells belonging to the church.

IN September following, by friends and force of mony, Cyrillus was reſtored to libertye, and returned to Conſtantinople; where being arriued, all the Greekes flocked to him: which the archbiſhop of Adrianople obſeruing, and knowing himſelfe an intruder, the other neyther reſigning, nor being canonically depriued, but by treaſon and violence, ſecrettly and voluntarilye came to the patriarch, and ſubmitted, and offered to ſurrender the chayre to him. But he not daring to accept it, vntill meanes were made to the ſtate, or that he were recalled by a ſynode, was content, that the church ſhould be vacant, to ſee what would of itſelfe emerge. The French ambaſſador, hearing of this ſodeyne defection by the counſell of the Jeſuites, now deſperate, enraged at his biſhop, fetchd him into his houſe, and encouraged him to reſume his chardge; promiſing him protection of the pope, and his maſter, and to ſpend 40000 dollers for his ſuſtentation; and partly by fayre words abuſinge the impotencye, and partly by force compelling him, wonne the poore man to yeild; and ſent his Dragomen and Janitzaries to replace him in the cathedrall; and in Galata, proclaymed him patriarch of his owne authoritye; an inſolence vnheard of! and threatened all thoſe that would not obey and acknowledge him.

Letter to my lord of Cant. 4. Octob. 1623.

BUT the cleargy and people, knowing the vnlawfullnes of the poſſeſſion of this archbiſhop vndulye conſecrated, and foreſeeing the miſerye to enſue, if ſuch a pernicious example ſhould preuayle, did ſtill adhere to their old paſtor; which the new well weighing, and fearing that if Cyrillus ſhould recouer his right by ſtrong hand, ſome great diſgrace, or other puniſhment, would fall vpon him; without farther conſulting the French ambaſſador, in the night, left the ſee, and came to the patriarch, and caſt himſelfe into his mercye, asking abſolution, and utterly renouncing his charge, and vowing rather to ſuffer death, then to be any more ſeduced; and ſo abſolutely reſigned. Herewith Cyrillus being encouraged to take the oportunitye, and with the help of monye, was agayne, with the priuiledges of the grand ſignor, reſtored and ſettled in the chayre, in deſpight of the French faction; who then ſeemed wholy to retyre, finding themſelues vnable to contend.

THIS ſtrife did coſt the patriarch 60000 dollers, taken at intereſt, almoſt to the ruyne of the church; eſpecially to haue diſcouered to the Turkes a way to extort mony, by changes from them, who formerly were eſteemed poore coloyres; which will neuer be forgotten, and finally will deſtroy the ſee, and make all men afrayd to enter into yt.

WHEN euery one hoped for peace, and that the diuill would be charitable, when he could doe no more harme, ſuddenly there brake out another ſtorme, it being impoſſible for theſe miners to leaue working. In Januarye after, a coloyre came from Rome, called Archemandrita, and was receiued by the French into his houſe; who brought a promiſe from the colledge de propaganda fide, that notwithſtanding the firſt foyle for want of monye, that now 20000 dollers ſhould be prepared, and returned hither, if they could make ſure the depoſition of Cyrillus, and plant this new emiſſarye in his roome. The French ambaſſador had hope of 10000 begged of the pope of charitable goods giuen by a widow to good uſes; and being thus armed, they began new practices, by ſundry accuſations, which being tymely diſcouered, were preuented; though agayne it coſt the Greeke church a round ſumme of monye.

Letter to my lord of Cant. 24. Jan. 1623.

THE next yeare, the poore church had ſome breathing from open attempts; but not from more ſubtill and dangerous machinations: for then it was reſolued in Rome, to corrupt the patriarch, and to winne him; firſt to diſcreditt him with his friends, and then to vndoe him. To this purpoſe were ſent from Rome, about Feb. 1624. three ſeuerall agents; a fryer, padre Berillus, to rayſe the Coſſacks by the authoritye of the patriarch, if he could be reconciled; a lay-man, to propound a peace for the Spaniard; and a Jeſuited Greeke, a pragmaticque proſelite, bred in Rome, named Cannachi Roſſi.

TO this laſt, were inſtructions giuen vnder the hand and ſeale of cardinall Bandini, to make ouuertures to the patriarch of accomodation, with great conditionall promiſes of ſuccour and ſupply. The principle articles were, to accept the councell of Florence to yield ſome degree of preeminence to the church of Rome; and expreſſly to condemne and anathematiſe the doctrine of the Caluiniſts, without which ther was no hope of reconciliation. Cyrillus preſently repayred to me, and deſired me to take an authenticque coppy of the commiſſion and credence of Roſſi; and thervpon hauing conſulted, he would haue written an anſwere in juſtification of his fayth. But I perſwaded him to take no notice, ſeing the cardinall had not directly written to him, and to enterteyne this agent, to enjoy ſome tyme of reſt: for euery replye he ſhould make, would engage him in a controuerſye, wherin the aduerſary had infinite aduantage of helpes; and that the beſt expeded, would be exaſperation of them, who ſought no ſatisfaction, nor other ſacrifice, but obedience. But the Jeſuites, content with no temper but preſent ſubſcription, ſtirred vp ſome biſhops, now of their faction, to depoſe him; and offered 20000 dollers to eſtabliſh one of them. This tempeſt forced the patriarch to retyre and hide, vntill his friends had reuealed to the ſtate the whole deſſigne of this forked practice, and opened the treachery

The copy of theſe inſtructions, I ſent his grace mylord of Cant. 12 Feb. 1625

Letter to Doctor Donne, 8. Apr. 1626.

1627. chery of all the 3 miniſters, which then vaniſhed like ſmoke; yet, as the cuſtome of this court is, quietnes and peace was agayne bought at the expence of 10000 dollers.

ONCE more, the weary church expected deare peace; and ther was ſome apparance, that malice alſo was wearye: but at Rome, the practiſe was not giuen ouer. The colledge fell vpon a new counſell, firſt better to forteſye themſelues, before againe they attempted their enemies; and to this end, vpon diuers pretences, it was reſolued to ſend hither an antipatriarch from the pope, qualefyed with abſolute authoritye, but under the title of ſuffraganeo apoſtolico; and with him a treaſurer for the church (for St. Peeter durſt not truſt the French ambaſſador with mony); yet with theſe to joyne him for his zeale and countenance, and the Jeſuites for counſellers. To theſe was giuen all power, without attending farther order from Rome, to plant and diſplant, to ſowe and roote out; and finally, to doe all things that might eſtabliſh the Roman and Spaniſh cauſe. For their better ſtrength and abetting, it was alſo decreed to create new popiſh biſhops in Smyrna, Paxia, and many of the iſlands, to oppoſe the Greeke, who are generally ignorant and ſimple; and ſo by degrees to ſupplant them. Of this miſſion we heard long: and about Decemb. 1626. the ſuffraganeo arriued at Naxia, whither the French ambaſſador ſent the biſhop of that place, his chapleyne, and two Jeſuites, to receiue him; who conducted him to Scio, wher he was accepted like the pope himſelfe: but beginning too roughly and too ſoone, (for he ſhould not haue declared himſelfe, vntill he had crept hither vnder the wings of the French, and had beene ſettled in lambs clothing) many tooke offence at this noueltye. The orders of fryers feared a power too neare them; the laypeople, ſome preiudice in their right of patronage ouer the churches. The wiſeſt foreſaw the danger of the chriſtian libertye, and that by their practices they would inuolue all others; and if any ſcandall from them ſhould ariſe, the Turkes would not diſtinguiſh betweene the guilty and the innocent, in one liuerye, and vnder the name of Franche. The Greekes ſaw euidently the ſubuerſion of their authoritye, and antient fayth; only the Jeſuites tryvmphed, who now thought the priſe their owne; ſeing, though many grudged, yet none dared to ſtirre, for feare of excommunication threatened. But deſperation enforced the Greeke church, being free, to defend their poſſeſſion, and, encouraged by ſome friends, to oppoſe this fatall and mortall blow: all the plott was diſcouered to the ſtate, and their deſſigne wholy fruſtrated: the ſuffraganeo ſuddenly eſcaped and retyred; and their new biſhops, made by falſifyed letters, gotten by the French, were impriſoned, and their patents taken from them, to the extreame diſgrace of their protector. Hinc illæ lachrymæ: this laſt repulſe made them furious; but infeſtis animis deerat occaſio.

IN June 1627. here arriued, vpon the Royall Defence of London, one Nicodemo Mataxa, a Greeke coloyre, borne in Cephalonia, who had remayned ſome yeares in England, and was well knowne to many learned men, and to the principle merchants of the Leuant companye; being brother to gentlemen of that iſland, with whome our nation doth maynteyne great trade and correſpondence. He brought with him the Greeke ſtampe, made at his expence, and diuers bookes printed in England, as he pretended, for the benefitt of his church, drowned in invincible ignorance; eſpecially for want of meanes to learne and ſtudye. As ſoone as he came aſhore, and had ſpoken with the patriarch, he was from him, by the archbiſhop of Corynth, recommended to me; and they both came to acquaynt me with this charitable entention, and to deſire my help and protection to take vp the ſtamp, and to paſs it as my goods; which being very heauye, could not be done without ſuſpition; and in their owne judgements they feared the malice of the Turkes, that eyther it would be taken from them, or ſome ſiniſter enterpretation made of it. After hauing well conſidered the religious purpoſe, and that I found it was vndertaken by the conſent of many wiſe men in England, and for the glorye of God; though I foreſaw ſome poſſibilitye of trouble, yet I reſolued to aſſiſt them, if they would be directed, and proceede in my way, and by my counſell. Wherein, after conference with the two patriarchs of Conſtantinople and Alexandria, (then by accident in this cyttye) who with the Duch ambaſſador came to my houſe to conſult of the manner, I thought it moſt ſafe and leſs ſcandalous, to goe openly in a matter that could not be concealed. And hauing firſt, by Cyrillus, acquaynted the vizier, and obteyned his leaue, I tooke it vp, and all his bookes, thorough the cuſtome-houſe vnſearched, which no man els could haue done, and brought them ſafe to my houſe; ſuppoſing all the difficultye had then beene ouuercome, and neuer ſuſpecting from chriſtians any ſcandall for that which I thought did not, or ought not to offend them. Yet knowing the jealouſye of this nation, and that, notwithſtanding the licence taken, it might be in the power of euery judge to quarrell agaynſt the noueltye, eſpecially at the printing of bookes, which might be wreſted by conſequence prejudiciall to their law; we agreed to proceed warely, de modo of putting it in uſe.

ABOUT this time we had ſundrye conferences, and the patriarchs deſired, that I would ſuffer it to worke in my houſe; but I ſhowed them many inconueniences, that I could not hazard other intereſts, ouer which I had charge; nor engage my ſelfe publicquely for any thing, which was not my proper function, and which might draw me into an vnneceſſarye diſpute with this ſtate, if perhaps offence ſhould be taken; but that I would doe the office of a good chriſtian. And therfore I perſwaded, not to teach others ſuſpition, by ſuſpecting our ſelues; but rather to goe on confidently, and to take a houſe for Mataxa, and his ſeruants; and ſo to proceed with ſuch modeſty and caution, as occaſion ſhould preſent us, wherin I would alway aſſiſt them. Vpon this courſe we reſolued, and found a conuenient place, not far from me, nor the French ambaſſador; who pretending the vnion of the two churches, I did neuer conceiue would haue rayſed a ſcandall to ſeperate them for euer. As ſoone as Mataxa was ſettled, and his print in order, the French and the Jeſuites tooke offence; as ſett vp to publiſh bookes agaynſt the church of Rome, or at leaſt to take away their trade of teaching children, by the printing of catechiſmes. Firſt, they attempted to draw him into their gouerment, and inuited him to their monaſterye, intimating that adhæring to them would take off ſome ill ſuſpition rayſed vpon him for hauing ſtudied in England. When they could not winne him by flatteries, their firſt bayte, they reported him to be an hereticque and a Lutheran, becauſe he tooke protection of mee, whom they neuer ſpared. Agaynſt the ſtamp they excepted, for the armes of his majeſtie, which they ſayd was ſcandalous; and being in the frontiſpice of euery booke, was malum augurium, and did foreſhow, that within they did ſauour of hereſye: for what better could be expected from an hereticall founteyne, or from the man that conuerſed with hereticques?

THESE words moued us little; we were uſed to them, and content to beare them; knowing their hatred proceeded from the matter of one author, that wrote agaynſt the ſupremacye. But their malice extended ſo far, that it was reuealed to Mataxa, that he ſhould be murthered in his bed, or in the ſtreete, as he paſſed in the night from my houſe. Whervpon, at his great inſtance, I was content, for his perſon, to giue him lodging; and ſo he continued in the day to ouerſee his worke, and at euening he retyred to me for ſanctuarye.

Meletius, patriarch of Alexandria.

AS yet, they could fynd no occaſion to worke their purpoſe; but the patriarch hauing ſent a little treatiſe to the preſs, made by himſelfe (being only a declaration of the fayth and tenetts of the Greeke church, without any mention of controuerſye, or cenſuring the opinions of others, principally directed to ſateſfye the world in diuers calumniations ſpread by the Jeſuites, that he had introduced new and dangerous doctrines, to the ſcandall of his owne flocke, which he had reſolued to dedicate to his late majeſtie of bleſſed memorye, and to ſend it by me to be printed in England by his licence; but now hauing oportunitye to doe it here, he only changed the epiſtle from the father, to the ſonne); this prouoked the rancor of the French, and the ſpight of the Jeſuites; who not able to endure, that any honor from the Eaſt-church ſhould be done to his majeſtie, could no longer conteyne themſelues; but conſpired to diſturbe and ouerthrow both the author, worke, and worke-men; and hauing gotten another booke written by the patriarch, printed in England, and brought by Mataxa, they ſtudied it, to fynd out ſome clauſe agaynſt Mahomett; the ſubiect being to proue the diuinitye of our Sauiour, eſpecially agaynſt the Jewes; wherin ſome paſſages modeſtly did declare and condemne the opinions of the Turkes. When they had this ſuppoſed aduantage, they practiſed with a buffone, but a crafty knaue, that had good creditt with the vizier, and had beene vayuod of Galata, to enforme him, that this Mataxa was a capteyne, ſent hither to rayſe ſedition; and that vnder the diſſembled coulor of printing bookes for children, he had diſperſed others agaynſt the Alcaron; that they were brought from England ſecrettly vpon an Engliſh ſhip, and that I protected him; that theſe bookes were written by the 1627. patriarch to ſtir the Greekes, and to draw them into rebellion; and many of them ſent to the Coſſacks, to prouoke them to vnite vpon the occaſion of the grand ſignors expedition expected into Aſya, and ſo to expell him for euer out of Europe.

THESE accuſations were capitall, and ſtrooke at the life of the patriarch and Mataxa; in which they ſought ſiniſterly to envolue me, therby at leaſt ſo to impaire my creditt, that I ſhould haue worke ſufficient to cleare myſelfe, and little courage or power to protect them, agaynſt whom they principally conſpired.

THE vizier, more Turcheſco, without farthar examination or conſideration, reſolued to aſſault the houſe of Mataxa, and to ſurpriſe him, as he ſuppoſed, in the act of ſynne, printing agaynſt their law; and gaue order to a capteyne and company of Janitzaries, for the execution. Wherin the malice of the perſecution is obſeruable; not done by the uſiall and ordinarye miniſter of juſtice, but by ſoldiers, as if ther had beene power or purpoſe to reſiſt; and by vnrulye ſpiritts, as hard to reſtreyne, when they are at libertye, as diuells rayſed by an ignorant coniurer. This exployt ſhould haue beene made vpon Friday the 4. Jan. but the French ambaſſador hearing that I had inuited the patriarch, the baylo, and other friends, to ſee an Engliſh maske on Twelfe-night, he ſayd he would defer it, to make ſauce to my feaſt; and ſo on that day at high noone, when all our minds were directed to mirth and quiett, ſuddenly 150 Janitzaries, armed, had beſett Mataxas houſe, and guarded all the paſſages to myne: no man knew the cauſe, but all men feared the licentiouſnes of the actors. In this tumult my ſecretarye and Mataxa paſſed thorough them, comming from Galata, and ſome that were apprehended of his owne ſeruants ſhowed him to the ſoldiers; but being in a hatt, and anſwered by others, that he was one of my houſe, he eſcaped ſafely, and gatt within to ſanctuarye, halfe dead of feare, whom I receiued into protection. The capteyne, miſſing him the principle, bound all his ſeruants, brake open his cheſts, and carried all away, ſtamp, bookes, papers, plate, mony, and whatſoeuer was bootye, as the goods of a traytor, to his loſs (if not reſtored by juſtice) of 7000 dollers; and returning into the ſtreetes, a good friend, that thought this was not enough, (one of the French drogamen) told them, That the offender was fled to my houſe; but the Turke, that had more charetye, anſwered, He had no order to follow him thither.

NOTWITHSTANDING, I reſolued not to be enterrupted to be all'Ingleſe that day with my gueſts; only the patriarch, burthened with ſo high crimination, durſt not paſs the water.

THE next day his bookes were examined, to fynd ſome matter of guiltines; and ſo well they were inſtructed, that the folio was noted where the blaſphemy agaynſt Mahomett ſhould bee: the place was enterpreted by two Greeke renegadoes before the vizier, and ſome churchmen; but ther was nothing found of conſequence, that by law could touch eyther the life of the author or printer. Notwithſtanding, the patriarch, confident in his innocency, preſented himſelfe for his juſtification; where many other crimes were obiected agaynſt him, without proofe or probabilitye.

THER yet remayned ſome diſlike and diffidence in the vizier, eſpecially at the report that Mataxa was a man of war, and held correſpondence with the Coſſakes, and that he ſhould liue vnder my protection; and hauing ſeene the armes of England vpon his bookes, it did confirme him ſo far, that he could not be perſwaded he was a Greeke and a coloyre, who uſe not to be able to ſett vpp ſuch workes. The ſecond day I was enforced to goe to him, not to ſuffer his ſuſpitions to take deepe roote, and did open to him the truth; confidently profeſſing, that I had receiued Mataxa into my houſe, to ſaue him from the furye, but he ſhould be alway ready to maynteyne his innocencye. I putt him in mynd, that this terrible man he had ſeene, and knew that he was a ſubiect of the ſenate, a gentleman, a coloyre, and preſented to him by the Venice baylo, who muſt anſwere for his actions, if they were offenſiue; that he had giuen leaue to land and uſe the ſtamp; and that therefore we much admired, that he would be ſo raſh to ſuſpect and ſcandalize his friends, in whom he had often profeſſed confidence and beleefe of their ſinceretye; ſo lightly to ſett vpon the houſes of their ſubiects, and to ſpoyle them, at the inſtigation of thoſe that he knew to be enemies to the ſtate; and with the firſt wind of accuſation, without acquaynting us, to rayſe ſuch a ſtorme as might haue produced worſe effects then he entended. When he had called the man to remembrance, and well conſidered the weight and juſtice of my complaynt, being aſhamed of his precipitation, he firſt proteſted, That he had no thought nor doubt of me, nor purpoſe to affront me; but only had too eaſely beleeued; that he wondered at the impudence of thoſe that ſo groſsly had abuſed him: and concluded with theſe wordes, That if agaynſt his will he had done me wrong, at the falſe inſtigation of others, when I ſhould ſee all the goods of Mataxa reſtored with honor, and thoſe that had procured this ſcandall, fallen in the pitt which they digged for others, and exemplarily puniſhed; then he hoped I would acquitt him, and beleeue that he was both my friend, and a friend of juſtice. By this office I cleared all the clouds, and defended the patriarch, ſo that he was reſtored to the good opinion both of the vizier and mufty: to whom alſo I went for the ſame purpoſe, and to inſtruct him in the truth of the innocency of the perſecuted partye, and the malitious practices of others. 1627.

THE next day after this furye, Canachy Roſſi, the agent of cardinall Bandini, now in priſon with the Jeſuites, and their only pragmaticque inſtrument, whom I had fauoured and fed in the great plague, went to the patriarch to braue him, and to triumph ouer his aduerſitye; who mildly asking him, How long they would tempt his patience by ſuch wicked conſpiracies, and what had driuen them to this extreamety to ſeeke his life, which now he muſt defend with their danger? he replyed with jeſuiticall impudence, That they were ſcandaliſed at him for two things, for fauoring and ſuffering Mataxa to preach, being an hereticque, and liuing in the houſe of an hereticque, from whom they could expect nothing but oppoſition agaynſt the church of Rome. Secondly, that he had begun to print a booke full of hereſies, and dedicated to the kyng of England, the head of hereticques; but if he would retract, and renounce the friendſhip of both, that he would procure his accomodation.

BY the next poſt after this trouble, I receiued the coppy of conſiſtorye held in Rome in the houſe of cardinall Bandini, entitled For Conſtantinople; wherin this practiſe agaynſt the patriarch was debated and reſolued: the cauſe was taken from his conuerſation with Caluiniſts, and ſending of ſtudents to be brought vp in their ſchooles; that he ſhould be accuſed of contriuing an inſurrection againſt the Ottoman empire, and the execution commended to the ambaſſador of the potentates reſiding in this court, and fauorers of the catholicque cauſe. Wherby, comparing the decree and direction of the cardinalls with the order and meanes, to the actions of the French ambaſſador and Jeſuites, and this their laſt attempt; it doth euidently appeare, that the one were dependent and in obſeruance of the other; that the authoritye came from Rome, the malignitye from hatred of our religion, the occaſion taken at the ſtampe, therby, with one blow, to vndoe the patriarch, and to wound my reputation. But by Gods protection wee haue prooued aboue their envye; puteum fodiebant, ipſi illabuntur.

THE buffone that was the inſtrument, being ſharply rebuked in the viziers houſe, for entermeddling in matters that bred offence, repentingly anſwered, That the French ambaſſador had abuſed him, and promiſed him 20 yards of ſattyn for his reward; which he could not gett, and ſo was doubly coſened.

INTO what ſtreights, neceſſitye, and publicque diſgraces, the French ambaſſador hath ſince fallen, ſorry to ſee it, and to be a wittnes, in reſpect of his qualetye; how the Jeſuites haue beene iuſtly puniſhed and baniſhed, as diſturbers of the common quiett and peace, I refer to the open knowledge of the world, with this admonition: Let him that hath his houſe couered with glaſs, take heede how he beginns to throw ſtones at his neighbors.

10 Febr. 1627.

EXTRACT of a Letter to the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAUE lately beene enforced here to defend my ſelfe agaynſt publicque enemies, the cauſes and reaſons wherof I haue preſumed to ſend his majeſtie in a long diſcourſe, which my lord Conwey will ſhew your grace: in which action hauing beene iuſtly prouoked, and the iſſue both honourable and profitable, I beſeech

1627. I beſeech your grace to protect it from miſenterpretation, which I doe not feare for the meritts of the cauſe, but the ſtrong faction of the enemies. ——

IN the ſearch of marbles, wherby I haue endeauored that your grace ſhould meaſure my deuotion to your deſires, I haue had many croſſes, but a late one aboue all the reſt. My agent, whom I preſumed to recommend to your grace, and imployed in Greece, after hauing viſited and ſearched all the famous parts of Morea, as Thebes, Athens, Lacedemon, Achaia, Corynth, and many others, and as he continually wrote me, had bought many pieces that he could not prouide ſuddenly to carry away, is dead in Patras; whither he had ſent foure ſtatues, and followed to ſhip them: of theſe the conſull will take charge, and to recouer many other things ſcattered here and there, according to ſuch notes as he left, or had formerly ſent me; but this muſt be a new worke. He alſo had ſought in moſt of the iſlands, where he bought ſuch as could be found, and buried them in the ſand, or left them with Greekes untill his returne to make his full collection; but God hath preuented him. I haue in other places diuers marbles, if I can gett them togither: what they will proue, doth reſt in your graces only acceptance and benignitye; and though I had loſt them all, yet I would not looſe this teſtemonye, that no diligence, care, trauell, nor expence, hath beene ſpared to proue my ſelfe, &c.

[Part of this Letter is here omitted, the Contents of it being already inſerted.]

Conſtantinople, 22. Feb.
old ſtile, 1627.

To the Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

I HAUE appointed Mr. Brantwayt to deliuer your honor a coppy of the hiſtorye of the Jeſuites, which I promiſed the laſt poſt, humbly beſeeching you to preſent it to his majeſtie for my juſtification. In the buſines, the Venice baylo hath had his part both of iniurye ſuffered and repulſed. I hope this dominion ſhalbe diſcharged of them, that quietnes and charety may returne, which they haue baniſhed; and ſo I leaue them in the guiltines and reward of their owne actions.

BREEFELY, I haue preſumed to cenſure all our hopes from Gabor, and this ſtate; but I haue reſerued the conuincing reaſons for your lordſhips communication, becauſe it is not ſafe for me to write them without cyphar. Certeynly Gabor of himſelfe, without ayd, perhaps without being enforced from hence, will doe nothing, but enjoy his deare bought peace; and it is impoſſible for the witt of man, or the foreſight of their owne future danger, to moue theſe people to thinke of any thing but the ſword, now threatening their owne heads. The Spachies, returned without licence from the campe, haue beene refuſed the benefitts they haue lately uſurped, which did exhauſt the grand ſignors reuenew, who are therfore openly diſcontente. He hath ſtrengthened himſelfe by adhæring and calling the Janitzaries to his partye, who haue promiſed to liue and dye with him. Thus the two members of the militia are deuided, almoſt irreconcileably; and ther is great cauſe to feare ſome tumult in the cyttye. Abroad, Abaſſa baſſa perſecutes the Janitzaries, and ſeemes to fauour the Spachies: from hence another feare, that they will all retyre to him, and then the foote alone may keepe Conſtantinople; but he wilbe lord of Aſia. Two dayes ſince came aduice, that he is riſen out of Arzerum, and will beſiege the great vizier in Tocat, where he winters; which is a great change, to become defendant. Others ſay, he will goe for Van; as all the reportes, ſo are the reſolutions of this empire full of confuſion. Ther hath beene held frequent counſells, and it is determined to ſend ſpeedy ayd and ſupplyes to the vizier; but they know not who ſhall goe. The Spachies will not, vnleſs they may haue their demands; which granted, ther is no more pay for the Janitzaries, the emperors guarde; and theiſe dare not goe alone without horſe, for feare that eyther the other betray, or cutt them off on the way. In concluſion, the wiſeſt men thincke, that ther wilbe none that will moue for commands nor entreatyes this yeare; and then Abaſſa will greatly enlarge his dominions. Ther is ſpeech of a Perſian ambaſſador, and peace; but if any doe come, it is to lull them aſleepe, while another prouince is loſt. Treaſure ther is none; the tributes diminiſhed, and the villages

ſpeopled

1627.

diſpeopled for want of juſtice, and by the tyranny of the gouernors: exactions are now the whole reuenew. This is the true eſtate of this empire, which, if it be lawfull to propheſye, cannot long continew. The diſeaſes are incureable, no command, no obedience, none that dares take the helme to remedye it. Euery baſſa abroad is kyng for his tyme, and many meditate to hold their poſſeſſion. God may doe all things, but in the witt of man this monarchy is at an end. What can be expected from this ſicke condition, your lordſhip is judge; for I only bring the euidences.

I HOPE it is tyme to returne, when I haue not only made my end of my buſines, but almoſt of the kingdome where I liue. Therfore I pray for expedition; perhaps it cannot be done, while we are here. If I looke too far, and deceiue my ſelfe, the merchants ſhall haue good by my error, and I no harme, to warne them, as I doe my ſelfe, to take heede of a rotten houſe. Ther was neuer ſuch a comet as this laſt, like a fiery ſword; ſince when, the whole world hath beene turmoyled, and no climate in peace: God ſend it to bleſſed England, and me thither, to performe my vowes to doe

Conſtantinople, 22 Feb.
old ſtile, 1627.

Your Lordſhip all humble ſeruice.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

I SEND your lordſhip encloſed a coppy of a little hiſtorye of the behauiour of the Jeſuites, during my reſidence, and the cauſe of their baniſhment; which ſentence ſtands yet firme, though the French bluſter, and reuenge himſelfe on his owne poore merchants, whoſe ware-houſes he continues ſealed; as ſome ſay, to make uſe of the angry gods, to ſell his owne cloth; and they are now the next that are likely to riſe againſt him. And that I may giue your lordſhip account of my ſenſe of all matters here, eſpecially of Gabor, and the ſtate of this empire, I haue added one clauſe of my letter to his majeſtie, and the reaſons comprehended in another to my lord Conwey, which I durſt not truſt without a cyphar (for my owne ſake); and therfore did diuide them. When you haue read theſe, other diſcourſe wilbe ſuperfluous, and troubleſome to your lordſhip; and therfore I may eaſely conclude this. But I will ſearch for matter to intrude into your conuerſation, wherby I both honor and profitt my ſelfe.

IN a barren enquirye that I haue made for old manuſcripts in Greeke, I haue found a jewell, being (as I conceiue) a ſecond tome of a coppy of St. Chriſoſtome upon the Pſalmes, conteyning 32, that neyther are printed nor found in any librarye of Europe, though they haue beene with great feruencye deſired, and expence ſought after. Sir Henry Sauile would haue reioyced to haue liued to ſee them. It beginns at the 77. pſalme *, Greeke account, and is entyre to the end; all other coppies knowne, ſchipp from the 49th to the 108. and after, miſs the 117. the long pſalme †, which this hath. I will doe my endeauor to retriue the other part; for certeynly he that preſerued this, may haue more: it is extreamly worm-eaten, and patched to hold the leaues together; but I will gett it made legeable for the print in England. Some what els of this kynd I hope to bring home for Oxford, that is not there; and I know your lordſhip takes pleaſure to heare, that the ignorant take care to help the learned.

* Attendite, populi.
† Beati immaculati.

THE poſt hath, after much expectation, arriued, being ſixty dayes on the way, to giue me occaſion to thancke your lordſhip for your packet ‡, without which I were not only kept in ignorance, but ſhamed. I am uery glad his majeſtie doth uouchſafe to countenance the merchants, and that their protection falls into ſo able and willing hands. There is nothing that can more clearely intimate a neceſſitye, then the edict of the Pregadi you haue ſent me; for, if I underſtand it rightly, it is a preuention of the ſenate to the office which they know you will doe, being aduiſed from their reſident in England; or at leaſt a counſell of the baylo here, upon the difference of the laſt ſhip, the Defence, of which I tooke conſolage. That ſtate muſt needes haue great aduantage of others, that is ſo uigilant: and I wonder not; for they ſitt dayly, and haue not much els to doe. We muſt be content, that they guard themſelues as well as they can, ſo they encroach not upon us; and if I may fore-ſpeake them, they may command what they pleaſe to their owne ſubiects,

‡ Jan. 1. 1628.

1627. not to lade upon ſtrangers, and graunt all priuiledges to their owne built and bought ſhips. But I doe not beleeue they will therby obteyne their ends; for if they had Xerxes fleete, unleſs they could make new men to defend them, they will doe nothing but enrich and fill the piratts full of ſhipping. Therin I ſee a worſe euill, then any hurt to us by their increaſe of nauigation; yet ſeeing they warne us, it ſhould teach us in England to meete with that branch of their hope, to buy; by a prohibition, upon a greate payne, not to ſell; and then they muſt both uſe ſtrangers, and pay conſolage, or ſett ſtill, or follow the carriers horſes ouer land. I know they will be ſtiffe in the poynt, and make ſtout ſhow not to neede us; but I am aſſured, that your lordſhip knowes their breach, and where they are weakeſt: for the new impoſition of currens, the neceſſitye to ſell them will take our part; if we buy them not, they may feede bacon. Conſolage we ſhall demand of our maſters; it wilbe ſufficient, if they ſeeke not to tye our owne ſubiects by a contract; then lett them that haue moſt neede, yeild firſt. Their exactions upon goods per tranſito, if in ſight of their ports, only tranſported from ſhip to ſhip, is intollerable: this they coulor to ſerue their turnes upon their care of ſanita; but it lookes like a tricke of the inquiſition. To all, your lordſhips wiſdome, and zeale of your countries good, will apply fitt remedies: only, in the enformations ſent you, ther is one thing of greateſt conſequence defectiue; they may prohibite their owne ſubiects from lading our ſhips, no man will quarell with them; but they forbidd all the ſubiects of the grand ſignor, Greekes, Armenians, Turkes, to lade upon us for their dominion: yet they allow theſe to freight Turkes, or Greekes veſſells for Venice, or to uſe their owne, or rather they dare not deny them; and themſelues ſome tyme uſe them: ſo that we are in worſe ſtate, and tyed to ſtreighter lawes then any. This is a juſt and great greeuance; which if your lordſhip can take away, and leaue us at liberty to accept freight from theſe parts, of thoſe that willingly would lade us, we ſhall haue no neede to wayt upon them; for all the commerce would be driuen, by our ſhipping, to our great aduantage. The reaſon is, becauſe they would aduance their owne nauigation; but they ſtriue againſt the haire: all but thoſe that they enforce, are wearye, and afrayd to uenture in their botomes. It is a great tyranny to reſtrayne the naturall will, and to take away the libertye of thoſe not borne in their ſubiection, that a Jew may freight a Turke, and not an Engliſhman. This is the mayne poynt wherin we may be eaſed; for the reſt, we neyther feare nor enuy them. We well know they haue long endeuored by prudent counſells, and excellent decrees, to reſtore their marinarezza: but we learne a prouerb of them; Iva le detto et fatto cè grand trutto.

WE haue two republicques to our friends, but of ſeuerall complexions. The ſenate, I am perſwaded, wiſheth well to the ſtate of England, and will not underhand help our enemies; but actiuely they are a frozen generation. On the other ſyde, the Hollanders openly concurre with us; but to gett a few ducatts in priuat, will doe as much for our enemies: this is a vice of too much popular libertye. This I write your lordſhip, becauſe the ſenate complayned of us for ſeruing the Genoueſes with corne; and now the Duch are entered ſtrongly into the trade, and coulor it by a few Hollanders, perhaps fugitiues, that liue in Genoua. The ambaſſador, as far as he dares, protects them; but pretends, that he alſo prohibites corne; but men uſe not a tauerne, not to drincke wine. The cheeſe inſtrument of this new commerce is one ſignior Orlando, a merchant reſident in Smyrna, vice conſull to the Duch ambaſſador, and a ſubiect to the ſenate. At this tyme, in companye of the William of London, (here arriued from Liuorne) foure great Duch ſhips came into the Arches only to lade corne for Genoua, moſt of which ſupplyes Spayne. Your lordſhips authoritye may doe ſomewhat to preuent the continuance, both by aduiſing the ſenate, that they may reprehend their ſubiects; and by intimation to his majeſtie, that the States may take order, for a little priuat gayne, that our and their enemies may not be fedd too fatt. I haue once touched it, but I haue obſerued a neglect of any thing that comes from Conſtantinople, as not being matter of ſtate; ſeldom I haue had anſwere, neuer redreſs: therfore, I beſeech your lordſhip, lend the common good your countenance.

I DAYLY expect my ſucceſſor, and if I may preuayle, and doe returne by ſea, I will uiſitt the new ſcale, at leaſt if our merchants haue any goods to lade, upon which my will depends: but when I am there, your lordſhip hath forgotten to enforme me how by land I may ſafely gett home, wherin my wiſe doth depend upon your councell. Per mare, per terras, undique hoſtis erit.

THUS wiſhing your lordſhip the fruicts of your owne uowes and meritts, health, joy, and happineſs to your noble lady, I committ you to the heauenly protection, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, 22. Feb.
1627. old ſtile.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With abſtract of his to Lord CONWAY, Febr. 24. of Letters from Zurich, Febr. 17. 24. and Dutch Embaſſador's Propoſition to the Senate of Venice.

My uery good Lord,

I HAUE this weeke receaued a pacquet from your lordſhip, dated the 30th of Decemb. old ſtile, with ſome addreſſed unto the queen of Bohemia, the lord Carleton, and Mr. Queſtor; which I ſent away the laſt night. The copy of your letter to mee I did ſend likewiſe both to my lord Conway, and to my lord Carleton.

CONCERNING Gabor, your lordſhip neede not feare that the roundnes of your language will be cenſured by any but himſelfe, whoſe opinion deſerues nothing but neglect. You may be aſſured, that you ſhall be auowed; and I do congratulate with your lordſhip, that his diſhoneſty had ſerued like a foyle to illuſtrate your honor: Hectora quis noſſet, fœlix ſi Troja fuiſſet? His jugling hath made your wiſdom, dexterity, and diligence, more conſpicuous; and as it hath added unto the reputation you had long before in the opinion of all honeſt men, ſo you may be ſure to find approbation and acceptation at the hands of our gratious maſter. I do make bolde to write thus plainely to your lordſhip, becauſe I finde in your letter ſome ejaculations of diſcontentment; for which, I dare ſay, you haue no cauſe more then what is common to all worthy and honeſt men, who do ſimpathiſe, in their owne particuler, with the calamity of the times.

THE adminiſtrator of Magdebourg did expect no other from Micoſerentz, then your lordſhip hath found, and he doth proclayme Gabor for the moſt perfidious man in the worlde. It were to be wiſhed, that wee had neuer knowen him, and that he had neuer medled in our buiſines: but now let us thinck no more of him, but ranck him with his companion in Tacitus, quem calamitas publica fecit partemrei publicæ.

FROM the prince of Piedmont I haue receaued a memoriall, which doth runne in theſe words: Che il ſignior ambaſciatore ſi contenti di ſcrivere in Conſtantinopoli, Algiers, & Tunis, a quelli ambaſciatori & conſoli Ingleſi, d'impetrare da quelli viſiri la permiſſione alli negotianti ſudditi dell' Ottomanno, di potere venire a queſti porti di mare di S. A. atteſo lo ſmaltimento di quelle mercantie, la liberta, la franchiggia, & il commodo di ricariſo de panni di lana & ſeta, paſſandone gli officij neceſſarij perche ſe ne ottenga l'intento.

YOUR lordſhip will ſee by the forme, that neſcitis quid petatis: yet haue I undertaken to recommend this memoriall to your lordſhip; and I ſhall deſire you to procure him ſatisfaction, although it be but in ſhewe, and in appearance. Vnto Algiers and Tunis I will not write; for I haue no correſpondence with thoſe uipers: but I would be glad the prince ſhould ſee that wee can obtayne any thing at the Porta; and that may be donne by your lordſhips wiſdom formally enough, and yet not ſubſtantially.

OUT of England I haue had nothing ſince I writ laſt to your lordſhip. In Germany, about Stode and Gloeſtat, all goeth well. What this place doth afford, or I haue ſince receaued from any other part of Chriſtendom, worthy the ſending, your lordſhip ſhall find here incloſed.

I WILL now, once more, earneſtly renewe my ſute unto your lordſhip concerning your comming this waye; becauſe I dare undertake to ſecure your paſſage one waye or other. I will prouide aforehand a ſaluo condutto or paſport for you from Bruxelles, which ſhall ſecure you through all the dominions of the king of Spayne. Perhaps wee ſhall not neede it; but I will haue it lye by mee dormant. I do infinitely deſire to haue the honor to ſerue you, and perhaps ſome communication betwixt us may aduantage the ſeruice of our gratious maſter; and therfore I hope you will afford mee this fauor, and I will deſire you to beleeue, that if I liue,

I ſhall

1627. I ſhall be able to ſecure you from all danger of enemyes, and facilitate your uoyage in ſuch ſort that you ſhall not pericolare but with malandrini and aſſaſſini, which may be found in any country. I will here craue leaue to kiſſe the hands of your noble and worthy lady, and will euer reſt

Venice, 26th Feb.
1628. ſtil. nou.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate humble ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

An ABSTRACT of Sir ISAAK WAKE's Letter to Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my very good Lord,

THE Holland ambaſſador hauing, the laſt weeke, made his firſt propoſition in this college, wherein he did roundly ſummon this ſenate to make good vnto his maſters an arrere of two yeares contribution due in virtu of their defenſiue league, and to giue order hereafter for a punctuall payment of that quota, he hath this weeke receaued an anſwer, which is rather a riddle then an anſwer; for after a ceremoniall preface, full of proteſtations of zeale to the common cauſe, and particuler loue and affection vnto the States, they paſſe to a generall exhortation vnto all princes and ſtates free, to oppoſe againſt the dangerous vſurpations of the Spanyards and Auſtriaci, who do threaten the oppreſſion of all Europe, if the violence of their ambition be not timely preuented; and falling into their olde common place, they did amplify the great expences they had been at of late, (eſpecially in the Valtelina) the benefit that the States and their friends did receaue by the diuerſion, the danger that there is at this preſent of innouation in Italy, and by conſequence, the neceſſity that did oblige them to ſtand vppon their guardes, concluding with an expreſſion of their earneſt deſire of a reconciliation betwixt England and France. This is all the monny that the ambaſſador is like to haue for a million due vnto his maſters; and although he doth intend ſhortly to come vppon them with a newe recharge, yet I feare he will hardly preuaile, vnleſſe he do reſolue to quit one yeares pay, in regard of the diuerſion in the Valtelina; and if he can come of ſo, he will do his maſters a good ſeruice; for of bad paymaſters any thing is well gotten. The propoſition of the ambaſſador your lordſhip ſhall find here incloſed, and if your leaſure will permit you to reade it, you will find it a ſmart piece, againſt which I could juſtly take ſome exceptions, if it had not beene communicated vnto mee in confidence; for I do not like his naming France before England, and his diſcourſe of the differences betwixt the two crownes might haue been ſpared, as hauing no connexion with his true theme.

THE affaires of Mantoua are yet ſo vncertaine, that it is hard to ſaye, whither that ſucceſſion will reſt peaceably eſtabliſhed in the perſon of the duke of Niuers, or ſome innouation ariſe. There is no newſe yet of the biſhop of Mantoua, ſent to the emperor to do homage, and receaue the inueſtiture: but I do vnderſtand from a very good hand, that there is already ſome doubt of the reception and entertainement of that ambaſſador; and that the emperor doth pretend, that the newe duke of Mantoua ſhould ſend his ſonne vnto him perſonally, to receaue the inueſtiture, in regard that Ferdinand, the penultime duke, did ſend his brother, Don Vincenzo, (who dyed laſt) to take it. There may be ſome miſtery herein, which tyme muſt diſcouer.

THE French king hath written vnto the newe duke of Mantoua a very gratious letter, wherein he doth promiſe to maintayne him in his right againſt any that ſhall offer to moleſt him, adding withall, that rather then he will be wanting vnto him, he will make peace with England, and with thoſe of the religion. This is written vnto mee from Mantoua, in letters of the 16th of this month, from a confident perſon who was lately in England.

THE French ambaſſador hath againe, this weeke, preſſed this ſtate to declare themſelfes in fauor of Mantoua, alleging that the duke of Sauoy is combined with the Spanyards. Inſteed of a categoricall anſwer, he receaued an office of complaint againſt the newe duke of Mantoua, for not hauing ſent nor written hither ſince his arriuall: which point was exaggerated with their hauing written vnto his ſonne the prince, as ſoone as he did write vnto them; and ſeeing the father had ſo much neglected them, they would reſolue vppon nothing, vntill they ſhould heare from himſelfe, whither he had neede of them or not.

THIS day I haue receaued a pacquet from Sir Tho. Roe, wherein there is nothing for your lordſhip: in which regard I make bolde to ſend a copy of what he hath written vnto mee, wherein I do aſſure my ſelfe I ſhall giue your lordſhip as much content, as ſatisfaction vnto that worthy gentleman, who hath commanded mee ſo to do. 1627.

A VOYAGE intended by the little great duke of Toſcany, doth make a great noiſe: his deſigne is to goe to Rome, viſit Loretto, paſſe by Venice, and from hence to tranſport himſelfe to the emperors court: the ſpeculativi ſay, That he hath the ambition of a crowne; and becauſe the king of Spayne will not permit any re in Italie, but himſelfe, they haue prognoſticated vnto him the crowne of Denmarke, which the pope and the emperor ſhall joyntly conferre vppon him. Such a donation will coſt nothing vnto the pope, who is glad to giue any thing of that nature that is demanded, becauſe he hath not jus donandi; yet his authority is increaſed by ſuch a donation. The emperor, who doth owe vnto Florence fiue millions of golde, may be glad to pay him with a title, which muſt oblige him to contribute towards the conqueſt. Theſe are diſcourſes, and perhaps chimeræ; for I know nothing aſſured, but of his voyage to Rome and Loretto.

Abſtract of a Letter from Zurich.

THE dieta of the proteſtant cantons, and other cittys of Heluetia of the ſame profeſſion, mentioned in my former letter unto your lordſhip, hath beene aſſembled in this towne; where, after a mature conſideration of the eminent daunger wherein they liue at this preſent, being enuironed with the forces of a moſt puiſſant and victoriouſe ennemy, they haue ſworne an indiſſoluble union; and that, upon the leaſt ſigne of hoſtilitie upon their confines, they will bee ready to aſſiſt one another according to the uttermoſt of their power: and allſoe, if neceſſity require, they will melt their plate and gold chaines, (of which they haue greate ſtore) and make moony thereof to maintaine their armie therewith. And becauſe they cannot truſt the catholique cantones, (hauing noe ſmall reaſon to bee diffident of them) they intend within few days to call a generall dieta at Baden, where they reſolue to demaund of the ſaid catholique cantones, whether (if neceſſity require) they bee reſolued to maintaine, unitedly with them, their common libertye, according to the tenour of their auncient confederation, and laudable exemples of their predeceſſors. Of this they are reſolued to haue a categoricall anſwere, to the entent they may know what to truſt to.

THE proteſtant cantones haue giuen order to muſter all their ſubjects that are able to carry armes. There is likewiſe commaund giuen to euery captaine to exerciſe their militia. The cantones of Zurich and Berne haue beene with the Venetian reſident, to intimate the league they have with the ſtate of Venice, deſiring the ſaid reſident to write to the ſenate to ſend hither a conſiderable ſumm of moony, to the intent they may make uſe thereof, if occation bee preſented. The republique of Venice is bound in vertue of the ſaid league to pay monethly, in tyme of warr, to each of the aforeſaid cantons 4000 ducats. The deputys of Berne, in this dieta, were the baron of Eſpiets and monſieur Weierman.

Zurich, 17. February,
ſtilo loci, 1628.

Abſtract of another from Zurich.

THE dieta to bee held at Baden, mentioned in my former of the 17. February, ſtilo veteri, ſhold haue beene aſſembled upon Monday next being the 25. of February, ſtilo veteri; but the cantones catholique haue deſired a prolongation of 8 days, pretending to haue ſome ymportant affairs amongſt themſelfes, which they intend to accommodate in the interim. Theſe ſigniori are verie jealouſe of theſe proceedings, being alltogether unuſed to put back a dietta which hath beene called by generall conſent; and it is greatly feared, they haue ſecrett intelligence with the emperor and Leopaldo. The euangelicall cantones haue ſent to viſitt their frontires, 1627. with armes and munition to euery place of ymportance. The captaines of their officers are buſie muſtering the peaſants, who are generally reſolued, according to report, to fight couragiouſly for their liberty. Wee haue not any ſpeech of leagues in theſe parts, neither will the proteſtants permitt any in theſe daungerouſe tymes in their dominions. Concerning penſioni decorſi, to bee payed heere by other princes, I cannot learne of any; if there bee, it is keept very ſecrett; for heere wee know of noe ſuch matter. I am ſure the proteſtant cantones haue receiued none except that 4000 dolors which Zurich receiues from Venice, and the like doth Berne from the ſame place. As for France, it is ſoe farr from being able to pay penſioni decorſi, that monſieur de Fowquet, maiſtre de requeſtes, who was choſen ambaſſador for Swizzerland many moneths ſince, is conſtrayned to ſtay at Paris for want of moony.

Zurich, 24. February
1628, ſtilo veteri.

OLIUAR FLEMMING.

Propoſal of the HOLLAND Ambaſſador to the Senate of VENICE.

Sereniſſime Prince, tres Illuſtres & tres Excellens Seigneurs,

M'ESTANT à mon audience publique ſelon la couſtume & condition du temps contenus aux termes generaux du debuoir des compliments, pour en une aſſemblée compoſée de ſi grande diuerſité d' humeurs, & d' intereſt, ne rien declarer qui fut pour receuoir une interpretation eſloignée des mes intentions, & de uoſtre bien; je me poiſe maintenant en preſence de voſtre ſerenité pour lui ouurir confedement la charge que meſſeigneurs les Eſtats mes ſouuerains m'ont confiée, qui eſt de prier voſtre ſerenité de paſſer, comme ſans doubte elle faict ſouuent par ſes penſées, la conſtellation du preſent eſtat des affaires de la Chreſtienté, & conſiderer en icelle le gran pas que la maiſon d'Auſtriche marche uers la monarchie auec une oppreſſion generale de tous ceux qui leur y ueullent former quelque oppoſition. Pendant que les rois, princes, & eſtats, qui deuroient preuoir leur danger en ceſte ambition, negligent l'intereſt de leur alliéz, ou ſe tranſportent auec trop de uiolence à des mouuements, & des deſſeings ruineux & non neceſſaires. Vne ſeule deroutte deuant Prague a comme d'un eſclair bouleuerſé cette grande puiſſance de l'empire, & faict tomber à deux doits pres dans l'abſolüe domination de la maiſon d'Auſtriche; d'autant que ſans preuoir, & aller au deuant du mal, chaſcun l'a attendu chez ſoy pour ſuiure la condition & ruine de ſon voiſin.

LE roy de Dannemarc, bien que ſur le tard, apprehendant ce malheur, s'eſt laiſſé perſuader d'employer ſa perſonne, & ſa puiſſance, à recueillir ce desbris, unir ſes amis, & de faire une ligue de la cauſe commune, ſe promettant les effects treſcertains des promeſſes des ſes confederéz, pour former royalle oppoſition au progres des uictoires & ambitieux deſſeings des princes de la maiſon d'Auſtriche: mais ſe trouuant foiblement ſecouru de ſes alliez, & n'ayant de ſoy les moyens aſſez ſuffiſants pour ſouſtenir longuement ſeul le faix d'une ſi grande & onereuſe guerre, il eſt reduit au terme de deuoir abbandonner la cauſe commune, juſques meſmes à penſer à la conſeruation de ſes propres eſtats, qui en ſeront grandement esbranléz, ſi Dieu ne le releue, comme par miracle, de la neceſſité & mauuais eſtat auquel il ſe retrouue; & lui retire auec diſgrace hors de l'empire. Voſtre ſerenité comprendrá aſſez en ſa prudence, qu'il ne reſte plus aucune reſſource pour la liberté de l'empire.

MESSEIGNEURS, &c. ont fourny 10000 livres, & beaucoup d'autres auantages pour aider à le ſouſtenir, puis qu'ilz s'en furent uolontairement obligéz par le traitté, encor que leur guerre, qui le ſoulagoit beaucoup, leur en pouuoit fournir cauſe de juſte excuſe; mais ilz eſperoyent que cet exemple conuieroit les autres confederez à dez plus grandes liberatitéz & aſſiſtances: mais au lieu de ſe porter à un ſi prudent conſeil, il eſt arriué comme par ſurcroiſt du malheur, qu'au meſme temps, & au point de noſtre plus grand beſoing, les deux roys de France, & de la Grande Brettagne, n'ayant peu conuenir du ſens des quelques conuentions, en ſont uenus à ſi grande meſintelligence, qu'elle a eſclatté comme en rupture de guerre, de facon qu'au lieu de porter leurs penſées & conſeils à contrebalancer le dehors, ilz employent leurs moyens l'un contre l'autre, laiſſant ainſi à l'ennemy commun, la liberté de faire ce que lui plaiſt. Ce que conſiderans meſſeigneurs, &c. & que de la continuation, il n'en ſcauroit en fin que leur ruine, & la uoſtre, ilz ont enuoyé des ambaſſadeurs à l'un & à l'autre roy, pour ſupplier leur majeſtés de donner leur different à la conſideration du publique, au moins la faire mettre en traitte, auec offre d'y ſeruir; ce qu'ilz eſperent que voſtre ſerenité aurá auſſi procuré pareillement, puis qu'elle n'y eſt pas moins intereſſée que nous tous. Pareil office ont ilz faict rendre entre les roys de Pouloigne & de Suede, à fin que la mer & le commerce demeurent libres au moyen de ceſte pacification. 1617.

EN une ſi dangereuſe conſtitution d'affaires, qui par le uoiſinage des uictorieux, & en l'union de leurs deſſeigns & intereſts nous menace les premiers, meſſeigneurs, &c. ne relaſche rien de leur ancien courage & conduitte: car à meſure que le peril s'augmente, ilz redoublent les deuoirs de leur conſtance, au de la quaſi du pouuoir, à fin de faire cognoiſtre à leur exemple, que ſi on s'euerteroit de tous coſtéz, qu'il reſteroit encores aſſéz de uigeur pour repouſſer cette uiolente ambition de la maiſon d'Auſtriche.

MESSEIGNEURS, &c. & monſieur le prince d'Orange, en ayants uoulu rendre preuue, ont au plus grand cours de la proſperité eſtrangere de leurs ennemis porté cet' eſté paſſée leur armée aux champs, aſſiegé la tresforte uille de Grol, & forcée de ſe rendre à la barbe de l'ennemy, eſgal en infanterie, & plus puiſſant en caualier, ſans y auoir faict deuant aucune perte de conſideration. Et depuis n'agueres ilz ont enuoyé une flotte nauale uers l'eſtroict du Sont, pour le conſeruer au roy de Dannemarc, auittuaillé Gluckſtat, & aſſeurée la uille d'Embden, & forts circonuoiſins. Mais comme il eſt impoſſible que des eſtats mediocres, uoire les grands eſtats meſmes, ſubſiſtent ſans alliances, meſſeigneurs, &c. ſe deſirans donner la ſeureté qui s'attendoit de leur prudence, ont de longue main recherché l'appuy de leurs amis intereſſéz en la conſeruation de leur cauſe & liberté; & ayants particulierement en l'honneur de contracter auec voſtre ſerenité une ligue defenſiue, auec obligation de mutuel ſecours, au cas que l'une ou l'autre republique uinſt à eſtre aggreſſée la guerre ouuerte: c'eſt pourquoy ilz m'ont commandé de ſommer & ſupplier voſtre ſerenité, de leur faire au pluſtoſt fournir le effect & continuation de cette aſſiſtance promiſe, qui leur eſt tant neceſſaire & ſi utilement employée pour le ſeruice comun; car à meſure que le roy d'Eſpagne eſt puiſſament occupé chéz nous, il lui eſt treſdifficile de rien entreprendre ailleurs que tresfoiblement, la ou ſi la neceſſité uenoit à porter mes dits ſeigneurs, &c. à quelque changement d'opinion au train de leur conduitte, la condition de uoſtre repos en ſeroit moins aſſeurée; mais voſtre ſerenité en ſeroit neceſſitée d'entretenir une forte milice pour ne laiſſer uoſtre ſeureté à la diſcretion de uoſtre ennemy, lequel ne peut eſtre ſans armées, ny ſes armes ſans occupation.

QUAND l'alliance de voſtre ſerenité fut concluë auec mes ſouuerains, nous eſtions tous deux, vous en paice, & nous en treſue, incertains qui ſeroit premier entreprins. Sur ce doubte nous nous ſommes donnéz la foy d'un mutuel ſecours: voſtre ſerenité l' a commencé, & faict paier deux ans: maintenant nous ignorons encor, pour quelle cauſe il a eſté interrompu; car s'il a eſté deu auparauant par le paſſé, il eſt bien d'auantage preſentement que le danger nous preſſe plus uiuement, que les autres roys diuertis ailleurs, nous negligent, que le commerce, l'ame de noſtre eſtat, ceſſe quaſi par tout. Partant, ſereniſſime prince, tres illuſtres & tres excellens ſeigneurs, je vous conjure par le grande & ordinaire prudence de ceſte republique, par le deuoir d'une foy publique, par la ſoing qu' auéz remonſtrée de uouloir prendre de la cauſe comune, de nous faire paier promptement les ſommes que nous ſont deües, & donner tel ordre, que reiglement nous en puiſſions receuoir la continuation ſelon les conditions portées au traitté. Et voſtre ſerenité ſe peut aſſeurer, qu'elle ne ſcauroit employer aucun argent plus utiliment, qu' à arreſter au loing, & à ſi petits prix, les uiolents efforts de l'ambition de nos comuns ennemys, qui autrement, noſtre guerre uenant à ceſſer, auroit toutte liberté de vous approcher: mais rien n'eſt capable de faire changer des reſolutions à meſſeigneurs que l'impuiſſance, de la quelle, ilz ſont perſuadez, que, quand bien il n'y auroit point d'alliance expreſſe entre voſtre ſerenité & eux, vous ne laiſſiéz pas pourtant de les aſſiſter par conſideration politique; de meſme comme nous auons donné de fortes aides en l'empire à fin d'y maintenir la liberté, au moins à tenir la guerre eſtrangere loing de nos frontieres. Sur ce la donque j'attenderay qu'il plaira à voſtre ſerenité prendre vne equitable reſolution à fin d'animer mes ſouuerains de plus en plus en leur conſtante deliberation par les effects de ceſte aſſiſtance; les quels attendant, 1627. dant, je uous acerteneray, qu'ilz ſecondront auſſy à touttes les occaſions, uertement & de bonne foy, touttes les genereuſes intentions de voſtre ſerenité.

To the Lord CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

THE Venetian carneuall hauing poſt-poſed the expedition of the letters, to their feaſts, I haue gotten ſomewhat to add to my former, though of no great ualew, yet aprehended with earneſt affections to catch hold of euery thing that only looketh toward his majeſties or your lordſhips ſeruice. What it is, you wilbe pleaſed to reade; and that I ſend it in cyphar, is not for any eſtimation of the great ſecrett, but for the princes ſake, by whom I diſcouer all the wayes of Gabor: and it may be his ruine to be ſuſpected, and I ſhall looſe my confidence with him. I can collect no great matter from yt, but only that ther may be hope, that Proteus wilbe enforced to fall from the emperor, whom, it ſeemes, he ſuſpects; eſpecially fearing that Andrea Battori, brother of Sigiſmundo late prince, and wholy Imperiall, fled into Poland, may be by that ſtate ſett up agaynſt him; which the grand ſignor will neuer endure, nor may we ſuffer it, as far as we are able to oppoſe. From whence may emerge ſomewhat, ouer which I will watch; and that is all that I can promiſe, to uſe the preſent occaſions to our beſt aduantage. Yet I ſing one ſonge, that I haue no fayth in any thing that ſauours of him, unleſs his owne neceſſityes giue it creditt.

HERE is a Poliſh ambaſſador, or internuncio, arriued to the great content of this ſtate. He is not yet entered. What he comes to propound, I ſhall ſoone know: We ſuppoſe, no great new matters; but only, according to cuſtome, to poliſh and confirme an infirme peace, in which neyther ſyde doth truſt. His followers report, that the generall Coneſpolsky, that made the warr with the king of Sueuia, is drawne backe to this frontire, his proper charge: whence I collect eyther peace on that part, or ſome deſigne on this. The Poliſh enterpreter liues, and hath done 4 yeares, in my houſe, upon the kyngs reccomendation. So that I make ſure to know their ſecrett, which I will preſent your lordſhip by the firſt poſt.

SOME neceſſarye aduiſes I haue receiued from Sir Iſake Wake: of which I will make the beſt uſe I can, if poſſible, to draw the armado this yeare into the Mediteran: the ground wherof I haue yeſterday begun, by an office to the capten baſſa; enforming him, by the maſter of the William of London, here newly arriued, of the great preparations in Spayne, of a fleete and army, eyther agaynſt the grand ſignor, or his friends; which in the end will be all one, who is begun with firſt [a]; and to procure him to ſtop the lading of corne in the Arches for Genoua, to make the Spaniards biskett, for which he hath ſent ſpeedy orders to the bey of Rhodes, and the mayne of Morea. God giue us ſome refection, for we are decryed by the enemye like the Iſraelites: Ubi eſt nunc Deus iſtorum?

I HAUE receiued intimation of a purpoſe in his majeſtie, to command my ſtay in this court; and I confeſs, I am not good enough to be loſt in his ſeruice; and therfore I muſt humbly obey, and acknowledge his infinite grace, to eſteeme me able for any thing. But I ſhall deceiue all expectation, and doe my maſter no profitt. *44 is at the worſt, except utter diſſipation; and Gabor is a broken glaſs, that cannot be handled without danger or harme. Whatſoeuer his majeſtie commands, I accept as my honor. If I could extinguiſh the fire, flammas oſcularer, and would leape into yt: but I humbly beſeech his majeſtie to conſider, that where the foundation is ſand, the building muſt be as light as ſtraw. It is without queſtion, that from theſe parts might haue come the moſt happy diuerſion; but the oportunitye was neglected, and all theſe ſuffered to decline too low, and the enemies encreaſe to be too much knowne to them. Therfore I beſeech your lordſhip, as I will willingly waſt under his majeſties orders, ſo that I may not be tyed to impoſſibilityes, nor preiudiced by expecting ſeruices beyond my power, and the condition of this place and tyme. I ſhall put all things to tryall, and upon this occaſion will ſtartle Gabor. When I haue all done, I aske only to be judged, per affectus, non per effectus. And ſo I

* This ſtate.

---

[a] The 4 Duch ſhips lading corne for Genoua, meeting Engliſh or Venetians, putt out Holland coulors, if any other nation, Florentine or Savoy, as ſhalbe for their turne; and as I am enformed, they haue alſo, for neede, the Turkiſh waning moone.

ſubmitt my ſelfe wholy to his majeſties benignitye and will, to diſpoſe of me, as I am borne his vaſſall.

I DARE not omitt to acknowledge his majeſties grace to the Leuant companye, at my humble enformation, which I haue underſtood from Sir Iſake Wake, wherby they may in theſe ſeas hold up their heads, as in former ages: for the Venetians ſought too ſeuerely to worke upon them; and I hope they will not forgett gratefully to confeſs the preuenting care of that worthy gentleman, and his ſucceeding paynes for their redintegration, and reſtoring to ancient libertyes, of which I am a manifold wittnes. So, beſeeching your lordſhip to ſhow theſe my papers, and to preſent my vowes and ſupplications before his majeſtie and the duke, I leaue your lordſhip to more neceſſarye meditations, and faythfully reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, Aſhwedenſday, 27.
February, old ſtile, 1627.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE: With Extract of his to Lord CONWAY, March 3. and of Advices from Rome, Hamburgh, Memingen, and Zurich; and his from Lord CARLETON of February 28. and Advices to GABOR.

My uery good Lord,

SINCE my laſt to your lordſhip of the 26th of February, ſtilo novo, I haue receaued yours of the $\frac{12}{22}$. of January; which doth occaſion mee to renewe your trouble at this time, and to redouble my thancks for your ſo noble and free communication of your negotiations and occurrences in theſe parts. Your letter to Mr. Symmes I haue deliuered; but your pacquet Queſtor muſt lye by mee untill Friday, in regard it arriued here the day after the departure of our laſt poſt. I ſuppoſe theſe will goe in company with my laſt to your lordſhip, ill weather hauing ſtayed the fregate which ſhould haue departed ten dayes ſince; and therfore I will reſerue my duplicate untill the next opportunity. I ſhall long to heare of the receipt of ſuch as I haue ſent unto you of late; becauſe of late I haue ſent unto you a worlde of papers, which I would be uery ſorry ſhould be loſt: and I am the more carefull to ſupplye you with French newes, that you may confound the French ambaſſador, when he doth, according to his cuſtome, uent lyes and inuentions of his owne with confidence. Wee do heare from Rochel, that the ſea hath ſpoyled all the French kings workes; and that he is retired to Paris, hauing left his army under the command of the cardinal Richelieu. Sir Peeter Wych hath written unto mee from Liuorno, and inuited mee to correſpond with him; which I will do, when he ſhall be ſetled.

CONCERNING your paſſage, I haue already written to your lordſhip, that if you will be pleaſed to come this waye, I will undertake, with the helpe of God, to ſecure you from enemyes; and to that purpoſe, by the laſt ordinary, I did write to Bruxelles to procure a paſſeport from the infanta, which I do aſſure my ſelfe I ſhall obtayne. Here incloſed your lordſhip ſhall receaue what hath come to my hands ſince my laſt, and an extract of my laſt diſpatch to my lord Conway. Vppon occaſion of giuing notice to theſe ſeigniori, of the intention the emperor had to ſend colonel Slick hither to uiſit them with 30000 men, I did deſire them to requite mee with the like confidence; and in particular, to be uigilant ouer the proceedings of Gabor, and to let mee know what they could heare of him. I had the fortune to bee the firſt who did giue them the auviſo aboue ſpecifyed: and they hauing ſince receaued confirmation thereof from their miniſters in Germany and the Haghe, the ſenate hath giuen mee publique thancks, and promiſed requitall in the ſame kinde. I haue written likewiſe to the ſame purpoſe to the duke of Sauoye; ſo that if he do treate with Spayne, (which I do not beleeue) I ſhall quickly know the ſubſtance of his negotiations. I haue long ſince written into England, that our beſt way will bee to take our reuenge, and I am glad to ſee your lordſhip concurre with mee in that opinion. God Almighty bleſſe you and your noble lady, and I reſt

Venice, 6th March,
1628. ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips true faithfull ſeruant,

I. WAKE.

Extract of a Letter from the Same to my Lord CONWAY.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

BY their proceedings at Milan, it ſhould appeare that ſome innouation is intended; for un ſourd bruit, which hath paſſed current of late, of a commiſſion giuen vnto the count of Sulz, to leauy three regiments of Lanſque knights, and two of Reiters, is now confirmed, both by the ſending of ſignior Caſtiglion, quarter maſter general of the Spaniſh army, into the Comelina, to prouide quarter for newe trouppes; and by the violence which the gouernor of Milan doth vſe, to rayſe and extort monny. He hath lately demanded of the citty of Milan 300000 crownes; and they excuſing themſelfes vppon the great charge they haue long beene at in maintayning that army, which hath conſumed and ruinated that ſtate, he did ſend his Spaniſh guardes, to take monny or goods by force out of the howſes of thoſe who were cottilati. Wherevppon inſued an vniuerſall murmure throughout the whole citty, and the ſhutting vp of all the ſhops, and barricading their howſes for three dayes togither: yet doth Don Gonzales, the gouernor, purſue his demand with much heate; and he will be furniſhed with this ſumme couſte que couſte, which hath inforced many of the inhabitants to flye; and at this preſent wee haue in this towne ſome of the beſt familyes retyred hither to ſaue themſelfes. Really there is great miſery all ouer that ſtate, eſpecially in the Comaſco, and the vailliages of Madris, Lagun, and Docarne, where many do dye of hunger; and the reſt ſuſtayne themſelfes with bread made of bran, which they do buy at Milan, at a deare rate.

THE newe duke of Mantoua doth queſtionleſſe feare a ſtorme; for beſydes his fortifying of the citty of Mantoua, buying of armes, and making an enumeration of all his ſubjects able to beare armes, he hath now giuen order for a leauye of 3000 Monferrini; and by proclamation commanded, that all corne, wine, oile, oates, and haye, ſhould immediately be tranſported out of all villages and open townes, into the cittyes, caſtels, and fortraſſes, that in caſe of inuaſion, the army of an enemy may find no ammunition or forrage.

THE Venetians do ſtill faire bonne mine en mauvais jeu; and they would haue the worlde beleeue, that the protection of the pope will ſecure them from all danger: but the wiſeſt among them do feare that broken ſtaffe will hardly ſupport them; and if he ſhould combine with them, (which is not probable) yet the maxime of the almirante de Caſtiglia will alwayes be true, that le ſpade di preti & mercanti non tagliono troppo. The alarme which I did giue them a month ſince concerning a purpoſe that the emperor had to ſend colonel Slick to viſit them with 30000 men, hath ſince been confirmed by their owne miniſters abroade: and as the ſenate did, by a publique act, giue mee thankes for the newſe, ſo it doth now appeare, that they do in part beleeue it may proue true; for at preſent they are treating very ſecreatly with monſieur de Candales, for a leauy of 3000 French; and their ambaſſador at Paris hath ſent a monſu hither, who doth vndertake to bring 2000 more. The circles of Franconia and Sueuia are full of ſouldiers, and their greateſt quarters are about Vlne and Conſtance; which two cittyes do ſuffer very much by ſuch inſolent neighbours. In a very ſhort tyme, all theſe diſperſed trouppes may be put togither; and if they ſhould chance to reſolue to turne their faces towards the South, they may goe farre before they do find oppoſition; eſpecially if the duke of Sauoye do joyne with the Spanyards, as he is ſtrongly ſuſpected.

THE French ambaſſador, monſieur d'Auò, hath this weeke made a recharge in college, and deſyred theſe ſeigniori, in the name of the French king, to accept of the newe duke of Mantoua for generale delle arme della republica. The anſwer that he hath receaued, is in ſubſtance, Neſcio vos: complimentally it doth runne in this forme, That although in former tymes the State of Venice hath ſerued themſelfes of dukes of Mantoua and of Vrbin, for generali delle loro armi; yet they do not finde themſelfes at this preſent neceſſitated to vndergoe ſuch a charge; that they do preſume the protection of France is ſufficient to ſecure the duke of Mantoua; and when the French king ſhall appeare in good forme, they will not be wanting what may be expected from good neighbours. This anſwer is dry in itſelfe, and the French ambaſſador doth growe melancholy: for monſieur de St. Chaumont either is gone, gone, or doth threaten to retyre from Mantoua, foreſeeing that the cardinal di Richelieu would diſcharge France for the protection of Mantoua, and caſt the burthen thereof vppon Venice, which theſe ſeigniori will not vndertake.

1627.

ADVICES from Rome, touching the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Bohemia, Aquilea, and Venice, 1627.

GIOUEDI, dopo pranſo, in caſa del cardinale Bandino, decano de cardinale, fu tenuta una congregatione de primi cardinali della corte; il' titolo fù par Conſtantinopoli, è che quel' patriarca Greco manda in Ollanda diuerſi gioueneti Greci, accio ſiàno inſtruiti et imbuiti della dottrina di Caluino, par poter con queſto mezò introdure in Grecia ancora il Caluiniſmo: emulando Gregorio XIII. il quale, per introdure il' Catholichiſmo nel' ſettentrione, fundo collegij di ſimili fanciulli. Et ſtato il' papa di cio informato dalli Catholici di Ollanda, et in ſpecialita del veſcouo iui di ſecreto reſidente. Ma il moto principale gli e uenuto dalli altri veſcoui et prelati Greci, liquali, benche non reconoſcono il' papa come capo in poteſtate et juriſdittione della chieſa, lo confeſſano pero pro primate in dignitate et preeminenza, et à lui ricorrono par agiuto in quelli articoli ne'quali, inſieme col medeſimo papa, diſconuengono dalli Caluiniſti, Luterani, et ſimili. Et ora par cio apponto ſono ricorſſi a Roma accio il' papa, par mezzo di quei potentati Catholici li quali tengono ambaſciatori alla Porta in Conſtantinopoli, rimedija tanti mali, et faccia deporre et caſtigare quel' patriarca, il' quale con nouita di dottrine cerca di ſolleuare lo ſtato & imperio Ottomano: et portato il' negotio di queſta maniera contro il' patriarca, ſi crede che egli la fara molto male pure che li prencipi, ad inſtanza del papa, uogliano abbraciare l'impreſa. Ma par che communemente a tutti li prencipi——da poco guſto et ne ha molto pochi affettionati, ſendo egli con tutti inofficioſo, non ſo come uorranno entrare in queſta lizza et rompere coſi dura lancia par amor ſuo.

Chriſtiani ò eccleſiaſtici.

IL' negotio poi di Bohemia è, perche et negli anni gia molto fa paſſati, et in qua, non ha molto; moltiſſimi ſtati, poſſeſſioni, fauolta immobili et ſimili, le quali, preualendo li Proteſtanti, furono da loro occupate etu ſurpate a Catholici, maſſime eccleſiaſtici, et religioſi clauſtrali: hora par le vittorie del' imperatore ſono in dominio di caſa d'Auſtria, et d'altri, a quali Ceſare ne ha fatta parte; et li eccleſiaſtici et religioſi ſucceſſori chiedono li beni delle ſue chieſe, et delli loro monaſterij, â quali non puo preſcrittione malæ fidei, et uiolentiſſime leuare il' proprio. Non nega Ceſare, non negano gli altri prencipi Catholici, di uedere reſtituire alle chieſe et monaſterij li ſtati et poderi, quali eſſi hanno, dicono, a guerra giuſta tolti alli Proteſtanti, et eſſi Proteſtanti uſurparano alli ſerui di Dio, ma addimandati tempo, et di non fare la reſtitutione tutta inſieme, ma a poco a poco, et queſto in gratia, par reſarcimento di tante ſpeſe fatte nelle preterite guerre a pro della religione Catholica Romana. Al papa quanto dimanda, pare da un canto ragioneuole et uorrebbe in parte condiſcendere alla diſpenſa, par animarli maggiormente con queſta eſca al eſterminio delli altri prencipi Proteſtanti, et in particolare delle citta franche, ma dall' altro capo ſe piantano con longo tempo radici nel' altrui, malageuolute ſi potrano poi ſradicare, non eſſendo per la pratica dottrina piu difficile che quella della reſtitutione, prò adeſſo la conſulta quid expediat.

LA finiſſe la reſolutione et audire di Ba---, con l'oppreſſione delli Proteſtanti in Alemagna, et col uolere reſolutiſſimamente priuare et ſpogliare quanto prima dello ſtato anco Denamarca: ma machina beſtialmente contro .G. par priuarli di tutto lo ſtato di Frioli, et ha detto. bb. a perſona gia mio amico et padrone: ora peggio non poterebbe ſuccedere a G. che la morte del patriarca di Aquileia, ſtante Ceſare con tante ſoldateſche armate, fortunate, et uittorioſe di tutto il' ſettentrione. Perche gia prima che il' Frioli foſſe leuato da Auſtriaci, al patriarca, queſto patriarca era prencipe potentiſſimo del' imperio, et haueua nella dieta imperiale il' primo luogo: hora Ceſare vuole pigliare la difeſa del patriarcato, et reſtituire all imperio queſto prencipe, et recuperare allo ſteſſo prencipe tutto lo ſtato ſuo: dicendo di uolere anche egli darli Trieſte, Gradiſca, et excludere par ogni modo .G. faccia lo ſteſſo di quanto id Frioli poſſiede; perche non eſſendo il' patriarca, con cui guerreggiano, padrone, ſe non uiuendo di quello ſtato, niuno potea occuparlo nè preſcriuerlo, non ualendo la preſcrittione in iuſta partis: et li breui papali che pretendre .G. ſono exſtotti, et ad redimenda vexationem. Aggionge al papa par alletarlo in cio contro .G. che tutto fa egli par ingroſſare li prencipi Catholici del' imperio; accio Proteſtanti Venetia.

8627. ſtanti mai piu aleuano il' capo, ma ſiano del' tutto annichilati. Il' patriarca uiuente paſſa 70 anni, credo uederemo queſta ancora ma ſtia ſicura. 25 ſi machina gran male contro .G: come qui torchiano con mano a ſuo tempo ella uedra. Le bano di corte la mano Roma 35. li 13. Nouembre, 1627.

Abſtract of a Letter from HAMBURGH.

THERE is certainly ſom greate matter in hand; for there are 22 regiments gon in greate haſt from theſe parts up towards Nurenbergh, Ulme, and Franconia. It is ſurmiſed, that Leopaldus and the emperor goe not both one way; and that Leopald aimes to bee king of the Romans. For certaine, they meane to giue a blow ſomwhere, either in France, or in your territories; for as yet I cannot bee perſuaded that Leopaldus is flowen off: but it cannot be long concealed. Wee expect the forces of Denmarke and Sweden ſhortly into the land of Holſtein, and the ennemy lys ſcattered and in greate feare. The deputies of the Hanz townes are ſtill at Lubecke. I expect noe harme from them; and the denyall of ſhips to the emperor, and remaining neutrall, is offence enough; but when the emperor ſhall ſee them arme, which they doe priuatly, hee will bee highly offended.

THE king of Denmarke hath a fine ſeate called Wansbeck, within halfe a league of Hamburgh. One Ofondi, an Italian by birth, an arch-jeſuiticall papiſt, and chiefe doer and factor for all the papiſts; this man, hauing gotten the grant of Tilly and Walleſtein of this houſe, hath feaſted thoſe greate commanders in the ſaid houſe, and made it a kind of receptacle to the catholique, defaced the kings armes and name, and reformed all according to his owne pleaſure; and hauing on Wedneſday laſt giuen out moony and wares upon triple retorne, that the maſſe ſhall bee publiquely ſaid in Hamburgh verie ſhortly, and that Stode, Lukeſtat, and Grempe, ſhall bee rendred unto the emperor within a fortnight, ſpoken ſoe diſdainfully of the king, and ſoe ſaucilie of the magiſtrats, for ſuffering any of the kings counſellors or miniſters to ſtay in the towne; that ſame day going to Wansbecke, three horſe men came to him, and tooke him hard by the houſe, ſett him on horſebacke with a red cloake, hatt and feather, carryed him allſoe rownd about the towne, and to the riuer ſide, and there imbarqued, and went for Lukeſtat: a man of 60 years, well knowne to all the Jeſuits. Tilli doth ſtorm mightilie at this, but the magiſtrats cannot helpe it, the fact being doone in the kings owne houſe and juriſdiction. Saxe is wholy diſguſted, but dare not ſtirr, hauing men quartered round about his countrie. The duke of Saxe, his ſoone, hath beene elected archbiſhop of Magdeburgh; and ſince, the emperor hath proteſted againſt it, and will perforce haue his ſoone archbiſhop. The emperors forces are mightilie ſtrong in Pomerland, and upon the borders of Pruſſia, which the Polonians like not.

Hamburgh, March 1.
1628. ſtilo veteri.

POSTSCRIPT.

I WISH Leopaldoes ambition and means to bee king of the Romans, cold take effect: for wee all wold joyne with him, and, noe doubt, might expect better conditions for the Palatinate that way, then any other, except the king of Bohemia's ſoone might mach with the duke of Bauaria's brothers daughter; which matter was broached in king James his tyme, of happie memorie, by one Franciſco della Rota, who keept ſtill in the French ambaſſadors houſe in London, and went out of England with good ſatisfaction, and to the Hagh, and had conference with their majeſties there.

THE duke of Saxe hath aduanced greate ſomes of moony for the emperors ſeruice, and for his reward habebit beneficium ordinis; and hath allready 4 regiments quartered in his country.

THAT aduertiſement I ſent unto your lordſhip formerly, of an armie of 20000 to goe towards the ſtate of Venice under the commaund of the count of Sleeke, was certaine; and that nobleman, to whom hee offered one regiment of horſe, an other of foote, his owne couſin, and my familiar friend, hath aſſured mee of it.

AUVISI

AUVISI di Memminga, Anno 1628. a li primo Marzo.

SI auiſa che hieri il general di Mansfelt ſia arriuato a Langenau, 5 hore lontano di Meminga, et iui, ouero à Memingà, hauirà quartier, è ancota arriuato a Poſfingen appreſſo Vlmo; o cornitti di caualleria ſotto il colonello di Cronburg con alcuni pezzi de canoni, arriuandoné, et aſpettandone giornalmente di maggior numero, aſpettando in particolare ancora 6000 caualli. Li ſigniori d'Vlm, et circumuicini agreuati, hanno mandato il dottor Faribeller di S. M. Cª. per ueder come il fattro ſi ſià, promettendo una groſſa ſumma di dinari per leuar uia quelli aggraui, ſperando che in breue uenirà ordinanza di S. M. Cª. di marchiar piu inanzi. Sono 2 comiſſarij di ſua maeſta a Vlmo, l'uno con nome Volfio Rodolfo di Oſſà, l'altro un ſieur di Reitenau, quali non hanno ancora fatto propoſta, ne ſi ſa quello che uoglino proponere. Il prencipe di Lauenburg, et colonel Miroda marchiano con lor ſoldadeſca a Suenfurt, quali hanno ordine del general di Mansfelt, di non moleſtar le terre quali contribuiſcono alla legha Cattolica.

A LANGENAU hanno reſegnato, et quelle compagnie la attorno Meminga non erano ancora fornite, et coſi le hanno fornite con 600 borgheſi di Rempta, et Eiſna, quali per la pouertà ſi hanno rimeſſi, et mettono all' ordine le ſtange per ponerui le bandiere che medeſimamente doueuano reſegnare. Detta ſoldadeſca ſi hanno diportati malamente, poi che il tutto hanno ruinato, che molto contadini hanno biſogniato dar luocho, ſperando all'arriuo del general di miglior gouerno.

HIERI ſera all' improuiſo arriuorono a Meminga 60 caualli quali haueuano ordine di hauer quartier là, medeſimente ſi aſpettaua là una compª di fanteria, con ſperanza che in breue ſi ſaperà doue quella armata (qual ſi dice arriuare al numero di 40000) marchiarà. Il arciduca Leopoldo, duca di Bauiera, Heiburg, Virtenburg, ſi aboccorono inſieme a Ginzburg, ſette hore dilontano di Meminga, ſi come eſſo Leopoldo hà dormito queſta notte a Puxhaim, mezza horetta fora di Meminga, in un conuento di Cartuſeii, et hoggi sè fermato a Papenhauſen, $1\frac{1}{2}$ di Meminga, appreſſo il ſignior Gironimo Fuicher; ſi penſaua doneſſe entrare in Meminga, ma non é ſequito. Il uecchio ſignior conte Geor. Fuicher, chi habita in Meminga, è andato a compagnarlo. Si aſpetta a Meminga queſta ſera il veſcouo di Coſtanzia et Bellingen, quali medeſimamente debino arriuare a Ginzburg: quello che tratteranno il tempo lo dimoſtrerà.

COPIE of a Letter from Zurich, from Mr. OLIUER FLEMING to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

THE generall dieta of the Heluetians, mentioned in my two former letters unto your lordſhip, begineth to-morrow, the 2d of March, ſtilo veteri: by my next, I hoope to bee able to giue you information of what ſhall bee treated there.

THE regiments of foot of the count de Sults, Cratz, and Verdugo, being togither ſom 8000 men, haue taken their quarter within 6 howers riding of Schaffhauſen; which hath mooued theſe ſigniori to ſend 600 men in garriſon into a little citty of theirs called Stein, ſeated not farr from Schaffhauſen upon the Rhine: they haue allſoe ſent 500 men upon their confines towards Sueuia. Colonell Eſher is ſent in haſt to leauy a thouſand Germans, with expreſſe order to take none into ſeruice, but good experienced ſoldiers.

THESE ſigniori haue muſtered an hundred companies, each companie conſiſting of 200 men: the number in all doth amount to 20000 fighting men, who are drilled twiſe a weeke, and may bee brought into the feild in 24 howers warning. Beſids theſe, this citty is able to ſend into the feild, in few howers warning, 6000 men, and leaue the citty well guarded beſids. The cantone of Berne hath muſtered aboue 30000 men, who are ready, if neceſſitie require, to joyne with the forces of this cantone at firſt warning. The euangelical cantons are reſolued, if they be aſſalted, not onely to defend themſelfes valiantly, but allſoe to offend the ennemy to the uttermoſt of their power; intending to ſend an armie volant in Alſatia, and to putt all to fire and ſword that cometh in their way.

Zurich, March 1.
ſtilo vet. 1628.

From the Lord CARLETON to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very goode Lord,

NOW I am ſetting pen to paper, I am aduiſing how to excuſe my continuall excuſes, all my letters touching that ſtring, for being ſo ſlack in correſpondence with your lordſhip, from whom I receaue weekely letters, and euen now your laſt, of the 11th of this preſent; wherby I ſee in what ſtate monſ. Oſterwike was betwixt your ſelf and the French ambaſſador; and I ſhall long for your next letters, to know how he acquits himſelf towards you. The diſpute betwixt that ſtate and the pope, mentioned in your former letters, touching the inueſtiture of Aquileia, being but pugna verborum, will ſurely be ſoone pacified; but there will be more cerimonie in the matter of Mantoua, about which I ſhall gladly heare further from your lordſhip after the returne of the Spaniſh currier ſent from Milan. With my laſt I ſent your lordſhip certaine propoſitions of mine to the States; wherunto they haue made me ſo vnſatisfactorie an anſweare, both vnder one, that I haue returned it to them againe, without ſending it into England. Theyr ambaſſadors arriued at Graueſend the 14th of this preſent, where they ſtayde 3 or 4 dayes, till the kings returne from Hampton-court. I am ſure theyr very firſt audience will miniſter much new matter. Meane while I haue here with me Sir William Balfore and Mr. Dolbier, (a follower of count Manſfelte, whom you ſaw in his returne by Venice) who were diſpatched two dayes, by his majeſty, before the arriual of theſe ambaſſadors, with commiſſion to leauie, in theſe parts, 1000 horſe, and to buy arms for 10000 foote. All which are to be tranſported into England, where you will haue heard a parlement is aſſigned to beguin abowt the midſt of next month. And I finde by theſe gentlemen, his majeſty reſolues to appeare in the head of a royal armie; for the tranſport whereof a fleete of 100 ſhips of warre are preparing; wherunto I haue order to moue the States to adde a fourth part, according to the obligation of owr treatie; and I ſhall not dowbt of goode ſucceſſe, ſo the deſſigne be according to the intent of the treatie; otherwiſe theſe are a heauie people. God bleſſe all theſe great actions to the aduancement of his cauſe, and the goode of owr king and kingdomes. For this buſineſſe I attend the returne of the prince of Orange, who is lookte for back here to-morrow, from a jorney he hath made into Brabant, to viſit ſuch workes the States haue made in oppoſition to the ennemys fortifications about Sant Fleeta; to which the prince approched ſo neere, that the captaine of his ſhip had his leg ſhot of from one of them, of which he is ſince dead.

WE haue newes here, that the Spaniſh fleete and French are parted, with ſome vnkindnes betwixt the admirals, from before Rochel; and that the Spaniards are returned home. And, amongſt other particulars, I heare from Parys, that monſ. de Bethune being to returne from the ambaſſage of Rome, the new cardinal de Berul is to ſucceede him in that charge; which makes me deſpaire of any goode diſpoſition in the French king, to ſettle the affaires of his kingdome, leauing thoſe of the religion in peace, ſince he employes ſuch inſtruments, from which he will take direction in his counſells. For I know not a more paſſionat ſpirit then this cardinal, nor one more animated and inflamed againſt owr land.

VPPON anſweare of ſuch letters I ſent by my nephew, in companie of theſe ambaſſadors, I exſpect ſome goode ſubiect of writing to your lordſhip, which I will neuer omit, when I haue any thing worthie of you. Meane while, I pray you, lett monſ. Candale know his fauour to me is well placed, for the choiſe he makes of one that loues his perſon, and honors his merit very really and ſincerely. And I euer reſt

Hagh, this 28. of
February, 1628.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionately, to doe you ſeruice,

D. CARLETON.

BECAUSE my lord and my lady Veres letters come vſually too late for the poſt, I now ſend to call for them; and yf any come, they ſhall goe herewith. They were content, this laſt weeke, to ſuffer me to bring ſome gueſts with me to diner to them, which were the king and queen of Bohemia, and the princeſſe of Orange, in abſence of her husband; to whom they gaue royal entertainment.

ADUICES

1627.

ADUICES giuen the Tranſyluanian Agent, partly from Sir ISAKE WAKE, and partly from others. Feb. 29. 1627.

AD principem Valſteinenſem conceſſum eſt regnum Daniæ: cuius inveſtitura per ſubſcriptionem papæ, imperatoris, et Hiſpaniarum regis confirmata eſt; cum hac conditione reſtricta, vt corona regia reſignabitur, et auferetur: et ſub titulo ducis feudatarij imperij dominium habeat. Norvegia et pars Sueciæ Dano ſubiectæ, comiti Slich aſſignantur cum propoſito totum Suecorum regnum ei concedere.

HÆ ſunt Hiſpanorum cogitationes et molimenta, vbi menſe Julij, anno *præterito, in ciuitate Madridi concluſum erat, bellum in Germania proſequi, vſque prouinciæ ſubactæ, tributis, vectigalibus, et ſupplicijs tritæ, et devaſtatæ, amplius lacertos mouere non potuerint. Eodem loci etiam conſtitutum erat, imperatorem Ottomanum et Tranſiluaniæ principem circumvenire et fallere, et quæcunque eorum poſtulata pro tempore concedere, et eis in omnibus aſſentire; vſquedum Auſtriaci totam Germaniam ſubigerunt, et coniunctim principis Gaboris actiones recenſere et recudere, et earum nouam rationem exigere valebunt, et parati erunt. In arcanis Viennæ concilijs decretum eſt, Angliam, Daniam, Sueciam, et Belgiæ confœderatas prouincias, hoſtes imperij declarare. Eadem reſolutio in Venetos et Heluetios ſtabilitur; ſed non publice, donec Gallorum rex confœderationem confirmauerit. Interea temporis duci Leopoldo contra hos res nouas moliri cura commiſſa eſt: præcipue circa electionem noui patriarchæ Aquileæ, ex qua totum dominium Venetorum in Foro-julij dependet. Et ne impræſentiarum ſuſpectæ ſint eis hæ machinationes, diſcordias ſimulare, et ſimultates fingere, inter imperatorem et Leopoldum, neceſſarium videtur.

* 1627.

CUM Poloniæ rege circa Andream Battoreum conſulere ſtatutum erat: in prima occaſione eum Tranſiluaniam invadere paratum habere, et vicinitate et auxilio iſtius regni, principem Gabrielem deponere et caſtigare, et illius provinciæ montes pro munimento ſtabilire. Qua re infectâ, pax imperij, & Auſtriacorum monarchia, nunquam firma et ſecura eſſe poteſt.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

VPON the 5. of this moneth, the ſentence of baniſhment agaynſt the Jeſuites was put in execution; and theiſe here ſent away on a barke armado, with their Greeke aſſiſtant, that quarrelled agaynſt his majeſties honor, well guarded and chayned in irons; with order to ſhip them at Scio for France, to the joy of moſt chriſtians, and the peace of the Greecke church. The French ambaſſador reſts in contumacye, ſufficiently mortefyed. He continues the interdict of trade, and venteth his rage on his owne poore ſubiects; neyther ſuffering their laden ſhips to goe out, nor one come in, to unlade. So that they pray agaynſt him, as in the Letanye, From famine and peſtilence, libera nos, Domine. He ſtill braueth, that he will depart, and now he is putt to triall; the offence is taken from before his eyes, and he hath no hope to recall them. I thinke he knowes not which way to diſengage himſelfe; few beleeue that he hath the authoritye he pretends, or that France will breake for ſuch a cauſe; and when he will goe, he muſt firſt reckon with his creditors, among whom the poore Engliſh are miſerably out of 60000 dollors. The reſt of this quiet order, crept into many angles, principally ayming at Jeruſalem, to gett poſſeſſion of the holy ſepulchre, and to ſupplant the Zoccollanti, are like to follow their flagge, (for on theſe all the other depended) and to be baniſhed this dominion: which wilbe a great aduantage to my ſucceſſor, both in publicque buſineſs, and in the particular of balancing the French; who ſought here a monarchy ouer all chriſtians, tanquam univerſalis legatus.

THE Poliſh ambaſſador as yet hath no audience, and is prohibited, till then, any correſpondence with others. I am informed, he hath order to renounce the laſt capitulations made by the duke of Sbaraſs, and to looke higher to former treatyes; but what the purpoſe of quarrelling is, unleſs they haue ſome deſſigne upon Tranſiluania, I cannot penetrate. From Gabor we haue nothing. The diſpleaſure of this ſtate taken agaynſt him, the proiect of raiſing a competitor by the Cæſarean 1627. faction, and the admonition ſent me by your lordſhip concurring, may moue him, aboue my hope. I haue giuen his agent a diſcourſe gathered from them, and diuers other intelligences concerning him, that he may ruminate upon them, not ſeeming to haue any other end, but care of his preſeruation for the common bond of religion. The grand ſignior and theſe miniſters were ſo ſcandaliſed at him, and his owne ſubiects ſo prone to diſcontent, that the aduerſarye might eaſely haue deceiued both, by procuring the acceptation of ſome other. But therin I haue entered my caution in his behalfe; that by ſupporting him, and apprehending the occaſion of his feares, they might redeeme a braue ſeruant: by change they ſhalbe certeyne of an enemye. Therfore I haue moued the viziers to write to him, and to offer him protection, upon condition that he aſſure himſelfe to this empire; and by ſome meritt, and open act or declaration, that he approue his fayth, and cleare the juſt ſuſpition of being agreed, and fallen off to the houſe of Auſtria; or otherwiſe, the grand ſignor will prouide for the ſafety of the prouince. The counſell is ſincere to both; for this ſtate can haue no aſſurance of him, but by the offence of the emperor; nor he, of his owne ſafety, without their better ſatiſfaction; and depoſe him they cannot, without a warr, and hazard of all they poſſeſs in Hungarye. The motion is uery acceptable, and if I can procure it to be rightly conducted, he wilbe neceſſitated to purge himſelfe; and ſhall find, if he haue any nature or gratitude, that thoſe whom he had uniuſtely prouoked and offended, haue yet beene ſollicitous of his conſeruation, and to reconcile him to his witts and friends. I will not promiſe, that this fancy ſhall produce any great effect; but I foreſee, that he cannot walke in this neutralitye, and that his caſe is dangerous, unleſs he fixe ſomewhere ſincerely. While I haue nothing to doe, I can looſe no tyme; nor labour, from idlenes. Neyther doe I thinke of him, as a confœderate, to truſt or ſpend upon: but if he may be thruſt into action, in his owne element, for his owne cauſe, to make a ſcorreria into Auſtria, with his light horſe, to burne villages, and forage the enemies countrye, for which only he is able; Germany may haue great eaſe by him. If better happen, thoſe benefitts are moſt welcome that are beyond our hopes.

THREE Duch ſhips, more then the former aduiſed, are come in to the Arches to lade corne for Genoua, to make biskett for Spayne; which hath prouoked me to exclayme agaynſt the libertye or abuſe; and I haue procured ſtrict orders, diſpatched both by land and ſea, to preuent them; whereby, if any be taken, they are guilty of their owne fall, by treaſon; for their ambaſſador hath renounced them both to me and the capten baſſa. Some of them haue pretended a licence and command, the coppy wherof is ſent hither, gotten ſubreptitiouſly, and no man will now avow it. I hope to keepe them from this bread, and that it wilbe ualewed as a good and neceſſarye ſeruice.

THE Venice bailo here, did an office with me in the name of the ſenate; in particular, lamenting of the Dragon, for an inſolence done in their ſeas of Zant, agaynſt a ſhip of their ſubiects, miſtaken for a Frenchman; and in generall, of the too much forwardnes of our maſters within the ſight and protection of their ports, in aſſaulting the French, or ſearching for their goods. Remedy wherof they deſired of me. The firſt caſe I know, and doe confeſs, that ther was an offence done raſhly, but unwillingly; for which the maſter will make honeſt recognition. I haue entreated him to anſwere the ſenate; That it was not his majeſties will, that any of his ſubiects ſhould iniurye his friends; neyther did I hope, they would protect his enemies: that what had happened by the Dragon, was an error, ſuch as often chanceth in the ſea; for which there ſhould be giuen fitt animaduerſion: and that I would direct orders and admonition to thoſe trading in theſe parts, to gouerne and comport themſelues with the ſubiects of the ſenate, ſo as they might giue account of their actions before the tribunall of his majeſties juſtice: and that I hoped they ſhall haue no cauſe to complayne of the contrarye, at leaſt as far as my will or authoritye extendeth. If ther be any fitt occaſion, your lordſhip ſhall doe me a fauour to make the ſame replye and expoſition for me, wiſhing there were the ſame aptnes in that ſtate, to complye with us, and to redreſs other great abuſes and extortions done to his majeſties ſubiects in their dominions; and, which is worſt, under the title of juſtice, and bon governo.

HERE is preparation made of 250000 dollers, to be ſent in ſupply of the great vizier to Tocatt. Abaſa baſſa hath ſent deputyes to the kyng of Poland and Coſſackes, who haue beene outwardly well receiued; but what they haue treated in particular, or aduanced, is yet a ſecrett. That rebell doth proiect great matters, and whither the ſoldiers wilbe drawne into the fielde this yeare, or not, is uery doubtfull. The comming ſpring, with the ſunne, will enlighten and cleare many things; ſo praying for your lordſhips health and felicitye, I committ you to the gratious keeping of our bleſſed God, reſting, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{7}{17}$.
March, 1627.

THE agent of Tranſyluania, who ſince his reſidence neuer uiſited nor held any correſpondence with me, upon the enformation giuen him the laſt weeke, in the behalfe of his maſters ſafetye, this morning came to me, to confer about the contents therof, and to thancke me. I fynd he hath no order to make any motion, but a good enclination in himſelfe, being of our religion, and reputed an honeſt man, to doe any good office in his power. He lamented exceedingly the perſecution of the proteſtants in Germany, and the feare of the ſame rod in his owne countrye: he proteſted to haue written in that ſubiect often to his prince, who, as he ſayes, hath his miniſters, both in the marquiſate of Brandeburgh, and other places, to obſerue the proceedings of the emperor; and that it is impoſſible, that ſo wiſe a man ſhould ouerſee his owne ruine in the increaſe of the Auſtrian power, and not tymely reſolue to oppoſe and preuent yt. That his maſter did ſufficiently know the practices of the Imperialls agaynſt him; that he had no truſt in them; but was aſſured they purpoſed reuenge upon him, when their other occaſions permitted; but that he was enforced to diſſemble, ſeing himſelfe forſaken of the Turkes, and not ſupplyed by his allies. That it was uery true, that he was in great danger and jealouſye of this ſtate; but able to defend himſelfe, if he were enforced: but that he hoped, there would be found a better temper; and to that end he had counſelled the prince to a reconciliation with the grand ſignor, and to caſt himſelfe wholy into his protection, therby to aſſure the foundation: wherin he had ſo far preuayled, that two dayes ſince he had receiued letters, and deliuered them to the chimacham, full of ſatisfaction; and that within 15 dayes ſignior Todolagi would be here as extraordinarye ambaſſador, to giue account for him, and to redintegrate him into his former confidence, in which office he deſired my concurrence. I held it to be a good omen, that we both fell upon one conſideration, and promiſed to aſſiſt him; and then opened to him, what I had alreadye begunn, to the ſame end, without any reflection upon our ſelues, but only in contemplation of the common bond of one true religion. And as he made no other ouuerture, nor intimation of any confœderacy paſt, or to come, or of any purpoſe in his prince to breake with the emperor; only that it was firſt neceſſary to recouer his creditt in this port, to make him able; and then to leaue it to God, and to his owne wiſdome, to conſider how neceſſarye it was to oppoſe the common enemye; ſo I made no ſhow to him of any hope we had, or any purpoſe in me, to beginn new treatyes; but that this communication paſſed betweene us, as priuat men, well affected to our religion, and the publicque libertye: yet ſome impreſſion on both ſydes, I ſuppoſe, is taken; and it is not impoſſible, that Gabor may redeeme his honor for conſcience, ſhame, or neceſſitye. And ſo I leaue theeſe ſeedes to Gods bleſſing, and the dew of heauen. Both before, and at the arriuall of the ambaſſador, I will prepare theſe miniſters to make him uſefull to us, and ſeruiceable to them. Agayne, God keepe your lordſhip, as wiſheth

Conſtantinople, $\frac{8}{18}$.
March, 1627.

Your, &c.

To the Lord Viſcount CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

THIS ſtate hath reſolued to proſecute the war this ſummer in Aſia; for though the renitence of the ſoldiers, and many impediments, did perſwade againſt it, yet not to haue moued at all was thought too playne a diſcouerye of their owne infirmitye, and would too much encourage the enemye; eſpecially Abaſſa, who had practiſed both the Tartars, Poles and Coſſacks; and what their confirmation is, is as yet more feared then knowne. A *conductor of the militia is choſen, and two dayes ſince paſſed the water to Aſya ſyde, with the prouiſion: much new ordenance is caſt, which the grand ſignor went to ſee in the founders office; and from thence to the arſenall, to giue order for the gallies. It is ſpread, that this new generall ſhall march directly to Diarbeker, to oppoſe the Perſian, and there remayne as baſſa of the prouince, with a diuiſion of the armye; but ſecrettly he is made great vizier, and the ſeale ſhalbe giuen him, when he is on the way. This is done partly to ſaue charges, becauſe to that eminent degree apperteynes great expence in ſetting out; and partly for reſpect of Halil, baſſa in Tocat, that he may not ſeeme to be diſplaced in diſgrace; but he ſhall ſurrender to the other, and retyre hither ſalvo honore. When he ſhalbe declared prime vizier, it is thought, he hath alſo order to change his wayes; but whither, is not knowne. I beleeue they will not attempt much this yeare, but only ſhow to keepe the field, and the reputation of an armye. The ſoldiers are proclaymed to take their pay with the vizier, or to be diſrolled; and that will make them follow ſlowly agaynſt that day, when their muſters are fulleſt.

* Huſureph baſſa a vizier, and late aga of the Janitzaries.

THER is a great man of the Georgeans, called Mugurene, one of the commanders of their armies, turned Turke: the grand ſignor hath uſed him with vnuſuall bountye and curteſye; for he promiſeth to doe great matters againſt the Perſian, whoſe vanitye hath encouraged and helped forward this expedition. He was offered the charge of baſſa of Natolia, but refuſed it, chooſing that of Marus, of no worth; pretending, that lying on the borders both of his owne countrye and Perſia, that he would doe vnexpected ſeruices: but he is a montebank, caſt out from his owne; and if ther be no other ſecrett of treaſon and conniuence with the Perſians, he will doe no great harme, but to himſelfe, that hath ſold his ſoule to iniquitye.

THE capten baſſa doth prepare two fleetes, one ſmaller, to guard the Black-ſea, the other to viſitt in his owne perſon the Medeteran, which is moſt requiſite; and I hope, he ſhalbe enabled to proceede. But the Tartars hauing lately entered Poland, and returned with bootye, and 6000 captiues, the Coſſacks, glad of the occaſion, prepare 200 frigatts for reuenge. If that rumor continew, all the force of this citty wilbe converted to defence, and the Leuant ſeas deſerted, where ſo many diſorders are committed, that it is moſt neceſſarye to preſs a reformation: for both the grand ſignors ports are cloyed with piratts, and the coaſts of Sicely and Naples are not only ſecure at home, but they boldly lade corne in Albania and Morea, which now are become their granarye: and becauſe that ſtollen libertye is not enough, the Duch help the Spaniard, whoſe ſhips were laden all but one before the prohibition arriued: which iniurye, I hope, his majeſtie will ſtrongly reſent, and complayne to the States, that ſome execution may be done vpon ſuch offenders, who fede both our and their enemies, for the lucre of fraight.

THE Poliſh internuntio is ready to take his leaue, with ſatisfaction of his demands in all but one poynt; that it might be lawfull to follow the Tartars, and invade them in their owne countrye, without breach of peace; which theſe miniſters reiected, vnleſs the ſame liberty might be giuen the Turkes againſt the Coſſaks. His buſines was of no great conſequence, but pro forma to renew capitulations; and ſuch is the neceſſitye and zeale of this empire, to enterteyne peace with all their neighbors, and to reſtreyne the Coſſacks, that they meete more then halfe way any propoſition that may giue them ſecuritye, or hope of it, for the preſent.

I HAUE had a free conference with the chimacham, concerning the neceſſitye to reconcile the prince of Tranſiluania, and to aſſure him to the grand ſignor, by ſome declaration againſt his enemies; and found in him an earneſt inclination, mixed with ſuſpition. He told mee of the letter of ſubmiſſion newly deliuered him, and the promiſe of an ambaſſador to confirme it; but that he doubted it was not ſincere, and that the meſſenger was ſent to explore them, and to enterteyne tyme; becauſe that he knew the ambaſſadors employed from Gabor to Shachin Ghiray, had moued him to joyne in the ſurpriſe of Bugdania and Valachia, and to diuide them. He deſired me to ſound his agent, and to diſcouer the truth to him; and if I found, that he did faythfully purpoſe a returning to the grand ſignors obedience, that he ſhould be accepted and nouriſhed. He reuealed to me great jealouſye of the emperor, that by many circumſtances they had cauſe to ſuſpect ſome fraud in the delay of the ratification of the treatye, hauing heard nothing from thoſe parts in 4 moneths; and it is moſt certeyne, that vntill 30 dayes ſince, the laſt internuntio ſent hither with the capitulations, and the grand ſignors commiſſioner returned with him, were both ſtayed by Morteſa baſſa in Buda, and not ſuffered to proceede; becauſe the firſt meſſenger diſpatched by him to Vienna, when this Hungar came hither, was not ſent back; and the ſetting forth of the greate ambaſſador for finall conſummation was delayed vpon pretence of ſicknes, and the election of a new, which is taken for a deluſion. On all ſydes they are full of ſuſpition, and therfore they haue appoynted Chinan baſſa, a vizier, to guard in Adrianople, and to make ſhow of rayſing the frontyre and Grecian army; hoping therby to quicken the emperor, and to fright Gabor. If they can, they will haue peace; but many concurrences doe giue ſome ſmall hope, that it may be otherwiſe. In this coniuncture of vacillation, here is taken a Greeke, ſent from the vice-re of Naples, a ſpye for the kyng of Spayne in the houſe of the emperors agent, who is gone of deuotion (as his ſeruants ſay) to Jeruſalem; wheryvpon his enterpreter hath hid himſelfe, and his houſhold was in great feare. The matter is new, and I know not the ſecrett; but it ſeemes, ſomwhat is or might be diſcouered of importance, which doth much offend this ſtate; eſpecially at this inſtant, of expectation of the ambaſſador to ratefye the peace, that the emperors miniſters ſhould harbour and protect the ſpyes of their declared enemyes. This is a fauour of their new friendſhip, by which I hope they will judge the future expectance. It is reported, that ther is gone an order to arreſt the agent; but I beleeue not they will proceede ſo rigorouſly. Another meſſenger from Vienna is catchd, with letters in cyphar directed to one Antonio Roſſi, brother, as I ſuppoſe, to that Roſſi baniſhed with the Jeſuites; or to himſelfe, the chriſtian name changed, to diſguiſe it. All birds of one feather. Theſe ſeuerall practices layd togither, may produce vnexpected mutations; wherin I will not omitt to nouriſh euery apparence, though I haue fayth in nothing, agaynſt the neceſſitye of this ſyde to embrace peace, and the ambition of the other to reigne, by aduantage of war and tymes, ouer all, that are too weake to oppoſe them. Humbly referring the judgement to his majeſties wiſedome, and my ſelfe to your lordſhips fauour, I euer reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, 22. March, 1627.

THESE two mentioned ſpyes are all one, multiplyed by the firſt rumor. The man apprehended is come from Naples: his papers in cyphar. And ſo theſe miniſters are at a dead fault, and can make nothing of them; being vnable to follow their game paſt the firſt furye. Ther is certeynly ſome matter of conſequence, that the interpreter had two dayes abſented himſelfe, who now peepes abroad; but the diſpleaſure of this ſtate burnes the more inwardlye.

RECAPITULATION of all the Negotiations of Sir ISAKE WAKE, in the Yeare 1627.

THE yeare being now expired, I hold it my dutie to ſumm up the occurrences thereof; that by looking back upon things paſt, your lordſhip may in the ſame glaſſe ſee the ſtate of things preſent, and conjecture of the future.

AT the beginning of the yeare, the ſtate was importuned by three ſeuerall princes, to contribute ſomthing to the common cauſe: the marquis of Baden employed the colonel Brett; the king of Denmark, doctor Kratz; and for the prince of Tranſiluania, heere did appeare colonel Peplitz, and the other Mansfeldians. Monny was the thing deſired, and though euery one ſeuerally did require a contribution, yet was there this uniformity in their negotiations, that all did declare themſelues ſatisfyed, 1627. if any one might be ſupplyed. Brett, who came firſt, was the firſt diſpached with a letter of compliment to his maiſter, and a chaine of 200 crownes for himſelfe; but with a direct excluſion of his propoſition. Doctor Kratz was defrayed, during his aboade heere, and diſmiſſed with a preſent of 800 crownes, and a reſponſall letter to his maiſter: the anſwers hee receiued, were genericall, and verie ambiguouſe; of which no other ſence cold bee made, but that they wold not declare themſelues unto Kratz, who at his departure left the purſuit of his negociation unto mee, and Sir John Berk. Peplitz did ſpeede noe better for Gabor, it beeing told him at his firſt audience, That whatſoeuer negotiations did depend upon the count Mansfelt (as his did) were fallen to the ground at his death.

Note the diſcouragement of Gabor, and a peruerſe anſwer to a prince, as if his perſon were neglected.

THE marquis of Baden, after the negatiue receiued from the ſtate of Venice, did yet offer vnto mee to ſett on foot his pretended diuerſion with the help of other freinds, in caſe his majeſtie wold make good what hee had promiſed; wherof he did receiue aſſurance by my ſeruant Oliuar Flemming, whom I diſpatched expreſly towards him: but the archduke Leopald, hauing diſcouered the deſigne, did preuent it, by lodging new troops in the marquiſate, which did come ſoe neere to the marquis, that hee was in daunger to haue beene ſurpriſed in Rhetel, if he had not fled to Baſill; from whence hee after journeyed towards the king of Denmark, where he hath remained ever ſince.

IN March I had order from the king of Denmark to ſend unto him the count de la Tour, which was performed according to his deſire; the count hauing ſpontaneouſly reſigned his charge heere, to ſerue his country and religion, where hee was called. The ſenate did refuſe to giue him leaue the firſt tyme that it was asked; but they cold not refuſe to lett him goe, when hee did take leaue of himſelfe: in which action hee got as much honour, as the ſtate of Venice did loſſe.

AFTER this, they were again mooued by mee for Gabor, who was not then knowen to bee loſt, but recommended by Sir Thomas Roe; and when the adminiſtrator of Magdebourgh arriued at Venice, hee did likewiſe renew the king of Denmarks ſuit for aſſiſtance: but all was to noe purpoſe; for either the ſenate did returne noe anſwere, or ſuch as noe conſtruction cold bee made of.

CONCERNING the difference betwixt his majeſtie and the French king, I haue this yeare ſpoken three tymes in the colledge, in Aprill, Auguſt, and Nouember; the two firſt tymes, upon occation preſented to mee by the doge; and the laſt, to anſwere at once unto a greate manny of ſcandalouſe papers and libells, which the French had ſcattered over all Italie. For the merchants of the Engliſh nation I did appeare twiſe in colledge, and procure them ſuch ſatiſfaction, as they did deſire for the preſent; and there are all the negotiations that haue paſſed through my hands this yeare, with the ſenate of Venice, by way of propoſitions and anſwers.

THE principall occurrences of Italie, this yeare, haue beene theſe: In Februarie the French and Spaniards did ſurrender the Valtelina unto the pope; Torquato Corti did take poſſeſſion thereof in his name, and immediatly retire againe; leauing the prouince free in ſhew, but really ſubjected to the Spaniards, who are abſolutely maſters of that paſſage. The Valtelineſchi haue beene all this yeare dreſſing a new forme of gouernment; but all their projects hitherto haue beene ſoe anarchicall, that noe one forme hath pleaſed either themſelues or others. The French ambaſſador at Coire doth exclaime againſt the Valtelineſchis proceedings; proteſting that they are contrarie to the interpretation that his maſter hath giuen unto the treatie of Monzon: but hee hath noe voyce in chapter; and Don Gonzales de Cordoua, gouernor of Milan, doth diſpoſe of thoſe people as he liſts. This may in time prooue lapis ſcandali; for the French cannot bee ſoe dull as not to ſee the daily encroaching of the Spaniards and Auſtriaci that way; and the Venetians, who doe verie well foreſee their owne ruin, are not wanting daylie to quicken the French king with ymportunate clamors.

AS ſoone as the Valtelina was redepoſited into the hands of the pope, the Venetians did wholie diſarme, a little more haſtelie then they needed; and as at this preſent they haue but ten companies of Ultramontani, ſoe, if they ſhold heereafter haue neede of auxiliaries, it is a queſtion where they may find any, and how they may paſſe. The Spaniards haue not been ſoe forward in the ſtate of Milan; for although at the begining of the yeare they did diſmiſſe Popenhaim and his regiment, to reenforce Tillie; and afterwards Illo, and the count of Sultz, to ſerue the archduk Leopald; pald; yet haue they ſtill retained all the troups of count Carlo Mansfelt, and haue ſoe reenforced themſelues with Biſogni out of Spaine, that their armie is of good conſideration; and if they ſhold attempt any innovation in Italie, they may execute what they liſt, before any oppoſition can bee made. 1627.

BETWIXT the duk of Sauoy and the Genoeſi, there haue paſſed all this yeare altercations, repriſalls, and acts of reciprocall hoſtilitie; mixed with treaties of accord, which are of a double nature.

SAUOY and Genoua haue treated apart, and had intention to accommodate betwixt themſelues, without arbitrators. Genoua did ymploy the biſhop of Vintimiglia, and the duk of Sauoy the caualier Paſer. Theſe two commiſſioners were agreed upon ſuch articles as might content both partys; but the Genoueſi, preſuming the duk of Sauoy was as ſhure of the protection of France, as they were of Spaine, did ſtill remitt all unto Madrid, and wold never com to any concluſion. Now the deciſion of the controverſie did remaine in hands of the king of Spayn and France, who haue verie cuningly giuen their determinatiue ſentence and concluſion, and bound themſelfes to force both parties to ſtand to their ſentence; but as yet, that arreſt is not pronounced.

IN this place, I muſt needs make mention of Mr. Walter Montagu, whoſe firſt coming to the court of Sauoye, in Aprill, did make a great noiſe: if hee hath advantaged the common cauſe in any thing, it is more than hee hath declared to mee: It is advertiſed hither, that hee hath been taken upon the frontire of Lorraine. Of all his negotiations I will ſay nothing, (allthough he did ſend Mr. Hales from Turin to Venice, to giue mee part of all that hee had treated) becauſe hee himſelfe hath beene in England ſince; and ſent Mr. Wood, ſince his ſecond coming, to Turin.

WHAT forces the duke of Sauoy hath on foot, or the Genoueſi, your lordſhip muſt expect to heare from Mr. Hales: but really they haue none of any conſideration; and as the Genoueſi are bound to adhere to Spaine, ſoe the houſe of Sauoy muſt depend upon France. It is true, that the duke of Sauoy doth hate France, and the prince of Piedmont doth not encline that way, and all the Infante are of the Spaniſh partie; but they haue caſt themſelfs into ſuch thraldom, that they cannot retire, and now they muſt bee French in faction, if not in affection.

FERDINAND GONSAGA, duke of Mantoua, died at the beginning of the yeare; hauing beene long ſick, both in body and mind, and raigned twelue years with little ſatisfaction; his inclination to poetrie, muſique, alchimy, and other ſuch ſtudys, hauing diuerted him from the theorie or practiſe of good gouernment, and made him more fitt for a cloiſter then to meſnage a ſcepter. His death produced noe innouation; for immediatly his ducheſſe dowager retyred to Florence, and his brother Vincentio Gonzaga aſſumed the gouernement of ſtate. This prince was heertofore a cardinall likewiſe, as his brother Ferdinand had beene; but as hee did quicly caſt away his red hat for a wife, and marrie the counteſſe Iſabella di Nouellara, princeſſe of Bozzuolo; ſoe, ſince, hee wold as willingly caſt of his wife, but cannot. This diuorce hath beene in agitation in the court of Rome theſe ſix yeares, and there it is like to hang as long againe; for notwithſtanding that the emperor doth fauour the deſire of the duke his brother-in-law, yet the French doe oppoſe it; and the pope doth partially encline to monſieur di Neuers, whoſe ſucceſſion doth reſt aſſured, as long as the duke of Mantoua will not converſe with this wife of his, and cannot marrie another.

FLORENCE hath afforded noe matter of conſequence; onely towards the latter end of the yeare, a queſtion hath riſen about the marrying of the elder ſiſter of that duke; who hauing beene formerly promiſed to Edward Farneſe the yong duke of Parma, hath ſince, by the queene mother in France, been demaunded for the duke of Orleans; but it is thought, that the buſineſſe will eaſilie bee accommodated: for the houſe of Medices hath a magazine of ladys, to furniſh all the princes of Chriſtendom with wiues; and monſieur de San Chaumont, who hath this yeare beene ymployed once allready into Italie to comply with the new duke of Mantoua, in the name of the French king, is now com again into theſe parts, with commiſſion to goe to Florence, Parma, and Roome, and to gett either the elder or yonger daughter of Florence for the duke of Orleans. The pope is a little auerſe, and doth earneſtly preſſe for a daughter of Bauaria to bee giuen to monſieur; hooping that an alliance of that nature may intereſt the crowne of France in the protection of the duke of Bauaria, and the confirming the poſſeſſion of the electorate Pallatinate in his perſon 1628. and houſe. Hee doth glorifie himſelfe much in the league, which hee hath contracted betwixt France and Spaine; and as hee doth promiſe himſelfe the honour, by the collegation of thoſe two crownes, to reduce all Chriſtendom to the obedience of the ſea of Rome; ſoe hee hath a greate ambition to reunite the Greeke church to the Latin, about which worke he doth trauayle verie ſeriouſly. In that court the French are the more loued at this preſent, in regard that they doe all that hee wold haue them doe; but it is a queſtion, whether the Spaniard bee more feared or hated. It is certaine, that the conſtable of Nauarra, ſoone to the duke of Alua, viceroy of Naples, beeing ymployed to Roome in the ſpring in an extraordinarie and ſolemne ambaſſage, did depart with ſmall ſatisfaction; and ſince that tyme the conde d'Ogniate, who doth reſide there in ordinarie for the king of Spaine, hath beene ſoe bafled by the pops nephew, that his ſoone doth not dare to com into Rome, nor the ambaſſador to ſtirr out of his houſe, where hee doth ſtand ſtrongly upon his guards.

BETWIXT the pope and the Venetians, the intelligence is better of late, then it was formerlie: for ſince France retired out of the league, they haue carryed themſelfes with more obſeruance toward the pope; yet that inſtrument is not tuned ſoe perfectly, but that daylie ſom ſtring is diſcordant, either tuching matter of confine or juriſdiction in the gulfe, or the puniſhing of delinquent preiſts and fryars; and if monſieur Grimani, patriarch of Aquilea, (who hath allmoſt 80 years) ſhold die, it wold bee hard for the Venetians to auoid a daungerouſe check; for the emperor doth lay ſtrong claime to that jus patronatus, which hee doth ſay the Venetians haue uſurped; and the pope, who doth pretend as ſtrongly therunto as either of them, will not bee brought to confirm the election that each of them haue made for a coadjutor or ſucceſſor, that when the place ſhall fall voide, hee may diſpoſe of it as hee liſt. This doth import noe leſſe then all Friuli, which is ſubject to he juriſdiction of the patriarch; and if any ſhold bee inveſted in that ſea, who is not a gentleman of Venice, they will looſe the beſt flower in their garland.

SMALL ſtore of moony hath com this yeare out of Spaine into Italie; I cannot preciſely tell what hath beene brought to Genoa. The Spaniards talk of 500000 crownes, but they doe uſe to amplifie; and if they doe ſpeake treuth, much of it was ymployed towards the payment of the old debts; for nothing hath beene remitted for the ſtate of Milan, as doth appeare by the embaſſage which they haue now ſent into Spaine, to complaine of their gouernor Don Gonzales di Cordoua, who hath made them beare the whole burden of defraying that armie. From Genoa to Venice (which is the ordinarie ſcale) there hath come this yeare only 200000 crownes, which was remitted to Antwerp; and coming to late to ſaue Grol, hath beene ymployed upon the ſetting forth of the fleete of Oſtend and Dunkirk.

IN Apulia, there hath beene this yeare prodigiouſe earthquakes, which haue ſwallowed up many townes; and moſt of the riuers of Italie haue ſoe deborded, that they haue come ſhort in their harveſt, loſt the beſt part of their vintage, and are threatned with a dirth, which is in part felt allready.

THIS yeare hath beene cloſed with the death of Don Vincenzo Gonzaga, duke of Mantoua; who was the laſt male of Federigo Gonzaga, whoſe deſcendants haue gouerned that ſtate the ſpace of one hundred years and more. Now they are to remount to the brother of Federigo, who was Ludouico Gonzaga, from whom is deſcended the duke of Neuers, unto whom the ſucceſſion doth belong de jure. Don Ferrante Gonzaga, marquis of Guaſtalda, doth pretend unto the inheritance, and hee is ſupported by the Spaniards: it will appeare quicly, whether hee can doe any thing, or not; and my weekly diſpatches will aduertiſe your lordſhip of all that ſhall paſſe.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

IT will not ſeeme ſtrange unto you, that I did write nothing touching the ouuertures lately propounded unto you by the Dutch ambaſſador; when you ſhall underſtand that I neuer heard one word tending to that purpoſe, until I receaued your lordſhips letter, dated the 26th of January. Nothing did paſſe betwixt the adminiſtrator and mee, after his returne, but his relation of Gabor's apoſtacye; and thereof I did immediately giue an account, both unto my lord Conway, and to your lordſhip ; and therfore, if you haue entertayned any opinion of my being 1628. negligent, I ſhall deſire you to abſolue mee from the ſuſpition of that crime, of which I am altogither innocent. Since the receipt of your letter I haue ſpoken with Van Sonneuelt the Dutch ſecretary, who doth confeſſe, that the adminiſtrator did ſaye ſomething to him to that purpoſe, and tell him, that as he had commanded Scultetus to ſpeake ſome ſuch language to the king of Denmarke, ſo he himſelfe would do the like at his arriuall at the Haghe. Sonneuelt, as from himſelfe, doth confeſſe to haue intimated thus much to the Dutch ambaſſador ſignor Haga, and deſired him to deliuer his opinion of the poſſibility or impoſſibility of the buiſineſſe. This hath giuen occaſion, as I ſuppoſe, unto ſignor Haga, to tempt your lordſhip, and to ſound your opinion, for the direction of his owne judgment ; for I can aſſure your lordſhip, that he had not then any commiſſion to make any ſuch ouuertures ; and if he haue nowe, hee muſt be beholding to your lordſhip for it.

WHEREAS your lordſhip doth require mee to deliuer my opinion therein, I ſhall on the other ſide deſire to bee excuſed, as being extra ſphæram actiuitatis & intellectus mei ; and becauſe I will not preſume to bee wiſer then my booke, I will ſend your lordſhip what I haue receaued from the king of Denmarke, to that purpoſe, with expreſſe order to tranſmit it unto you. One circumſtance I will note in matter of time, which maye ſeeme to argue ſome fatality in that buſineſſe ; namely, that the letters of the king of Denmarke, and thoſe of your lordſhip, did come to my hands both togither, uppon one day ; and that there is uery little difference in the date of them both, which is ſomething ominous, conſidering the diſtance. In obedience to the commandements of that king, I do now ſend your lordſhip here incloſed the copye of his letter, and of an other written by Scultetus to mee, hauing changed in both of them the cifre in which they had written, and put them into the cifre that your lordſhip hath of mine. Thoſe letters do expreſſe ſo clearely the deſire of that king, that you will ſee I do ſerue onely but as a porta-lettere, to conueigh unto your lordſhip ſuch letters as he doth addreſſe unto mee ; and hauing donne that, I do ſuppoſe that I haue ſufficiently acquitted my ſelfe of my duty. Your lordſhip will finde theſe ouuertures uery different from thoſe which the Dutch ambaſſador did make ; and if they be pratticable, I doubt not but your lordſhip will do your beſt to giue ſatisfaction unto that king.

WEE are made beleeue here, that Gabor hath declared himſelfe againſt the emperor, by protecting the proteſtants in Hungary, whom the Palatin, by order from the emperor, would haue expulſed out of that prouince, if the Hayduchi and Uſſari, ſent by Gabor to aſſiſt them, had not cauſed him to retire with ſome loſſe. This is confidently affirmed by one of quality, lately come hither from Vienna ; but I can hardly beleeue any good of that prince. I cannot heare yet, that he hath employed any one into Spayne ; and I am of opinion, that the greate ſecreate diſcouered by him to the grand ſignor, was a chimæra of his owne inuention ; for I do not finde any confront, and yet I haue ſent one expreſly to Vienna, to reſide there, and to obſerue all the proceedings in thoſe parts. Something I haue met withall tending to that purpoſe ; but I do not ſee that Gabor hath any part therein. Your lordſhip, I hope, hath receaued a paper of auviſi ſecreti, which I ſent unto you three months ſince. In conformity unto that aduertiſment, I will now tell your lordſhip, that the emperor
I haue underſtood, from a uery good hand, that 91 a. hath, of late, inſtantly the ſtate of Venice t h e t u r 28 13
moued 68. b. to joyne with him againſt 49. 21. 12. 64. 50. 51. 45. 28. 13. 70. 69.
And becauſe this aduertiſment is well grounded, and really true, I do leaue it to the wiſdome of your lordſhip to make the beſt uſe thereof, adding onely this worde, Venetians
that the 87. b. haue abſolutely rejected the motion.

CONCERNING your Greeke biſhop, long ſince recommended unto mee, hauing donne then as much as I was able, and ingaged the duke of Sauoye, and the prince cardinall, I muſt now confeſſe, that I cannot ſerue your lordſhip any further therein, becauſe the cardinal is retired, and all that houſe in contumacie, at this preſent, with the court of Rome.

THE Imperialiſts do ingroſſe fearefully in the circle of Sueuia, and their rendeuous is about Vlme and Meminga. Wolfe Manſfelt is generall of the army ; and as their preſent poſture doth lye fit for Italye, Heluetia, Metz in France, and the Lowe

Countryes

1628. Countryes hauing the maſtery of the Rhine, from Briſſack to Cologne; ſo, if you will looke uppon your mappes, you ſhall finde, that they are lodged uppon the brinck of the Danube nauigable, where they may imbarque all their army downwards, and tranſport it into Hungary with facility, and without oppoſition. I haue, of purpoſe, put this aduertiſment out of his due place, to auoid ſuſpition; and although my letter maye ſeeme a rapſodye, in regarde of the disjointednes of the diſcourſes; yet your lordſhip, in your wiſdome, will, I am ſure, make good uſe of this auuiſo. So, wiſhing your lordſhip and your noble lady all happineſſe, and longing to ſee you here in Venice, I leaue you to the protection of the Almighty; and reſt

Venice, 30th March,
1628, ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull and humble frend and ſeruant,

I. Wake.

Because your lordſhip doth command mee to let you know what the Dutch ambaſſador hath written in anſwer to the ſecretary of Holland, I haue, for your ſatiſfaction, ſent you here incloſed, a copye of his letter, tranſlated into French by the ſecretary.

COPIE of the King of Denmark his Letter to Sir Isaac Wake.

Christianus IV. D. G. Danniæ, Noruegiæ, Wandalorum Gothorumq; Rex, Sleſuici, Holſatiæ, Stormariæ, ac Dithmarſiæ Comes in Oldenburg, et Delmenhorſt.

Singulari gratia et fauore noſtro regio præmiſſis, generoſe, ſincere grateq;
commissario nobis dilecte, ex 8. 36. 32. 33. 23, 47. 48. 3. 46. 23. 36. ac fidelis noſtri dilecti schulpteto
Johannis 47. 8. 21. 51. 30. 41. 4. 13. 50. 36. obſequiſſima relatione nomine Dn.
administratore de halla
1. 10. 32. 23. 35. 27. 47. 50. 45. 3. 50. 36. 46. 13. 10. 13. 21. 3. 30. 31. 3. agnati, adfinis, filii, atq; compatris noſtri cariſſimi, nobis factâ, clementiſſime intelleximus pecunias gaborcos
41. 13. 8. 51. 35. 23. 4. 47. illas quas præterito anno 19. 3. 6. 37. 46. 8. 36. 48.
tantinopolim
50. 3. 35. 50. 23. 34. 37. 41. 36. 30. 23. 32. tranſcribi juſſimus, melius ac utilius turce impendi non poſſe, quam ſi inter aulæ 50. 51. 46. 8. 13. præcipue vero primum uezir cimachao turca
51. 13. 62. 23. 46. et 9. 23. 33. 1. 8. 22. 3. 36. quorum conſiliis 50. 51. 46. 8. 3. in arduis negotiis præcipue utitur, nec non reliquos præcipue autoritatis purpuratos consiliarios
ac 8. 36. 34. 47. 23. 30. 24. 1. 45. 27. 40. 48. diſtribuantur, eo fine, ut vel inſtante
pacis menſe Maio ſolennem hanc prope 41. 4. 8. 23. 47. concluſæ confirmationem
turca omnibus viribus impediant, vel etiam proxima æſtate arma 49. 51. 45. 8. 3. erga vngarde austrie fines 51. 35. 19. 1. 45. 10. 13. et 1. 51. 47. 49. 45. 23. 13. promouere et diuertere
turca conentur. Quorum prius ex eo fundamento factu procliue erit, quod 49. 51. 45. 8. 1.
pacis Impre.
dictæ 41. 1. 8. 23. 47. confirmationem ab 91.a. per internuncium ſuum elapſo Septembri tranſmiſſam jamjam in manibus habeat, ideoq; ab omni incurſione, et prouinciarum ſuarum infeſtatione tutus et ſecurus eſſe poſſit, quamdiu etiam ratificationem
45. 1. 49. 23. 18. 24. 8. 1. 49. 23. 37. 35. 15. 33. ex parte ſua ſuſpenderit: poſterius
gabor vero ea de cauſa proficuum foret; et quoniam 19. 3. 7. 37. 45. promiſſa, et ex fœdere debita auxilia, ſua ſponte ac lubens minime repreſentauerit, hac ratione nolens uolens turcis arma arripere, ac 49. 51. 45. 8. 23. 48. ſine ullo ſtipendio aut pecunia militare cogatur.
pecuniarum
Quocirca liberam prædictarum 41. 13. 8. 51. 34. 23. 1. 45. 51. 33. diſpenſationem

p a c i s et alienationem, modo aliqua vel 42. 1. 8. 23. 47. impediendæ vel diuerſionis fat h ciendæ ſpes illis affulgeat, generoſis ac nobilibus, ſincerè nobis dilectis Dn. 42. 22.
o r o e h a d l e
37. 46. 37. 15. equiti, et Cornelio 22. 1. 10. 30. 13. ſereniſſimi Angliæ regis, a u l a t u r nepotis et fratris noſtri car^{mi} et ill^{um} Belgiæ Statuum in 1. 51. 30. 3. 49. 55. 46.
c e
8. 13. reſpectiue legatis, hiſce literis noſtris pro arbitrio ipſorum inſtituendam plenario permittimus: Gen^{tem} vero veſtram gratioſe requirimus, quatenus hanc noſtram intentionem utriq; oratori quantocyus renudare, eoſq; nomine noſtro benigne adhortari atq; inflammare velit, ut executionem ejus ſecretò, et ſub pallio, quantum g a quidem fieri poteſt, ad indigetatum ſcopum dirigere ſatagant, ne ſi prædictus 20. 1.
b o r
6. 36. 45. per oratorem ſuum inibi reſidentem de eo certior factus fuerit, ſalubre hoc propoſitum conſuetâ ſua aſtutiâ et calliditate interuertere queat. Id quod generoſitati veſtræ communis cauſæ promouendæ gratia benigne ſignificandum duximus, cui gratiam noſtram regiam inclinatiſſimo animi affectu offerimus. Dab. in regia noſtra Haſnienſi, xxi. Jan. anno ciɔiɔcxxviii.

COPIE of Sir ISAAC WAKE his Letter to the KING of Denmark.

Sereniſſime Rex,

ACCEPI M. V. literas Januarij vigeſimo datas, quarum mandatis ſi obſequium meum aliqua in re poterit ſatisfacere, felicem me nimis ac beatum judicabo: illas, imperante M. V. tranſcripſi, novoq; charactere indui, Conſtantinopolim deniq; tranſmiſi, nullus dubitans, quin ab illuſt. equite Thoma Roe, reſponſum votis meis permature ſim reportaturus. Multa quidem in vulgus ſparguntur de rebus Italiæ nouandis, quod videntur porrò non leuia ſuadere indicia; veruntamen ejuſmodi ſunt, ut ex iis nihil ahhuc certi colligi poſſit; neq; enim Cis-Alpini, niſi ad maximas rerum anguſtias redacti, arma ſumere facile adducuntur. Sin præter ſpem eò inclinet temporum fatalis periodus, ut extra fines Germaniæ explicanda ſint vexilla, id certe pro lucro habendum; interim, me monitore, M. V. rebus optime ſuis proſpexerit, ſi volaticis iſtis, et incertis nimium rumoribus, abrogatâ fide, de inſtaurando exercitu, et mari Baltico muniendo, unice et ſerio cogitet. Siquidem bonos omnes et cordatos vbiq; chriſtianos mirifice erigit fama incolumitatis veſtræ, et perpetuo ſibi conſtantis animi in libertatis cauſa propugnanda: quod quidem ſanctum propoſitum ut quotidiano precum noſtrarum ſuffragio apud D. O. M. promotum cupimus, ita de victoria ipſa ſpem minime leuem intus fouemus. Nuncium Viennam unum, alterum Ulmam deſtinatò miſi ad exploranda omnia ipſorum conſilia: certum eſt enim omni inuigilare occaſioni, qua de rebus cognitu neceſſariis, M. V. faciam certiorem.

D. O. M. M. V. vitam diuturnam, et rerum omnium felicem exitum concedat.

Quod vouet, optat.

COPIE of a Letter from Signor SCULTETUS to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Ill^{mo} et Ecc^{mo} Sig^{re} et Pron. mio Oss^{mo}.

DOPO la debita reuerenza et offerta della mea humil^{ma} ſeruitú fo ſapere V.E. il mio feliciſſimo arriuo a Coppenhagen a dix de Gennaro, la doue hauendo riſcontrato S. M^{tà} per gratia di Dio in buoniſſima diſpoſitione, et fattole piena relatione del
b e t h l e m g a b o r
6. 13. 50. 21. 30. 13. 33. 29. 1. 6. 36. 46. et della poca ſperanza del ſuo ſuccorſo, manco diuerſione, ella m' ha dato ordine, oltre la lettera di lei d'auuiſare V. E. con queſte righe, R o e h a che S. M. non dubita punto che V. E. inſieme col ſig^{re} 46. 40. 13. et il ſig^{re} 21. 1.
d a Ambaſſadors t u r c o
10. 3. 54. e. appreſſo al 50. 51. 46. 8. 40. uſeranno gran diligenza et induſtria, o per 1628. p a c e u d a impedire la confirmatione della 41. 1. 8. 13. appreſſo a 6. 51. 10. 1. conchiuſa, o per t u r c o a u s t r i a c iſpingnere le armi del 50. 51. 46. 8. 40. verſo le frontiere 1. 51. 47. 50. 46. 27. 3. 8.

h e
22. 13. la ſtate che viene: et recordandoſi S. M. beneſſimo che una coſa di ſi grand o r o importanza non puo eſſer ottenuta ſenza forza d' 40. 46. 40. pero ella ſi contenta
Ambri
(caſo che gle ſopra accenati SSri. 54. e. ſcorgono qualche ſperanza di metter in effetto f n g h i o l'uno, o l'altro) ch' olore le ſpeſe, et li preſenti del Ser^mo Re d' 27. 35. 19. 22. 26.
i t e r r a o l a n d e ſ c d a 30. 50. 13. 45. 46. 3. e delli 40. 30. 1. 35. 10. 13. 48. 23. ſia adoprato anco il 10. 4.
n a r o c o ſ t a n t i n o p
34. 5. 46. 40. di lei, drizzato per cambio a 8. 40. 48. 50. 1. 35. 50. 23. 35. 40. 41.
o l i
40. 30. 27. l' anno paſſato, la ſomma del quale montera a 60^m. imperiali Incirca, per guadagnare i piu principali nella lettera di S. M. nominati, et de darlene poi conto t u r c o quanto et achi. E crede S. M. ch'il primo ſara facile, hauendo il 50. 51. 46. 8. 40.
Impre
la confirmatione del 91 a. gia. nelle mani, et pero potrà ritenere la ſua tanto quanto li piacerà, et parerà buono: il ſecondo benche ſara di qualche difficoltà, tuttauia
g a b o r ottenuto quello, il 19. 3. 6. 40. 46. ſara coſtretto a far la guerra, et militare per forza, ſenza alcuno denaro, o ſuſſidio, vero premio et guiderdone di coſtui, chi ha coſi vitua r m a t a ſ i peroſamente mancato di parola, et ruinato l' 1. 46. 33. 3. 50. 4. di S. M. in 48. 23.
l e c i a 30. 13. 8. 24. 4. ma biſogna che queſto ſi faccia al piu che ſi puo ſotto l'acqua, et in g a b o r
ſegretiſſimo, perche ſe 19. 1. 6. 40. 46. per il ſuo reſidente, ne fuſſe auuertito, il partito non riuſcerebbe, a coſa della grand' auttorità che tiene in quella corte. La lega col r e d i s u e c c a l g
46. 13. 10. 23. 48. 51. 13. 8. 23. 1. hora mai e fatta per il ſignor cancellario 30. 19.
a s negotiation z a t f w f t e l
1. 48. 50. e. 62. 3. 50. 18. 56. 18. 50. 13. 30. conſigliero, et percio c'é buona ſperanza
g a b o r
ſi per mantenere et defendere il reſto, come per ricuperare il perſo, ſe 19. 4. 6. 40. 46.
Ambri
voleſſe fare il debito ſuo, ſarebbe ancora a tempo; ma non hauendo ſpediti i ſuoi 54. e. r e p o al ſudetto 46. 13. ſi come prometteua alla mia partenza per iſpingerlo alla con 41. 40.
l o n i a
30. 40. 35. 23. 5. io non ſo che dire, riuocandomi fra tanto in memoria quel diuino detto del Homerico Achille, ad Uliſſe reſpoſto:

Odi illum haud minus atq; horrendi limen Averni, Qui aliud celat mens clauſum, aliudq; profatur.

g a b o r l e g a
Ho ſcritto al 19. 1. 6. 40. 46. et auiſatolo della ſopradetta 30. 13. 19. 4. toccherá Ambri ſ u e c i a adeſſo a lui di ſpedire i ſuoi 54. e. al Re di 42. 51. 13. 8. 26. 3. per diſporlo alla p o l o n i a p o l o n i a triegua con 41. 40. 30. 40. 35. 27. 1. ſi come ha promeſſo, perche 41. 40. 30. 40. 35. 27. 1.
ſ u e c i a la vuol ſolamente per 12 anni, ma 48. 51. 13. 8. 26. 3. vuol per 20 o 30, et coſi non porno accordarſi. In oltre S. M. m' ha dato carico d' informarmi di V. Ecc^za ſe i dinari del ſuo Re deputati alla leuata di 5^m fanti et mille caualli per fare la a l ſ a c i a diverſione in 1. 30. 48. 3. 8. 23. 4. ſieno ancora nelle mani di lei, ſcuoprendoſi hora mezzi conuenienti di metterlo in effetto la ſtade che viene, et appunto S. M. ſpedendo o ſ a n d e ſ e ſuo ſecretario il ſig^re Gunter per negotij importantiſſimi a gli 38. 30. 1. 35. 10. 13. 48. 23.

b u s s i o n fa ricercare Monsr. di 7. 51. 30. 31. 23. 40. 34. prencipe coragioſo per il capo, e poi u g l l a r s b e r n a un Franceſe, Monsr 51. 44. 30. 31. 1. 46. 48. colonello de ſigri di 6. 13. 46. 35. 3. il quale offeriſce 5 fin a 6m. Suizzeri, buona gente, in ſecreto, et il rendeuous ſará nel ducato ſ e d a t o l di 48. 13. 10. 1. 18. il reſto di dinari per complire l' armata trouuera S. M. o gli 40. 30.
a n d e ſ e
1. 35. 40. 13. 48. 27. e caſo ch' il ſopradetto prencipe non vorebbe accettare il a d m i n i s t r a t o r generalato biſognorebbe darlo al ſigr 4. 10. 33. 23. 35. 23. 47. 50. 46. 3. 49. 40. 46.
d i h a l l a 10. 26. 21. 3. 30. 31. 4. V. E. ſi compiaccia de reſcriuermi preſto ſopra queſto poſto.

In queſti giorni é ſtato publicamente del ſigre colonello Carperan accuſato, et hieri condennato il ſigre Joachim Mizlaff, gia commiſſario generale di S. M. in Sileſia, d' eſſer caduto nella ſomma diſgratia del Re (ſentenza capitale) per molti inormiſſimi eceeſſi, abbaſtanza con teſtimonij, omni exceptioni majoribus prouati, menato poi in prigione nel palazzo reale, doue aſpetta o la gratia del Re, o l' eſſecutione della ſentenza: con queſto baſciando a V. Eccza.

Dat. Haſniæ,
21. Jan. 1628.

Qui ſi fa grandiſſima preparatione per mare, et s' aſpettano vaſcelli di Suecia fra
g a b o r meſe con 4m. ſoldati: ſe 19. 1. 6. 40. 46. voleſſe far il douer ſuo, ogni coſa t u potrebbe eſſer releuata, ma dubitando io di lui reſta a eſſer ſollecitato 50. 51.
r c o
46. 8. 40.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My very good Lord,

HAUING anſwered your letter of the 26th of Jan. and ſent you in that pacquet all ſuch papers as do concerne the diſcourſe paſſed betwixt the Dutch ambaſſador and your lordſhip, I muſt now come to a ſecond letter of yours dated the $\frac{9}{19}$ of February; which doth require no further anſwer, as treating of the ſame ſubject, unto which I haue already anſwered at large in my former. Such letters as came incloſed in your firſt pacquet, addreſſed unto my lord Conway, and Mr. Queſtor, were ſent away at that uery inſtant; and theſe other, which now I finde in your later, ſhall, God willing, haue ricapito to morrow.

CONCERNING the way you are to take homewarde, I haue already told your lordſhip, more than once, that if you do reſolue to come hither, I do not doubt but to procure you a ſafe paſſage by land; and my hope is, that you will the more willingly incline this waye, becauſe I do ſuppoſe you would be glad to ſee the queen of Bohemia.

CONCERNING the affayres of theſe I will referre your lordſhip unto the incloſed papers; and here kiſs the hands of your noble lady, and euer reſt

Venice, 30th March 1628,
ſtilo nouo.

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionate humble ſeruant,

ISAAC WAKE.

EXTRACT of a Letter from the Lord CARLETON to the Lord CONWAY, of the 8th of March 1627.

TILLY hath written hether to the States, and the baron d' Anholt to the gouernor of theyr troopes at Embden, (who is gouerned by certayne of theyr deputyes reſiding in that towne) both by way of expoſtulation, as a breach of neutrality, for ſtopping of victualls and prouiſion out of theſe parts to theyr armyes, on the one ſide by theyr ſhipping in the Ems and the Weſer, and on the other by a garde 1628. vpon the gates of Embden : to which both make the ſame anſweare ; That in regard the Imperialiſts haue formerly hindred, and ſo ſtill continue, the coming of corne and cattell out of ſuch places they haue in poſſeſſion into theſe parts, as likewiſe into the towne of Embden, they can doe no leſſe then be carefull, that no prouiſions, of which here growes ſcarcity, ſhould paſſe from hence ; being otherwiſe deſirous to conſerue theyr neutrality. This being here ſuſpected to be no other then the quarrell of Eſop's wolfe with the lambe, for troubling his waters, (as it is in effect, becauſe the firſt inhibition of paſſage of prouiſions began with the Imperialiſts) they are here gone through with a reſolution they haue had long in ſpeach, of making a new leauye of 10000 men, in place of ſuch Wackgelders they were wont to entertayne, whilſt the army was in the field : which is vpon theſe conditions ; to be all High-Duchmen, without mixture of any ſtrangers, namely, Engliſh, Scottiſh, or French ; to be entertayned for 6 monthes, after the common rate of this countrey pay, beginning with June next : meane-while, as men come to theyr rendezvous in any conſiderable number of 30 or 40, they are to enter into pay ; the companyes beeing 200, and two rixdalers a man for the leauye. The States are to furniſh armes vpon condition of reſtitution at the expiration of 6 monthes, in caſe the States hold them no longer in ſeruice ; which depends on theyr diſpoſall.

THIS reſolution is taken vpon this counſell ; firſt, that the men are eaſily had vpon the late breaking of the king of Denmarks army : next, the coſt is, in effect, the ſame they ſhould beſtowe on theyr Wackgelders, whoſe ſeruice they may likewiſe make vſe of, yf there be occaſion : thirdly, to put a reputation vpon theyr affayres, by ſuch a leauy, the fame whereof wilbe greater then the thing itſelf ; yet it is very conſiderable, that in ſuch a tyme of neceſſity, theſe new leauyes, with the Wackgelders they can rayſe on a ſodayne, and ſuch of theyr townes-men they call the Scutterye, (whoſe ſeruice they uſe ſometimes) will amount to about 20000 men, beſides their ordinary army : laſtly, and chiefly, becauſe they will not be vnprouided of men for defence of theyr countrey, in caſe, vpon purſute of the quarrell betwixt the two crownes, eyther one or both the nations ſhould be reuoked by theyr princes.

I HAUE vſed my vttermoſt indeauour, as well in priuat as in publique, to ſaue Sir William Balfores company vnto him, notwithſtanding the ſeruice he hath vndertaken for his majeſty ; but he hath bene encountred by certayne French officers, coronells and others, who ſhew they haue the like letters from theyr king to go ſerue in France, and hold theyr places here, which they haue tendred to ſome of the States with the copyes of them ; but forbeare to preſent them in the aſſemblye, till they ſee the ſucceſſe of Sir William Balfore. The States peremptorily refuſe his holding his company, giuing way to no reaſons I can alleadge in his fauour ; and yet there are many more (and thoſe I haue not fayled to repreſent) for a confederat prince, aboue one who holds no more then ordinary amity with this ſtate ; for a prince who is in actuall declared warre with theyr enemy, aboue one who ſeekes and purſues theyr enemyes friendſhip ; and for an ancient ſeruant of the ſtate, as Sir William Balfore is, in compariſon of others ; but nothing can preuayle.

THIS day, taking occaſion of preſſing an anſweare to my laſt propoſition, I had audience in theyr aſſembly, in which I did much expoſtulate theyr proceeding with Sir William Balfore, and repreſented vnto them the connivence is continually vſed concerning the French, in purchaſe of ſhipping and munition for warre ; notwithſtanding that, it is well knowne, the French had contracted friendſhip with Spayne, and haue hoſtility with none but his majeſty, and thoſe of our religion in France ; and, on the other ſide, it is no leſſe apparent, that what his majeſty doth in this leauy of horſe, is chiefly againſt Spaniſh invaſion, without further deſſigne in France, then, by aſſiſtance of the Rochellers, to procure thoſe of the religion a ſafe and ſecure peace. Hervpon I acquainted them with ſuch aduertiſement I haue, and which your lordſhip will find in the copyes which goe herewith, of the preparations in France, which depend vpon prouiſions from hence ; and of ſuch particulars as are here marchanding, on the one ſide publiquely and avowedly, (for which the French ambaſſador requires paſport of the States) and on the other, ſecretly, vnder borrowed names and faigned pretences, by Lopez the Spanyard, who lyeth like an agent or reſident, negotiating in Amſterdam.

FOR anſweare, they promiſed me, that on Munday next, without further delay, they would take my propoſition in hand, and reſolue vpon it ; and touching the French preparations, as well of ſhipping as all manner of munition, that they haue already written two ſeuerall letters to the admiraltyes of Amſterdam and Northolland, which they would now agayne renewe, to make ſtay of them; and that they had a placcart in hand, which ſhould ſpeedily be publiſhed againſt ſuch as lent theyr names vpon ſuch bargaines as are now vſed, of aſſurance for the getting of ſhipping from hence; and although this be all the induſtrie I can vſe, and the States cannot well doe more; yet is it needfull a diligent watch ſhould be held vpon ſuch ſhipping as paſſeth the Sleeue for this month and the next at leaſt; in which tyme the French expect theyr equippage from hence.

THERE is no day almoſt paſſeth ouer my head without dealing with the prince of Orange, or ſome of the States, touching the ſtopping of this French ſea preparation; the effect whereof your lordſhip will ſee, by a copy I ſend herewith of a propoſition the French ambaſſador made in the aſſembly of the States, on Munday laſt, with what impatiencie he takes it, he hauing vented therin many diſcontentments, as well againſt the States as the prince of Orange, in ſatyrical termes; wherwith they are all ſo much ſcandaliſed, that they intend to complayne of him in France by theyr ambaſſadors.

THE particular occaſion of offence which the ambaſſador ioynes to this publique buſineſſe of ſtay of munition, (to which he giues the title of marchandiſe) is an accident which hapned in the Hagh, betwixt ſome of his followers and a High-Duchman of his excellencyes garde, whom they murthered about a fortnight ſince in the night. With them were two Frenchmen of the garde likewiſe, whereof one was formerly the French ambaſſadors ſeruant; and they all hauing theyr refuge into the French ambaſſadors houſe, (where the two Frenchmen of the garde ſtill remayne) the ordinary forme of calling in ſoldiers, who abſent themſelues from their colours, by ſound of drumme, (with penalty of hauing theyr names pinn'd to the gallowes, in caſe they abſent themſelues beyond the third ſummons) paſſeth vpon them by ſentence of the counſell of warre, which was held here the laſt weeke by officers of all nations, eſpecially French. This made him aſſemble all the French officers about him, (euen ſuch as for priuate quarrells haue bene long eſtranged from him) as yf it had were a national quarrell, and that his houſe ſhould haue been aſſayled. All this belongs to the explication of the chiefe ſubject of his propoſition; which requires an hiſtorical comment from the beginning of his ambaſſage to this day, to haue the particulars he glaunceth at well vnderſtood.

*A COPY of * my Letter to my Lord* CONWAY, dated $\frac{14}{24}$. March 1628.

[* i.e. Sir Iſaac Wake's.]

IF any judgement might ſafely be grounded vppon outward appearances, it might be thought the fatall criſis of innouation in Italy were neare at hand; for dayly ſigna concoctionis do ſhewe themſelfes, which do indicate a rupture. An aſtrologer would take vnto himſelfe the boldneſſe of prognoſticating a ſtorme to be neare, when he doth ſee the ayre full of blacke cloudes; but I will content my ſelfe to relate, as ſincerely as I can, what I ſhall finde to conſtare in materia di facto, and leaue the criticall part vnto any that will vndertake to determin de futuris contingentibus.

VPPON Sunday the 12th of March, ſtilo nouo, Don Gonzales di Cordoua departed from Milan, accompanyed with all the nobility, feudatary officers of the army, and the cornetta regia, more militari, and tranſported himſelfe to Pauia. After hauing taryed there ſeuen dayes, and giuen order for all neceſſary prouiſions, and drawen the canon out of the caſtle, (which is the magazen of the ſtate) he went to Aleſſandria della Paglea, which doth confine with Monferrate: there he arriued vppon the 19th of March; and not farre from thence, an enteruiewe is to paſs betwixt the duke of Sauoye and him.

BEFORE his departure from Milan, Don Gonzales did caſt into Guaſtalla 150 Trentini, to ſecure that towne (which is in the center of the Mantouano) from any ſurpriſe; and he hath giuen order for quarter to be prouided for 2000 others in Cremona. This day wee expect here the regent Roe, a prime counſellor of Milan, who is to giue an account to this ſtate, of the proceedings of Don Gonzales, and of the exceptions that he doth take againſt the duke of Niuires. An other principall ſenator of Milan is likewiſe diſpatched to Rome, to the ſame purpoſe. The biſhop of Mantoua, who was ſent ambaſſador to the emperor, to receaue for Niuers the 1628. inueſtiture of that ſtate, hath written to his maſter from Prague, that Don Ceſare Gonzaga, ſonne of the marques of Guaſtalla, had ſo preoccupied the emperor, and that councell before his arriuall, that now he did incounter with many difficultyes. By all theſe circumſtances it may appeare, that the emperor and the king of Spayne haue an intention and purpoſe, either to breake the backe of the newe duke of Mantoua, or to force him to bowe and to yeald to ſuch conditions as they will impoſe vppon him. And this conjecture is confirmed by the late treaty, paſſed betwixt the king of Spayne and the duke of Sauoye, negotiated by Don Aluarez d' Oſſada, and now to be concluded betwixt the duke and Don Gonzales as their firſt enteruiewe. Vppon the 19th of March, the duke of Sauoye was not departed from Turin, but he was prouiding to goe towards Aſti, and prince Tomaſo towards Sauoye. The caualleria was then to be muſtered, and ſent to quarter. 12000 muſquets, 10000 pikes, and 3000 cuiraſſes were prouiding; but the men who ſhould vſe them are yet inuiſible; for he hath no infantery of conſideration at preſent, neither is it knowen that he hath giuen commiſſion for newe leauyes.

THE newe duke of Mantoua being well informed of theſe proceedings, doth prouide for his owne defence, both at home and abroade. At home he hath giuen patents for the rayſing of 4000 foot, and order for the muſtering of 2000 of the trained bands of that prouince; 400 horſe he hath already effettini of the country; and he is now leauying 600 more: the laſt week he went in perſon to Borgoforte, where he did deſigne a forte, which is now making, to hinder the deſcent of the enemyes forces by the Po. To ſtrengthen himſelfe with forein aſſiſtance, he hath diſpatched into France, to giue an account of the danger which has threatned him. The marquis Strozzi is to goe inſtantly to Rome, to implore protection from the pope; and as here wee do howerly expect the marquis Franceſco Gonzaga, with a commiſſion to the ſame purpoſe, ſo hath his ordinary reſident ſignor Parma, already begunne that negotiation, hauing this weeke demanded of this ſtate three things, in the name of his maſter: firſt, aſſiſtance of men and monny: ſecondly, leaue for diuers gentlemen of Breſcia and Verona, to ſerue him as voluntaryes: and laſtly, the borrowing of ſuch armes as he doth wante, and they can ſpare.

THE artifices which this ſtate doth vſe, to diſſemble apprehenſion of danger, are almoſt incredible; they do ſeeme to contemne any aduertiſment, brought either out of Sueuia, of the ingroſſing of the imperialiſts about Vlme, or out of Piedmont, of the treaty betwixt the duke of Sauoye and the Spanyards; and they do ambitiouſly aſſert, that the world ſhould thinke that theſe are but terrores panici, and that the authority of the pope, and their dexterity, will ſecure Italy from innouation; and yet they do viſibly diſcouer ſome feare, by careſſing all martialliſts, and men of employment, more then they were wont to do; and this weeke, they haue not onely reentertayned Mr. di Candales, into their ſeruice, for ſeuen yeares to come, but increaſed his penſion to the ſumme of 7000 crownes per annum, of moneta di banco. Thoſe poore trouppes that do remayne, are commanded towarde the confine of Mantoua, and order is giuen to increaſe their companys from 60 to 100. Hitherto it doth appeare, by all the circumſtances aboue ſpecifyed, that Italy doth runne danger of innouation, and this is the populare opinion: I will now point out ſome fewe circumſtances, which do ſeeme to indicate the contrary. Firſt, It is certaine, that the pope will employe all his authority, and the Venetians all their dexterity, to quench this fyre; and howe farre they may preuayle in their negotiations, tyme muſt tell vs. Secondly, Notwithſtanding greate brauadoes, neither the duke of Sauoy, nor the Spanyards had, vppon the 19th of this month, paſſed the Rubicone, that is to ſaye, committed any act of hoſtility. Thirdly, As the duke of Sauoy hath giuen audience to Mr. de St. Chaumont, heard his expoſition, giuen him leaue to diſpatch Mr. de Sanderan to Paris, and promiſed to expect an anſwer the ſpace of 14 dayes, ſo doth the gouernor of Milan giue eare vnto propoſitions made vnto him, in the name of the duke of Mantoua; and while theſe negotiations are on foote, no ſure judgement can be made of the iſſue. Laſtly, When the reſident of Mantoua did, this weeke, make the demands aboue ſpecified, vnto this ſtate in college, he did conclude with a proteſtation, that if his maſter were not gratifyed by this ſtate in his demands, he ſhould be inforced to accommodate himſelfe with the Spanyards, and to accord the demolition of the cittadel of Caſal, which is the lapis ſcandali. The ſame reſident hath proteſted vnto me, ſince his being in college, that his maſter will dye rather than ſubmit himſelfe vnto the inſolent diſcretion of the Spanyards, who haue no authority to diſpoſe of any thing within his dominions; and he doth aſſure mee, that the French king will not condeſcend vnto the demolition of that cittadel, which duke Vincenzo the firſt did builde, at the inſtigation of Henry the 4th, to ſerue as a bridle, to keepe the Spanyards from vſurping further vppon the liberty of Italy. But I did reply vnto the reſident, That I did eſteeme the protection of France ſo weake a ground for his maſter to builde vppon, conſidering that thoſe who had made no ſcruple to violate and breake a league confirmed by oath with Venice and Sauoye, and to ſell and betray all the frends and allyes of that crowne, would beare as little reſpect to his maſter as they had donne to greater princes; it being manifeſt, that the cardinal de Richelieu did make more account of a port in Brittany for himſelfe, then of a dutchy of Mantoua for Mr. di Niuers.

THIS being the true ſtate of affaires here, concerning Mantoua, as they do ſtand at preſent, I ſhall, in all humility, renewe my ſuite heretofore made vnto your lordſhip, to counſell his majeſtie not to builde vppon any diuerſion, which may be preſumed to be made here in Italye; but to attend vnto the ſecuring of the Baltique ſea, and thoſe northerne riuers, and to put in lucro any eaſe or aduantage which may come from hence.

From my Lord CARLETON to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

Receiued by Sir Thomas Roe, in Smyrna, June 23. 1628.

My very goode Lord, Hagh, this 20th of March, 1628.

IN exchange of the aduertiſments of your two letters, of the 25th of the laſt and 3d of this preſent, the moſt I can returne you is an extract of my laſt diſpatch to my Lord Conway, accompanied with a propoſition of this French ambaſſadors to ſett againſt Monſieur d' Oſterwikes; wherby you may account your ſelf payde in number, but not in waight: for that you ſent me is graue and judicious, well becoming a publique miniſter; this is of an other ſtraine, onely excuſable by the leuitie of the nation: and for vnderſtanding therof you will haue neede of Monſieur Oſterwickes help, (beſides the explication I giue of one part in my letter to my lord Conway) the whole ſtorie of his time being toucht more or leſſe, ſince his coming into theſe parts, in a ſtile of ſatire Menippee, which hath aſſuredly proceeded of perturbation of minde, at many diſcontentments he hath here entertained: elſe, being a man of ſuch able parts, and much experience in the trade of ambaſſadors, hauing bin a maſter of cerimonies in the court of France, it is vnpoſſible he ſhould committ ſuch an extrauagancie as is this propoſition, of which the States doe complaine in France, by theyr ambaſſadors; whoſe arriual at St. Denis is aduertiſed hether, with aſſurance of extraordinarie goode entertainment, by lodging and defrayment, neuer yet practiſed in that court to ambaſſadors of this ſtate; which falling out ſo croſſe, and contrarie to what this ambaſſador had order from thence to pronounce, and proteſt againſt theyr coming, is an other extrauagancie proper onely to that nation; but falling within the compas of your Italian prouerb, Chi ti careſſe più, che non ſuole, &c. For I belieue (and indeauour to make others of the ſame minde) that this is onely to gett ſuch preparation of ſhipping and munition they haue made in theſe parts, in ſafetie into France; and then they muſt exſpect here the accuſtomed payment the French vſe to theyr frends, of ſcorne and contempt. I perceaue you are willing to entertaine a goode conceit not onely of my induſtrie in this ſeruice, but likewiſe of the effects thereof: and I wiſh, for my comfort, I my ſelf could haue the ſame ſatisfaction; but I finde by long experience, theſe are not ſuch tractable people, as to get amongſt them any honor in negotiating: howſoeuer I am not driuen to thoſe impatiencies you will finde in this French propoſition. And now his majeſty hath fauoured me with my reuocation; of which I intend to make vſe at the comming of our cloth ſhips to theyr mart hereby at Delft; and thoſe I expect by the firſt winde, and in them my nephew, whom I am to leaue in my place as his majeſties agent, till the cumming of an ambaſſador; and with him I will leaue charge of repaying my defects of diligent writing to your lordſhip, till owr ambaſſadors arriual; meane while I will not omit any occaſion of ſaluting you: and when it ſhall pleaſe God to ſend me into England, as I will giue teſtimonie of your correſpondence with me as a publique miniſter, (which is part of owr charge) ſo as your 1628. auntient frend and ſeruant, I will embrace all oportunities to expreſſe my affection to your lordſhip.

There was ſome matter of account betwixt my deare wife (with whoſe loſſe God hath puniſhed me) and Daniel Nye, for ſuch particularities he knoweth beſt; for payment of which he required of me 20 or 30, I cannot readily call to minde which, bodies of Chriſoſtome in Greeke, which I bought of Sir John Sidley, (Sir Henry Sauiles heire) and ſent him, he promiſing to make goode vnto me the ſurpluſage. I pray you, know how theſe accounts ſtande betwixt vs; and fauour me with a word of aduertiſment.

It is like enough, before theſe ſhips I expect be arriued and diſcharged, and I readie to goe, I may heare from you in this place. But yf your letters follow me into England, and containe more then this buſineſſe, I pray you feare not that I will make any other vſe then is fit of any matter of aduertiſment. And my long practiſe in this trade of forraigne occurrents, will make me glad of them, and readie to returne you what home affordes: as now I ſend you what I haue from my lord Conwey. So, with my beſt wiſhes to yourſelf and yours, doe reſt,

Your Lordſhips moſt affectionat ſeruant,

D. Carleton.

Received by Sir Thomas Roe, in Smyrna, June 23. 1628.

The French Ambaſſador's Propoſition at the Hagh, of March 13. 1628.

Harangue faite à Meſſieurs les ESTATS des Provinces Vnies des Pais Bas, par Monſieur DESSES, Ambaſſadeur du Roy de France.

Meſſieurs,

AUANT hier apres auoir fait inſtance pour le paſſeport tant de fois mentionné, j'ay enuoyé le memoire, comme j'auois dit à vos ſeigneuries, et à monſieur le prince d'Orange, lequel promiſt d'interpoſer ſon authorité au prompt ottroy d'iceluy, et fut peu apres en voſtre aſſemblée. Neantmoins ſur la nuict voſtre greffier a dit à mon ſecretaire, qu'il n'auoit pas eſté mis en deliberation, faute de nombre pour le reſoudre. Hyer fuſt jour de repos, et ce matin auec la ſeptmaine je recommence ma pourſuitte. Nos marchandiſes ſont chargées: j'ay eu ordre de les faire paſſer en France dans le 16me de ce mois. La choſe auroit eſté fort poſſible ſans les difficultés du paſſeport, les vents damont s'eſtans rencontus extraordinairement propres à ceſt effect, rares en ces coſtes, comme ont fait voir la perte de la baye, et le retardement de vos ambaſſadeurs, ſans recourir à ce qu'en a eſcrit le vainqueur des Gaules en ſes commentaires, lors que le vaiſſeau de M. de Thoiras fut mal prins au Theſſel, dont il ne fut pas moins au pouuoir de vos ſeigneuries de faire raiſon au roy mon maiſtre incontinent apres que d'accorder le dit paſſeport. Il me ſouuient que je ne peus auoir reſponce que deſpuis que le vent fut changé, qui chaſſoit toutes vos flottes dans le Texel, et y retenoit les Anglois. Je ſerois bien marry, ſy l'on vzoit de pareil deſlay au prejudice du ſeruice de ſa majeſté pour retarder ce qu'il n'y a pretexte de refuſer deffinitivement. C'eſt à vos ſeigneuries à exempter vos ambaſſadeurs de la neceſſité d'en faire excuſe. Quand à moy, je n'auray point de ceſſe à preſſer juſques à ce que je ſois eſclaircy de voſtre reſolution: cependant je ne puis me taire de ce que Satmedi, comme j'eſtois à voſtre aſſemblée, il ſe tint conſeil de guerre pour proceder contre deux Francois, l'vn deſquelz a eſté mon domeſtique mentionné dans ma proteſtation du 12me de Fevurier, pour auoir fait ſon debuoir, lors que cinq de vos officiers attauterent d'aſſaſſiner mon cocher à la veue de vos feneſtres; et deſpuis s'eſt auſſy porté en homme de bien en pareil rencontre au heaulme. J'ay enuoyé l'eſclairciſſement du dite affaire au roy mon maiſtre, et me garderai de ſouffrir qu'il leur ſoit meffaict, juſques à ce que j'aye commandement de ſa majeſté. Et vos ſeigneuries, qui ſcauent bien deſlayer les choſes les plus juſtes et neceſſaires, quand il leur plaiſt, pourroyent bien auſſy ſurſeoir toutes procedeures juſques à ce qu'il y euſt declaration de la volonte de ſa dite majeſté, à qui vos ſeigneuries doibuent encores tant de juſtices en choſes plus importantes; car auſſy bien de cela, comme de tant d'aultres cas qui me touchent, quelque machination qui ſe faſce icy, et quelque artifice et deſguiſement que l'on y puiſſe à porter, ne ſera que ce qu'il en plairra ſa dite majeſté. Il eſt eſtrange, que pour des faits arriués ſur le paué de Lahaye apres que les cours ordinaires ont procedé, et en choſes dignes d'eſtre traittées par les puiſſances les plus ſouueraines, l'on en ayt diſtraict tantoſt vne partie diuiſant la contenance de la cauſe, tantoſt on en attire le tout au conſeil de guerre, ou faulte de chaleur de juſtice à diſſiper le mal et la calomnie, l'on n'en voit reuſſir que des brouillards. Je ſcay que l'on employe icy ſur toutes choſes pretexte d'ignorance : mais vos ſeigneuries ne pourront pas ne ſcauoir, qu' au conſeil de guerre, entre aultres le ſeigneur de Fouillons fuſt choiſy pour aſſiſter le moins excuſable des cinq qui traitreuſement aſſaſſinerent mon dit cocher. Il ſe retira icy, lors qu'il y vint, pour ſe ſauver d'une comdamnation encourue à Montpelier, pour vn rapt auſſy laſchement executé qu' infidellement entreprins ; et y obtint vne compagnie par mon moyen. Vous ſcaues ce qu'il vault, et la peine qu'il a à s'excuſer du manquement de ſon debuoir, lors que la garniſon de l'Eſcluſe faillit d'eſtre ſurprinze. Rien ne l'a rendu ſy agreable à ceux qui ne le pouuoit ſouffrir auparauant, que ce dernier merite. Les aultres choiſis pour ce dit conſeil de guerre eſtoyent de nations ennemies et intereſſeés dans la cauſe dont il s'agiſſoit, ou jeunes gens deſceux par les plus fins qui n'y ont point eſté. Monſieur de Hauterie, qui s'en eſt abſtenu, auſſy bien que monſieur Deſthiaulx, lors que ſe tenoit ceſte aſſemblée, trouuant vn de mes domeſtiques, qui alloit vers ſon nepueu de Leuuille, luy dit en riant, qu'il ne le trouneroit pas qu'il eſtoit au conſeil de guerre. Deſpuis le dit ſeigneur Leuuille m'a mandé, qu'il n'auoit point ſceu que je deuſſe auoir intereſt à ce qui ſe trattoit au dit conſeil de guerre auec force ſermentz et honeſtetés. Le ſeigneur de Malaguet, à qui j'auois parlé de l'accident des le lendemain qu'il arriua, m'eſtant venu trouuer au ſoir, me dit, qu'il ne s'y eſtoit traitté q'vne queſtion, ſans nommer les perſonnes ny les circonſtances, comme s'il n'y auoit point de loix militaires, et qu'on euſt beſoin de telles aſſemblées pour decider ſemblables queſtions de droict.

Tous les gens de bien, qu' ont eſté ſurprins au dit conſeil, me ſont venus faire excuſe ; et j'ay donné à entendre l'importance de faict à monſieur de Hauterie, et au corps des officiers Francois, qu'il auoit emmené chez moy, luy ayant fait comprendre, que, ſy par exces d'animoſité, et par ſurprinſe, et par ambition mal reglée, il euſt tant ſeulement taſché de faire cognoiſtre, qu'il n'y a point de plus grand crime aux Francois que d' aſſiſter l'ambaſſadeur de France, et les ſeins, ou il y va de la vie et de l'honneur, et ce par ſon jugement illuſoire, inequitable, et pour ſeruir ſeulement de flambeau à vne faction contre le ſeruice du roy mon maiſtre, et la ſainctété du droict des gens que nous voyons icy tous les jours fouler aux pieds. En cas que l'on euſt eu deſſein de beſoigner de bon, voycy de quoy il s'agiſt de rendre ce point ceux juges de ma vie, qui à preſent debuoyent expoſer la leur pour mà ſeurté, et meſme d'aulcuns dont elle eſt affettée à ſatisfaire à la juſtice du roy mon maiſtre pour pluſieurs crimes, ſpecialement celuy auquel ſa dignité eſt bleſsée auec mon intereſt, que ſy on pretendoit de tirer les deux ſoldats de mon logis, il faloit que tous bons ſeruiteurs du roy vinſent l'empeſcher, que, tant que je reſpirerois, je conſeruois les droicts qui m'ont eſté commis ; que quand je ſerois ſeul ou abandonné, comme lors que le ſeigneur de Maiſonneufue, officier d'ailleurs de bonne et entiere reputation, à qui j'adreſſay ma parolle, viſt aupres de moy, ſans tirer l'eſpée, outrager mon cocher, je ne manquerois non plus à ce que je doibz qu' à l'occaſion ou j'aduertis vos deputés à la ceremonie de l'ordre de la jarretiere, que j'irois ſeul auec vn gentilhomme à tous les actes d'icelle, et empeſcherois toutes vaines pretenſions, dont il vous ſouuient qu'il s'enſuivit la ceſſation de feſtin de monſieur le prince d'Orange, le corps des officiers m'ayant teſmoigné ne pouvoir croire que l'on voulut rien entreprendre contre la franchiſe de ma maiſon, et qu'ils m'en aſſeuroyent, j'ay eſtimé que me reſpondant meſme de ce qui paſſoit leur puiſſance, ils ne manqueroyent point à ce qui dependoit d'eux ; et la deſſus declare à vos ſeigneuries, que tous les gens de bien de la nation mourront auec moy avant qu'il ſoit fait mal aux dits deux ſoldats, qui meritent mieux recompenſe de ſa majeſté, que ceux à qui on accorde icy pour auoir oultraigé mes gens, quoy leur auoit refuſé, moy le demandant, ſelon l'intention de ſa majeſté.

MESSIEURS, croyez vous que que diſent toutes les nations, en meſme temps on veut proceder juſques à interrogatoire contre les miniſtres d'Angleterre, menacer ſeluy de Suede atrocement pour auoir eſcrit la verité à ſon roy : je n'ay que trop à parler de ce que eſt paſſé en mon endroict, et me tais de ce qui s'eſt fait concernant l'ambaſſadeur de Venize : mais ſy faut il aduouer que, deſpuis peu, il ne s'eſt icy trouvé ambaſſadeur ny reſident Chreſtien qui n'ayt eſté violé, et n'y a eſté veritablement traitté auec reſpect, et à voſtre prejudice, q'un Mahometan deſadvoué par les ſiens, et 1628. vous ſcavez pourquoy. Mais on dira, Quel intereſt j'ay au fait de tous les miniſtres publics, meſmes des nos ennemis ? Je reſponds à ceſte objection, le roy mon maiſtre les ayant ſurmonté par armes et par courteſies, il eſt à croire qu'ils retourneront bientoſt nos amis, comme il eſt àdeſirer pour le bien public, et plus pour vos ſeigneuries que pour qui ce ſoit. Les Alemans, qui rempliſſent ces lieux de ſang toutes les nuicts, et meſme tuent quelquefois des incognus pour les miens, ne pouvant eſperer de condition tolerable, et de repos que par la grandeur, et bienveillance du roy mon maiſtre, en imitant les beaulx exemples de ſes predeceſſeurs. J'ay l' honneur d' eſtre ambaſſadeur du premier roy du monde, et du plus puiſſant de vos alliés: s'il y a quelque lumiere en moy, il ne ſera point dict que je l' ay caché en lieu obſcure. Tous les amis ont intereſt à la conſervation de voſtre juſtice et ſouveraineté, et du droict des gens en ce pais, qui en eſt l' eſtape commune. Vous ſcavez qu'il y a beaucoup d'avantaiges qui ſe perdent pour en mal uſer. N'attendes pas que tant que les choſes n'iront leur droct chemin, pour quelque conſideration que ce ſoit, je taiſe au roy mon maiſtre, ny à vos ſeigneuries, les verités qu'il importe d'eſtre deſduites. Il eſt neceſſaire de me faire raiſon aux choſes juſtes, ou par voye de faire rompre, ou ſuſpendre toute negociation: devant que d' en venirla, vous en aurez ſupputé tous les inconueniens: et j' attendray le reſte du roy mon maiſtre, lequel en bien ſeruant je ne flechiray pour amour ny crainté de perſonne. Fait à la Haye, ce 31me Mars, 1628.

Soubz ſigné DESPEZES.

LE paſſeport pretendu par ceſte harangue eſt pour faire ſortir quelques vivres, poudres, canons, armes, et meſmes quelques vaiſſeaulx qui le roy a faict acheſter à Amſterdam : à quoy s'eſt oppoſé l' ambaſſadeur du roy de la Grande Bretaigne ; qui a eſte cauſe que la choſe a tirée de longue : neantmoins ils l'ont en fin accordé avec quelque modification.

POUR le conſeil de guerre dont il parle, il fault ſcauoir, que ſes gens, aſſiſtés de deux ſoldats des gardes du prince d' Orange, l'un deſquels a eſté ſon laquais, en ſorte qu'ils eſtoyent au nombre de ſept, prindrent querelle dans vn bordel contre trois Alemans, auſſy ſoldats des gardes, deux deſquels s'en eſtant fuis, ils tuerent l' aultre, qui leur demandoit ſa vie à genoulx, et la larme à l'oeil. Ces deux ſoldats donc, qui eſtoyent auec les dits valets, ſe ſont retires dans ſon logis. Les officiers de leur compagnie leur ont fait dire, qu'ils revinſent faire leurs factions accouſtumées, et qu'il ne leur ſeroit point fait de mal ; ce qu'ils n'ont jamais voulu faire. Sur cela on aſſemble le conſeil de guerre aquel ſont appelés des Francois meſſieurs de Maiſonneufue, Malaguet, Leuuille, Lafforce, et le Fouillons. A ce conſeil on leur propoſe, que deux ſoldats Francois des gardes de monſieur le prince d' Orange s'eſtans abſentes ſans congé deſpuis quelques jours, et refuſant de revenir au drapeau, s'il n'eſt pas juſte de les faire appeler au ſon de tambour, et à faulte de comparoir de mettre leur noms au gibet ? Tout le conſeil d'une voix dit, qu'il n'y auoit point de difficulté. A ce meſme conſeil on propoſa trois ou quatre aultres cas ſemblables, ou aprochans. Mr. l'ambaſſadeur ayant oui parler de ce conſeil, envoye querir Mrs. d'Hauterie, Maiſonneufue, Malaguet, Leuille et Lafforce pour choſe qui concernoit le ſervice du roy. Eſtans là, il ſe plaint de ce conſeil, et leur dit, qu'il croit qu'on veut forcer ſa maiſon pour avoir ces ſoldats ; et leur demande leurs perſonnes et leurs compagnies de la part du roy, pour le guarentir de ceſte violence ; que pour lui, il eſtoit reſolu de mourir en ceſte occaſion.

Received by Sir Thomas Roe in Smyrna, Jun. 23. 1628.

La Riſpoſta dell' Arciduca LEOPOLDO *alli SS*ri SWIZZERI, 27 Marzo : Tradotta dall' Aleman in Italiano.

LEOPOLDO, per Gratia di Dio, Arciduca d' Auſtria, Duca di Borgogna, Conte di Tirol et Gerz, Lantgrauio in Alſatia.

HONORANDI, et ſingularmente cari.--- Da meſſo eſpreſſo habbiamo riceuute le voſtre lettere ben conditionate, et a pieno da quelle inteſo, che é quartierato all' intorno di voſtri confini un numero di militia, che ſempre piu s'aumenta, pregando, ch'eſſendo queſto inprouiſo alloggio non ſolo contra la perpetua alleanza hereditaria, et altri ſincerationi ſeguiti in adietro, ma cauſando anco in queſti tempi calamitoſi gran careſtia, tanto a voſtri paeſi, come a tutti li vicinaggi, et ancora diuerſi geloſie et ſoſpetti ; voleſſimo, per diuertire li aggrauij che ne ſuccedono, et per conſeruatione di

detta

dettá allianza hereditaria, dare ordine, che detta gente foſſe allontanata da voſtri confini, et venghino inſieme allontonate l'incommoditá che ne ſeguono. Non poſſiamo celarui, che non meno a noi, et noſtri ſudditi medeſimi ne' luoghi oue ſi trattiene queſto alloggio improuiſo apporta notabile incommodo, ne ſentireſſimo minimo piacere che voi, et li voſtri doueſte eſſerne aggrauati. Ma poiche detta gente non appertiene a noi, ma a S. Ma$^{\grave{a}}$ Ceſ^{a}, alla quale non habbiamo a commandare in minima coſa, tenendo però non ſene habbia d' hauere alcuna diffidenza. Anco voi hauete ſenza aggrauio a conſiderare, non eſſer in noſtro potere di diſporre coſi preſto all' adempimento che voi deſiderate, che ſi voltino altroue. Ma accioche habbiate a ricognoſcer in fatto il noſtro deſiderio a piu firmo ſtabilmento, et avanzamento della detta alleanza hereditaria, non habbiamo tralaſciato di ſcriuere il voſtro penſiero, et tutto il neceſſario con ogni inſtanza a S. Ma$^{t\hat{a}}$ Ceſ^{a}, non dubitando che dará benignamente ordine accio ſienno leuati da voi i ſiniſtri penſieri, et ſchivati gli aggravij che ſi temono: et vi ſiamo con pronta volontá ben affettionati. 1628.

Dato nella noſtra Cittá d' Inſprug, alli 27 di Marzo, 1628.

LEOPOLDO.

Alli honorandi noſtri particolarmente cari N. N.
li Tredici Cantoni dell' Helvetia.

Auviſi di Meminga. An. 1628, alli $^{27\,\text{Feb.}}_{6\,\text{Mar.}}$

GIA ſono in quartier d' Vlmo ſino a Vangen di ſicuro, frá cauall^{ria} et fanteria, ſino al numero di 24000, et di piu ſi aſpetta ancora giornalmente a Vlmo, vltra cauall^{ria}, 7000 fanti, et gia ſi principia a preparar quartier di Vangen ſino a Coſtantia, per metteruene de maggior numero.

ALLI $^{29}_{10}$ Marzo arriuará a Meminga il general di Mansfelt, con la ſua corte et guardia, et iui hauerá quartier, ſicome di giá gli e preparati il più bel caſamento di quel luoco. Detti di Meminga haueuano mandato il dottor Jenes, et uno dal conſiglio dalli ſignori d' Vlmo a Langenau di S. E. per interuenir, et ſaper il modo tenendo, ſono ritornati nè ſi ſá quello habbino ſpedito eſſendo ancora il tutto in ſecreto.

LI principi ſi ſono ſpartiti da Genzburg: ancora non ſi ſá quello habbino trattato.

IL comiſſario di S. M$^{ta.}$ ſignor di Oſſa, ha dimandato quartier alla cittá d' Auguſta per 1500 caualli.

DETTE ſoldateſche cauſano grande careſtia; in particolar non ſi troua biaue che la caualleria non ſi potra ſoſtentar in longo.—— S' intende ancora come a Roſſenburg ui debbia eſſer una dietta, nella quale ſi tratta di pace frà Suedia et Polonia, et il ſimile fra S. M$^{ta.}$ C^{a} et ſa M^{ta} Rè di Denemarca: a Vienna et a Lubeck ui ſono ſimilm^{te} diette. Li Euangelici dal Lant-obder Ens hanno termine ½ anno di vender li loro beni.—— Per conto della religione, non ſi há eſſeguito nulla eccetuando che già alcuni meſi fá ui ſono poſti in Meminga li Geſuiti, et gia ſi há deſiderato da diuerſe cittá franche li beni d' chieſa.

ABSTRACT of a Letter from Hamburg,

THE aſſemblie of the Hanz towns is drawing towards an end, and it repenteth the emperor and his counſell of that meeting, ſince it hath gone ſoe contrarie to their expectation; for they haue abſolutly refuſed to lend ſhips to the emperor, againſt their neighbours, our friends and allys, and haue ſtraightly commaunded that none of their marriners muſt ſerue any forraine prince or ſtate; and if any want preſent ymployment, there ſhall bee ſom reaſonable means allowed untill there bee ymployment for them. Hamburgh hath allready giuen out patents for raiſing 3000 men in all haſte, and will ſtand to their defence and neutralitie.

THE Imperiall troops march dayly from theſe parts ouer the Elfe, towards Nurenburgh, Ulme, Strasburgh, Suabia: whether they ayme at the Free-townes, or the Venetians, or France, or againſt the Proteſtant Cantones, which is ſuſpected, is yet uncertaine.

IT is not yet knowen what Leopoldus intends, hauing a good number of men in redineſſe; whether hee bee diſcontented, becauſe hee miſt both the crownes of Hungarie, and Bohemia, or whether hee is to execute the counſell of Trent; it is thought 1628. hee will take part with the Proteſtant Cantones, and ſoe by getting the good will of the Imperiall townes and princes, make eaſier his way to bee king of the Romans, which hee is ſuſpected to ayme at, hauing allready ſom at that worke in Morauia and Bohemia.

Hamburgh, March 15th,
1628. ſtilo loci.

Auviſi di Zuricho, dalli $\frac{8}{18}$ di Marzo, 1628.

DA Coire s'ha con lettere dalli 5. de Marzo ſt. uet. che gli officiali de Valtelina doueano eſſer poſti in poſſeſſo á primi del preſente. L'Vlmi ua reſidente perpetuo per la valle a Milauo, di doue s' aſpettaua di ritorno il dottore Carbonnera, andatoui per render homaggio della carica di podeſtá di Sondrio.

LE compagnie ch'erano loggiate ne contorni del lago di Como s' inuiarno alla parte de Cremona, et in luoco loro s'ode eſſerui arriuate de Napolitani, et che ui debbano uenir altre truppe: di maniera che ſi uede che le frontiere di Valtelina mai reſtaranno s'fornite di ſoldateſca Spagnuola; il che da chiaro inditio che uogliano in ogni modo conſeruarſi quel paſſo ſolo per loro.

PARE non ſia ancor ſeguita l' accettatione delli conditioni d' accomodamento del contado di Chiauenna, má ancor che niſſuna delle parti rimanghi contenta.

S' INTENDE da diuerſi luochi della Sueuia et della Franconia, che la ſoldateſca ſotto il generale Mansfeldt occupa la maggior parte di quelli prouincie, et che inferiſcano danni inumerabili: molte paeſani abandonano le loro habitatione, molti altri muorano di fame; in ſomma non ſi ſente che d'eſtrema miſeria. Nel ducato di Wirtenbergo e' ſtato anco vltimamente alloggiato gran numero di cauallaria. Il duca di Wirtemberg, et l'arciduca Leopoldo, anco il generale Mansfeldt, ſi ſono abocati a Ghinsburg: ſin' ad' hora non ho' potuto penetrare a che fine; ben ſi giudica ch'il duca de Wirtemberg ni ſia uenuto per intercedere per il circolo del Suabia (eſſendo eſſo duca generale di quel circolo) accioche la ſoldateſca ne ſia leuato: altri uogliano ch' abbi pregato che gli ſia fatto gratia de leuare la caualleria fuori del proprio ducato. L' arciduca deue hauer detto, in certo occaſione, non ſaper ella a che fine ſiano amaſſare queſti truppe, et anco che' l' iſteſſo Mansfelt, chi le deue commandare, non ne ſá nulla. L'arciducheſſa s' e' inuiate uerſo Inſprug, la doue S. A. la deue ſeguire in breue.

HORA e gionto qui un corriero del duca di Mantoua qual uá in eſtraordinaria diligenza incorte di Francia, per ſollicitare (come egli dice) ſoccorſo per detta alteſſa contra tentaui di Spagna et Savoya: detto corriero afferma aſſeuerantemente, che Spagnioli hanno meſſo guarnigione nella terra di Chiauenna, come anco nel Contodo.

The preceding Advices [i.e. from Lord CARLETON's Letters, p. 791, to this laſt piece of Advices from Zurich included] were ſent by Sir ISAAC WAKE to Sir THOMAS ROE; as by his Letter in the ſaid p. 791.

De Paris, du 29^{me} de Feurier, ſtilo novo, 1628.

LE cardinal de Richelieu eſt fort malade au camp de deuant la Rochelle: il a neantmoins le commandement entre ſes mains au grand meſcontentement des ſeigneurs. Ceux de la Rochelle ſe comportent brauement, en faiſant des ſorties journellement. On dict qu' ils ont grand faute de bois, et peu de chair, ayant neantmoins, apres le depart du roy, fait entrer quelque boeufs. Il y a à Paris des ambaſſadeurs extraordinaires de Sauoye, Lorraine, Mantoue, et ont deſia eu audience. Le non ce et l' ambaſſadeur de Veniſe, en y allant, ſont entrés en picque touchant quelque lettres fauſſés. On attend de jour à autre les ambaſſadeurs d' Hollande. On parle fort de la paix auec Angleterre; mais on n'en uoit point d' apparence. Le duc d' Eſpernon ſe deuoit rendre au camp auec 8 m. hommes pour eſtre general; mais il s' eſt excusé de ſon incapacité, à l'eſgard de ce ſage eccleſiaſtique qui a le temon en la main. Monſieur frere du roy ne ueut qu'on luy parle du mariage auec la Florentine, encore que la reine-mere le preſſe fort; ains s'eſt deliberé de prendre la fille du duc de Neuers.

From Sir ISAAC WAKE. Without Date; but ſuppoſed in April or May.

1628.
Received by Sir Thomas Roe in Smyrna, July 23. 1628.

My uery good Lord,

YESTERDAY, when I had my pen in my hand to write unto you, I receaued a pacquet from your lordſhip, wherein there were two letters for mee, dated the 22. and 26. of February, duplicates of your former, a relation concerning the Jeſuites and Greekes, cifers concerning Gabor, and the ſtate of that empire, and pacquets for my lord Conway, Mr. Queſtor, and Randall Symmes. Your pacquets ſhall haue ricapito, God willing, to morrowe: but for your relation and auviſi, I ſhall make you but a poore returne, although I haue ſearched all my warehouſe to ſeeke ſome commodityes, which may make retribution in part; and I thinck I ſhall come neare you in bulke, though not in ualewe: you muſt accept my good will, and aſſure your ſelfe, that I do rather trouble you with impertinent papers, then conceale any thing from you. By the copye of my laſt diſpatch to my lord Conway, you will ſee howe wee ſtand in theſe parts; and for further elucidation thereof, I ſend you likewiſe the copye of Mr. Hales diſpatch from Turin. In ſumme, it is like to proue a hot yeare, and the alarme is greate on all ſides; in the meane time Niuers doth goe downe the winde, and it will bee hard for him to ſaue himſelfe; for the French can do but little in this conjuncture, the pope muſt ſtand padre commune, and the Venetians will not paſſe the bounds of neutrality.

Venetians
I AM informed from a uery good hand, the 87. b. haue diſpatcht to their b a i l o t u r k e
7. 1. 23. 30. 40. 64. 70. to do what maye bee with the 49. 51. 45. 28. 12. 67. 64.
b. r e a k e the empr to 7. 46. 13. 2. 28. 12. with 91. a. Your lordſhip being uppon the place, will ſoone knowe whither it be true or not, and unto your approued wiſdome I do remit the uſe that maye be made thereof.

I CANNOT do more then I haue donne for your archbiſhop: for although I haue cauſed the cardinal to bee moued againe therein, and he hath expreſſed much readines to imbrace the buiſineſſe; yet now his houſe is in ſuch contumacia with the court of Rome, that he is not able to do any thing, neither indeede doth he looke any more that waye.

Mr. WILSON hath left us, and is gone to ſee Italye before he returne into England. I haue not been wanting to offer my ſelfe unto him, but he hath made no uſe of mee. Concerning the waye moſt fit for your lordſhip to take, I haue often deliuered my opinion, that Venice will be the moſt commodious; and as I do expect you here with much deuotion, ſo will I bee ready to ſerue you with ſincere affection. That which you haue written in cifer ſhall, God willing, be tranſmitted either to the queen of Bohemia, or to my lord Carleton, by the firſt opportunity.

So, wiſhing unto your lordſhip all happines, I will here craue leaue to kiſſe the fayre hands of your noble lady, and euer reſt

Venice.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithfull frend,
and ſeruant to command,

I. WAKE.

A COPY of Mr. HALES his Letter to my Lord CONWAY, [referred to above] dated $\substack{30\ \text{March,}\\ 9\ \text{April,}}$ 1628.

Right Honourable, my ſingular good Lord,

AFTER that the duke of Sauoy had made his returne hither on the $\frac{18}{28}$ of March from his diuotion at Auigliana, on the day following, to accompany the count of Soiſſons, his highnes tranſported himſelfe againe to Riuoli; where hauing feaſted the ſayde count, and inwayed him for Sauoy, he retyred back thither againe on the $\frac{22}{30}$. and being at his houſe of pleaſure in the parke, he was there uiſited on the $\frac{21}{31}$. by monſieur Guron (a creature of the cardinal de Richelieue) diſpatched hither in diligence to ſtop his highneſſes reſolution, in his pretended warre againſt Monferrat; for the effecting of which, hauing in his ſhort audience perſwaded this prince, in the name of the French king, to deſiſt from adhering vnto Spayne, proteſting that he 1628. might expect to be inueſted into all whatſoeuer he might pretend vnto, if his highnes would onely rely vppon the French arme, it wrought but little; for after the duke had appeared here in towne the ſame day, and had taken his leaue both of madame the princeſſe of Carigniana, and the infante, accompanyed with the prince major and the prince cardinal, he went that night vnto Montcauiliero, (a place diſtant 6 myles from this towne) as well to ſhake of the multiplicity of audiences and diſturbances which the French do continually giue him, as to attend to put himſelfe in order for his newe warre; which to beginne, his highnes had, on the $\frac{18}{28}$. laſt paſt, ſent the marquis Villa, the lieutenant general of our caualaria, with ſome few trouppes of horſe, the regiment of the Valleſani, conſiſting of ſome 7 or 800; the regiment of the count della Trinità, compoſed of 1000; Don Carlo his natural ſon with ſome 500 more, with two pieces of ordinance drawen out of Chiraſco, towards the citty of Alba, both to ſummon it, and to take it in; but vppon their finding the place not ſo plyable as was imagined, that it ſtood vppon defence, and that the count della Trinità was infortunately ſlayne with a ſhot deliuered from the towne, whiles he ouer-boldly approached the walls, it cauſed the duke of Sauoy, on the $\frac{22\text{ March,}}{1\text{ April,}}$ to moue himſelfe thither in perſon, where hauing ſpent onely two dayes in making approaches, and planting the ordinances, at a ſummon which he commanded to be giuen the towne by one Benſio, to render themſelfes unto the duke of Sauoye their lawfull prince, who was there in perſon, expecting louingly, and as faithfull and obedient ſubjects, to receaue them vnder his protection; proteſting that if they refuſed this grace, and that his highnes made his way by force, they might expect all of them to be treated as traytors and rebels; notwithſtanding the oppoſition made by the gouernor (Conſtantino Radicato, one of the lords of St. Sebaſtian, a towne in Monteferrat) againſt the inhabitants; yet theſe rejecting his command, came to parly, opened their gates, and on the $\frac{24\text{ March,}}{3\text{ April,}}$ with general acclamations of Viva Savoya! his highnes was receaued into the towne as their lawful prince. The gouernor fearing to fall into the duke of Sauoys hands, for hauing ſhewed extreme cruelty againſt a ſubject of his, and a perſon of quality, in the laſt warres, as fleaing him aliue, and eating his hart, and for newly burning diuers places about Alba, empoyſoning of victuals, and ſhewing all inhumanity againſt ſuch as would not obey him, is not to be found, but either is ſlipt downe by the wall, or taken ſanctuary; and it ſtandeth vppon him to keepe himſelfe out of our fingers; for if he be taken, he will ſmart for his animoſity. Before his highnes made his ſolemne enterance into the towne (which was performed with majeſticall ceremonyes) himſelfe under a ritch canopye, with his heralds and officers of ſtate before him, he had the patience to ſtand at the gate vntill all the trouppes iſſued forth; and ſuch of the Terazzani and inhabitants of Monferrat as were found in armes, he did giue leaue to goe whither they would, either to Caſal, Trino, or Montcaluo, but disbanded all French from their colours; and after he had commanded ſome of them to be puniſhed, he cauſed 50 or 60 of the reſt to be chayned, and ſent to Aſti, where they may expect either to be put to death, or ſent to the gallyes. Thus his highnes hauing happily performed this impreſa againſt Alba, planted there a ſtrong garriſon of Piedmonteſi and Valleſani, and placed there il caualier Operto, a gentleman of exceeding worth, to be gouernor, is retyred to Aſti to take a little breath before he imbarque himſelfe for his other deſignes.

VIANO, a towne ſeated in Piedmont, vppon the weſtermoſt skirts of Montferrat, diſtant ſome 12 miles from Alba, after a little ſtrayning courteſy, hath reſolued at laſt to follow the fortune of Alba, as likewiſe Guarena and St. Damian, places lying in this princes ſtate on this ſide the riuer of Tanaro; and as theſe townes haue made ſome willing contribution vnto their newe prince to pay his army, ſo may wee beleeue that the reſt will follow their example, and that by this meanes his highnes will draw a conſiderable ſumme of monny into his coffers.

THE duke of Sauoy hauing in this manner poſſeſt himſelfe of that part of the marquiſat of Montferrat, which lyeth beyond the riuer Tanaro, doth now prouide to put himſelfe in equipage to fall downe the Po, towards Trino, as well to take in that towne, as other places of his which lye on this ſyde that riuer, and betwixt the Po and Tanaro; in the performing of which wee do euedently ſee, that his highnes will rather attend to ſtand content with that which the charity of the Spanyards will afford him, then any manner of wayes bring into the field his old claymes, which are two: firſt, vnto the whole ſtate of the marquiſate: and, ſecondly, vnto diuers particular places. When I ſhall learne the true diuiſion of this marquiſate betwixt his highnes and the Spanyards, I will not be wanting, by way of mappe, to repreſent it vnto your lordſhip.

To effect our deſignes againſt Trino, although we haue drawen out of this cittadel 7 peeces of battery, and inwayed them, with other 7 peeces taken out of Aſti, and do put in order all our trouppes; yet becauſe the naturall ſituation of that place is ſtrong, (it being a triangle, and therefore called Trino, whereof two parts are waſht by the Po, not to be aſſalted, and the other angle towards the terra firma not to be vndermyned) and that it is ſtored with great quantity of ammunition and men, wee ſhall, without all doubt, finde a worke of difficulty and tyme.

For what concerneth Caſal, the Spanyards, as farre as wee can learne, do not yet beat it, but are buſye in rayſing their batteryes, planting their ordinance, and making their approaches, in that forme and faſhion as they beſeiged Breda, with an intention to divert the riuer of Po into the towne, which they hope to do, becauſe the ſituation is low. Howſoeuer, there being a braue and valiant gouernor, wee muſt looke that the Spanyards muſt not haue it but at a very deere rate.

No ſooner, vppon the 26. March, was monſieur Sabbaran returned hither from Paris, but that both the French ambaſſadors preſently hyed them to the prince, and hauing told him, that by an expreſſe order from the French king their maſter, they were to ſummon all the French, both horſe and foot, which did ſerue his highnes in Piedmont and other places, to returne within 15 dayes into France to the ſeruice of their king, where euery commander and officer ſhould enjoy the ſame charge he had here, they did hope his highnes would permit it, and not bring his majeſties ſubjects vnder the terrible bannes, which otherwiſe will be inflicted vppon them in caſe of tranſgreſſion. Herevnto the prince boldly replyed, that the French king did very well to call home his ſubjects, whom they would not with-holde, but ſuffer them to goe when and whither they would, and that the ambaſſadors might do very well to accompany them. This French charity they haue afforded vnto the duke of Sauoy to affright him, in regard that the truth is, that in moſt of our regiments of foot wee haue quantity of French, which, if they ſhould retyre with 30 companyes of horſe which they haue at preſent here, and may ammount to 1200 braue horſe, it would much weaken our forces: but by the grace of God the duke of Sauoy hath found a way to preuent this malitiouſneſſe, becauſe he will not haue this cauallary reuerſt back vppon Sauoy by Criquy, out of Dauphinie; hauing formerly, vppon the beginning of this innouation, quartered them in our ſtrong townes farre diſtant one from another, he hath ſent to poſſeſſe himſelfe both of all the horſes and armes, vnder the pretext that he will pay for them, and ſuffer the maſters to depart whither they will. Remedy there is none, but that the French muſt ſubſcribe vnto his command; for the foot doubtleſſe, moſt part of them, ſhall be ſtayed likewiſe here; for la Tours regiment (ſent hither by monſieur de Longueuille) hauing already and before this order arriued, ingroſſed 900 of his ſouldiers into monſieur de Florios regiment, ſo that none but the officers and ſome few ſouldiers are in election to retyre, wee do not finde any diſpoſition in Florio to go from hence; for the reſt, they are ſo ſcattered, as that they are ſcarce ſeene.

Monsieur de St. Chemont hauing ſent to ſpeake with the baron d' Allemande, the generall of our ſeas, about a buſineſſe of much importance, had for anſwer, that being no ſtateſman, nor had any thing to do with monſieur de San Chemont, as he was the French kings ambaſſador, nor as he was monſieur de San Chemont, he did deſyre to be pardoned. This drawing with it a peremptory ſummons of retyring himſelfe from the ſeruice of this prince into France, the baron replyed, that the French king hauing been pleaſed to command him to retyre to the ſeruice of this prince, towards whom his majeſty charged him to vſe all truſt and fidelity, he had, in conformity of this order, ſould all his meanes, and tranſported both himſelfe and wife hither; and therefore did hope his majeſty would not be offended, if he did end the reſt of his dayes in this princes ſeruice, as he is reſolued to do.

The duke of Sauoy, to ſecure Spin or Pin, (a caſtle of Montferrat, neereſt confining to vs vppon this ſide) hauing ſent thither the count de Gouiano with onely one company of foot, they were by the caſtellano (called Guglielmo de Pin) louingly receaued and entertayned. This being knowen at Piouà, another caſtle in Montferrat not farre diſtant from this, where ſome quantity of the Monferrini (banditi) had fortifyed

1628. fortifyed themſelfes, ſome 200 of theſe, all musketeers, hauing, vppon the 6. of April by this account, taken a reſolution to viſit their reformed neighbours of Pin, they had the happines to do it without anie oppoſition, all ours being merry in the caſtle without either watch or guarde; and cutting the chaynes of the draw-bridge, that it might not be drawen vp, they ſurpriſed both the count, and almoſt all his people, of which part they ſlew in the caſtle, and part made priſoners, 12 of whoſe heads they cut of by the way. What they haue donne with the count himſelfe, wee know not yet; and had not the caſtellians wife cloathed in maydes apparel the count de Solare, a very fayre youth, he had ſuffered with the reſt. Our princes do exceedingly reſcent this act, and do make a reflection vppon Guglielmo de Pin, as if he ſhould be the cauſe of this maſſacer by holding intelligence with thoſe banditi; which he vtterly denyed, and to purge himſelfe the poor gentleman and his ſonne are retyred hither; and although they are knowen to bee, and euer to haue been, in all the laſt warres, partiall ſeruants vnto this houſe, yet in this fury it is doubted they will go neere to be loſt.

NOTWITHSTANDING that this prince did all what he could to keepe the princeſſe of Carigniana here from going into Sauoy, yet ſhee would not by any meanes be kept from the prince hir husband, but ſhare with him in his fortunes; and ſo on the firſt of Aprill, by this account, ſhe departed from this towne.

So, with my harty prayers vnto Almighty God for the preſeruation of his majeſties ſacred perſon, I reſt, &c.

Turin, the 30 March, 9 Aprill, 1628.

Received by Sir Thomas Roe in Smyrna, June 23. 1628.

A DUPLICATE of Sir ISAAC WAKE's Letter to Lord CONWAY, [referred to in Sir Iſaac's Letter preceding] dated April $\frac{4}{14}$. 1628.

Right Honorable, my ſinguler good Lord,

I MAY nowe ſafely beginne this diſpatch, as Virgil did his Eneads, with Arma virumque cano; for the canon hath nowe proclaymed a warre in theſe parts, and a rupture is made, which will not perhaps be accommodated in haſt. The duke of Sauoye hath taken Alba, Viano, and all the circle of Monſerrate, which doth border vppon the Tanaro. Don Gonzales doth beate Caſal with forty pieces of canon; and, as it is likely that they will diuide Monferrate before any ſecours can appeare, ſo on this ſide the marquis of Montenegro doth ingroſſe the Mantouano, and hath made all the ſubjects of the duke of Mantoua, bordering vppon the riuer Oglio, to flye, and ſaue what they could tranſport with their perſons into the neareſt ſtrong places. The prince of Piedmont is to vndertake this ſiege of Trino; and Nizza della Paglia, with Moncaluo are for Don Gonzales, after he ſhall haue made an end with Caſal. In this manner is the ſkinne of the beare diuided, before the beaſt be killed, and tyme muſt tell vs the ſucceſſe; for although Niuers at preſent is able to do very little, yet if the French king (whoſe martyr he is) will really eſpouſe ſuch a quarell as this is, and accommodate with thoſe of the religion, perhaps Italia non ridera.

IT will be expected of mee, that I ſhould (being vppon the place of action) ſpeciſye the ground of this innouation, wherein I will not be wanting vnto my duty; and that my relation may be ſincere and autenticall, I will faithfully aduertiſe what I haue ſeene in actis publicis, and been informed by thoſe who, being neutralls, haue hearde the actiue and paſſiue partyes ſaye all that they could ſaye on either ſide.

VNTO the marquiſate of Montferrate the houſe of Sauoy hath long pretended, and the ſentence giuen by Charles the 5th in fauor of the howſe of Gonzaga, was the giuing them the poſſeſſorio pro interim, with reſeruation of the petitorio for the howſe of Sauoy. Vnto the dutchy of Mantoua the marquis of Guaſtalla doth pretend; and the pretenſions of both thoſe howſes hauing been lately remonſtrated vnto the emperor, he hath ſent a commiſſary vnto the duke of Niuers, in whoſe commiſſion were theſe words, Che S. M. Ceſarea habbia deſtinato un commiſſario a pigliare il poſſeſſo della citta di Mantoua & di Caſale, per tenerle ſino che di ragione ſi conoſca la cauſa, & che eſſendoli negato queſto del ſeignior Niuers, n'a per tentarle con le forza de Spagnuoli. Don Gonzales, when he did ſummon Caſal, did vſe the ſame language, totidem verbis, and giue them three dayes time to reſolue. The ſenator Roe, ſent hither from Don Gonzales to giue an account to this ſtate of this intended innouation, hath ſpoken the ſame words in this college, without any variation. In conformity of theſe publique acts and propoſitions, I haue ſeen a letter written from the king of Spayne vnto the duke of Vrbin, wherein he doth declare, that he hath no purpoſe for his owne particuler to innouate any thing in Italy; but that the emperor hauing required the aſſiſtance of his forces to reduce his vaſſalli to obedience and acknowledgment of his ſoueraignety, he could not deny him ſo reaſonable a requeſt. The count d'Oliuarez hath paſſed a little further with ſignor Mocenigo the Venetian ambaſſador at Madrid, telling him that the emperor was reſolued to be obeyed and acknowledged in Italye, as he had made himſelfe to be obeyed in Germany; and that ſuch princes as did hold any thing of the empire in Italye, ſhould do well to ſubmitt themſelfes betymes to his good pleaſure. Hitherto it doth appeare, by the acts of the emperor, and the letters, expoſitions and declarations of the king of Spayne and his miniſters, that this warre is grounded vppon the ſupremacye of the emperor, who doth pretend to ſequeſter the litigious prouinces of Mantoua and Monferrat, vntill he may giue a definitiue ſentence. 1628.

ON the other ſide the miniſters of France and of Mantoua openly, the Pope and the Venetians more cloſely, do vſe an other language, alleaging that the emperor doth ſerue in this buſineſſe but as a ciſer; and that, although his name and authority be vſed, yet the deſigne was formed at Madrid, and that the liberty of Italye is aymed at.

THE propoſitions made by the ambaſſador of France and thoſe of Mantoua, in the college here, do runne in this tenor; That Niuers hauing acknowledged the emperor for his ſoueraigne, and ſent the biſhop of Mantoua to receaue the inueſtiture of theſe ſtates in his name, the emperor cannot except againſt his perſon, nor queſtion his title, which is out of controuerſye: That the monarchy of Italye is the thing aymed at by the Spanyards, who cannot arriue therevnto without making themſelfes firſt maſters of Caſal, and by conſequence excluding all French ſuccors: That without naming the emperor at all, they haue of themſelfes offered vnto Niuers to giue him the county of Borgundy in exchange, vppon condition that he would reſigne vnto the king of Spayne Mantoua and Montferrat: That through the ſydes of Niuers the French king is wounded, in regard that his ſucceſſion is vnqueſtionable, but onely that his originall extraction out of France doth expoſe him to the hatred of the Spanyards: That if this fyre be not quickly quenched, it will conſume all Italye, and paſſe as farre as the power of Spayne, joyned with the authority and fortune of the emperor, can tranſport it. Finally, they do declare, That Niuers is willing to remit the deciſion of his right vnto the imperiall chamber, prouided that the Spanyards ſeruing themſelfes of the authority of the emperor, may not, by waye of ſequeſtration, enter into any part of his dominions; for although he doth willingly acknowledge the emperor for his ſupreme ſoueraigne, yet he doth not know that the king of Spayne hath authority to command in Italye out of the kingdome of Naples and ſtate of Milan.

BY this diſcourſe your lordſhip will ſee, that as the Spanyards do waſh their hands, and pretend to be pure executors of the emperors pleaſure; ſo on the other ſide the French and Mantouani do laye all the blame vppon the Spanyards. I will not comment vppon ſo playne a text; but it is apparent, that Auſtria and Spayne are one thing, and that they do proceed in all their actions communi conſilio; and if Spayne haue ſerued their turne in Germany, it muſt be expected they will requite the Spanyards by aduancing their deſignes in Italye.

HOW the Pope and the Venetians do behaue themſelfes in this buſineſſe, your lordſhip ſhall knowe, God willing, by my next, here being nothing ripe yet at this preſent; for although they haue this weeke choſen a proueditore generale in terra ferma, and diuers particuler proueditori to ouerſee their confines, yet they are duces ſine militibus, they hauing as yet no forces of any conſideration, nor giuen patents for newe leauyes.

ABSTRACT of a Letter from Mr. HALES, at Turin, of the 13. Aprill, $\frac{1627}{1628}$.

Received by Sir Thomas Roe in Smyrna, Jun. 23. 1628.

NOTWITHSTANDING the duke of Sauoy did much diſguſt his new ſubjects of the city of Alba, by defacing ſoe ſpeedilie the armes of the duke of Mantoua, and planting his owne in their places, yet hee hath giuen them hoope of liuing in reſt, by his motto Perpetua quies, which hee hath cauſed to bee written ouer 1628. his creſt. Radicato the gouernour, hauing at laſt made his peace, is retired to St. Sebaſtian his owne place. The news of his highneſs retyring to Aſti, after theſe new conqueſts, is not true; for late on Sonday-night laſt, hee arriued heere quietly, without making any ſolemne enterance; and hauing heere ſpent 2 ½ [days] in ſetling his affaires, on Wedneſday laſt, the 12th inſtant, he ymbarqued himſelfe vpon the Pó for Trin, towards which place there are going 5000 ſoldiers, moſt part of our ordinance, [that is] to ſay, his highneſs regiment, conſiſting of 500, that of the prince's of 500, the marquis de Lantz compoſed of 600, the count della Trinita's of 1000, (deuided ſince his death into 2 commands) Flores regiment ſtrong of 1500, Monſieur de Chenes (gouernour of Aſti) of 500, and Don Carlo's of 500, togither with 1500 of our horſe, which haue their quarters upon the brinke of the Pó. There are likewiſe planted 20 peeces of ordinance, 16 of which are of batterie, and carry ball of 60 pound weight. It is probable, the duke of Sauoy will doe what hee can to make ſhort worke, in regard the French doe threaten to fall ſpeedilie downe into Piedmont, by the paſſages of Pinerol, la Val Peroſa, and Lucerna; towards which places hee hath ſent Caſtelmont to make neceſſarie prouiſions for oppoſition: and wee doe beleeue heere at preſent, that the duke of Rohan will free his highneſs from that feare, and cauſe Criquy to turne his forces towards him, who marcheth up the Rhodano with 8000 foot, and 400 horſe, and 4 peeces of ordnance, hath taken in Poucin, and intendeth to fortefie that riuer on both ſides, that hee may the better ſpeede with Valenza in Doufanie: and this I am conſtrained to giue creditt unto, in reſpect I haue in a gentlemans hand, of good credit, a letter writt from Auignon *, which ſaith that wee liue heere in ſom feare, in regard that Monſieur de Rohan marcheth victoriouſly hither (with nominating the aforeſaid troopes) and ſoe is to goe towards Douphanie; and that the prince of Conde was at Tolhouſe, preparing forces to encounter him. This proſperitie of the duke of Rohan, I make account, will make the duke of Sauoy grow careleſſe of him; and I cannot but reflect upon the princes words concerning Rochell, which place, if it ſubſiſt, all will goe well; if not, it is not that ſmall matter promiſed can ſauſe Rohan; and ſauſe hee will bee, I hoope, in regard certainely 2 little barques haue ſuccoured Rochell, and wee will hoope it will be ſeconded by others; howſoeuer, heere our French haue allready ſwallowed it up.

* Of the 20. Mar.

WEE follow heere the diſarming the French, and giuing their horſes to ours that want, in ſoe much that both the French ambaſſador, and all that crew, did ſtorme exceedingly; but the duke, not able to diſgeſt the peremptorie commaunds of that miniſter within his owne dominions, did, on the 11. lycence him; in conformitie of which, on the 12. without either preſent, or accompanied with any one whatſoeuer on the part of the duke, he departed the towne, leuing behind him an infamie ſo greate, as hee will neuer bee able to waſh away. Madam did chide him roundly, and told him hee ſhold not eſcape ſcotfree for hauing beene the originall cauſe of all theſe motiues, and of undowing the princes of Mantoua, and all that houſe. Neuer was any miniſter followed with ſoe manie curſes, as is that man.

GURON's negotiating heere was more pleaſant to our princes ears, then Chiamonds was, howſoeuer his late arriuall marred all, and hath doone nothing: on the 20th hee departed from hence towards Mantoua.

ON the 11. heere arriued againe D. Aluares, which night hauing alla longa negociated with the princes, on the morrow he poſted bake againe.

MR. MURION lately com from the Spaniſh armie under Caſal, ſayeth, that the Spaniards are yet as farr from the towne.

THAT they haue 8000 men in the field; and that they will haue a bone to picke, in regarde there are 6000 fiſhing men in Caſall.

Turin, 13. Aprill, 1628.
ſtylo loci.

Sent to Sir T. ROE.

RELATION of the Duke of FLORENCE his Entertainment at Venice, April, 1628.

TWO days before the arriuall of the duke of Florence, heere did appeare in the colledg, on his behalfe, the count Alleſſandro del Negro, ſent to acquaint this ſtate with his coming, and to adjuſt ſuch puntilij of formalities and ceremonies as were neceſſary to be well underſtood on both ſides aforehand. It was ſoone agreed, that the title of Altezza Sereniſſima ſhold bee giuen to the duke by this doge, and to his

1628 his brother of Altezza onely, without further addition, and that in the chamber of the doge the duke ſhold haue the hand and precedence ; as that likewiſe, in the houſe of the duke the doge ſhold haue the hand. Upon theſe conditions the entertainment offred to the duke by this ſtate was accepted, excepting onely the firſt rencounter of gentlemen deputed to meete him on the way, and to bring him to the towne in their gallys. This beeing by him refuſed, out of a deſire hee had to enter priuately, they did ſend to Chiozza diuers barques laden with rinfreſcamenti ; and from thence the podeſtá of that towne did conduct him in his priuate piotta to this towne, where he arriued upon Wedneſday the 5th of Aprill, ſtylo novo. Paſſing by St. Georgio Maggior he wold needs land there, to ſee that faire monaſterie of Bendictin monkes ; and after hauing runn through the church, cloyſters and refectorie, he went directly to the pallace of the SS^{ri} Grimani, upon the Canal-grande, prouided and richly furniſhed for his reception ; where, at the water ſtayrs, hee was receiued by Alorſo Valareſſo, Pietro Contarini, and Marc' Antonio Moreſini, who being all three caualleri, and lateſt retorned from forraine ambaſſages, had the charge to ouerſee the houſe, and to wayt upon his perſon during his abode in the citty. The ſame day, preſently after diner, hee did take a priuate gondola, and beeing accompanied with non but his brother, Don Gio. Carlo, the prince of Venoſa, and caualier Contareni, hee paſſed through the Canal-grande, and the other beſt canales of the townes, to ſee the face and out-ſides of the pallaces, without diſmounting in any place.

6. The next day in the morning, hee went priuatly to St. Markes Place to ſee the Piazza, the Pallace, and Sala del Conſiglio, and the Armorie of the Counſell of Ten ; and after dinner hee went to Muran, where hee did ſee the glaſſe furnaces worke, and heere two nunns ſing, who are accounted excellent.

7. Upon Fryday in the morning il Teſoro di San Marco was ſhewed unto him, and paſſing through the Merceria hee did find it all couered ouer the head, and richly furniſhed on both ſides with cloth of gold and ſiluer, tirſell, veluet, ſatin, and all manner of moſt rich ſtuffs that were in the citty.

8. All Satirday was ſpent in vewing of the Arſenall, where ten peeces of ordinance were caſt that day ; and after a verie noble and magnificent feaſt, hee was tranſported from thence to his houſe in gallys.

9. Upon Sunday hee was entertained with a brigata, which was excellently well performed, with an infinite concourſe of people.

10. Upon Monday, in the pallace of the SS^{ri} Foſcari (in which Henry the 3d lodged) the principall ladys of the towne aſſembeld ; and beeing diſpenced withall that day, by the SS^{ri} ſopra le pompe, they did appeare as rich as they cold make themſelfes with chain diamonds, and excellent pearle ; and, after hauing daunced a while before his highneſs, they were all ſumptuouſly banquetted at 2 greate halls in the ſame pallace.

The viſitts hee did receiue and giue did paſſe on this manner : Upon Thurſday, the day after his arriuall, the SS^{ri} Lando and Peſaro Clauij Grandi (who haue beene both of them ambaſſadors in England) did viſitt him at his lodging, in the name of the colledg ; and the day following, beeing Fryday, Erizzo and Cornaro procuratori di San Marco, did comply with him in the ſame manner and place, in the name of the ſenate. Upon Sonday morning hee did viſitt the doge in his priuate lodgings in the pallace, where hee was mett by the doge at the ſtayrs head, had the right hand of precedence giuen unto him ; and, at his departure, was accompanyed by the doge and 6 conſiglieri downe the firſt par of ſtayrs. The next day, beeing Monday, the doge and conſilieri (which doe make the repreſentatiue ſig^{ria}) did retorne this viſitt unto the duke, who did deſcend ſom part of the ſtayrs to meete them, and giue the hand unto the doge in his lodging, and at his departure accompanied him downe all the ſtayrs unto his barge : as ſoone as the doge was in his barge, the duke did retire, but his brother, Gio. Carlo, and the prince of Venoſa, did ſee all the conſiglieri embarqued, and the barge lanched before they did ſtirr from the riva. The reſidents of Mantoua, Urbin and Malta, and the ſecretarie of the emperor, did all of them viſitt him at his lodgings, rather as domeſtique than then as publique miniſters ; but with ambaſſadors of crownes hee did proceed by way of entervew and rencounter, (as hee had doone at Rome) euery one hauing ſeuerally ſtipulated with his counſell aforehand all circomſtances of tyme, title, and paritie, which were punctually obſerued ; for, upon Fryday, hee did ſee the nuncio in a monaſterie of the Crucigeri ; and the ſame day the 1628. Spaniſh ambaſſador did meete him alla Madonna dell' horto, another monaſterie; upon Satirday the Engliſh ambaſſador did rencounter him in the Arſenall; and, upon Monday following, the French ambaſſador had his entervew at the Frari, a monaſterie of Franciſcans. Hee did receiue from them all the title of Altezza Sereniſſima, and retorne the title of Excellentia to all except the nuncio, who cannot haue more then Illuſtriſſimo; and their poſture was ſtanding breſt to breſt, without any ſhew of precedence. The ambaſſador of Holland did omitt this ceremonie; for which ſingularitie hee may perhaps haue ſome priuate reaſon, which the wiſeſt in this place cannot yet find.

Spaniſh

IN all theſe viſitts and entervews it hath beene obſerued, that although his counſell did ſtipulate aforehand verie ſtrictly, yet when it came to execution, the duke did allways performe more then hee had promiſed; for, as hee did accompanie the doge downe to his barge, which was more then was agreed upon, ſoe in his entervew with the ambaſſadors, hee did not onely exceed likewiſe in the ſame kind of accompanying them at their departure ſome good ſpace, anſwering in proportion to what hee had done to the doge; but further, the morning hee was to goe away, did ſend ſignor Ottauio Medices to all the ambaſſadors, with whom hee had mett, to viſitt them in his name, and to take his farewell; ſoe that really hee hath exceeded in curteſie, and giuen verie good ſatisfaction to all who had the honour to accoſt him.

AS hee did exceed in curteſie, ſoe hee was not deficient in liberalitie; for at the Arſenall he gaue 1000 crownes to the officers, and 200 crownes to the gally which did tranſport him from thence to his lodging: amongſt thoſe who did ſerue him in his houſe, hee did diſtribute 4000 crownes, and hee did not enter into any monaſterie without leauing an almes of 50 crownes for their uſe: at Muran hee did giue 100 piſtolls to the 2 nunns that did ſing; and after the ſame proportion hee hath exceeded to all who preſented him any thing of entertainment. In the ſhops of this towne hee hath ſpent a greate deale of mooney, hauing bought all manner of commoditys the citty did afford, either for uſe or pleaſure; and yet hee hath carryed away with him 100000 piſtolls in caſh, and twice as much in letters of exchange.

To the DUKE of BUCKINGHAM, from Sir THOMAS ROE.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAUE receiued a meſſage from your grace by Sir Peter Wich, which I will not ſtriue to expreſs, eyther as it is a charachter of your bountye, or myne owne conſolation. As well great joyes, as cares and ſorrowes, doe confound weake minds: and I am able to ſay no more than this; no benefitts can make me more your graces ſeruant; for wher it is not free, it is not worth acceptance.

I SURRENDER moſt willingly to my welcome ſucceſſor all the parts of my employment: how reſpectfully I haue receiued him, as his majeſties miniſter, and in his owne perſon, his owne ingenuitye will preuent me, and your grace will truſt me, that I know whom I ſerue therin. I wiſh the place ſucceſsfull to his majeſties ſeruice by his induſtrye; and that he may gather that which I haue ſowed, and find that which I haue miſſed.

HE hath ſeene ſome of my little marbles, and flatters me with an opinion, that they wilbe acceptable. I am ſure they haue two conſequences of curioſityes; much care in getting, and their valew reſting only upon your gratious liking. I haue lately gotten one, whoſe rude figure I encloſe: and being prayſed by a doctor brought up in Italye, I will tranſcribe his owne words: È di quelle ſtatue che li gentilhuomini Romani ſogliono metere nelle bauole, et ſcantie di lor librarie, ſecondo il' uſo Romano, intiera, bella, et di finiſſimo marmo, et a giuditio mio di bona ualuta: non ſtaro à depingerla piu oltre. I know not what my racolta will proue: I ſhould haue many; but the death of my ſeruant on the one ſyde, and the difficulty to gett our ſhipps to goe out of the way to take them in, will diminiſh the muſter of my diligence. I could haue laden ſhipps with ſuch ſtones as Mr. Petty diggs; but good things undefaced are rare, or rather not to be found. Our ſearch hath made many poore men induſtrious to rippe up old ruines: ſo that, in this alſo, my ſucceſſor may ſupply my deffects; and I am aboundantly recompenced, if any thing I haue done ſhall be by your grace eſteemed in any proportion of my deuotion.

IN publicque buſines I can write nothing that wilbe pleaſing. Some apparance there is of Gabors returne to the obedience and dependance of the grand ſignor:

but I haue no more fayth; and this is like to haue no farther ſcope than his owne ſecuritye mingled with diſſimulation. I will ſea Sir Peter Wich in the juſt way that I leaue, and augure him an happy progreſs. In all the reſt of my life and fortunes, I caſt my ſelfe into your graces armes and protection, knowing you neuer left any of your ſeruants; and I only deſire your grace to doe unto me, as unto your graces 1628.

Conſtantinople, 15th April, 1628. Moſt, &c.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

BEING out of office doth not diſcharge me of the dutye of loue, which is a naturall affection; and therfore, though I haue no great matter to write, yet while I prepare for my voyadge, I will giue you account of my ſelfe, and ſuch things as ſhall happen among us. I leaue the publicque buſines, as neare deſperation as may be, to a new phiſitian. Euery day we expect the entrye of Toldolagye, extraordinary of Gabor, an honeſt man, inter pares, who was commiſſioner for his maſter at this laſt treaty. His negotiation, as far as I know, wilbe to replace themſelues vnder the ſhadow of this empire; which might produce ſomewhat, if this ſtate wilbe perſwaded to make ſhow not to accept him, without he ſeale his fidelitye, and purge the ſuſpition of diſſimulation, by ſome act againſt the common enemye. But I haue no fayth in him; and doe knowe, that theſe miniſters haue neyther counſell nor ſpiritt enough for any action: if it proue better, I ſhall rejoyce at the ſtarrs of my ſucceſſor. There is yet one little hole open; the delay of the emperors ambaſſador for the ratification: but that he will come, and both ſides ſuffer, rather than part leſs then counterfayt friends, is my full perſwaſion. The ſpye mentioned in my laſt, is yet in priſon. The imperiall drogaman was a day vnder arreſt, and examined, and both confronted: but theſe dull-heads can make nothing of yt; and their old rule to proceede by violence they dare not practice: ſo that this is releaſed; and the other, a knowne ſpye of Naples, is kept, becauſe no man ſollicits for him.

THE new vizier is declared, and departed to the Aſian war: where he will begin, is yet a ſecrett; but I beleeue he ſhall march toward Perſia; for of Abaſſa they had enough the laſt yeare. And he hath now written a letter to admoniſh the grand ſignor not to moleſt him: that he is his ſeruant and ſlaue, and will hold that countrye for him; but if he ſeeke more then this obedience, that he will deliuer his poſſeſſion to the Perſian, againſt whom, if the vizier will proſecute the war, that he will doe all ſeruice, that is to ſay, be a back friend. My laſt judgement is, this empire may ſtand, but neuer riſe agayne.

OF any extraordinarye commiſſion to me, I ſee not; my ſucceſſor, I thincke, did not like it; and thought it a diminution to be vnder; and I no honor to be aboue. Ther appeares no cauſe to neede me; if there were, they would haue truſted me with the knowledge of his majeſties pleaſure immediately: all that he ſhows me, is a clauſe in his inſtructions, that he ſhall be referred to my directions; and, during the ſtay of the ſhips, be joyned with me: and that, if ther were cauſe of my farther reſidence, a ſignification of a commiſſion to remayne as extraordinarye, and to transfer to him the care of merchants; and that, in this qualety, I ſhould be to the grand ſignor recommended. Withall, he gaue me a letter from his majeſtie of an elder date, that doth, viſta la preſente, diſcharge me; and this ſhadow of honor, he ſays, he procured me (it may be ſo, when he was abſolutly ſtayd); and yet I find he is loth I uſe it: and I haue no neede of ſmoke nor empty titles. It is ſufficient that his majeſtie hath thought me worthy, as other great perſons haue aduiſed me; and I would haue ſtayed, conſumed, and dyed here, to doe him ſeruice: but thus to be made and vnmade by another, I take to be prepoſterous; neyther an honor, nor good warrant; for he ſayes, before his departure, my ſeruice was ſuppoſed uſeleſs: and if ther ſhall be cauſe of my ſtay, ther is no allowance giuen me, ſo that I muſt liue vpon an imaginarye dyett, like my authoritye. My lord Conway, from whom I expected expreſs direction, did not vouchſafe to write at all: my friends tell me of more than I haue ſeene, or can now performe, or dare to aſſume to my ſelfe; therefore I ſitt downe, and my fayling they muſt take vpon them at home, that haue 1628. left me ignorant and vnabled; for I haue no fault: thus much in honeſt confidence.

WHAT way to take is yet vncerteyne to me in my returne: I beleeue the ſhip muſt goe to Ligorne, and ſo through the long ſeas, if your lordſhip, vpon whoſe counſell I relye, doe not alter me. The land is all enemye, but the element; and the ſea by that the worſe for my poore wife. To ſee your lordſhip, I proteſt, is a greater longing to me than townes and cittyes to young men. If God diſpoſe it otherwiſe, I will ſerue you moſt ſincerely in England, and hope to ſee you there in honor, as one of my protectors; and doe only begg leaue, that when a priuat life ſhall take away the ſtampe of my correſpondence, that made it accepted in a publicque, and reduce it to playne letters, that yet you will vouchſafe them; for your lordſhips friendſhip is the beſt gayne of my Turkiſh journey. I conclude, naked I came in, and naked I goe out: and ſo Almighty God bleſs you and your ladye both, whoſe hands I kyſs, in the behalfe of my wife; and reſt Conſtantinople, 6th Aprill, 1628. Your Lordſhips.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My very good Lord,

LET my weaknes and indiſpoſition excuſe me, both to his majeſtie and your lordſhip; for it hath pleaſed God to lay a double puniſhment upon me, lately; from which though I am by his mercy deliuered, yet I haue feeble eyes and hands to write much. Notwithſtanding, I would not omitt to aduiſe your lordſhip, that Gabors extraordinarye is arriued, and hath had audience yeſterday of the vizier: he hath ſent me two meſſages; the laſt more open and direct; that he hath letters to me from his prince, and ſecrett inſtructions of important conſequence: that to morrow he will viſit me; and deſired me to ſtay the letters for Venice, vntill he had deliuered his meſſage, which I haue not thought fitt to doe, to auoyd noyſe; becauſe alway it is in my power to ſend an expreſs, by the baylos courteſye, more ſecrett and expedite. So I prepare my eares before my heart to beleeue: yet, doubtleſs, ther is ſome matter and hope that he will take care of himſelfe by returning to his friends; which if he will doe this ſummer opportunè, before it be too late, he is only able to make the enemy face about. He hath beene practiſing with the king of Sueueland and others; whither to maynteyne an opinion of him, or ſincerely, God knowes: as much as concernes my part, I ſhall know in two or three dayes; being reſolued to creditt nothing, but by conference of his ouertures to me, with thoſe he ſhall make to this ſtate; and to judge of the whole webbe by the ſeuerall threads: wherin I will proceede by the communication and counſell of Sir Peter Wich; uncerteyne how to behaue my ſelfe, without authoritye or inſtructions. And though I haue heard that his majeſtie doth expect my ſeruice in this buſines, yet I ſee no commiſſion directly, and am out of pay; only my ſpiritt beares me up, not to giue ouer, though I prooue a ſacrifice, and to take that halfe warrant I ſee; and ſo I will, while I ſtay, doe my dutye; and would haue done all things that I had knowne to be my dutye. I am able to write no more, but to ſubſcribe Conſtantinople, $\frac{19}{29}$. Aprill, 1628. Your Lordſhips.

To the Same.

My very good Lord,

THE Tranſiluanian ambaſſador hath beene with me, and deliuered a letter from his prince, rather to expoſtulate things paſt, then to ground any thing come. For his ſecrett negotiations, I deſired good wittneſſes; and therefore gaue him audience, in the preſence of Sir Peter Wich, and the Duch reſident. The ſubſtance was, that his maſter had made peace with the emperor againſt his will; partly enforced from hence, partly by want of ſupplies expected; but that, well weighing both the encreaſe of power, and the ambition of uniuerſall monarchye in the houſe of Auſtria, wherin his owne ruine was included, that he was moſt readye and deſirous to continue in the league, and to renewe the war; if we (to uſe his owne wordes) could præbere occaſionem et modum. This was all: I deſired him to enterprett himſelfe; for that thoſe generalityes defined nothing. I told him the occaſion was 1628. very fayre, by the union of the kings of Denmarke and Suecueland reſolued to oppoſe with all their force; and the meanes was, to riſe with his armye according to his treatye, for which he ſhould receiue ſtipendium conſtitutum. He anſwered at large, that he ment by occaſion; firſt, that the crownes of England and France might be reconciled; and the king of Suecuia procured to come perſonally with a ſtrong infanteria into Sileſia to joyne with him, and all other the princes confœderate joyntly to declare in the cauſe; by modum, that couenants might be kept with him for his ſupplies, and the grand ſignor procured to ſuſpend the peace with the emperor, and to countenance and aſſiſt him in all accidents. Theſe vaſt propoſitions made the difficultye greater; and like a man that thought he ſaw his journyes end at hand, by ſeeing a ſteeple upon a hill, but diſcerned not the great vally betweene; ſo it appeared to me, that hoped for ſomewhat, that he had remoued the concluſion further off, almoſt out of ſight. It will be fruictleſs to repeat all replications and remonſtrances of the preſent neceſſity made him: but to driue our diſcourſe to a period, I asked him, if he had commiſſion from his prince, in that later poynt, to unite with us, or ſeperatlye to inſtruct this ſtate of the common danger, and to diſſwade the peace, and to procure that licence and ayds pretended to be deſired. He anſwered in generalityes, he had, and would faythfully doe it. I coniured him, by the reputation of his honeſtye, to ſpeake clearely, if he thought his maſter had any purpoſe this ſummer to take the field, and to declare: for the preſſure of the enemye would not giue leaue to attend the iſſue of his remote ouuertures, and the fortune of Germany was under the anuile, and would be tryed ſpeedelye. To which he anſwered, in his manner, ingenouſlye; that is, ſo coldly, that he did eaſely diſcouer he was unwilling to abuſe us; yet he ſayd, that the prince could be readye in one moneth; and that ſince the emperor had fayled to ſend his ambaſſador to ratefye the peace, there was ſome hope, that this ſtate might change counſells; wherin he would aſſiſt with all his power: which being gayned, that then ther was no doubt he would willingly renew the war: and this I take only to be the wiſdome of a good ſeruant, to put off the fayling of his maſter to others, whom he eſteemes unmoueable. My judgement is, that all is ayre and ſmoke, and that ther is no ſubſtance in, nor dependance upon, his ambaſſage. Notwithſtanding, yeilding to the ſtrength of the Duch ambaſſadors fayth, that ſomewhat might be done, at leaſt to doe my dutye, and leaue nothing undone, we reſolued to make a tryall, by doing an office with the principall miniſters, to ſhow the dangerous growth of the enemy, and the common perill, eſpecially to this empire, upon which the Auſtrians muſt conuert their uictorious armyes, only to keepe thoſe in action whom they cannot content and pay. Which we haue begunn with the loweſt and wiſeſt; and beene in two howſes, wher we haue uſed all our rhetoricque, and other helps of intelligence; for which care we haue receiued thanks, with an excluſiue anſwere: that the peace hauing beene eſtabliſhed by ſentence of a generall councell, he that ſhould dare to propound any enterruption, would be held a traytor; and that though they did beleeue us, and foreſee their owne future trouble by delay, yet ſuch was the conſtitution of the tymes, and the diſobedience of the ſoldier, and the diſtractions of Aſia, that they could not embrace another war, the firſt not extinguiſhed: yet they wiſhed us to proceede to the higher miniſters, becauſe the protraction of the emperors ambaſſador was to all ſuſpitious, and might aduantage us: which we purpoſe to doe; I, for my part, without any hope, but carried about by the violent motion of another ſphære; that though Gabor, this yeare, cannot be coniured up, yet that our diſcourſes may ſo far enicalouſe theſe miniſters, that they may, in preuentiue wiſdome, order Morteſa baſſa of Buda to draw the frontire army into the field, to amuſe the Imperialls, and to be petra ſcandali to the concluſion of the peace. Alone, I ſpake with the chimacham the next day after our meeting with the Tranſiluanian; and asked him what he found of his ambaſſage. He anſwered, that Gabor had written a letter long as the chamber, nec dum finita, which had been 4 dayes tranſlating; ſo that he had not yet read it: but that I ſhould returne another tyme, and ſee it my ſelfe, and ther upon haue conference. I replyed, he could not but generally collect what was the ſcope, by the diſcourſe of the ambaſſador; to which he ſayd, that upon the laſt brauados of Gabor, he hauing written him roundly, that he now humbled himſelfe, flatered, and ſent 1628. great preſents to make his peace; but that he was a falſe man, neyther friend to us, nor true to the grand ſignor.

WE haue ſent twice to ſignor Todelagi, to know his operations; who in all this tyme could not procure another audience: only he hath deliuered the tranſlate of his letter, but not begun his negotiations promiſed us; and thus eauen deſperation it ſelfe lies ſicke of delay, and I haue nothing to preſent his majeſtie but friuolous, fruictles, faythleſs wordes.

THE Tartar han is openly declared rebell, or enemy to this empire; and his brother Shachin Ghiray, hauing exacted a tribute of the beghs of Bugdania and Valachia, hath receiued an ouerthrow of Cantemir, a Tartar, his æmulous, but obedient to the grand ſignor; whereupon it is ſuddenly reſolued to take Gian Ghiray out of the Rhodes, and to ſend the capten baſſa with the whole armado, to eſtabliſh him prince, and to depoſe the other: ſo that the Medeteran, alſo this yeare, will be free, and this ſtate engaged in ſo many troubles, that euery thing ſeemes to worke the contrary way.

I BESEECH your lordſhip to acquaynt his majeſtie and the duke with this diſcharge of my duty, which I am aſhamed to write; and, though I proue to all unprofitable, yet I am, &c.

Conſtantinople $\frac{3}{13}$ May, 1628.

To Sir ISAAC WAKE.

My Lord,

THE troubles I haue with our ſhipping, and the concluſion of buſines, reacheth as far as Venice, to trouble your lordſhip with the coppying out my papers: for hauing promiſed the queen of Bohemia, and my lord Carleton, the laſt poſt, to expound to them the great pretended ſecretts of Gabors ambaſſador, I am ſo ſtreightned, that I haue no meanes, nor tyme, to doe it, but by the coppy of my letter to my lord Conway, which I encloſe to your lordſhip, and deſire the fauour that it may be ſent forward with my packett to the Hage: and that you will pardon me this laſt preſumption. I can ſay no more, but that that prince dares not truſt his owne ſubiects, and will burye all his glorye aliue by his inconſtancye. To day I haue learnt the ſubſtance of his long letter to the vizier, though he hath not yet read it: and is an apologye for his making peace before this ſtate, and without their conſent; and an humiliation, and promiſe of fayth; to guild which, ther is mingled ſome words of diſtruſt in the encreaſe and growth of the emperor, which, I ſuppoſe, is formall.

THE requeſt of the prince of Piedmont I haue conſidered, and made ſome ouuerture upon it; but doe not know wherupon to ground my ſelfe; becauſe theſe miniſters haue not loſt their pride, and will neuer ſend a letter, nor giue a command, to a ſtranger, unleſs it be required immediately from them. To giue licence to any to trade that will, upon their owne hazard, there is no neede; none is prohibited. But to doe any act, without mutuall ſecuritye from them that ſhall trade, is not the rule of this gouerment; for all men ſeeke hither, and take capitulations. Neyther doe I well underſtand the ſcope of his deſire, to whom ſuch a licence ſhould be granted. To be ſent to Nizza to lye there, is uſeleſs: to be granted to any particular here that will trade, is eaſye: but to proclayme it, is not the ſtile. This I haue begun to doe, and will perfect; fully to enforme the vizier of the franchiſe of the ſcale of the duke's deſire, and the profitt of the commerce, and to prepare him, that if they will write hither, and make any offer, and promiſe ſecuritye on his part, that it ſhall be accepted, and any thing granted he ſhall deſire: but unleſs he giue the occaſion, theſe will not begin: only, all men ſhall be free; for ther is no danger of law, to him that will aduenture. If I can doe more, it ſhall be a pledge of my ſeruice to your lordſhip.

I AM ready to returne, but of the way uncertayne: we heare the Valtoline is ſeaſed by the Spaniard, and I am a little odious to them. If I depart on this ſhip, I muſt hazard in the ſea alone: ſo that I encline to remoue to Cephalonia, to ſtay for the currens fleete. Theſe are my diſtracted thoughts; but, if there be any way, I will ſee your lordſhip at Venice, though I ſtay but two dayes, and come priuately; of which you ſhall heare, when I know where, and how I ſhipp my famelye.

ALMIGHTY God bleſs your lordſhip and your noble lady, to whom I preſent my wiues and my humble ſeruice; and reſt, &c.

Conſtantinople, $\frac{3}{13}$ May, 1628.

To

To Sir Isaac Wake. (Copies of which ſent to Lords Conway and Carleton.) 1628.

My Lord,

WHEN I ſent your lordſhip the aduice of the motion of the Duch ambaſſador, I did not in my heart ſuppoſe or doubt, that you had omitted any thing that was propounded by the adminiſtrator to you; but did then diſcouer playnly where my jealouſy lay; becauſe the ſenſe of the ſame motion had often beaten myne eares, that mony would be well ſpent here, to force that which we could not perſwade; which I did not beleeue. Now, by your lordſhips letters, and the encloſed coppies of the kyng of Denmark, and ſignor Scultetus, I perceiue, what ground ſoeuer it had, there is ſome expectation of poſſibilitye to worke good effects that way: to which I beſeech your lordſhip to giue his majeſtie this anſwere: That I humbly deſire him to truſt to God, a good cauſe, his owne wiſedome and valour; for he may caſt away mony and honor here; but neuer be aſſured of any performance. The uſe now that can be made of theſe and Gabor, is to worke vpon their owne occaſions and ignorances; and to aduantage our ſelues, without too deare a price, vpon their neceſſities. To hinder the ratification of the peace, if the emperor will ſend his ambaſſador to confirme it, is not in the power of any bribe; being concluded in a publicque councell; and not only reaſon of ſtate, and the inclination of the viſiers, doe require peace, but the ſoldiers wilbe ready to ſtone any man, that ſhall propound to draw them from their tyranny and dominion here, where they gouerne all things, vntill their owne intereſt compell them. But I belieue, if Gabor had beene payd tymely, he would and could haue preuented and loſened this ſtate at his pleaſure. Secondly, to thinke to perſwade theſe miniſters to ſhow an army on their frontire, as long as they haue any hope of peace; or to doe any action, that might enjealouſe the emperor, and retard the effects of their longings, is to conclude them fooles. That little reaſon they haue, aſſiſted by their great feare to giue occaſion, will diſcerne our arguments to be partiall. And this we haue found by tryall: for the Duch ambaſſador and I haue, according to our purpoſe and promiſe, beene with the viſier, and all the reſt of power in this port: and, hauing not only uſed all our witts, ſhowing them the danger of their eſtate, the probabilitye of being ſodenly invaded, and vnprouided, the terror of the new armye houering about Vlme, the comoditye of the Danuby to ſurpriſe them; the temptation uſed to the Venetians, aduiſed me by your lordſhip, with the caution; the motion of peace with the king of Denmarke, all ſymptomes of preſent perill; the aſſurance, that, if not now, the next yeare they could not avoyd the war, which they ſhould beare then without good companye; requiring only that they would take the example of all wiſe princes to arme, when their ſuſpected neighbors were armed; and laſtly, intimated large gratuityes; yet we receiued no anſwere, from which we could conclude any thing, but complement, and thancks, and generalityes; that they were not ſo weake as the Imperialls ſuppoſed; that the grand ſignors ſword was long, and did cutt well; and that they would giue order to the confines to be in readines to anſwere any invaſion. But, ſuppoſing the power of mony could doe more, and to feele the Duch ambaſſador, hauing communicated both letters to him, and demanded if he had power of the ſumme intimated, I made ſhow of liking the courſe, and that I hoped in yt. But he replyed, he had no mony, nor order for any: that it was true, he had receiued 27000 dollars, which he had payd to Gabor more then a yeare ſince, and had giuen accompt of it; and that the ſecond bills, being for about the ſame ſumme, ſent by merchants, who had contracted in Venice for the remittment, were ſuſpended, and ſince recalled: ſo that only 2000 reſted in his hands, which he was alſo ordered to returne. Beſides, he confeſſed, that if he had caſh, he durſt not venture to diſburſe it, without a better commiſſion and inſtructions, vpon what conditions and power to aſſure this ſtate, that the princes would not make peace without them, and leaue them in the quarrel; without which, he thought it in vayne to hope, that for our ſakes, or a little mony, they would begin a breach, and hazard their owne quiett. Thus his majeſtie may ſee, that he neyther hath mony here, as he ſuppoſeth; nor if he had, that any man durſt caſt it away vpon the fayth of thoſe that would be readier to take then to performe. This your lordſhip wilbe pleaſed to write to his majeſtie as truth; and that all other perſwaſions will rather diſtract then aduantage him. Sic evenit in conſilijs infelicibus: optima videntur, quorum tempus effugerat.

1628. YET your lordſhips letters ſhall not goe without ſome contentment, in effects a cheaper way; for neceſſitye is like to force that, which neyther monye, oratorie, nor friendſhip, hath beene, or could be able to doe: and now the uſe of us here, wilbe only to prouoke their owne occaſions, to encreaſe their jealouſies, et diſcordias ex ſeipſis naſcentes fomentare.

THEN your lordſhip wilbe pleaſed to know, that the emperor did ſend a poſt to the baſſa of Buda (where the grand ſignors meſſenger (for he hath not title of ambaſſador) lay attending the comming of the Imperialls expected, and ſo to paſs forward to Vienna, with the articles ſigned here, according to agreement) to excuſe the delay of theirs, vpon exception taken at two clauſes in the preface of the treatye, in the ſtile of this court. Firſt, the emperor would not admitt thoſe words, that he hauing ſought peace at the port, it was granted him. Secondly, that the mutæ færagæ ſent to him, was not qualefyed in his credence generall ambaſſador, as well as his that ſhould come hither. Theſe cauills being vneſſentiall, ſhow eyther a deſire to protract the concluſion, or to abuſe it. The baſſa, though troubled, yet wrote backe, that for ceremonies his majeſtie needed not to defer to diſpatch his ambaſſador, whoſe preſence would procure all ſatisfaction. But in the particulars, being able to change nothing without warrant from hence, ther yet appeares no ſigne nor newes of his ſetting forward, to the great diſcontent of this ſtate; and what to beleeue, without better intelligence, the wiſeſt cannot reſolue: but hauing cauſe enough, they yet feare to doubt. In the inſtant of this jealouſye Gabor hath hither diſpeeded a ſecretarye in poſt, arriued in 10 dayes, with a large letter to his extraordinary and reſident here; which hath much changed the ſcene, and may doe our buſines, if ther be no other fraud than appeares. The ſubſtance is, that hauing recalled his nephew out of Holland, and ſent him to trauell, and vnder the title of a ſeruant, placed with him a truſty and able inſtrument, purpoſely to diſcouer and enforme him of the eſtate and diſpoſition of the princes of Chriſtendome, eſpecially of Germanye; that he had receiued from him, and other his miniſters abroad, this certeyne aduertiſement. Firſt, in generall, that the victories of the emperor, and the encreaſe of power in the houſe of Auſtria, was not only growne terrible to all other princes, but conſequently ought moſt to be ſuſpected to the grand ſignor. In particular, that they had afoote in 6 armies 150,000 ſoldiers; wherof two being commanded by the marqueſs of Spinola, and M. Tilly, were employed againſt Holland, hopefull this ſummer to reduce the States to great neceſſitye: the third, in the charge of Walſtein, was ordeyned to proſecute the kyng of Denmarke: a fourth, under the conduct of count Slick, was deſſigned to march into Pruſſia, to ayd the Poland: a fift, quartered in Pomerania and Sileſia, whereof Don Balthaſar de Marades was generall: a ſixt, newly leuied by D. Mansfelt, and drawne togither at Vlme, vpon the Danubye; which two laſt were certeynly appointed to fall downe into Hungarye. Therfore he deſired the grand ſignor to conſider the ſcituation of the vniting of theſe forces, which confirmed his intelligence, that the army of Don Balthaſar was commanded to invade him, and to begin at Caſſouia; that of Mansfelt to embarke vpon the riuer, and to beſiege Buda; that ſo aſſaulting both togither, the one might not be able to aſſiſt the other: which had enforced him to weigh his owne ſafetye, and timely to prouide for it. To which end he had ſent ſufficient garriſons to Caſſow, and himſelfe was departed toward Varadin, there to collect his army, where he would abide the enemy, and attend a reſolution; which place he had choſen, as well for the ſtrength, as to be neare Morteſa baſſa, that they might mutually ſuccor one another, and anſwere all attempts. He ſayth, he hath ſent the ſame aduice to Buda, deſiring the baſſa to rayſe all his troopes, and to be in readines; which he hath alſo by another poſt aduertiſed hither, and demanded ayds, and orders to take the field. Gabor doth vehemently preſs the feare and neceſſitye; requiring tymely ſupport, and proteſting that he will receiue his gueſts with good cannonado's, if he may be protected; otherwiſe that he muſt ſaluti ſuæ proſpicere. He coniureth the viſier to enforme the grand ſignor of euery particular, that his dutye may be diſcharged. He addeth many other diſcourſes of practices, and feares from Poland, and other places, to our purpoſe not materiall. The whole hath beene communicated to the viſier, who replyed the firſt words. All this hath beene told me by the Engliſh ambaſſador (for your lordſhips aduice of the army at Vlme intimated the ſame oportunitye of paſſage by water); and thereupon ſodeyne and expreſs order is giuen, and commands written (to day, I hope, to be ſent forward) to the ſonne of Naſuf-baſſa, a capigi baſſi, to rayſe all the beghs of Greece, and Hungarye, and to march directly to Buda, and there to obey that baſſa as generall, and to joyne in occaſion with the prince of Tranſiluania. What will ſucceed, I leaue to God, who hath done it, and hath his owne councells in yt; hoping, at leaſt, that one of the propoſitions of the king of Denmarke will, by this change, be effected. The grand ſignors armye without doubt ſhalbe drawne to the frontyre, to fauour Gabor; and the emperor muſt not truſt them much, vnleſs he know they are betrayed: and eyther it will proue a ſcandall to the peace, or haſten his ambaſſador, who ſhalbe accepted, at all tymes; and this ſtorme, if he come, blow ouer; for I know they haue written to procure one, though he were (to uſe their owne words) made of wood. I doe not beleeue that the emperor will breake of this ſide, and loſe a great oportunitye; yet there are many reaſons to oppoſe this incredulitye. Firſt, he cannot pay, nor licenſe his armies ſafely vnpayd; nor is Germany able to feede them; therefore they muſt be employed. Secondly, if he haue any inclination to peace and charetye to his owne countrye, he can no way ſo well with his honour retyre from his engagements, as by converting his armes this way, which will beare a fayre ſhow, both in reſpect of the pope, and the duke of Bauare; and drawe him neceſſarye contribution. Howſoever, whither it will proue ſo or not, and whither Gabor beleeue it or not, there may good uſe be made of the feare of the one, and of the fraud of the other, if ther be any. His ambaſſador, notwithſtanding, hath not made any motion to us concerning the league, which he may neede; nor is it mentioned in his letters; whither aſhamed or vnreſolued; and being taſted vpon the poynt, he anſwered, that it was not tyme, vntill the prince were aſſured of the Turkes as the foundation; and, becauſe I would leaue nothing vnattempted to nouriſh Gabor in this way, I haue giuen them an aſſurance of me, et anſam ſpei, by a third hand, of their majeſties confœderate; offering to ſollicite for their maſter in England; and to procure not only reconciliation, but their aſſiſtance and protection, if he really and nobly goe into action: and this is all I can doe; and if he deſerue it, will doe it effectually. And I am perſwaded I haue yet creditt with him, and that I haue beene guiltye to this change: for he ſaw his actions were narrowly weighed and tryed, and that he muſt directly declare, and adhere to one ſyde: and he knowes, though he haue ſinned againſt this [court] yet he may ſafelyer truſt in them, for their owne ſakes, and ſhall not paſs too ſharp a purgatorye. I wiſh I could doe the kyng of Denmarke more ſeruice, but I ſhall not write aboue one poſt, which wilbe, how this alarme doth take effect: and ſo I will take my leaue of the prince of Tranſiluania, whom I will returne to flatter. And though this noyſe may ſeeme to giue occaſion to my ſtay, I hope it will not be ſo enterpreted, when I haue no commiſſion, inſtruction, nor meanes to liue. How I diſpoſe my ſelfe, by the next I will acquaynt your lordſhip, wherein the deſire to ſee you ſhall gouerne me. Metrophanes hath written to me to implore your fauour, to aſſiſt him, whom the patriarch hath recommended; which I doubt not your lordſhip will doe of your owne noblenes, as far as may ſtand with your owne convenience.

THE Tartar han, and his brother, are diſtreſſed by Cantemir, and in danger to be taken aliue, which doth much eaſe and content this ſtate. The armado ſhall goe to the Euxine, to place a new prince. From Aſia, we haue nothing of conſequence: vntill the horſes haue eaten graſs, little wilbe done. And ſo, Conſtantinople, 17. May, 1628.

Tour Lordſhips.

To my Lord CONWAY.

My Lord,

I REFERRED your lordſhip in my laſt to my anſwere to Sir Iſaac Wake, to whom I promiſed to giue account of the new alarme giuen by the prince of Tranſyluania; wherein is not much more done, then what I then aduiſed; only the grand ſignors letter is written to him, and his ambaſſador is readye for diſpatch, who doth attend his audience, and to receiue particular orders. Vpon this we may ground, firſt, that ther appeares no ſigne of the comming of the emperors extraordinarye, to ratefye the peace; and I know his dependants here haue priuatly confeſſed, that 1628. they now feare ther is no purpoſe to ſend any, becauſe the apparance of Gabors arming hath troubled them, the Imperialls doubting that he ſhalbe deteyned, or violenced, or ſome other aduantage wrought againſt them. Secondly, whatſoeuer Gabors ſecrett meaning is, certeynlye he hath diſcredited the emperor with this ſtate, and ſhaken their hope of ſafetye in truſting him; which is euident by the grand ſignors letter now ſent; the ſubſtance whereof is, that he deſired to anſwere all poynts particularly; but being ſo many, and his ambaſſador a man of approued fayth, he doth refer the prince to his relation, to whom he will deliuer his mind fully. He thanked him for the aduertiſement giuen of the deſſignes of the emperor, and that in preuention of them, he had ſent to him the ſonne of Naſuff-baſſa, with commands to draw his army to Buda with expedition, to which ſhould be joyned thoſe beyond the Danubye, and all the beghs that he had with him the yeare 1626; giuing order, that if the baſſa of Buda were firſt aſſaulted, that the prince ſhould vnite his forces with him; but if himſelfe, that the baſſa ſhould aſſiſt him, and that they ſhould maynteyne betweene them a good correſpondence. Theſe are the contents, but no order of offence, only to be ready in occaſion. The Tranſiluanian ambaſſador doth expect ſome larger commiſſion by word of mouth: for ſo Gabor ſtands betweene theſe two great empires, that neyther are aſſured of him; and therefore, if the grand ſignor will giue him encouragement to doe more, yet he will not truſt him to deliuer it in writing, leaſt he ſend it to Vienna. I ſhall know all from the ambaſſador, if he haue his audience before my departure; and though I cannot ſound this abyſſus, nor vnderſtand what Gabor would haue, yet theſe are bona auguria of ſome change; they may interrupt the peace, and ſteale into a breach before eyther ſide be aware. Perhaps Gabor hopeth to doe as did the ſeneſhall of Normandy betweene Lewis the XI. and Charls of Burgundye, to bring their troopes ſo neare together, as the diuell cannot part them; for if he meane to renew the war, this ſtate muſt be coſened: therefore methinks it workes like a maſter-peice of cunning. Howeuer the emperor cannot ſecurely draw all his forces away from looking after theſe motions, which wilbe a priuatiue diuerſion; and becauſe I know not what to judge, I haue reſolued it is beſt to be friends, and to inanimate and flatter Gabor, to ſeeme not to ſee what is paſt, and to hope for better, and to ſweeten the way to my ſucceſſor, if he haue any good meaning yet vndiſcouered. I haue written him the encloſed letter, and ſo I take my leaue of him and this perplexed buſines, referring your lordſhip in the future to Sir Peter Wiche, whom I haue as fully inſtructed as I am able. I preſume not to write to his majeſtie vntill I haue taken my leaue, which I expect within 3 dayes, and then to giue him an humble account of the laſt ſcene, and ſubmiſſiue thankes for his gratious fauour of my reuocation, that I may returne to pray for him in England, the land of happines, bleſſed in his reigne; which Almighty God make glorious to his majeſtie, and a centurye to his people; and ſo I conclude,

Conſtantinople, 30. May,
old ſtile, 1628.

Your Lordſhips.

THE capten baſſa and the armado are yeſterday gone to the Black-ſea, with Gehan Begh Ghiray, to make him prince of the Tartars: if it ſucceed not, they will proue a worſe ſcourge to the confines of this cyttye, then the Perſians are to Aſia.

The ſame to Sir ISAAC WAKE, with the Differences following.

My Lord,

"I PROMISED your lordſhip in my laſt an account of the new alarme," et cet. ending with the words, "Inſtructed as I am able." Concluding thus to Sir Iſaac:

I HOPE to ſhip within 3 dayes directly for Ligorne, whence I will ſee your lordſhip by poſt, though I ſtay but one night; for that wilbe the gayne of my journy, to take your inſtructions in my way, and to be knowne thereby to be

Conſtantinople, 30. May,
old ſtile, 1628.

Your Lordſhips.

The Poſtſcript above to Lord CONWAY, was thus altered to Sir ISAAC WAKE.

THE ſickneſs is in the bayloe's houſe; dead about 20; and he fled to the riuer. The capten baſſa and the armado, &c. ut ſupra.

1628.

To his MAJESTIE.

May it pleaſe your Majeſtie,

I HAUE receiued your maieſties gratious letter of reuocation long ſince by Sir Peter Wich, which I haue obeyed with all humilitye, reſigning both my chardge, and fully enforming him, according to my weakeneſs, in all things concerning your maieſties ſeruice, or the merchants affaires. That I haue deferred to render your maieſtie humble thancks for my libertye, being afrayd to trouble you with my fruictleſs intruſions, you will vouchſafe my excuſe; that I deſired firſt to take my leaue of the grand ſignor, and to finiſh my imployment, that I might at once poure out my humble grateful deuotions, and obteyne your benigne acceptance and pardon for my omiſſions. By the bleſſing of God I haue ſettled the buſines properly vnder my charge, and returne with ſatisfaction of thoſe with whom, and for whom, I ſerued. Only that whereon I had ſett my heart, whereby to valew my ſelfe before your maieſtie, hath fayled me, rather than I my dutye. Therein I haue inſtructed my ſucceſſor, and giuen him copies of my beſt obſeruations; and your maieſtie may expect from him the fruicts I could not reape, if Gabor doe not moue more out of habite then counſell. For your maieſtie wilbe enformed by my laſt letters, that he is againe taking armes, as he pretends, in preuention of the emperor; but his very actions are cutt in characters; few can reade them, without his cyphar. His extraordinarye ambaſſador departed the 4. June, the ſame day I left Conſtantinople. Before, I went priuatly to uiſitt him, to flatter his maſter, and to ſound the depth of his diſpatch; but had little tyme to confer, which he promiſed to recompence the next day, and performed not for the multitude of buſines. What he told me then was, (and he is a playne and honeſt man) that he had obteyned allowance of his maſters arming, who was gone to Varadin; and that the grand ſignors miniſters, deſpayring of the peace with the emperor, had giuen order to the baſſa of Buda to march to the frontire, there to attend occaſion. He aſſured me, that ther was in this motion a greater ſecrett and deſſigne then he had power to reueale, many things being yet vnripe. But ſeeing I had offered my ſelfe to ſerue the prince in England by my letters, (with the tenor of which I had acquainted him) he promiſed me, by the way of Venice, full enformation and inſtructions, in which I ſhould expect greater fruicts then I did hope. This is all I can relate of the concluſion of my negotiations, and might here end, but that I cannot forbeare (though to coniecture of the future actions of that prince is like judiciall aſtrologye, Ars ſæpiſſime fallax, ſemper vana et infida) to deliuer ſome opinion, which, if it proue erroneous, yet it is bonæ indolis ſignum, ſemper ſperare.

FIRST, it is certeyne that he hath putt himſelfe into armes without any cauſe knowne to us, or inſtigation from this ſtate; but, contrarye to their ſenſe, againſt the hayre, he hath brought them into a way ready to breake with the emperor, for feare of a breach. Some thinke he hath done it to returne to creditt with the grand ſignor, by a ſeeming watchfullnes without occaſion, and to make ſhow that he is not fallen of to his enemies, and he cares not much to mocke the blind: others, that he hath in his contemplation eyther to help the king of Sueueland by reputation of his armes, or actually againſt the Poles. But I know the emperor takes the offence, and I find no ſalt in theſe coniectures to prouoke him really, whom he hath moſt cauſe to feare. And therefore my judgement is, (beſides the conſideration of his vnquiet nature, and that he is hoſtis imperio natus) that he is touched in conſcience for the guiltines of his many invaſions vpon the Auſtrian territories; and that he hath found by ſome intelligence, that he is not pardonable, nor ſafe in his peace; conſidering well the conditions of thoſe that contend for empire, Occaſione invitati eos ultum ineunt, qui per occaſionem temporum ipſis nocuerunt; and therefore neceſſitye enforceth him to rayſe helpe tymely, at leaſt to ſhow the Imperialls, that he hath not ſo loſt his creditt here, that the grand ſignor will ſuffer him to periſh. Vpon this ſomewhat may be wrought, and I am of opinion he may be brought back to the league, and to ſerue your maieſtie better cheape then formerly; or at the worſt, pro ſtipendio conſtituto; and if euer he can be recouered, he will doe more ſeruice then a formed armye at much leſs charge, becauſe his marches are furious like Jehu, and ſodeyne like lightening; and that he drawes with his trayne the feare of the 1628. Turkes, which is in Hungarye ten thouſand ſtrong in ſhadowes. Where to begin to lay hold of him is the greateſt difficultye. Perhaps at Conſtantinople he will open himſelfe no more, nor truſt to miniſters in a way ſo long about; yet this preparation muſt be done him there, to foment the jealouſies of the Turkes at preſent, in the ſtay of the comming of the emperors ambaſſador, and to aggrauate it, as a deluſion; if at laſt he arriue, to oppoſe him, and rayſe new diuerſions againſt him, of which there is ſufficient ſubiect: for if that peace be once conſummate, there is no poſſibilitye for Gabor to riſe, vnleſs he be ſupplied with foote from the league, the chardge whereof wilbe greater then he is wourth; and he is of beſt uſe, like a Tartar, by incurſions macerare inimicum, and in his owne element: and thus your majeſtie may enjoy him if he moue, and neyther loſe by truſting him, or ſpending more then countenance vpon him. This encounter of the concluſion of the treatye I did ambitiouſly deſire to ſee finiſhed, hauing ſtudied and beene practicque in yt: but the delay is like to be more effectuall then my oppoſition; for if they meete, they will agree, and your majeſties ſeruice will not neede me, where my place is ſupplied and bettered. And therefore, though I had ſome intimation of your royall pleaſure to honor me by commanding my ſtay, yet receiuing nothing vnder your majeſties hand, nor other directions, I ſuppoſed that there was no more expected from me, then obedience to my diſcharge; wherein if I haue erred, I am not yet guiltye in my heart of any fayling in zeale to your majeſties ſeruice; for which I am moſt ready to lay downe my life, meanes, and whatſoeuer is deareſt to me. Which deuotion I humbly beſeech your majeſtie vouchſafe to accept for all defects. Almighty God bleſs your majeſtie, and make the ſucceſs of your royall actions as glorious as your intentions, to the benefitt of this broken age, and the wonder of many to come.

Smyrna, 27. June, 1628.

Your Majeſties moſt humble and loyall ſubiect and ſeruant,

R.

To the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAUE preſumed to write to his majeſtie the concluſion of my negotiations; and my wauering judgement, which followes the mutabilityes of the prince of Tranſiluania: a ſubiect ſufficient to diſcreditt any man; but herein, ſeing I am but his ſhadow, leuetye will not be imputed to me; for when he moues, I cannot keepe one forme. I will refer your grace to what I haue aduentured there, knowing you muſt both cenſure it, and aſſured, that your comment wilbe fauourable to your ſeruant. I vndertake nothing; but ſeeing that he is reſuming armes, and doth pretend againſt the emperor, wiſedome teacheth to apprehend, and applye his nature to the beſt uſe: for my ſenſe is, that though his majeſtie neede not hinder better preparations by truſting vpon him, yet it wilbe expedient to take him at euery bound, and to nouriſh him in all his owne wayes, to which, and to ſome monye, he wilbe conſtant, for neceſſitye and couetouſnes.

I AM now collecting and lading the few marbles I haue found for your grace. Some are to be ſhipt from Patraſs: others I attend from Zea and the iſlands. If they want the expected beautye, your grace will conſider I had them out of the ground, which is not ſufficient ſanctuarye from the envye of the Turkes, and vouchſafe in them my true zeale to your ſeruice.

I RECEIUED from your grace a comfortable meſſage and promiſe by Mr. Brantwayt; to which I will ſay no more, but that as great men loue their creatures, becauſe they haue made them, ſo ingratitude to the roote of our well being, as of our being, is the great ſinne of infernall rebellion; of which when I am found guiltye, lett me dye the death of a traytor, that haue ambition to be ſtamped, while I liue,

Smyrna, 27. June, 1628.

Your Graces deuoted obliged ſeruant.

To my Lord Viſcount CONWEY.

My very good Lord,

HAUING preſumed to giue account to his majeſtie of the cataſtrophe of my negotiations, knowing it muſt paſs both your judgment and fauour, I will not trouble your lordſhip with repetitions, but humbly deſire in them your protection, which now I may neede. It will ſeeme ſtrange leuitye once to haue named the prince of Tranſiluania, after ſo ſolemne renouncing him: but ſeeing my changes are not naturall, but carried about by the violence of his inconſtant ſphære, I cannot be blamed for varying opinion, being bound to obſerue his eleuation and depreſſion. The ſcope of my meaning is, that ſeeing he doth arme and practiſe in Conſtantinople againſt the emperor, though I would not wiſh his majeſtie ſo to relye vpon him, as to diſtract other more neceſſary cares; yet, to follow the example of the enemye, to take what aduantage we can gett by euery motion, as they doe by his pauſes and reſts; for if he doe but appeare in the field, the emperor cannot thinke any thing ſafe without the gates of Vienna, or as good a fort. Therefore I counſell, that he may be taken at euery bound, and the beſt uſe made of him, and his humor nouriſhed at as little expence as may be. The care of which I haue recommended to my ſucceſſor, and am now arriued to the ſecond church (poore indeed, and full of blaſphemye) onward of my way to recouer my happy countrye, and there to performe my vowes, and the particular dedication of Smyrna, 27. June, 1628.

Your Lordſhips humble and deuoted ſeruant.

To Sir PETER WICH, Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople.

A LETTER of Inſtructions concerning GABOR, and the Peace betweene the EMPEROR and the GRAND SIGNOR.

My very good Lord,

I HOPE the deferring of your audience will proue an aduantage to you, that you may know what wiibe effected in the Nargue, before it; for you may then make a perfect cure; and loſing that oportunitye, you are excluded for euer: yet giue me leaue to tell you my opinion, that 20 aſpers is a great aduance, and more then our cloth will reach. The danger lies only in the riſing of monye, which being the roote of the diſeaſe, if you applye your ſtrength to that, and open the deſtruction of trade that followes it, where merchants cannot foreſee the price of their commoditye, you ſhall proceede with more ſafetye and ſoundnes; for therein you concurre with the deſire of the ſtate: but ſtriuing to breake their lawes, you may loſe that you might haue had, and your friends. In matters of this nature you muſt gouerne your actions with a temper; for the vizier will feare to take it quite off, leaſt the Venetians and other nations preſs the example; and juſtice is diſtributiue, and the right of euery man alike. Therefore, if with content and quiett you may rayſe 20 aſpers, and put it into a denomination of good monye, or perſwade ſtrongly the mending of the aſpers, which will keepe the dollars at 80, and nothing els, I thinke you ſhall doe wiſely, not to ſtreyne the cord till it breake. I wiſh that you haue finiſhed, and that my counſell may come too late.

I HAUE been puniſhed with the gout, the relicques of my gaine at Conſtantinople; els I had written ſooner and larger to your lordſhip; yet to fullfill my promiſe, and doe my dutye to diſcharge the zeale I haue euer borne to the good cauſe, though I know I contribute dropps to the ſea, I will not omitt to offer my talent, being confident your ingenuitye will take in good part my contemplations, and ſuch obſeruances as flow from affection to my maſters and the publicque ſeruice.

IN theſe laſt letters I find, that all hope of the prince of Tranſiluania is not ſo extinct, as that there remaines not a deſire in ſome to draw him back. And hauing well conſidered his laſt negotiations at the Porte, and his arming ſodenly, without cauſe to us knowne, or inſtigation from this ſtate, the ſwelling encreaſe of the Imperiall power, fearefull to all his neighbours, and his deferring to ſend his ambaſſador to ratefye the peace, I muſt conclude, if Gabor moue not more out of habite 1628. then nature, though that be moueable enough, there is ſome great and ſecret cauſe in his change of counſells. It is neyther an art to returne to the grace of the grand ſignor, nor in ayd of the king of Sueuia, that he doth actually practiſe againſt the emperor in that court, where nothing is concealed, and profeſs to arme againſt him, and to prouoke an enemie whom he hath moſt cauſe to feare: neyther doe I imagine he doth it in contemplation of us; but touched in conſcience with the guiltines of his many inuaſions vpon the Auſtrian territories, and that he hath found by ſome intelligence he is not pardonable nor ſafe in his patched peace, knowing well the rule of thoſe that affect empire, Occaſione invitati eos ultum ineunt, qui per occaſionem temporum ipſis nocuerunt; that therefore neceſſitye enforceth him to rayſe helpe tymely, at leaſt to ſhow the emperor, that he hath not ſo loſt his creditt here, that the grand ſignor will ſuffer him to be ouerrunne; and fearing a quarrell, he will engage the Turkes with him by hindering their peace. Theſe conſiderations make me hope, that he will returne to his firſt loue for his owne ſafety; eſpecially becauſe I foreſee he ſhalbe againe invited, and that his ambaſſador promiſed me to heare vnexpected newes at Ligorne. Your lordſhip may be pleaſed then to know, that in Sir Iſaac Wakes letter there were a few cyphars, which ſayd, that the Venetian ſenate had ordered their baylo to doe his beſt endeauour to procure the Turkes to take this oportunitye to breake with the emperor; which declaration hath much conſequence in yt; for they are a wary generation, who, without great cauſe and ground, enter not into ſuch a practiſe. Neyther in all my tyme, though they haue deſired it in their hearts, did they open their mouth ſo wide. Of this aduice your lordſhips wiſedome will take no other notice to the baylo, then what he will of himſelfe diſcouer; for perhaps it is a ſecrett of ſtate: but this vſe you may make of it, dexterouſly to draw a concurrence with him; and if he declare, you ſhalbe the ſtronger by his help: Vis unita fortior.

IT reſts that I giue my opinion what is to be done, and how to worke Gabor into action, without too much engagement; and all conſiſts in the hinderance of the peace, if the emperors ambaſſador doe come, in which ſcene I deſired to play my part. Vntill he arriue, your lordſhip ſhall doe well to accuſe his ſtay of fraud and deluſion; that the houſe of Auſtria doe attend to ſee the ſucceſs of their armes this yeare in Germanye, or to make peace; that eyther way they may conuert them wholly againſt Turkye, when they ſhall haue no help by the diuerſion of our war, which only giues them peace. You muſt preſs the ſcituation of the new army rayſed upon the nauigable part of the Danuby, which they can tranſport in 6 dayes by water to Buda. In generall, you muſt inculcate this admonition; that the peace it ſelfe is falſe, feigned, vnprofitable and diſhonourable to this great empire.

BUT if an ambaſſador come, then you muſt deſcend to more particulars, and ſtudy the articles comparatiuelye with thoſe that are more ancient, whereof you haue the coppies.

FIRST, you may admoniſh them, that if the ratification be not ſigned by the emperors ſonne, but by Ferdinand only, that it is an illuſion done purpoſely to breake at pleaſure; by this you may winne tyme: for the father hath ſurrendred to him; and he is by the ſtates of the kingdom elected, and crowned king of Hungarie, for which countrye is the quarrell; and all acts of ſtate and high juſtice runne in his name; and he may renew the war for Vatz without any obligation or breach of the treatye. Neyther doe the generall words of his heyres and ſucceſſors bind; for kings are not preſcribed in their owne juriſdiction by formalitye of words, which only relate to the empire and ſucceſſion therein. Neyther is it materiall, that the emperor doth in the inſtrument write himſelfe king of Hungarye, Poſſeſſio facit regem; for though he keepe the ſtile, the ſonne hath the dominion, as the grand ſignor hath Jeruſalem from the kyng of Spayne.

SECONDLY, you may know, that Vatz was ſurpriſed by the Turkes in tyme of peace, and that there reſts, by the treaty of Zitwar, power to remand all places wrongfully uſurped after it. Here hath beene the difficultye: The emperor being now victorious, will neuer grant, that il mal tolto ſhalbe kept, and thereby renownce his right implicitely; and the Turkes, by their law, cannot ſurrender any palange if a moſche hath beene builded in yt. Therefore they now both ſeeke to avoyd a declaration in the poynt, which is not ſafe for the grand ſignor, becauſe he cannot make a quarrell for what he hath in poſſeſſion; but the emperor may, for reſtitution at his pleaſure, by vertue of this treatye: ſo that, for the ſecuritye of this peace to the Turkes, a deciſion is eſſentiall. The grand ſignor in the treaty doth vnderſtand, that all matters ſhall reſt in the ſtate they were; and the Imperialls, that it is no breach of this peace (which hath reference to the life from that of Zitwar) to ſurpriſe it againe in peace, as it was taken from them. In this poynt, if you can but bring it into queſtion and diſpute, to make a finall deciſion and liquidation, that the peace may haue no inbred corruption, you haue wonne the garland; for it can neuer be agreed, where both are proud and ſtiffe, in a right of this nature, and ſo bound vp with rules of honor and religion.

LASTLY, you muſt except at the reference to the peace of Zitwar, which doth giue the emperor right to Vatz, and to remand all priſoners taken in the laſt war, and to reparation of damages, which are innumerable; and though perhaps they will not be ſtrictly preſſed now, yet it is both diſhonorable and diſaduantagious to the grand ſignor to be tyed to the others call, and to play a game when it is deſperate. Herein you may put the vizier in mind, that their inſtructions to the commiſſioners were, to treate a new peace, ex re integrâ, annulling all former, which he confeſſed to me, and that they were abuſed. And that Georgi Mehemet Baſſa rejected the treaty of Ghirmatia 1625. only for being bound to the ſtate of Zitwar. In this particular, if they will ratefye a peace, which dependeth by relation, as you may perceiue in the firſt or ſecond article, vpon diuers precedents, they do ratefye a chaos and confuſion, which themſelues doe not vnderſtand. And if there be no remedye, yet put them in mind to explayne which peace of Zitwar they accept; for that ſigned by the emperor doth much differ from that confirmed by the grand ſignor, and ſo theſe laſt 20 yeares they knew not the conditions of their owne peace, but ſtood at the diſcretion of the enemye: with this you may perhaps begett a fraction.

HAUING touched theſe generalityes, fitt for your lordſhips knowledge, I refer the diſpoſing of occaſions, and matters emergent, to your wiſedome; wherein I will only ſay this, That there is no loſs to take euery bound, and to profitt our ſelues by the example of the enemye, who makes uſe of euery pauſe and reſt of the Turkes and Gabor; and though we neede not truſt their conſtancye, yet we may take aduantage of euery motion, eyther actually to trouble, or to amuſe the aduerſarye. What is done, I pray you, write me to Ligorne, that I may know what concurrence in words and deedes, and how to gouerne my ſelfe. And ſo I wiſh your lordſhip the fruition of thoſe fruicts I could not gather, health and honor, and the protection of Almighty God, and reſt Smyrna, 30. June, old ſtile, 1628.

Your Lordſhips.

To Mr. STRINGAR, about Sir KEN. DIGBYE's Attempt in Scanderon Roade.

Mr. STRINGAR,

YOUR laſt letter brought me no pleaſing newes. Whatſoeuer Sir Kenelm Digbyes commiſſion be, Scandaron was no fitt place wherein to execute yt, to diſturbe the quiet trade of merchants that pay better tenths then any rouer, and to giue occaſion to the greedy and needy Turke to prey vpon us. The company muſt be ſenſible of this at home. And for myne owne part, I doe not like the libertye and truſt giuen to any of that religion; for howeuer they may be honeſt and braue morall men, yet eyther they, or ſome that looke farther then they, may haue other and vaſter deſſignes then only puniſhing the fooliſh French, or enriching the admiraltye, to caſt petram ſcandali, a rocke into our beſt trades, and, if poſſible, to worke a breach with this raſh ſtate. I remember, that in queen Eliſabeths tyme, beatiſſimæ memoriæ, no papiſt in England could preuayle for a letter of mart; not that ſome might not be truſted, but that euery ſuch truſt was a breach of that rule, by which the ſtate was then conſtantly gouerned: it was grace enough for them to keepe their defenſiue armes in their owne houſes, and not to arme them abroad. But to the matter it ſelfe; before you wrote me, I had intimated to Dominico my opinion, That if the factors at Aleppo yeild not too ſoone, and giue away their mony, which is then in hell, irrecouerable, the thing will not be great. Sir Peter Wych, I doubt not, wilbe ſtiffe to vrge the grand ſignor to complayne in England, as we doe at the Porte, and to require juſtice of his majeſtie, vtterly diſavowing the 1628. fact; and when any thing growes cold in Turkye, it is halfe ouercome. You muſt remember to him two examples, beſides the piratts his own ſubiects, of our ſhips taken by the French, the Tygar in Tunes, and Salamandar in Millo: of which when we demanded protection and juſtice of the Porte, it was anſwered, It was not the tribunal, but that we muſt ſeeke in France. The difference of the ſcale alters not the caſe in jure; and I am confident they dare not breake with us, if we ſtand ſtoutly to our owne intereſts, and that it will proue nothing but what the feare and preſent neceſſitye of the Aleppines caſt away. Tyme wilbe loſt to the ſhips, and mony ſpent, againſt which example the company muſt prouide; for not only in the grand ſignors ports, but in his ſeas, if our men of war range ſo low as the trauerſe of Alexandria, it will proue ſcandalous, and they will occaſion avanea's, and we may perhaps be accuſed for that which Malteſes or Florentines ſteale.

When I was here hunting the jeſuites, you write me they are freed at Galata. I am ſorry the baylo did not better corrupt a corrupt ſtate; and if he and the patriarch preuent them not, they haue a boxe of reuenge full of poyſon. I found Cannachy here; and hauing a command in the cadies hand, made him flye to Meſſina. Two owles remayne, ſub Ajacis clypeo, which neuer ſaw the light, till yeſterday, after my comming, and then one of them did but peepe out; the reſt are gone vpon French ſhips, and I thinke, howeuer the ſunne ſeeme to ſhine on them, they will truſt their necks no more with the * earle of Cecy then they did with the baron. The king can create him any title but honeſt; here honorable is ſeperated from the ſubiect, wherein it ſhould inhære, a lord; and now that he is made a count, I wiſh he might à vous rendre bon compte; and afterward lett him be a jeſuite himſelfe, I thincke it will not hurt him much. For your ſelfe I can ſay no more, but that I haue often told you, and now I attend your tyme to ſhow you, that I am your

* The French ambaſſador at Conſtantinople, newly created a count by the Fren. king, and who ſtood indebted in a large ſum to the Engl. factory or embaſſy, which ſeems here left Mr. Stringar, the Engliſh conſul to get reimburſed.

Smyrna, $\frac{19}{29}$ July, 1628.

True honeſt friend.

From Sir Peter Wyche.

My Lord,

THE letter you was pleaſed to ſend me from Smirna, ſhall guide me in my waye of negotiation in this Porte, and I render you all thanks for yt. As for Gabors actions, they haue ſuch dependencye (as I find) on this empire, as altogeather from hence they muſt be guided, and I find the buſines doing of yt ſelfe here; for beſides the forces of Grecia, there is command giuen to thoſe in Tartarye, hauing already eſtabliſhed there the new Tartar han, to fall downe into the borders likewiſe: and the caimmacam hath told me, that they will not be vnprouided for the warre. The grand ſignor hath uerye latelie wrott his letter unto the emperor, that whereas there had bin a peace concluded betwixt them, and relyed on the ambaſſadors comming for the ratifying thereof, which hath not bin performed on his parte, the ſett tyme being long ſince expired, yt appeared he ment nothing leſs then the peace, and the rather, becauſe he rayſed great forces neere thoſe frontiers. Wherefore he deſired him to declare himſelfe, either by ſending preſentlie his ambaſſadors in conformitie of the peace, or elſs he would cleare himſelfe of that treaty, and was confident to make all good by the ſword. This letter was ſent unto the baſſa of Buda, to aduance from thence as he ſhould find cauſe. There is likewiſe a letter ſent by Juſſeph agha, from the caimmacam unto Gabor, a coppy whereof I here encloſed ſend vnto your lordſhip: by this you will clearelie ſee how things haue paſſed ſince your departure, ſo wilbe able to make the trueſt conſtructions of them. I doe plaie my parte herein as I find tyme and occaſion. The Dutch ambaſſador hath beene latelie with me, and would haue me joyne with him to make large offers and engagements to ſome miniſters in this Porte; but in that particular I haue excuſed my ſelfe, finding yt without my booke, and beſides I was not aduiſed thereunto by your lordſhip, but rather the contrarie, many dangerous conſequences hanging theron. In all waies of fomentation I ſhall applye my ſelfe with him; but he labours to gett monies againe into his hands. Your lordſhip vnderſtanding beſt how uſefull yt maie be, will ſollicite that poynt at your getting home: yet I hope the buſines will doe yt ſelfe, now that they haue had good newſe likewiſe from their army towards Perſia; all which you will beſt vnderſtand by the caimmacams letter vnto Gabor, howſoeuer (methinks) the emperors letter is rather an inuitation to peace, then a reſolution to warr, and queſtionleſs that peace is much gaped after in this Porte.

THE caimmacams long indiſpoſition hath left me euer ſince betweene feare and deſpaire in the buſines of the Narge, and I can giue you (as yet) no other accompt thereof. Wee are reſolued either to haue yt quite off, or not to giue on aſper for the rayſing of: for all people here are of opinion, Jewes and all, that it is impoſſible to putt it into a denomination of good mony, or to keepe the doller at 80 aſpers, and then wee are nere the neere.

ON the 13. of this preſent monthe I had my audience of the grand ſignor, that being the firſt daie of the caimmacams going to the diuan: at it I preſſed hard in arz both the buſines of Smirna and the Nargue; but what effect will come thereof, I know not; for no anſwere was made me then, and neuer ſince the caimmacam wilbe ſpoken withall; for ſome diſtemperature of that daie hath lade him up agayne of the goute, and a feauer to boote, and in this eſtate ſtand thoſe buſineſſes. My audience was in all particulars (as I am told) according to uſuall coſtume; onlie the grand ſignor came that morning purpoſelie from the arſenall garden to his ſeraglio at Conſtantinople, and returned againe within two howres after; and he tooke ſo much notice and contentment at the ſcuting off of Mr. Moyers ordinance, as at his returne by the ſhipp, and by the grand ſignors owne apoyntment, he had all the ordinance ſhott off againe.

THE plague is very hott in Galatta, and I thinke all our merchants haue prouided them places abroade to retyre unto; and I am newlie come unto the Perons villadge. All ambaſſadors were gone before me, and moſt of our merchants; ſo I conceaued yt high tyme for me to packe up: notwithſtanding I ſhall repayre vnto the caimmacam ſo ſoone as I can be admitted, for this kings anſwere.

THE expulſion of the jeſuites from hence, wherein your lordſhip plade your parte ſo well, is all come to naught ſince; for the two that remayned here, haue agayne obteyned leaue from the grand ſignor to reſide and excerſice their function in the ſame collidge as freelie as before, where they haue beine this 20 dayes; and it appeares, that this command from the grand ſignor is ſo peremptorie, as I doe not find that either the patriarke or the bailo intend to returne to any new oppoſition.

AN vnluckie buſineſs hath hapened through Sir Kenelm Digbyes coming into Scanderon, by the indiſcreete cariadge thereof by our conſull, who hath alredie caſt awaie 50^{m} dollers by waie of a comodation. By theſe incloſed papers your lordſhip will ſee what hath paſſed, and ſo likewiſe ſee the friendlineſs of the Venecians.

I KNOWE not why your lordſhip ſhould thanke me for Mr. Ramſden; but yf there ſhould be any ocation, you ſhould haue cauſe to doe yt; for I hold him a very honeſt man.

I BESEECH your lordſhip to preſent my humble ſeruice vnto my ladie, whoſe faire handes I kiſs, and reſt

Belgrade, the 26th of July, 1628. ſtilo Angl.

Your Lordſhips faithfull ſeruant, PR. WYCHE.

FOR the autentikeneſs of this letter I haue ſent yt vnto your lordſhip vnder Dominico his hande, which will begg my pardon.

Literae CAIMACHAM ad Principem TRANSILUANIAE.

NOLUMUS latere ſerenitatem veſtram, cariſſime frater, quod imperatoris Germaniae agentis interpres cum querelis nobis ſignificauit legatum imperatoris Germaniae jam in procinctu itineris fuiſſe ad portam hanc Oſmanicam adeundam, at detentum fuiſſe ob rumores, qui ad eundem imperatorem peruenere de exercitu, quem ſerenitas veſtra contra illum conſcribere ferebatur; eaque etiam de cauſa generalem Tillium ex Hollandia aduocatum fuiſſe in fines Vngariae, ne Caeſar Germ. uti antehac euenit, de improuiſo opprimeretur. At ſcientes nos te aduerſus Germanos, neſciente Oſmanica Porta, nunquam mouiſſe arma, ſed illos quidem contra nos occulti aliquid in animo fouere, et inſidias ſtruere, adducto ex ſuperiore in inferiorem partem duplici exercitu, prout ſerenitas veſtra nobis ſignificauit, quorum alter Budam obſideat, alter Caſſouiam; nec non euocato ex Hollandia generale Tillio verſus eaſdem partes; nam minime credibile eſt Caeſarem Germanicum in proprii regni perniciem

instruere

1628. inſtruere tantum exercitum, et fruſtra ibidem ſeruare : cum ergo perſpectum habeamus Germanos ab omni aeuo inconſtantes fuiſſe et doloſos, nobiſque hoſtes capitales, ne à parte potentiſſimi imperatoris nos improuidi uideamur et negligentes, ad omnes imperatoris potentiſſimi ditiones animum cum tanta cura et diligentia applicare uolumus, ut facile nobis ſit nemini non reſiſtere, volente Deo optimo maximo, quicunque hoſtili animo ditionem imperatoris aut Tranſiluaniae accedere parat : quem in finem Budam in ſuppetias miſimus xii.mill. Janitzarorum, et Cauiſae, Strigonii, Agriae, et Hotuvanij arcibus de auxilio proſpeximus. Propterea mandauimus modo ſulthano Galgae et Candemirio, ut cum 100 m. Tartarorum campum Abramanienſem in finibus Moldauiae petant. Tantum ſerenitas veſtra in tempore euigilet, perſpiciens quid inimici noſtri uelint, et quorſum iter dirigant ; omnemque ex animo metum procul amoueat, quia rebus omnibus neceſſariis ſerdarium (id eſt, generalem) praefecimus Khienam paſſam ad viſirum Budenſem. Plerique ferè omnes Janitzari et Spahi in bellum profecti ſunt. Et ſi Germani aduerſus Turcas inſurgere uelint, licentia rapiendi promulgata in imperio Oſmanico, ut quiſque quantum rapere queat ſibi rapiat ; tantus militum confluxus erit, ut anguſta uidebitur terra incedentibus, et innumerabiles cenſebuntur ut ſtellae in coelo, et arenae in mari. Quantas uictorias reportarit potentiſſimi imperatoris exercitus in ulterioribus partibus à Perſis, fuſo eorum exercitu, captiſque multis magnatibus, uti cognoſcas, cariſſime frater, captiuorum nomina in catalogum relata ad ſerenitatem veſtram tranſmiſimus. Scripſit viſirus ad ſe miſſum eſſe ex ſummis uiris legatum, per quem ſtudeant Perſae de pace tractare, ſi potentiſſimi imperatoris uoluntas accedat ; ſiquidem eorum copiae deſtrictae et impeditae ſunt aduerſus Vſtheium, id eſt, magnum Tartariae canum, et Selim Shak imperatorem Indiae, qui Mogol dicitur, ita ut in illis partibus contra viſirum noſtrum exercitum copioſum habere nequeant ; ſed ſi Germani contra nos bellum gerere inſtituunt, ſicuti credimus, tantum illud eſt neceſſe, cariſſime frater, ut ex illis partibus ſerenitas veſtra de rebus omnibus nos in tempore reddat certiores. Deus altiſſimus in fortunam imperatoris omnia conuertit : certe ſibi perſuaſum habeat ſerenitas veſtra omne vlteriorum partium negotium ſitum eſſe in poteſtate noſtra, ſiue pacem expectamus, ſiue bellum. Res quidem iſtas ulteriores neutiquam nobis expedit miſſas facere ; ſed tamen ad fines Hungariae et Tranſiluaniae tantam ſollicitudinem conuertemus, ut ſi temporis rerumque ratio poſtulabit, ipſe imperator potentiſſimus in expeditione praeſens eſſe uelit ; tantaſque res, adiuuante Deo optimo maximo, in exteriore illo tractu moliri et mouere decreuimus, ut fama ad omnem poſteritatem pennatura ſit. Tantum, cariſſime frater, ſerenitas veſtra diligenter uigilet ; et ſi quod cognoſcit de mala Germanorum uoluntate,ad potentiſſimum imperatorem in tempore perſcribat. Si certum ſit ipſos uelle aduerſus nos mouere bellum, in ditiones ipſorum ante nobis irruendum erit : et ſi neceſſitas exigit, ſerenitas veſtra cum paſſa Budae conſiliorum communionem ineat ; utque ſerdarius ſimiliter faciat, mandatum ipſi fuit. Sulthano quoque Galgae, et Candemirio in mandatis dabitur ab imperatore, ut quorſum, et qua uia Tartaros uelit ſerenitas veſtra incedere, ex arbitrio ſerenitatis veſtrae praeſtetur ; et ſi expeditionem ipſi ſuſcipiunt, hiemem tranſigant in ditione Germaniae ; futuro autem anno, quid Deus concedet expectabimus. Jamdudum à Deo iſtis rebus praeſcriptus eſt modus et finis. Imperator potentiſſimus ſiauſium miſit ad Caeſarem Germanicum, ut legatum noſtrum retromittat ; et poſtea nos quoque ad omnia uigilabimus. Quicquid Deus uolet, illud fiet. A parte modo ſerenitatis veſtrae, fidelitate et conſtantia opus eſt, ut de Germ. rebus rumores ad nos certi perueniant. Firmiſſime ſerenitas veſtra credat potentiſſimum imperatorem ditionem, Hungariae poſſeſſum, et Tranſiluaniam tueri decreuiſſe, ut oculi pupillam. Nondum acuti iſti Oſmanorum gladii obtuſi euaſere, neque in vagina contraxere rubiginem,qui Gratianum et Sulhoſtium puniuerunt, meritamque ceperunt vindictam. Quamobrem ſerenitatem veſtram ſecuram eſſe iubemus, quia non differet diutius Deus, quin Germanos illos iuſta punitione proſequatur, qui tantum ſanguinis effudere ſine pietate ulla erga proprios fratres. Deus per nos illis retribuet meritam poenam pro peccatis et malis, quae perpetrarunt in propriam gentem, et fratres ſuos : prope eſt quod Deus illos gladio acuto puniet. Tantum ſerenitas veſtra de rebus omnibus, quod ſupra petiimus, nos certiores faciat in tempore.

Datum Con^{li}, xiv. Julij, 1628.

1628.

To Mr. BUNDOCKE, 28. Auguſt, 1628. concerning the taking of Signor COSMO ORLANDO's Ship; and what paſſed betweene me and the Governor of Liuorne, and the Florence Secretarye, in that Matter.

Mr. BUNDOCKE,

ARRIUING at this port of Ligorne, the firſt newes I heard, was that you had taken a ſhip of ſignor Coſmo Orlando; who hath beene with me, and made complaynt, in the name of the great duke, whoſe ſubiect he is, and vnder whoſe banner and protection he vnderſtood himſelfe ſecure from all violence of our nation. He is now gone to make petition to his highneſs at Florence, and to ſeeke ſome redreſs by ſequeſtration here; and would haue ſent fede and conſtitution to Zant, to arreſt and trouble you there. Your action is very ill taken by this ſtate, and by the Engliſh here reſident. But hoping you will conſider the ill conſequence, and make him full reſtitution, I haue ſent for him to endeauour to appeaſe him with expectation of juſtice. I haue not ſeene your commiſſion; but I generally know, that you haue no warrant to make priſe of the ſubiects of thoſe princes, who are friends to his majeſtie; and that your owners haue giuen ſuch caution into the admiraltye, by great bond. This ſhip departed Conſtantinople not many moneths ſince, with goods of diuers ſubiects of the grand ſignor, with his ſalvo condotto and commands; and was recommended to me by the captain baſſa and Buſtengee-baſſi; wherevpon, in conformitye of the treatye of peace and commerce betweene his majeſtie and the Port, I gaue him an authenticque letter of ſafety and credence, both to ſignifye what he was, and in what ſeruice he was employed; requiring all his majeſties ſubiects to ſuffer him to paſs quietly in the ſeas, both in reſpect of the great duke, and his laders at Conſtantinople, ſubiects to the grand ſignor, which I ſuppoſed ſufficient to protect him: but, as he reports, you not only deſpiſed and tore my ſafe conduct, but the coulors and commiſſion of his prince, and made priſe of all, to a very great eſtate, both in mony and goods; which proceeding of yours being utterly vnlawfull, and contrarye to the honor and juſtice of his majeſtie, I haue thought fitt to ſend you this admonition, and to recall to your mynd, that beſides the affront to this ſtate, which wilbe highly reſented and complayned of in England, that you haue endangered the eſtates of our merchants in the grand ſignors dominion. For you cannot be ignorant what ſignor Coſmo is, your brother hauing knowne him with captain Antony Wood; that he hath beene an ancient officer of the captain baſſa, knowne and fauoured by all the great miniſters of the Port; and how dangerous it is to giue occaſion to hungrye wolues to eate vpon us, and to carue out their owne ſatisfaction; and with what reaſon the Leuant companye may be prouoked to proſecute agaynſt you, and your owners, ought well to be conſidered by you. Therfore, for your owne good and preſeruation, I haue begun to treate with ſignor Orlando here, and to giue ſatisfaction to this ſtate; and will endeauour to draw him to a promiſe, that he ſhall not ſeeke the trouble of our merchants at Conſtantinople, vntill he ſee what effect this my admonition will worke vpon you; wherby I both counſell and require you to reſtore his goods and monyes taken by you, that apperteyne to him, or any of the ſubiects of the duke of Toſcanye, or Turkye; and to depoſite them in the hands of Mr. Hobſon, or ſome other the principle merchants reſiding at Zant; and that you ſend vnto Mr. Bernard and Mr. Harbyn your reſolution herein, with all ſpeede; which courſe if you ſhall take, you will both ridd your ſelfe, your owners, and our merchants, of much trouble and loſs, and eſcape the danger of the law; and if not, you muſt expect the ſeueritye of his majeſties juſtice, and to anſwere all damages occaſioned by your offence and contempt. And ſo I wiſh you to haue as much care of your ſelfe, as I haue deſired your good, and to be found Liuorne, 28th Auguſt, 1628.

Your L. F.

DON PIETRO DE MEDICI, gouernor of Liuorne, did deſire me to enterpoſe, that no interruption of the trade might follow.

COSMO had made petition to the great duke, who had referred the cauſe to conſulls of Piſa; where the Engliſh were ſure to be condemned, and their goods in Liuorne ſequeſtred for ſatisfaction.

1628. WHERVPON I promiſed Don Pietro, that if Coſmo would relye vpon his majeſties juſtice, and let fall his ſute at Piſa, and not enforme agaynſt us in Turkye, that I would ſollicit his cauſe to his majeſtie, from whom he might be aſſured to haue right; and promiſed to write an anſwere vpon my arriuall in England. This gaue ſatisfaction to Don Pietro, and he wrote to Florence, that the ſecretarye ſhould ſpeake with me to the ſame purpoſe.

AT Florence the ſecretarye of the duke came to me, and in the name of the duke and the ſer^{ma} complayned; with him I held the ſame way, and gaue my word, vpon the conditions aboue expreſſed, to procure juſtice in England. I ſhowed him that Coſmo might not make aduantage of 3 tribunalls, but ought to chooſe one; if he accepted of that of his majeſtie, I would ſollicite for him; if that of Piſa, I could not withſtand yt: but that if he ſought the auenuous way of Turkye, we muſt ſeeke to defend our ſelues by like courſes. The ſecretarye was content with my offer, and promiſed that ther ſhould be no proceeding in Piſa, and Coſmo warned not to ſeeke Turkiſh juſtice for four moneths, if in that tyme he had anſwere from England, till when all ſute ſhould be ſuſpended. I deſired that a declaration, or petition, ſhould be ſent into England, in behalf of Coſmo, to the agents of the duke, whom I would aſſiſt: and thus we were agreed.

Two hours after the ſecretary returned, and told me, that Coſmo had beene called, and was content with our agreement; but that he confeſſed he had already enformed ſome of his laders at Conſtantinople and Scio, and that therfore he could not aſſure us that no complaynt ſhould be made by them; and therfore the duke would haue me know what had paſt, that it might not after be taken for breach of promiſe on his part; but that Coſmo ſhould write of the agreement, and, if it were not too late, ſhould preuent all ſute at Conſtantinople.

TO which I replyed, that ſeeing Coſmo had made ſuch haſt, we muſt ſtand to our defence; and I would likewiſe be free of any promiſe to fauour him, but conditionall, that he did eyther not begin or withdraw his ſute in Turkiſh juſtice: ſo that I would proceede according as I ſhould here from our merchants or ambaſſador; and ſo the matter was by mutuall promiſe ſuſpended, vntill we heard from Conſtantinople.

SINCE, Mr. Bernard wrote me from Liuorne, that Coſmo had both complayned at Scio, and ment to follow his cauſe by the marine conſulls of Piſa.

HOWSOEVER, the offence of Bundocke is great, and his majeſties honor and commiſſion abuſed; for which ſome exemplar juſtice, for the ſatisfaction of the duke of Florence, is requiſite; for if theſe courſes be continued, we ſhall ſhortlie haue no port, nor trade, in the Leuant.

To my Lord Viſcount GRANDESON.

My Lord,

BY the bleſſing of God we are ſafely arriued in Liuorne the 26. Auguſt, and very well receiued, by order of the grand duke, and his miniſters here. I am vnreſolued what courſe to take; my lord of Carliſle, being in Italye, inviting me to ſhelter vnder his wings; and being very loth eyther to trye my wiues valour any more, or to bring her vpon the coaſt of England in winter; for, though it wilbe chargeable, yet ſhe hath merited any expence: and therfore, if I fynd poſſibilitye, ſhe ſhall returne by land, and ſee ſomewhat of pleaſure for her paſt patience. I expected here to heare of my old theame; but as yett is no meſſenger arriued; ſo that I can write your lordſhip little but of my ſelfe. The war of Montferate hath gone on ſlowly. They ſpeake of a ceſſation of armes interceded by the pope's nuntio; but at the ſame tyme the Spaniards haue begun to batter Caſel: and the duke of Savoy hath taken Trino, and many other peices. In concluſion, if theſe princes ſtand long amazed and newtrall, they muſt become Spaniſh tenants at will, who doth enjoy our French war.

I SEND your lordſhip a narration and note of a fight we were enforced to make with the gallyes of Malta, to us proſperous, but as ſharpe as hath beene vpon theſe ſeas in many years. My poore wife had little place of refuge, which much perplexed me. Our ſhip ouerladen, ſhe ſate vpon the decke among the gunns, and was often forced to tacke, as the enemy came on our quarters. This glory ſhe hath, that ſhe ſhowed no feare nor paſſion; but reſolued, that ſeeing it was her portion, ſhe would beare it. Some great ſhot fell about her, which moued her not; only while I was 1628. with her, to ſee her, I got a bruze with a peice of wood ouer the back, that felld me; and this amazed her; but when I roſe, and had no harme, but payne, ſhe ſayd the chance of the day was paſt; the bullet came dangerouſly right with me, but was diuerted, and ſplitt the bitts behind me. The Malteſes haue no quarrell, as a ſtate, againſt us, except they picke one for their nations, being all French and Spaniards. But to ſpeake playne with your lordſhip, the great licence giuen or taken by our ſhips, will leaue us no friend, nor place to releiue with a drop of water. They fly att all without difference; and ſhortly we ſhall haue neyther trade nor port in the Leuant. At Scanderone the roade hath beene ſcandalized by ſir Kenelme Digbye, who hath done brauely, if warrantablye: but our poor merchants ſuffer. It is no jeſting with the hungry Turke, who like a ſumner liues by ſcapes. Another hath taken a ſhip of the ſubiects of the grand duke, that had his letters, and wore his coulors, trading betweene this port and Conſtantinople, who had alſo my ſalvo condotto giuen him there, at the requeſt of the vizier; but nothing prevayled, which is here highly reſented: and I haue endeauoured to giue ſatisfaction, by enterpoſing to procure reſtitution, to preuent an embargo, or ſequeſtration here. Breefly, if in England better order be not taken, and a bridle putt in theſe ſeahorſe mouthes, his majeſties honor wilbe offended, and all our trades forfeyted. When I come home, I wilbe bold to enforme his majeſtie, and my lord admirall, neceſſary truthes. In the meane tyme, I humbly kiſs his feete, and doe pray for his proſperitye: and returne with moſt hearty and deuote affections, to be found Livorno, $\frac{8}{18}$. September, 1628. Your Lordſhips moſt humble ſeruant.

The Dutch EMBASSADOR's Letter, ſent to Sir THOMAS ROE.

Illuſtriſſimo et Eccellentiſſimo Signore,

COME con molta allegrezza hauemo inteſo, per le lettre de noſtri amici, l'arriuo di V. E. in Liuorno, coſi con ſommo dolore noſtro fú congiontà la nuoua del ſiniſtro accidente arriuato alla ſua perſona, nell' incontro con le galere di Malta, del quale ſperamo, che Dio, per ſua miſericordia, felicemente l' hauerá poi liberato, é che, per l' auenire, preſeruará lá perſona di lei, di madama, é tutta la compagnia, dá ſimili, e tutti altri pericoli, guidandoli á ſaluamento, conducendoli con la guardia de ſuoi ſanti angeli nella dici deſiderata patria. Noi fin hora ſtante lá continuatione del mal contagioſo ſiamo nel Monaſterio di ſanto Andrea, per lá gratia diuina ſani; ſebene tutti gl' altri ſignori ambaſciatori ſono ritornati alle caſe loro. Doppo l'ultima noſtra, di $\frac{6}{16}$. Settembre, hanno havute li Turchi felice ſucceſſe in Aſia, et recuperato la cittá d' Arzerum reſa dá Abaſá sforzato dá ſuoi ſoldati, et altri habitanti, doppo che, con grandiſſima furia, per quindeci giorne, fú dal cannon battuta, con patto che fuſſe perdonato, et reconciliato con li Gianizzari, il che ſegui eſſendo lui dal Viſir ſtato ben ricevuto, et honorato, et con li capi et principali de Gianizzari abraceiatoſi, baciatoſi vicendeuolmente; ſebene credo pui toſto per ingannarlo, et intrattenerlo per un puoco di tempo, che di reſolutione, et affettione di perdonarlo. Queſta vittoria é ſtata qui inteſa con grandiſſimo contento, et demoſtratione di publiche allegrezze. Si dice che'l Vizir há poi inviato parte del ſuo campo uerſo Acheſca, occupata l' eſtate dell' anno paſſato dá Perſiani, li quali ſi guidica ſi retiraranno dá lor poſta, non eſſendo piazza di conſideratione, et lontano dá loro confini. Hauendo poi il Viſir, nella moſtra generale che fece del ſuo campo, trouato li Gianizzari eſſer in puocon umero, priuó delli carriche loro il Gianizzar Agá, molti Sur uaſi, Odobaſi, et altri officiali. Queſta ſegnalata impreſa, con la precedente contu il Tartar Cham, é Schaijn Giraij, tutte dui ſenza molta profuſion di ſangue, fortifica grandemente il ſtato di queſto imperio, et rende animo alli Turché, in modo, che l'ambaſciatore Ceſareo non li trouará coſi molli, et inclinati alla pace, come hauerebbe fatte ſe foſſe arrivato nel tempo ſtabilito trá li commiſſarii. Frá tanto la longa dimora nelle coſe dubbie d' Aſia, et di Tartaria, há cauſato negl' animi di grandi et piccioli una ſomma diffidenza, con diſguſto, et odio irreconciliabile, di che ſi vedra per ventura doppò l' arrivo dell' ambaſciatore li effetti d' alcuna vendetta, et demoſtratione, ſe non in rottura di pace, almeno in ambigue dilationi, et intrattenimenti; principalmente ſe'l ré di Perſia cercarà la pace con conditioni tolerabili, il qual ſi dice che farà, et che'l ſuo ambaſciatore é nella ſtrada; eſſendo lui travagliato dal gran Tartaro, overo Usbec, et dal potentiſſimo

ré

1628. ré di Mogol, ſi puol credere, ch' anco dà queſta parte preſteranno l' orecchie alla pace, non volendo li ſoldati in neſſun conto reſtar fuori pui longo tempo; in modo che anco ſforzano il Viſir, e l'Agá de Gianizzari, di ritornar con loro, et giá ſi dice, che ſono in ſtrada, il che potrebbe cauſar molta nouita in queſta corte. Il prencipe Betlem há fatto li preaviſati motivi, per il ſoſpetto ch' hebbe dell' armi Imperiali, delle quali hora trovandoſi (come crede) libero per queſto tempo, hà reſoluto di tenerſe quieto, et raccomandar gl' amici e confederati ſuoi all' aiuto de Dio, come V. E. vedra per la copia d' una lettera ſcritta a noi da ſua altezza, dalla quale vien anco ambaſciatore per eſſer preſente alle negotiationi di quelli dell' Imperatore. Prego che V. E. venendo alla corte di ſua regia majeſtá, inſinui nella clementiſſima gratia d'eſſa come uno de ſuoi humiliſſimi et fideliſſimi deuoti et ſervi. Mia moglie, et io, á V. E. et á Madama, baciamo le mani, et pregamo Dio per loro felicità. Di V. E. Illuſtriſſima

Humiliſſimo ſervitore,

Dal. Monaſterio di ſanto Andrea, li $\frac{1}{11}$. 9bre. 1628.

Haga.

Superſcribed,

All' Ill^{mo} et Ecc^{mo} Sig^{re} il S. Thomasso Roe, Cavall' et Ambaſciatore del Sereniſſimo Ré della Gran Brettagna.

END of Vol. I.

MVSEVM
BRITAN
NICVM

On a careful Reviſal, and Compariſon of the Copy with the Print, the following Miſtakes have been diſcovered; moſt of which were occaſioned by the Difficulty and Obſcurity of ſome of the MSS.

Page 93. Line 8. read Leſdiguieres. 138. l. 41 and 48. r. Loevorden. l. 50. r. Shink-Sconce. 139. l. 5. for wrong r. wrung. 148. l. 44. for taſte, r. take. 173. ult. after the Parentheſis, for the Period put a Semicolon, and a ſmall t. 183. l. 53, for lip, r. Lip. 224. l. 52. r. M. Leſdiguieres. 231. l. 32. for Boſſina, r. Boſnia; alſo for Canila r. Caniſa. 263. l. 21. for effects, r. affects. 267. l. 13. for made r. make. 270. l. 26. inſtead of the Period, put a Semicolon, and a ſmall w. 278. l. 11. for allyed, r. allayed. 287. l. 42. for a Semicolon, put a Comma. 309. l. 38. after paſſage, dele the Comma. 313. l. 7. for from, r. for. 316. l. 46. for bound, r. bought. 343. l. 47. for many, r. made. 358. l. 24. for faction, r. action. 365. l. 22. r. goe noe. farther. 372. l. 5. for ſent, r. done. 396. l. 51. for requeſts, r. acqueſts. 415. l. 9. for baſis, r. baſe is. 430. l. 32. for ragged, r. rugged. 457. l. 10. for the Period put a Comma; l. 57. for a Comma inſert a Colon; l. 58. for which, r. where. 460. l. 4. for Wyereton, r. Moreton. 461. l. 9. for To the Lord Conway, r. From— l. 31. for yours, r. you; l. 42. for a Period put a Comma, and a ſmall y. 463. l. 12. r. Creis. 469. l. 4. for diſuetudini, r. deſuetudini; l. 24. after deteriorem, add partem; l. 50. r. cujuſvis; l. ult. r. Beatitudinis. 474. l. 9. r. Jewes. 475. l. 28. for your, r. their. 483. l. 1. for inurborate, r. incorporate. 486. l. 22. for receiued, r. recreated. 487. l. 1. r. To the Archbiſhop, &c. 489. l. 28. for a Period, put a Colon, and a ſmall t; l. 29. r. Vayvode; l. 31. after ambaſſador, put a Comma; l. 49. r. favourers. 490. l. 49. after myne, dele the Point. 493. l. 33. for maſter, r. majeſtie. 494. l. 21. after Auiſi, dele the Comma. 500. l. 13. for yet, r. that; l. 15. after another, inſert a Comma; l. 33. for Sanoy, r. Sanſy; l. 41. for a, r. an; l. 43. for an, r. a; l. 44. r. Archbiſhop; l. 55. r. Cryſippus. 503. l. penult. after Germans, put a Semicolon; after invaſion, a Comma. 505. l. 3. of the bottom Note, for proteſt, r. project. 507. l. 18. for fiered, r. ſeized. 511. l. 31. after Holland, dele the Point; l. 37. after beleeued, put a Comma. 513. l. penult. for Shaurjle, r. Maurice. 516. l. 29. after finiſhed, inſert my. 520. l. 43. r. Coeuures. 525. l. 43. for ſtation, r. nation. 530. l. 31. for From, r. To. 542. l. 15. for Faermett, r. Fynnett. 546. for From Sir Iſaac Wake, r. To —— The Date of that Letter ſhould be 4-14. Sept. 1626. 558. l. 37. for the Period put a Comma, and a ſmall b. 565. l. 27. for Alca, r. Alva. 570. l. 10. for is, r. in. 577. l. 39. after recommendation, inſert a Semicolon. 582. l. 31. for his, r. your. 584. l. 11. after one, inſert a Semicolon. 594. l. 46. for our, r. other. 598. l. 9. after emperor, put a Semicolon. 602. l. 6. after Aſya, put a Semicolon; l. 20. for this, r. his. 607. l. 6. r. præcipuos; l. 17. r. immunes; l. 23. r. principes; l. 50. for auſi, r. auri: for infectandis, r. infeſtandis. 628. l. 29. for gabard, r. Gabor'd. 644. l. 15. for Geneua, r. Genoua. 648. l. 38. after ſtorme, put a Comma. 677. l. 51. for his, r. this. 679. l. 40. for unitato, r. mutato. 697. l. 41. for Geneua, r. Genoua. 698. l. 46. for orat, r. erat. 700. l. 33. for rigor, r. vigor. 704. l. 16. for Aniſy, r. Ainſy. 711. l. 39. for way, r. may. 726. l. 25. for part, r. port. 727. l. 25. r. Gonzaga. 745. l. 14. r. Mondoui. 747. l. 38. r. Gradenigo. 748. l. 20. for in Turin, r. from Turin. 752. l. 5. for Maere, r. Maeze. 760. l. 15. for Paxia, r. Naxia. 770. l. 48. r. liberalitez. 773. l. 20. before Queſtor, inſert To Mr. 782. l. 16. dele the Comma after Halil. 784. l. 8. for Berk, r. Berkeley. 793. l. 31. dele had. 794. l. 9. for as, r. at. 797. l. 16. r. trouueroit.

p. 65. Spalato, 237, 246, 258, 259, 285
66 Secr: Naunton.
74 Complaints of the Qu. of Bohemia }
K. James I. } see p. 146.
93. Lord Say committed to the Fleet
Lord Grandison & Sr. Edw. Conway made privy Counsellors.
Deaths of Ld Knevet & Lord Morley.
Sr. Edw. Coke released out of the Tower.
94. E. of Southampton in favour again with the King.
143. Naunton succeeded as Secretary by Sr. Edw. Conway.
E. of Exeter dies.
145. Tho. Murray's Death.
189 Father Paul 209.
222 D. of Buckingham
E. of Southampton.
249 Ld ~~Chan. Bacon~~ Keeper Williams.
Ld Treasurer Middlesex. 300
250 Amboyna.
E. of Bristol returns from Spain. 300
Sr H. Wotton made Provost of Eton.
Sr W. Grey made Ld Grey of Werke.
251 E. of Lindon cuts his throat.
Pr. Charles's treatment in Spain.
285 Wm. Pettie, 334, 386, 444, 495, 500, 570, 618
300 Sr. Ed. Herbert returns from France.
Sr. James Sifto, Sr. Carew Rennolds, Sr. Robert Lane, & Sr. John Stafford die.
E. of Thomond dies.
Sr. R. Morysson like to be President of Munster. 329.
Sr. Rob. Naunton restored to the Council Board, & Mr. of the Wards.
309 E. of Southampton & his son ill. 317 dies. his Character 353
Pr. of Orange ill. 318, 349. 363, 369. dies 380
329. Sr. Noel Caron dies
E. of Nottingham dies.
330 Ld Say & Seale created a Viscount
Sr. Edw. Herbert created Baron of Castle Island.
500, 618.
[illegible] MS. [illegible] MS 499.

369. Ld Roberts son of an Attorney.
371. Sr. Geo. Calvert remov'd from being
Lady Purbeck's incontinency.
K. James ill. ~~372~~ dies 373
372 Contest between Buckingham &
442. Sr. Rob. Killigrew succeeded Sr. Dud. Carleton
Sr. Alb. Morton dies, & is suc
Sr. John Cooke
454 Plague in Lond
480 Credulity of K. James
to the Spaniards.
Archbp Abbot ill of the Lord Carew filled with a
583. Sr. Tho. Roe's Letter to the Co
Bedford concerning antient Coin
-dals.

1628. ré di Mogol, ſi puol credere, ch' anco dà queſta parte preſteranno l' orecchie alla pace, non volendo li ſoldati in neſſun conto reſtar fuori pui longo tempo; in modo che anco sforzano il Viſir, e l'Agá de Gianizzari, di ritornar con loro, et giá ſi dice, che ſono in ſtrada, il che potrebbe cauſar molta nouita in queſta corte. Il prencipe Betlem há fatto li preaviſati motivi, per il ſoſpetto ch' hebbe dell' armi Imperiali, delle quali hora trovandoſi (come crede) libero per queſto tempo, hà reſoluto di tenerſe quieto, et raccomandar gl' amici e confederati ſuoi all' aiuto de Dio, come V. E. vedra per la copia d' una lettera ſcritta a noi da ſua altezza, dalla quale vien anco ambaſciatore per eſſer preſente alle negotiationi di quelli dell' Imperatore. Prego che V. E. venendo alla corte di ſua regia majeſtá, inſinui nella clementiſſima gratia d'eſſa come uno de ſuoi humiliſſimi et fideliſſimi deuoti et ſervi. Mia moglie, et io, á V. E. et á Madama, baciamo le mani, et pregamo Dio per loro felicità. Di V. E. Illuſtriſſima

Humiliſſimo ſervitore,

HAGA.

Dal. Monaſterio di ſanto Andrea,
li $\frac{1}{11}$. 9bre. 1628.

Superſcribed,

All' Ill^{mo} et Ecc^{mo} Sig^{re} il S. THOMASSO ROE, Cavall' et Ambaſciatore del Sereniſſimo Ré della Gran Brettagna.

END of VOL. I.

MVSEVM
BRITAN
NICVM

On a careful Reviſal, and Compariſon of the Copy with the Print, the following Miſtakes have been diſcovered; moſt of which were occaſioned by the Difficulty and Obſcurity of ſome of the MSS.

Page 93. Line 8. read Leſdiguieres. 138. l. 41 and 48. r. Loevorden. l. 50. r. Shink-Sconce. 139. l. 5. for wrong r. wrung. 148. l. 44. for taſte, r. take. 173. ult. after the Parentheſis, for the Period put a Semicolon, and a ſmall t. 183. l. 53, for lip, r. Lip. 224. l. 52. r. M. Leſdiguieres. 231. l. 32. for Boſſina, r. Boſnia; alſo for Canila r. Caniſa. 263. l. 21. for effects, r. affects. 267. l. 13. for made r. make. 270. l. 26. inſtead of the Period, put a Semicolon, and a ſmall w. 278. l. 11. for allyed, r. allayed. 287. l. 42. for a Semicolon, put a Comma. 309. l. 38. after paſſage, dele the Comma. 313. l. 7. for from, r. for. 316. l. 46. for bound, r. bought. 343. l. 47. for many, r. made. 358. l. 24. for faction, r. action. 365. l. 22. r. goe noe farther. 372. l. 5. for ſent, r. done. 396. l. 51. for requeſts, r. acqueſts. 415. l. 9. for baſis, r. baſe is. 430. l. 32. for ragged, r. rugged. 457. l. 10. for the Period put a Comma; l. 57. for a Comma inſert a Colon; l. 58. for which, r. where. 460. l. 4. for Wyereton, r. Moreton. 461. l. 9. for To the Lord Conway, r. From— l. 31. for yours, r. you; l. 42. for a Period put a Comma, and a ſmall y. 463. l. 12. r. Creis. 469. l. 4. for diſuetudini, r. deſuetudini; l. 24. after deteriorem, add partem; l. 50. r. cujuſvis; l. ult. r. Beatitudinis. 474. l. 9. r. Jewes. 475. l. 28. for your, r. their. 483. l. 1. for inurborate, r. incorporate. 486. l. 22. for receiued, r. recreated. 487. l. 1. r. To the Archbiſhop, &c. 489. l. 28. for a Period, put a Colon, and a ſmall t; l. 29. r. Vayvode; l. 31. after ambaſſador, put a Comma; l. 49. r. favourers. 490. l. 49. after myne, dele the Point. 493. l. 33. for maſter, r. majeſtie. 494. l. 21. after Auiſi, dele the Comma. 500. l. 13. for yet, r. that; l. 15. after another, inſert a Comma; l. 33. for Sanoy, r. Sanſy; l. 41. for a, r. an; l. 43. for an, r. a; l. 44. r. Archbiſhop; l. 55. r. Cryſippus. 503. l. penult. after Germans, put a Semicolon; after invaſion, a Comma. 505. l. 3. of the bottom Note, for proteſt, r. project. 507. l. 18. for fiered, r. ſeized. 511. l. 31. after Holland, dele the Point; l. 37. after beleeued, put a Comma. 513. l. penult. for Shaurjle, r. Maurice. 516. l. 29. after finiſhed, inſert my. 520. l. 43. r. Coeuures. 525. l. 43. for ſtation, r. nation. 530. l. 31. for From, r. To. 542. l. 15. for Faermett, r. Fynnett. 546. for From Sir Iſaac Wake, r. To —— The Date of that Letter ſhould be 4-14. Sept. 1626. 558. l. 37. for the Period put a Comma, and a ſmall b. 565. l. 27. for Alca, r. Alva. 570. l. 10. for is, r. in. 577. l. 39. after recommendation, inſert a Semicolon. 582. l. 31. for his, r. your. 584. l. 11. after one, inſert a Semicolon. 594. l. 46. for our, r. other. 598. l. 9. after emperor, put a Semicolon. 602. l. 6. after Aſya, put a Semicolon; l. 20. for this, r. his. 607. l. 6. r. præcipuos; l. 17. r. immunes; l. 23. r. principes; l. 50. for auſi, r. auri: for infectandis, r. infeſtandis. 628. l. 29. for gabard, r. Gabor'd. 644. l. 15. for Geneua, r. Genoua. 648. l. 38. after ſtorme, put a Comma. 677. l. 51. for his, r. this. 679. l. 40. for unitato, r. mutato. 697. l. 41. for Geneua, r. Genoua. 698. l. 46. for orat, r. erat. 700. l. 33. for rigor, r. vigor. 704. l. 16. for Aniſy, r. Ainſy. 711. l. 39. for way, r. may. 726. l. 25. for part, r. port. 727. l. 25. r. Gonzaga. 745. l. 14. r. Mondoui. 747. l. 38. r. Gradenigo. 748. l. 20. for in Turin, r. from Turin. 752. l. 5. for Maere, r. Maeze. 760. l. 15. for Paxia, r. Naxia. 770. l. 48. r. liberalitez. 773. l. 20. before Queſtor, inſert To Mr. 782. l. 16. dele the Comma after Halil. 784. l. 8. for Berk, r. Berkeley. 793. l. 31. dele had. 794. l. 9. for as, r. at. 797. l. 16. r. trouueroit.

p. 65. Spalato, 237, 246, 258, 259, 285
66 Secr: Naunton.
74 Complaints of the Qu. of Bohemia } See p. 146.
K. James I.

93. Lord Say committed to the Fleet
Lord Grandison & Sr. Edw. Conway made privy Counsellors.
Deaths of Ld Knevet & Lord Morley.
Sr. Edw. Cike [illegible] of the Tower.

94. E. of Southampton in favour again with the King.
143. Naunton succeeded as Secretary by Sr. Edw. Conway.
E. of Exeter dies.

145. The Murray's Death.
189 Father Paul 209.
222 D. of Buckingham
E. of Southampton.

249 Ld ~~[illegible] Brecu~~ Keeper Williams.
Ld Treasurer Middlesex. 300

250 Amboyna.
E. of Bristol returns from Spain. 300
Sr H. Wotton made Provost of Eaton.
Sr W. Grey made Ld Grey of Werk.
251 E. of Lindon cuts his throat.
Pr. Charles's treatment in Spain.

285 Mr Pettie, 334, 386, 444, 495, 500, 570, 618
300 Sr. Ed. Herbert returns from France.
Sr. James Lifto, Sr. Caren Reinolds, Sr. Robert Lane, & Sr. John Stafford die.
E. of Thomond dies.
Sr. R. Morysson like to be President of Munster. 329.
Sr. Rob. Naunton [illegible] to the Council Board, & Mr. of the Wards.
309 E. of Southampton & his son ill. 317 die. his Character 353
Pr. of Orange ill. 318, 349. 368, 369. dies 380

329. Sr. Noel Caron dies
E. of Nottingham dies.
330 Ld Say & Seale created a Viscount.
Sr. Edw. Herbert created Baron of Castle Island
Alexandrian MS. 500, 608. Another MS 499.

369. Ld Roberts son of an Attorney.
371. Sr. Geo. Calvert remov'd from being Secret
Lady Purbeck's incontinency.
K. James ill. ~~372.~~ dies 373

372 Contest between Buckingham &

442. Sr. Rob. Killigrew nominated succeeded Sr. Dud. Carleton
Sr. Alb. Morton dies, & is suc
Sr John Cooke

459 Plague in Lond
460 Credulity of K. James
to the Spaniards.
Archbp Abbot ill of the Go
Lord Conway fixed with a

583. Sr. Tho. Roe's Letter to the Co
Bedford concerning ancient Coi
-dals.